FOREWORD

I feel flattered and consider it to be great privilege to have been asked by Shri Vettam Mani to contribute a foreword to his Purānic Encyclopaedia, a really magnificent literary production, massive in size and rich and invaluable in contents. This is the first attempt in Malayalam and for the matter of that in any Indian or foreign language, so far as I know, to produce a comprehensive and well-nigh exhaustive book of study and reference with regard to episodes, incidents, characters etc. occurring in the many Purānas and such other works in Sanskrit. In the field of mythology, with regard to variety and contents as also sheer bulk, Greece stands first. Egypt comes only next. But Indian mythology—the epics and the purānas—far exceeds and excels both Greek and Egyptian mythologies put together in merit and size. Even the preparation of a complete list of characters mentioned in our epics, purānas etc, will be a stupendous and well-nigh impossible task calling for the combined efforts of a number of scholars. But, fortunately for us, each and every such name, one need not necessarily know or be acquainted with. At the same time there are great names which compel attention and should not escape a proper study. And, such names are legion, and Shri Mani has not omitted mention of even one such name in his great work. I looked up the encyclopaedia for a few such random names, and was really surprised to find detailed treatment of the same in the book. Moreover, with reference to really important names, incidents and episodes connected with them and the whole genealogy are given. Everything is fully documented and quite authoritative. And, deep, extensive and exhaustive study, patient and untiring research and above all absolute dedication to the cause are so very patent on every page of the book. Literally and in effect Shri Mani’s is a unique contribution, the first and foremost book, in the magnificent spheres of religion, culture, scholarship and history all put together. As the pioneer in the field he can justly feel happy and proud about his rare achievement, and he deserves in ample measure the unstinted praise and appreciation of all lovers of learning and culture.

Shri Mani has already earned well-deserved reputation as a teacher, especially in Malayalam, and also as a diligent student of literature and author of talent. He evidently possesses a flair for research. All such distinguished talents and attainments of his have been fully and quite successfully commissioned in the preparation of this marvellous encyclopaedia. He has put every lover of learning and knowledge everywhere, under an eternal debt of gratitude by the publication of this noble work.

PREFACE

It is a matter of profound pleasure and pride for me that the internationally famous publishers in the field of Indology, M/s Motilal Banarsidass of Delhi are publishing the English translation of my Purānic Encyclopaedia, which was originally published in Malayalam, and which has already run into four editions.

The Purāṇas along with the Great Epics—the Rāmāyaṇa and the Mahābhārata, have for centuries, profoundly influenced Indian life and Culture. The well-known definition of a Purāṇa as a work having five characteristic features—purāṇam pāṇḍavālakṣaṇam—namely, primary creation, secondary creation, the genealogies, the ages of Manu, and the dynastic account hardly does justice to the full significance of these works. They are much more than that. While their genealogies and the dynastic account form the bed-rock of the political history of ancient India, they throw a flood of light on all aspects of Indian Culture—its religion, social practices, art, literature and sciences. They serve as the key to the proper understanding of the various aspects of Hinduism—its beliefs, its modes of worship, its mythology, its festivals, feasts, and fasts, its sacred shrines and places of pilgrimage, its philosophy and ethics and its theogony. Truly it has been said that a Brahmin was not really wise if he did not know the Purāṇas. The study of ancient Indian history, and culture—particularly religion—is impossible without a proper knowledge of the Purāṇas. As a matter of fact, it is virtually impossible to understand not only ancient Indian culture and life, but also the literature in modern Indian languages, as it largely draws upon the ideas and ideologies as embodied in the contents of the Purāṇas and the epics.

The literary writings in all Indian languages are indebted to the Epics and the Purāṇas in more than one way—their form, content, ideas and ideologies are all influenced to a greater or lesser extent by these ancient works. Direct and indirect allusions to Purānic episodes, characters, events, are frequently to be met with in the literary writings of all Indian languages. Teachers engaged in imparting instruction in the literature in modern Indian languages must therefore be conversant with the contents of the Purāṇas and Epics in order to be able to explain these allusions wherever they occur in the writings in modern Indian languages. However, it is well nigh impossible for an average teacher to go through the whole of this vast literature. Thus the need for a handy work of reference like the present Encyclopaedia is apparent.

The desire to compile a Purānic Dictionary that should solve many of the day to day problems of the Indian language teacher, took root in me, several years ago, but I could not arrogate to myself the capacity to fulfill this urgent need. I waited for many years, for more competent and better equipped scholars to come forward and produce a work of my dreams. But since no one appeared to quench this thirst, I plunged myself into this vast ocean of Sanskrit literature, and for thirteen years I dived deep into it, studying not only the original texts but also modern works in English, Sanskrit, Malayalam and Hindi. This took me five years, and I spent about twenty thousand rupees on books and travelling for this project. I started the compilation on 1st of January, 1955, and it took me seven years to start preparing the Press copy of my work. The first volume of my ‘Purānic Nighaṇṭu’ was released in February 1964 and the remaining four were published after an interval of six months in each case. The second edition of all the five volumes was brought out in May 1967, still under the original title ‘Purānic Nighanṭu’. However, in the third revised and enlarged edition in one volume published in October, 1971, the name was changed to ‘Purānic Encyclopaedia’.

In an endeavour like this imperfections and drawbacks are only inevitable, and I am fully conscious of the same. But as a pioneer effort, and as a much needed aid to the teaching and study of Malayalam language and literature, it will, I hope, be found useful. Scholars and general readers in Malayalam have been generous in welcoming the encyclopaedia. That four editions of the work had to be brought out within a period of seven years from 1967 to 1974 speaks eloquently for the merit, and utility of the work and I feel my labour and expense amply rewarded. I felt still more flattered when the celebrated firm of M/s Motilal Banarsidass of Delhi, who have already laid the world of Indology under a deep debt of obligation by their monumental publications in all fields of Indian Culture and history, mooted a proposal for publishing an English translation of the Malayalam original. I am deeply indebted to them for bringing my work before a much wider circle of readers. The onerous task of translating the work into English was entrusted to a committee of five scholars: 1. Mr. P. Rajaram Menon, Professor of English, Basel mission College, Kottayam; 2. Mr. K. R. Atchutan Nayar, retired Professor of English, C.M.S. College, Kottayam; 3. R. K. Kartha, ex-Chief Editor, Deshbandhu, Kottayam; 4. P. I. John, Retired Headmaster, Kurichi; and 5. Mr. P. N. Menon, Ollur. I need hardly point out that these members of the editorial committee are highly qualified for this work and I must gladly acknowledge the fact that they have more than amply justified the trust placed in them.

Finally, I cannot adequately express my feelings of deep gratitude to Shri Puthezathu Rama Menon, the doyen of Malayalam literature, for writing an excellent introduction to the original Malayalam edition of the work. I am also beholden to many scholars and the reading public who have been pleased to extend a most generous welcome to the Encyclopaedia.

VETTAM MANI
A (a). The first letter (Vowel) of all Indian languages. According to the Nânârtharamâmâlâ this letter has the following meanings:—Brahmâ, Viṣṇu, Śiva, tortoise, courtyard, battle, harem, jewellery, sâ, Pârvatî and bow-string.

ABALÂ is one of the fifteen devas who were the sons of Pâńcâjanya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 11).

ABHAYA was one of the sons of Dhârtaraśtrâ. He was killed by Bhâmasena. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 104; Drona Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 62).

ABHAYAM. King Idhâmijihva divided his kingdom Plakṣadvîpâ into seven parts and gave them to his seven sons. Abhayam is one of the parts. The other six parts are:—Śiva, Yama, Subhadrâ, Śántâ, Keśâ and Amrâtâ. See "Idhâmijihva", (Bhâgavata, 5th Skanda, Chapter 20, Verse 2). It is seen (from M.B. Sañhâ Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 9) that the territory known as Abhayam was conquered by Bhâmasena. (See Foot-note).

ABHIBHU. He was a King, the son of the King of Kâśî and a relative of the Pâṇḍavas. He was killed by the son of King Vasûdana. He had a most wonderful horse. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 151, Verse 63; Karna Parva, Chapter 6, Verses 23-24; Drona Parva, Verses 26-27).

ABHIMANYU. He was the heroic son of Arjuna the central figure of the Mahâbhârata, by his wife Subhadrâ. 1) Genealogy. He was descended from Viṣṇu in this order: Brahâ-Mâtri-Candra-Purû-Parârâvâs-Âyus-Nahuṣa-Yayâti-Puru-Janameyâ-Jrâcinâ-Prâvîra-Nâmasyu-Vishvâhya-Sûndu-Bhuhvîda-Sanâyâti-Rauvâ-Râvâ-Mâtinâra-Santurodha-Duṣyanta-Bhara-Brhat-ksâtra-Hasti-Ajaniâda-Râsâ-Suhrâanga-Kuru-Jahnurath-Suratha-Vidurâtha-Sârvabhauma-Jayâsetra-Raviya-Bhvâuka-Cakrodhatha-Dvârâ-thi-Râsâ-Bhimâ-Pratiyâ-Sanânu-Vyâsa-Pâñcâ-Parjuna-Abhimiomyu. 2) Pârâjaputra (Previous Birth). There is a story about Abhimanyu's Pârâjaputra in the Mahâbhârata. It was Varcas, son of Candra, who incarnated as Abhimanyu, son of Arjuna. A conference took place between the Devas and Candra about the incarnation of the Devas in the world for the destruction of the wicked people. Candra told the Devas: "I do not like to send Varcas, whom I love more than my life, to the earth. Still, it is not right to stand in the way of the plans of the gods. You must agree to one condition if I am to send my son. Let him be born as the son of Arjuna. I am unable to be separated from him for more than sixteen years. My son will enter into the Cakra Vyûha of the enemies to be killed by them and return to me in the sixteenth year," The devas (gods) accepted this condition. That is why Abhimanyu was killed in his sixteenth year. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67). 3) Military Training and War. Abhimanyu received his training in arms from his father Arjuna. Later, he went with his mother Subhadra to Darâkâ and lived for some time with his uncle Sir Krsna. There he is said to have received training in arms from Pradyumna, son of Sir Krsna. After the ignominious life of the Pâṇḍavas, Abhimanyu married Utarâ, daughter of the King of Virâta. War broke out between Kauravas and Pâṇḍavas. On the first day itself Abhimanyu entered into a duel with Bhîabhala, King of Kosala. In the terrible conflict with Bhîshma, Abhimanyu broke Bhîshma's flagstaff. After that he assisted his father Arjuna to fight against Bhîshma. Verses 8-13 of Chapter 55 of Bhîshma Parva of the Mahâbhârata describe Abhimanyu's fight with Lâksmana in the second day's battle. Then he took his place in the Ardha Candra Vyûha (semi-circular phalanx) formed by Arjuna. He fought fiercely with the Gandhâras. He attacked Salya and killed Jayâsetra, King of Magadha, along with his elephant. We find Abhimanyu assisting Bhâmasena in M.B. Bhîshma Parva, Chapters 63, 64, 69 and 94. After that Abhimanyu defeated Lâksmana in battle. Then he defeated Vikârâ, Citrasena and others also. Later he took his position in the Srigâtaka Vyûha created by Dhrâstadyûmana. He started fighting with Bhagadatta. He defeated Ambastra and Alainbûsa. Next he fought a duel with Sudisb. After that he encountered Duryodhana, Bhîabhala and others. M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 10, Verses 47-52 are a description of Abhimanyu's heroism by Dhrâstadyûmana. He snatched Paurava's weapon and threw it on the ground. Next he fought with Jayâdratha and Salya. Then he was caught in the Cakra Vyûha (circular phalanx) of the enemies. There he inflicted great losses upon the enemy forces. Salya was stunned and his brother was killed by Abhimanyu. M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 38, Verses 23 and 24 describe the flight of the Kauravas in fear. At this stage, even Dronâcâyra praised Abhimanyu's valour. Duśsysana fainted during his fight with Abhimanyu. Karna was defeated. Vrâsastra, Satyaphras and Salya's son, Rugmaratha were slain. Duryodhana fled. Lâksmana was killed. Vrûndâraka, Asvatthmâ, Karna and others were amazed by this terrible valour of Abhimanyu. Six ministers of Karna were slain. Next, Asvaketu, son of the King of Magadha was killed. King Bhôja was also killed. Salya was again defeated. Sarîuliyâ, Candriketu, Meghavaga, Suvarcas, Sûryabhâsa—who were all kings—were beheaded by Abhimanyu. Sakuni was wounded by Abhimanyu's arrow. Kâlañkeys, son of Subala was slain. M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 40, Verses 13 and 14 say that at this stage, Prince Duśsyasana beat Abhimanyu to death with his mace. 4) After Death. M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 71, Verses 12-16 say that after death Abhimanyu attained the immortal world of the Munis (Saints). King Parîkšit was the son of Abhimanyu. In M.B. Svâgârâho Parva, Chapter 5, Verses 18-20, we find that after his death, Abhimanyu entered the moon in his former form of Varcas. 5) Other names of Abhimanyu. In the Mahâbhârata Abhimanyu has been referred to by several other names, such as ARJUNI, Saubhadra, Kârsâ, Arjunâtma, Sukrâmatâma, Arjunâpâra and Phâlguni. 6) Other details. King Parîkšit was the son of Abhimanyu. Janameyâ was born as his son. It was Janameyâ
ABHIMANYU II

One of the sons of Manu. The ten sons born to Manu by Nadvalā were: Kuru, Puru, Satadyumna, Tapasvī, Satyavān, Sūci, Agniśṭoma, Adhirātra, Sudyumna and Abhimanyu. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Section 1, Chapter 13).

ABHIMANYU VADHA PARVA. A part (branch) of Drona Parva. (See "Mahābhārata").

ABHINAYA. In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 342, Abhinaya has been defined as follows: Abhinaya is the art of presenting before the people the ideas that are to be communicated to them. There are four divisions of this art known as Sattvika, Vācika, Anūgika and Aḥārya depending on Sattva, Vāk, Anūga and Aḥārya. Besides these, another division known as Abhimanika (Abhimanottā) may also be mentioned. This signifies the expression of rasas like Śrīgāra. There are two kinds of Śrīgāra known as Sambhoga and Vipralamba. Four varieties of Vipralambha called Pārvānurāga Vipralambha, Māṇa Vipralambha, Prāvāsa Vipralambha and Karuṇa Vipralambha are mentioned. The union after Vipralambha is Sambhoga-Śrīgāra. All Sattvika bhāvas are included in Śrīgāra. All these have to be expressed through Abhinaya.

ABHIRU. A Rājaṣī who was born of the sixth Kālakeya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 53).

ABHIŚAKAM. A Janapada (Village) of ancient India. The warriors of this Janapada were called Abhiśākas. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 12; Chapter 93, Verse 2).

ABHIṢĀRAM. A Janapada of ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 94).

ABHIŚĀRĪ. Arjuna conquered this city, which was one of the ancient cities of India, in the course of his Devgīvaya (conquest of the world).

ABHIŚAYANTA. A son born to Mahārāja Kuru by Vāhīni. He had three brothers named Cāitraratha, Muni and Janamejaya. Abhiśayanta was the younger brother of Āśvāvān and elder brother of Cāitraratha. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 50-51).

ACALA II. Name of a bull. Among the pārṣadas of Skanda we see the bull named Acala. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 74).

ACALA III. An epithet of Mahāviṣṇu. Among the thousand names of Mahāviṣṇu we see the name Acala also. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 92).

ACALA. Subrahmanya, who was born from Śiva's semen which fell into the fire, was made Commander-in-Chief (Generalissimo) by the gods to kill Tārakāsura. A large number of warriors and mothers were assigned to assist him. A woman named Acalā was included among those mothers. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 40, Verse 14).

ACCHODĀ. A spiritual daughter of the Pīṭras. (For further details see "Amāvasa").

ACCHODASARAS. A river, who was the daughter of the Pīṭras called Aṅgivāttas. (Hari Vaniśa, Chapter 18, Verse 26).

ACYUTA. (See Viṣṇu).

ACYUTAYU. He was a heroic warrior on the Kaurava side. Sūratayu was the brother of Acyutāyu. Both of them were killed by Arjuna in the Kaurava-Pandava battle. These heroes attacked Arjuna and Śrī Kṛṣṇa furiously with their arrows and Arjuna had some difficulty in killing them. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 93, Verses 7-42).

ACYUTA STHALĀ. This is an ancient village in India. In ancient times Sudras of mixed castes inhabited this region. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 9).

ADHARMA. A description of the lineages of Adharma is found in Agni Purāṇa. Hīṁsā (violence) is the consort of Adharma. The couple procreated two children, Anṛta and Nikṛti, and from them sprang up Bhaya (fear), Naraka (Hell), Māyā (illusion), Vedenā (pain) etc. And, out of them Māyā brought forth Death, the destroyer of (all) objects. Vedenā, in its turn produced Sorrow and Grief out of Kaurava. From Death were born Disease, Senility, Sorrow, Intense desire and Anger. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

ADHARMA. Adharma is a person who is an embodiment of Adharmas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 53). Adharma's wife Nirṛti delivered 3 children; Bhaya, Mahābhaya and Mṛtyu. Adharma had another son, Darpa (conceit) born of Wealth. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapter 90, Verse 27).

ADHAŚĪRAS I was a great sage. Śrī Kṛṣṇa is said to have met the sage on his way to Hastinapura. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 64).

ADHAŚĪRAS II. There is a reference in Viṣṇu Purāṇa to a hell called Adhaśīras. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 2, Chapter 6).

ADHIRA. A King; also a great devotee of Lord Śiva. Once he decreed death penalty on an innocent woman. He also destroyed with his own hands a temple of Śiva. As a consequence of those two sinful deeds he became a devil after death. Ultimately by the grace of Śiva he cast off the devil's form and became an attendant of Śiva. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 111).

ADHIRĀJA. A Kingdom in ancient India, described in Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 44. Today this place is known as Rewa.

ADHIRATHA. Foster father of Karṇa.

1) Lineage. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Brahma-Atri-Candra-Paruravas-Āyuś - Nahuṣa - Yaśāti - Anudruhyu-

ADHRIGU. A great sage (Maharsi) who lived during the Rgvedic period. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 112).

ADHRSYA. A river. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Versc 24).

ADHYAPAYANA. A disciple of the great preceptor of Atharvaveda, Sumantu. He divided Atharvaveda into two parts and gave one to Uatathya and the other to Vedadarāna. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 12).

ADITI. 1) Genealogy. Kaṣyapa, grandson of Brahmā and son of Marici married Aditi, daughter of Dakṣaprajyapati. Aditi had twelve sisters: Diti, Kāla, Danāyus, Danu, Śimhiḥka, Krodhā, Prthu, Viśvā, Vinatā, Kapilā, Muni and Kadrū. (Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Versc 12). Devas are sons born to Kaṣyapa by Aditi and hence they are known as Adityas also. Kaṣyapa married all the thirteen sisters including Aditi, and all living beings owe their origin to them. (See Kaṣyapa).

2) Descendants. 33 sons were born to Aditi. 12 of them are called Dvādāśādityas, viz. Dhātā, Āryamā, Mitra, Śakra, Varuṇa, Atri, Bhaga, Vivasvān, Pāṣa, Saviṭa, Tvasta and Viṣṇu. Amongst the other 21 sons are the 11 Rudras and 8 Vasus. (See M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 15).

3) Main incidents. 1. How Mahāviṣṇu was born as the son of Aditi. The Mahābhārata and the Rāmāyana refer to a story about the birth of Mahāviṣṇu as the son of Aditi. Viṣṇu entered the womb of Aditi as Vāmana (Dwarp). This story was related by the sage Viśvāmitra to the boys Rāma and Lakṣmana while they were accompanying the sage in the forest. When they entered Śiddāṅgavāja Viśvāmitra pointed to the latter that the Āśrama was sacred, because Mahāviṣṇu had stayed there for long as Vāmana. The Devas induced Mahāviṣṇu to obstruct the sacrifice (yāga) being performed by Emperor Mahābali, son of Virocan. At that time Aditi, the wife of Kaṣyapa was doing penance so that Mahāviṣṇu might be born as her son, and accordingly he entered her womb, 1000 years later she gave birth to Viṣṇu, and that child was known as Vāmana. (See Vāmana; also M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 272, Verse 62, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 83, Verses 25 and 26, as also Vāmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Canto 29).

2. Rebirth of Aditi. Once Kaṣyapa made all arrangements to perform a sacrifice (yāga). Having failed to get the suitable cow for it, he stole Varuṇa’s cow and conducted the yāga. Not only that, Kaṣyapa refused to return the cow even after the yāga was over. Varuṇa in hot anger rushed to Kaṣyapa’s hermitage. Kaṣyapa was absent, and his wives, Aditi and Surāsā did not treat Varuṇa with due respect. The enraged Varuṇa cursed them to be born in Gokula. He also complained about the matter to Brahmā. Brahmā told Kaṣyapa: “Since you, a learned person, have stolen the cow, may you along with your wives be born in Gokula and tend cows”. Accordingly Kaṣyapa and his wives, Aditi and Surāsā, were born respectively as Vasudeva, Devāki and Rohiṇī in Gokula in the 28th Dwāpara yuga. (This story has been told by Vyāsa to Rāja Janamejaya). (Deviḥāgavata, Skanda 4).

3. Aditi in prison. Devaki is Aditi reborn. There was reason for Devaki being imprisoned on the orders of Kaṁsa. When Kaṣyapa was living in an Āśrama with Aditi and Diti he was so much pleased with the services of Aditi that he asked her to beg for any boon she wished. Accordingly she prayed for an ideal son. The boon was readily granted, and Indra was the son thus born to her. The birth of Indra engendered jealousy in Diti towards Aditi, and she also demanded a son equal to Indra. Kaṣyapa obliged Diti also. As Diti advanced in pregnancy and her beauty also increased Aditi got jealous of the former and she called her son Indra and told him that unless something was done in time, Diti would deliver a child equal to him (Indra) thus relegating him probably to the place of second Deva. Thus admonished by his mother the artful Indra approached Diti and told her: “Mother, I have come to serve you”. Diti was greatly pleased. Indra’s services drove Diti to sleep very quickly, and Indra used the opportunity ADRIA. A nymph (devastri). There is a story in Devibhagavata about her being cursed by a Brahmin and turned into a fish.

ADRSṬABHAYA is the curse put on King Janamejaya by Saramā, the dog of the Devas. While Janamejaya, son of Parikṣiṇa was conducting, along with his brothers, a yāga of long duration at Kurukṣetra the son of Saramā went to the place and was thrashed by the brothers of Janamejaya. Seeing her weeping child Saramā naturally got angry. She cursed the king thus: “My son did not commit any offence; he did not even look at the havis (oblations), nor did he lick it. For having thrashed the innocent child you will experience Adṛṣṭabhaya. When the yāga was over Janamejaya got rid of the curse by getting sage Somāśravas do certain proper rites.

ADRSYANTI, wife of sage Sakti, the son of Vasiṣṭha and mother of sage Parāśara.

Kalmāśapāda, a king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty reached the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha during a hunting expedition when Sakti, eldest of the hundred sons of Vasiṣṭha came walking towards him. False pride prevented either of them from giving way to the other. The King got angry and whipped Sakti. Sakti cursed the king and he was converted into a demon. This happened at a period when sages Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra were at logger-heads. Viśvāmitra got admitted into the body of King Kalmāśapāda a demon called Kuṭikara, and the king set out to take revenge upon Sakti, the son of Vasiṣṭha. The King was further promised all support by Viśvāmitra. Kalmāśapāda ate all the hundred sons of Vasiṣṭha. Overcome with grief Vasiṣṭha attempted suicide many a time. But the spirit (Atman) did not quit the body. Thus sunken in grief Vasiṣṭha lived in his hermitage with Adṛṣṭyanti, wife of Sakti. One day Vasiṣṭha heard distinct sounds of the chanting of the Vedas and Adṛṣṭyanti told him that a child of his son, Sakti, was developing in her womb and that the vedic sounds heard were sounds produced by that son chanting the vedic hymns. Vasiṣṭha thus was happy to hear that the dynasty will not become extinct and, so, gave up all ideas of suicide. Another day Kalmāśapāda in the guise of the demon hurriedly came to devour Adṛṣṭyanti and Vasiṣṭha gave him redemption from the curse. He was restored to his old state and form. Adṛṣṭyanti duly gave birth to a son, and the child grew up to become Parāśara, father of Vyāsa.

While the Pāṇḍavas, in the course of their forest life, were passing the banks of river Gaṅgā at midnight, a Gandharva named Anāgaraparna enjoying in the river-water clashed with Arjuna, and he was defeated. The story of Adṛṣṭyanti is one of the many stories told by Anāgaraparna to the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapters 175-178).

AGASTYA.

2) Birth. A story occurs in Uttara-Rāma-Carita about the birth of Agastya. Nimi was the son of Ikṣvāku of the Sūrya dynasty. When he ascended the throne he decided to celebrate a sacrifice of long duration. He invited Vasiṣṭha to perform the sacrifice. But Vasiṣṭha, who had to participate in the sacrifice to enter the womb of Diti and cut into 49 pieces the child with his weapon, the Vajra. The child in the womb began crying on receiving cuts with Vajra when Indra asked it not to cry. (Mā ruda, don’t cry) and so the child got out of Diti’s womb as 49 Mārutas (winds). Then did Diti wake up and cursed Aditi as follows: “Your son did treacherously kill my offspring in the womb itself. So he will forfeit the three worlds. You were responsible for the murder of my child. You will, therefore, have to spend days in prison grieving over your children. Your children also will be annihilated”. Because of this curse of Diti, Indra once lost Devaloka and had to live elsewhere, and Nāhuṣa functioned, for a time as Indra. (See Nāhuṣa). In the 28th Divāpara yuga Aditi transformed as Devaki had to be a captive of Kaṁsa, and Kaṁsa killed her children by dashing them on the ground. (Devibhāgavata, Skandha 4).

4. Narakāśura stole the earrings of Aditi. Narakāśura, who turned out to be a curse and menace to the three worlds consequent on the boon he got from Viṣṇu, attacked Devaloka once, and carried off Indra’s royal umbrella and Aditi’s earrings. Mahāviṣṇu incarnated himself as Śrī Krṣṇa, killed Narakāśura in battle and got back the earrings etc. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 89; Saṃbhā Parva, Chapter 38, Verse 29; Bhāgavata Daśāma Skandha).

5. Mahāviṣṇu became seven times son to Aditi. Once, desirous of having children Aditi cooked food (rice) sitting herself in the entrails of Mount Mynaka (M.B. Aranya Parva, Chapter 135, Verse 3). Dharmaputra, in the course of singing the glories of Lord Krṣṇa after the great war refers to Viṣṇu having taken birth seven times in the womb of Aditi. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 6).

6. Budha cursed Aditi. A story in the Mahābhārata refers to Budha’s once cursing Aditi. The ever increasing power of Asuras made the Devas anxious. Aditi, the mother of the Devas decided to send them all to annihilate the Asuras. She had finished cooking food for her sons, and lo! there appeared before her Budha and asked for food. Aditi asked him to wait pending her sons taking their food hoping that there would be some food left after that. This caused Budha to lose his temper and he cursed her that (Aditi) she would become the mother of Vivasvān in his second birth as Aṇḍa, when she would suffer pain in her abdomen. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 34, Verses 96-98).

7. Former birth of Aditi. During the former years (period) of Svāyambhuva Manu the Prajāpati called Sutapas, along with his wife Prśni did Tapas for 12000 years. Then Mahāviṣṇu appeared before them, and Prśni prayed for a son like Viṣṇu himself, and Mahāviṣṇu was born as her son named Prśinigarbha. This story is related by Śrī Krṣṇa to his mother on his birth as the son of Vasudeva. (Bhāgavata, Daśāma Skandha, Chapter 3).

She, who became the wife of Prajāpati as Prśni before Svāyambhuva Manu, and was born again as Devaki, the wife of Vasudeva is one and the same person.

AHR. A King of the Solar dynasty. (See Śrīyā Vaitāṣa).

ADRī was a King, the son of Viṣvagaśāvī and father of Yuvaṇāśvī. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 202, Verse 3).
of Indra, could not accept the invitation and Nimi had to return disappointed. At this he got angry, sought the help of Satānanda, the son of the great hermit Gautama and the sacrifice was begun. Vasishtha did not like this. He cursed Nimi that life might be separated from his body. Nimi retorted with the same curse. Vasishtha's spirit separated itself from his body and began to roam about in the sky. At last he requested Brahmā to provide him with a body. Brahmā granted his wish and said that he would be born again from Mitra and Varuṇa. When the spirit of Vasishtha returned to the earth it was Mitra and Varuṇa moving about, having only one body for both. Vasishtha's spirit entered into that body. One day Mitra-Varuṇa happened to see the celestial beauty, Urvashi on the seashore. They embraced Urvashi and immediately the spirit of Vasishtha entered the body of Urvashi.

After this Mitra and Varuṇa separated themselves from one another and assumed two different bodies. Varuṇa approached Urvashi with lustful desire, but rejecting him Urvashi accepted Mitra. Varuṇa had seminal flow and this semen was taken and kept in a pot. At the sight of this, remorse and passion arose in Urvashi and the semen of Mitra already received in her womb oozed out and fell on the ground. This also was collected and kept in the same pot along with that of Varuṇa. After a few days the pot broke open by itself and two babies came out. One was Agastya and the other Vasishtha. As these two were born of the semen of Mitra and Varuṇa, they came to be known as Maitravārjunśī later. This story partly occurs in Sānti Parva of Mahābhārata, Verse 343 of Chapter 88.

3) Education. Very little is mentioned in the Purāṇas about the education of Agastya. Still there are ample proofs that he was well-versed in the Vedas and sciences and well skilled in the uses of diverse weapons. In Verse 9, Chapter 139 of Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Droṇa says to Arjuna as follows:

"Agnivesa, my teacher was the disciple of Agastya, in the art of using bows and arrows and I am his disciple".

When it is said that even Agnivesha the teacher of Droṇa was a disciple of Agastya, his proficiency in the art of using weapons could easily be discerned.

4) Marriage. There is an interesting story behind the marriage of such an austere man as Agastya, who had brought all the passions under control. As the hermit Agastya was walking along the forest, he saw his ancestors (Pitṛs) hanging head downwards in a canyon. He wanted to know the reason and they replied: "Child; we would be allowed to enter heaven only if sons are born to you. So get married as soon as possible". The necessity of marriage occurred to him only then. But will there be any woman who could be patient enough to become the wife of this bearded dwarfish hermit? Agastya did not lose heart. At that time the King of Vidarbha was doing penance to obtain a son. Agastya collected the quintessence of all living beings, with which he created an extremely beautiful lady and named her Lopāmudrā. Agastya gave Lopāmudrā as daughter to the King of Vidarbha. The King who was delighted at getting such a daughter, employed hundreds of maids to look after the child, who soon grew up to be a young lady. Agastya once approached the King of Vidarbha and expressed his wish to have Lopāmudrā as his wife. The King was in a dilemma. On the one hand he did not like his beautiful daughter having the brightness of fire, to be given as wife to the hermit, clad in the bark of trees and wearing tufts of matted hair. On the other hand he was afraid of the curse of the hermit Agastya. As the King was trying hard to find a solution, Lopāmudrā herself came to the King and said "Father, I am happy to say that I shall willingly become the wife of the hermit Agastya." At last her father consented and discarding royal garments and ornaments, Lopāmudrā accompanied Agastya. It is mentioned in Vana Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 5, that they were married at Mahāśindhubhītha. After their marriage they went to Gaṅgādvāra. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 96).

5) The story of how Agastya ate Vātāpī. While Agastya was doing severe penance, Lopāmudrā attained puberty and had menstruation. Longing for a child, she went and stood beside Agastya. She expressed her wish to lead a family life. Her demands did not stop there. During conjugation, Agastya should wear flower garlands and ornaments, and she must be provided with divine ornaments. Agastya was surprised at the enormity of her demands. Poor, penniless Agastya! Leaving Lopāmudrā in the hermitage he went in search of money. He at first approached King Śrutarvā, who produced accounts of his income and expenditure and convinced Agastya that he was having no balance at all. Agastya accompanied by Śrutarvā, then proceeded to King Bradhnāśya. He also produced accounts and refused to help Agastya, who then followed by Śrutarvā and Bradhnāśya went on to the wealthy King Trasadasyu, who also producing his accounts refused to render any help to Agastya. Finally Agastya accompanied by the three Kings, went to the house of Ilvala, a noble asura of immense wealth. This asura Ilvala lived in Manimatapattana with his younger brother Vātāpī. Once Ilvala approached a hermit Brahmā and requested that his wish for a son, having the power and status of Indra, be granted. The Brahmā refused to grant such a boon. Since then Ilvala and Vātāpī considered Brahmins as their enemies. The elder brother converted the younger one (Vātāpī) into a goat and whenever a Brahmā visited his house, he would kill the goat, prepare mutton dishes and set them before his guest. When he had finished eating, Ilvala would call aloud. "Vātāpī, come out"! Breaking the stomach of the guest open, Vātāpī would come out. In this way Ilvala had killed a good number of Brahmās. It was at this juncture that Agastya and the Kings came to beg money of him.

Ilvala welcomed the guests with hospitality and as usual killed the goat, prepared food with it and served the food before Agastya. When Agastya had finished eating, Ilvala called Vātāpī loudly. But Agastya slowly said, "Vātāpī, ārū ḍha va" (Let Vātāpī be digested) and immediately Vātāpī was digested in the stomach of Agastya. The awe-stricken asura Ilvala gave each Brahmā ten thousand cows and as much gold and to Agastya he doubled the quantity of alms. Over and above this, he presented Agastya with a chariot hitched with two fine horses called Virāvān and Surāvān. Agastya returned to his hermitage and adorned himself as Lopamūḍrā had demanded. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 99).

6) Birth of a son. Lopamūḍrā became pregnant. Agastya told her, "A thousand ordinary sons, or hundred sons, each having the strength of ten ordinary sons, or ten sons, each having the strength of hundred ordinary sons, or a son, greater and nobler than one thousand sons—which of these do you prefer?" Lopamūḍrā preferred one son. When she was with child Agastya again went to the forest to do penance. After seven years of pregnancy Lopamūḍrā gave birth to a lustrous son. The hermit Drṛṣṭhasyu, who is also called Idhmāvāha, is this son. This child is said to have chanted the Vedas (Holy Scriptures) immediately on his birth. He used to gather twigs for kindling the sacrificial fire of his father, and hence he got the name Idhmāvāha.*

7) How he stamped the Vindhya mountain down. Once the talebearer Nārada happened to come to the Vindhya Mountain, who gladly welcomed Nārada, gave him a seat, showed hospitality and asked for news. Nārada said "May you be blessed. Just now I am coming from the Mahāmeru. Indra, Agni (fire) and other gods live there. Kallāsā, Niśadhā, Nila, Gandhamādana etc. are mountains far nobler than this Meru. But they are not so haughty as he. That the Sun and the Moon and such others revolve round him, is the reason for his arrogance". On hearing these tales, Vindhya thought that Meru should be taught a lesson. Once Vindhya made his peaks grow higher and higher till they touched the sky. The Sun, the Moon and others found it very difficult to pass over the high peaks in their usual journeys to the West, and so they had to roam about in the sky. When the journeys of the Sun and the Moon were hindered, everything in the world fell into chaos. The gods came to Vindhya in groups and tried to pacify him. But their attempts were futile. So they approached Agastya and made their petition to him. He agreed to pacify Vindhya somehow or other. Agastya and his wife came to Vindhya from Kāśinagara. When Vindhya saw Agastya he began to shiver with fear. Contracting all his high peaks, he bowed before Agastya, who said to Vindhya thus "Vindhya, I am going to South Bhrārata. Let your heads be low till I come back". Vindhya agreed. Agastya passed on to the South and built a hermitage in the Malayācala and lived there. Since then Agastya had never gone to the North and Vindhya had never risen up. As he had made the mountain (Aga) bow its head he got the name Agastya. (Tenth Skandha of Devībhaṅgavata).

8) Nāhuṣa transformed to a huge serpent by Agastya. Devendra killed Vṛtrāśura, an enemy of the gods. As Devendra had recourse to treachery for killing the enemy (see the word Vṛtrāśura) he incurred the sin of 'Brahmahatya'. Once Indra went to the Mānasasaras, without the knowledge of anybody and hid himself in the petal of a lotus flower. The gods and especially Śaṅcevi were much alarmed at the disappearance of Devendra. Heaven was without a King. Bad omens began to appear. Indra, who had hidden in the lotus stalk in the shape of a water-snake, was not at all visible as the petals had closed over him. It was at this critical moment that King Nāhuṣa had completed hundred horse-sacrifices and became eligible for the throne of Devendra. At a great gathering of the Gods Nāhuṣa was elected as Devendra. Though Nāhuṣa got all the celestial maids at his disposal in the Nandanyāna (Nandana Garden) his passion for women was not satiated. So he began to have an eye on Indrāṇi. She was in sorrow and misery at the disappearance of her husband Indra, and did not at all look with favour on this new move on the part of the new Indra. She sought the help of Brhaspati, who agreed to protect her from Nāhuṣa. The newly-elected Indra could not tolerate this disloyalty on the part of Indrāṇi. He became furious and threatened Brhaspati with death, if Indrāṇi was not sent to him forthwith. All hermits gathered round Nāhuṣa and tried with their advice to dissuade him from this attempt, but he would not be dissuaded. Nāhuṣa belittled Brhaspati and all the hermits and was rude to them. Finally the hermits, being afraid of Nāhuṣa, went to Brhaspati to persuade him to send Indrāṇi to Nāhuṣa. Brhaspati suggested to Indrāṇi a way of safety. Accordingly she came to Nāhuṣa and said to him "Lord, to become your wife, is a matter of great pleasure to me. But before that I must make sure if my husband is living anywhere. So allow me to make a search". Nāhuṣa agreed to this and by the blessings of Devi, Indrāṇi found out her husband. But Indra would not return to the court, with Indrāṇi, who then complained about Nāhuṣa's outrageous behaviour. Indra advised her a new way to protect herself from Nāhuṣa's onslaught.

Indrāṇi returned to Nāhuṣa and told him "Lord, women generally love pomp and glory. I have a mania for vehicles. You should make a palanquin. Let the palanquin bearers be hermits. You must come to my house in that palanquin with hermits as your palanquin bearers and then I will accept you as my husband." Nāhuṣa agreed. He employed Agastya and such other hermits to bear his palanquin. He got into his palanquin and started for Indrāṇi's house. His desire to reach Indrāṇi was such that he thought the hermits to be very slow. To make them quick enough he ordered "Sarpa, Sarpa" (walk quick, walk quick). The hermits began to run. Still Nāhuṣa was not satisfied. He kicked at the heads of the hermits and whipped the dwarfish Agastya.

Agastya got angry and cursed Nāhuṣa thus: "Since you have whipped me saying 'Sarpa Sarpa', may you be transformed into a mahāsarpa (huge serpent) and fall into the great forest." **

The horror-stricken Nāhuṣa pleased Agastya by praise. Agastya said that Nāhuṣa would be freed from the curse and attain heaven when he happened to meet Daṁmaputra. Nāhuṣa instantly changed into a serpent of immense size and slid into a great forest in the Himālayās. (Devībhaṅgavata, 8th Sarga). During their sojourn in the forest, the Pāṇḍavas visited many holy places and reached the Yāmuna mountain in the Himālayās. When Bhima was passing by the mouth of a cove he was attacked by a huge serpent. In spite of his immense strength Bhima could not extricate himself from the hold of the snake, who eventually informed Bhīma of its previous history. When Bhīma understood that the serpent was none other than Nahuṣa, a King of the Śrīya dynasty (Solar), he felt sorry for him. Dharmaputra, who came there in search of Bhīma, talked with Nahuṣa, who immediately regained his original form and went to heaven. (Mahābhārata, Chapter 17 of Udyoga Parva; Chapter 179 of Vana Parva; Chapter 342 of Sānti Parva).

9) How Agastya drank up the ocean. Indra ruthlessly killed Vṛtrāsura, who had been harassing the Gods, with the help of the Kālākeyas. The frightened Kālākeyas got into the ocean and hid themselves at the bottom. From that hideout they decided to destroy the three worlds. At night they came out on the earth and ate a good deal of Brahmins, and caused much damage to the hermitages of Vasiṣṭha and Čyavana. All the Brahmins on the earth were terribly afraid of the Kālākeyas. The gods went to Viṣṇu and prayed for protection. Viṣṇu informed them that the Kālākeyas could not be caught unless the ocean was dried up, and this task could be performed only by Agastya. So the Gods approached Agastya and told him what Viṣṇu had informed them. With pleasure Agastya accepted the job. Accompanied by the Gods and hermits he neared the swaying and surging ocean. While all were watching unwinking Agastya brought the great ocean into his palm and drank it up very easily and subsequently the Kālākeyas were killed.

Now the Gods again approached Viṣṇu and made representation about the loss of the ocean. Viṣṇu told them that by the penance of Bhagfratha the divine Gaṅgā would fall into the earth and then the ocean will be filled. In this way the earth regained its lost ocean. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapters 101 to 105).

10) Agastya cursing Kubera and his companion. In the course of their sojourn in forest, the Pāṇḍavas visited several holy places and reached the proximity of the Himālayas. Leaving his brothers behind, Arjuna went up the Mahāmeru to worship Śiva.

Years passed by. At last his brothers also started for the Mahāmeru in search of Arjuna and with the help of the hermits Vṛṣṭapavrā and Ārṣṭeṣa, they reached Kuberapurī (the capital of Kubera). There Bhīma destroyed the army of Kubera and killed Maṇiṃān, his friend and favourite. Dharmaputra, repenting of his younger brother's iniquity bowed before Kubera and asked him with politeness, why the power of Gods gave way to the power of man. Kubera replied that it was due to the curse of Agastya and began to depict the event thus: Once my friend Maṇiṃān and myself were going, in a chariot, to be present at the singing and chanting just begun at Kuśavati. At that time Agastya was standing in his hermitage on the bank of Kālīndi, performing Sun worship. When Maṇiṃān saw this from the sky, he spat on the head of Agastya, who instantly getting wild cursed me. "Lo, Kubera, your friend Maṇiṃān spat on my head in your sight. So this Maṇiṃān and your army will meet with death at a man's hand. When they die you should not feel sorry for them. If it becomes possible for you to meet the man who killed Maṇiṃān you will be liberated from the curse."

It is this curse that brought about the death of Maṇiṃān and the army. When Kubera saw Bhīma face to face his curse was revoked. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 160).

11) Agastya cursing Mārica and Tādākā. The boys Rāma and Laksmanā went to the forest with Viśvāmitra for protecting sacrifice. When they entered the Tādākā forest Viśvāmitra told them the story of Tādākā thus:

Tādākā is the daughter of Suketu, a semi god of the tribe Yākṣa. Being childless for a long time Suketu was miserable and began to do penance before Brahmā, who blessed him and granted his wish and a daughter was born to him. This daughter was named Tādākā. Brahmā blessed her, giving her the strength of one thousand elephants. Tādākā grew up and became a young woman. Suketu gave her in marriage to Sunda, son of Iharjha. Tādākā gave birth to a son called Mārica. When Sunda was killed, Tādākā got wild and ran into the hermitage of Agastya causing much havoc there. At this Agastya got angry and cursed her to become a Rākṣasi (giantess) and instantly the bodies of Tādākā and Mārica were deformed. Tādākā could not control her anger and she demolished the hermitage of Agastya. (Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālaκāṇḍa).

12) The story of the theft of lotus. Once Bhṛgu, Vasiṣṭha and other hermits went on a pilgrimage, with Indra as their leader. On the way they reached Brahmāsaras, in the holy place of Kauṣikī. Agastya had grown some lotus flowers there. The pilgrims plucked stealthily all the lotus flowers nurtured by Agastya and ate them. The furious Agastya got into the midst of the hermits in search of the culprit. None admitted the theft. Finally he caught hold of Indra, as the thief. Indra said "O, Lord, had it not been for my eagerness to hear discourses on duty from your face, I would not have stolen your lotus flowers." Saying thus Indra returned the lotus flowers. Agastya was pleased and let Indra and the hermits depart in peace. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 94).

13) How Agastya burned the Asuras (demons). (This story occurs in the Mahābhārata as, having been told by the God Vāyu to Bhīṣma as a discourse on the greatness of Agastya, and Bhīṣma reiterating it to Arjuna).

Once the Gods had to accept defeat at the hands of the Asuras (Demons) and they approached Agastya and said thus : Oh, hermit, since we have been defeated by the Asuras, our prosperity is at an end. There is none to help us but you." Hearing this Agastya became angry and began to burn the Asuras to death, by the merits of his penance. Many of them fell down on the earth and some fell into Pātala (the nether world). The Asuras who thus fell were not killed by Agastya. Thus the menace of the Asuras in heaven was warded off, and the Gods lived in peace and prosperity. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 155, Verses 1 to 13).

14) Indra's conflict with Agastya. Once Agastya commenced a sacrifice of twelve years' duration. Many hermits participated in this sacrifice. No sooner had the hermit begun the sacrifice, than Indra, (the God of Thunder and Rain) stopped rain in the world. Crops could not be raised. But Agastya provided everybody who took part in the sacrifice, with sumptuous meals. The hermits wondered how Agastya could do this. Some of the hermits feared that the sacrifice would have to be stopped before the stipulated time, if the drought continued. Agastya told them not to fear, and that if Indra refused to send rain, he himself would become Indra and protect the subjects. Indra was horrified, when he heard this and he began to send rain regularly. (Mahabhara, Asvamedhika Parva, Chapter 92).

15) Story of Gajendra-moksa (The redemption of an elephant). In the Bharaata a story occurs, as to how Agastya cursed King Indradyumna, and turned him to an elephant. While Indradyumna, the King of Pandyas was absorbed in deep meditation on Vishu, Agastya reached the palace. Being immersed in meditation the King failed to notice the arrival of the great hermit, who getting angry with the King, cursed him to become an elephant, for one thousand years. Instantly the King was deformed into a big tusker and quitting the palace it went to a big forest and lived there happily with the she-elephants there. At that time a hermit named Devala was doing penance in that forest. One day Hhu, a gandharva (a class of semi-gods) enjoying the company of some celestial maids came to the place where Devala had put up his hermitage. The hermit saw the Gandharva and the maids playing and bathing in the pond in front of his hermitage in complete nudity. Getting angry Devala cursed Hhu and he was deformed into a crocodile. This pond which was in the Trikuta Mountain was thus under the suzerainty of the crocodile. The tusker (Indradyumna) entered the pond to drink water. The crocodile caught hold of the leg of the elephant. Each tried to pull the other with equal force. This fight is said to have lasted for a thousand years. When both were tired, godly feelings began to dawn in their minds. Then, riding on an eagle Mahavisu appeared before them, cut them asunder with his Cakrayudha (the wheel-weapon) and both were given deliverance. (Bhagavata, 8th Skandha, Chapter 2).

16) Agastya teaching Sri Rama the Aditya-hrdaya Mantra (A hymn in praise of the Sun). When Sri Rama was fighting with Ravana in Lanka, dejection befell him, his heart being weighed down with faintness, for a little while. Ravana made the best use of this opportunity and began to advance. The gods had gathered in the sky above to witness the fight. Agastya, at that particular moment, taught Sri Rama the Aditya-hrdaya Mantra, a hymn in praise of the Sun-god and when Sri Rama chanted that mantra, he resumed fight with Vigour and Ravana was defeated and slain. (Valmiki Ramayana, Yuddha Kanda, Sarga 107).

17) How the slant of the earth was rectified by seating Agastya. The matrimonial ceremony of Sri Paramesvara and Pauravi was held in the Himalayas. On that auspicious occasion all the living beings of the world were present, and as a result the Himalayan region sank down and the earth slanted to that side. To keep the equilibrium of the earth, Siva sent Agastya to the south. Accordingly Agastya reached Kutalam, where there was a temple dedicated to the worship of Vishu. Agastya had besmeared his forehead with ashes and so admission to the temple was denied to him, by the devotees there who were Vaisnavites. By his own power Agastya turned himself into a vaishnavite and got into the temple, and immediately the image of Vishu in the temple changed by itself into a Sivalinga (idol representing Siva). Since then the temple at Kutalam has remained a temple of Siva. Agastya proceeded to the southernmost point of the earth and sat there and because of his weight the earth regained its normal position. (Skanda Purana).

18) Agastya and the Kraustha Mountain. When Agastya passed the Vindhaya mountain and proceeded to the South a Rakasa (giant) called Kraustha hindered his way. By his power the Rakasa caused to fall everywhere a very heavy rain. Agastya sprinkled a few drops of water from his waterpot on Kraustha, who instantly became a mountain. Telling him that he would get deliverance from the curse when the weapon of Subrahmanyas struck him, Agastya continued his journey to the South. (Skanda Purana.)

19) Agastya and the River Kaveri. Once Suraapadam, an Asura (demon) drove the Gods out from heaven. Indra came to Siyali a place in the district of Tanjavur (Thanjore) and began to do penance to please Siva. Rain was completely stopped. Agastya had compressed the river Kaveri and held the water in his waterpot. Gaanapati having come to know of this, came in the form of a crow and toppled the waterpot. Agastya got angry and ran after the crow, which immediately assumed the form of a boy. Agastya caught hold of him. The boy instantly revealed himself as Subrahmanyas and granted Agastya a boon. "Your waterpot will always be full". Since then there had never been shortage of water in the Kaveri. (Skanda Purana).

20) Agastya in the palace of Bhadrashita. Once Agastya lived in the palace of Bhadrashita as his guest for seven days. Agastya praised Kantiama the queen on several occasions. The King wanted to know the reason. Agastya said : During her previous birth Kantiama was the handmaid of a rich man. On one occasion of dvadasathi (twelfth night after full moon) in the month of Tulath (second half of October and first half of November) the rich man had asked his handmaid to see that the lights in a certain temple did not go out and she did so, in consequence of which, during her current birth she has become your queen, bearing the name Kantiama. The King and the queen were much pleased at this explanation of Agastya and thenceforward they began to observe dvadasathi as a day of fasting. (Vayu Purana).

21) Agastya cursing Uraasi, Jayanta and Narada. Once Agastya went to the realm of the Gods, as a guest of Indra. On that day a performance of dance by Uraasi was held in honour of Agastya. In the midst of the dance Uraasi's eyes fell on Jayanta and she fell in love with him; her steps went out of beat. Narada also went wrong slightly in playing on his famous lute called Mahati. Agastya got angry and cursed Uraasi, Jayanta and Narada. According to the curse Jayanta became a bud. Uraasi was born in the earth as a woman called Madhavi and 'Mahati' the lute of Narada became the lute of the people of the earth.
22) Agastya cursing Duspanya. Duspanya was the last son of the King of Paitaliputra. The wicked Duspanya had slain a large number of babies, and the King therefore expelled him from the palace. Duspanya went into the forest, where he caught hold of the child of Ugraravas and killed it by putting it under water. Ugraravas cursed him and accordingly he fell into water and died and his spirit became a ghost and wandered about tormented with pain and anguish. At last the spirit approached Agastya, who called his disciple Sutiṣṇa and asked him to go to and bathe in the Agnitrītha (a bath) in the Gandhamādana mountain and bring some water from the tirtha and sprinkle it on the spirit of Duspanya. Sutiṣṇa acted accordingly and immediately the spirit of Duspanya received divine figure and entered heaven. (Setu Māhaṭṭaṇya).

23) How Agastya got golden Bangle. Once Agastya entered a forest of about a hundred yojanas wide. The forest was devoid of life. When he had walked a few more steps some Gandharvas (semi-gods) and celestial maids came there singing and dancing. From among them a noble male being came forward to the bank of a lake in the forest and ate without any hesitation, the corpse of a man that was lying there. After that he walked round Agastya and made obeisance to him. Agastya asked him why he had eaten the corpse of a man. The noble man told Agastya thus: “In tretā yuga (the third age) there lived a King named Vidarbhā. I am his son and my name is Sveta. After having ruled over my kingdom for a long time, I came to the bank of this lake and began to do penance. After that discarding my body I entered heaven. Though I attained heaven my hunger was not appeased. I asked Brahmadev how, I, a dweller of heaven, got this hunger. Brahmadev said that when I was King I had given nothing to anybody and so I got this hunger even after entering heaven. As a remedy Brahmadev suggested that I should come here everyday and eat corpse and when I had completed ten thousand days the hermit Agastya would come here and that when I offered him a golden bangle my sin would be washed away.” Saying thus Sveta offered to Agastya the golden bangle given by Brahmadev and then he vanished and the corpse also disappeared. Sveta went to heaven. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

24) Other informations concerning Agastya.

(1) Agastya had a brother called Sutiṣṇa. (Agnipurāṇa, Chapter 7).

(2) Sutiṣṇa was Agastya’s disciple too. (Setu Māhaṭṭaṇya).

(3) Ilvala and Vatāpi were the sons of the giantess Ajamukhi. In the valley of a mountain Ajamukhi prayed to Durvāsas for love and thus Ilvala and Vatāpi were born from Durvāsas. These two sons demanded that Durvāsas should impart to them all his merits of penance. Getting angry Durvāsas cursed them that they would meet with death at the hands of Agastya. (Skandaapurāṇa, Āsura Kāṇḍa).

(4) Agastya had been the priest of the King Khela. (Rgveda, 112th Sūkta).

(5) When Śrī Rāma returned to Ayodhya, with Sītā from Lanka, hermits from various parts visited him, among whom, Dattatreyā, Namuci, Praumuci, Śrī Vālmiki, Soma, Kāṇḍu, Agastya and their disciples were from the South. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

(6) Agastya gave Śrī Rāma an arrow, which, when shot at an asura (demon) would pierce his heart, pass on to the other side, fly to the sea and bathe in the sea-water and return to the quiver, it is said. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

(7) Once Agastya visited the hermitage of Āpastamba. He asked Agastya, who, of Brahma, Viṣṇu and Siva, was the Supreme deity. Agastya replied: “These three are only three different manifestations of the one supreme Being”. (Brahmapurāṇa).

(8) For the story of how Agastya cursed the sons of Manibhadra and transformed them to seven palms, see the word ‘Saptasāla’.

(9) There was a hermit called Sutiṣṇa, to whom Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa paid a visit when they were wandering in the forest. This Sutiṣṇa is the younger brother of Agastya. (See the word Sutiṣṇa).

(10) Agastya cursed Śuka and deformed him into a Rākṣasa. (See the word Śuka i.)

25) Conclusion. It is believed that the great hermit Agastya, who had performed such wonderful deeds by the merits of his penance, is still doing penance in the Agastya Kūṭa hills. Agastya who had travelled throughout the length and breadth of Bhārata had several hermitages. In the Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Āranyakāṇḍa, Sarga 11, a description is given, of a beautiful hermitage of Agastya, and the peaceful atmosphere that prevailed in and around it. Agastya had presented to Śrī Rāma a bow got from Viṣṇu, when the brothers visited his hermitage. Agastya had accompanied Śrī Rāma and his followers on his return journey to Ayodhya from Lanka, with Sītā after killing Rāvana. There is a legend in the Tamilnād that Agastya was a member of the first two “Saṅghas” (groups) of the “three Saṅghas”, mentioned in Tamil literature. As Agastya was dwarfish he is mentioned as Kurumuni, (short hermit) in Tamil works. He has written a Tamil grammar on music, literature and drama. But this work is not available now. The Tamil Grammar ‘Tolkāpyam’, which is considered to be the oldest grammar, was written by Tolkāpyar, one of the twelve disciples of Agastya. Even today in certain temples in the Tamilnād, Agastya-worship is carried on. Kambar, has mentioned about Agastya in his Rāmāyaṇa. A great Tamil author Villiputturan says that the Tamil language is the beautiful maiden presented by Agastya. It is believed that the following works have been composed by Agastya:

1) Agastya Gitā; in the Varāhāpurāṇa, Paśupālopākhyaṇa.

2) Agastya Saṅhitā; in Paścarātra.

3) Agastya Saṅhitā; in the Skandaapurāṇa.

4) Śiva Saṅhitā, in Bhaşkaṭa Saṅhitā.

5) Dvaidha-nirṇaya Tantra.

AGASTYA KŪṬA. This is the sacred mount where the sage, Agastya, sat and did penance during his sojourn in the southern parts of India. In the Kiśkindhā Kāṇḍa of Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa we find King Sugrīva commanding that all his soldiers going in search of Sītā should pay homage to the sage Agastya.

AGASTYA PARVATA. This is a mountain in South India believed to belong to the Kālaśa mountain range. Agastya Kūṭa is in this mountain.

AGASTYA SARAS. This is another name for Agastya tīrtha.
AGASTYA-ASHBOARD. The Purânas make mention of several āsrāmas connected with sage Agastya. The Pāṇḍavas during their exile visited an āsrāma of this name. This is situated near Pañcavaśi twenty-four miles to the south-east of Nasik. It is known as Agastya-giri now. (Sloka 20, Chapter 80; and Sloka 1, Chapter 96 of Vana Parva, M.B.).

The Mahābhārata mentions another Agastya-Āsrama near Prayāga. Dharmaputra along with Saint Lomaśa stayed here for some time. Vālmiki describes an āsrāma of this name which Rāma and Lakṣmana visited during their exile in the forests. (Chapter 11, Aranya Kanda of the Rāmāyana).

AGASTYA TĪRTHA. This is one of the five tirthas or sacred places of worship lying scattered in the southern ocean. The other four are the following: (1) The Sāubhadra tīrtha (2) The Pauloma tīrtha (3) The Kārandaṁhāla tīrtha and (4) the Aṭṭāpāvaṇa tīrtha. These five were known as Pañca tīrthas and many saints used to live there. There lived in each of these tirthas one huge and fierce crocodile and all the saints living there, afraid of these crocodiles, deserted their places one by one. (Ref.: Sloka 3, Chapter 220 of Ādi Parva, M.B. For more details see under Pañca tīrthas).

AGASTYA VĀṬA. This is a sacred shrine in the neighbourhood of the Himālayas. Arjuna paid a visit to this place while he was living with his brothers in the forests during their period of exile. (Sloka 2, Chapter 214 of Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AGATI. A city. Two sons Taṅka and Chhattraketu were born to Lakṣmaṇa (the brother of Śrī Rāma) by his wife Urmilā. The court of the eldest prince Taṅka was situated in the city of Agati. Formerly this place was known as Kanakhala and was occupied by forest tribes. Exterminating these forest tribes, Lakṣmaṇa built a city there and appropriated it to his eldest son Taṅka. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

AGHA. The name of an asura. This asura was one of the followers of Karna. According to the instructions of Karna, Agha once set out to Gokula to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa. At that time Śrī Kṛṣṇa was playing on the banks of the river Kālindī with other cowherds. Aghāsura watched the games of the children from the sky above. Then he transformed himself into a colossal serpent and lay with his mouth wide open; his open mouth looked like an immense cave. The foul smell coming from his mouth soon spread over the whole place. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the other children did not know anything about this. In the course of their games they walked into the cave-like mouth of Agha and were soon trapped in his belly. Agha then closed his mouth and all the boys including Śrī Kṛṣṇa were now imprisoned inside his body. Some of the boys died. Realizing the situation Śrī Kṛṣṇa now enlarged his body. His body grew larger and larger until at last it burst open the body of the serpent (Āgha). Thus Agha was killed. Śrī Kṛṣṇa then restored the dead boys to life by his divine looks (Kāṭākṣa). This Aghasura was the brother of Bakāsura and Pūtana. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, Chapter 12).

AGHAMARŚAṆA SŪKTA. This is a hymn in the Rgveda. It is said that all sins will be eliminated, if this hymn is recited three times, standing in water.

AGHĀRDDANAVAMI. (See the word NAVAMI VRATA).

AGHĀŚVA. A King hermit (Rājarṣi) named Peda. (Rgveda, Manu 1, Anuvāka 17, Sūtra 116).

AGNI.
1) Genealogy. Agni was descended from Viṣṇu in this order: Viṣṇu-Brahmā-Āgīrhas-Bṛhaspati-Agni.
2) Birth. We come across several contradictory statements in the Purāṇas regarding the birth of Agni. There is some real difficulty, therefore, in tracing correctly the true genealogy of Agni. The one given above is based on statements in Bhāgavata and Mahābhārata. Āgīrhas is one of the six mind-born sons of Brahmā.* Āgīrhas married Śraddhā and got four daughters and two sons. Bṛhaspati was one of the sons and Utāthya was the other. The daughters were Śrīnivāsi, Kuhū, Rākṣa and Anumati. (There is a mention of a third son named Satnivarta in the Bhāgavata by Elūthassan though the original quoted below does not say so)

Śraddhā tu aūgīriraśat pari
Catastro sutakanyakāh
Śrīnivāsi Kuhū Rākṣa
Caturthya anumatiṣṭathā tapatrāvaparāvastām
Khyātāu svārociṣntare
Utāthya bhagaṃ sākṣāt
Brahmiṣṭhāca Bṛhaspatiḥ

Bṛhaspati married Cāndramasi and got six divine sons. Of these Sānyu, the eldest, married Satyā and Agni was born to Sānyu of Satyā. (Slokas 1 to 4, Chapter 219, Aranya Kanda of Malayālāṃ Mahābhārata).
3) Āgni—One of the Aṣṭa-dik-pālakas. (Aṣṭa = eight, dik = zone, pālaka = guardian). The Devī Bṛhāgavatā states in its eighth chapter that Agni is one of the eight guards posted at the eight different zones to protect the universe. Indra guards the east; Agni, the south-east; Yama the south; Nirṛti, the south-west; Varuṇa, the west; Vāyu, the north-west; Kubera, the North and Śiva, the north-east. The place where Agni sits on guard is known as tejovati.
4) Āgni—One of the five elements. The universe is believed to be composed of five elements of which Agni is one. The other four are Water, Earth, Ether and Air.
5) The story of how Agni gave a Māyā Sitā (Phantom Sitā) to Śrī Rāma. During their exile in the forests Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were for some time living in an āsrāma built on the shores of the ocean. One day Agni disguised as a Brāhmaṇī approached them and said "O, Śrī Rāma, thou art born to kill the demon Rāvaṇa and save the world from his atrocities. Sitā is going to be a cause for that. Time is not far for you to finish this duty of yours. Rāvaṇa is soon to come and kidnap your wife, Sitā. You must, therefore, allow me to play a trick on Rāvaṇa. Entrust Sitā with me and I shall keep her safe. In her place here you can keep a Māyā Sitā (Phantom Sitā) which will be a live replica of your real wife. In the end when you take back Sitā after killing Rāvaṇa you will be compelled to throw your wife into the fire to test her chastity. At that time I will take back the replica and give you back your real wife'. Śrī Rāma was very much pleased to hear this. Agni then, by his yogic powers created a Phantom Sītā and gave her to him. Rāma kept this as a secret even from Lakṣmana. In the great Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle Rāvaṇa was killed and Śrī Rāma took back Sītā to his kingdom. Then respecting public opinion and wishing to establish in public the purity of his queen King Śrī Rāma put her into the fire. At that moment Agni took back the replica and gave back the real Sītā to Śrī Rāma. Sītā thus came out from the fire unscathed. Later, on the advice of Rāma and Agni, the Phantom Sītā went to the sacred place Puṣkara and started doing tapas (penance) there. After doing tapas for a long period of three lakhs of divine years this Phantom Sītā became known as Svargalakṣmī. It was this Svargalakṣmī that later on in the Dvāpara yuga came out from the yajña kūnda of King Pāncāla as Pāncāli and became the consort of the Pāṇḍavas. Vedavati, daughter of Kuśadhaiva in Kṛtya yuga, Sītā, daughter of Janaka in the Treta yuga, and Pāncāli, daughter of Drupada in Dvāpara yuga are one and the same person. On account of this she is known as triāyāni also. (Chapter 9 of Devī Bhāgavata).

6) The story of how Agni got indigestion. In olden times there was a bold and mighty King called Śvetaki. He conducted several different types of yajñas. Afflicted by the unending dense smoke in the yajña hall all the ascetics left the place and went their way. Undaunted by this, Śvetaki started another twelve-year sacrifice in which not a single sage took part. The sages rebuked him and said if he wanted to conduct a sacrifice again he could invite ŚĪdras to help him. (ŚĪdras belong to the lowest caste among Hindus and are not allowed to participate in sacrifices generally.) Enraged by the insult Śvetaki went to Kailāsa and did fierce penance. Lord Śiva appeared before him and gave him Durvāsas as a priest for his yajña. For twelve years sage Durvāsas performed the yajña pouring into the mouth of Agni through the sacrificial pit unlimited materials of food. Agni was overfed and he got indigestion. He lost all appetite for food, became weak and the brilliance of his face faded. (Chapter 235, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

7) The story of how Agni burnt the big forest, Khāṇḍava. When the indigestion continued without abate for some time Agni approached Brahmā and asked for a cure. Brahmā declared that his indigestion would be cured if Agni could burn the huge forest, Khāṇḍava, the abode of the enemies of the Devas. Agni immediately started consuming the forest. But the inhabitants of the forest soon quenched the fire. Disappointed Agni went to Brahmā again and the latter advised him to wait for some time till the advent of Nara-Nārāyaṇas to that forest. They would then help Agni to burn the forest. Agni waited for the time to come. At that time the Pāṇḍavas were living in Indraprastha with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. When the heat became unbearable there Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa came to the banks of river Yamunā. Hearing about the arrival of Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna who were none but the incarnations of Nārāyaṇa and Nara, Agni disguised as a brahmin approached them and requested them to help him to burn the Khāṇḍava forest. Agni added that any attempt of his to burn the forest was always foiled by Indra who would send a heavy downpour of rain to quench the fire because Takṣaka, an intimate friend of Indra, was living there.

To gain his end Agni gave Arjuna an arrow-case which would never be empty, a chariot bearing a monkey flag, four white horses adorned with gold chains and also the famous Gāndiva bow. To Śrī Kṛṣṇa he gave the cakrāyudha or the divine wheel-weapon. (All these military equipments were once given to Agni by Varuṇa.) When all these were given to them Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna got ready to help Agni to burn the forest. Agni started burning the forest, Indra at once sent a heavy downpour of rain and Arjuna created a canopy of arrows above the forest preventing the rains from falling on the forest. Agni carried on his work undisturbed, the forest was burnt and Agni was cured of his indigestion. (Slokas 233 to 239, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

8) Agni falls in love. As an inaugural procedure to the great Rājasūya which Dharmaputra performed at Indraprastha his four brothers Bhīma, Arjuna, Nakula and Sahadeva conducted a victory march to the four different sides of the kingdom. Sahadeva who turned south conquered many kings including Dantavakra and Bhīṣmaṇa and reached a country called Māhiṣmatipura. There he had to encounter a powerful king called Nila. Before long there broke a fire in his camp. Disheartened, Sahadeva prayed to the God, Agni, for help. It was then that Sahadeva came to know about the ties between Agni and Nila. The king Nila had a beautiful daughter named Sudarṣanā. Once when she was talking to her father after having entered the Agni-hotra Agni fell in love with her. From that day onwards Agni became dreamy about the beautiful lips of Sudarṣanā. It reached a stage when Agni would burn only if it was blown by the lips of Sudarṣanā. This ended in Agni marrying Sudarṣanā. After the marriage Agni lived in the palace of his father-in-law, King Nila, as a useful ally. It was at this time that Sahadeva came to conquer Nila. But Agni knew that for the proper conduct of the Rājasūya of Dharmaputra his father-in-law had to surrender to Sahadeva and so advised his father-in-law to do so. What appeared to be a difficult problem was thus easily solved. (Chapter 31, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

9) How Emperor Sībi was tested by Agni. Once Agni and Indra thought of testing how strong and deep was the sense of charity in Emperor Sībi. Indra took the shape of a hawk and Agni that of a dove and the dove flew and dropped down into the lap of the Emperor who was at that time doing a yāga. The hungry hawk came chasing its prey and finding the dove in the lap of the Emperor said: "O King, is it proper on your part to withhold my food from me, and keep it in your lap?" Hearing this Sībi replied: "This dove has sought refuge in me. It is my duty to give it protection. If it is only food you want I shall give you food." Sībi then offered many things including his kingdom to the hawk in return for the dove. But the hawk refused them all and finally agreed to accept an equal weight of flesh from the body of the Emperor. Sībi without any hesitation cut a portion of his thigh and weighed it against the dove in a scale. The dove weighed more and the Emperor started putting more and more flesh from his body to make the weight equal. But the dove always weighed more and at last the Emperor said he would weigh himself against the dove. As the weak and fleshless Emperor was about to get into the pan of the scale Agni and Indra emerged from the bodies of the dove and hawk and appeared before the Emperor. They blessed him and immediately took him to heaven. (Chapter 131, Vana Parva, M.B.).

10) Agni and the testicles of a goat. The occasion is when sage Viśvāmitra is taking Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa to the forests to give protection to the sages against the demons. They reached the place where Ahalyā lay as a stone cursed by Gautama. Viśvāmitra told them the story: "It was here that the great sage, Gautama, lived with his beautiful consort, Ahalyā. Once Indra had an intercourse with her privately and Gautama coming to know of the misdeed cursed her and turned her into stone. By the curse of the same sage Indra lost his testicles. Greatly aggrieved by this loss Indra prayed to god Agni for help and on the advice of Agni the devas removed the deformity by placing a goat's testicles instead." (Ślokas 48 & 49, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyāṇa).

11) How sage Bhṛgu cursed Agni. Sage Bhṛgu was living with his wife Pulomā in his āśrama. Pulomā became pregnant. One day when Bhṛgu wanted to go out for a bath in the river he asked Agni to keep a watch over his pregnant wife. There was a demon by name Pulomā who was once in love with Pulomā. On this particular day Pulomā entered the āśrama to see his former lover. When he entered the āśrama Pulomā saw Agni there burning with a brilliant flame in the fire-pit. Pulomā said: "O God of fire, if I ask you a question you must give me an impartial reply. I was in love with this Pulomā and I had accepted her as my wife spiritually. But, then, her father gave her to Bhṛgu. Who, then, is the true owner of Pulomā?" Agni was afraid of Bhṛgu. Yet he explained the position honestly. "It is true that Pulomā has married Bhṛgu. But he has not married her according to Hindu rites." Hearing this the demon changed himself into the shape of a swine and carried away Pulomā. On the way Pulomā delivered a male babe and it fell on the ground. The boy was named Cyavana. It was this boy that became later on the famous Cyavana Mahārṣi. Even at birth the boy was brilliant as the Sun to look at and Pulomā, the demon, noticing the unusual brilliance of the child left the mother and child on the way and fled frightened. Pulomā returned to the āśrama carrying the child weeping profusely all the way and 'creating a lachrymal river called Vadhūsarās. As soon as she entered the āśrama the angry sage asked "Who told Pulomā that you are my wife?" Pulomā then told her husband all that happened there and Bhṛgu called Agni and cursed him thus: "May you be a consumer of all things on this Earth". Greatly aggrieved Agni went away and hid himself. The absence of Agni created chaos in all the three worlds; Heaven, Earth and the Nether-world. A deputation of all the afflicted people waited upon Brahmā and Brahmā modified the curse and declared that all that Agni touched would become purc. Agni was consoled and he started his work as usual.

12) How Agni cursed frogs, birds and elephants. Many important events took place while Agni was underground cursed by Bhṛgu. It was during that time that Pārvati cursed all the Devas and the Devas were defeated by the asuras (demons). The necessity of a warrior capable of defeating the asuras arose then. The idea of creating Lord Subrahmanya came up and Brahmā said that only Agni could help them in this matter since Agni was the only one who escaped from the curse of Pārvati, being underground at the time of the curse. The Devas started a vigilant search but Agni was not to be found. Agni was then hiding inside the ocean. The ocean was getting hot and the animals living there found their life unbearable. Frogs went to the devas and told them where Agni was hiding. Enraged at this Agni cursed the frogs saying that they would never be able to find the taste of anything. Frogs went weeping to the devas who in turn blessed the frogs saying that they would acquire the ability to move about easily in any darkness. Agni changed his place of hiding and went and hid in a big banyan tree. An elephant going by that way found him out and informed the devas; knowing this Agni cursed the elephants saying that its tongue would go deep inside. But the devas blessed the elephants saying that the position of the tongue would never be a hindrance to free eating and that elephants would be able to eat anything and everything. Agni left the banyan tree and hid himself in the hollow of a Śāmi tree. A little bird living in that tree gave information to the devas and the devas found him out before he got time to leave the place. Agni cursed the bird saying that its tongue would always be curved inside and the devas blessed it saying that the curvature would help it to sing beautiful songs. Since Agni was found out from Śāmi tree this tree became sacred. Since this finding out of Agni after a long absence is like a re-birth of Agni the Purāṇas mention that Agni was born from the Śāmi tree. The Devas then requested Agni to help them to create a son capable of conquering the demons.* (Chapter 85, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

13) Birth of Subrahmanya. At that time Varuṇa performed a yāga. All the dikpālakas (zone guardians of the universe) including Śiva participated in the yāga. Seeing the beautiful wives of the sages Śiva had emission. Taking the semen in his hand he put it into the fire. Agni carried it to Gaṅgā and requested her to take it for conception. Though she at first refused she took it, became pregnant and finally delivered a male child whom she threw into the forest Śaravaṇa. It was this child who became known as Kārttikeya or Subrahmanya later on. (Chapter 83, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

14) How Agni blessed Nala. While Nala was going to the wedding of Damayantī Indra, Agni, Varuṇa and Kāla accosted him on his way and asked him to go as a messenger of theirs and advise Damayantī to marry one

Kathāsrītāgāra gives another version of why Agni went and hid himself under the ocean. When Kāma, the God of Love, was burnt to death by Śiva, Pārvati, Śiva's wife, did not find a way to get a child for her from her husband. At last Brahmā approached Śiva and told him that the absence of Kāma was making creation difficult. Śiva then declared that thereafter Kāma would find a place in the minds of all living beings including himself. Pārvati and Śiva immediately commenced a sexual life which went on incessantly for a hundred years without reaching the climax. The world was agitated and the universe stood on the verge of ruin. The Devas decided to send Agni to intervene. But Agni was afraid of Śiva and so went and hid himself under the ocean. (Chapter 8, Lāvanakālamabaka of Kathāsrītāgāra). of them. Nala did so, but Damayantí was adamant and said she would marry none other than Nala. So all the four gods appeared as Nala in the wedding hall. Damayantí who was confused prayed that she should be shown the real Nala. The gods then changed into their original forms and blessed Nala. Agni said he would come and help him the moment he wanted him. Thus Nala became a good cook and Nala Pācakāni (Pācakāni=cooking) became famous. Even now it is a synonym for good cooking. (Chapter 57, Vana Parva, M.B.)

15) Agni and Rāmbha. There was once a dānava called Dānu. He had two sons named Rāmbha and Kārimbah. They had no children and tormented by this they went to Pañcanada and started doing penance. Rāmbha sat in the centre of Pañcāgni (five fires) and Kārimbah in water to do penance. Indra afraid of the severe and powerful tapas of the two took the form of a crocodile and killed Kārimbah who was doing penance in water by dragging him down to the water. Bereaved Rāmbha started to commit suicide by jumping into the fire. God Agni appeared before him then and asked him what he wanted. Rāmbha then said that he should get a son who would be famous as a warrior in all the three worlds. Agni agreed. Rāmbha on his way back saw a voluptuous she-buffalo and married her at yakṣa kāvāṭa. They lived a happy married life and one day a he-buffalo envious of their life attacked Rāmbha and killed him. Grief-stricken Rāmbha’s wife jumped into the funeral pyre and committed suicide. Then from the fire arose a demon named Mahīśāsura (Mahīśa=Buffalo. Asura=Demon). This buffalo-demon became a terror to all in the three worlds later on. (Chapter 5, Devī Bhāgavata).

16) Difference of opinion between Agni and Aṅgiras. Bhagavān Aṅgiras did penance in his own āśrama and became more brilliant than Agni. The whole world was submerged in his brilliance. Agni felt a bit depressed at this. Agni argued that it was not proper on the part of Brāhmaṇa to give anybody else more brilliance than himself. So as a protest against this Agni disappeared from the world. Even Aṅgiras was annoyed at Agni’s disappearance and so he went and consorted Agni and took him to Brāhmaṇa. Brāhmaṇa declared that henceforth the world would recognize Agni as the father and Aṅgiras as his son. Thus Agni got the first place in effulgence. This is a story told by sage Mārkandeya to Dharmaputra. (Chapter 217, Vana Parva, M.B.).

17) Agni and Mahābali. On their way to the forest sage Viśvāmitra took Rāma and Lakṣaṇa to Siddhas tame. The sage explained to the princes the importance of that āśrama. He said: “Mahāvīśṇu lived in this āśrama for a number of years. It was at that time that the Emperor of the asuras (demons), Mahābali, son of Virocana, was ruling the world conquering even the devas. After having conquered all the three worlds Mahābali decided to conduct a yāga. A deputation of the Devas headed by Agni then waited upon Mahāvīśṇu and Agni said: “O Lord, Mahābali has commenced a yāga and before it is finished you should go to him and do something for the benefit of the devas”. It was at this request of Agni that Mahāvīśṇu took the form of Vāmana and sent Mahābali to the nether-world. (Chapter 29, Bālakāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyana).

18) Agni and Nāhuṣa. Repenting for his act of killing Vṛtra Indra unknown to anybody went and hid in a lotus in the Mānasa Saras (Lake Mānasa). Perplexed by the disappearance of their leader the devas brought Nāhuṣa from the Earth and made him their leader. Nāhuṣa became very proud and arrogant of his new position and tried to make Indra his wife. Indra went to Brhaspatai for help. Brhaspatai commanded Agni to go and find out Indra. Agni searched for him in forests, rivers and oceans. At last he went to Mānasa Saras and searched among the lotuses. There he found Indra hiding in a lotus and Brhaspatai was duly informed. Then Brhaspatai gave Indra some clever directions to kill Nāhuṣa and Nāhuṣa was killed. (See Agastya). There is a story in Sānti Parva, Chapter 28, of how Agni took for himself a quarter of the sin which Indra acquired because of his killing Vṛtra, a brahmin by birth. (Chapter 14, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

19) Agni Deva and Kārttavīyārjuna. After the great Kuruṣetra battle the Pāṇḍavas went again to Kurukṣetra along with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. On their way Kṛṣṇa showed them the Paśuṣurāmahradas and narrated to them several stories of Rāma. Reference to Agni comes when Kṛṣṇa explains the reason why Paśuṣurāma cut off the thousand hands of Kārttavīyārjunā. It was at the time when Kārttavīyārjunā was ruling the three worlds by his might that Agni went and asked for alms from him. Kārttavīyārjunā gave Agni mountains and forests for his food which Agni burnt and ate. In one of the forests was the āśrama of sage Āpava and that also was burnt. Enraged at this the sage cursed Kārttavīyārjunā saying that his thousand hands would be cut off by Paśuṣurāma. Though the curse was not seriously minded by the King then, it so happened that before long Kārttavīyārjunā had to encounter Paśuṣurāma in a battle when the children of the King stole a sacrificial cow belonging to Jamadagni, father of Paśuṣurāma. In the battle all the thousand hands of Kārttavīyārjunā were cut off by Paśuṣurāma. (Chapter 43, Sānti Parva, M.B.).

20) How Agni was duped. Once the wives of the Saptāśis (seven Saints) attended a yāga where Agni was also present. Agni fell in love with them but knowing it to be futile to make any attempt to fulfill his desire he went to the forests deserted. Śvēhādevī, daughter of Daśaṇa was for a long time craving to marry Agni and she decided to take advantage of the opportunity thus offered. Disguising herself as the wife of Aṅgiras, one of the seven saints, she approached Agni and said: “O lord, I am Śivā, wife of Aṅgiras. We were all excited when you darted cupid's arrows against us and they have now selected me to come to you for fulfilling your desire”. Agni believed her and took her as his consort. (Chapters 223 to 227 of Vana Parva, M.B.).

21) How Agni became a doctor. There was once a sage called Dattātreya who had a son called Nimi. Nimi had a son and he died after thousand years. The bereaved sage performed a Śrāddha which was attended by all devas. The feast was so sumptuous that the devas got indigestion after that. Consulting Brāhma Agni prescribed a remedy for their indigestion. He said: “whenever you take any food make me also a participant in that. If you do so you will never get indigestion”. That is why a very small portion of any cooked food is first thrown into the fire before given for eating. This story is part of Bhasma’s oration to Dharmaputra on the origin of Shraddha (The ceremony conducted on the anniversary of the death of a person by his son). (Chapter 92, Anusasana Parva, M.B.).

22) How Agni became a horse. There was once a preceptor named Avcda. He got a disciple named Uttanga. One day Avcda left his aśrama for a distant place leaving his disciple in charge of the management of the aśrama. The preceptor was absent for a long time and his wife started making love to Uttanga. The dutiful disciple strongly objected to this. When Uttanga completed his course of study under Avcda he enquired what he should give to his preceptor. The preceptor directed him to his wife. The wife who bore a grudge against Uttanga resolved to tease him and said that he should go to King Pausya and beg of him the earrings worn by his wife. Uttanga started immediately and getting the earrings was coming back when on the way Taksaka wrested the ornament from him and went and hid in the nether-world. Uttanga followed Taksaka and there Agni in the form of a horse appeared before him and asked Uttanga what he wanted. He replied that he wanted to subdue all the serpents in the nether-world. Agni then advised him to blow thro’ the nostrils of the horse. As he did so flames burst forth from all the openings of the horse making the nether-world hot and smoky. Taksaka was frightened and at once gave back the earrings to Uttanga. Uttanga was again worried for he had very little time to carry the earrings to the preceptor in time. Here again Agni helped him by carrying him swiftly on his back to the aśrama. When the preceptor and his wife found that Uttanga had carried out their wish they blessed him. (Chapter 3, Adi Parva, M.B.).

23) Agni becomes a messenger. Once there arose a misunderstanding between Bhargavi and Sanivarattaka, sons of Angiras. Bhargavi went to devolaka as priest while the other remained in the world as a mad saint. At that time a King called Marutta invited Bhargavi to officiate as priest for a yajña of his. But Bhargavi refused to accept it. Nārada saw Marutta in despair and told him thus: “You go to Kāśi (Benares) and there at Puradvāra place a dead body and wait there. Sanivarattaka, Bhargavi’s brother will come and repri­mand you. Without minding his scoldings follow him and request him to become the chief priest for your yāga. He will then ask you who advised you to do like this. Tell him that Nārada did so and if he asks where he could find Nārada do tell him that Nārada is hiding inside Agni”. Hearing this Marutta went to Kāśi and did all as directed. Sanivarattaka agreed to become the priest but wanted Marutta to bring some gold from Kailāsa before that. Marutta brought that also and the yajña started. Bhargavi when he came to know of all these developments became sorry for his refusal first and decided to become the priest of Marutta for his yāga. It was Agni who carried this message of consent to King Marutta. Thus Marutta’s yajña was performed in a grand way. (Chapter 9, Āsvamedha Parva, M.B.).

24) Agni takes back the Gāndiva. At the time of Khandava dāhana (burning of Khandava forest) Agni gave Arjuna the famous Gāndiva bow which Varuṇa had given him. After the great Mahābhārata battle Agni took back this bow from Arjuna. The Pāṇḍavas at the fag end of their life started on a pilgrimage to the south with their consort Pāñcāli. Marching along slowly they reached the shores of Aruṇa Suṣumdra (Aruṇa Ocean). Arjuna had with him then the Gāndiva and also the arrow-case which never becomes empty. When they reached the shores of the ocean Agni blocked their way standing before them in the form of a huge mountain and said, “O Arjuna I am god Agni. It was I who gave this famous Gāndiva bow to you. The bow belongs to Varuṇa. So please throw it into the ocean and proceed on your way”. On hearing this Arjuna threw both the bow and the arrow-case into the ocean and continued the march. (Slokas 33 to 43, Chapter 1, Mahāprāṣṭhānīka Parva, M.B.).

25) Additional information about Agni, the God of fire.
1) Svāhādevi, wife of Agni, gave birth to three sons, named Dākṣiṇā, Gārhpātya and Āhavāniyam. (Chapter 9, Devī Bhāgavata).
2) Agni, the God of fire, got three sons by his wife Svāhādevi named Pāvaka, Pāvamāna and Suci. These three sons had all together forty-five sons. These forty-five grandsons, three sons and Agni himself constitute the fortynine Fires mentioned in the purāṇas (Agni­ra­sam).
3) Nila, the monkey, is born of Agni. (Sarga 41, Chapter Kīśkindhas, Rāmaṇa).
4) Dhrṣṭadyumna, the great archer, was born of Agni. (Sloka 126, Chapter 67, Adi Parva, M.B.).
5) Subrahmānya was born as the son of Agni. (Chapter 225, Vana Parva, M.B.).
6) Agni, the God of fire, got all praṣāpati like his sons. (Chapter 63, Anusasana Parva, M.B.).
7) The sage, Bhṛgu, was born from Agni. (Sloka 8, Chapter 5, Adi Parva, M.B.).
8) All Devatās are Agni himself. (Sloka 109, Chapter 85, Anusasana Parva, M.B.).
9) God Agni loved God Skanda more than anybody else. (Chapter 226, Vana Parva, M.B.).
10) At the time when Śṛ Rāma after killing Rāvaṇa was putting Sītā to a purity test by throwing her into the fire, Agni witnessed that Sītā had done no wrong and was pure and chaste as before. (Sloka 28, Chapter 201, Vana Parva, M.B.).
11) In the beginning Brahmā created the universe. There was no death then and the Earth became overcrowded. Brahmā got worried and he sent fire from his body to burn all beings. The world was on the verge of extinction when Lord Śiva interceded and requested Brahmā to withdraw Agni and create the god of Death. (Chapter 52, Droṇa Parva. M.B.).
12) Agni is one of the Asa Vaṣūs which are eight in number. The others are: Āpa, Dhrūva, Soma, Dharmya, Anila, Pratyuṣa and Prabhāsa. (Chapter 15, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).
13) Śucī, son of Agni, born of Svāhādevi is Badavāgni himself. (Chapter 20, Agni Purāṇa).
14) The God, Agni, uses a spear as his weapon and the vehicle he uses is a goat. (Chapter 51, Agni Purāṇa).
15) The sage, Agastya, converted the Viṣṇu idol at the Kuttālam temple into one of Śiva and when people around started an agitation Agastya sent forth flames of fire through his eyes. (Asura Kandha of Skanda Purāṇa).
16) Agni was born to Purūras as a son named Jāta­vadas. (Chapter 14, Navama Skandha of Bhāgavata).
17) The Devas wanted help to clean their hands when oblated materials stuck to their hands and Agni created from water three sons named Ēkata, Dvīta and Trita for this purpose. Of these Trita fell into a well while drawing water. Seeing him fall the demons closed the well but Trita broke the top and came out. (Sūkta 52, Anuvāka 10, Manḍala 1 of Ṛgveda).

18) Once the earth looked like heaven because of the innumerable celestial beings who came to earth in search of Agni. (Sūkta 63, Anuvāka 12, Manḍala 1 of Ṛgveda).

19) The Sun hands over his effulgence to Agni in the evening and takes it back from him in the morning. (A fact from Śruti—Sūkta 71, Anuvāka 12, Manḍala 1 of Ṛgveda).

20) For making fire for the sacrificial ceremony the sages use two Arāṇī sticks (These are two pieces of wood, one upper and another lower, and fire is produced by attrition). It is believed that the sages get the strength to produce fire from it through Vāyū, one of the forms of Vāyu (air). So Ṛgveda describes Agni as the son of Vāyu. (Sūkta 112, Anuvāka 16, Manḍala 1).

21) In the times of the Ṛgveda Agni was worshipped as a God. (Sūkta 1, Anuvāka 1, Manḍala 1, Ṛgveda).

22) Lord Siva entered into an elaborate and long conjugal play for creating Subrahmanya. Hundred years went by and still the preliminaries never ended. The universe was on the verge of a collapse and so the devas decided to send Agni to put a stop to this libidinal play of Siva. But Agni was afraid of Siva and therefore abscended and hid himself in the ocean. The ocean became hot and the water-animals unable to bear the increasing heat went and informed the devas of Agni's hiding place. Agni cursed them all saying that all of them would go dumb. He then went to the Mandara mountain in the shape of an owl and hid there, But the devas went there also and picked him up. Agni then by his terrible heat stimulated Siva into action. Siva threw his semen into Agni and Agni poured it into Gaṅgā and Gaṅgā delivered a child which later on became Subrahmanya. (Taranāga 6, Lāvānakalambaka of Kathāsārītāgara).

26) Conclusion. Agni stands next to Indra in importance in the Vedas. Because Agni was indispensable for yāgas the care of Agni became very important. According to the Ṛgveda the birth of Agni is different. Born of the clouds Agni reaches the earth as lightning. Then Agni forsakes its form and becomes invisible. It was Mātarīśvā who gave form to Agni and gave him to the Bhṛgu family. From that day onwards it became possible to produce fire and the Ṛgveda describes how Agni is produced by sages by the use of Arāṇī sticks. The main job of Agni is to receive the oblations from devas when they conduct yāgas.

27) Synonym of Agni.

AGNIHOTRA (M).

The synonyms:
2) Wild-fire: Dāva, Dava, Vanahutāsana.

AGNIBHŪ. A son of the first Manu.

AGNIDATTA. See under the word Devadatta.

AGNIDATTA. (See under GUṆASARMA).

AGNIDHĀRA TIRTHA. This is the name of a sacred place near Gautamavarna. (See Sloka 146, Chapter 84, Vana Parva, M.B.).

AGNIDHRĀ (AGNIDHHRĀ).

2. Birth. Priyavrata, son of Vaivasvatanam, married Barhiṣmati, daughter of Viṣvakarmā. Agnīdhra was one of their ten sons. The other nine sons were: Iṣhna- jīva, Yajabhānu, Mahāvīra, Hīranyaretas, Gṛhā-pṛṣṭha, Śava, Medhātithi, Viṭihotra and Kavi. A daughter also was born to Priyavrata and Barhiṣmati named Urjivasvā. Śukra married her and Devayāni was her daughter.

3) Married life. Agnīdhra married a nymph named Pūrvacitti. They had nine children: Nābhi, Ḍimpurusa, Hāri, Ilavrata, Rāmyaka, Hīrācaya, Kuru, Bhrādrāśva, and Ketumāla. It was from this Kuru that the Kuru Vṛṣṇa began.

4) Other incidents. (1) Agnīdhra ruled over Jambudvīpa for a long time. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

(2) While he was the ruler of Jambudvīpa Agnīdhra once went into a cave and did hard taps there without eating any food. Brahmā then sent a beautiful nymph (Apsārā maiden) to him to tempt him and thwart his taps. Agnīdhra fell a victim to the temptation. His penance was shaken by that nymph named Vipracitti. He married her. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5, Chapter 2).

AGNIHOTRA (M). This is a sacrifice offered to Agnideva. This has two parts, nitya and Kāmya.
AGNIPURA. A King of the Solar dynasty (Suryavansha).

1) Genealogy. Agnipura was descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Viṣṇu - Brahmā - Marici - Kaṣyapa - Śrīraṇa - Agnipura.

2) Contents. This large Purāṇa consists of about 420 chapters. It deals in detail with the following subjects: The Daśāvatāras of Mahāvīra ; Rāma ; Mahābhārata ; rules and injunctions relating to the worship of various gods (deva-pājavidhī); installation of idols in temples (deva-pājiva); Śrāvastis; astronomy; architecture and sculpture; Āyurveda; Viṣṇavianta (treatment of diseases from snakebite etc.); the principles of the drama (Nāṭaka) and other allied arts; figures of speech and all alankāras in general; and physiology of the human body. All these subjects are treated in a detailed and scientific manner.

AGNISARMA. (See the word VIDYUDDYOTA).

AGNISIKHA. Father of Varuṇa. He is also known by the name Somadatta. (Kathāsrītāgama-Kathāpiṭhā- lambara-Taraṅga I. See also the word GUṆĀVARA).

AGNISIRATIRTHA. A holy place on the plains of the river, Yammūnā. Arjuna’s brother, Sahadeva, performed a yāga at this place. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 90).

AGNISSOMA. A deity born of the union of two devas, Agnideva and Somadeva. He is one of the devas who receive the havis (oblations) poured into the sacrificial fire in a houna.

AGNISSOMA(S). Agni and Soma. Agni had two sons by his third wife Bhūmī (also called Niśā). They were deva to many sages, devas and Sage Vasiṣṭha. It is a vast comprehensive work dealing with every subject of importance. To give a copy of this book to a good Brahmin on the Full Moon day in the month of Mārga Śrīsa is supposed to be a highly virtuous and meritorious deed.

AGNIKETU. A demon (Rāṣa) who was a close friend and supporter of Rāvaṇa. Rāma killed him in the course of his battle with Rāvaṇa.

AGNISMĀRA. An epithet of Lord Subrahmanya.

AGNILOKA. One of the devolokas situated on the summit of Mount Mahānāma. There are a few other devolokas on the same mountain. They are: Indraloka, Yama-loka, Śiva-loka or Kailāsa, Satyaloka and Vaikuṇṭha. (Devī Bhāgavata).

AGNIMĀN. Name of one Agni.

AGNIMITRA. The hero of Kālīśa’s play, Mālavi-kāgūmitra. He was a King of the Śrīsa dynasty and the son of Puṣyamitra. Kālīśa’s play deals with the marriage of Mālavi-kā and Agnimitra.
AGNISAUCA(M).

A cloak with magical properties given to Nala by the serpent, Kārkoṭaka. After separating himself from Damayanti, Nala was wandering in the forest. Then he was bitten by the poisonous serpent, Kārkoṭaka. This deformed Nala beyond recognition. Then the serpent gave him this shawl (Agnisauca). Anybody who wore that cloak would regain his original form and colour. (Kathāsārītasthāga-Alaṅkāravatī-lambakā-Taranāga 6).

AGNIṣTALI. (See the word PURŪRAVAS).

AGNIṣTAMBHA(M) A mantra that will reduce the burning power of Agni.

AGNIṣTOМА. (See AGNIṣTU).

AGNIṣTU. (AGNIṣTOМА).

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in this order:—
Viṣṇu-Svāyambhuva-śāmanu - Utsānapāda-Dhrūva-śṛṣṭi-Ripu-Cākṣuṣamanu-Agniṣtu.

2) Birth. Ten good sons were born to Manu by his wife, Nādvala and Agniṣtu was one of them. The other nine sons were: Īrū, Pāru, Satadumna, Tapasvī, Satyavāk, Kavi, Atriṇātra, Sudumna and Atimanyu. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

AGNIṢVATTA. One of the seven Pitr. The other six Pitr are: Vairāja, Gārhapatiya, Somapa, Ekaśrīga, Caturveda and Kāla. (M.B., Sābhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verses 44, 45 and 46).

AGNIVESA. A Sage. He was the preceptor of Droṇa and Drupada. It is believed that he learned archery and the military arts from Sage Agastya. Droṇa had the greatest respect for this guru, Agnivesa. He was a master in the use of all weapons. There are references to this in Chapter 159, Ādi Parva of the Mahābhārata.

AGRAHA. The name of an Agni, a son of the Agni named Bhānu. Bhānu married Suprājā, daughter of the sun and Agraha was one of the six children born to them. In the Ātriṇātra, Agraha receives eight kinds of havis (Oblations). (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 221).

AGRANJ. The name of an Agni. He was the fifth son of the Agni named Bhānu and his wife, Niśādevi. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Ślokas 15 to 22).

AGRASANDHANI. The name of the book which Yama (the God of Death—Kāla) keeps in which all the virtuous and sinful actions of men are recorded.

AGRAYANTI. One of the hundred sons of Dītrārṣṭra. He is also known by the name, Anuvāyi. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 116, Verse 11).

AHA I. One of the aśṭavasus. His father was Dharmas and mother, Ratidevi. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Ślokas 17 to 20, Chapter 66).

AHA II (AHAII). A sacred pond. If one bathes in it he will go to the land of the Sun. (M.B., Vana Parva, Śloka 100, Chapter 83).

AHA III. One born of the dynasty of demons (asura-vanśa). (See under Heti, the genealogy chart of the demon dynasty).

AHARA. A son born of Danu to Kaśyapa. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Śloka 23, Chapter 65).

AHALYĀ. Turned into stone by the curse of her husband, Gautama. Ahalyā was a princess of the Pūru dynasty.

2) How Ahalyā got a curse and became a stone. The story of how Ahalyā was cursed by her husband, Gautama, and turned into a stone is told in different versions in different purānas. The following is the version in the Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa. When Viśvāmitra was taking back Rāma and Lakṣmīnāraṇa from the forest to the palace of Janaka they came across an āśrama on their way. Giving details about that āśrama Viśvāmitra told the princes thus: “This is the āśrama where the sage, Gautama, was living with his wife, Ahalyā. Indra fell in love with the beautiful Ahalyā and while the sage was out for bathing Indra entered the āśrama in the disguise of the sage himself and took bed with her. But before Indra could get out Gautama himself came to the āśrama and enraged at what he saw, cursed them both. Indra was to lose his testicles and Ahalyā was to turn into a stone. But taking pity on her the sage declared that she would take her original form the moment Rāma of trefoil yuga came to that place and touched the stone by his foot. Testicleless Indra went to deva-loka and there his friends feeling sorry for him, substituted a goat’s testicle and got him to normal.” While Viśvāmitra was talking to the princes, Śīr Rāma’s foot touched the stone and Ahalyā stood up in all beauty. Ahalyā and Gautama lived in the same āśrama again for another long period.

In Kathāsārītasthāga this story is told in a slightly different yet more interesting way. As soon as Gautama entered the āśrama Indra turned himself into a cat. Angrily the sage questioned Ahalyā, “who was standing here when I came in?” Ahalyā replied, “Eko thi ho majāra” (Ega thiho kaha majjara). It was a cat which was standing there. Here Ahalyā used a pun on the word ‘majāra’ and tried to be honest. ‘Majāra’ is the Prakṛti form of the word ‘mārijāra’ which means cat. But ‘majāra’ has another meaning also. (ma = mine jāra = lover i.e. majjara = my lover). So Ahalyā did not lie to her husband. (Kathāsārītasthāga, Lāvānkalambaka).

3) How Ahalyā happened to bring up the mighty monkey, Bāli and Sugrīva. Once Aruṇa, the charioteer of Śūrya (the Sun) went to deva-loka to see the dance of the celestial maidens there. Since there was no admission to the dance for men Aruṇa disguised himself as Aruṇidevi and sought admission; seeing the beautiful form of Aruṇidevi Indra fell in love with her and that night a child was born to Indra by her. On the advice of Indra Aruṇidevi took the child to Ahalyā before daybreak and left it there to be looked after by her. It was this child which later on became the famous Bāli.

Aruṇa went a bit late that morning to his master, the Sun. The latter wanted an explanation and Aruṇa told him what had happened. The Sun then asked Aruṇa to become Aruṇidevi again and seeing the enchanting figure the Sun also got a child of her. This child also was taken to Ahalyā and it was this child that later on became the famous Sugrīva.

AHALYĀHHRADA(M) A sacred pond in the tapovanaya
AHARA

(precincts of an āśrama) of Gautama Rṣi. It is believed that one would go to heaven if one bathes in it.

AHARA. A son born of Danu to Kaśyapa. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Sloka 25, Chapter 65).

AHICCHATRA. This was the capital of the state Ahicchatra which Droṇa got from Drupada, the King of Pāñcāla.

AHICCHATRA (M). A state under the sovereignty of King Pāñcāla. On the completion of his studies under Droṇa Arjuna brought before his preceptor King Drupada as a captive in discharge of the duty he owed to him as his master. Drupada then gave the state of Ahicchatra to Droṇa and got his release. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Slokas 73 to 76, Chapter 137).

AHIMSĀ. Non-injury. There are opinions both in favour of and against Ahimsā in the purāṇas. Sukrācārya extols the importance of Ahimsā to the asuras (demons) thus:

Bho ! Devaripavāḥ satyāṁ
Bṛāvīṁ bhavatāṁ hitam
Ahimsā paramo dharmo
Hantavyāḥ ātatayāṁ
Dvijarhagataratvēde
Darśitaṁ hiṁsānam paśoḥ
Jihvāśvidaparāpyō Kāmā—Mahīṁsaiva parā matā.

"Oh, foes of the devas, I shall tell you the truth which is good for you. Non-injury to any living being is the most righteous thing. Do not molest even those who come to kill you. Even that act would be ‘hiṁsā’ (injury). It was those brahmins who were attached to worldly pleasures and addicted to overeating that enjoined in the Vedas that hiṁsā is permissible for yāgas." (Devi Bhāgavata, Skanda 4). Mārkaṇḍeya Muni (sage) says thus: "Why should I mind the innumerable killings going on unnoticed in this world full of life. People of old speak very sacrilegiously about Ahimsā, But O best of brahmins, who can live in this world without injury to another life?" (M.B., Aranyā Parva, Slokas 32 & 33, Chapter 208).

AHIRKATHA. A King of the Pūru dynasty. (See under Pūru vaṁśa).

AHIBUDHNYA. One of the sons of Viṣṇukarmā. Five sons and one daughter were born to Viṣṇukarmā of his wife Surabhi. They were Ajaikapātaḥ, Ahirbudhnya, Tvaśṭā, Rudra, Barhiṣmati and Śāmjā. (See under genealogy of Viṣṇukarmā).

AHĪ. A river of ancient Bhārata. (M.B., Bhiṣma Parva, Sloka 21, Chapter 9).

AHORĀTRA (M). (See under Kālāmāna).

AHOVIRA. A sage who adhered strictly to the injunctions associated with the Viṇaprasṭha stage of life. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Sloka 17, Chapter 144).

AI (ई). This diphthong means a female sage (yogini) according to the Agni Purāṇa (Chapter 348 of Agni Purāṇa).

AIKŚVAKI. Wife of Suhotra who was a son of Emperor, Bhumanyu. Suhotra had three sons by AikŚvāki. They were Ajamidhā, Sumidhā and Purumidhā. (See Chapter 94 of Ādi Parva of the M.B.).

AILA I. Son of Ila; Purūravas. (See under Ila).

AILA II. A member of the court of Yamarāja. (See Sloka 16, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva, M.B.). In Sloka 65, Chapter 115 of Anuśāsana Parva, it is said that he never ate non-vegetarian food in his life.

AINDAVA. (See paragraph 13 under the word BRAHMĀ).

AIRĀVATA I. A large elephant, son of Īravati.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in this order:- VIṣṇu - Brahmā - Kaśyapa - Bhadramati-Īravati-Airāvata. Kaśyapa married Dakṣa's daughter, Krodhavasā who bore him ten daughters. They were: Ārīgī, Mrganandā, Harī, Bhadramatā, Mātaṅgi, Sārdūli, Svētā, Surabhī, Sarasā and Kadru. Of these Bhadramatā had a daughter named Īravati and Airāvata was her son. Īravata was not human in shape; he was a large elephant. (See Sarga 14, Aranyākāṇḍa, Rāmāyana).

2) Indra's Vāhana. Indra made Airāvata his conveyance (vāhana). Indra was Kaśyapa's son by Aditi. Airāvata also was descended from Kaśyapa. So Indra took Airāvata as his vāhana.

3) Airāvata caused the churning of the ocean of Milk. There is a story of how Airāvata was responsible for the churning of the milk-ocean (Kṣirādhi-mathanam). Once some maidens of devaloka presented a garland of flowers to sage Durvāṣas. When Durvāṣas visited Indra's court he gave that garland to Indra. Indra put it on the tusks of his vāhana, Airāvata. The fragrance of the flowers attracted a swarm of bees which became an intolerable nuisance to Airāvata. So Airāvata tore the garland off his tusks and hurled it away. When Durvāṣas heard this, he took it as an insult. In his anger he cursed all the gods—the curse was that all gods should become subject to old age and the decrepitude and infirmities of old age. But though Durvāṣas cursed the gods, he also prescribed a remedy. The gods could redeem themselves from the curse by drinking Amṛtam obtained from the ocean of Milk (Mahāviṣṇu lies on the serpent, Śeṣa on this ocean). The curse began to operate and the gods lost their perennial youth. The gods then befriended the Asuras and with their help they churned the ocean of Milk. They got the nectar (Amṛtam), drank it and regained their youth. (See under the word AMRTAM).

4) There is another story about Airāvata—A story of how he also rose out of the ocean of Milk. It is said that when the devas and asuras churned the ocean of Milk, Airāvata also came up along with the other good things. This story is narrated in the 18th Chapter of Ādi Parva of the Mahābhārata. The explanation given is that when Durvāṣas cursed the gods, Airāvata was oppressed with a sense of guilt because he was responsible for the curse. So he took refuge in the ocean of Milk and there started propitiating Mahāviṣṇu. There is however no warrant for such an explanation in the purāṇas. But the explanation sounds plausible because it explains the absence of Airāvata during the interval between Durvāṣas's curse and the churning of the sea. Airāvata is represented as a white elephant. It is probable that he became white after his long residence in the ocean of Milk. This lends some additional plausibility to the above explanation.

5) Airāvata, the Lord of the elephant. In the Viṣṇu Purāṇa we are told how Airāvata was made the chief of all elephants. When the Mahārṣis had crowned Pṛthu as the sovereign King, Brahmā gave new posts of honour to many of the devas. He made Soma (Moon) the lord of the Stars and Planets, of Brahmins, Yajñis and herbs. Kubera was made the overlord of all Kings; Varuṇa was made the master of the seas and all water; Viṣṇu, the lord of the Adīyas and Pāvaka (Firc) the lord of the Vasus. Along with these Brahmā made Airāvata the lord of all elephants. (Chapter 22, Viśṇu Purāṇa).

6) The breaking of Airāvata’s tusks. There is a story of how the tusks of Airāvata were broken narrated in the Asurakāṇḍa of Skanda Purāṇa. Once an asura (demon) named Sūrapadma attacked devaloka. A fierce battle ensued between the gods and asuras. In the course of this battle, Jayanta, Indra’s son, was hit by an arrow and at once he fell dead. Enraged by this Airāvata rushed at Sūrapadma’s chariot and shattered it to pieces. Airāvata then attacked Sūrapadma who broke his tusks and hurled him down to the earth. Airāvata lay paralysed for a long time; then he got up, retired to a forest and prayed to Lord Śiva. With the grace of Śiva Airāvata regained his lost tusks and was able to return to devaloka.

7) Other details about Airāvata. (1) There is a belief that Airāvata is one of the eight elephants guarding the eight zones of the universe. These eight elephants are called the Aṣṭadigajas. Airāvata is supposed to guard the eastern zone. (Chapter 66, Ādi Parva, Mahābhārata).

(2) Airāvata and three other diggajas are supposed to reside in Puṣkara Island. (Chapter 12, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

AIRĀVATA II. Name of a serpent born to Kaśyapa and his wife Kadru. This is mentioned in Sūkla 5, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva of the Mahābhārata. Arjuna’s father-in-law and Ulūpi’s father, Kauravya belonged to the family of this serpent. (See Sūkla 18, Chapter 213, Ādi Parva).

AIRĀVATA. An asura who was killed by Śri Kṛṣṇa. (See Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva, Mahābhārata).

AIRĀVATĀGHĀṬTA. Name of a place near the seashore, lying to the north of the mountain, Śrīgāvān. (See Sūkla 37, Chapter 6, Bhīṣma Parva).

AĪSIKAM. Name of a small division of a parva of the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata).

AITAREYA I. A great scholar with profound knowledge of the Vedas. Being a non-brahmin he was not able to learn the Vedas from a guru. In spite of this handicap he acquired considerable scholarship and wrote a learned commentary on the Rgveda. This commentary ranks high among the various commentaries on the Vedas.

AITAREYA II. Son of Sage, Māṇḍukī by his first wife, Itārā. Being the son of Itārā he came to be called Aitareya. As a boy he was very pious and used to chant the mantra “Namo Bhagavate Vāsudevāya” frequently. But he was a shy and silent boy and his father mistook his silence to be a sign of stupidity. Dissatisfied with him and being desirous of having learned sons, Māṇḍukī married another woman named Piṅgā and had four sons by her who all became very learned. Once Itārā called her son and told him that his father regarded him as an unworthy son and was often twitting her using insulting words for having given birth to so unworthy a son. She then told him of her resolve to sacrifice her life. Aitareya then made an enlightening discourse to her and dissuaded her from her determination to commit suicide. Some time later Lord Viśṇu appeared before them and blessed the mother and son. On the advice of Viśṇu Aitareya participated in the yajña conducted by Harimedhya at Kṣitirṣṭha and there he made a learned speech on the Vedas. Harimadhya was so pleased with him that he gave his daughter in marriage to him. (See Skanda Purāṇa, Chapters 1, 2 and 42).

AJA I. A king of the Solar dynasty.

1) Genealogy. From Viśṇu were descended in order: Brahmā, Marici-Kaśyapa-Vivasvan → Viavasvan → Ikṣūvakva-Vikukṣa → Śaśāda → Puraṇahaya → Kukutisva-Ananas-Pyuhalīśva → Prasenajit → Yuvanāśva → Mandhātā → Purukutsa-Trasadasyu → Anaranaya → Arasya → Vasumāna → Sudhanavā → Trayājñā → Satyavarta → Triśūlu → Hariśca → Rohtāśva → Harita → Āruca → Sudeva → Bhuraka → Bāhuka → Sagara → Asaimanjā → Anisnan → Dilipa → Bhagiratha → Śrutanāba → Śindudvipa → Ayatūyas → Rūpāṇa → Sarvakāma → Sudasana → Mitrasakha → Kalmāsapāda → Anmāka → Śudaka → Dilipa → Dīrghabāhu → Raghu → Aja → Aja’s son Daśaratha-Daśaratha’s son, Śrī Rāma.

M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 75 says that Aja never used to take meat.

AJA II. Among the different kinds of Rśis mentioned by Yuddhiṣṭhīra, we find a class of Rśis called Ajas. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 26). These Ajas had attained Heaven by Svādhāya (self discipline) alone.

AJA III. King Jahnī had a son named Aja. Uṣika was the son of this Aja. King Uṣika prayed to Indra for a son. Indra himself was born as the son of Uṣika assuming the name Gadhī. Satyavatī was born as the daughter of Gadhī. She was married to Rṣiṣka. Parasurāma’s father, Jamadagni was the son of Rṣiṣka. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 49).

AJA IV. By the grace of Śiva Surabhi was able to purify herself by penance. She then gave birth to Aja, Ekapat, Aharbudhnya, Tvaṣṭa and Rudra. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

AJA V. In the first Manvantara Śvāyambhuva, in the second Manvantara Śvārociṣa and in the third Manvantara Utama, were Manus. To the third Manu, Utama, were born as sons Aja, Parāṣu, Dīpta and others. (Viśṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 1).

Besides the above, the term Aja has been used to mean Śrūya, Śiva, Brahmā, Viśṇu, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Bijā (seed).

AJAGAVA. Ajagava is a bow made of the horns of a goat and a cow. Brahmins tormented the right hand of the King Vena. From it the brilliant Prīhu who shone brightly like the God Agni, appeared as the son of Vena. At that time the very first Ajagava bow, divine arrows and armours dropped from the sky. (Viśṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 13).

AJAIKAPĀT I. He was one of the eleven Rudras, who were born to Śtānudveda, the son of Brahmā. The eleven Rudras are:

1. Mrgavyādha 7. Dāhana
2. Nṛṣīti 8. Ivāra
3. Aharbudhnya 9. Kapāli
5. Saipa 11. Śtāru
6. Ajaikapāt
(M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 2).

AJAIKAPĀT II. Among the sons of Viṣvakarmā, we find one Ajaikapāt. Brahmā created Viṣvākarmā. Viṣvākarmā had four sons—Ajaikapāt, Aharbudhnya, Viṣākapi, Śambi, Kaṇḍari, Āvjāta, Mrgavyādha, Śrava, Kapāli. A total number of 100 Rudras are mentioned in the Purāṇas.

* One Manvantara is a period equal to 4,320,000 human years or equal to 1/48th day of Brahmā.

 The names of the Eleven Rudras given in the Viśṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 5 are: Hara, Bhuṛūpa, Tryambaka, Aparājīta, Viṣākapi, Śambhi, Kaṇḍari, Raivata, Mrgavyādha, Śrava, Kapāli. A total number of 100 Rudras are mentioned in the Purāṇas.
AJAKA. An Asura. Birth. Kaśyapa was born the son of Marici, son of Brahmadeva, Kaśyapa married Danu, one of the daughters of Dakṣa, and had two sons by her. They were Ajaka and Vṛṣaparāvī. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 24; Chapter 67, Verse 16).

AJAKAŚVA. A king of the Pūru Vaiṣṇava. The mighty Jahnū was born to Ajamidha by his wife Keśinī. Two sons, Ajakasva and Balakasva, were born to Jahnū. Kuśika is the son of Balakāśva. Kuśika is the grand-father of Viṣvāmitra. For genealogy see Pūru Vaiṣṇava. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

AJAMĪDA. A famous king of the Pūru Vaiṣṇava. 1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in this order:—Brahmadeva—Atri—Conandra—Budha—Purūravas—Ayuṣ—Nahuṣa—Yāyati—Puru—Janamejaya—Prācīnāvyu—Manasū—Vitabhaya—Sandu—Bahuvidha—Sānyati—Rahu—Vādā—Bhadra-Vaśi—Matanā—Santuradha—Duṣyantā—Bharata—Bṛhatkṣetra—Hasṭi—Ajamīdha. 2) Birth. Several dynasties like Yadu Vaiṣṇava, Pūru Vaiṣṇava etc. take their origin from Yāyati. Duṣyanta belongs to that dynasty. King Bharata was born as Duṣyantā's son by Śaktuntalā. Subotra—Subota—Gaya—Gardher-Suketu and Bṛhatkṣetra were Bharata's sons. Bṛhatkṣetra had four children, who were: Nara, Mahāvīra, Garga and Hasti. Of them Hasti had three sons: Purumūḍhā, Ajamīdha and Dhvīmīdha. 3) Other details. Ajamīdha had three queens—Dhūmini, Nilī and Keśinī. Of them, Dhūmini had a son, Rṣaṇa and Nilī's son was Duṣyanta. (This was not Śaktuntalā's husband, Duṣyanta) and Keśinī's sons were Jahnū, Praja and Rūpina. Paramesi was another name of Keśinī. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 30-32; Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 2).

AJAMĪDHA II. We come across another Ajamīdha also in the Lunar Dynasty. He married Sudēva, daughter of Vikānta a King of the Lunar Dynasty. This Ajamīdha had 2400 children by his four wives, Kaikēyi, Gāndhārī, Viśālā and Rākṣā. Of them Sāṅivraṇa, married Tapati, the daughter of Vivasvān. See Tapaṭi Sāṅivraṇa. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verses 35-37).

AJAMILA. Ajamila's story is given in the Bhāgavata as an example to illustrate that even the most wicked person can attain Viṣṇupāda (Salvation). Ajamila was a Brahmīn who was once sent by his father to the jungle to fetch samit (leaves and twigs to make the sacrificial fire). Ajamila met there a beautiful Śūdra woman. Forgetting everything, the Brahmīn made her his wife and children were born to them. When that Brahmīn, who was the very embodiment of all vices, reached the age of eightyseven, the time came for him to die. Yamadātas (Agents of Yama—the god of death) had arrived. The frightened Ajamila shouted loudly the name of his eldest son, 'Nārāyaṇa'. Hearing the repeated call of his name 'Nārāyaṇa', Mahāviṣṇu appeared there and dismissed the agents of Yama. From that day Ajamila became a devotee of Viṣṇu and did penance on the bank of the Ganges and after some years attained salvation. (Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha, Chapter 1).

AJAMUKHA (AJAVAKTRA). He was one of the soldiers in Skanda's army. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 75). In the battle between Skanda and the Asuras, Ajamukha killed the Asura, Madhu. (Skanda Purāṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

AJAMUKHI (AJAMUKHI). 1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Brahmā—Marici—Kaśyapa—Ajamukhi. 2) Birth. Long ago in the battle between Deva and Asuras one of the routed Asuras had fled to Pātāla (Hell). Sūrasā was his daughter. Brahmā's grandson, Kaśyapa married Sūrasā. She gave birth to six children—Sūrapadmā, Śiśiḥkī, Śiśhavatata, Tārakāsura, Ajamukhi and Gomukha. The Asura woman Ajamukhi is one of them. 3) Chief events. (1) Marriage with Duṇḍavas. Once Sūrapadmā called his two brothers, Śiśhavatata and Tārakāsura and ordered them to set up two cities, one for the north and the other to the south, of Mahāmeru. In obedience to his elder brother, Tārakāsura started with one half of the army and set up a city to the south of Mahāmeru. That city was named Māyāpura. Śiśhavatata lived in the city on the northern side of Mahāmeru. Their sister Ajamukhi went about enticing men to satisfy her lustful passion. Once, in the course of her wanderings, she met Duṇḍavas in the Himalayan valley. They fell in love and even married. Two Asuras, Ivala and Vātāpi were born from their union. They insisted on sharing their father's achievements between them. Duṇḍavas cursed them that they would die at the hands of Agastya. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa). (2) The cutting off of Ajamukhi's hands. While wandering with her lustful passion, Ajamukhi once went to the Śiva temple at Kāśi. There she happened to meet Indra's wife, Śacīdevī. In order to give her to her brother, Sūrapadmā, Ajamukhi caught hold of Śacīdevī. Śacīdevī screamed aloud. Suddenly Śiva appeared there with His sword. Even then Ajamukhi refused to release Śacīdevī. Śiva rescued Indrāṇi (Śacīdevī) by cutting off Ajamukhi's hands. Hearing this, Sūrapadmā sent his army and imprisoned the Devas. The imprisoned Brahmā at the instance of Sūrapadmā, restored Ajamukhi's hands. Sūrapadmā's son, Bāṅgukopa fought against the remaining Devas and defeated them. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).

AJAMUKHI. See AJAMUKHI.

AJANĪBHA. A mountain. A reference to this is seen in the M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 32. Another name, Anjānībha Varṣa for the territory ruled over by Anjānībha, is also found in Bhāgavata, Fifth Skandha, Chapter 1.

AJARA. Tapantaka, the minister of King Vatsa, told him the story of a man named Ajara to illustrate the law that all people will have to suffer the consequences of their actions in a previous birth. The story is given below:—

Once upon a time, there lived a King named Vinayaśīla in Vīśānapura, in the city of Śrīkāṇṭhanagar. After some years, the King was affected by wrinkles of old age. A physician named Taruṇacandra came to the palace to cure the King of his wrinkles. "The King should remain alone in the interior of the earth for full eight months. He has to use a medicine while remaining there. It should not even be seen by anyone else. I myself am to administer the medicine"—This was the physician's prescription. The King agreed. Accordingly the King and the physician spent six months in the interior of the earth. After that the physician, after a search, found a man who exactly resembled the King and brought him to the interior of the earth. After two more months, the physician murdered the King and came out with the new man. The people welcomed him with honour as the King who was cured of his wrinkles. This man was Ajara. After some time, the physician approached Ajara for his reward. Ajara said: “It is by my Karamphala (consequence of my actions in my previous birth) that I have become King. In my previous birth I renounced my body after doing penance. According to the boon which God gave me on that occasion, I have become King in my present birth”. The physician returned empty-handed. (Kathasaritsagara, Ratnaprabhadharbaka, 6th Taranga).

AJAVINDU. He was a King, born in the dynasty of the Suvirās. (M.B., Udvyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 14).

AJEYA. He was a King in ancient Bhārata. Ajeya’s name is found among the names of the Kings mentioned by Saṅjaya to Dṛtarāṣṭra. All these Kings were mighty and generous rulers who were the recipients of divine arrows. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 234).

AJIGARTA (RČIKA). He was a greedy Brahmīn. (See RČIKA)

King Hariścandra who was distressed by having no children, propitiated god Varuṇa. Varuṇa blessed him saying that a son would be born to him. But the condition was that the child should be sacrificed to Varuṇa. When the child was born, Hariścandra did not like to sacrifice the boy. The sage Viśvāmitra suggested that instead of sacrificing his own son it would be enough if he bought another boy and sacrificed him. Accordingly, Hariścandra sent his minister to find out and purchase a Brahmin boy for the sacrifice. At that time there lived in Ayodhya a greedy Brahmin named Ajigarta. He had three sons. In the course of his search, the minister came across this greedy Brahmin and asked him whether he was willing to sell one of his three sons. He continued: “Why should you be in this wretched state of poverty and misery? Sell one of your sons and you will get 100 cows as the price”. The minister’s words and the price offered for the son made a deep impression on the Brahmin’s mind. He thought: “It is impossible for me to earn 100 cows. Even if it were possible how long would it take? If I sell him I shall get hundred cows at once. What a lucky chance! The loss of a son is nothing”. So thinking, he sold his son Śnāsaṣṭepha. (For the rest of the story, see the word “Śnāsaṣṭepha”. Devi Bhāgavata, Skandhas 7, 8).

AJINA. 1) Genealogy. From Viṣṇu, Brahma, Marici, Kaśyapa, Varasvātī, Uttanapāda, Dhrūva, Śrīśī, Rīpu, Cākesuṇa, Manu, Uru, Aṅgīra, Vena, Pṛthu, Antardhāna, and Ajina.

2) Birth. Pṛthu had two sons, Antardhāna and Vādi. Antardhāna had a son, Hariścandra, by Śikhaṇḍinī. Dhiṣaṇa, who was born in the Agnikula became Hariścandra’s wife. Six sons were born to them, Prāchāna-bhārī, Śukra, Gaya, Kaṇṭha, Vraja and Ajina.

AJISAKA. (See the word SAKAVARSA).

AJODARA. There was an individual called Ajodara in Skanda’s army. (M.B., Sāya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 60).

AKAMPANA. (A mighty warrior among the demons).

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Viṣṇu - Brahmā - Heti - Viḍyukaśa - Sukeśa Sūmāli-Akampana.

2) Other details. Sūmāli married Ketunati and got fourteen children. They were 1) Pṛthu 2) Akampana 3) Viṣṇa 4) Kālakāmukha 5) Dhīrākṣa 6) Dāṇḍa 7) Suśāśiva 8) Sāṁhīra 9) Prākṣāna 10) Bhāsakarana 11) Vēka 12) Puṣpotakaṣṭha 13) Kaikasi and 14) Kumbhirad. Of these the last four arc daughters. Pṛthu was one of the ministers of Rāvāna. The thirteenth child Kaikasi was married to Viṣṇavas, son of Pulastya. Viṣṇavas got three sons and a daughter. They were Rāvana, Kumbhakarna and Vibhishan and Sūryapakha. It was Akampana who informed Rāvana that Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa had killed his three allies Khara, Dūṣaṇa and Triśrī (Aranya Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyana).

3) Death. Akampana fought a fierce battle with Hanumān and in the end Hanumān plucked a big tree and hit Akampana on the head with it and killed him. (Sarga 56, Yuddha Kāṇḍa of Rāmāyana).

AKAMPANA II. He was a king who lived in the Kṛtayuga. He had a son named Hari who was a fierce fighter. He was killed in a battle and the King became much depressed. Nārada consoled him with other stories and Vāśa told this story to Dharmaṇapūra when he found the latter greatly dejected and gloomy after the great battle was over. (Chapter 52, Drona Parva of M.B. also makes mention of Akampana).

2) Birth. Kaśyapa married the eight daughters of Dakṣa named Āditi, Diti, Daṇu, Kālikā, Tāmrah, Krodhavana, Manu and Anāla. Krodhavana got ten sons. One of them is Kāṇḍu. Ananta and Akarkkara were born of Kāṇḍu. (Śloka 16, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AKRODHA. A king of the Pāru dynasty. He was born to King ‘Ayutanāyī’ and his Queen, Kāmā, mother of Akrodha, was the daughter of Pṛthuśravā. (Śloka 21, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AKRTASRAMA. He is one of the few sannyāsins who have gone to heaven after completing the fourth ārama of life namely, Sannyāsa. The Kaurava-Pāṇḍava battle was over. As the eldest, Dharmaṇapūra performed obsequies to all those of his kith and kin dead in the war. He was then met by many sages including Vāśa and Nārada who comforted him in his bereavement. When Dharmaṇapūra later met Bhismsa the latter among many other stories told him the story of Aktaśrāma also. (Śloka 17, Chapter 244, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

AKRTAṆĀṆA. 1) General information. Akrtavāṇa was a great sage of erudition and was a disciple of Parāśurāma. He is exalted in the Purāṇas and it is said that Śūta who recited first the story of Mahābhārata to an assembly of sages in the forest of Naimiśa was a disciple of Akṛtavāṇa. (Skandha 12 of Bhāgavata).

2) How he became a disciple of Parāśurāma. Parāśurāma was returning after obtaining arrows from Lord Śiva after pleasing him by fierce penance. He was walking briskly through the dense forests anxious to be at the side of his preceptors to get their blessings. As he passed a great cave he heard a moan and on getting to the site of the sound found a brahmin boy being attacked by a tiger. The tiger immediately fell dead by an arrow from Paraśurāma. Lo the tiger turned into a gandharva freed now from a curse because of which he was for years living as a tiger. The gandharva bowed down respectfully and thanked the sage for giving him relief and left the place. The brahmin boy fell down at the feet of Paraśurāma and said, 'Great Lord, because of you I have now become Akṛtvāraṇa meaning one who has not received any wound. (Akṛt = not having secured. Vṛṣaṇa = wound). I shall, therefore, be your disciple forever hereafter'. From that day onwards he never left Paraśurāma but followed him as his disciple.

3) Other details. (1) In the story of Mahābhārata we find Akṛtvāraṇa in several different contexts appearing on behalf of Paraśurāma. It was Akṛtvāraṇa who told Dharmaputra the life and exploits of Paraśurāma during the exile of the Pāṇḍavas in the forests. (Chapters 115 to 117, Vana Parva, M.B.).

(2) In Chapter 83 of Udyoga Parva we read about Akṛtvāraṇa meeting Śri Kṛṣṇa while the latter was going to Hastināpura.

(3) In Chapter 175 of Udyoga Parva we read about Akṛtvāraṇa detailing the history of the Kaurava dynasty to Duryodhana.

(4) Akṛtvāraṇa has played a very important role in the story of Ambā, daughter of the King of Kaśī. Ambā along with her two sisters, Ambākī and Ambālikā, were brought down to Hastināpura by Bhīṣma for his brother Vicitrāvīrya to marry. But on knowing that Ambā had mentally chosen Sālvā as her husband, Bhīṣma allowed her to go back to Sālvā. But on her return to Sālvā he refused to accept her and she came back to Hastināpura. Bhīṣma then requested Vicitrāvīrya to accept her as his wife which, unfortunately, Vicitrāvīrya also refused to do. Ambā then turned to Bhīṣma and besought him to marry her which, much to his regret, he could not do because of his vow of celibacy. Thus forsaken by all, all her sweetness turned into bitter hatred towards Bhīṣma and she remained alive thereafter only to kill Bhīṣma. But even the foremost of warriors were not willing to antagonise Bhīṣma and so her appeal to help was not heeded by any. It was then that Hotrāvāhā her grandfather on the maternal side met her and directed her to Paraśurāma. When she went to Paraśurāma it was Akṛtvāraṇa who received her and on hearing her sorrowful tale encouraged her to seek vengeance on Bhīṣma. Again it was he who persuaded Paraśurāma to champion her cause and go for a fight against Bhīṣma. During the fight Akṛtvāraṇa acted as charioteer to Paraśurāma. (Śloka 9, Chapter 179, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

(5) Akṛtvāraṇa was one of the many sages who were lying on a bed of arrows during the great Kurukṣetra battle. (Śloka 8, Chapter 26, Anuśasanā Parva, M.B.).

AKRūRA

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viśū in the following order: Brahṅa - Atri - Candras - Budha - Purūravas - Ayus - Nahuṣa - Yayaṭi - Yadu (Chapter XII of Agni Purāṇa). Descending from Yadu in order were Sahaśa-Jatī - Satī - Hehaya - Dharma-Kunti - Bhadrasena - Dhanaka - Kṛtvārīya - Kārttikeyarjuna - Madhu - Viśū (Chapter XXIII of Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata). The Viśū dynasty begins and from Viśū in order descended Yudhājitī - Śini - Satyās - Bṛrīkā - Jaya - Kunti - Anamitra - Prīnī - Śvaphalka - Akrūra. (Chapter XXIV of Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

2) Birth. Śvaphalka of the Vṛṣni dynasty married Nandini, daughter of the King of Kaśī and Akrūra was born to them. Akrūra was an uncle of Śri Kṛṣṇa but is respected more as a worshipper of Kṛṣṇa.

3) Other details. (1) He became famous as a commander of the Yadava army. (Chapter 220 of Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(2) Akrūra was also present for the Svayāvara (wedding) of Pāncāli. (Śloka 18, Chapter 185 of Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(3) At the time of Arjuna's eloping with Subhadrā, a great festival was going on in the Raivata mountain and Akrūra was partaking in the same. (Śloka 10, Chapter 218, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(4) Akrūra accompanied Kṛṣṇa with the dowry intended for Subhadrā. (Śloka 29, Chapter 220, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(5) Akrūra came to the country called Upapālavya for attending the marriage of Abhimanyu. (Śloka 22, Chapter 72, Vīra Parva, M.B.).

(6) Akrūra and Āhuka always quarrelled with each other both alleging that the other sided with the opposite camp of Kṛṣṇa. (Ślokas 9 to 11, Chapter 81, Śānti Parva, M.B.).

(7) Kāṁśa planning to kill Balabhadra and Śri Kṛṣṇa conducted a festival called Cāppūjā (worship of the bow). It was Akrūra whom Kāṁśa sent to bring Balabhadra and Kṛṣṇa for the festival. Akrūra understood the plot, informed Kṛṣṇa about it and also advised Kṛṣṇa to kill Kāṁśa. (Daśāma Skandha, Bhāgavata).

(8) Akrūra fought against Jārasandha on the side of Kṛṣṇa. (Daśāma Skandha).

(9) On another occasion Kṛṣṇa, Balabhadra and Ud- dhava sent Akrūra to Hastināpura to get tidings about Kunti and the Pāṇḍavas. Akrūra met his sister Kunti and talked to her for a long time and also met Dhṛta- rāṣṭra and talked to him after which he returned to Dvārakā. (Daśāma Skandha).

(10) Akrūra went to Hastināpura as a messenger from Śri Kṛṣṇa. (Refer sub-para 3 of para 13 under Kṛṣṇa).

4) Domestic life. Akrūra married Sutaṇtā, daughter of Āhuka and got two sons named Devaka and Upadevaka. (Navama Skandha).

5) Śyāmantaka and Akrūra. Refer para 2 under the word Kṛtvārīya.

AKSHA 1. (Āksakūmāra). Descended in order from Viṣṇu as follows: Brahmā - Pulastya - Vīravas - Rāvana - Akrā (Uttarārāmāyana).

2) Birth. Three sons were born to Rāvana, King of the demons, by his wife Mandoḍārī. They were Megha- nāda, Atikāya and Āksakūmāra. Āksakūmāra was a redoubtable hero and a fierce fighter but was killed by Hanumān in Lanka. (Sarga 47, Sundara Kānda, Vālmīki Rāmāyana).

AKSHA II. We find another warrior of this name among the soldiers who came to help Skanda in the Kaurava- Pāṇḍava battle. (Śloka 58, Chapter 45, Śālya Parva, M.B.).

AKSARĀDAYA. A sacred chant or mantra. When Nala was roaming about in the forests after his separation from Damayanti he happened to save the cobra, Kārkoṭaka, from a wild fire. But in return the snake bit him and made him as black as clouds. He then advised Nala to go to the palace of King Rūpurāṇa where the coobra said, Nala would be taught the secret mantra of Aksaradaya by the King.
One who knows this sacred chant can find out all secrets of a game of dice and can count within no time the number of leaves, fruits and flowers on a tree. Nala went to Rupa and stayed with him. While living there a Brahmin named Sudeva came to Rupa and informed him that Damayanti was going to marry again. Rupa immediately started for Vaidarbha taking Nala as his charioteer. The chariot driven by Nala flew like a wind and on the way when Rupa’s handkerchief fell down and he requested Nala to stop the chariot. Nala informed him that by the time the request was made they had travelled already one yojana. As they proceeded they saw a huge tree full of leaves and fruits. Rupa at a glance told Nala that the tree contained five crores of leaves and two thousand nine hundred and five fruits. Nala was surprised. Then they understood that Nala was able to drive the chariot so quickly because of his knowledge of the sacred chant Ashvadaya and that Rupa was able to count the leaves and fruits because of his knowledge of the chant Aksaradaya. They taught each other the sacred mantras. Because of this Aksaradaya Nala was able to win the game of dice the second time and reign his kingdom. (Chapter 72, Vana Parva).

Aksamala (Arundhati). See under Arundhati.
Aksharapatanata. A particular place in the country of Anarta. At this place Sri Krsna killed two demons named Gopati and Talaketu. (Slokas 29, Chapter 38, Sahai Parva, M.B.).

Aksarapurusa. When all was set for the Kuruksetra battle Arjuna showed signs of weakness and hesitated to proceed for a fight. Sri Krsna then through the famous Gita enunciated a philosophy of life during the course of which he speaks about the two purusas, Ksara and Aksara. All that we see in this world and enjoy are Ksara and the power behind all of them is Aksara. God is one who transcends the aspects Ksara and Aksara and stands as the root cause of all life. (Slokas 16 to 19, Chapter 39, Bhishma Parva, M.B.).

Aksasutra. She was the wife of the sage Apasamba. She was also a very chaste woman. (See under Apasambha).

Aksauhinj. A big division of an army. It is described in the Verses 19 to 26 in the 2nd Chapter of Adi Parva of the Malayalam Mahabharata. It says thus: One chariot, one elephant, three horses and five soldiers constitute what is termed a Patti. Three such pattis make one Senamukha and three such senamukhas make one Guila. Three guilas make one Gaana and three such ganas make one Vahini. Three such vahinis make one Pytan. An Aksauhinj contains 21870 chariots, an equal number of elephants, 65160 horses and 109350 soldiers.

Aksayapatra. This is a copper vessel given to Dharmaputra by Surya(Sun). To destroy the Pandavas, Duryodhana kept them in a palace made of lac. They escaped from there and passing through dense forests crossed the river Ganges and reached the Kingdom of Patelia where they married the King’s daughter, Krsna (Pancali). On their way they killed two demons called Hidimba and Baka. When they were living happily at Indraprastha the jealous Duryodhana defeated them in a game of dice by foul play and sent them for a period of twelve years to the forests. The Pandavas found it impossible to feed the innumerable subjects who faithfully followed them to the forest. Dharmaputra then prayed to the God, Surya and he appeared before him and gave him this Aksaya Pata (Aksaya = never getting empty, Pata = pot). Everyday this pot never got empty till the meals of Pancali were over. (Chapter 3, Vana Parva, M.B.). See also under Duryodhana; Para 12.

Aksayavata. A sacred lake. When the Pandavas during their exile went to Pulastyasrama sage Pulastya gave a description of all the sacred lakes in India. He says, “After reaching Mrkandeya lake you should visit the meeting place of the rivers Gaiga and Gomati. Then when you reach Gaya you will find there a lake called Aksayavata. If you bathe in that lake you will get salvation”. In the Navama Skandha of Devi Bhagavata you find the following about Aksayavata: “Puspa-bhadra is one of the famous sacred rivers in India. This river starts from the Himalayas with the name Saravati and flowing for 500 yojanas (One yojana is equal to about 8 miles) on the left side of river Gomati reaches the western ocean. There is an aghrama called Aksayava, on the shores of this beautiful river which always carries crystal clear water. The aghrama got that name because of a big banyan tree standing near it. Kapila, the great sage, did penance sitting here for a long time. Lord Siva, Bhadrakali and Skanda used to come and sit underneath this banyan tree.

Akshina. He was the son of Visvamitra. (Sloka 50, Chapter 14, Anushasan Parva. For more details see under Visvamitra).

Akupara.
1) General information. There is a lake in the Himalayas called Indradymuna. Akupara is a tortoise living in it. There is also a statement that this is the Adikurma (second of the ten incarnations of God). A description of Akupara is found in Chapter 199 of Vana Parva in Mahabhavarta.
2) Cirajiyot (One who has no death). When the Pandavas were in exile in the forests sage Markandeya tells many stories to Dharmaputra to console him in his sad plight. The Pandavas asked Markandeya whether he knew of anybody living before him. Then the sage said, “In times of old Indradymuna an ascetic King (Rajarshi) fell down from heaven when he fell short of his accumulated ‘Punya’. Sorrowfully he came to me and asked me whether I knew him. I replied in the negative adding that perhaps Pra franksha an owl living on the top of the Himalayas might know him since he was older than me. At once Indradymuna became a horse and taking me on its back approached the owl living in the Himalayas. The owl also could not remember Indradymuna but directed him to a stork named Nadiyajnaka who was older than the owl. The Ascetic king took me then to the Indradymuna lake where the stork lived. The stork also could not find the identity of Indradymuna. Perhaps he said that a tortoise of name Akupara living in that same lake might know him. We then approached the tortoise and enquired whether he knew Indradymuna. The tortoise sat in meditation for some time and then weeping profusely and shaking like a leaf stood bowing respectfully and said, “How can I remain without knowing him’? There are several monuments of the useful work done by him here. This very lake is of his making. This came into existence by the march of the cows he gave away to the people”. The moment the tortoise finished speaking a chariot appeared from heaven to take the King away. The King after leaving me and the owl in their proper places ascended to heaven in the chariot.

ALAGHU. A son born to Vasistha by Urijja. Raja (Rajas) Gatra, Urdhavabahu, Savana, Sukra and Sutapas, who were great hermits, were brothers of Alaghu, who has another name 'Alagha'. (Agni Purana, Chapter 20).

ALAKA. The city of Kubera.

ALAKANANDA. River Gaṅgā of devaloka. The river gaṅgā of the earth when it flows through devaloka is called Alakanandā and is called Vaîtaranī when it flows through Pīrīloka (nether world). Krṣṇadvaipāyana (Vyāsa) declares that Deva Gaṅgā with crystal pure water flowing in devaloka under the name Alakanandā and Vaîtaranī of the nether world, a terror to sinners, are the same as the Gaṅgā of the earth. (Slokas 21 and 22, Chapter 170, Bhāṣā Bhārata, A.P.).

Starting from Viṣṇupāda Alakanandā flows through Devayāna which blazes with the splendour of a cress of beautiful many-storeyed buildings. Flowing from there to Candramandala (moon) and flooding it completely flows down to Brahmaloka. From there it divides into four rivulets and flows to the four different sides with the names Sītā, Cakṣus, Alakanandā and Bhadrā. Of these Sītā falls on the thickly wooded mountain tops of Mahāmeru and flowing from there through Gandhamādana by the side of Bhadrāsvaṇa falls down in the eastern ocean. Cakṣus falls on the top of Mālayavān mountain and flowing through Ketumāla falls down in the western ocean. The most sacred of the group, Alakanandā, falls on the mountain of Hmaḵatiṣṭa and from there flows through Bhāratavāra and falls down in the southern ocean. The fourth, Bhadrā, falling on the top of the Mountain, Śrīgavān flows to the northern ocean. Of these the most sacred is Alakanandā which flows through Bhāratavāra and it is believed that even those who think of taking a bath in that will acquire the benefit of performing yāgas like Aśvamedha and Rāja-sūya. (Eighth Skandha of Śrī Mahādevībhāgavata).

ALAMBALA. A giant who used to eat human flesh. This cannibal was the son of Jaṭāsura. This asura (Alambala) fought on the side of the Kauravas in the Kurukṣetra battle because Bhīmasena had killed his father, Jaṭāsura. In the battle, Ghātoṭkace cut off the head of this mighty warrior and magician and threw his head into the war-chariot of Duryodhana. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 149).

ALAMBAṬṬRHA. A holy place where there was a sacred bath. Garuḍa, when he went to devaloka (the realm of the gods) to bring Arūḍa (ambrosia) took rest in this holy place. (See under the word Garuḍa. Also M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 39, Stanza 39).

ALAMBUṢĀ I. Son of the giant Rṣyaśṛiga. He had fought on the side of the Kauravas. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 167, Stanza 33). There was a battle between Alambuṣa and Ghātoṭkace, on the first day of the battle of Kurukṣetra.

"Alambuṣa shot ninety sharpened pointed arrows at the son of Bhīmasena (Ghātoṭkace), cut his body in several places. Though he was full of wounds, he fought all the more fiercely". (Bhāṣā Bhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 43, Stanzas 43, 44).

Alambuṣa had engaged Abhimanyu, Sātyaki, Ghātoṭkace, Kuntibhoja and Bhīmasena all mighty men of arms, in single combat, in the Kaurava battle. It is seen that he has got another name, Sālakaṭāṅkha. He was killed by Ghātoṭkace in the battle. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 109, Stanzas 22 to 33).

ALAMBUṢĀ II. Another king on the side of the Kauravas. Sātyaki killed this king. (Mahābhārata, Drona Parva, Chapter 140, Stanza 13).

ALAMBUṢĀ III. A king of the Rākṣasas. It is seen that this Alambuṣa was defeated and driven away from the battle-field by Arjuna. (Drona Parva, Chapter 167, Stanzas 37 to 47).

ALAMBUṢĀ IV. A giant, the son of Jaṭāsura. Ghātoṭkace killed this giant in the battle.

ALAMBUṢĀ. A celestial woman born to Kaśyapa by his wife Pradhā. 1) Genealogy. Begins from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā-Kaśyapa-Alambuṣā. 2) How she enticed the hermit Dadvēca. In days of yore there was an ascetic named Dadvēca. He began doing tapas on the bank of the river Sarasvati. Indra was in consternation. Indra sent this celestial maid Alambuṣa to entice the hermit. When the ascetic got down to the river, Alambuṣa approached him with enticing actions and expressions. When the hermit saw her he became passionate and he had seminal fluid. The sperm fell into the river. The river became pregnant and delivered a child in due course. He was called Sarasvati. Alambuṣa brought the child before Dadvēca, who blessed the child and said that there would be a drought in the country continuously for twelve years and that at that juncture Sarasvata would recite passages from the Scripture to the Brahmins who had forgotten them. The much pleased Sarasvati and Sarasvata went back. At that time Indra lost his Vajra-yuddha (weapon of thunderbolt) somewhere. The Asuras (enemies of Gods) made an onslaught on the gods and their realm. Indra knew that with a weapon made by the bone of Dadvēca the Asuras could be destroyed. Indra asked the Gods to bring the bone. They came down to the earth and requested Dadvēca to give them a bone. Dadvēca giving his bone died and attained heaven. With his bones Indra made a good deal of weapons such as the Vajra-yuddha, wheel weapons, maces and sticks and with them Indra slew all the Daityas (Asuras).

After this there was a great famine in the country. As there was no rain, crops failed and lands became dry and the Brahmins left the country. Sarasvata alone remained with his mother. After twelve years the famine and starvation came to an end. By then the Brahmins had forgotten the hymns and mantras of the Vedas. They approached the boy Sarasvata and renewed their memory. (Mahābhārata, Saṅya Parva, Chapter 51).

3) Punarjennam (Rebirth). Long ago Indra went to Brahmā. There was one Vasu called Vidhūma also with Indra. When these two were standing near Brahmā, Alambuṣa also came there to pay homage to Brahmā. The garments she had on were displaced by wind. Vidhūma saw the dazzling beauty of her body and was overpowered by libido. Alambuṣa who understood this, was filled with passion for him. Brahmā who saw the changes in them looked at Indra with displeasure. Indra knowing the mind of Brahmā cursed them: 'Both of you who have lost meekness shall become human beings and then your desire will be fulfilled”. Owing to the curse Vidhūma was born as Sahasrānīka, the illustrious King of Candra vanāśa (Lunar dynasty) and Alambūṣā took birth as Mrgāvatī, the daughter of King Kriyāvarmā and his wife Kalāvatī. (Kathāśatasāgara, Kathāmukhaḥambaka, Tarāgā 1).

4) The curse of Tilottama. Sahasrānīka the incarnation of Vidhūma and Mrgāvatī the incarnation of Alambūṣā fell in love with each other on the earth also. Before the wedding took place Devendra once invited Sahasrānīka to heaven. He lived there for a time as the guest of the Gods. After having defeated the Asuras it was time for him to return. Indra sent Tilottamā to keep company. The charioteer was driving. Sahasrānīka immersed in the thought of Mrgāvatī was sitting silent. Tilottamā said something which the King did not hear. Tilottamā cursed him that he would be separated for fourteen years from the object about which he was thinking. He was not even aware of the curse.

5) The period of separation. The King returned to Kauśāmbi his capital city. Without much delay the wedding ceremony also was conducted. She became pregnant. One day she told her lover-husband that she had a desire to dip in a blood pond. The King made a pond and filled it with a solution of Lākṣa (wax, when dissolved in water, the water will look like blood) and such other substances. Mrgāvatī was dipping and splashing in it when an eagle taking her to be a piece of flesh took her away. At the loss of his wife Sahasrānīka lost his senses and fell down unconscious. Immediately Mātāli, Indra’s charioteer, came down from the realm of Gods and brought the King back to consciousness, and then informing him of the curse of Tilottamā he returned.

Without paying any heed to the consolatory words of his ministers or other inmates of the palace the King went on lamenting and moaning, “ha, my love Mrgāvatī! Where are you now?” and waited for the end of the period of the curse, executing Tilottamā. Casting Mrgāvatī on the Mountain of the Rising Sun the great bird flew away. The horror-stricken queen, thinking of her present condition cried aloud. A very large mountain snake began to draw near to swallow her. A divine person saved her from that situation and vanished. The unprotected Mrgāvatī decided to commit suicide. It was a forest which abounded in lions, tigers, bears and such other ferocious animals. But none of them came near her; over and above the exertion of carrying, she had to bear the difficulties of her forlorn condition, and she grew weary and worn and became unconscious. Then a hermit boy came there and questioned her who was now lean and ill-dressed, about her condition and consoling her guided her to the hermitage of the great hermit Jamadagni. When she saw the hermit who was as radiant as the Sun, she bowed low before him. “My daughter! Don’t fear. You will get a heroic son here who will continue your family. You will be reunited to your husband.” Said the great and noble hermit, who could foresee the future.

Somewhat pacified Mrgāvatī lived in that hermitage waiting for reunion with her husband. After some days she gave birth to a son who had all the symptoms of greatness. At the birth of the child Mrgāvatī heard an unknown voice saying, “This boy would become the great and renowned King Udayana. His son would get the leadership of the Vidyādhāras (the musicians of the Gods)”. At this the queen was immensely pleased. The boy Udayana grew up in the hermitage, an incarnation of all good qualities. The hermit to whom the past, the present and the future were not obscure, performed the necessary rites and rituals becoming a Kṣatriya boy (Ruling race) and taught him everything including the Dharmruta (the Science of Arhy). As a token of her intense love for the son, she put a bangle with the name of Sahasrānīka inscribed on the arm of Udayana. One day when Udayana was tramping the forest, he saw a snake-charmer catching a snake. Seeing the beauty of the snake he asked the snake-charmer to let the snake free. But the snake-charmer replied, “Oh Prince, this is my daily bread. I earn my livelihood by exhibiting snakes. My previous snake was dead and it was with the help of a good deal of herbs and spells and incantations that I caught this one”.

When he heard this Udayana felt pity for him and gave the bangle to the snake-charmer and let the snake free. When the snake-charmer had gone with the bangle, the snake beaming with joy said to Udayana: “I am Vasunemi, the elder brother of Vāsuki. I am grateful to you for giving me freedom. I give you this lute producing exquisite notes of music, betels and some tricks to prepare never fading garlands and paste to make marks on the forehead. Receive them as my presents”. Udayana accepted the presents with gladness and returned more luminous than before to the hermitage of Jamadagni. The snake-charmer took the bangle, given by Udayana to the bazar for sale. The police caught him and took him before the King, because they saw the name of the King inscribed on the bangle. The King asked him how he got the bangle and the snake-charmer told the King the story from the catching of the snake till he got the bangle. “This is the bangle that I put on the arm of my wife. The boy who gave this bangle to this snake-charmer must be my son.” The King was thinking with sadness, when the King heard a voice from above say, “O King! The period of the curse is over. Your wife and son are in the Mountain of the Rising Sun”. At these words the King felt extreme joy. Somewhow or other he spent the rest of the day. Early the next morning the King followed by his army, went to the Mountain of the Rising Sun to bring back his wife and son. They took the snake-charmer to show them the way.

In due course the King and his train reached the holy hermitage of the eminent hermit Jamadagni. The place was always vibrant with sounds of the repeating and recitation of the Holy scriptures and covered with smoke mingled with the fragrance of burning herbs and other oblations burned in the sacrificial fire. The various wild animals which are born enemies of each other got on amicably there. The hermit who was an incarnation of the higher aspirations greeted the King who was the protector of the ascetics, with the hospitality becoming his status. The King who saw Mrgāvatī with their son was overcome with gladness. Their reunion caused a shower of Ambrosia (Amrta). The King stood before the hermit with folded arms and bowed head for permission to depart. To the King the hermit Jamadagni said: “Oh, King, you are welcome to this hermitage. To those such as you who are of the ‘Rajogunapradhana’ caste (Ruling race) the peaceful atmosphere of our hermitage may not be appealing to the heart. But a holy hermitage is more respectable than the palace of an Emperor. There is no place for unhappiness here. You might have known that the reason for your separation is a curse. When you were returning from heaven with Tilottama, you were so much engrossed in the thought of Mrgavati that you did not pay any heed to the conversation of Tilottama. She was displeased with your be-behaviour and cursed you. In future, if ever you happen to get into a position which will cause you mental trouble you can be assured of the presence of this Jamadagni."
The King said, "I am extremely grateful to your Eminence for this great boon. I am fully aware of the fact that the presence of the holy hermits who have under their control the eightfold prosperities, is always a harbinger of peace and prosperity. I am very sorry to say that the exigency of my presence at the capital due to the pressure of work in connection with the ruling of the country compels me to cut short my visit to this holy hermitage. I shall be looking forward with pleasure to occasions which will enable me to pay visits to this Holy abode."

Much pleased at the speech of the King the hermit said to Mrgavati: "My daughter! Not only myself, but all the inmates of this hermitage are highly pleased at having got you in our midat for so long. We are sorry to part from you. Now look! the animals of the hermitage are standing round you and shedding tears. Still we are consoled at your reunion with your husband. Naturally you are of a very good character and your life in this hermitage has given you a nice training and so there is no need for any more advice from me at this time."

Saying this he drew Udayana to his side, kissed him on his head and said to the King again: "This son is a decororation to your dynasty. This handsome boy has been, taught everything becoming a royal prince. Let him be a costly gem to you".

Thus blessing the boy the hermit led him to the King.
The joy at her reunion with husband, her shyness at being near him, her sorrow at having to depart from the hermitage and the surging feeling in her mind—all these made her dumb and so being unable to say anything she expressed her love and regard for the hermit whom she loved as her father, by some motions of her body and took leave of him with her son. The blessed King and his train, looking at the men, beasts and birds which accompanied them for a while, took leave of them and proceeded to the capital city. On reaching there the King anointed his son Udayana as King. Sahasranika then went to the Himālayas to practise ascesis with his wife. (Kathāsarasvātmā, Kathāmukhalambaka, Tarañga 2).

Enticing Trnabindu. A story is seen in the Bhagavata of how Alambuṣa enticed the King Trnabindu. He married Alambuṣa and a daughter named Idaviḍa (Ibibilī) was born to them. This Ibibilī was married to Viśravas, to whom a son named Kubera (the Lord of wealth) was born. By Alambuṣa Trnabindu had three sons called Viśāla, Sūnyabandhu and Dhūmratetu.

"Tam bhejelamabuṣa devī

"He who is the seat of all laudable qualities (Trnabindu) was honoured by Alambuṣa (as husband). Idaviḍida her daughter was given in marriage to Viśravas and and them was born Dhanāda (Kubera). His father who was a great hermit taught him everything required.
Three sons Viśāla, Sūnyabandhu and Dhūmratetu, were born to them. Viśāla who was the founder of the Dynasty, built a city called Viśalēha."

Alambuṣa took part in the birthday celebration of Arjuna.*

Enticing Trnabindu. (A book on rhetorics and figures of speech). See the word Pāttu.

Wife of King Naravāhanadatta. It is seen in the Kathāsaritāgama where a Vidyādhara woman tells the story of Alamkāravatī to the King.
Once a Vidyādha named Alamkārāsila ruled over a city called Śri Sundarapura in the Himalayas. His wife was called Kāthecanaprabhī. A son was born to them.
They named him Dharmaśāla because Devi Kātyāyānī told them in a dream that the son would become Dharmapara (who performs duties well). To the prince, knowledge in every branch of studies was imparted and then he was anointed heir to the throne. He executed regal functions to perfection and ruled his subjects better than his father. Kāthecanaprabhī, wife of Alamkārāsila, gave birth to a daughter. At the time of her birth a heavenly voice said that she would become the wife of Naravāhanadatta the emperor of the Vidyādharas. They named her Alamkāravatī. She grew into a very beautiful maiden.
She learned arts and sciences from her father. She went on a pilgrimage to the Śiva temples far and wide. One day she heard a celestial voice: "Go to the Śvayambhū temple in Kaśmīra and worship there and you will get as your husband Naravāhanadatta." Finally Naravāhanadatta the emperor of Vidyādharas married her.
(Kathāsaritāgama, Lambaka 9, Tarañga 4).

A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra.

A short time. (Alpa = short and Kāla = time). In the Bhāgavata the following definition is given of alpa: "Take two tender leaves of a lotus and place one on the other. Let a strong man take a sharp needle and thrust it hard at the leaves. The time taken for the needle to pierce one leaf and reach the other is alpāka." [Bhāgavata (Malayalam version), Skandha 3].

The name of an insect. It was in the form of this insect that Indra went and bore a hole on the leg of Karṇa while Pašurāma was sleeping on his lap. The blood that flowed from Karṇa's foot wetted the body of the preceptor.

1. A king of the states of Kaśi and Kaṛuṣa.
He was a very honest man. Forsaking all riches and his kingdom he accepted Dharma-mārā. (Śloka 64, Chapter 115, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.). He was a member of the council of yama. He attained salvation by yoga and meditation. (18th Ślokā, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva, M.B.). Once Alarka decided to overcome the five senses. To control them he sent arrows at the mind, nose, tongue, ear, eye, skin and intelligence. But the senses never surrendered to them. Then Alarka by sheer dhyaṇa and yoga brought them under control. (M.B., Anusāsana Parva, Chapter 30).

Alarka once told a blind brahmin boy to ask for any boon from him. This boy demanded the eyes of Alarka. To keep his promise Alarka scooped out his eyes and gave them to the blind boy. (Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 12, Ślokā 43).

ALĀTĀKŚI. A woman in the service of Skanda. (M.B., Sālā Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 8).

ALAYUDHA. A giant. He was the brother of Bakāsura. He fought on the side of the Kauravas. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 93, Stanza 46 and Chapter 176, Stanza 6). Alayudha combated with Bhīmasena and Ghaṭokacā and was killed by Ghaṭokacā.

AMADHYA. A synonym of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B., Śaṅti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 90).

AMĀHĀṬHA. A serpent. It was burnt up in the fire at the Sarpa satra of Janamejaya. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 16).

AMARAKANDRA. A Sanskrit poet. It is believed that he lived in the 13th Cent. A.D. Bāla Bāhārata was his work. Amarakandra was a Jain priest. It is said that he was a courtier of Vīśaladeva, the son of King Vira-dhavala who ruled over Gujārāt from 1243 to 1262.

AMARAGUPTA. He was the minister of King Vīkrama-sītiṣa who ruled over Avanti in old times. (Kathā-sārītāśaṃga, Madana Maṇñuka lamhaka, First Tārāṅga).

AMARAHARDA. A place of holy bath. One who takes his bath here will attain Svarga. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 106).

AMARAKANṬAKA. A mountain. It was on this mountain that some parts of Tripura, which was burnt by Śiva fell. From that time it became a holy place. In Padma Purāṇa, Ādi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 15, we see the following passage about the beneficent obtained by visiting this holy place. “One who goes to Amarakaṇṭaka mountain will enjoy the fourteen worlds for thirtyseven thousand crores of years. Afterwards he will be born on earth as King and reign as supreme emperor. A visit to Amarakaṇṭaka has ten times the value of an Āśvamedha. If one has Śiva's darśana there, one will attain Svarga. At the time of eclipse, all kinds of holy things converge towards Amarakaṇṭaka. Those who take their bath in Jvāleśvara in Amarakaṇṭaka will enter Svarga. The dead will have no rebirth. Those who renounce their bodies at Jvāleśvara will live in Rudraloka till the time of great Deluge. In the valley of Amarakaṇṭaka and in the Tīrtha live Dvas known as Amras and numerous Rṣis. Amarakaṇṭaka Kṣetra has a circumference of one yojana (about eight miles).

AMARAPARVATA. An ancient place in Bāhārata. Nakula had conquered this place. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 11).

AMARĀVATĪ. It is the city of Indra, the King of the Devas. Its location is described in Devi Bāhāgavata as follows: “Brahma's world extends over 10,000 yojanas on the Mahāmeru mountain. There are eight cities—each 2,500 square yojanas in extent—of the Aṣṭadīk-pālakas in eight parts of this Brahmapiṇḍa. Thus there are nine cities on the top of the Mahā Meru. They are the following:—

1. In the centre is Brahma's city, Manovati.
2. To the east of Manovati, Indra's city, Amaravati.
3. In the south-east corner, Agni's city, Tejovati.
4. On the southern side, Yama's city, Śānyamanī.
5. In the south-west corner, Śiva's city, Kṛṣṇarājanī.
6. In the west, Varuṇa's city, Śaddhavāti.
7. In the north-west corner, Vāyu's city, Gandhavati.
8. In the north, Kubera's city Mahādāya.
9. In the north-east corner, Śiva's city, Yaśovati. (Devi Bāhāgavata, Asaṃa Skandha).

AMARDANA. See the word “PANCATANTRA”.

AMĀVĀSI. In Amarakaṇṭa we read about Amāvāsi: "Amāvāsiyā tvamāvāsiyā daśaḥ sūryendusaṅgamaḥ; Amāvāsi means New Moon. "Amā" means "Saha". So Amāvāsi is the Union of Sun and Moon in the same rāsi.

Once Bhīma, Mahārṣi cursed Agni. At that time Agni explained the importance of Amāvāsi. The oblations which are offered as homa into the fire become the food of the Devas and Pīḍras. Substances offered as homa on Purūnāśī become food of the Devas and those offered on Amāvāsi become food of the Pīḍras. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 7).

AMĀVASU I. Son of Purūrasva by Urvāśī. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 24).

Genealogy. From Viṣṇu, Brahmā-Atri-Candra-Budhā-Purūrasva-Amāvasu.

AMĀVASU II. One of the Pīḍras. Once Aca khódā was fascinated by the physical charm of this Amāvāsī and made advances of love to him. Amāvāsī repelled her advances. On account of this impropriety of Aca khódā, who was a spiritual daughter of the Pīḍra, she was degraded and in her next birth was born as Kāli or Sātyavatī. (Padma Purāṇa, Śrīṣṭi Khaṇḍa).

AMBĀ. Daughter of a King of Kṛśi.

1) Ambā and Vicitrāvīrya. Ambā is an ill-starred character in the story of the Mahābhārata. She had two younger sisters named Ambikā and Ambalikā. Bhīṣma, who had taken a vow to remain a bachelor for life, had once taken Ambā, Ambikā and Ambalikā, the three daughters of the King of Kṛśi, to Hastināpura. The circumstances in which this happened, are described in Devi Bāhāgavata, Prathama Skandha as follows: śaṅtana, a King of the Candra Varīṇa, had two wives, Gaṅgā and Sātyavatī. Bhīṣma was the son of Gaṅgā and Citarāngada and Vicitrāvīrya were the sons of Sātyavatī. Soon after Bhīṣma's birth, Gaṅgā vanished. After a long period of reign, śaṅtana also died. Sātyavatī and the three sons were left behind in the palace. According to a vow he had taken long ago, Bhīṣma, instead of succeeding to his father's throne, left it to his brother Citarāngada. Once Citarāngada went for hunting in the forest. There he came across a Gandharva named Citarāngada. The Gandharva did not like another man with his own name to be living in this world. So he killed the king. After that Vicitravira became king. Bhishma had to take up the task of arranging a suitable marriage for Vicitravira.

2) The Svaavanvara. It was at this time that Bhishma came to know that the King of Kasi was arranging the Svayamvara of his three daughters, Amba, Ambikā and Ambalikā. Bhishma went there and in the presence of all the kings who had assembled there, took the three princesses with him to Hastinapura. There he made all preparations for the marriage. But as the time for the ceremony approached, the eldest and most beautiful of the princesses, Amba went to Bhishma and said: “I had already made up my mind long ago to marry Sālva, the King. Besides, we are deeply in love with each other. Therefore, please consider whether it is proper on the part of a great man like you to force me into another marriage.”

On hearing this, Bhishma allowed her to do as she liked. Amba then went to King Sālva and made an appeal to him to accept her as his wife since they were mutually in love.

3) Sālva’s rejection. To her words Sālva replied: “What you have said about our mutual love is true. But it is not right for a man to accept a woman who has been accepted by another. I saw Bhishma taking you by hand and helping you into his chariot. Therefore go at once to Bhishma himself and ask him to accept you.” Stunned by his words, she turned away, to go to the forest to do penance.

4) Revenge on Bhishma. In the Mahabhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 17, we find that Amba had cherished a secret desire to wreak vengeance on Bhishma. She went to the Āśrama of Saîkhāvata Muni in the forest and stayed there for the night. Her wish to do penance was approved by the Muni. On the next day, Amba’s maternal grandfather, Hotravāhana (Sājaya) came that way. Hotrāvāhana came to know of all her misfortunes. He advised her to inform Paraśurāma of all her grievances. Just at that moment Akṛta-vrāṇa, a follower of Paraśurāma happened to come there. Hotrāvāhana introduced Amba to Akṛta-vrāṇa. Both Akṛta-vrāṇa and Sājaya explained all her affairs to Paraśurāma. Paraśurāma undertook to persuade Bhishma to accept Amba (as his wife). But Paraśurāma’s proposal was turned down by Bhishma. A terrible duel took place between them at Kurukṣetra. When the fight reached a critical stage, Nara and the gods induced Paraśurāma to withdraw from the duel. Thus the fight ended with equal victory to both. Finding that it was not possible to achieve her object through Paraśurāma’s mediation, Amba denounced food, sleep etc. and went to the Yamunā valley to do penance for six years. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 188). After that for one year she went on a fast, lying under the water in the river Yamunā. Again for another year she did penance, standing on the tip of the toes and eating only dry leaves. Next, she reduced the sky and earth to flames by doing penance. The goddess Gāṅgā appeared to her and when she understood her plight, she told Amba that it was not possible to kill Bhishma. In her agony and despair, without even drinking water, she wandered about there and there. The goddess Gāṅgā cursed her to become a river in the Vatsa country. As a result of the curse, a part of her was turned into the river known as Amba.

5) Śiva’s Boon. The remaining part of her engaged itself in penance. Śiva appeared to her and told her that in the next birth she would attain masculinity. He added that she would be born in the Drupada dynasty as a great archer under the name of Citravodhi and kill Bhishma. Pleased with this prophecy, she took a vow that she would kill Bhishma and making a pyre, burnt herself to death.

6) Rebirth. King Drupada’s queen had been in great distress for a long time because she had no children. Drupada propitiated Śiva by worshipping him for an issue. Śiva blessed him and said that a girl would be born to him, but she would be transformed into a boy. In due course, the queen gave birth to a girl, but it was announced that it was a boy. Therefore the child had to be brought up, dressed like a boy. The child became famous under the name of Śikhandi. When Śikhandi attained youth, Drupada decided to look for a wife for him (her?). Still he was greatly perplexed as to how to find a wife for Śikhandi who was already a youthful virgin! But his wife assured Drupada that Śikhandi would become a man, according to Śiva’s blessing. So, Drupada made a proposal for Śikhandi’s marriage with the daughter of the King of Daśārha.

7) Śikhandi’s Marriage. Hiraṇyavarna, the King of Daśaśāra, gave his daughter in marriage to Śikhandi. The couple arrived at Kāmbalyapura. By this time the wife came to know that the “husband” was a woman. She disclosed the secret to her Ladies-in-waiting. They in turn communicated it to the king. Enraged at this, Hiraṇyavarna sent a messenger to King Drupada to ascertain the truth of the matter. He even began to make preparations for waging a war against Drupada, King of Pañcāla. Drupada and his queen were in a fix. At this stage the distressed Śikhandi proceeded to the forest, determined to commit suicide. People were afraid of entering that forest because a Yakṣa named Śruṇakaṭarṇa lived there. Śikhandi went to the premises of the Yakṣa and performed certain rites for a number of days. The Yakṣa appeared to her. Śikhandi explained the whole matter to him. They entered into a contract. According to it, they exchanged their sexes—Śikhandi receiving the male sex of the Yakṣa and the Yakṣa receiving the female sex of Śikhandi. Śikhandi returned home as a man. Drupada repeated with greater force his old plea that his child was a man. Hiraṇyavarna made a thorough examination of Śikhandi and convinced himself of the truth. Many years after, Hiraṇyavarna died.

8) Kubera’s Arrival. At that time, in the course of his world tour Kubera arrived at the residence of Śruṇakaṭarṇa. The Yakṣa who was in female form, did not come out to receive Kubera. In his anger, Kubera pronounced a curse that the female sex of Śruṇakaṭarṇa and the male sex of Śikhandi would continue for ever. The Yakṣa prayed for the lifting of the curse. Kubera released him from the curse by saying that after the death of Śikhandi, the Yakṣa would be restored to his own male sex.

According to the previous agreement, Śikhandi went to Śruṇakaṭarṇa’s place after the death of Hiraṇyavarna. But coming to know of all that had happened, he returned home. Thus Śikhandi became a man permanently. Śikhandi had received his training in arms under Dronācārya. In the great Kaurava-Pāndava battle, he became a charioteer.
9) Sikhandi's Revenge. The Mahâbhârata, Bhishma Parva, Chapter 108, describes Bhishma's encounter with Sikhandi during the Kaurava-Pandava battle. The Pândavas started the day's battle by keeping Sikhandi in the vanguard. Bhîma, Arjuna, Abhimanyu and other warriors were giving him support. It was Bhishma who led the Kaurava forces. Arrows began to fly from both sides. It was the tenth day of the battle and Sikhandi shot three arrows aimed at Bhishma's breast. Bhishma with a smile of contempt said to Sikhandi, "Sikhandi! Brahmâ created you as a woman. You may do as you like". Hearing this taunt, Sikhandi became more infuriated. Arjuna inspired him with greater courage. After that, keeping Sikhandi in front, Arjuna began to fight with Bhishma. Sikhandi also showered his arrows on him. Ten of these arrows of Sikhandi hit Bhishma's breast. Bhishma disregarded even those arrows. At last he said: "I cannot kill the Pândavas because they are invulnerable (avadhyâh). I cannot kill Sikhandi because he is really a woman and not man. Though I am also invulnerable and cannot be killed in battle, yet today I have to die; the time has come for me to die." Meanwhile Sikhandi and Arjuna were discharging a continuous and heavy shower of arrows at Bhishma. At last Bhishma fell down. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 173).

AMBÁJANMA. It is a place of sacred bath where the sage Nârada usually resides. Those who die here will attain salvation (Mokṣa) by Nârada's blessing, according to M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 81.

AMBÁLIKA. (1) The youngest of the three daughters of the King of Kâśi—Ambâ, Ambikâ and Ambalikâ. Vicitrâvîra, son of Sântanu married Ambikâ and Ambalikâ. The mother of this princess was Kausalyâ.

2) Pándu's Mother. Vicitrâvîra died before children were born to his wives. To avoid the extinction of the family, Satyavarî, mother of Vicitrâvîra summoned Vyâsā, her other son and asked him to beget a son for Ambikâ, Vyâsâ obeyed his mother half-heartedly. Ambikâ did not like the dark-complexioned, crudely attired Vyâsâ. Still owing to the Mother's pressure, she passively submitted to the act. As a result of their union was born Dhrâtarâstra, who was blind from his birth. The grief-stricken mother called Vyâsâ again and asked him to have union with Ambalikâ this time. As Ambalikâ's face was pale at the time of their union, a child with pale complexion was born to her. He was named Pându. Having thus failed in both attempts, Satyavatî asked Ambikâ to go to Vyâsâ again. At night Ambikâ secretly disguised her serving-maid and sent her in her own place, to Vyâsâ. The waiting-maid experienced exquisite pleasure in Vyâsâ company, and as a result their most intelligent son was born to her. It was he who became the renowned Vidura. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 106).

AMBÂRĪṢA I. A King of the Ikṣvâku dynasty.

1) Genealogy and Birth. From Viṣṇu was born in the following order: Brahmi-Marci-Kâśyapa. - Vivasván-Vaivasvatamanu-Ikṣvâku-Vikukśi - Śaśāda - Purâṇâjac-Kukutstha-Anenas-Pûlālāsa-Prâsanajat - Yuvânâsâva-Mândhâtā-Ambârīṣa. Mândhâtā had three sons: Ambârīṣa, Mucukunda and Purukûsa and fifty daughters. The Muni (Sage) Saubhari married the daughters.

2) Ambârīṣa's Yâga (sacrifice). In Vâlmiki Râmâyana there is a story of Devendra's theft of the sacrificial cow from Ambârīṣa's yâgaśâlā. Devendra could not bear the thought of King Ambârīṣa winning world-renown and glory by performing yâgas. Therefore Indra stole the sacrificial cow and took it away. The Upâdhyâya (Chief Priest) was alarmed at the disappearance of the cow and expressed his opinion to the King that it would be enough to sacrifice a human being instead of the cow. The King searched for the cow in all countries, cities and forests. At last he reached the peak of Bhûrutûga where the sage Rûkâ lived with his wife and children. The King explained to the sage the whole story. He requested him to sell one of his sons in exchange for 100,000 cows. Rûkâ had three sons. The eldest was his father's favourite and the youngest was the mother's pet. In the end, Rûkâ sold the second son, Sunâsâsêpha in return for 100,000 cows. On his return journey with Sunâsâsêpha the king rested for a while at Puṣkara Tirtha. There Sunâsâsêpha happened to meet his uncle Viśvâmitra and complained to him about his sad plight. Sunâsâsêpha's wish was that the king's yâga should be performed and at the same time his own life-span should be extended. Viśvâmitra promised to save Sunâsâsêpha. He called Madhu-chandas and his other sons and said to them: "One of you must take the place of Ambârīṣa's sacrificial cow and save the life of Sunâsâsêpha. God will bless you." But none of the sons of Viśvâmitra was prepared to become the sacrificial cow. Viśvâmitra uttered a curse on his sons that they would have to spend a thousand years on earth, eating dog-flesh. Then he turned to Sunâsâsêpha and told him that if he prayed to the gods at the time of Ambârīṣa's yâga, they would save him. So Sunâsâsêpha went to Ambârīṣa's yâgaśâlā. As ordered by the assembled guests, Ambârīṣa bound Sunâsâsêpha and had him dressed in blood-red robes, ready for the sacrifice. Sunâsâsêpha began to praise and pray to the gods. Soon Indra appeared and blessed him with longevity. He also rewarded Ambârīṣa for his yâga. Thus Sunâsâsêpha was saved. (Vâlmiki Râmâyana Bâla Kânda, Sarga 61).

3) Ambârīṣa and Durvâsas. In Bhûgavata we see a story which describes how the Sudârâśana Cakra which emerged from Ambârīṣa's forehead chased Durvâsas in all the three worlds. Ambârīṣa was a devout worshipper of Viṣṇu. From the very beginning of his reign, peace and prosperity spread all over the country. Mahâviṣṇu who was pleased with the deep piety and devotion of Ambârīṣa appeared to him and bestowed on him the control of his (Viṣṇu's) Sudârâśana Cakra. After that Ambârīṣa started the observance of Ekâdaśi vrata. The rigour of the observance alarmed even Indra. He decided to obstruct the observance somehow or other. At that time, Durvâsas arrived in devakola. Indra instigated Durvâsas to spoil the Ekâdaśi observance of Ambârīṣa.

Durvâsas went to Ambârīṣa's palace. There the King received him with due respect and sent him to the river Kâlindî for his bath and morning rites. Durvâsas went for his bath and deliberately stayed away till the conclusion of Ambariša's Ekādaṣi observance. At the end of the observance, after feeding the gods with his offerings, Ambariša kept the remaining portion for Durvāsas. After his bath etc., Durvāsas returned, but he was furious when he was offered the leavings of the food of the gods and refused to take any food. In his anger he advanced towards Ambariša. A terrible monster Kṛtyā emanated from the Mahārāṣṭrī and was about to destroy Ambariša. Ambariša at once called upon Sudarśana Cakra, which appeared instantly and after cutting the throat of Kṛtyā, turned against Durvāsas. Terrified by it, Durvāsas began to flee for life. The Cakra pursued him at his heels. Durvāsas went to Indra and sought refuge with him. But the Cakra followed him there. Indra pleaded helplessness. Then the Mahārāṣṭrī went to Brahmā and sued for his help. There also the Cakra pursued him. Brahมā sent him to Siva. Siva was also unable to give him shelter. Sudarśana continued to chase him. Durvāsas then sought shelter with Mahāvīra. Viṣṇu told him plainly that there was no alternative but to go and sue for mercy to Ambariša himself and advised him to do so. At last Durvāsas returned to Ambariša and begged his pardon. Ambariša saved him from Sudarśana Cakra and described to him the glory resulting from the observance of Ekādaṣi vrata. (Bhāgavata, Navama Khanda).

4) Other Details: (1) Ambariša performed a yāga in the Yamunā valley. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter I, Verse 277; Bhāṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 6; Vana Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 2).

(2) Mahārāṣṭrī Durvāsas recalled Ambariša’s power. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 263, Verse 33).

(3) The Sage Viṣṇu once told Dharmaputra that Ambariša was one of the 16 great kings who lived in ancient times. The 16 reputed Kings were: Marutta, Suhotra, Paurava, Sibi, Śrī Rāma, Bhagiratha, Dīlīpa, Māndhātā, Yāyāti, Ambariša, Saśābindu, Gaya, Rantisdeva, Bharata, Prithu and Parasurāma. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 64).

(4) Ambariša fought single-handed against thousands of Kings. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 64).

(5) He performed one hundred yāgas. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 64).

(6) Ambariša once questioned Indra about his (Ambariša’s) army Chief Sudeva becoming more mighty than himself. (M.B., Śaṁti Parva, Chapter 98, Verses 6-11).

(7) Ambariša gave 110 crores of cows to the Brahmins. (M.B., Śaṁti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 23).

(8) Ambariša was also among the Munis who committed theft of Agastya’s lotuses. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 24).

(9) Besides giving cows to Brahmins, Ambariša gave them the country also. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 8).

AMBARIŠA II. When Balabhadrarāma entered the lower world (Pātāla) after death, among the Nāgas who welcomed him, there was one called “Ambariša”. (M.B., Mauśalya Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

AMBAṢTHA I. King Śrutāyu, who belonged to the party of the Kauravas was the ruler of Ambaṣṭha land and so he was called Ambaṣṭha. (M.B., Bhāṣma Parva, Chapter 96, Verses 39-40). He was killed in the fight with Arjuna. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 93, Verses 60-69).

AMBAṢTHA II. There was a hero called Ambaṣṭha among the warriors on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 50). He fought against King Cedi who was on the side of the Kauravas and in the fight King Cedi fell.

AMBAṢTHAM. A region in ancient India. It is believed that it was to the north of Sindha. (M.B., Sābhā Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 7).

AMBHORUḤA. A son of Sage Viṣṇumitra. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 39).

AMBIKĀ I. Elder sister of Ambalikā. (See AMBA-LIKĀ)

AMBIKĀ II. Another name of Pārvati. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 12).

AMBUMBATĪ. A river. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 56).

AMBUVĀHINI. A river. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 27). Praising this river at dawn and dusk will bring divine grace. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 20).

AMBUVICA. One of the Kings of Magadhā. He had a minister named Mahākārṇi. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 205, Verses 17-19).

AMHU. An Asura in the period of the Rgveda. This Asura had been doing much harm to the hermits. Purukutsa was the hermit whom he tormented. Indra vanquished this Asura and destroyed seven of his cities. (Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvaṅka 11, Śūkta 63, Khaṇḍa 7).

AMITADHVĀJA. A Rākṣasa. (M.B., Śaṁti Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 50).

AMITAUJĀ. A mighty Kṣītrya King of the Pāṇḍava kingdom. He was born from the element of a Rākṣasa named Ketumān. Before the Pāṇḍavas went to war, they had sent an invitation to him. He was one of the distinguished royal allies of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 12; Udvyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 12; Udvyoga Parva, Chapter 71, Verse 11).

AMITRAJIT. A King. In his country there were innumerable Śiva temples. Nārada Munī who was delighted by this sight, went to the Palace and said to Amitrajit: “In the city of Campākāvati there is a Gandharva virgin named Malayagandhinī. She has been abducted by Kaṇkālaketu, a Rākṣasa. She has promised to marry the person who will rescue her from him. Therefore please save her from the Rākṣasa.” As suggested by Nārada Amitrajit killed Kaṇkālaketu in battle and recovered Malayagandhinī and married her. Vīra was their son. (Skanda Purāṇa).

AMOGHA I. A Yāṣa who accompanied Śiva when the latter once went on a journey to Bhadravaṇa. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 35).

AMOGHA II. This name has been used as a synonym of Skanda. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 232, Verse 5).

AMOGHA III. A synonym of Śiva. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 114).

AMOGHA IV. A synonym of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 25).

AMOGHA (M). An Agni which originated from Brhaspati’s family. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 24).

AMOGHĀ. Śaṁtanu Mahārāṣṭrī’s wife. Once Brahmā visited Śaṁtanu Mahārāṣṭrī’s Āśrama. As the Mahārāṣṭrī was not at home, it was Amoghā who received the guest with due reverence. Fascinated by the irresistible charm of Amoghā, Brahmā had an involuntary emission of seminal fluid. He felt ashamed of his own weakness and left the Āśrama immediately. The Maharṣi who returned to the Āśrama soon after, came to know from his wife whose semen it was. He asked Amoghā to accept Brahma Deva’s precious semen and not to let it be wasted. Being a devoted wife, she accepted it, but unable to bear the divine pregnancy, she deposited it in the water lying in the valley of the Yugandhara mountain. From that time, it became a place of holy bath, known as Lohita. It was by bathing in this holy water that Paraśurāma washed away his sin of annihilating the Kṣatriyas. (Padma Purāṇa, Srṣṭi Khanda, 55).

AMPIṬA. A name for barbers. ’Ampita’ is derived from the Sanskrit word “Ambiṣṭha”. The word Ambiṣṭha means Physician. In olden days barbers were physicians also. Going about from house to house, they could easily practise both these professions. Since barbers practised physic also they were called Ambiṣṭhas. Ampita is a corrupted form of Ambiṣṭha. (Dravidian Philology). Barbers sometimes style themselves as “Panditis”. It is on the basis of this that we have today, “All Kerala Pandit Sabha” and other similar names. There is a legend on the basis of which this community has assumed the title of “Pandit”.

Long ago when Śri Buddha was about to go to the forest for performing Tapas, thousands of people flocked together to have his darśana. Buddha wished to continue his journey after shaving his head. Buddha asked loudly whether anyone in the crowd was prepared to shave his head. Only a single man came forward cheerfully to do that work. Buddha turned to him and said: “My dear friend, you are the only Pandit in this crowd. You have the wisdom to understand that there is nothing disgraceful in shaving one’s head.”

He shaved Buddha’s head. From that day his descendents came to be known as “Panditis”.

AMRTĀ. Daughter of a King of Magadhā. She was the wife of Anaśva and mother of Parīkṣit. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 41).

AMRTAM. (See PRÂMRTAM).

AMRTAM. A delicious and precious food obtained from the ocean of Milk when the Devas and Asuras churned it. In Chapter 152 of Agni Puraṇa, the word “Mrtam” is defined as wealth received by begging and “Amṛtam”, as wealth received without begging, and “Prāmṛtam” as another kind of wealth obtained without begging.

1) Cause of Krīṣṇḍhi-mañcanaṁ. (Churning of the Sea of Milk)—Once when Maharsi Durvāsas was travelling through a forest, he met the Apsara woman, Menakā, with a garland of Kalpaka flowers in her hand. The fragrance of the flowers filled the whole forest. Durvāsas approached Menakā and requested her to give the garland to him. The Vidyādharī (Apsara woman) prostrated before the Maharsi with reverence and presented the garland to him. Wearing that garland on his hair, Durvāsas went to devaloka.

There he saw Indra riding on his elephant, Airāvata, accompanied by his retinue of Devas. The Maharṣi took the rare garland from his head and presented it to Indra, the King of Devas. Indra received the garland and placed it on Airāvata’s head. The elephant was attracted by the fragrance of the garland and took it in its trunk, examined it by smelling it and then threw it on the ground.

Durvāsas, who became angry at the way in which his garland was slighted by Indra said to him: “Since you have treated my garland with disrespect, the glory and prosperity of devaloka will perish!” On hearing the curse, Indra alighted from the elephant, frightened. He begged pardon of the Maharṣi. The furious Muni continued: “I am not soft-hearted; nor am I of a forgiving nature. Other Munis may forgive. Remember, I am Durvāsas. You have become so haughty because other Munis like Vasiṣṭha and Gautama have been flattering you too much.” Having said this Durvāsas went his way. Indra returned to Amāravati.

From that day the glory of devaloka began to decline. The three worlds became dull. Even the plants and shrubs began to wither. The performance of yāgas came to an end. The Devas began to be affected by the infirmities of old age. Taking advantage of this situation, the Asuras started preparations for opposing the Devas. Under the oppression of the Asuras, the Devas groaned in distress. Led by Agni Deva they sought refuge under Brahmā. Brahmā led them to Mahāviṣṇu. They all joined in praising Viṣṇu who appeared and told them like this: “O Gods! I shall enhance your glory. Do as I tell you. Along with the Asuras bring all kinds of medicinal herbs and deposit them in the ocean of Milk. Obtain Amṛtam from it by churning it with Mahāmeru as the churning staff and Vāsuki as the rope. The Amṛtam (Amṛta) which will be produced by churning the Milk sea, will make you strong and deathless. I shall see that the Asuras will share in your troubles but not in enjoying Amṛtam.”

2) Churning of the Milk Sea. After Viṣṇu had vanished, the Devas made a treaty with the Asuras and began to work for getting Amṛtam. All of them joined together in bringing various kinds of medicinal herbs and after putting them in the Milk sea which was as clear as the cloudless sky, began to churn it, using Manthara Mountain as the churning staff and snake Vāsuki as the rope. The party of Devas was posted at the tail-end of Vāsuki while the Asuras took their stand at the head. The Asuras became enraptured by the fiery breath coming out of Vāsuki’s mouth. The clouds which were blown by that breath invigorated the Devas.

Mahāviṣṇu transformed himself into a tortoise, and sitting in the middle of the Milk Sea served as the foundation for the Manthara Mountain, the churning staff. Assuming another form, invisible both to Devas and Asuras, Mahāviṣṇu pressed down the Manthara Mountain from above.

While churning the Milk Sea like this, the first object that rose to the surface was Kāmadhenu. Both Devas and Asuras were strongly attracted towards Kāmadhenu. While all were standing spellbound, Vāruṇidevi with her enchanting dreamy eyes next appeared on the surface. Pārjñātā was the third to appear. Fourth, a group of Apsara women of marvellous beauty floated up. The Moon appeared as the fifth. Śiva received the Moon. The venom which came out of the Milk Sea as the sixth item, was absorbed by Nāgas. After that arose Bhagavān Dhanvantari, dressed in pure white robes and carrying a Kamanḍalu in his hand filled with Amṛtam. All were delighted at this sight. Next Mahā- lakṣmī made her appearance in all her glory with a lotus in her hand and seated in an open lotus flower. Gandharvas sang celestial songs in her presence; Apsaras women danced. For her bath, the Ganga river arrived there with her tributaries. The Milk Sea itself took on physical form and offered her a garland of ever-fresh lotus flowers. Brahma bedecked her with ornaments. After that Laksmidevi, fully adorned in all her magnificent jewels, in the presence of all Devas, joined the bosom of Mahavisnu. The Asuras were displeased at it. They snatched the pot of Amrta from Dhanvantari and fled away.

3) \textit{How Amrta was recovered.} With the loss of Amrta, the Devas were in a fix. They began to consider how the pot of Amrta could be recovered. Accordingly Mahavisnu transformed himself into a celestial virgin, Mohini, of extraordinary beauty. She approached the Asuras as a shy girl. The Asuras were enchanted by her surpassing beauty. They asked her, “Who are you?” Looking down on the ground, Mohini replied: “I am the little sister of Dhanvantari. By the time I came out of the Milk Sea, the Devas and Asuras had already gone. Being alone I am going about in search of a suitable mate.”

On hearing her words, the Asuras began to make friends with her one by one, determined not to waste this opportunity. They told her that she should distribute Amrta to all of them and in the end she should marry one of them. Mohini agreed, but added: “All of you should close your eyes. I shall serve Amrta to all. He who opens his eyes last, must serve Amrta to me and he will marry me.”

All of them accepted this condition. They sat in front of Mohini with closed eyes. In a moment Mohini left the place with the pot of Amrta and went to deva-loka.

4) Rahu’s neck is cut. When the Asuras opened their eyes, Mohini was not to be seen. Finding that they were betrayed, they were in great perplexity. All of them pursued Mohini to devaloka. Devas had put the Sun and Moon gods on guard duty at the gates of devaloka. At the instance of the Asuras, Rahu in disguise entered the divine assembly chamber. The Sun and Moon gods detected him and Vishu with his weapon, Sudaarshana Cakra cut open his neck. Swearing that he would wreak vengeance on the Sun and Moon Rahu returned. In the 8th Skandha of Bhagavata it is said that even now from time to time Rahu swallows the Sun and Moon, but they escape through the open gash in his neck and this is known as solar eclipse and lunar eclipse.

5) \textit{Defeat of the Asuras.} Indra and all other gods took Amrta. The enraged Asuras attacked the gods, who had gained strength and vigour by taking Amrta. The Asuras were driven away in all directions. All the three worlds began to enjoy glory and prosperity again.

6) \textit{Kalakuta.} The story of how the deadly poison, Kalakuta arose at the churning of the ocean of Milk, is given in M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 18, Verses 42-45, as follows: After many precious things had come up Kalakuta poison with fumes and flames, appeared on the surface of the ocean. Its strong smell caused a stupor in all the three worlds. Fearing that the world will perish, Brahma requested Siva to swallow that poison. Siva gulped it down, but stopped it in his throat. From that day he became “Nilakantha”.

7) \textit{The story of Airavata.} Indra’s tusker Airavata was responsible for the churning of the ocean of Milk. But in the Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 42 it is said that a white elephant with four tusks arose during the churning of the ocean of Milk and that Devendra caught and tamed it. This is an obvious contradiction. Besides, in Valmiki Ramayana, Aranya-kanda, 14th Sarga, the wounded Jatayu describing his family history to Sri Rama, gives the following account about the origin of Airavata:

Kaavyapa, one of the Prajapatis, married the eight girls of Daksha. One of them named Krodhavasa had ten daughters by Kaavyapa. They were: Mrg, Mrgamada, Hari, Bhadramada, Mataangi, Sardulii, Sveti, Surabhi, Surasa and Kadru. Of them Bhadramada gave birth to a daughter, Iravati. The tusker Airavata is Iravati’s son.

An explanation for this discrepancy may be seen in Visuju Purana, 3rd Section, Chapter I. Now six Manvantaras have passed (See ‘MANVANTARA’). This is the seventh Manvantara. Each Manvantara has a new Indra. According to this, different Indras have their own Airavatas. This is the only explanation for this apparent contradiction.

8) Amrta and Garuda. There is another story about Amrta which says that Garuda once went to deva-loka and brought Amrta from there to be given to the Nagas, but Devendra came down and took it back. This story is given in Mahabharata from Chapter 27 onwards. Vinata, a wife of Kaavyapa gave birth to Garuda and Kadru and her sister gave birth to the Nagas. Once there was a dispute between Vinata and Kadru. Vinata said that the hairs on the tail of Uccaisaras, Devendra’s horse, were white but Kadru asserted that they were black. To settle the dispute they made a bet. The condition was that the loser must become the servant maid of the winner. As instructed by Kadru, some of the Nagas went in advance and hung down from the tail of Uccaisaras, thus giving the false appearance of a tail with black hairs. By this trick Vinata lost the bet and had to become Kadru’s servant maid. As a result of it, the task of looking after Kadru’s children became Garuda’s duty. Kadru told him that if he fetched Amrta from devaloka and gave it to the Nagas, she was prepared to release him from the bondage. So Garuda flew up to devaloka, fought with the gods and defeated them. He returned with the pot of Amrta and gave it to the Nagas. The Nagas went to take their bath after placing the pot on darbha grass spread on the floor. Just then Devendra swooped down and carried away the pot of Amrta to devaloka. When the Nagas returned after their purifying bath, the pot was not to be seen. In their greed they began to lick the darbha grass on which the pot was placed. The sharp edge of the grass cut their tongues into two. This is why the Nagas (snakes) came to have forked tongues.

AMŚA. A sage of the family of Marīcī.

1) Genealogy. He was descended from Viṣṇu through Brahāma, Marīcī and Kaśyapa.

2) Birth. Marīcī was one of the six sons, all rśis, of Brahāma. These six sons, born parthogenetically of Brahāma, were: Marīcī, Aṅgirās, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha and Kṛtātu. Marīcī had a son named Kaśyapa. Kaśyapa married the thirteen daughters of Daṅka. The eldest of them, Aditi, gave birth to twelve sons Dhātā, Aryanman, Mitrā, Śākra, Varuṇa, Aṅsī, Bhaga, Vivasvān, Puṣūn, Śāvītā, Tvaṣṭā and Viṣṇu. Aṅsī is one of these twelve sons who have been called the twelve Ādityas. (See Chapter 65 of Ādi Parva of the Mahābhārata).

3) Events. The Mahābhārata says (Śloka 66, Chapter 123) that Aṅsī was present at the time of Arjuna’s birth when several devas had come there to see the infant. In Śloka 34, Chapter 45 of Śalya Parva it is said that Aṅsī was present on the occasion of the Abhiśeka of Skanda-deva. Aṅsī is said to have presented to Skanda-deva five good warriors: Pārīgaha, Vaṭa, Bhīma, Dāhāna and Dāhati.

AMŚAPĀYA. Name of a priest (Ṛtvik) qualified to officiate at a sacrifice. This priest officiated at the sacrifice (yajña) performed by Brahmā at Puṣkara-kṣetra. (See Chapter 34 of Padma-Purāṇa).

AMŚAVĀTĀRA. The incarnation of God on earth is called avatāra. When the incarnation is only partial, that is, when only some of the divine elements incarnate, it is called amśavātāra (Aṃśa=part). Chapters 54 to 64 of Ādi Parva of the Mahābhārata give us a list of the gods who have incarnated partially. The following list of devas and their amśavātārās is based upon the account given in the fourth Skandha of Śrī Mahādevī Bhāgavata.

(For more details see under the word, AVATĀRA).

AMŚUDHANAPATTANA. Name of an ancient town in North India. Bhārata passed through this town while going to Ayodhyā from Kekaya after Dāsaratha’s death. Vālmīki has described this town in the Rāmāyaṇa in this context.

AMŚUMĀṆ. Name of a King belonging to the Solar dynasty (Sūrya Vāṃśa).

2) Birth. Sāgara, a king of the Sūrya vāṃśa, (mentioned above) had two wives, Sumati (Vaḍgarhi) and Keśī (Saibā) by name. Keśī gave birth to a son named Asamanjas. Aṃśumāṇ was the son of Asamanjas and the father of the famous Bhagiratha. (See under the title, BHAGIRATHA).

3) Some other details. Aṃśumāṇ was one of the Kings who attended the Svaṁvāra of Pāṇīcālī. (See Śloka 11, Chapter 185 of Ādi Parva of the Mahābhārata).

AMŚUMĀṆ II. There is a reference to one Aṃśumāṇ in the course of the description of the Viśvedevas.

AMŚUMĀṆ III. King of Bhoja who was killed by Dṛḍha in the war at Kurukṣetra (Vide Śloka 14, Chapter 6 of Karṇa Parva).

AMŚUMATI. The daughter of the Gandharva King named Dramila. Her story is narrated in the Siva Purāṇa to illustrate the benefits of performing the Pradhoṣa-Vṛata. Sūta expatiates on the importance and advantages of Pradhoṣa-Vṛata to a number of sages in Nāmiśarāṇaya. King Satyaratha was a scrupulous observer of Pradhoṣa-Vṛata. Unfortunately he defaulted in his observance of the Vṛata owing to unavoidable circumstances and, after his death, was born again as the King of Vidarbha. He was killed in a battle by the King of Sālva and his wife, pregnant at that time, fled to a forest. She gave birth to a son on the bank of a river. Then, when she stepped into the river to drink some water, she was carried away by a crocodile. Presently a Brahmin woman named Uṣā happened to pass that way with her son named Śucīvṛata. Seeing a new-born infant there, that Brahmin woman took him, gave him the name, Dharmagupta and brought him up as her own son. According to the advice of a pious Brahmin named Śaṅgīla, both Śucīvṛata and Dharmagupta started performing Pradoṣa-Vrata. Lord Śiva was pleased with them and gave them much wealth. Dharmagupta happened to meet Anumati, daughter of the Gandharva King, Dramila, one day in a forest and they fell in love with each other. Dramila came to know of their love and so gave his daughter in marriage to Dharmagupta. As a result of the wealth and power which he had acquired by observing strictly Pradoṣa-Vrata Dharmagupta was able to return to Vidarbha, defeat King Śiva and regain his kingdom from him.

AMŪRTARAYAS. He was a renowned King of ancient Bharata and the father of King Gaya. Amūrtarayas received a sword from Pūru. (M.B., Śanti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 75).

ANĀDIPAKA. (See Pañcatantra).

ANĀDHRSṬI I. A King of the Pūru dynasty.

Anādhṛṣṭi is a son born to Raudrāśa by Miśrakesī, an Apsara woman. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 8-12). Anādhṛṣṭi has two synonyms, Rceyu and Anvaṅbhānu.

ANĀDHRSṬI II. Verse 58, Chapter 14 of Sabhā Parva mentions seven great Yādavas. One Anādhṛṣṭi is named amongst the seven. This Anādhṛṣṭi was present at the marriage of Abhimanyu at Iapalavanagāra. (M.B., Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 22). There was one Anādhṛṣṭi also amongst the warriors who encompassed Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa at the battle-field of Kurukṣetra. (M.B., Udvyoga Parva, Chapter 151, Verse 67). He was the son of King Vṛḍdhaśākṣa. Hence he was called Vṛddhaśakṣem also.

ANĀDHRSṬYA. One of the Kauravas. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 105).

ANĀGATA. (See PAᦕCATANTRA).

ANĀGAHA I. Son of Vasiṣṭha. He had seven sons, by his wife Uṛjā. They were: Rajas, Gotra, Urdhvabāhu, Savana, Anagha, Sutapās and Sukra. Holy characters, they became the saptaṅga of the age of the third Manu. (Manvantara).

ANĀGAHA II. was a Gandharva. He participated in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 53).

ANĀGATHA III. A king called Anagha is referred to in Verse 22, Chapter 8 of M.B.

ANAGHA IV. Skanda has a synonym, Anagha as well. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 232, Verse 5).

ANAGHA V. A bird named Anagha is mentioned among the children of Garuḍa. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 12).

ANAGHA VI. Used as a synonym of Śiva. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 38).

ANAGHA VII. A synonym of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 29).

ANAGHAM. A place in ancient India. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 9).

ANAGNI(S). They are Pitṣ. Pitṣ like Agnisvātta, Barhiṣads, Aganagis, Sāgniś were offsprings of Brahā. Two demsels, Menā and Dhārīṇī were born to them of Svadhā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

ANALĀ I. A daughter of Dākṣa. Some of the other daughters are Aditi, Dīti, Danu, Kālikā, Tāmā, Krodhavāsā, Manu and Analā. These daughters were married to Kaśyapa, son of Marici. Trees, creepers etc. owe their origin to Analā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyaka kāṇḍa, Canto 14).

ANALĀ II. Another Analā is referred to in Verse 71, Chapter 66 of Ādi Parva, in M.B. This Analā was the wife of Kaśyapa and a great granddaughter of Krodhavāsā, the daughter of Dākṣa. Krodhavāsā begot Śvetā, and she Surabhi; Rohini was the daughter of Surabhi and Analā was Rohini's daughter.

ANALĀ III. Daughter of Mālyavān born of Sundarī. She was married to Viṣṇuvaśu. Kumbhānasī was her daughter. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Uttarākāṇḍa).

ANĀLAṂBA. A sacred pool. A bath in the pool is as efficacious as the Purusāmedha yajña. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 32).

ANAMITRA I. A king of the Solar dynasty. The Śrīmapurāṇa refers to him as the son of Nighna.

ANAMITRA II. Anamitra, son of Dīrgha is referred to as a king of the Yādavas in Ātmāpurāṇa.

ANAMITRA III. One Anamitra, son of Viṣṇi is referred to in Mātisya Purāṇa. He was the father of Sinī.

ANAMITRA IV. A son born to King Kṛṣṇa and his wife Mādri.

ANAMITRA. Father of Cākṣuṣa, the Manu of the 6th Manvantara and son of sage Amāmitra. (See Ananda).

ANĀNATA. A sage. Ārgveda, Maṇḍala 4, Sūkta 175.

ANANGA I. Son of Kardmaprajapati, and a king reputed for his love of the people and unparalleled integrity. He had a son called Atibala. (M.B., Śanti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 91).

ANANGA II. (See Kāmadēva).

ANANGA. A river in ancient India. (M.B., Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 39).

ANANTA I. (Ādiśeśa).

1) Genealogy. Mahāviṣṇu begot Brahā and he the Prajāpatis and Ananta (Ādiśeśa) is one of the Prajāpatis. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyaka kāṇḍa, Canto 14, Verse 7). Ananta is also referred to as the son of Kaśyapa, one of the Prajāpatis born of Kadru. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Verse 41). Also Balabhadra rāma, elder brother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa was a partial incarnation of Ananta.

2) Differences with mother. Vinatā and Kadrū were two wives of Kaśyapa prajāpati. Gauruḍa was born as Vinatā's son and numerous serpent like Ananta, Vāsuki, Takṣaṇa, Kārkoṭaka were sons of Kadrū. Once a controversy developed between Vinatā and Kadrū, the latter saying that there were a few black hairs on the tail of Airāvata and the former denying it. It was agreed that she who proved wrong in the argument would become the slave of the other. To prove herself to be right Kadrū, the same night, asked her sons to go and stay suspended in the hairs of Airāvata's tail. Some of the sons agreed to do so, while her other (prominent) sons like Ananta expressed their disinclination to do such an unethical act. Kadrū cursed these disobedient children of hers to die at the serpent yajña of Janamejaya, whereupon Ananta and his supporters departed in sorrow. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 69).

3) Ananta's new engagement. Departing thus from his mother Ananta visited sacred centres like Gandhāmādana, Badarī and practised austerities. And, Brahāma appeared before Ananta and asked him not to worry, but to go to the nether world and support the world on his hoods. Brahāma also told him that Gauruḍa would render him all help in the new task. Blessed thus by Brahma, Ananta gladly took up the new job. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 24).

4) Ananta has another abode in the palace of Varuna in the west. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 18).

5) Ananta’s prowess. About Ananta’s prowess Visnu Purana has the following to say: At the bottom of Patala there is a (Tamsic) form of Visnu called Adisesha. Even the Danavas and the Daityas are not able to describe the attributes of that form. The Siddhas call this Adisesha Ananta who is worshipped by Devas and rishis. Ananta has 1000 heads and the Svastika mark which is clearly visible is his ornament. The 1000 gems in his head illuminate all regions, and he renders the Asuras powerless for the good of all the worlds. Adisesha whose eyes ever rotate due to the overflow of his prowess, and who wears blue apparel and garlands of white gems shines forth like another Mount Kailasa beautified with garlands of clouds and by the flow of the Gangā. Śrī Devī and Vāruṇī Devī serve Ananta who holds in one hand a lāṅgāla and in the other a mace (mūsala). As the deluge (end of a yuga Kalpānta) approaches Rudra emanates from the faces of Ananta and consumes the three worlds. Adisesha dwells in the nether world wearing the whole earth as a crown. Even the Devas cannot gauge his nature, shape, prowess etc. When he yawns the earth and waters shake and shiver. The Gandharvas, Nāgas, Cāraṇas etc. fail to understand the real extent of his attributes, and that is why this strange being is called Ananta (endless). It was by worshipping Ananta and by his grace that sage Garga was able to master the sciences of astronomy and causation (nimitta). (Visnu Purana, Part 2, Chapter 5).

6) The land of Ananta. Patāla is Ananta’s world, and at its bottom there is a spot called Ananta. That spot is 30000 yojanas in extent, and here lives Ananta. He is known as Satīkāraṇa also. He bears the whole nether world as though it was a mustard seed. And, when he thinks of destroying the entire world the Rudra called Satīkāraṇa will appear with other Rudras and weapons like trident (Triśūla). Other serpents bow at the feet of Ananta, who is supremely beautiful with divine lustre. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

ANANTA II. A synonym of the Sun God. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 24).

ANANTA III. A synonym of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 70, Verse 14).

ANANTA IV. One of the military captains of Skanda. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 57).

ANANTA V. A synonym of Visnu. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 83).

ANANTA VI. A synonym of Śiva. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 135).

ANANTAC. Wife of Janamejaya, son of King Puru.

ANANTA. The abode of Ananta in the nether regions. (Devi Bhāgavata, Canto 8). (There are certain indications that Ananta refers to Trivandrum, Capital city of the Kerala State. Explanations of words like Śvarga, Bhūmi, Patāla, Ananta, Deva, Asura, throw much light on this inference).

ANANTAVIJAYAM. The conch of Dharmaputra. It was blown during the great war. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 15).

ANAPAYACOLA. A King of the Cola country, 1063-1112. The Tamil poet Sekhar who composed the twelfth song of the great Saiva religious book called Tirumuraiyil was a minister of this King.

ANARAKATĪRTHA. A sacred pool. Brahmadeverg and Visnu and others bathe daily in this sacred pool. Therefore, it is said that the sins of all those who bathe in the pool will be washed off.

ANARANYA (ANARANYA). A King of the śiva dynasty. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 236). For genealogy, see IKSŚVAKU. Anaranya was a vegetarian. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 59). Rāvana once attacked his country whom he challenged to a duel. In the duel Anaranya died. Before dying he cursed Rāvana that he would be killed by Rāma, son of King Daśaratha. (Brahmanda Purana, Chapter 45).

ANARANYA. (See ANARANYA).

ANARKA (M). A king born in King Kaśīpa’s dynasty. (Agni Purana, Chapter 278).

ANASA (ASAMGA). A brother of Akūrā. (Bhāgavata, Daśaśāma Skandha).

ANASŪYĀ. Wife of Sage Atri, son of Brahmadever. (Visnu Purana, Part 1, Chapter 10).

1) Genealogy. From Mahāväśu were born in order Brahmadever, Śvāyambhuva Manu, Devahūti, Anasūyā. To Śvāyambhuva, son of Brahmadever, was born by his wife Śatarūpī five children: Uttanapāda, Priyavrata, Āhuti. Devahūti and Prasūti and Devahūti was married to Kardama, son of Brahmadever. They begot two daughters, Kalā and Anasūyā. Marci married Kalā and Atri married Anasūyā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 1, Chapter 4).

2) The Tapasakti of Anasūyā. Once upon a time, rains having failed for ten years the whole world sweated in agony and river Gangā got dried up. Famine stalked the world. In this dire contingency it was the tapasakti of Anasūyā that made trees bear fruits and Gangā to flow again. Also, she converted ten days into nights on the request of the Devas.

During their forest life Rāma and Śītā reached the hermitage of sage Atri, and the sage and Anasūyā treated the guests sumptuously. The above story about the tapasakti of Anasūyā was told then by Atri. The story helped to increase Rāma’s respect for Anasūyā. Anasūyā gave Śītā all proper advice. She taught Śītā that absolute service to husband is the greatest task ordained to women. Anasūyā gave to Śītā a very sacred garland and a sublime gem. And, after that Rāma and Śītā left the hermitage. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyākanda, Cantos 112 and 118).

3) Sons of Anasūyā. She had three sons: Dattērya, Durvāsas and Candra. (Visnu Purana, Part 1, Chapter 10).

Dattērya, Śīvā as Durvāsas and Brahmadever as Candra to Anasūyā is given under Atri.

ANAPAMIYĀ. Wife of Bānāsura. Once she developed an amorous interest in Nārada, which led to some domestic quarrels. (Padma Purana, Adikāanda, Chapter 14).

ANAVADYĀ. Wife of Kaśyapa, this Apsarā woman participated in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 62).

ANĀDA.* Śītā, the disciple of Vyāsa said to the Munis at the Naimiśāraṇya about the creation of the Universe: In the beginning in the heavy universal darkness, the first seed of life (anda) appeared. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter I, Verse 28).

Ancakatāha. The entire universe consisting of the fourteen worlds, which are: Bhūloka, Bhuvanaloaka, Śvarloka, Maharloka, Janarloka, Tapaloaka, Satyaloka, Pātala, Rasātala, Mahātala, Talātala, Sutala, Vītala, Atala.

Andha I. An offsprings of Kaśyapa by his wife Kadru. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 16).

Andha II. There is a story in M.B., about a hunter, Vājaka killing one Andha, an evil being. Andha whose form and shape were that of an animal, by doing tapas, became recipient of a boon for destroying everything. Brahmā rendered him blind lest the world perish, and that animal began to be known as Andha. When Andha began his programme of complete destruction many people rushed up to Viśvāmitra in his abode in the forest. Andha followed them. But, Viśvāmitra, in the interests of self-protection pointed out the refugees to Andha. As punishment for this sin Viśvāmitra had once to go to hell. This story was related by Kṛṣṇa to Arjuna during the great war at Kurukṣetra, and the reason for telling the story was this: During the fight Arjuna hesitated to aim arrows against Karna. Enraged by this attitude of Arjuna Dharmaeputra asked him to hand over his famous bow, Gāṇḍiva to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Feeling insulted at this demand Arjuna, all on a sudden, drew his sword to do away with Dharmaputra. Śrī Kṛṣṇa, prevented Arjuna from attacking his noble brother, and in this context related the above story to prove the truth that sins committed even unwittingly will lead one, as in the case of Viśvāmitra to hell. (M.B., Karaṇa Parva, Chapter 69).

Andha III. Upamanyu, the excellent disciple of Dhaumya, consumed the leaves of a tree which made him blind. (See Ayodhadosa.) (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 3).

Andha I. There was a very renowned king called Andha in the Yayu dynasty. All kings belonging to this dynasty used to be called Andhakas.

Andha II. Verse 12, Chapter 4 of M.B., Udyoga Parva refers to another King called Andha. The Pāṇḍavas had sent him a messenger soliciting military help.

Andha III. An Asura.

1) Birth. This Asura was the foster son of Hiranyakṣa. Śiva was really his father. While once Śiva was immersed in yoga his daughter closed his eyes playfully with her hands, and lo! a darkness rose and enveloped the whole place. From that darkness, with a sound as that of thunderbolt, appeared a Rākṣasa. He got the name Andha as he was born from darkness. At that time Hiranyakṣa was doing tapas for a son. Śiva appeared before him and bestowing on him Andha as a foster son said as follows: “If he (Andha) earns the hatred of the world or desires even the mother of the three worlds or kills brahmins I will myself burn him to ashes”. After saying this Śiva disappeared. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 63).

2) Andha desires Pārvati with lust. One day overcome by erotic passion Andhaka said to his henchmen as follows: “He is my true friend who brings Śiva’s consort, Pārvati to me. Yes, he is my brother, our father even.” Hearing these ravings of Andhaka, Prahlāda went to him and convinced him that Pārvati, in fact was his mother. But Andhaka was not quietened. Then Prahlāda explained to him the gravity of the sin of desiring other people’s wives. Even this had no effect on Andhaka. He sent Sambaraśura to Śiva to ask for and bring Pārvati to him. Śiva sent word to Andhaka that if the latter would defeat him in the game of dice Pārvati would be sent to him. Andhaka got enraged and rushed to mount Mandara and began a fight with Śiva.

3) Death. Defeated in the encounter, Andhaka craved for Śiva’s pardon. He admitted that Pārvati was his mother. He also prayed for Śiva’s blessings for removal of his Asurahood. Śiva granted him the prayers. The sins and Asurahood of Andhaka were thus ended. Śiva made him the head of the Asuras, named Bhrigī. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 63 etc.).

Andhaka (M). A sacred pool. A dip in this pool will bring all the benefits of a Puruṣamedha yajña. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verses 32, 33).

Andhakara (M). A place in the island of Kṛṣṇa. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 18).

Andhakaram. A mountain in the island of Kṛṣṇa. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 22).

Andhakāpa (M). In the Devi Bhāgavata, Mahāviṣṇu describes 28 hells to Nārada, and Andhakāpa is one of them. (See Naraka). Andhakāpa is reserved for those who kill either Brahmins or devotees of God or Sannyāsins (holy people). This hell abounds in cruel beasts like the bear and leopard, evil birds like the eagle, reptiles like the snake and scorpion and dirty insects like bugs and mosquitoes. The sinner will have to put up with all these sufferings in hell till the period of his punishment expires. (Devi Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

Andhatāmisra. One of the 28 hells. (See Naraka). This hell is destined for wives who cheat their husbands and consume food and for husbands who cheat their wives and eat food. Agents of Yama get hold of such sinners and push them into the Andhatāmisra. As the cords of the agents with which they bind the sinners get tighter around their bodies they faint and fall down owing to unbearable pain. When they regain consciousness and try to run away and escape, the Agents of Yama again bind them with the cord. (Devi Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

Andhra (Andhra). This is the Andhra Pradesh in modern India. It has to be surmised that this place was very famous during the period of the composition of the Mahābhārata. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 49).

Andhra. Warriors from Andhra were called Andhras. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 8).

Andhakara. Verse 24, Chapter 4 of Sabhā Parva, describes this king of Andhra Desa as having sat in the assembly hall of the palace constructed by Mayā at Indraprastha for the Pāṇḍavas. He was also present at the Rājasūya Yajña performed by Yudhīṣṭhira. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 11).

Andhakara II. The warriors of Andhra Desa were called Andhrakas also. (M.B., Karṇa Parva, Chapter 20, Verses 10 and 11). In the Bhārata war the King of Pāṇḍya defeated those warriors. Kṛṣṇa invited Arjuna to kill the Andhrs and the Pulindas. (M.B., Karṇa Parva, Chapter 73, Verses 19 to 21).

Andhakara III. Andhrakas are classed with Mlec-chās (lowest caste of people) in Verse 42, Chapter 207 of Śantí Parva.

ANENAS I. A king of the Lunar dynasty (Candra Vaniśa).

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā - Atri - Candra - Budha - Purūravas-Āyus-Anenas.

2) Birth. Purūravas had by his wife Urvāṣī six sons named Āyus, Śrutāyus, Satyāyus, Raya, Vijaya and Jaya. Of them, Āyus, the eldest, had five sons named Nāhuṣa, Kṣatravrīḍha, Rājī, Rambha and Anenas. Nāhuṣa had a son named Yayātī to whom were born the sons Pāru, Yudha and others. The two dynasties of Yadu and Pāru (Yaduvanśa and Pāruvanśa) originate from them. To Anenas, brother of Nāhuṣa, a son named Śuddha was born. Śuddha begot Śuci who begot Trikakup and a son named Śāntarāyas was born to Trikakup.

ANENAS II. A Mahārāja of the Ikṣvāku dynasty.

Genealogy. From Viṣṇu descended thus: Kāṣyapa-Vaivasvata Manu - Ikṣvāku-Śaśāda-Kakutstha-Anenas.

ĀNGA. A King belonging to the Candra vaniśa. (Lunar dynasty).

2) Birth. Āṅga, Kaliṅga, Suhma, Kaṇḍra, Vāṅga, Adrupa and Anāśābhu are the seven sons born to Bali, the son of Sutapas, by his wife Suteṣṇa, and the King Āṅga is one of them. There is a story about the birth of these sons.

Once there lived a hermit named Utatthya. He was the elder brother of Brhaspati. One day when Māmatā, Utatthya’s wife, was pregnant, Brhaspati approached her with carnal desires. In spite of her efforts to dissuade her brother-in-law from his attempts she could not prevail upon him. He forced her and satisfied his desire. The child in her womb protested and kicked the sperm of Brhaspati out into the floor. Brhaspati got angry and cursed the child in the womb: “May you fall in perpetual darkness”. So the child was born blind and remained blind throughout his life. Hence he got the name ‘Dirghatamas’. Dirghatamas married Pradveṣi. A son named Gautama was born to them. The duty of supporting Dirghatamas fell upon the wife and the son, who put him on a raft and pushed him astray into the River Ganges. King Bali, who was bathing in the river saw this. He rescued the hermit and took him to the palace and pleasing him by hospitality, requested him to beget children in his wife Suteṣṇa, who detesting the idea sent a Śūdrā woman Dhātreyi in her stead and eleven children were born to them. By and by Dirghatamas came to know of the deceit played by Suteṣṇa on him and he became very angry. But the King pacified him and pleased him again and Dirghatamas begot five sons by Suteṣṇa. They were Āṅga, Vāṅga, Kaṇṭha, Paṇḍra and Suhma. Dirghatamas blessed them that they would become very famous. Āṅga, Vāṅga, Kaṇṭha, Paṇḍra and Suhma were the five kings ruled by Āṅga, Vāṅga, Kaṇṭha, Paṇḍra and Suhma respectively. These five are the famous Kings of the Bāli family. (Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 104).

3) How Āṅga got children. Once Āṅga performed a horse sacrifice. But the gods did not appear to receive oblations. Holy seers said that the Gods refused to accept the oblations offered by the King because he was childless. So he performed the sacrifice called Putrakām-ṛṣṭi (Sacrifice to get a son) and from the sacrificial fire arose a divine person with a golden flask of pudding, which he offered to the King and his queen. The King and the queen Sunīthā ate the pudding, as a result of which a son was born to them. He was named Vena. This son was wicked. Because of his wickedness the King became so miserable that he left his kingdom and went on a pilgrimage. Since there was no other means the people enthroned Vena, who tortured his subjects beyond limit. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha, Chapters 14).

ANGADA I. A son of Bāli.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā-Kaṣyapa-Indra-Bali-Āṅgada.

2) Birth. Āṅgada was the son of Bāli (the son of Indra) born of his wife Tārā. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 28).

a) Āṅgada was a member of the group of monkeys sent by Sugrīva to find out Sītā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakāndā).

b) Āṅgada was sent to the court of Rāvana as a messenger by Śri Rāma. (Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāndā).

c) Āṅgada was present among the group of monkeys who entered Madhvana and ate the berries in the garden, on their return after the search for Sītā.

d) Āṅgada was sent to the court of Rāvana as a messenger by Śri Rāma. (Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāndā).

e) Āṅgada was sent to the court of Rāvana as a messenger by Śri Rāma. (Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāndā).

f) After the battle, Śri Rāma anointed Āṅgada as the heir-apparent to the Kingdom of Kiśkindhā. The necklace which Bāli had given on his death to Sugrīva, was returned to Āṅgada. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

g) Śri Rāma returned to Ayodhya after his forest life and celebrated a horse sacrifice. The sacrificial horse was caught and detained by King Suratha. Coming to know of this Śatrughna sent Āṅgada to deal with Suratha, who said that the horse was detained with the intention of meeting with Śri Rāma personally. Āṅgada returned and told Śatrughna what Suratha had said to him. (Padma Purāṇa, Pāṭalā Khaṇḍā).

ANGADA II. There was a prince called Āṅgada among the mighty men-of-arms on the side of the Kauravas. He got into action on the battle-field on the twelfth day of the battle. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 38).

ANGADA III. Śrutakṛtī the wedded wife of Śatrughna, brother of Śri Rāma, had two sons called Āṅgada and Chandraketu. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

ANGADA IV. In the Bhāgavata we see another Āṅgada who was the son of Gada, the brother of Kṛṣṇa by his wife, Bhratī.

ANGAKARMA. Actions on the stage are of two kinds. One is to express by the major organs of the body. The other is to express by the minor organs of the body. Head etc. are major organs and eyebrow etc. are minor organs. Actions expressed by major organs are called Āṅgakarma and those by minor organs are called Pratyāṅga Karma. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 341).

ĀNGĀLAMMA. She is the wife of Virabhadrā, a servant of Śiva. She has a rope in her left hand, with which she hauls up the spirits of the dead.

ANGA (M). The kingdom ruled by King Āṅga. Other details:

1) The Dynasty. The first King of the Áṅga dynasty was Áṅga the son of Bali. Anagābha, Draviratha, Dharmaratha, Romapāda (Lomapāda), Caturānga, Prthulaka, Bhadrathra, Bhānanas, Jayadra, Vijaya, Drīhavrata, Satyakarmā, Atiratha, Karṇa, Vṛṣasena and others were kings of this dynasty. Karṇa was the adopted son of Atiratha. During the period of the Mahābhārata, Kings of the Atiratha family were under the sway of the Čandra vaṃśa (Lunar dynasty) kings such as Dīhtarāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu. (For further informations see the word Atiratha).

2) How Karṇa became the king of Áṅga. A contest in archery and the wielding of other weapons was going on in Hastināpura, the competitors being the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas. The status of Karṇa, who appeared on the side of the Kauravas, was questioned by the Pāṇḍavas on the occasion and Duryodhana, who always stood on his dignity, anointed Karṇa as the King of Áṅga, on the spot. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 136).

3) Drought in the kingdom of Áṅga. Lomapāda (Romapāda) the king of Áṅga once deceived a hermit Brahmin. So all the Brahmīns quitted the country and thereafter there was no rainfall in the country for several years. The sages of the country began to think on the means of bringing about rain. One day they approached the King and told him that the only way to get rain was to bring the great hermit Rṣayaśrīga to the country. Once Kaśyapa happened to see Urvāśī and he had seminal flow. The sperm fell in a river. A deer swallowed it along with the water it drank. It gave birth to a human child with horns on the head. This child was called Rṣayaśrīga. It was brought up by a hermit called Vibhāndaka in his hut. Rṣayaśrīga had never seen women and by virtue of this, there occurred rainfall wherever he went. The King Lomapāda sent some courtesans to the forest to attract Rṣayaśrīga, who following them arrived at the court of Lomapāda the King of Áṅga and the King gave Rṣayaśrīga, as a gift, his daughter Sāntā. Thus the country got rain. This Lomapāda was a friend of Daśaratha. (Mahābhārata, Aranyaka Parva, Chapters 110 to 113).

4) How the Kingdom got the name Áṅga. One opinion is that the Kingdom got its name from the King Āṅga who ruled over it. Another opinion is that the king got his name from the country he ruled. However there is a story revealing how the country came to be called Āṅga.

In the realm of God, preliminary steps were being taken for making Śri Paramēśvara wed Pārvatī. According to the instructions of Devendra, Kāmadeva (the Lord of Love—Cupid) was trying to break the meditation of Śiva and when Śiva opened his third eye, fire emitted from it and Anāṅga (Kāmadeva) was burned to ashes. It was in the country of Áṅga that the ashes of the ‘āṅga’ (Body) of Kāmadeva fell and from that day onwards the country came to be called Áṅga and Kāmadeva, ‘Anāṅga’ (without body). (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 26).

5) Other informations.

(1) It is mentioned in the Hindi Dictionary, ‘Sabda Sāgara’ that the kingdom of Áṅga embracing Bhagatpur and Murigir in Bihar had its capital at Campāpurī and that the country had often stretched from Vaidya-nāthāna to Bhuvaṇeśvar.

(2) Arjuna had visited the Kingdom of Áṅga also during his pilgrimage. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 9).

(3) The King of Áṅga was present at the sacrifice of Rājaśvāya (Royal consecration) celebrated by Dhrma-putra, when the Pāṇḍavas were living at Indraprastha. (M.B., Śabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 16).

(4) On one occasion Śrī Kṛṣṇa defeated the Áṅgas in a battle. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 15).

(5) Parāśurāma had defeated the Áṅgas once. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 12).

(6) In the battle of Kurukṣetra between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas, on the sixteenth day of the battle, the heroes of Áṅga made an onslaught on Arjuna. (M.B., Karṇa Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 12).

(7) The Áṅgas attacked the armen's of Dhrṣṭadyumna and the King of Pāṇcāla. (M.B., Karṇa Parva, Chapter 22, Stanza 2).

(8) A low caste man from Áṅga attacked Bhāma, who killed the man and his elephant. (Mahābhārata, Drona Parva, Chapter 26, Stanzas 14 to 17).

ANGAMALAJA (M) (MALADA—KARūSA).

General Information. (1) This was a country in ancient Bhārata. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 50).

(2) Viśvāmitra had taken to the forest from Ayodhyā Rāma and Lakṣmīna to protect the hermits and their yāgas. On the way they entered the Tātaka forest. Viśvāmitra told the boys in answer to their questions thus: “In olden days this place was a countryside known as Áṅgamalaja or Malada or Karūsa. There is a reason for calling the country by that name. Indra killed Vṛtra and thereby incurred the sin of Brahmatya and so he came away to this country and lived here for a while. The Gods found him out here. They poured water on the head of the unclean Indra and the dirt, hunger, excreta and Karūṣa having been separated from his body fell on the soil of this place and was mingled with it. Indra’s body became pure. Aexcreta, Karūṣa etc. were mingled with the soil of this country, it came to be called Áṅgamalaja, Malada or Karūṣa from that day onwards. One part of the country was called Malada and the other part Karūṣa. Indra, having been purified by washing in water returned to heaven with the gods. After that this country became uninhabited for a long time. The horrible Tātaka lives in this forest now”. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 24).

ANGAPRADAKŚINĀ. Rolling behind a chariot round the temple as a vow.

ANGĀRA. A king of ancient India. He was defeated by Māndhātā in a battle. (Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 29, Stanza 88).

ANGARĀJAVAMŚA. (THE DYNASTY OF ANGĀ KINGS). Descended from Vīṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā—Atri-Candra-Buddha-Pururavas-Ayus-Nahaṣu-Yayāti. Yadu, Turvasu, Dṛṣṭyuvu and Anudruhyu were the four sons of Yayāti. The Áṅga dynasty starts from Turvasu, one of the four. The following are the descendants of Turvasu. Varga was the son of Turvasu, Gobhānu, the son of Varga, Traisāṇi the son of Gobhānu, Karandhama, the son of Traisāṇi, Marutta, the son of Karandhama, Duṣyanta, the son of Marutta, Varūthā, the son of Dúṣyanta, Gāndīra the son of Varūtha, and Gāndāra the son of Gāndīra. The five powerful peoples, the Gāndhāras, the Colas, the Keralas, the Pândyas and the Kolas have descended from Gāndhāra.

Two sons, Druhyu and Babhrusētu were born to Gāndhāra. Babhrusētu begot Purovasu; Purovasu begot Gāndhāri. From Gāndhāri Gharma was born, from Gharma Gārta was born, from Gārta Vidūṣa was born, and from Vidūṣa Pracetas was born. Pracetas got a hundred children of whom the prominent were Anidra, Sābhānara, Čakṣuṣa and Paramesu. To Sābhānara was born Kālānala and Śrījāy to Kālānala, Purāṇījaya to Śrījāy and Janamejaya to Purāṇījaya. Mahāśāla was the son of Janamejaya; Mahāmanas the son of Mahāśāla, and Uśīnara the son of Mahāmanas. To Uśīnara were born Nṛgā, Nara, Kṛmī, Suvrata and Śibi by his wives Nṛgā, Nārā, Kṛmī, Daśā and Drśadvatī respectively. To Śibi were born four sons called Phūdhārtha, Vīraka, Kaikaya and Bhadraka. Four separate kingdoms arose in the names of them. Uśīnara had another son called Titīku. From Titīku was born Rūṣadratha; from Rūṣadratha was born Pāila, from Pāila was born Sutapā and from Sutapā was born the great hermit Bāli. From Bāli, Aṅgī, Vaṅgī, Kālitīga, Panḍūra, Bāleya and Bālayogi were born. To Aṅgī was born Dadvīhāvāna. The King Dravīratha was the son of Dadvīhāvāna, Dharmaratha the son of Dravīratha, Cītraratha the son of Dharmaratī, and Satyaratī the son of Cītrarathī.

To Satyaratī was born Lomāpāda; to Lomāpāda was born Caturāṅgī; to Caturāṅgī was born Prthūlākṣa; to Prthūlākṣa was born Campī; to Campī was born Harāṅgī, to Harāṅgī was born Bhadra-ratha, to Bhadra-ratha was born Bṛhatkārma, to Bṛhatkārma was born Bṛhadbhānū, to Bṛhadbhānū was born Bṛhadādāmī, to Bṛhadādāmī was born Jayadratha, to Jayadratha was born Bṛhadratha and to Bṛhadratha was born Vīśvajīt. After that Karṇa became the King of Aṅgī. The son of Karṇa was Vṛṣasena and the son of Vṛṣasena was Pythusena. These are the kings of the Aṅgī dynasty.

(Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277.)

ANGĀRAKA I. An Asura who took the form of a pig. The story of how this Asura was killed by his daughter Angāravatī, is given below.

Long ago there was an emperor named Mahendra-varmā in Ujjayinī. His son Mahāsena did penance for a long time to get a wife and a sword. At last Devī appeared and granted the boon: "My son! I have given you this extraordinary sword. So long as you have this sword, your enemies will not prevail against you. Angāravatī, the renowned beauty of the three worlds, is the daughter of the Asura. Angāravatī will come one day to participate in a contest of martial skill. If you misuse this sword, her beauty will be destroyed. If you use it properly, she will be called Cāṇḍamahāsena". He was given the sword and a tusk from a Nāgā named Nāḍāgī. On one day Mahāsena went to the forest for hunting. He saw a very large pig. The King used his arrows. But they did little harm to the pig. Moreover it turned the chariot of the King over to one side and ran to a cave. The King followed it with fury. On the way he sat on the bank of a lake with wonder, for a lady of exquisite beauty was walking along the mossy turf in the midst of some maidens. Slowly she approached the King and talked with him. The young lady had entirely captured the heart of the King, who told her everything. She began to weep. "Who are you? Why do you weep?" The King asked her. She replied with a deep sigh, "The pig you saw, is my father Angārakāsura. His body is as hard as diamond and not vulnerable to any sort of weapon. These maidens have been caught by him from various royal houses and brought here for my help. My name is Angāravatī. My father was changed to a giant by a curse. Now he is asleep discarding the form of pig. When he wakes up, filled with hunger and thirst, he will do you harm. My tears flowed out in the form of heated life-breaths, when I thought of these things." The King said, "Go and sit by him and cry when he wakes up. He will ask the reason. Then tell him that you had been crying, when you thought how forlorn you would be without a mate, in case your father was killed by somebody". Angāravatī did as she was told. Hearing her words Angāraka said, "My daughter! No body can kill me. My body is made of diamond. There is only one vulnerable point in my body which is on my left forearm and it is always covered with my bow."

The king hid himself closely and heard everything. He fought with the Asura and hitting at the vulnerable point killed him. The King married Angāravatī and took her to his palace. Two sons were born to him. They were called Gopālaka and Pālaka. By the grace of Indra a daughter also was born to him and she was Vāsavadattī, the wife of the famous Udayana. (Kathāsāritaśāgara, Kathāmukhalambaka, Tarārīga 3.)

ANGĀRAKA II. A prince named Angāraka is seen to have been the descendant of Jayadratha, the King of Sauvīra. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 265, Stanza 10.)

ANGĀRAKA III. A planet named Maṇigala which is a satellite of Brahmā is seen to have been called by the name Angāraka also. (Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter II, Stanza 29.)

ANGĀRAKA IV. We see one Angāraka among the one hundred and eight sons of the Sun. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 10.)

ANGĀRAKA. (SIMHIKA).

1) Genealogy. Descended in the following order from Viṣṇu, Brahmā-Marcī-Kaśyapa-Aṅgārakā.
2) Birth. In the battle between the Gods and the Asuras, most of the Asuras were killed and one Asura fled from the clutches of death to Pātāla (the nether world). Surasā was the daughter of that Asura. Kaśyapa married Surasā. To them were born the two daughters, Angārakā (Simhikā) and Ajāmukhi, and four sons, called Sūrapadma, Sūrāvaktra, Tārakāsura and Gomukha. Thus Simhikā is the sister of Tārakāsura. (Simhikā Purāṇa, Asura Kaṇḍa.)

Other details. This giantess Angārakā had a clash once, with Hanumān. Sugrīva had sent a large number of monkeys under the leadership of Hanumān to search for Sītā. He gave Hanumān certain instructions regarding the route he had to follow. Sugrīva said, "There is a giantess in the middle of that Southern Sea. Her name is Angārā. She pulls the shadow towards her and feeds on the object of the shadow."

From this it is clear that she was a giantess who lived in the sea between Lāṅkā and South India. She knew the art of bringing to her side, anybody who passed over the sea, by pulling at his shadow. When Hanumān jumped to Lāṅkā from the mountain of Mahendra the giantess attacked Hanumān. It is seen that the name Siṁhikā also is used for Aṅgārakā. Hanūmān who was subjected to the excessive attraction of Siṁhikā, felt a great storm raging round him. Finally he found her out, a monster with such an uncouth face and a mouth as wide as the hole of Pātāla (the nether world). There was a terrible fight between Hanūmān and the monster, in which Siṁhikā, fell on the ground beaten. After the fight Hanūmān resumed his journey. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundarakāṇḍa, Sarga 1, Stanza 178 to 186).

ANGĀRA (M). A countryside in ancient India. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 60).

ANGĀRAPARĀṇA. (Citraratha) Scc the word CITRA-RATHA I.

ANGĀRAVATI. (See Aṅgārakā).

ANGAVĀHA. A king of immense fame, belonging to the dynasty of Vṛṣṇi. Aṅgavāha attended, with Balabhadrārama, the sacrifice of Rājasīya (Royal consecration) celebrated by Yudhiṣṭhira. (Mahābhārata, Abā Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 16).

Aṅgāras I.

1) Birth. He is a hermit born from the mind of Brahma. Six mind-born sons (Mānas-Putras) were born to Brahma, known as Mārici, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha, and Kratu. All the six of them became great hermits. (Mahābhārata, Abā Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 10).

2) Important events.

(1) The failure of Aṅgāras. There was a King named Citraketu in the kingdom of Śrāvana. Once Aṅgāra reached his palace when the King was in a miserable state as he was childless. The King informed Aṅgāras of his sorrow. He pacified the King and said that a son would be born to him. He and his wife Kṛta died were filled with joy. The other wives of the King did not like this. They feared that when a son was born to Kṛta the King might overlook them. To the King a son was born of Kṛta and the other wives poisoned the child and killed him. While the parents were weeping over the dead child Aṅgāras and Nārada arrived there and wiped their tears. Aṅgāras agreed to bring the child back to life. He instantly called the spirit of the dead child to him and asked it to become the son of Citraketu. The spirit replied that it had a large number of parents in several previous births and that it was not possible for it to become the son of Citraketu, and then it vanished. Aṅgāras and Nārada went on their way. Citraketu became a devotee of Viṣṇu and by the curse of Pārvatī, was born again as Vṛtrāśura. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6, Chapter 14).

(2) How Aṅgāras cursed Sudārṣana and transmuted him to a serpent. While Sudārṣana, a vidyādha (a class of semigods) was travelling lustfully with a group of beautiful girls he came across Āṅgiras and some other hermits. He teased Aṅgāras calling him ‘durbhāga’ (unlucky) and Aṅgāras cursed him and changed him to a big serpent and he was promised liberation from the curse, when, during the dvāpāra yuga (one of the four ages) Mahāviśu would incarnate as Śrī Kṛṣṇa and would tread upon him and then he would regain his former form. From that day onwards Sudārṣana lived on the banks of the river Kālindī in the form of a serpent. It was the time when Śrī Kṛṣṇa was having his game of love with the Gopa women. On one night one serpent bit Nanda the foster father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The cowherds or gopas hit at the snake with burned wood. But it was of no use. Śrī Kṛṣṇa came there and threshed the serpent, which instantly took the form of Sudārṣana Vidyādha and praising Śrī Kṛṣṇa entered heaven. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, Chapter 34).

(3) Aṅgāras a Prajāpati. Brahmā had created sixteen prajāpatis, for effecting the creation of the universe. Aṅgāras is one of them. Their names are given below:

1) Kardama 9) Pulastya
2) Viśvāra 10) Āṅgiras
3) Seṣa 11) Pracetas
4) Saṅśrāya 12) Pulaha
5) Śiṣṭānu 13) Daśa
6) Mārići 14) Vivasvān
7) Atri 15) Arīṣṭanemi
8) Kratu 16) Kaśyapa

(Vālmīkī Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakāṇḍa, Sarga 14).

(4) The wives and children of Aṅgāras. Aṅgāras had several wives such as Subhā, Smṛti, Sṛadā, Devasenā and Vasudhā. The names of the sons of Aṅgāras are given below:

1) Brāhatkīrti 5) Brāhadmantra
2) Brāhatjyoti 6) Brāhadbhāsa
3) Brāhadbrāhma 7) Brāhpati
4) Brāhadmanā

The names of the eight daughters of Aṅgāras are given below:

1) Bhānumati 5) Hāvīṃmati
2) Rāgā 6) Māhīṃmati
3) Sīnuvāli 7) Mahāmati
4) Arcīṃmati 8) Kuhū.

Besides these sons and daughters, other sons such as Sudhanvā and Kārttikeya were born to Aṅgāras by his other wives. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, five chapters from 218).

(5) The clash between Aṅgāras and Prahlāda. Duṣṣāsana stripped Pāṇcālī of her clothes in the Palace hall, in the presence of the Pāṇḍavas who had been defeated in the game of dice. Before this Pāṇcālī had asked Duryodhana one question, “Have you won yourself or myself?” One husband was not authorised to stake his wife Pāṇcālī who was the wife of five husbands. Moreover according to the Śāstras (sciences) the deeds executed by a King, who was miserable due to hunting, drinking, playing dice and hankering after a woman, were not legally binding. Hence how could the Kauravas own Pāṇcālī?” Vidura said that the witnesses in the hall had to give an impartial answer to this question, and that the punishment of falsehood would come upon the doer himself. As an instance he gave the following old story: Virocana was the son of Prahlāda; Sudhanvā the son of Aṅgāras and Virocana fell in love with the same woman once. There arose a contention between these two as to who was greater. They staked their lives on the issue. Then both of them together approached Prahlāda and requested him to give a decision as to which of them was the elder. Thinking that Prahlāda might side with Virocana his son, Sudhanvā said to him, “Sir,

*There is another story about the birth of Aṅgāras. At a sacrifice celebrated by Rudra, seminal flow occurred to Brahmā who happened to see some celestial maids and was overpowered by passionate feelings. Brahmā put the sperm in the fire. From that fire appeared Aṅgāras along with Mārici, Bhṛgu and others. This deva (the shining one—the God) was called Aṅgāras because his origin was from Aṅgāra or Gīndru.
you should not utter words of falsehood, nor should you abstain from speaking the truth. If you do so your head will be cut into a hundred pieces by Indra with his Vajrâyudha (the weapon of thunderbolt)." Hesitating to take a decision, because of the words of Sudhanvā, Prahładā went to Kaśyapa to clear his doubts, and asked: "Lord, do you know which are the future worlds destined for those who utter words of falsehood or abstain from giving out the truth?" Kaśyapa said, "On him, who abstains from speaking truth knowingly a thousand cords of death will fall. He who tells falsehood will have to perform many a deed of duty to attain heaven."

Having heard the words of Kaśyapa, Prahładā said to Virocana, "Virocana, Sudhanvā is greater than you. Āngiras is greater than me. Likewise the mother of Sudhanvā is nobler than your mother. So according to your bet you owe your life to Sudhanvā." Pleased at the righteousness of Prahładā, Sudhanvā gave Virocana a boon to live a hundred years more. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 63).

6) How Āngiras became the first son of Agni (Fire God). Once Āngiras was blazing out as a furious being. All the worlds were illuminated by that flame-fire. As Āngiras was performing the functions of Agni (fire), peoples of the worlds discarmed Agni, who being sad at the derision shown towards him by the worlds went to a forest and hid himself there. The living beings were in trouble owing to lack of fire. When he became aware of this Āngiras went to the forest and pacified Agni. From that day onwards Āngiras agreed to become the first son of Agni, who resumed his duties as usual. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 217).

7) How Āngiras got the name Atharvāṅgas. After the slaughter of Vyṛtrasūra, Indra went to the lake known as Amṛtasaras and hid himself there in a lotus flower. At this time the Gods anointed Nala as Indra. Agastya cursed him and turned him to a serpent and sent him to the earth. When Indra returned to heaven many persons gathered there to greet him. Āngiras also was one among them who did obeisance to Indra. He paid his homage by reciting the hymns of Atharvaveda. Indra who was greatly pleased at this, said to Āngiras, "Hereafter you shall be known as Atharvāṅgas" Āngiras who got this boon from Indra, returned with gratitude. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 5 to 7).

8) Āngiras and Drona. In the battle of Kurukṣetra, between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas the great teacher, Drona began to release his divine darts towards his enemies in all directions. Immediately Āngiras with many other hermits came to Drona and told him, "You have burned to death innumerable men with your Brahmāstra (The most powerful of all missiles). Your end is very near. So put your weapons down and stop your fight." Drona seems to have paid no heed at all to the advice of the hermits. He did not stop fighting too.

9) The sermon of Āngiras on the merits of Tirthas or holy places (Baths). Dharmaputra once asked Bhūṣma about the importance of holy ghāṛs or tirthas (Baths). Bhūṣma told Dharmaputra, what Āngiras had once told Gautama about the merits obtained by going on pilgrimage to holy tirthas or Baths. Āngiras had described the holy nature and character of holy Baths in Bhārata such as Puṣkara, Prahlāsa, Naimiśa, Sāgarodaka, Indramārga, Devika, Svarṇabindu, Hiranyabindu, Indratoya, and such other numerous tirthas. (Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 7-71).

3) Other details:

1) Dakṣa gave his two daughters in marriage to Āngiras. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

2) Āngiras once saved the Sun. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 92, Stanza 6).

3) While the Pāṇḍavas were in exile in forest, Āngiras had been chanting and meditating in Alakanandā in the region of the mount Gandhamādāna. (Mahābhārata, Aranya Parva, Chapter 142, Stanza 6).

4) When the hermits had stolen the lotus flowers of Agastya, Āngiras gave some hints about the culprits. (Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 20: See Agastya).

5) Āngiras once gave a discourse on fasting and the merits of fasting. (Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 106, Stanzas 11 to 16).

6) Āngiras on another occasion delivered lectures on the secrets of duties. (Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 8).

7) Once Āngiras drank the water in the ocean to the last drop. (Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 153, Stanza 3).

8) When his thirst was not quenched, even though he had drunk the entire water available in the world, he created new springs of water again and drank them dry. (Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 153, Stanza 3).

9) Once Agni failed to show respect to Āngiras, who cursed Agni and thenceforward smoke came out from fire. (Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 153, Stanza 8).

10) Āngiras conducted many of the important sacrifices of King Avikṣit. (Mahābhārata, Aśvamedhika Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 22).

11) Indra once gave Āngiras a boon. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 5 to 7).

12) Āngiras blessed Dhrūva who had been doing penance. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṇīṣa 1, Chapter 11).

13) The daughters named Sinīvālī, Kuṇā, Rākā, Anumati were born to Āngiras by his wife Śrīmātī. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

14) Āngiras is the first of the Agni, devas (Fire-Gods) and a hermit. He had a son called Hiraṇya-Stūpā, who also was a hermit. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 7, Sūkta 31).

15) The Hermit Āngiras began to invoke the Gods to get a son equal to Indra. Then Indra, thinking that nobody should be born as his equal, took birth as the son of Āngiras. He was called Savyā. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 10, Sūkta 51).

16) Indra sent Saramā, the bitch of the Gods, to find out the place where the cows had been hidden; Indra acted according to the advice of Āngiras. At first the bitch did not consent to go. But when Devendra promised to feed her young one with milk she agreed. Saramā found out the place where the cows were hidden and informed Indra of it. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 11, Sūkta 62).

17) Rāhūs are the sons of Sudhanvā. (Son of Āngiras). The hermit Kutsa also is descended from Āngiras. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 10).
(18) Angiras was the son of Brähmā in the Śvāyambhuva Manvantara (See Manvantara), but in the Vaivāsva Manvantara he was born from Agni.
(19) Once Vāyu (the Wind-God) had to run away from Angiras and hide himself as he had caused some displeasure to Angiras. On another occasion Angiras taught philosophy and sacred doctrines to the hermit Saunaka. (Mundakopanishad).

ANGIRAS II. In the family of Marīe, son of Brähmā, another King of the name of Angiras is seen.

Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brähmā, Marīe, Kaśyapa, Vaivāsva Manu, Utānapādā, Dhruva, Śiśi, Rjura, Cāīsura Manu, Ěru, Angiras. (About this Angiras, no other information is available in the Purāṇas. Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Arīṣa 1, Chapter 13; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

ANIGIROBHAVA. A hermit named Kāksīvāṇ. (Ṛg veda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 17, Śukta 120).

ANKAVIDĀRAṆA. A brother of Jāyadratha, a King of the kingdom of Śindhu. Arjuna killed him. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 265, Verse 12).

ANKIET. A Yakṣa, one of the attendants of Kubera. (M.B., Saḥbhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 18). He was a king of the Aīga dynasty. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

ANKIKAVIDARĀVILI. A division of the army. (See under AKṢAU-HINI).

ANILA I. One of the Aṣṭa (8) Vasus. His father was Dharma and mother Śvāsii. Anila married Śivā and had two sons, Manojaya and Avijñātī. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verses 17-25).

ANILA II. Garuda had a son called Anila. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 9).

ANILA III. A word used as a synonym of Śiva. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 100).

ANILA IV. A word used as a synonym of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 38).

ANILA V. A Kāṣṭriya King. His father, Vṛṣadārbhī presented him as Dākṣiṇā to the Saptarṣis (7 sages) at a ṣaṇa performed by him (father). The King expired soon after this. There was then a famine in the country. The Saptarṣis, tortured by hunger and thirst, got ready to prepare food with the corpse of the King. But the corpse retained its form and they could not cook food with it. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 96).

ANILA. A famous serpent. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 7).

ANIMĀṆĀDAVAYA.

1) General. How he got the name Aṇimāṇāda. Once there was a famous Brāhmaṇ named Māṇḍavya. He did Tapas (penance) for many years standing silent in front of his Āśrama, under a tree, raising his hands in prayer. At that time some thieves happened to pass by that place, with stolen property belonging to the King. Finding that the King’s men were pursuing them, the thieves fled away after leaving their stolen property in Māṇḍavya’s Āśrama. The King’s men seized Māṇḍavya with the king’s property. Even prolonged and repeated questionings did not bring out a single word from Māṇḍavya. At last the thieves were caught. Mistaking him as one of the thieves, the King’s men produced Māṇḍavya also along with the thieves before the King. The thieves were all condemned to death. The royal executioners took all of them to the place of execution and stuck them up at the tip of a trident (Śūla). The thieves died, but even after a long time Māṇḍavya did not die. In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Verses 46-51, it is said that at this stage Śiva appeared and blessed him with longevity and then vanished. Several Munis in the shape of birds came near Māṇḍavya who was lying on the trident and made enquiries about him. The King came to know of all these stories. Full of repentance, he went and begged pardon of Māṇḍavya. The attempt to pull out the trident from Māṇḍavya’s body failed. At last it was removed by cutting it off. Since the tip (Aṇi) of the trident was left behind in his body he was afterwards known as “Aṇi Māṇḍavya”. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 107).

2) Curse on Dharma. After going about in the world for many years with the tip of the trident in his body, Aṇi Māṇḍavya once asked Dharma: “Oh! Lord, why is it that an innocent man like me is afflicted with the trident?”. Dharma answered: “In your boyhood you once caught small birds and pierced them with a grass reed. It is a result of that sin that you have been pierced with the trident.” Māṇḍavya replied: “The Śāstras ordain that there shall be no punishment for sins committed till the age of twelve. Therefore the punishment inflicted on me is wrong. As the murder of a Brāhmaṇ is a greater sin than any other murder, may you be born as a man in the ‘Śūdra Caste’”. By the above curse of Māṇḍavya, Dharma was born a son of a Śūdra woman. It was this child who later on became the renowned Vidura of the Mahābhārata. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 107).

3) The story of how the Sun did not rise. When Aṇi Māṇḍavya lay on the tip of the trident another event happened. Atri Muni’s son Ugrāravas was the husband of Śilavati. No other woman had so far surpassed Śilavati in her fidelity to her husband. Once Ugrāravas happened to fall ill. He expressed his desire to visit a prostitute’s house. As he was too weak he could not walk. The devoted wife Śilavati carried him on her own shoulders and took him to the prostitute’s house. They were passing near the place where Aṇi Māṇḍavya was lying on the trident. Coming to know of the matter, Māṇḍavya pronounced a curse that Ugrāravas should die before sunrise. Śilavati shuddered on hearing this. Fearing that she would be widowed by the death of Ugrāravas, she, in her turn, pronounced a curse that the Sun should not rise again.

Next day the sun did not rise. All activities came to a standstill. At last the gods approached Atri Muni. They in-duced Anassīyā, Atri’s wife to persuade Śilavati to withdraw her curse. Then the sun rose again and Ugrāravas died. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 42).

4) Other details. When the Pāṇḍavas were living in Hastināpura, Śrī Krṣṇa once paid a visit to them. On his way he met with certain munis. Among them was Aṇi Māṇḍavya also. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83).

5) Once the King of Videha told Māṇḍavya that the world is transient and advised him to strive for spiritual peace. Aṇi Māṇḍavya who was pleased with the King’s advice attained mokṣa (salvation) at once. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 276, Verses 3-14).

ANIMISA. Verse 10, Chapter 101 of Udyoga Parva refers to one Aniṣiṇa, son of Garuḍa. Also the word is used as a synonym of Śiva. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 14) and of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 36).
ANIRUDDHA. Grandson of Śri Kṛṣṇa.

1) Genealogy. From Viśu was born in this order: Brahma, Atri, Candram, Budha, Purūravas, Ayus, Nahuṣa, Yayati, Yadu, Sahasrajit, Satarajit, Helaya, Dharma, Kunti, Bhadrakam, Kṛṣṇavat, Kārtavīrya-ājuna, Jayadvaja, Tālājaṅgha, Vīhitotra, Anantā, Durjaya, Yudhajit, Śiṁa, Satyakā, Sātyaki, Jaya, Kuni, Anamitra, Prśni, Citraratha, Vīdūrātha, Śīra, Śiṁa, Bhūja, Hṛḍika, Śūrasena, Vasudevā, Śri Kṛṣṇa, Pradymuna, Aniruddha.

2) Birth. Śri Kṛṣṇa had 16008 wives. Out of the 16008 from Rukminī was born Pradymuna and from Pradymuna, Aniruddha.

3) Kidnapped by Usā. One of the stories about this handsome prince refers to his being kidnapped by Usā daughter of Bāṇāsura. Bāṇāsura, chief among the 100 sons of emperor Mahābali had 1000 hands. Śiva pleased by the sacrificial devotion of Bāṇāsura granted, as requested by him, the boon that he himself (Śiva) and Pārvatī would guard the fort of the Asura, of course with some reluctance. Now, none had the prowess to attack this valiant Asura. Overflowing with conceit at this he challenged Śiva to a fight. Śiva foretold that the flagstaff of Bāṇa would one day be broken and then a powerful antagonist would defeat him. Bāṇa impatiently awaited the threatened day.

One day Usā happened to witness the scene of Śiva and Pārvatī engaged in love-making. Excited by the sight Usā too desired to enact such a scene with a lover, and she intimated her desire to Pārvatī. Pārvatī told her that Usā would, within three days, see in a dream a handsome prince with whom she might make love. Accordingly, dressed herself in all glory with choicest ornaments Usā awaited the happy day. On the third day a handsome prince appeared before her in her dream. Waking up, she began crying. Seeing Usā crying Citralekha, her companion, and daughter of her father’s minister, assured her (Usā) that whoever might be the prince who appeared in her dream shall be brought down with the power of Mantra. Citralekha drew the pictures of all princes known to her and showed them to Usā. The pictures represented all handsome men from Devas to men. “No, this is not my prince charming” was Usā’s reply. Then Citralekha drew the picture of Śri Kṛṣṇa of Pradymuna, and then of Aniruddha. When Usā saw Aniruddha’s picture she stretched her hands to embrace that. It was this prince who had appeared before her in the dream.

Next night Citralekha, by the power of her Mantra, brought into Usā’s room from Dvārakā Aniruddha, who was then in his sleep. While Usā and Aniruddha were thus together in the room her father, Bāṇa, got scent of it and took Aniruddha into custody.

The disappearance of Aniruddha led to much commotion in Dvārakā. Then Nārada reached Dvārakā and gave details about the Aniruddha incident. Śri Kṛṣṇa and Pradymuna, in all rage, hurried to Bāṇa’s palace and encircled his palace with a strong army. Then did Bāṇa’s flagstaff break into two and fell down. The fierce fight that ensued ended in the defeat of Bāṇa. Aniruddha married Usā and the elated couple started for Dvārakā. Vajra was the son of Aniruddha. (Bhāgavata, Daśamā Skandha, Chapters 61, 62 and 63).

4) More information. (1) It was at the feet of Arjuna that Aniruddha mastered the Dhanurveda (Science of warfare). (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 38).

(2) Aniruddha is also conceived in the forms of Viśu and Brahmā. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 65, Verses 69 and 70).

(3) Brahmā was born from the abdominal centre of Aniruddha when the latter had taken the form of Viśu. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 341, Verses 15-17).

(4) The word Aniruddha is also used as a synonym of Viśu. (M.B., Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 33).

ANIRUDDHA II. The Mahābhārata refers to another Aniruddha who belonged to the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. Both the Aniruddhas were present at the wedding of Pāncālī. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verses 17-20).

ANIRUDDHA III. The Mahābhārata mentions yet another King Aniruddha. He did not eat flesh. (M.B., Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 15).

ANJALIKAŚrama. This is a sacred place. One who lives at this Tīrtha for some time, gets the benefit of visiting the sacred tīrtha at Kanḍyakūmāri ten times. (M.B., Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 52).

ANJALIKAVEDHA. This is an art by which an elephant could be made to stand submissively. Bhūmasena had mastered this art. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 23).

ANJANA. 1) Mother of Hanumān—Wife of Kesari, the noble monkey and daughter of Kuhjāra, the monkey leader. She was the mother of Hanumān. Once while Śiva and Pārvatī were gambling in the guise of monkeys, rambling through the woods, Pārvatī became pregnant. That pregnancy was given to Vāyu. At that time Anjana was doing penance for an issue. Vāyu transferred the pregnancy he had received from Pārvatī to Anjana. Thus Anjana gave birth to Hanumān. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kanda, Sarga 66).

Anjana gave birth to Hanumān in the woods in a valley on the southern side of Mahāmūr. She was frightened at the sight of the child shining like the sun. Hanumān began to cry for mother’s milk. Anjana said to Hanumān: “Monkeys are fond of red ripe fruits. Therefore eat whatever you find in red colour.” Saying this Anjana transformed herself into a goddess and went to Heaven.

2) Pārvannāna (Previous Birth). In her previous birth Anjana was a goddess named Puṣjikastalā (Mānagarva). As a result of a curse, this goddess was born as a she-monkey in the Himālaya region. With the birth of Hanumān, the curse was lifted. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa). For more details see “Puṣjikastalā”.

ANJANA. This is an elephant belonging to the Asuras. His origin is in the family of Suprāṭika. The other three elephants born in this family are: Airāvata, Vāmana and Kumuda. (This Airāvata was not the Airāvata of Devendra). There are references to Rākṣasas coming to the battle-field on the back of elephants. There is another mention of Anjana the elephant standing in the battle-field. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 99, Verse 15; Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 57; Drona Parva, Chapter 112, Verse 32).

ANJANA (M). This is the name of a mountain. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 98, Verse 15).

ANJANA PARVAN. He was the son of Gajotakṣa and grandson of Bhūmasena. For genealogy, see BHĪMASENA. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 194, Verse 20).
Antrika, the son of Droṇa, killed Aṭṭanaparvā. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 196, Verse 89).

Anṛtya. Son born to Hīrṇā by Adhara. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

Anṛtām (Asatya). Hīrṇā, the wife of Adhara, gave birth to daughters, Anṛtya and Nikṛti, and from them were born Bhāya, Naraka, Māyā, Vedaṇā, and Māyā. The seven killed the killer of all living beings. From Vedaṇā was born sorrow. And from Mṛtyu were born disease (vāyādhi), ḽaṛ (wrinkles), Soka (grief), Trṣa (desire) and Krodha (anger). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

Antācāra (M). A place in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 68).

Antaka I. Once the Devas, under the auspices of emperor Prthu, turned goddess earth into a cow and milked her. The result was twelve yamas, and Antaka was one of the twelve. (See Prthu. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69, Verse 26)).

Antaka II. The Rgveda makes mention of one Rājārṣi, Antaka. (Rgveda, Mapāḍala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 112).

Antapāla. (See Kettumān V).

Antardhāmā. Son of King Atri of the Manu dynasty. He had a son called Haviradhāmā. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 23). And for genealogy see Manuvāma.

Antardhāna. A King, the son of Prthu. (For genealogy see Prthu). (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 11).

Antardhāna (M). A weapon of Kubera. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 38).

Antargiri. A place in between the Himalaya ranges. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 49). Arjuna conquered this place. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 3).

Antarikṣa I. One of the seven sons of Murāsura, the other six being Tāmra, Śravaṇa, Vasu, Vībhāṣavu, Nabhasvān and Aruṇa. After the death of their father they quarreled with Śrī Kaṣṭapa and were killed by him. (Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha, Chapter 59, Verse 19).

Antarikṣa II. A Rājā named Antarikṣa is mentioned in the Bhāgavata.

Genealogy. Viṣṇu, Brahmā, Śvāyambhuva, Priyavrata, Agnīdhra, Nābhi, Ṛṣabh, Antarikṣa. Śvāyambhuva Manu had two sons, Uttanāpāda and Priyavrata. Dhruva was the son of Uttanāpāda. Priyavrata married Bārīḥmati, and they had eleven children including Agnīdhra. Agnīdhra married Pūrvacittī, a Deva woman, and they became parents to nine sons, viz. Nābhi, Kimpuruṣa, Hari, Ilāvṛti, Ramyaka, Hiraṇmaya, Kuru, Bhadrāśva and Ketumāla. Nābhi wedded Merudevi, and to them were born 100 sons. The eldest son was Bhārata, after whom this country (India) is named, i.e., Bhārata. Bhārata had 9 younger brothers, namely Kuśāvarta, Ilāvṛti, Brahmāvarta, Malayā, Ketu, Bhadrāśva, Indradeva, Varidhā and Kikāta. These brothers had nine younger brothers who were all highly evolved yogis. They were Kavi, Hari, Antarikṣa, Prabuddha, Pippalāyana, Avirhotra, Droniḍa, Cama and Karahājana. (Bhāgavata, Pañcama Skandha, Chapters 1-4).

Rāmānuja's Bhāgavata (Malayalam) mentions one Āryāvarta also as Bhārata's younger brother. But the name does not occur in the original. (See Bhāgavata, Chapter 4, Verse 10).

Antarvāsa. A place in ancient India. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 17).

Anus (Sec Anudruhyu).

Aṇu. The Prince named Aṇu was the son-in-law of Suka Brahmarṣi, son of Vyāsā. Suka Brahmarṣi married the beautiful Pīvārī, the daughter of the Pītas. Suka-deva and Pīvārī had four sons: Kṛṣṇa, Gauraprabha, Bṛhari and Devaśruta and a daughter named Kīrti. Kīrti was married to Prince Aṇu the son of Diṣṭhrājra. (Devī Bhāgavata, Prathama Skandha).

Anuca kra. One of the two attendants deputed by Tvaṣṭā (a Prajāpati) to help Skanda in war, the other being Cakra. (M.B., Sāya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 40).

Anudattā (M). The fire (Agni) called Pācajanaya created the elements named Anudattas. Pācajanaya generated these elements from his two hands with the help of his spiritual strength (tapāśakti). (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 10).

Anudara. One of the hundred sons of Diṣṭrājra. (See Kaurava).

Anudruhyu. Son of Yayāti.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Brahmā, Atri, Candra, Budha, Purūravas, Āyu, Nahuṣa, Yayāti, Anudruhyu.

2) Birth. Yayāti had two sons, Yadu and Turvasu, by Devayāni, and three sons, Druhyu, Anudruhyu and Pūru by Sarmiṣṭṭha. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 23).

Anudvītaparva. An inner parva of Sabhā Parva. In this parva is told the story of the game of dice played between Durvodhana and DharmaPutra.

Aṇuha. A King in ancient India. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 232).

Anuhāla. Brother of Prahlāda.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Viṣṇu, Brahmā, Kaśyapa Hiraṇyakaśipu, Anuhāla.

2) Birth. Kaśyapa married Dīti, daughter of Daśkā. Dīti was a younger sister of Aditi. The sons of Aditi became devas and the sons of Dīti became asuras. Dīti gave birth to two sons named Hiraṇyakaśipu and Hiraṇya-kaśipu and a daughter Śimhikā. Śimhikā was given in marriage to Vippacetī. They had two sons, Rāhu and Ketu. Five sons were born to Hiraṇyakaśu and four sons were born to Hiraṇyakaśipu. These four sons were: Anuhāla, Hādā, Prahlāda and Sarhāla. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Atri 1, Chapter 15 and Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

Anukramaniṇīka parva. The Mahābhārata is divided into 18 parvans. The first of them is called Ādi Parva and the first of its many sub-divisions is named Anukramanikā Parva. And, in this parva (Chapter Ugraśravas (Sūtunādananda) son of Lochmāraṇa begins telling the Bhārata story at the yajña (of 12 years' duration) held by Kulapati Saunaka at the forest of Naimiśa. Vyāsā composing the Mahābhārata, the creation of the world, the greatness of the Mahābhārata, Vyāsā teaching his disciples the Mahābhārata—all this comes in this narration. (See Mahābhārata).

ANUMATI. Daughter of Angiras, son of Brahmā. Angiras had two wives, Smṛti and Khyāti, and four daughters, Anumati, Rākṣa, Kuhū and Sinivāā by Smṛti, and three sons, Ucathya, Brhaspati, Sanhvarta by Khyāti. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 10).

ANUMOLA. An aparāsa. (Harivāna 326).

ANUPAKA. A warrior from Anūp(m).

ANUPA (M). A famous place in ancient India. Some scholars hold the view that Anūp is near river Narmadā. (Saṇhā Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 24).

ANUPATI. A synonym of Kārttavirya. (Vana Parva, Chapter 116, Verse 19).

ANUPĀVARTTA. A place in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 48).

ANUSĀSANA PARVĀ. One of the Parvans of the Mahābhārata. (See Bhārata).

ANUSŪNA. A river in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 24).

ANŪŚRUTASAṆRASAVAS. Son of Somāli (Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

ANUŚṬUP. One of the seven horses of the Sun God, the other six being, Gāyatrī, Brhati, Uṣnik, Jagati, Trīṣṭup and Paṇikt. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part II, Chapter 8).

ANUVINDA I. One of the 100 sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. There is a story in the Mahābhārata about his being imprisoned along with Duryodhana. Knowing that the Pāṇḍavas were living in the forest in all comfort and happiness Duryodhana and others went in procession to them. Anuvinda also was in the procession. While Duryodhana and party were staying in a tent in the forest, a Gandharva named Citrasena appeared on the scene and imprisoned them. Anuvinda too was imprisoned. (See Citrasena). (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 242, Verse 8). He was killed in war by Bhīmasena. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 66).

ANUVINDA II. The purāṇas refer to one Anuvinda, a prince of Avanti. (1) He had a brother called Vinda. (2) He was defeated by Sahadeva who set forth to subjugate the kings of the south just before the Rājaśya yajña of Dharmaputra. (M.B., Saṇhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 10). (3) An Aṣṭauḥnī (division of army) was despatched by Anuvinda to help Duryodhana. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verses 24, 25). (4) On the first day of the war Vinda and Anuvinda fought duels with Kuntibhoja. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verses 72-73). (5) Irvān, son of Arjuna defeated both Vinda and Anuvinda in the battle. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 83, Verse, 18-22). (6) They fought with Bhīma, Arjuna and the king of Vīraṭa. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 23, Verses 20). (7) Anuvinda was killed by Arjuna. (M.B., Drona parva, Chapter 399, Verses 27-29). (8) Vinda and Anuvinda had a sister called Mitravindā. The three of them were the children of Rājādēvi, sister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa's father. Śrī Kṛṣṇa married Mitravindā, which her brother did not like. This was their reason for quitting the Pāṇḍava camp and fighting on the side of the Kauravas. (Bāgavata, Daśama Skanda, Chapter 58, Verses 30, 31).

ANUVINDA III. The Mahābhārata refers to another prince Anuvinda also. He was the son of a Kekaya-rāja. He also fought against the Pāṇḍavas and was killed by Śātyaki. (M.B., Kaṇḍa Parva, Chapter 13, Verse 21).

ANUVINDA. A wife of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Padma Purāṇa).

ANUYAYI. One of the 100 sons of Dītrārāṣṭra. He is called Agrayāyī also; he was killed in battle by Bhīmasena. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 102; Chapter 116, Verse 11 and Drona Parva, Chapter 157, Verses 17-20).

ANVAGBHĀNU. A King of the Pūru dynasty. (For genealogy see Pūru dynasty). Pūru had three sons, Īśvara, Raudrāśva and Pravīra. He had also another son Manasyu by Śūrāseni, another wife. Anvagbhānu is the son born to Manasyu and his aparāsa wife, Mitarkēśi. Anvagbhānu is known as Rēcyu and Anādhṛṣṭi also. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 8-12).

APĀLĀ. A daughter of the great sage, Atri. Suffering from leprosy and hence forsaken by her husband Apālā stayed with her father and started taps to please Indra. One day, on her way home from the river, Apālā tasted the Soma which was meant to be offered to Indra and hearing the sound produced then Devendra appeared before Apālā. She gave the Soma to Indra, who was so pleased with her that he cured her of her leprosy. (Ṛgveda, 8-91).

APĀṬARATAMAS. 1) General. A Mahārṣi (Great Sage). He was born out of the sound 'bhu' uttered by Mahāviṣṇu. The sage is also known as Śārvasvata and Apāṭaratasamas. Because he was absolutely free from inner darkness or ignorance he was called Apāṭaratasamas. The sage, who was cognizant of the past, the present and the future divided and systematized the Vedas as ordered by Viṣṇu.

2) Vyāsā was Apāṭaratasamas reborn. Mahāviṣṇu ordained that in the Dvāpara age he be born as the son of Parāśara and once again divide and systematize the Vedas, and so was he born as Vyāsā. (Śrī Śaṅkara’s Mundakopanisad and Brahmasūtra Bhāṣya).

APĀṬARATAMAS. (Śārvasvata). This is another name of Apāṭaratasamas. (See Apāṭaratasamas).

APARABRAHMĀ. (See Parabrahma).

APARĀJITĀ. One of the serpents born to Kaśyapa of Kadru. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 13).

APARĀJITĀ. A King born out of a part of one of the eight Asuras, who were known the Kālakeyas. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 49). The Pāṇḍavas had invited this King before they went to war. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 21).

APARĀJITĀ IV. A King of the Kuruvanās. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 54).

APARĀJITĀ V. One of the seven Rudras, the other ten being Hara, Bahurūpa, Tryambaka, Vṛṣakīpi, Śambhu, Kapārdī, Raivata, Mrgavāyādha, Sarpa and Kapāli. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

APARĀJITĀ VI. Used as a synonym of Mahāviṣṇu. (M.B., Anvāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 89).

APARAKASI. A place in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 42).
APARAKUNTI. A place in ancient India. (M.B., Bhūṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 43).

APARAMLECCHA(M). A place in ancient India. (M.B., Bhūṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 65).

APARĀNANTA I. A city on the west coast of ancient South India. (M.B., Bhūṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 67).

APARĀNANTA II. Another name of the Śūrpārakā temple. (M.B., Śanti Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 67).

APARASEKA(M). A place in ancient India. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 9).

APARAVALLA(M). A place in ancient India. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 62).

APARĀVIDYĀ. Knowledge is of two categories or types. Viz.

1) Parivādyā. That science or knowledge, which helps us to know or realise Him (Brahma) who is without either beginning or end, who could neither be seen with the eyes nor perceived by any of the senses.

2) Aparivādyā. This includes knowledge of the four Vedas, Rg, Yajus, Sāma and Atharva, the six Vedāṅgas (sub-divisions of the Vedas) Śiksā, Kalpa, Nirukta, Chandas, Vyākaraṇa, Apidhāna, Mimāṃsā, Dharmāśāstra and the purūṇas, as also, Nyāya Śāstra (Logic), Vaiḍyā Śāstra (medicine) Gandharva Śāstra, Dhanurveda and Artha Śāstra (economics).

APODADHAUMYA. (See Ayodhādhaumya).

APAYADIKSITA. A reputed Rhetorician in Sanskrit, who thrived in the 16th Century A.D. He wrote two treatises on rhetoric, the Kuvalayānanda and Citramāniśā. The former is an interpretation of chapter 5 of Jayadeva's Candrālokā and is very popular in South India.

APRAČI. A hell. (See Naraka). (Viśṇu Purāṇa, Part 2, Chapter 6).

APRAṬĪṢṬHA(M). A hell. (See Naraka).

APASARAS.* An Apsaras is a nymph (devastri). These apsarā women were born at the churning of the ocean of Milk. (Valmiki Rāmāyana, Bālakāṇḍa, Chapter 45, Verse 32 and Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 9 and Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 3). There are thousands of Apsaras. (Details given against the names of Apsaras).

APŚUHOMYA. A great sage (Maharsi) who adorned the assembly of Yudhīśṭhira. (M.B., Sahbhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 12).

ARĀ (ARAṆAS). Daughter of Śukra maharṣi. Iksvāku begot three sons, Danda, Vikuṣi and Nimi. After his father’s death Danda became king of the country between the Vindhya and the Himālayas. In the course of a hunting expedition once Danda saw and was immediately attracted by the charms of Arā, daughter of Śukra maharṣi. He committed rape on her and she told her father about the attack by Danda. The Maharṣi asked his daughter to do tapas, and further told her that he would burn Daṇḍa’s kingdom by a rain of fire. Arā did tapas, and at the behest of the Maharṣi Indra destroyed Daṇḍa’s kingdom by a downpour of a rain of fire. Afterwards this place became a terrible forest where neither birds nor animals lived, and came to be known as Daṇḍakāranya. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

ARAKKILLAM. (Palace of wax). Both the Kaurava and the Pāṇḍava princes lived in Hastināpura. The Pāṇḍavas became experts in archery, and their exemplary character and conduct made them, so to say, the apple of the eyes of the people. This evoked great jealousy in Duryodhana who made up his mind to completely ruin the Pāṇḍavas somehow or other. Duryodhana, with Dhrṣṭarāṣṭra’s consent, built a new palace at Vāraṇāsī. Though many others did not know that the palace was made of wax the Pāṇḍavas, from secret information knew the fact. But, they only pretended ignorance. Duryodhana and his minister Purocana, saw to it that the Pāṇḍavas shifted their residence to the waxon palace. Duryodhana had planned to set fire to the palace and burn to death the Pāṇḍavas. But, the shrewd Vidura through his messenger Kanaka gave notice of the conspiracy to the Pāṇḍavas just in time. One night Purocana set fire to the waxen palace, but the Pāṇḍavas escaped by a secret passage, which the architect of the palace had made while constructing it, and about which the Pāṇḍavas had previous knowledge. The same night a huntsman, with his five children, was also staying in the palace. As they were unconscious with heavy dosage of liquor they could not escape the fire. Those six people, and accidentally Purocana too were burnt to death. People, who gathered at the spot, thus saw seven corpses, and the news was broadcast that the Pāṇḍavas, including their wife Pāṅcālī and their mother had been burnt to death. This incident took place one year after the Pāṇḍavas had shifted their residence to the waxon palace. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapters 141-151).

ARĀLI. One of the sons who were Brahmavādins of Viśvāmīra. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 58).

ARANTUKA. A guard posted at a boundary line of Kuurkṣetra. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 52).

ARANTUKA. A sacred spot in ancient India, in river Sarasvati. A bath there is as beneficial as performing the Agniṣṭoma yajña. (M.B., Śāla Parva, Chapter 53, Verse 24).

ARANYA. A King of the Iksvāku dynasty. (See Iksvāku dynasty).

ARANYA PARVA. A sub Parva in the Mahābhārata. (See Mahābhārata).

ARATTA(M). A place in ancient India. After Droṇa was killed in the great war, Kṛtavrāma ran away with the warriors of Rāṭṭa. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 193, Verse 13).

*Arīṣṭhā, a wife of Kaśyapa, delivered thirteen Apsaras. They were: Alambuṣṭa, Miśrakeśi, Vidyutparṇa, Tīloṭtamā, Rakaśī, Rambhā, Manoramā, Keśīni, Subhā, Surejā, Suretā and Supriyā. Arīṣṭhā gave birth also to four Gandharvas, Hāhā, Hūhū, Aṭībhū and Tumburu as mentioned in the following verse.

Ariṣṭāṣṭā Subhaḥadevi devaṁ śrītaḥ sura
Alambuṣṭa Miśrakeśi Vidyutparṇa Tīloṭtamā
Ariṣṭā rākṣatī caiva rambhā tadvat manoramā
Keśīni ca subhaḥāśca vikhyatau ca haḥahuhu
Tumburuścetī ca tvāraḥ śrīṁāṁ gandharvasamantam.
ARAYANNAM. The swan (Hamsa).
1) General. A bird (Hamsa) in Devaloka. The prefix ‘ara’ denotes royalty, sublimity, greatness etc. Many purāṇas describe Arayannam as a bird of the Devas. Mānasasaras at the heights of the Himalayas is the permanent abode of these divine birds. They do not like the rainy season. So they come down to the earth when rain begins at the Mānasasaras, and go back to the Saras, when rain begins on the earth. This phenomenon explains Čerusčer’s (Malayalam poet) statement in his Kṛṣṇagāthā that ‘when rain set in hansas —Arayannams—began flying away’.

2) Origin. Kaśyapa, the son of Brahmā, married the eight daughters of Daṅka, Tāmra being one of them. Tāmra bore five daughters Krauṇi, Bhāsī, Śyenī, Dhṛtarāṣṭri and Śuki. Śyenī gave birth to the kīte, Dhṛtarāṣṭri, the Hamsa and the Koṅa and Śuki the Koṅa (duves). Koṅa or the Cakravāki bird is the sister of Hamsa. This is how the Arayanna and the Cakravāki got Devatva (divinity). (Vālimkī Šāmāyana, Aranyakāṇḍa, Canto 14).

3) Bhīṣma and the Arayanna. Śiśūpāla, before his death, blabbered a lot of unbecoming things about Bhīṣma, who was partial to his (Śiśūpāla’s) enemies. And, he related the story of an Arayanna to elaborate the stand taken by the aged Bhīṣma. An aged Hamsa (Arayanna) which once dwelt on the sea-coast preached to all the other birds much about ethical actions. The birds felt great respect for the Arayanna. They flew across the sea in search of prey after entrusting their eggs to the Arayanna. The old Arayanna grew fat on those eggs. There was one intelligent bird among the lot, and when it looked for the eggs they were not to be found. That bird informed its colleagues about the treacherous conduct of the Arayanna. The birds organised themselves and attacked the Arayanna to death. Oh Bhīṣma, the same will be your end also. (M.B., Sahā Parva, Chapter 41, Verses 30-41).

4) Nala and Arayanna. While Nala, the prince of the Niṣadha kingdom was resting in a garden he saw an Arayanna in a tank there. Out of curious pleasure Nala caught it, but seeing its mental tremor he let it free. Out of gratitude for this generous act, the Arayanna played the role of the messenger for Nala to get as his wife Daṃayantī, the very beautiful daughter of the King of Vidarbha.

5) How the Arayanna (Hamsa) got the white colour. Once king Marutta was conducting the Māheśvara Satra (a yāga) and Devas like Indra came down to receive their share of the Havis (oblations in the sacrificial fire). And, this was the time when Rāvaṇa with his attendants was on his triumphal tour. Hearing that the Devas were at the Āśrama of Marutta, Rāvaṇa also went there, and Indra and the other Devas, trembling with fear, assumed different disguises and hid themselves away. Indra assumed the guise of the peacock, Yama of the crow, Kubera of the chameleon and Vaṣṇu of the Arayanna. Thus beguiled Rāvaṇa went his own way. The Devas, who thus escaped blessed the family of those birds whose forms they assumed. Indra shaped the blue feathers of the peacock with mixed colours and eyes like his own. Moreover, he blessed them that they would never be affected with any disease, and that they would dance with their feathers spread when rain set in. Yamadharma blessed the crows that they would get the offerings made on earth by men to their departed ancestors. And Bhagavān Varuṇa told the Rāja-Hamsa: “I escaped the clutches of Rāvaṇa by assuming your shape and form. Therefore, be thee, who are now black and white, in future as purely white as milk”. Kubera blessed the Chameleon with capacity to change colour as and how it pleased, and also for its checks to appear golden in colour to the onlookers. After thus blessing the birds the Devas disappeared. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

ARUBU. An Asura. Indra killed this Asura. (Ṛgveda, Manḍala 1, Anuvāka 10, Sūkta 51).

ARUBU A. A nāga (serpent) living in mountains. (Sahā Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 9).

ARUBU II. The mountain Āśu. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 55).

ARCANĀNAS. A muni born in the Ātreya gotra of the dynasty of Atri. He desired to marry Rathavīti. But her father had decided to give her in marriage only to a Mahārṣi, and, therefore Arcanānas became a Mahārṣi with the help of the Marutta and wedded Rathavīti. Mahārṣi Śyāvāśva was their son.

ARICSMATI. The fourth daughter of Mahārṣi Āṅgiras. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 216, Verse 6).

ARIC. Pṛthu and the Arcis were born from the arms of Vena. (Ṛgveda, 4th Skandha, Chapter 15). Pṛthu did tapas in forest and gave up his physical body in fire and attained Vaiśvēṇa (the abode of Vaiśvēṇa) with the Arcis. (Ṛgveda, 4th Skandha). For details see Pṛthu.

ARICSMAT. A sect of Pṛthīs. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 236, Verse 15).

ARDHĀDEVAS (SEMI-GODS). In temples hermits, ancestors, serpents, celestial maids and such others also are worshipped. Among these there are Vasus, Nāgas, Asuras, Paśūcās, Vaiśās and many other classes. These are the semi-gods. (See Page 27 of Nāma-nāṁgūma Dāvāṅḍal).

ARDHAKILĀTĪTHA. A holy ghāt or bath built by the hermit Darbhī. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 153).

ARDHASĀDHAKA. A minister of King Daśaratha. He had eight ministers. “The great king had eight ministers who were pure and famous and experts in dealing with matters of their concern: Jayanta, Dhrṣṭi, Viṣṇu, Siddhar, Ardhāsādha, Asoka, Maṇtrapāla and Sumantra were they”. (Vālimkī Rāmāyana, Bālākāṇḍa, Sarga 7, Stanzas 2 and 3: Vallatthōl Translation).

ARGHĀBHĪHANAPARVA. A parva in the Mahābhārata. (See M.B.).

ARIHA. A King of the lunar dynasty. He was a son born to Arvācina (a king of the Pṛu dynasty) and Maryādā, a princess of Vidarbha. Ariha had a son, Mahābhuma, born of his wife, a princess of Āṅgī. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 19, Verses 18-19).

ARIMEJAYA. A Rāja of the Pṛu dynasty. (See Pṛu dynasty). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

ARIŚṬI. Wife of Kaśyapa. The Gandharvas were born of her. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19, M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 83).

ARIŚṬA (ARIŚTKA). An asura, a servant of Kaśiṇa. Once, at the instance of Kaśiṇa he went to Gokula disguised as an ox to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The ox instilled terror in people by tearing to pieces hills and mountains.
with its horns and bellowing like hell. But Śrī Kṛṣṇa faced the beast, and rained blows on him and it was thrown hundred yojanas away and it died. At the time of death it regained its former from as Asura. (Bhāgavata, Daśāma, Skandha, Chapter 37).

ARISTANEMA (ARIŞTANEMİ). (See Aristanemi).

ARISTANEMİ I. One of the six sons of Vinata.

1) Genealogy. Viṣṇu, Brahmā, Kaśyapa and Aristanemi. Kaśyapa married Dhītarāṣṭri, daughter of Daḵša. Sukī was their daughter, Sukī had a daughter Natā and she a daughter, Vinatā. Aristanemi, Tārāṣṭha, Aruṇa, Garuda, Para, Aruṇī and Śrī Vāruṇī were the children of Vinatā. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 40).

2) Tapasakṭi of Aristanemi. Aristanemi with his son was once performing tapas in the forest. The son was immersed in meditation clad in the skin of a deer thus looking like a deer. Parapuraṇāja, the King of Hetyāga who happened at the time to be hunting in the forest discharged his arrow against the son of Aristanemi taking him for a deer. When the king found out the real fact he felt extremely sorry, and he craved pardon of the boy’s father for unwittingly killing his son. Then Aristanemi pointing out his son who was standing alive asked the King, “Is this the boy whom you killed?”

The King was naturally wonder-struck. But Aristanemi told the King that there was nothing to wonder at in the case as nobody would be able to kill them because their Tapaṣakṭi was so great. The King felt so happy at this, and returned to his palace after prostrating at the feet of the sage. (M.B., Aranya Parva, Chapter 184).

3) Some other details. (1) Sumati, wife of King Sagara of the Solar dynasty, was the daughter of Aristanemi. (Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākāṇḍa, Canto 38, Verse 4). (2) Kaśyapa had the synonym Aristanemi also. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kṣīṁkīhākāṇḍa, Canto 66, Verse 4 ; Devi Bhāgavata, Saptama Skandha). (3) Aristanemi’s wives delivered sixteen children. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19). (4) Aristanemi has spoken a lot about the greatness of Brahmins. (M.B., Aranya Parva, Chapter 184, Verses 17-22). (5) Aristanemi once gave much spiritual advice to King Sagara of the Sūrya Varśa. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 288, Verses 5-46).

ARISTANEMİ II. Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 8 refers to one Aristanemi, the second son of Kaśyapa.

ARISTANEMİ III. A Rājā called Aristanemi occupied a place in the council of Yama. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 9).

ARISTANEMİ IV. A false name assumed by Sahadeva while the Pāṇḍavas lived incognito in the Vīrāṭa kingdom. (M.B., Vīrāṭa Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 5).

ARISTANEMİ V. A synonym of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B., Udysseya Parva, Chapter 71, Verse 5).

ARISTANEMİ VI. A King. Realising the transient nature of worldly life, he gave up his kingdom and went to and did tapas at Mount Gandhamādāna. Indra who was very much pleased at this sent a messenger with a vimāna (aeroplane) to conduct the King to Svarga (heaven). When he was told that there was in Svarga also the states of being high or low, and fall happened when the effect of good actions decreased, the King gave up his desire for Svarga and sent back Indra’s messenger. Then Indra sent the King with a messenger to the Āśrama of Vālmiki so that he might gain spiritual knowledge. Vālmiki consoled the King with the advice that the telling, hearing and pondering over the story of the Rāmāyaṇa alone would be enough to get eternal salvation. (Yogavāśīṣṭham).

ARJUNA. The third of the Pāṇḍavas.

2) Previous birth. Arjuna and Śrī Kṛṣṇa are often referred to as Naranārāyaṇas (Nara and Nārāyaṇa). In their previous life they were two Rṣis called Nara and Nārāyaṇa, and from that time onwards they lived as inseparable companions and sons of the same parents. They entered Mahāsāmādhi at Badaryāśrama in the Himālayas. Of the two Nārāyaṇaśri was a partial incarnation of Viṣṇu. About the Narśarśi the Devī Bhāgavata has the following to say: “Dharma had his origin in the heart of Brahmā, and he earned great reputation for truthfulness and adherence to Vedic dharmas. He married the daughters of Daḵša. Dharma had four sons, Hari, Kṛṣṇa, Nara and Nārāyaṇa. Of the four sons Hari and Kṛṣṇa became great yogis, and Nara and Nārāyaṇa, great tapasvins. Nara and Nārāyaṇa did tapas, worshipping Brahmā for 1000 years at the holy Badaryāśrama in the plains of the Himālayas. Nara was born in the next birth as Arjuna. (Devi Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha). See Nara.

3) Birth. To Vicitravīrya son of Santanu was born Dhītarāṣṭra by Ambikā, and Pāṇḍu by Ambiākā. Pāṇḍu had two wives, Kuntī and Mādrī. The curse of a Muni made physical contacts with his wives impossible for Pāṇḍu. (See Pāṇḍu). Kuntī, before her marriage had attended on Mahārāṣṭri Durvāsas who pleased with her service made a gift of five mantras to her. The effect of the mantras was that Kuntī would become mother of a son from him about whom she was thinking while she repeated the mantra. As soon as she got the mantras she retired to a solitary place and thinking of the Sun-God repeated the first mantra. At once Śuryadėva appeared and Karna was born to her by him. After assuring her that the incident would not affect her chastity Śurya disappeared. Kuntī abandoned the child to float in the river Gaṅgā, and stayed with Pāṇḍu keeping the other four mantras to herself. Since Pāṇḍu could not contact the body of his wives, with his permission Kuntī began practising the other four mantras one by one. By three mantras she got three sons, Dharmaputra from Kāla, Arjuna from Indra and Bhīmasena from the wind God (Vāyu). The remaining one mantra Kuntī gave to Mādrī. She repeated it thinking of the Āsvini Devas, and two sons, Nakula and Sahadeva were born to her. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 63 onwards).

4) Festival of birth. At the birth of Arjuna Kuntī heard a heavenly voice declare as follows: “Oh! Kuntī! your son will be equal to Siva in prowess and unconquerable just as Indra is. After defeating all the Kings he will perform the Aśvamedha thrice. He will please Siva and get the great weapon called Pāśupata from him. On the orders of Indra he will kill Nivātakavacas. Hearing the above prophecy the Devas played ecstatic music and flowers were showered from the sky. The Saptarśis, Prajāpatis and other sages arrayed themselves in the sky. Thus, all animate and inanimate objects celebrated the birth of Arjuna.

5) Naming. Sages from the top of the Śataśrāṅga mountain came together to perform the christening ceremony of Arjuna. While enumerating the various names of Arjuna, it is said in the Vīrāṭa Parva that Kṛṣṇa was the name Pāṇḍu gave to his son. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 123, Verse 20).

6) Childhood. The Pāṇḍavas spent their childhood at Hastināpura with the Kauravas. Then Arjuna studied the art and science of using weapons, dance, music etc. along with the other boys. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 1). Kaśyapa, the high priest of Vasudeva did for Arjuna the usual Sarisākāras like Upanayana (wearing of the holy thread) etc. Arjuna was taught the first lessons in Dhanurveda (Science of archery) by Rājarśi Śūka. Afterwards, Kṛṣṇācārya became the preceptor of the Pāṇḍavas in Dhanurveda, and it was then that Dronācārya came. There is a particular story about Dronācārya becoming the guru. (See Drona).

7) Special favour of Drona. Arjuna showed very great interest in the science of the use of weapons. Droṇa, the master, wanted to teach Aśvatthāmā, his son, certain special things, and he began sending all his disciples to fetch water. Aśvatthāmā used to be the first to return with the water, and before the others returned Droṇa began teaching Aśvatthāmā the special lessons. Arjuna came to understand this programme and he began returning with water along with Aśvatthāmā. Then the guru began teaching the special things to both Aśvatthāmā and Arjuna. Droṇa instructed the cook not to serve Arjuna food in the darkness. While Arjuna was once taking his food, wind blew out the burning lamp, and Arjuna alone continued eating. Because of constant practice Arjuna was quite sure about the position of the hand and the mouth in the process of eating, and Arjuna surprised from this that he was also could be practised in darkness. He began practising them. The guru came to know of it, and witnessing Arjuna’s performance praised Arjuna as a unique archer. (Bhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 132).

8) Ekālaya’s finger was cut. Ekālaya, son of Hiranyakadhaṇus, King of the Niṣāda (a tribe of hunters, forestmen) approached Droṇa to learn the science of the use of weapons. Droṇa, the Brahmīn, refused the prayer of this prince of the forest tribe. Ekālaya, after prostrating at the feet of Droṇa returned to the woods, made an image of Droṇa with earth and meditating upon it as guru began practising the use of weapons. The Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas went hunting in the forest. Seeing there Ekālaya with his matted hair and clad in deer skin the hunting dogs began barking at him. Ekālaya shot into the mouth of the dog seven arrows at one and the same moment. With the arrows thrust in the mouth the dogs ran back to the Pāṇḍavas, and they found out the culprit, Ekālaya, who claimed himself to be a disciple of Droṇa. Grief-stricken at this claim Arjuna hurried up to Droṇa and said: “You had pronounced me to be your foremost disciple without an equal. But, today Ekālaya, another disciple of yours has relegated me to the second place”. Thereupon Droṇa went and saw Ekālaya in the forest. Ekālaya, in all devotion stood up and saluted the guru. And the guru said as follows: “Oh! Ekālaya, if thou art my disciple give me the dākṣinā (fee) due to the guru, and I desire to get the thumb of your right hand as my fee”. At once Ekālaya cut his thumb and gave it to Droṇa. Henceforth Arjuna became Droṇa’s unequalled disciple. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 132).

9) Arjuna got Brahmāśīrāstra. When once Droṇa and his disciples were bathing in the river Gaṅgā, a whale caught hold of the leg of the guru. The combined efforts of the disciples failed to extricate the leg from the grip of the whale. Ultimately Arjuna shot an arrow and released the guru’s leg. Greatly pleased at this Droṇa imparted to Arjuna knowledge about Brahmāśīrāstra, and Arjuna was enjoined not to use the astra against men, but to use it only when confronting higher beings than men. (Bhārata (Malayalam), Ādi Parva, Chapter 133).

10) Competition in arms. When the training of the princes was almost over Dṛḍharaśtra decided to have a rehearsal of their attainments, and the scene for it also was set. The princes with bows and arrows appeared on the scene. Yuddhiṣṭhīra and others first exhibited their skill in shooting arrows in the order of their seniority. Every scene was explained to Dṛḍharaśtra by Vidura and to Gāndhārī by Saśījaya. Duryodhana and Bhīma clashed with each other. Aśvatthāmā pacified them and kept them apart. And, then Arjuna and Karṇa appeared on the scene, and the onlookers declared them to be equal in skill in archery. When their shooting exhibition was over, Karṇa who got angry again rushed to the stage. Arjuna also got ready. Arjuna challenged Karṇa’s eligibility on the ground that he was low-born and not a Kaśtriya. At once Duryodhana proclaimed him as the King of Anga. Though this pacified the scene, this competition in archery served much to make the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas the bitterest of enemies. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapters, 136, 137).

11) Arjuna’s guruḍakṣinā (Offering of fee to the preceptor). At the starting of training the princes Droṇa told them: “I have one thing in mind, and you must do it for me when you have completed the course of training. All the disciples except Arjuna kept silent at this, but Arjuna promised to fulfil the guru’s wish at the proper time.

The training was over, and it was time for guruḍakṣinā. Droṇa asked to be brought bound before him Drupada, King of Paścāla. (For Droṇa’s enmity towards Drupada see Drupada). Thereupon the Pāṇḍavas marched to Paścāla, and in a fierce battle Arjuna defeated Drupada. Though Bhīma tried to kill Drupada Arjuna did not permit it, but took him bound to Droṇa. This ended Droṇa’s hatred towards Drupada, who now gifted half his kingdom to Droṇa. Droṇa was very much pleased with Arjuna for the above act, and advised him to fight even him (Droṇa) if the latter opposed him (Arjuna). To this Arjuna replied ‘Yes’. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 139, Verse 14). With this promise to fight even the guru in case the guru attacked him Arjuna became the most reputed archer in Bhārata.
12) Jealousy of Dhrdtarāstra. After the gurudaksinā Arjuna marched against the neighbouring kingdom. He defeated very easily in war the King of Yavana and the Kings Sauvīra, Vipula and Sumūti. These victories of Arjuna made the Kauravas very anxious; Dhr̄taraśṭra brooded over it. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 138, Verses 20-23).

13) Escape from the waxen palace. Durūdha made up his mind to destroy the Pāṇḍavas somehow or other. He got the Pāṇḍavas to shift their residence to a palace made of wax at Vāraṇavata, and one year after this the palace was set fire to. The Pāṇḍavas escaped death by fire through a tunnel and entered the forest, the next day. (See Arakkilām).

14) Arjuna on the banks of river Gaṅgā. The Pāṇḍavas walked much through the terrible forest, and after midnight reached the banks of the Gaṅgā. At that time Aṅgārapāra (Citrañātha), the Gandharva was enjoying his time in the river with some Apsaras women. The presence of men at the scene, the Gandharva did not relish. Arjuna and the Gandharva crossed in words, which led to a duel. In the duel the Gandharva was defeated. As the wife of the Gandharva prayed with tears in her eyes Arjuna spared him his life. The grateful Gandharva told the Pāṇḍavas many interesting stories. He also made a present of divine horses and imparted to them the esoteric knowledge called Caṅsūṣṭi-vidyā. The Gandharva finally told the Pāṇḍavas that they were attacked because they came without Agni and Ahūti in their front. He also explained this fact that Arjuna could subjugate him on account of his (Arjuna’s) genuine celibacy. (See Citrañātha).

15) Pāṇḍalīsuyāṇavara. Citrañātha, during his talks with the āndavas had pointed out to them the need to have a priest to lead and guide them in all matters, and accordingly they visited Dhaumyāśrama and installed the Mahārāṣṭi (Dhaumya) as their priest.

And, meantime, seeing thousands of people on their way to attend the Svayāṇavara (marriage by open choice of husband by the girl) of Kṛṣṇā (Pāṇcāli) daughter of the King of Ītiṣāla, the Pāṇḍavas also followed the crowd. Veda Vyāśa, whom the Pāṇḍavas met on their way blessed them. King Druṣpada wished to give his daughter Kṛṣṇā in marriage to Arjuna. The news that the iṣṭa-ṇāḍa as were burned to death in the palace of wax grieved Druṣpada. Yet he had made arrangements for a trial of strength by Heroes at the Svayāṇavara. A tremendous bow was got ready and installed on the ground, and a machine constructed which was kept suspended in the air. The target was placed inside the machine. And then Druṣpada spoke thus: “My daughter shall be married to him who will bend the bow and with the first arrow hit the target placed inside the machine”. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 155, Verse 11). Great warriors like Durūdhaṇa, Karṇa, Śiṣuṇa, Śiṣṭumāra took their seats in the marriage hall. All the kings failed even to lift the bow up. Ultimately Arjuna lifted the bow and hit the target very easily. Pāṇcāli put the wedding garland on Arjuna’s neck. When the Pāṇḍavas returned to their mother with Pāṇcāli in the evening the mother from inside her room said: “What you have got today, my sons, you enjoy among yourselves.” Kunti said this under the impression that what her sons had got was some Bhikṣā. At any rate, in obedience to the above injunction of the mother Pāṇcāli became wife to the five Pāṇḍavas. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapters 190, 191).

16) Arjuna at Indraprastha. The svayāṇavara of Pāṇcāli broadcast news about the whereabouts of the Pāṇḍavas. Dhr̄taraśṭra brought them back to Indraprastha, and installed them in a new palace built at the place called Khandavapraṣṭha. (Indraprastha). Dharmaputra ruled a part of the country with Indraprastha as capital. Nārada went there once and advised the Pāṇḍavas to guard themselves against mutual quarrels as the five of them claimed one and the same woman as wife. Thenceforth it was set forth that Pāṇcāli would live with each husband in turn for one year. It was also settled that during a particular year if any other husband than the one whose turn it was to live with Pāṇcāli saw her the intruder was to go on a pilgrimage for one year.

Once a brāhmin came to the palace complaining that his cows were stolen by thieves, and Arjuna promised to help him. Arjuna did so without remembering that all his weapons were stored in Dharmaputra’s palace. That year Pāṇcāli was living with Dharmaputra. Forgetting the fact Arjuna went to Dharmaputra’s palace, got his weapons and helped the brāhmin. For this breaking the rule Arjuna left his palace on a pilgrimage for one year.

17A) Arjuna married Ulūpikā and Citraṅgadā. Arjuna with his bow and arrows went into the forest. Many brāhmīns followed him. Arjuna reached the banks of Gaṅgā and entered the waters for a bath. Here Arjuna was attracted by Ulūpikā, daughter of the Nāga King and he married her. A son was born to them called Ira-vān. After visiting places like Agastyavatam, Vaśishthagiri Arjuna reached Manelur. He married Citraṅgadā, daughter of Citraṅgadā, King of Manelur. After a stay of three months there he went southwards. Citraṅgadā gave birth to a son named Babhrurvāhana.

17B) The mark on Arjuna’s flag is Hanūman, and the following story is attached to it. Arjuna, once during a tour of the country was much surprised to see the Dam constructed by Śrī Rāma from Rāmeśvara to Laṅkā. He also felt that it was not at all proper on the part of Śrī Rāma to have sought the help of monkeys to construct the dam. Śrī Rāma could have made a dam with arrows. Arjuna put this question to a great scholar (Pandit) who was sitting nearby reading the Rāmāyaṇa. Neither the Pandit nor the other brāhmīns gathered there could give a convincing answer to Arjuna’s doubts. Then a monkey child went up to Arjuna and told him with pride that a dam made of arrows would have broken when the monkeys walked on it. Arjuna said then, “no, no, no monkey will be able to break the dam built with Rāma’s arrows; which monkey will break a dam of arrows made even by me?” And, a debate began about the subject. The monkey and Arjuna agreed to a bet that if a monkey broke the dam made by Arjuna he would end his life by jumping into fire, and if the monkey could not break the dam it would for ever be Arjuna’s slave. Arjuna constructed a dam with arrows. And, as soon as the monkey set foot on it it was broken. Arjuna tried again. Though now it caused some efforts on the part of the monkey the dam broke this time also. Arjuna was thus left with no alternative but to die by jumping into fire and a fire was accordingly lit. Before Arjuna jumped into the fire a brāhmin boy, who was bathing in the river ran upto Arjuna and told him that his attempt at self annihilation was not justified as the bet was made without an arbiter. When Arjuna who was wedded so much to truth brushed aside this argument and got ready to end his life the boy said: ‘If you are so very insistent about it you (Arjuna and the monkey) compete once again with me as arbiter. This suggestion of the boy was accepted. The monkey child tried its best to break the dam, but it failed. It developed its body to the size of a mountain and jumped on the dam.
Even then it did not break. Then he ran up to the boy who was acting as arbiter and prostrated at his feet crying ‘Rāmacandra’. At the same moment Arjuna also prostrated before the boy crying ‘Śrī Kṛṣṇa, slave to devotees’. The boy asked both of them to get up, and after admonishing them for their conceit gave them good advice. He also asked the monkey child to keep his word by remaining as the emblem of Arjuna’s flag.
(The monkey boy was actually Hanūmān and the brahmin boy Śrī Kṛṣṇa).

17 C) Arjuna married Subhadra. Arjuna went to the holy place called Saubhadratirtha and redeemed the woman named Vargā from the curse she was labouring under.
(See Vargā). Arjuna continued his journey and reached Gokarna and Prabhāsa tirtha, where he met Gada, brother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Gada described to Arjuna the great beauty of his sister, Subhadra. Arjuna went to Dvārakā and paid his respects to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. A few days later the yādavas celebrated a great festival at mount Raivatataka. Arjuna went there disguised as a Sannyāsin and forcibly took away Subhadra with him with the permission of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Though the yādavas got ready for a fight they were ultimately pacified, and Subhadra was married to Arjuna. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter, 218-224).

17D) Brahmin boy saved. When once Arjuna was in Dvārakā with Śrī Kṛṣṇa a brahmin appeared on the scene lamenting that his child died as soon as it was born. Nobody paid any heed to this, and then Arjuna rose up and assured protection to the next child to be born to the brahmin and asked him to return home in peace. Arjuna also vowed that he would end his life by jumping into fire if he failed to protect the next child of the brahmin.

As the time for the delivery of his wife approached the brahmin took Arjuna home. Arjuna made the house secure by making an enclosure with his arrows. Yet the child died; not only that, at the time of birth itself its body disappeared. And, the brahmin heaped insults on Arjuna, who looked very foolish. Rendered thus an object of ridicule Arjuna began to make a fire for him to jump into. At this Śrī Kṛṣṇa appeared before Arjuna and prevented him from jumping into fire.
And then both Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna went to Viṣṇuloka and submitted the case of the brahmin to him. Viṣṇu told them: ‘Oh! Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, it was I who took away the brahmin boys for the pleasure of seeing you both here. You may immediately return with the brah-min boys. And, Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna returned with the boys to the brahmin, who now felt very happy.
( Bhāgavata, Daśaṁa Skandha, Chapter 89).“

17E) Burning of Khaṇḍavāna forest. While Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna were spending their days on the banks of river Yamunā in the summer season Agni Bhagavān (the fire-god) requested them to give the Khaṇḍavāna forest as food to him. (See Khaṇḍavānadāya). Arjuna agreed to oblige Agni Bhagavān, who presented to Arjuna the bow called Gāṇḍīva, a white horse and many other powerful arrows. When Agni began burning the forest, Indra sent a heavy shower of rain. By creating a tent with arrows Arjuna saved the forest from the rain. Arjuna killed Takṣaṅka’s wife, cursed the N.γa called Asvasena and saved Maya, the architect of the Asuras who was put up in the forest. Indra was pleased and gifted many divine arrows to Arjuna. Maya gave the famous conch, Devadattam to Arjuna. By now the one year of the pilgrimage of Arjuna was over and he returned to Indraprastha. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapters 233-239).

17P) Fight between Arjuna and Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (See Gālavā, para 4).

18) Again to the forest. Maya, who escaped death in Khaṇḍavāna forest, in his great gratitude, went to Indrapraṣṭha, and with the permission of Dharmaputra built for the Pāṇḍavas an exceptionally beautiful palace.
And then the Pāṇḍavas made the conquest of all the, and after killing enemy kings like Jarāsandha,
The Kimpurūṣas, the Hādakas, Śiśūpāla, Kurundha and Bhagadatta returned to Indraprastha and performed the Rājaśīya yajña. The Kauravas who got jealous of this went on a visit to Indraprastha. When they entered the palace built by Maya they were put into many a ludicrous situation. (See Sabhaçpravacā). Insulted and humiliated they returned to Hastinapura and challenged the Pāṇḍavas to a game of dice, and in the game the Pāṇḍavas lost not only their kingdom and other riches, but Pāñcāli as well. Duśśāsana dragged Pāñcāli and stripped her of her clothes in the royal assembly and thus mercilessly insulted her. According to the terms and condition agreed to with reference to the game of dice, the Pāṇḍavas had to lead forest life for twelve years and live for one year incognito. The Pāṇḍavas again started for the forest. (M.B., Sabhā Parva).

19) Pāṇḍavas in Kāmyaka forest. A number of brahmīns also accompanied the Pāṇḍavas to the forest. The noble brahmin, Saunaka consoled the aggrieved Dharmapu-tra in the Dvaitavana. Dharmaputra felt worried that he could not feed the brahmīns who accompanied him into the forest. Pāñcāli prayed to the Sun-God, and he gave the Aksyapātra to her. (See Aksyapātra).
And, after this the Pāṇḍavas, along with the brahmīns, entered the Kāmyaka forest. (M.B., Aranya Parva, Chapter 36).

20) Arjuna secured divine arrows. Dharmaputra asked Arjuna to do tapas in the Himalayas and thus secure divine arrows. Accordingly Arjuna went south and saw Indra in the Indrakīta mountain. Indra gave him boons. There Arjuna killed Markāuran. And, then Arjuna went to Mount Kailāśa and prayerfully concentrated his mind on Śiva. Śiva appeared in the guise of a forest dweller. (See Pāñcālipatātra). After that he got the Daṇḍāstra from Yama, Pāñcātra from Varuna and Antardhanāstra from Kubera. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapters 37-41).

21) Arjuna in Indraloka. Indra, who was so very pleased that Arjuna got so many divine arrows depited his charioteer, Mātali, to bring Arjuna to Devaloka, and at Devaloka he learned more about archery and music.
The Apsaras women forgot themselves when they saw the exceptionally handsome Arjuna. Urvaśī, mad with love, sent her messenger Citrasena to Indra. Being told about Urvāśī’s love Arjuna closed both his ears with hands, and reminded the messenger of Urvāśī’s maternal position with reference to him. Urvāśī cursed and turned Arjuna into an eunuch. Indra consoled Arjuna by assuring him that Urvāśī’s curse will turn out to be of great benefit to him. Afterwards Arjuna stayed in Devaloka for a few days with Citrasena, and during the period he killed Nīvatākavaca and Kākeya.

Arjuna became a friend of Mahārṣi Lomaśa, who had gone to Devaloka to see Indra. Promising Arjuna that he would protect Dharmaputra Lomaśa returned to the earth. Arjuna left the Kāmyaka forest and returned to his brothers after an absence for five years. He met the brothers at Mount Gandhamādānā. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapters 42-47).

22) Procession. At last a witty and humorous brahmin went to Dīrghaṛṣṭa and dilated upon the hardships being suffered by the Pāṇḍavas, and Duryodhana and others were extremely pleased and happy to hear it. Yet, they shed crocodile tears. But, Duryodhana was in a mighty hurry to see with his own eyes the pitiable plight of the Pāṇḍavas. On the pretext of going out for hunting Duryodhana and others with the permission of Dīrghaṛṣṭa, started for the forest with a number of attendants. 8,000 chariots, 30,000 elephants, thousands of infantry soldiers, 9,000 horses, merchants, ornaments, courtesans and thousands of hunters formed this procession into the forest. Just like roaring winds during the rainy season the procession caused thunderous noise. Duryodhana approached the pool in the Dvaita forest and waited at a distance. (M.B., Aranyā Parva, Chapter 239, Verses 25-29).

Duryodhana and attendants put up tents in the forest. The Gandharvas obstructed Duryodhana, and he and the Gandharva called Citrasena clashed with each other. Duryodhana was made a prisoner. Arjuna came on the scene and released him. And, thus humiliated Duryodhana returned to Hastināpura with the attendants. (M.B., Aranyā Parva, Chapters 239-253).

23) Arjuna lost consciousness. While once Pāñcarāni was alone King Jayadratha forcibly took her away. Within seconds the Pāṇḍavas confronted Jayadratha and regained Pāñcarāni. Jayadratha and his men were killed. The Pāṇḍavas, who were very weary and tired walking in the forest felt extremely thirsty. Nakula, at the instance of Dharmaputra climbed a tree and looked around and sighted a pool of clear water. When Nakula went to the pool and began to draw water a voice from above was heard saying as follows: “Do not be so very daring. This is my ancestral wealth. If you answer my questions you may not only drink the water but also take some with you”. Without paying any heed to this warning Nakula drank water from the pool, and lo ! he fell down unconscious immediately. Sahadeva who went to the pool in search of Nakula and drank water from the pool also met with the same fate as Nakula. Arjuna and Bhīma also had the same fate at the pool. Lastly Dharmaputra went to the pool and understanding what happened to his brothers requested permission to drink water. At once a Yakṣa appeared and brought the brothers of Dharmaputra back to consciousness. In fact, the Yakṣa was none other than Yamadharmadeva. (For questions and answers of the Yakṣa see Dharmaputra.) (M.B., Aranyā Parva, Chapters 312-315).

24) Life incognito. Now the twelve years of forest life being over the Pāṇḍavas decided to spend the one year of life incognito in the Vīraṭa palace. Arjuna disguised himself and deposited his clothes and weapons in the hollow of a Śamī tree in the forest. And the Pāṇḍavas in various disguises reached the Vīraṭa palace. They assumed false names: Dharmaputra as Kaṅka, Bhīma as Mahāraja, Arjuna as Sāhajapita, Nakula as Mahāraja and Sahadeva as Arṣīṣṭakam and Draupadi as Māliṅi. When the life incognito of the Pāṇḍavas for one year was about to expire a rumour reached the Kauravas that the Pāṇḍavas were at the Vīraṭa capital, and the Kauravas thought that the Pāṇḍavas will appear on the scene if a war was fought against King Vīraṭa. The Kauravas, with this object in view, lifted the eows of Vīraṭa and that led to war. Uttara, the prince of Vīraṭa boasted that he would fight provided he had a good charioteer. Bṛhannāla (Arjuna) agreed to act as such and they started for the warfield. At the sight of the massive army of the Kauravas Uttara got frightened and tried to run away from the field. But Bṛhannāla tightly bound Uttara to the chariot, drove it very fast to the forest, took back from the hollow of the Śamī tree his weapons and returned to the battle-field. The Kauravas were absolutely defeated in the war and they took to their heels. They understood that the very clever and terrible warrior in disguise was Arjuna himself. But, by the time the period of the Pāṇḍavas life incognito was over. The king of Vīraṭa, greatly pleased over this victory in war gave his daughter, Uttarā in marriage to Abhimanyu, son of Arjuna. (M.B., Vīraṭa Parva).

25) Preparations for war. After the forest life and life incognito the Pāṇḍavas returned. The Kauravas refused to give them half the Kingdom. Śrī Kṛṣṇa, on behalf of the Pāṇḍavas, implored that half the kingdom or five districts or five houses or at least one house be given to them. But, the Kauravas took the stand that not even an iota of land would be given to the Pāṇḍavas. And, war was perforce decided upon. Duryodhana went to Kṛṣṇa at Dvārakā to request for support in war. Kṛṣṇa, who favoured the Pāṇḍavas lay in false sleep as he did not want to fight against them. Duryodhana sat at the head of Kṛṣṇa. Arjuna, who came after some time sat at the feet of Kṛṣṇa and remained there standing. Awakened from sleep, it was Arjuna whom Kṛṣṇa saw first. After the greetings were over with Arjuna, Kṛṣṇa saw Duryodhana also. Between Kṛṣṇa without any arms and the armed forces of Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna chose Kṛṣṇa and Duryodhana his armed forces to help each side in the impending war. (Udyoga Parva).

26) War. Both the Parties were enamped in Kurukṣetra ready for war. Śrī Kṛṣṇa acted as Charioteer to Arjuna. He stopped the chariot in between the opposing armies. Arjuna felt deep anguish to find his own people arrayed on the opposite side for war. Reluctant to kill relations, elders, friends and preceptors Arjuna laid down his arms in the chariot. Then did Kṛṣṇa instruct him in Karmayoga (the philosophy of action). That instruction and advice of Kṛṣṇa is the world-famous Bhagavad Gītā. The Gītā cleared off Arjuna’s illusions and he praised the Lord, Śrī Kṛṣṇa, who revealed his all comprehensive form (Viśvarūpa) to Arjuna. On the first day of the war Arjuna fought a duel with Blūṣma, and the second day he fought the Kaurava forces with exceptional prowess. And then Arjuna prevented Kṛṣṇa from killing Bhīṣma. But, the Kaurava army faced defeat that day. On the third day Arjuna defeated Bhīṣma, Asvatthāmā, Trigarta, Bhagadatta and others. Thereupon a fierce fight began. The war lasted for 18 days. The important incidents during the 18 days can be summarised as follows:—

1. Fierce fight between Arjuna and Bhīṣma.
2. Fight between Arjuna and Asvatthāmā.
3. Arjuna destroyed the Kaurava army.
4. Iravāṇa, son of Arjuna, was killed.
5. Arjuna fought against Droṇa and Suṣārmā.
6. Took the vow to kill Bhīṣma.
7. Śiṅghaḍi prompted to kill Bhīṣma.
8. On the appearance of Śiṅghaḍi the Kaurava army, took fright and fled in great disarray.
10. Duel with Bhagadatta.
11. Duel again with Bhīṣma.
12. Bhīṣma fainted and fell on the ground.
14. With Śiṅghaḍi in the front made an attack on Bhīṣma.
15. Arjuna discharged three arrows to serve as pillow to Bhīṣma who, dislodged from the chariot, was lying on a bed of arrows.
16. Cool water sprinkled on the face of Bhīṣma with the aid of divine arrows.
17. Fought against Droṇa and defeated his forces.
18. Satyajit deputed to remain with Dharma-putra to help him.
19. Sudhauvā killed.
20. Again fought with Bhagadatta.
21. Supraṭāka, the elephant of Bhagadatta killed.
22. And after that, Bhagadatta also killed.
23. Vṛṣaṅka and Acala killed by Arjuna.
25. Arjuna killed the three brothers of Karna and confronted Karna.
27. Hearing about the death of Abhimanyu, Arjuna fell down unconscious.
29. Arjuna performed Siva Pūjā.
30. Arjuna dreamt that night to have paid homage to Śiva along with Kṛṣṇa and that Śiva gave him divine arrows like Pāśupata.
31. Marched forth routing the elephant regiment of Durmaśana.
32. Routed Duṣāśana in fight.
33. Again fought Droṇa, Kṛtvamā, Śruti-yudha, Sudakṣiṇa, King of Kamboja.
34. Sudakṣiṇa killed in fight.
35. Śruti-yudha, Acyutāyu, Niyyuti, Amboṣṭha and the Mlecchas' army killed.
36. Vinda and Anuvinda killed.
37. Warfield converted into a house of arrows, on account of the great collection of arrows.
38. Arjuna defeated Duryodhana.
39. Fought the nine great warriors on the Kaurava side.
40. Arjuna cut off the right hand of Bhūrīśravas at the instance of Kṛṣṇa.
41. Cut off the head of Jayadraṭha with arrows. The head and the arrows were thrown on the lap of Jayadraṭha's father.

(42) Alambuṣa, King of Rākṣasas killed.
(43) Daṇḍadhāra killed with his elephant.
(44) Arjuna killed the six brothers of Suṣārmā, viz., Satyasaṇa, Candraṣena, Mitraṣena, Śrutaṅjaya, Sauraṅjuti and Mitraṅdharmā.
(45) Difference of opinion arose between Dharma-putra and Arjuna about the failure to kill Karna, and in the heat of excitement Arjuna called his elder brother 'thou'.
(46) Immediately repenting Arjuna drew sword to kill himself. But, regained mental peace by begging pardon of the brother.
(47) Killed Viṣṇaṇa, son of Karna.
(48) Karna brought down Kṛṣṇa's crown by his arrow resembling the face of the serpent. Enraged at this Arjuna killed Karna.
(49) Killed Satyaṅkara, Satyagṛha and others.
(50) After bowing to Viṣṇa, Arjuna withdrew arrow. (M.B., Bhīṣma, Droṇa, Karna, Śalya and Saupākta Parvas).

27. After the war. In the great war the Kaurava army, to the very last man, was annihilated. The Pāṇḍavas assembled together. Thoughts about the future came up. Śrī Kṛṣṇa consoled the sorrowing Dharma-putra. As desired by Viṣṇu, Kṛṣṇa, Dharma-putra and others returned to Hastināpura and took up the reins of governing the country, and the idea of performing an Aśvamedha Yāga was seriously mooted. A King named Marutta agreed to give money needed for the yajña. Arjuna defeated all enemy kings. (M.B., Śanti Parva).
28. Death and rebirth of Arjuna. On his way back after digvijaya Arjuna was killed by the arrows of his son, Bahūrūvihana. Immediately did Ulūpi, Arjuna's wife bring back to life her husband by Mṛtasāṃjīvini mantra. Then Arjuna questioned Ulūpi about the reason for his son killing him, and also as to how she happened to be present at the time. Ulūpi described the story of a curse in answer to Arjuna's query. (M.B., Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 79).
29. The story of the curse. Ulūpi said: You shall not get angry. Yes, all is for the best. In war you killed Bhīṣma by unrighteous means, viz., with the help of Śiṅghaḍi. On his death, the Aśvāvasus and Gaṅgā Devī cursed you with hell. I told about this curse to my father, who begged the Vasus for redemption, and they said that you would be redeemed from the curse when your son, Bahūrūvihana, killed you. Accordingly he has been brought here to kill you.

The above story pleased Arjuna. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 81).
30. Aśvamedha. Arjuna again defeated Meghasandhi, the King of Magadhā, Saṅkuni-putra and others and returned to Hastināpura, where the Aśvamedha yajña was performed. The Yādava dynasty was extinguished before long. Arjuna did all the rites due to them on death. He grieved over the departure of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 11, Chapter 31). And then he went to Indra-prastha with the consorts of Kṛṣṇa. On the way dacoits overcame Arjuna and snatched away some of the females. Arjuna felt very sad. Then Viṣṇu appeared and told him that he would be strong and powerful only in the presence of Kṛṣṇa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 15).
31. Pāṇḍavas' journey to the other world. Now, it was time for the Pāṇḍavas to journey to the other world.
It was at this juncture that the Yādava dynasty ended and Śrī Kṛṣṇa was killed, and some of Kṛṣṇa’s consorts were abducted. Arjuna could not save them, and they jumped into the river and died. Arjuna, who lost all his power began the great journey with his brothers. On their way Agnideva advised him to deposit reputed bow, Gāndīva in the sea, and Arjuna did so. (Mahāprathāna Parva, Chapter 1, Verses 1-42). The Pāṇḍavas continued their journey, Yudhīśṭhira leading them. They reached the Himālayas, and there Pāṇḍaka expired. To Bhīma’s query as to why Pāṇḍaka expired first, Yudhīśṭhira explained that it was due to his having been more partial to Arjuna. The others continued their journey and then Sahadeva died. Yudhīśṭhira explained that Sahadeva died second due to his arrogance and conceit. And, the others continued going forward. An emaciated dog was already with the Pāṇḍavas during their journey. Nakula was the third to die, and Yudhīśṭhira attributed it to his (Nakula) extreme conceit about his beauty. And, Arjuna’s death next, Yudhīśṭhira thought to himself that it was due to Bhīma’s voracious eating. And, then Devendra came in his chariot of gold and welcomed Yudhīśhṭhira to Svarga. But, he refused the offer saying that he would not do go alone, leaving his brothers behind. When Indra assured him that his brothers were already there, in Svarga, Yudhīśṭhira got into the chariot and reached Svarga, and he was elated to find his brothers there happy with Pāṇḍaka. (Mahāprathāna Parva and Svargārohaṇa).

34) Origin of certain words. Towards the close of his life incognito, Arjuna went to the Śāmi tree to take out Gāndīva kept in its hollow. Uttarā also was with Arjuna. Then Arjuna revealed himself to Uttarā, and also elaborated the meaning of his various names as follows:—

I shall tell you my ten names. Arjuna, Phālīgana, Jīṣu, Kriṣṇi, Śvetavāhana, Bībhatu, Vījaya, Kṛṣṇa, Savyāścī, and Dhanāṇjaẏa......I am called Dhanāṇjaẏa, because even after having conquered all the lands and amassed wealth I stand in the centre of righteousness......I am called Vījaya because in fights with haughty opponents I always succeed......I am called Śvetavāhana because white horses are harnessed in war to my chariot decked with golden ornaments......I am called Phālīgana because I was born in the month of Phālīgana and under the star, Phālīgana......I am kriṣṇi because during my fight with the Dayitas I put on my head crown glowing as Sun......I am called Bībhatu by men and Devas because I never resort to revolting means during war......Devas and men call me Savyāścī because both my hands are adept in using the bow, Gāndīva......I am Arjuna because, in the world people are rare who possess such fair colour as I do, and moreover I do only white (just and ethical) acts......I am called Jīṣu, because I am unassailable and unconquerable, and I subjugate and conquer, and also because I am the son of Indra......My father gave me the tenth name of Kṛṣṇa because I was very attractive (Kṛṣṇa = attractive).

[Mahābhārata (Malayalam)].

35) Wives of Arjuna.

(1) Paṇḍaka (2) Uḷīpi (3) Citrāṅga (4) Subhadrā.

36) Sons of Arjuna. Śrītaṅkri, Īrāvān, Bahbruvāhana, Abhimanyu.

ARJUNA II. A son of Emperor, Nimi. One Arjuna, son of emperor Nimi, got philosophical advice from a Muni named Asita (Brahmāṇḍapaṇaṇa, Chapter 47).

ARJUNA III. (See Kārttavīryāryaṇa).

ARJUNA IV. A member of Yama’s assembly. The other members are: Kapotaroma, Tṛṇaka, Sahadeva, Vīśva, Śāśva, Kṛṣṇa, Saśāhī and Mahīśvara. (M.B., Sāhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 17).

ARJUNĀBHIGAMANAPARVA. A sub Parva in Mahābhārata. (See Mahābhārata).

ARJUNAKA. A hunter. Dharmaṇapura was called to his side by Bhīṣma his body torn by arrows in fight and he felt very sad and sorry to see Bhīṣma in that state. To console Dharmaṇapura Bhīṣma related a story and this hunter was one of the characters in the story. The story may be summarised as follows:—

Once, the son of an old Brahmin woman Gautamī, died on account of snake-bite. A hunter caught and brought before Gautami the snake. His object was to kill it immediately. But the serpent proved its innocence by pleading that it bit the boy impelled and prompted by Death. At once death (mṛtyu) appeared on the scene and explained that it was prompted by the God of Death. And, it was the child who was responsible for the cause of death, and Gautami was the cause for the birth of the child. Ultimately Gautami herself assumed responsibility for the sin. Bhīṣma consoled Dharmaṇapura by telling that as in the case of Gautami in the story, the cause for every effect was the chain of Karma. (M.B., Anuvāsaṇa Parva, Chapter 1).
ARJUNAVANAVĀSAPARVA. A sub parva in Mahābhārata. (See Mahābhārata).

ARAKKA I. A synonym of the Sun. (See Sūrya).

ARAKKA II. A king of olden days. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 236).

ARAKKA III. The royal sage Rṣika was Arcka, the Asura, reborn. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verses 32, 33).

ARKKAPARṆA. Kaśyapa's son by his wife Muni. He was a Devagandharva. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 43).

ARTHAM. From the forehead of Mahāvisūṣu a golden lotus grew up from which Śri Devī was born. Dharmārtha (Dharma = righteousness and artha = wealth) also were born from Śri. (From the forehead of Viṣṇu, sprang up a golden lotus and His wise spouse Śri arose there from and oh, Pāñḍava, righteousness and wealth came into being from Śri). (Bhāśābhārata, Śanti Parva, Chapter 59, Stanzas 130 & 131).

ARUJAM. A sect among the Rākṣasas. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 285, Verse 2).

ARULMOLITHEVAR. The Saiva text of the south is called Tirumura, and it contains twelve songs. The seven of those songs were composed by Tirūṭiṉān ascendamandha, Tirunavukkaśar and Sundramurū. The twelfth song is called PeriyapurṆa composed by Arulmolitevar. He is also called Sekhilar. Tevar was prime minister (A.D. 1063-1112) of Cola. (Some great lives).

ARUṆA I.

1) Birth. Son of Kaśyapa by Vinātā. Kaśyapa, son of Brahmā, married Vinātā and Kadrū, and being so much pleased by their services he gave them boons. Kadrū got the boon to have 1000 nāga (serpent) sons, and Vinātā to have two sons more powerful and vital than the sons of Kadrū. After this Kaśyapa went into the forest again for Tapas. After a period, Kadrū gave birth to 1000 eggs and Vinātā to two. Both the mothers kept their eggs in pots so that they were in the right temperature. After 500 years the pot broke up and Kadrū had her 1000 sons. Vinātā felt pains at this and opened one of her pots. A child only half-developed emerged from the egg and he was Aruṇa. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 16, Verses 5-7). After another 500 years the other egg of Vinātā hatched itself and a glowing son emerged. He was Garuḍa.

2) Genealogy. While Rāma and Lakṣmīnāra wandered in the forest searching for Śītā they saw the wounded and disabled Jātāyu. Jātāyu described his genealogy as follows: 'Kaśyapa, son of Brahmā, married the daughters of Daksā. Of the two wives, Vinātā delivered two sons, Garuḍa and Aruṇa. Sampāṭi was Aruṇa's elder son and he (Jātāyu) the younger. (Vālmiki Rāmāyanā, Aranyakāṇḍa, Canto 14). Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19 also refers to Garuḍa and Aruṇa as the sons of Vinātā.

3) Aruṇa curses his mother. The fact of Vinātā forcing open one of her eggs prematurely and Aruṇa emerging out of it with only a half-developed body has been mentioned above. Aruṇa got angry at the haste of his mother and cursed her to live as slave of Kadrū for 500 years, and then Garuḍa would redeem her from slavery. He also asked her to wait for 500 years so that the birth of another physically deficient son like himself might be avoided. After pronouncing this curse Aruṇa rose to the sky. This curse was the reason for Vinātā's becoming a slave of Kadrū. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 16, Verses 18-23).

4) Aruṇa became charioteer of Sun. The Sun and the Moon betrayed to the Devas Rāhu, who waited at the entrance of Devaloka to snatch off the Nectar (Aṃṛta) got at the churning of the sea of milk (Kṛṣṇāmbikā). Thenceforth Rāhu does often swallow the Sun and the Moon. That phenomenon is called the eclipse (of the Sun or Moon. Sūrya-grahaṇa and Candra-grahaṇa). Enraged by these frequent attacks of Rāhu, the Sun-God began once to burn like anything. Murmuring that everyone would cooperate when there was something to be achieved, but would go on their own way when the object was achieved, the Sun-God began burning so virulently as to destroy all living forms, and the Devas were frightened by this and took refuge in Brahmā. Brahmā called Aruṇa and asked him to stand as charioteer in front of the Sun-God everyday so that the Sun's intensity might be reduced. From that day onwards Aruṇa has been functioning as the charioteer of the Sun. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 24, Verses 15-20).

5) Birth of sons. Śyen, wife of Aruṇa delivered two sons, Sampāṭi and Jātāyu. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 71).

6) Aruṇa assumed female form. Śilāvatī, the chaste woman, once did naked Tapas to redeem her husband, Ugratapas from the consequences of a curse. The object of her tapas was to prevent the next dawn (Sunrise). Owing to the intensity of her tapas the Sun ceased to rise, and this gave his charioteer Aruṇa some rest. Then it was that Aruṇa came to know of a programme of naked dance by the women in Devaloka. Women alone were admitted to the dance hall. Aruṇa, therefore, assumed female form and sat among the Deva women, and the beautiful 'female' kindled erotic sentiments in Indra and he enjoyed a night with 'her'. Also, a son was born to them. And, before the day dawned Aruṇa, at the instance of Indra entrusted the child to Ahalyādevi and returned to join duty as the Sun-God's charioteer. (Aruṇa, while he acted as Indra's wife was called Aruṇīdevī). Aruṇa was a bit late to report for duty, and when questioned by Sun he detailed the happenings during the last night. This evoked the desire in the Sun to see Aruṇa in female form. Aruṇa did so, and the Sun enjoyed her. This also resulted in the birth of a son, who too was, at the instance of the Sun, entrusted to Ahalyādevi. Ahalyādevi brought both the children with tender love, which Gautama muni, her husband did not like. He cursed them and turned them into monkeys. After some time Indra went to Ahalyā to see his child and he was told the story of Gautama's curse. Indra searched out both the monkeys. In view of the elder one having a long tail he was called Bāli (Vāli) and the neck of the second one being very beautiful, he was named Sugrīva. At that time, Rākṣarāja, the monkey King of Kiṣkindhā was very unhappy because he had no sons. He came to know of Bāli and Sugrīva, and requested Indra to give both the monkeys to him as sons. Indra gladly obliged him. Indra blessed Bāli to the effect that half the strength of anybody who attacked him would be added to his own natural power. Indra then sent him and Sugrīva to Kiṣkindhā.

ARUṆA II. A king of the solar, dynasty, and father of Triśaṅku. (Devi Bhāgavata, Saptama Skandha).

ARUṆA III. A sage in ancient India. A community of Rṣis was denoted by this name. Those Rṣis were called Arunas. The Ajas, Prśnis, Sikatas, Ketus and Aruṇas—they attained Svarga by self study. (M.B., Śaṅti Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 7).

ARUṆA V. A Rṣi. Tātārāyaṇa Arāṇyaka refers to him as born from the flesh of Brahmā at the time of creation.

ARUṆA VI. A Dānavā (Āsura) born in the dynasty of Viprācitti. He did tapas for long years repeating the Gāyatrī mantra, and got from Brahmā the boon not to die in war. Becoming very arrogant on account of this boon he left Pātāla (nether region) for the earth and deputed a messenger to challenge Indra for war. At that time a heavenly voice called out that as long as Aruṇa did not give up the Gāyatrī he could not be worsted in war. Then the Deva sent Brahmā to Aruṇa to make him give up Gāyatrī. Aruṇa questioned Brahmā as to why he of the enemy camp had come to him (Aruṇa). Brahmā replied: “You and I are not different; both of us are worshippers of Gāyatrī Devī. Being told so Aruṇa gave up worship of Gāyatrī Devī, and she felt offended at this and sent thousands of beatles against him. Thus, without fighting Aruṇa and his army were extinguished. (Devi Bhāgavata).

ARUṆA VII. A son of Narākāṣṭuṇa. When Narākāṣṭuṇa was killed Aruṇa along with his six brothers fought against Śri Kṛṣṇa and was killed.

ARUṆA II. A tributary of the river Saravatī. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 15).

ARUṆASAMGAMAM. The place where Aruṇā falls into Saravatī. (M.B., Śalva Parva, Chapter 43, Verses 30-45).

ARUṆDHATI I. Wife of Sage Vasiṣṭha.

(1) Birth. She was born as the daughter of Kardāma Prajāpāti and Devalūti. (See Vasiṣṭha).

(2) Other information. (1) Once Aruṇdhati got suspicious about the character of Vasiṣṭha and as a result of misunderstanding her chaste husband her beauty suffered a set-back. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 232, Verses 27-29).

(2) Aruṇadhāti shone forth in Brahmā's assembly with other Devīs like, Pṛthvi, Hṛṣi, Śvāhākṣīrī, Sūra and Śaceī. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 41).

(3) She outshone all other chaste women in devotion to her husband. She owed her great power to her chastity and service of her husband. (M.B., Aranya Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 15).

(4) The seven great Rṣis once offered her an honourable seat. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 226, Verse 8).

(5) There is a story in the Mahābhārata of how Śiva once blessed Aruṇadhāti. While the seven great Rṣis were staying at the Himālayas it did not rain consecutively for twelve years, and the Munis suffered much without either roots or fruits to eat. Then Aruṇadhāti began a rigorous tapas, and Śiva appeared before her disguised as a brahmin. Since, due to the failure of rains, Aruṇadhāti had no food with her. She cooked food with some cheap roots and served the guest with it, and with that it rained profusely all over the land. Śiva then assumed his own form and blessed Aruṇadhāti, and from that day onwards it became a sacred spot. (M.B., Śalva Parva, Chapter 48, Verses 38-54).

(6) Aruṇadhāti once pointed out to Vṛṣarṇa the evils of receiving remuneration (fee). (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 45).

(7) On another occasion she spoke about the secret principles of ethics among others. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 130, Verses 3-11).

(8) Once all the Devas eulogized Aruṇadhāti and Brahmā blessed her. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 130, Verses 12 and 13).

(9) Aruṇadhāti and Vasiṣṭha did tapas at the sacred Sarasvatī tirtha and entered into Samādhi. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 17).

ARUṆDHATI II. A wife of Kāla (God of death). Aruṇadhāti, Vasu, Yamī, Lambā, Bhānu, Maruttva, Sāṅkalpa, Mukurtā, Śāhīvā and Vās are the ten wives of Kāla. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 15).

ARUṆDHATĪVĀṬĀM. A holy place. If one takes one's bath during three days in the Sāmudrakā tirtha nearby and also starves one will get the results of Aśvamedhā yāga. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 41).

ARUṆI. Name given to Aruṇa when he attended Indra's assembly disguised as female. (See Aruṇa).

ARUṆODĀ. A river flowing through the island of Plakṣa, one of the seven islands of ancient times. The wind around ten yojanas of Plakṣa is very fragrant because it carries the divine fragrance being emitted always from the bodies of Pārvatī and her attendants, who drink water from river Aruṇodā. (Devi Bhāgavata, Āśṭama Skandha).

ARUPA. One of Dakṣa's daughters. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 48).

ARUPATTIMŪVAR. (The sixty-three's). In ancient times there were sixty-three devotees of Śiva in the south. They were called Nāyanārars and they have composed many famous sacred songs. Prominent among them were Tirūvānasambandha, Tirūnāvukkarasa and Sundaramūrti.

ARVA. The son of Ripuṭhānya. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

ARVĀVASU. An ancient Aśeṭci who had been a luminary in the Durbar hall of King Yudhiṣṭhīra. There is a story in the Mahābhārata showing the merits of penance of Arvāvasu. This story was told by the hermit Lomaṇa to the Pāṇḍavas, when they arrived at the holy bath Madhugilasamanga, during their exile in the forest. “Long ago two ascetics Raibhya and Bharadvāja had built their hermitages and lived here. A son named Yavakrīta was born to Bharadvāja. To Raibhya, two sons called Arvāvasu and Pāravāśu were born. Raibhya and his sons were learned men. Bharadvāja and Yavakrīta became ascetics. Yavakrīta started doing penance with a view to get the boon of learning coming to him automatically without getting it directly from Brahmins. When his penance became severe Indra appeared and told him that the boon he asked for was an impossibility and tried to dissuade him from his attempt. Yavakrīta was not willing to give up penance. Later Indra came in the guise of a Brahmin to the Banks of the Ganges and began to build a dam with sand particles. Yavakrita said that it was an impossible task. Indra said that the desire of Yavakrita also was as impossible as that. Still Yavakrita did not show any intention of drawing back. Finally Indra granted him the boon.

Yavakrita returned to the hermitage. Full of arrogance he hankered after the daughter-in-law of Raibhya. Raibhya plucked a tuft of hair from his head and put it as oblation in fire and created a giant who killed Yavakrita. Bharadvaja felt sad and cursed Raibhya that he would be killed by his son. Then with Yavakrita he jumped into the fire and died.

At that time Bhaddyumna, a Brahmin performed a sacrifice. He invited Arvāvasu and Parāvasu as helpers. As Parāvasu was going along the forest he saw his father covered with the hide of a deer and shot at him thinking him to be a deer. He stealthily informed the matter to Arvāvasu. Arvāvasu went to the forest completed the funeral rites of his father and returned. Parāvasu spread the rumour everywhere that Arvāvasu had murdered his father. In the innocence of Arvāvasu, nobody believed. Everyone avoided him. He became sad and forlorn and went to the forest and did penance to the Sun. The Sun appeared before him and blessed him. He returned and brought Yavakrita, Bharadvaja and Raibhya to life again.

All these occurrences happened in this bath called Madhubilasāngama, (Mahābhārata, Aranya Parva, Chapters 135, 136, 137). The report of a conversation between this hermit, and Śrī Kṛṣṇa who had been on his way to Hastināpura, is given in the Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 336, Stanza 7. Arvāvasu also is counted among the hermits who possessed the brightness of Bhrāma like Rudra.

"Hermit Vasiṣṭha! Now I shall give their names in order. Yavakrita, Raibhya, Arvāvasu, Parāvasu, Kāksvān, Aurisija, Bala, Aṅgiras, Rṣīmedha, Tithisuta, Kaṇva, these are the Bright hermits, having the brightness of Bhrāma, lauded by the world and as bright as Rudra, Fire and Vasu" (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Stanzas 30, 31 & 32).

Arvāvasu did penance to the Sun for getting children. The Sun-God came down from his way in the sky and gave him through Aruṇa directions mentioned in the Kalpa (one of the six Sāstras or Sciences) regarding Sāṁtipāṇi rituals. Arvāvasu observed them strictly and as a result he got children and wealth. This story is given in Bhāvīṣya Purāṇa, Brahma Parva).

ARYAMĀ. One of the twelve Ādiyās born to Kaśyapa and Aditi. (Ādiyās=sons of Āditi). The twelve Ādiyās are, Dītā, Arñamā, Mitra, Śakra, Varuṇa, Aṁśa, Bhaga Vivasvān, Pūṣa, Savitā, Tvāṣṭa and Viṣṇu. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 15).

Aṁśa is sometimes called ĀMSU.

ARYASA. A King of the Sūrya varṇa (Solar dynasty). See the word VAMSĀVALI (Genealogy).

ASAMANJASA (ASAMAŅJA). A King of the Solar dynasty born to Sagara. For genealogy see under SAGARA.

1) Birth. There is a story about his birth in the Rāmāyaṇa. Once there was a king called Sagara in Ayodhya. He married two women named Kesiṇi and Sumati. For a long time they had no sons and so they went to the Himālayas and started penance there in the mount of Bhṛguprasravaṇa. After a hundred years Bhṛgumahāraṇi appeared before them and pleaded them thus: "Your elder wife Kesiṇī will give birth to a son who will continue your dynasty and your second wife will give birth to sixty thousand children". After a few years Kesiṇī gave birth to Asamanjās and Sumati to a big ball of flesh. That ball broke and sixty thousand babies came out from it. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāndā, Sarga 33).

2) Character of Asamanjās. He was a very cruel man always tormenting people. He used to throw little children into the Sarayu river and stand on the banks of the river enjoying the sight of the children drowning. People hated him. His father, therefore, drove him out of his palace. To this bad man was born Asāmūman, a King who became the favourite of the people. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāndā, Sarga 39).

ASAMPREKṢYAKĀRTVA. See under DEVASARMA IV.

ASĀNĪ. A holy hermit. While Śrī Kṛṣṇa was going to Hastinapura this hermit met him on the way. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83).

ASIΔDHĀRTHA. A minister of Daśaratha. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Śloka 3, Sarga 7, Bālakāndā).

ASIKNI I. A river flowing through the Punjab in India. This is called Candrabhāgā and also Cīnāb (Cīnā). The Rigveda also mentions about this. (M.B., Bīhṣma Parva).

ASIKNI II. A wife of Dakaśa. Dakṣapraṇajāpati, son of Brahma, commenced creation with his own mind. When he found that it was not conducive to the propagation of the species he pondered over the subject once more and decided to effect it by the sexual union of the male and the female. He, therefore, married Asikni daughter of Viṣṇuprajāpati. There is a version in the seventh Skandha of Devi Bhāgavata that Viṣṇu was born of the left thumb of Brahma.* Then the virile Dakṣa-prajāpati begot by Asikni five thousand Haryaśvas with a view to propagating his species and the Haryaśvas also evinced great desire to increase their number. Knowing this devaṛi Nārada of enchanting words approached them and said "Oh, Haryaśvas, I understand you, energetic young men, are going to continue creation. Phew! You are children who have not cared to understand the ins and outs or ups and downs of this earth and then do you think you can create people? You are all endowed with the power to move about on all sides without any obstruction and you are only fools if you do not attempt so find out the limits of this earth". Hearing this they started on a tour to different sides of the earth to find out its boundaries. Just like worms fallen into the ocean the Haryaśvas have never returned so far.

When he found that the Haryaśvas were lost the mighty Dakaśa begot in the daughter of Viṣṇu a thousand sons called Šabalāsvas. They were also desirous of propagation but were also persuaded by the words of Nārada to follow the footsteps of their elder brothers. They discussed it among themselves and said "The words of the Maharṣi are right. We must also follow the course taken by our brothers. It is wise to commence creation after

*It was Mahāviṣṇu who gave Dakaśa his wife, Asikni, when Dakaśa was doing penance in Vindhyā. (Ṣaṣṭa Skanda, Bhāgavata.).
Those eastern notorious conquered this AnuSasana repeated. Under Kasyapa, the Sarmistha dynasty.

ASITADEVALA. A king of Vedic times. Sārṅkhīyāna Sūtra states that the Veda of Asurāvidyā was written by this King.

ASITADHVAJA. Son of Kaśyapa and Vinaṭā. He was present at a birthday celebration of Arjuna. (Sloka 72, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ASITAKĀŚYAPA (DEVALA). For details see under JAIGĪŚAYYA and Devala.

ASITAPARVATA. A mountain situated on the banks of the river, Narmadā, in the country of Ānarta. (Sloka 11, Chapter 89, Vana Parva, M.B.).

ĀSMĀKĀ. Son born to Vasiṣṭha by the wife of Kaḷmaṣapāda the King of Ayodhyā. (See Ikṣvāku vaṁśa) while the Kaḷmaṣapāda was walking through the forest hunting he saw Sakti the son of Vasiṣṭha. As Sakti did not care to give room for the King, Kaḷmaṣapāda wounded Sakti, who cursed the King and changed him to a Rākṣasa (giant). The giant immediately killed Sakti. After many years Vasiṣṭha blessed the King and changed the form of the giant and gave him back his former shape. The King was delighted at having recovered his former shape. He took Vasiṣṭha to his palace. Madayantī the wife of the King with his permission went to Vasiṣṭha and got with child. Vasiṣṭha returned to the forest. Even after the lapse of a long period she did not give birth to the child. Madayantī who was miserable at this, took an 'āśma' (a small cylindrical piece of the granite used to crush things placed on a flat square piece of granite) and crushed her stomach with it and she delivered a son. As he was born by using 'Āśma' he was named Āsmaka. This King had built a city called Paudhānyā. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 176).

ĀSMĀKA II. Āsmaka (m) is a place between the rivers Godāvari and Mahiśmati. Āsmaka was a king of this land. He fought against the Kauravas on the Panḍava side. (Karṇa Parva).

ĀSMĀKA III. A sage. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 47, Sloka 5).

ĀSMĀKADĀYĀDA. Son of the King Āsmaka. He was a soldier of the Kaurava army. He was killed in the battle by Abhimanyu. (Slokas 22 and 23, Chapter 37, Dṛṣyoparva, M.B.).

ĀSMĀKĪ. Wife of Prācīnā. Kaśyapa was born to Marci, son of Brahmā. To Kaśyapa was born of his wife Aditi, daughter of Dāka, Vivasvān. Descending in order from Vivasvān were born Manu, Ilā, Purūravas, Āyu, Nahuṣa, Yaśāti. Yaśāti had two wives, Deva-yāni and Śarmiṣṭha. The first was the daughter of Śukra and the second the daughter of Vṛṣaparvā. To Deva-yāni were born two sons, Yadu and Turyavas and to Śarmiṣṭha were born three sons, Druhyu, Anudruhyu and Pūru. From Yadu came the dynasty of Yādavas and from Pūru came the dynasty of Pauravas. Kausalyā was the wife of Pūru and her son was Jana-mejaya. Pūru conducted three Asvamedhas and secured the title of Vīṣvajīta (conqueror of the world) and then accepted the ascetic life and went to the forests. Jana-mejaya married Anantāja or Mādhavī and got a son named Prācīnā. Because he conquered all the land extending to the eastern horizon he got the name Prācīnā. Prācīnā married a yādava girl of name Āsmaki and got a son named Sainīyāti. (Slokas 6 to 13, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva, M.B.).
The charioteer of Bhima. When Bhima was fighting a battle with Shrutuyu the King of Kalinya, this charioteer brought the chariot to him. (M.B., Bhisma Parva, Chapter 54, Stanza 70 and 71).

AŚOKA II. A minister of King Daśaratha. Daśaratha had eight ministers. They were Jayanta, Dhrṣṭi, Vijaya, Asiddhārtha, Arthaśādha, Aśoka, Mantrapāla and Sumatra. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakānda, Sarga 7).

AŚOKA III. A King of the family of the famous Asura Āśva. This king had been ruling over Kalinya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 14).

AŚOKADATTĀ. Once the Vidyādhara (a class of semi gods) named Aśokavega was going through the sky, when the hermit maid of Gālāvārama (the hermitage of Gālava) were bathing in the Ganges. He hankered after them. So the hermits cursed him and changed him to a man. The name of Aśokavega in his human birth was Aśokadatta. The story of Aśokadatta in the “Kathāśārītirāgara” is as follows: Long ago there lived a Brahmin named Govindasvāmi, near the river Kālindī. He had two sons, Aśokadatta and Vijayadatta. They were good men like their father. Once there occurred a great famine in the country. Scarcity prevailed everywhere. Govindasvāmi told his wife, “I cannot bear to see the difficulties of our people. So let us give everything we have for famine relief and then go to Kāśi and live there.” His good-natured wife agreed to it and giving everything for the relief work, Govindasvāmi with his wife and children started for Kāśi. On the way he met a hermit sage who had renounced the world. He had his whole body besmeared with ashes. With his tuft of hair and garment made of the barks of trees, he seemed to be Śiva. Govindasvāmi bowed before him, and asked about the future of his children. The Yogi (hermit) said, “the future of your two sons is good. But this Vijayadatta will go away from you. Reunion will become possible by the goodness of Aśokadatta.” Govindasvāmi felt glad and sad at the same time. Leaving the hermit they proceeded to Kāśi. They neared Kāśi. There was a temple on the way. They stayed there and conducted worship in the temple and took shelter for the night under a tree outside the temple. Other travellers also were there. Being tired of walking all went to sleep. Vijayadatta the second son of Govindasvāmi caught cold. So he woke up in the night. When he began to shiver, because of cold, he called his father and said, “Father, it appears that I have caught cold and I am shivering. I would grow better if I could get some fire. So please get some twigs and make a fire. I don’t think, I may complete this night otherwise”. They saw a fire close by. It was in a burial-ground. Govindasvāmi took Vijayadatta to that place where a dead body was burning. Vijayadatta sat near the fire and warmed himself. In the meanwhile he was talking to his father. He said, “Father, what is that round thing seen in the middle of the fire?” “That is the head of a dead body burning” said his father who was standing close by. He took a burning faggot and hit at the head. The head broke into pieces and some viscous stuff from the head fell into his mouth. There occurred a sudden change in Vijayadatta. He became a fearful giant with huge tusks and hair standing erect on the head. Somehow or other he got a sword also. That giant took the burning head from fire and drank up all the viscous liquid in it. With his tongue which looked like blazing fire he licked the bones. Then he threw away the skull. Then he approached his father with open mouth to swallow him. “You! giant, Don’t kill your father, come here!” a voice shouted to him from the burial-ground. Thus Vijaya became a giant and disappeared. “Oh dear! my child! my son! Vijayadatta!” cried his father and came away from the burial-place, and went to the shelter of the tree and told his wife, son and others everything that had happened. Stricken with grief they all fell on the ground. All those who came to worship in the temple gathered round them and tried to console them. Among them was a merchant named Samudradatta, a native of Kāśi. He consoled Govindasvāmi and his family and took them to his house in Kāśi. He showed hospitality and gave them a separate place to live in. Noble men are kind to those who are in distress. The great hermit had said that their son would come back in due course. Hoping that such a time would come soon Govindasvāmi and his family dragged on their time. At the request of that wealthy merchant they stayed there on. Aśokadatta got his education there. When he grew up to a youth, he got physical training. He became such an expert in wrestling and other modes of fighting that nobody on earth could overcome him. During a festival there was a contest in wrestling. A renowned wrestler had come from the south to take part in the contest. In the contest which took place in the presence of Pratāpamukha, the King of Kāśi, the wrestler challenged every wrestler in the country and had overthrown each one of them. Having heard from the merchant Samudradatta, the King sent for Aśokadatta and put him against the wrestler from the south. A very serious fight began between the two. They grappled each other with firm and resolute grips. The audience was struck with wonder at the variety of the modes of grappling and twisting and turning they exhibited. Applause came from everywhere. The fight lasted for a very long time. Finally Aśokadatta threw the other to the ground, and got much presents from the King. Gradually he became a favourite of the King, and consequently became wealthy. One day the King went to a temple of Śiva, a little away from the capital to observe fast on the fourteenth night of the Moon and while returning he passed by a burial-ground and heard a voice saying, “Oh Lord! The judge had ordered me to be hanged, for a charge of murder, merely out of personal grudge and without any proof, and this is the third day since I was put on this scaffold. My life has not yet departed from the body. My tongue is dried of thirst. Have the kindness to give me a little water."

"Punished without proof! It will appear only so to the man who is punished". Thinking thus the King asked Asokadatta to give the man some water. "Who will go to a burial-ground in the night? I myself shall take water to him". Saying so Asokadatta took water and went to the burial-ground and the King went to the palace. The world was in darkness. With here and there a spark of fire and light of fire-flies and lightning mingled with the shouting of ghosts and the roaring of the demons and occasional cries of birds and animals the burial-ground was a dreadful place, where Asokadatta came and asked, "Who asked the King for water?" He heard a voice saying "Myself" and he went to the place of the voice and saw a man lying on a scaffold. An extremely beautiful woman also was lying under the scaffold crying, and getting ready to jump into the burning fire since she could not bear the separation of her husband on the new moon day. She had plenty of golden ornaments on her body. Asokadatta asked her, "Madam! who are you, why are you crying here?" She replied, "I, an unfortunate woman, am the wife of the man on the scaffold. My intention is to burn myself along with his body. I am waiting for his life to depart. Because of my sin he is not dying. This is the third day since he is lying like this. He will be asking for water now and then. So I have brought some water. But his face being high I cannot reach it and I am seeing him burning with thirst, and am swallowing the grief." Asokadatta said, "See! The King has sent this water for him. Now climb on my back and you yourself give him this water."

The woman instantly took the water and got on the back of Asokadatta who had stooped down for her to climb on his back. After a while he felt drops of blood falling on his back and looking up he saw her cutting flesh from the body of the man on the scaffold and eating it. He got wild with anger and catching hold of her legs he was about to strike her on the ground, when she shook her legs free and ran away and disappeared. Because she dragged away her legs with force one bangle came off from her leg and was left with Asokadatta. Her behaviour aroused in him at first compassion, detestation in the middle stage and fear in the final stage, and when she had disappeared from his sight he looked at the bangle she had left behind with astonishment. When he reached home it was dawn. After his morning ablution he went to the palace. "Did you give him water yesternight?" asked the King and he replied "Yes", and placed the bangle before the King. "Where did you get this from?" the King asked and in reply he said everything that had happened in the night. The King thought that Asokadatta was an extraordinary man and calling his queen showed her the ornament and told her everything. She was filled with joy and wonder. She praised Asokadatta a good deal. The King said, "Dear queen! This Asokadatta is a young man of greatness, learning, bravery, truth and of good birth. He is handsome too. If he would become the husband of our daughter what a good thing it will be? I have a desire to give him our daughter Madanalekhā".

The queen also said that the thought was pleasing to her. "This youth is the most suitable person to be her husband. Some days ago Madanalekhā had seen him in Madhu garden and from that day a change is visible in her. All laughing and playing is gone from her, and she spends time in loneliness and thinking. I knew this from her maids. Because of my thought about her I did not sleep last night and only just closed my eyes in the dawn. Then it seemed to me that a divine woman appeared and said to me, "My daughter, Don't give your daughter Madanalekhā to anybody else. She had been the wife of Asokadatta in previous birth". I woke up immediately. Believing in the dream I consoled our daughter. I am glad that now you also think so. Let the Jasmine creeper entwine round the Mango tree."

When the King heard these things from his queen, without wasting more time he gave his daughter Madanalekhā in marriage to Asokadatta. They suited each other so much that not only their relatives, but the others also were delighted. Brahmā is well experienced in joining suitable things together. As they were all getting on well one day the queen said to the King, "My lord! this Bangle being single doesn't shine well. We must have another bangle made in the same shape and design." The King immediately had some goldsmiths brought before him. He showed them the bangle and asked them to make one of the same pattern. They turned it on all sides and looked at it and said, "Please your highness! This is not man-made. It is not possible for us to make one of this kind. Precious stones like these are not available in this earth. So the only possible way is to search for its mate in the place where this was found."

On hearing these words the King and the queen were crestfallen. Seeing this Asokadatta said that he would bring the mate of the bangle. Fearing danger the King tried to dissuade him. But Asokadatta was not prepared to change his decision. He took the bangle and went to the burial-ground that night. To get the bangle he had to meet the same woman who had left the bangle. He began to think of a means to find her out. He procured a corpse took it on his shoulder and walked about calling out "Do you want flesh?" He heard a voice say "Bring it here", and he walked in that direction. He saw a beautiful woman who appeared to be the mistress, sitting in the midst of so many servant maids on a tree. He called out "Take the flesh". She asked "How much will it cost?" Asokadatta said, "There is a bangle with me. If you will give me another bangle like this you shall have the whole body". Hearing the words of Asokadatta the beautiful woman laughed and said, "That is my bangle. I have its mate with me also. I am the same woman you saw when you came to give water to the man on the scaffold. Now the situation is changed. So you do not recognize me. Tonight is the fourteenth lunar night too. It was good that you thought of coming to night. Otherwise you would not have seen me. Now see; let the flesh be there. If you will consent to do what I say I shall give you the other bangle also." Asokadatta promised to do what she required. Then she began, "There is a city in the Himālayas known as Trigandha. There lived a giant in that city. His name was Lambaijha. I bearing the name Vidyucchikā, am his wife. Only one daughter was born to me. Then my husband was killed in a fight with his overlord Kapālasphoṭa, who being kind did not do us any harm; and I live in my house now. My daughter is now a young woman. I was roaming about thinking of a way to find out a man of might and bravery as husband for my daughter. Then I saw you going this way with the King. The moment I saw you I knew you to be the man I was searching for and I decided to give you my daughter in marriage. What you heard as the words of the man on the scaffold was a trick played by me. You brought water to the scaffold and nobody needed water then. With the knowledge I have in Sorcery and witchcraft I put you into a little confusion. I gave you that bangle to bring you again to me and it has served the purpose today. Let us go to my house. It is my earnest wish that you should be the husband of my daughter. And I shall satisfy your immediate need also.

The brave Aśokadatta agreed to the request of the giantess. She, with her power, took him to their city through the sky. Aśokadatta saw the golden city and wondered if it was the sun taking rest after its tedious journey. There he saw the daughter of the giantess and thought her to be the incarnation of his adventurous spirit. She was beautiful in every part of her body. She was called Vidyutprabhā. He married her and lived with them for a while. Then he said to his mother-in-law "Mother! now give me the bangle. I must go to Kāśi. I have promised the King to get the mate of this bangle." Vidyucchikā gave her son-in-law the bangle and a golden lotus flower which he accepted with great joy. As before he came with the giantess to the burial-ground through the sky. Then she said "I shall be here on every fourteenth lunar night on the root of this tree in the burial-ground. If you want to see me come on that day." "I shall do so", so saying Aśokadatta came away and went to his parents. They were stricken with grief at the departure and exile of their remaining son. They were overcome by joy at the return of their son. Not waiting long he went to the King, his father-in-law, who embraced him with joy. Aśokadatta gave him the two bangles. He presented the golden lotus flower also. The King and the queen were amazed at the daring spirit of Aśokadatta who told them in detail everything that had happened to him. The fame of Aśokadatta grew higher and higher. The King and the queen thought it a blessing that they got so adventurous a son-in-law. Next day the King got a casket made of silver and placed the golden lotus at the mouth of the casket and placed it on the step of his own temple for everyone to see. The white casket and the red lotus were very charming to look at and they glistened as the fame of the King and of Aśokadatta. One day the King looked at it with pleasure and said "If we could get one more lotus like this, we could make another casket and place it on the left side of this". As soon as he heard it Aśokadatta said "If the King orders it shall be brought". But the King said "Ho! you need not go anymore on cranda like this. This is not such an urgent need".

After a few days the fourteenth lunar night came. Leaving his wife the princess sleeping in the bed he left the palace and reached the burial-ground. He saw his mother-in-law the giantess and went with her to the city of the giant and lived there happily for a while with his wife Vidyutprabhā. When he was about to return he requested Vidyucchikā to give him one more golden lotus. She said that there was no more lotus with her and that they grew in the lake of the giant King Kapālasphoṭa. Aśokadatta requested her to show him that lake. At first Vidyucchikā dissuaded him from this attempt. But he was stubborn. So she took him to a place away from the lake and showed it to him. The lake was full of golden lotus flowers. It was a pleasing sight. Aśokadatta immediately got down into the lake and began to pluck the flowers. The guards came and opposed him. He killed a few of them. The others went to their master and informed about the theft. Kapālasphoṭa with his weapons came shouting and roaring and saw his elder brother Aśokadatta. He was overpowering by joy and wonder. Throwing away his weapons, with love and devotion towards his elder brother he bowed before him. "My brother! I am Vījayaṭṭha your younger brother. By the will of God I lived as a giant so long. You might have heard this from father. Because we have met now by good luck I remembered that I was a Brahmin. My giganness is gone. On that day something obscured my mind. That is why I became a giant". When he heard the words of his younger brother Aśokadatta embraced him. Both shed tears of joy. At that time Prajñāpā Kausika the teacher of the Vidyādharas came to them and said, "You are Vidyādharas. All this happened due to a curse. Now you and your people are liberated from the curse. So learn the duties and functions of your class and with your people take your proper place in the society." Having taught them everything they required he disappeared. Thus the Vidyādharas brothers, having plucked golden lotus reached the peak of the Himālayas through the sky. Aśokadatta went to Vidyutprabhā who also having been liberated from curse became a Vidyādharā girl. With that beautiful girl the two brothers continued their journey and reached Kāśi where they bowed before their parents. That reunion appeared to be a dream or something nearing madness to their parents. They could not believe their eyes. Aśokadatta and Vījayaṭṭha each saying his name bowed before them. Their parents lifted them up and embraced them and kissed them on the head, and cried for joy. They did not know what to do or what to say. Their minds were incapable of thinking. Everybody heard this and was amazed at it. The King was also filled with joy. He came there and took them to the palace. Aśokadatta gave all the lotus flowers to the King, who was happy and joyful at the achievement of more than he had hoped for. Everybody appreciated them. Govindasvāmi, in the presence of the King asked Vījayaṭṭha to tell his story from the moment he turned a giant in the burial-place; "We are very curious to hear it" he said. Vījayaṭṭha began to say "Father, you have seen how because of my mischief, I had broken that skull and some viscous liquid fell into my mouth and I changed to a giant. After that the other giants gave me the name Kapālasphoṭa. They invited me into their midst. We lived together. After a few days they took me to the presence of the King of the giants. As soon as he saw me he was pleased with me and appointed me as the commander-in-chief of the army. He who was overconfident in his power went to war with the Gandharvas and was killed in the fight. From that day onwards all the giants came under my control. Then I met with my brother who came to pluck the golden lotus flowers from my lake. With this all the previous conditions of my life had vanished.
My brother will say the rest of the story. When Vijayadatta had finished saying Aśokadatta continued the story.

Long ago when we were Vidyādhāras both of us were going through the sky and we saw the hermit maids of the hermitage of Gālava, bathing in the Ganges. We wished to get those girls. The hermits who saw this with their divine eyes cursed that we would take birth as men and in that birth we would be separated in a wonderful way and both of us would unite again in a place where man could not reach and we would be liberated from the curse and learn everything from the teacher, and would become the old Vidyādhāras with our people. And according to this curse we too took birth as men and separation was effected. You all have heard it. Today I went to the lake of the King of the giants, with the help of my mother-in-law the giantess for plucking the golden lotus flowers and recovered my brother, this Vijayadatta. There we learned everything from our teacher Prajñāpti Kauśika and became Vidyādhāras and have arrived here as fast as we could.' Thus he informed them everything that had occurred.

Afterwards by the learning he received from his teacher he changed his parents and the daughter of the King into Vidyādhāras and then bidding adieu to the King Aśokadatta, with his two wives, parents and brother went to the emperor of the Vidyādhāras through the sky. When they reached there Aśokadatta and Vijayadatta changed their names into Aśokavega and Vijayavega. According to the orders of the emperor those Vidyādhāra youths went to the mountain of Govinda-kūṭa with their people as it was their abode, and lived with happiness and joy. King Prajñāpamukuta with wonder took one of the golden lotus flowers and placed it in the temple and with the rest he made oblations to god and considered his family to have made wonderful achievements. (Kāthāsārīśāgara, Caturākīkālaṁba, Taranga 2).

AŚOKASUNDARĪ. See the word Nahuṣa.

AŚOKATĪRTHA. A holy place near the temple of Sūrṣāra. (Mahābhbhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 88, Stanza 13).

AŚOKAVANIKA. A famous park in Laṅkā. It was in this park that Rāvaṇa kept Sītā having stolen her from Śrī Rāma. It is described in Vālmikī Rāmaṇya, Sundara-kāṇḍa, Sarga 14 and Aṇāyakāṇḍa, Sarga 56 and in Mahābhārata also:

"Thinking of her husband alone, clad in the garments of a hermit woman, eating only roots and fruits, in prayer and fast, in sorrow and sadness, she of the wide eyes lived in the Aśoka park which seemed as a hermitage." (Bhāṣā Bhārata, Aranya Parva Chapter 280, Stanzas 42 and 43).

AŚTĀBANDHA. A kind of plaster used for fixing idols in temples. The following eight things are mixed and ground consecutively for fortyone days and made ready to be put in the cavity around the idol when it is fixed there finally: (1) conch-powder (2) powdered myrobalam (3) resin (4) Koliśparal (a kind of roek) (5) river sand (6) powder of embic myrobalam (7) lac and (8) cotton.

AŚTĀBUDDHIGUṆA(S). Eight qualities of the intellect. Suṣrūṣa, Śravaṇa, Grahas, Dhāraṇa, Uha, Apoha, Arthavijñāna, and Tatvajñāna.

AŚTĀCŪRṆA. A mixture of eight powders. The eight things are: Cukku (dry ginger), Mulaku (chilli) Tippali (long pepper) Ayamodaka (celery seed) Jiraka (baraway seed) Karinijiraka (black caraway seed) Intuppu (sodium chloride) and Kāyam (asafoetida).

AŚTĀDAŚAPŪRĀṆA(S). The eighteen purāṇas. See under Purāṇa.

AŚTĀDHARMA MARGA(S). Eight ways of attaining mokṣa: Yāga, Vedābhāsya, Dāna, Tapas, Satya, Kṣaṇa, Dayā, laek of desire.

AŚTĀDHĀTU(S). Eight minerals: gold, silver, copper, tin, zinc, black lead, iron and mercury.

AŚTĀDIGGAJAS and AŚTĀDIKKARĪṇIS. There are eight male and eight female elephants standing guard over the eight zones. They are:

Besides these, there are four diggajas (elephants of the universe) who bear the earth standing below in the nether world. It is stated that the sons of Sagara who went into the nether land in search of the lost horse of his father saw these elephants. As they went to the east they saw the huge elephant Viruṇṇa, holding the earth on its head. It is said an earthquake occurs when for a change it shakes its head. Going to the left of it they saw the elephant Mahāpadamasama holding the earth on its head on the south. Going again to the left of it they saw Saumanasa holding the earth on its head on the west and going to the left of it on the north they saw Bhadra holding the earth on its head. (Vālmīki Rāmaṇya, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 40).

AŚTĀDIK(S). (Eight zones). East, South-east, South, South-west, West, North-west, North and North-east.

AŚTĀDIKFĀLAKA(S). The Devī Bhāgavata states like this about the eight zones and their guardians. Situated in the eight different zones of the Brahmāloka are eight big cities of the eight guardians of these zones each covering an area of 2500 yojanas. All these are on the top of Mahāmeru and Brahmā sits in the centre in his city called Manovatī. Around his city are the others as follows:

(1) On the east is Amarāvatī, city of Indra.
(2) On South-east is Tejovatī, city of Agni.
(3) On the South is Sāniyamani, city of Yama.
(4) On the South-west is Kṣaṇānjanā, city of Nirūti.
(5) On the West is Saṭadhīvatī, city of Varuṇa.
(6) On the North-west is Gandhavatī, city of Vāyu.
(7) On the North is Mahodaya, city of Kubera.
(8) On the North-east is Yaśovatī, city of Śiva.

(Aśṭama Skanda, Devī Bhāgavata).

AŚTĀDRAVYA(S). Eight substances of great medicinal value.
Aṣṭadūtagana(S)

Aṣṭadhungha. The eight qualities of a good messenger. (1) He should not stand perplexed when he is being given the message to carry. (2) He must be smart and enthusiastic. (3) He must have compassion for those in distress. (4) He must run his errand quickly. (5) He must be mild. (6) He should not be duped by the cunning words of others. (7) He must be healthy. (8) He must be able to talk convincingly.

Aṣṭagandha. Akil (Eaglewood), Candana (Sandal), Guggulu (Indian Bellimm), Māttī (Jātāmānti-Spikenard) Kusikuma (saffron), Koṭṭa (Kuṭṭa-bostus root), Rāmaṇa (Uśrām—Sweet rush), Iruveli (Valaka).

Aṣṭadunga(S). (1) Bhūtadayā, Kṣamā, Anasuyā, Gaurava, Anāyāsa, Maṅgala, Aṅkāpya and Asprā. (2) Buddhībala, Kulaśuddhi, Śama, Learning, Parākrama, Mitabhāṣā, Dāna and Kṛṣṭajitā. (3) Absence of Jealousy, Rjuva, Śucita, Santosha, Bhāsanābhaṅgi, Śama, Satya, Sthairyā.

Aṣṭajihva. One of the soldiers of Skanda Deva. (Śloka 62, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

Aṣṭaka. See under Aṣṭikā.

Aṣṭaka I. A King of the Pūru dynasty.

Genealogy. Descended in order from Viṣṇu as follows: Brahmad-Ati-Candra - Budha-Purūravas-Āyus-Naḥuṣa-Yāyāti-Pūru-Janamejaya-Prācinivā - Pramāna-Visvābha - Šrīndrīva - Sādhya - Rāhavādī - Raudrāśa - Matināra - Santrudha-Duṣyanta-Bharata-Suhotra-Bhṛpatra-Ajāmiddles-Aṣṭaka. (This Aṣṭaka was the brother of Śanuṣṭepha.)

Aṣṭaka II. A Rājarṣi born to Viśvāmitra of Mādhvāv, wife of Yayāti. (Śloka 18, Chapter 119, Udyoga Parva, M.B.). See under Gālava.

1) How Aṣṭaka went to heaven. This story was told to the Pāṇḍavas by the sage Mārkandeya.

"Aṣṭaka, son of Viśvāmitra, performed an Āśvamchda Yāga. All the kings took part in this. Pratardana, Vasumana and Aśvinara Śibi, and all the brothers of Aṣṭaka attended the function. After the yāga Aṣṭaka took his three brothers for an air travel and on the way met the great sage Nārada. Nārada was also taken in and as they continued their flight, Aṣṭaka asked Nārada who should step down from the aeroplane if only four were allowed to go to heaven. "Aṣṭaka", replied Nārada and explained the reason also. Once when Nārada stayed at the āśrama of Aṣṭaka the former found many varieties of cows there and asked Aṣṭaka whose they were. Then in self praise Aṣṭaka had said that all those were cows which he had given away as gifts. Aṣṭaka then asked who should get down if only three were allowed to go to heaven. 'Pratardana', said Nārada and explained the reason also. Once when Pratardana was taking Nārada in the former's chariot four brahmins one behind the other approached him and begged for a horse each. When Pratardana asked for some time the brahmins were not prepared to wait and so he gave all but one of his four horses and asked the fourth to wait. As he was also found to be persistent he gave the one drawing his chariot also and dragged the chariot himself but abusing the brahmins all the way. It was that abuse that gave him the slur. Then Aṣṭaka asked Nārada who should get down if only two were permitted to enter heaven. 'Vasumana', said Nārada and explained the reason. Nārada went to the house of Vasumana three times and each time the latter spoke highly of his chariot. Nārada also joined in praising his flower-chariot and the brahmins present there also followed suit. Pleased at this Vasumana became proud of his possession and his vainglorious talks made him unfit. Then Aṣṭaka asked if only one were allowed to go to heaven who should go. 'Śibi', said Nārada immediately. Even Nārada would be only next to Śibi and Nārada explained the reason thus. Once a brahmin went to Śibi for food. Śibi asked him what food he relished most and the brahmin said that he would like to have the fresh flesh of Śibi's only son, Brhadgarbha. Without even the slightest hesitation Śibi killed his son and cooked his flesh and when the food was ready he went out to invite the brahmin. But on going out the King saw the brahmin setting fire to his palace, treasury, armoury, stable, harem and elephant-sheds. Without even a quiver on his face, the king respectfully took the brahmin inside and gave him food. The brahmin was amazed at the patience of the King and sitting before his food for some time told the King that he would be satisfied if the King himself ate that food. Respecting the request the King was about to eat the flesh of his son when the brahmin who was none other than Brahman in disguise praised him for his devotion and brought him back his son adorned with sweet smelling flowers and disappeared blessing them. When his ministers questioned him about this Śibi said, "I do not give for a name or fame. Neither do I give for wealth and happiness. I do it because it is the only way to be rid of sins". (Chapter 168, Aranyā Parva, M.B.).

2) Other details. (1) Aṣṭaka was a Rājarṣi. (Śloka 5, Chapter 86, Ādi Parva, M.B.). (2) Aṣṭaka gave away all the punya (goodness) he earned to Yayāti. See under Yayāti. (Ślokas 13 & 14, Chapter 122, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

Aṣṭakalasya. This is a gesture in the Kathakali dance. In the play 'Kalyanaasnagandhi' the character of Hanumāna and in the play 'Kālakṣayavadha' the character of Arjuna do enact this. Increasing step by step the gesture takes eight forms in combination before it is finished accompanied by background drumming and music. (Kathakali).

Aṣṭakapālam. Purudāsa prepared out of eight Kapālas. (Śloka 24, Chapter 221, Sānti Parva, M.B.).

Aṣṭakaranā(S). Manas (mind), Buddhī (intelligence), Citta (thought), Ahankāra (egotism), Sanākulpa in the mind (imagination), determination, pride from egotism and Avadhāraṇa in Citta.

Aṣṭakasha(S). Kama (lust), Krodha (anger), Lobha (greed), Moha (delusion), Mada (arrogance), Mātraya (rivalry), Dambha (pride) and Asūya (jealousy).

Aṣṭakopavayasanā(S). (1) Pañsuna (2) Sāhasa (3) Droha (4) Irya (5) Asūya (6) Ardhanāsana (7) Vāganda and (8) Fārasya.

Aṣṭakumbhā(S). Suryabindu, Ujjāyī, Shilka, Śītalī, Bhāṣikā, Bhrāmārī, Mārccha and Plāvā. All these have to be practised by students of Yoga. (Mokṣa-pradīpam).

Aṣṭaloha(S). Eight metals.

1. Suvarnām Gold.
2. Rajatam Silver.
Aṣṭāmāṅgāla. Brahmins, bow, Fire, gold, ghee, Sun, water and King.

Aṣṭāmāṅgāt(S). The eight ministers of the kings of Ikṣvaku dynasty are: (1) Jayanta (2) Dhṛṣṭi (3) Vijaya (4) Siddhārtha (5) Arhasiddhāka (6) Asoka (7) Mantrapāla (8) Sunmanta.

AṣṭāmāṅgaS. Samyagṛṣṭi, Samyakṣaṅkalpa, Samyag-vāk, Samyakārma, Samyagāśita, Samyagyāyāma, Samyaksmiti and Samyaksāmādi. The Buddha Sannyāsins have to live according to these eight directives of life.

Aṣṭāmbā(S). See the sixth Khaṇḍika under Devī.

Aṣṭamī. The third skandha of Devī Bhāgavata states that the goddess, Bhadrakālī, came into life on an Aṣṭamī day to block up the yāga of Daks. That is why the day is considered to be holy and important.

Aṣṭāṅgaradāya. The medical science which deals in eight separate division the treatment of the human body. (1) Sārira (2) Bāla (3) Graha (4) Ěrdehīvāṅga (5) Sālya (6) Daṁśtra (7) Jara and (8) Vṛṣa. Bāla—Body which has not attained maturity; Graha—External elements which damage the health of infants; Sālya—Extraneous substance lodged in the body; Vṛṣa—the seminal fluid. (Directions of treatment).

Aṣṭāṅgayoga(S). Yama, Niyama, Āsana, Prāṇāyāma, Pratyāhāra, Dhyāna, Dīrghāna and Samādhi.

1. Yama. That which prevents the yogin from doing prohibited things. Ahūṁś, Satya, Asteya, Brahmacarya and Aprigraha are yamas.

2. Niyama. Actions leading to Mokṣa. They are: (1) Śauca—Cleanliness of the mind—cleaning it of such bad qualities like jealousy. (2) Tapas—indifference (Samattabhāva) to the pairs of opposites like pleasure and pain, heat and cold etc. (3) Śvādhśaya—purification of the science of salvation chanting of OM. (4) Sāntosha—remaining happy and contented. (5) Iśvara-Pranidhāna—surrendering all actions to God.

3. Āsana. Postures of sitting firmly and comfortably. Of the many āsanas the very prominent ones are: Śvastikāsana, Virāsana, Padmāsana, Siddhāsana, Vastraśana, Vṛūgarcāśana, Vatkalasana, Kṣūsana, Keśāsana, Viśtarāsana, Mayūrāsana and Kūrmaśana. Of these Siddhāsana is considered to be the best of the lot. This āsana strengthens the 72,000 nerves of the human system and all the yogis prefer this to any other. "Kimanyāḥ baḥubhiḥ pīṭhaḥ pīṭhe Siddhāsane sati" (of what use are the others when there is Siddhāsana).

4. Prāṇāyāma. Control of Prāṇa (Prāṇa is the life giving breath and āyāma is the checking of it). Select an airy place and be seated in an ordinary āsana facing north or east after taking your early morning bath. Sit erect with your breast slightly pushed forward and your head slightly drawn back. Then complete one Prāṇāyāma doing Pāraka, Kumbhaka and Recaka. The Rudrayāma states thus about Prāṇāyāma.

Daksāṇaḥṣena daksānī ca. Ghranam samplidyena manvantir.

Ijaya pūrayedvāyum. Mātrā śoḍaśabhiḥ kramāt.

Anugṛhaṇāmikābhāyanca.

Dīrgha nāśadvyayañi tataḥ.

Tatatau kampayedvāyum.

Pārakāṇḍam caturgaṇaḥ.

Anāmyāt tatāh vāma.

Nāsāṁ dīrghā tu dakṣine.

Dvātīrṣadāḥbiṣu mātrābhir.

Vāyurecanamācāre.

Closing the right nostril by the thumb of the right hand and inhaling air inside through the left nostril taking 16 seconds is called Pāraka. Closing the nostrils by the thumb and ring-finger and keeping the breath for 64 seconds is called Kumbhaka. Closing the left nostril well and then exhaling through the right nostril taking 32 seconds is called Recaka. Pārakās should be done through the same nostril through which you have done Recaka. (You must do at least ten Prāṇāyamas at a time).

5) Pratyāhāra. Withdrawing the mind from worldly objects and sensuous pleasures.

6) Dhyāna. Keeping your mind fixed on the tip of your nose. Meditation.

7) Dīrghāna. Steadily thinking of things you should know. Concentration.

8) Samādhi. The union of mind with God. This is a blissful superconscious state in which one perceives the identity of the individualised soul and cosmic spirit.

(Yogābhāṣya).

Aṣṭātarani. Eight names of Tārānīdevī. They are: Tārā, Ugrā, Mahogārā, Vajrā, Kālī, Sarasvatī, Kāmeśvari and Cāmunḍā.

Aṣṭāvakra.

1) Birth. The sage Uddālaka had a disciple named Ḵhogadara (Kahodara) and a daughter named Sujātā. Appreciating the devotion and good conduct of his disciple, Uddālaka gave his daughter Sujātā in marriage to him. Sujātā became pregnant. When once ᴴḥogadara was reciting from the Vedas the babe in the womb of Sujātā said, "I have learnt the mantra you are chanting but the way you chant it is wrong". (The vibrations of sound created by the utterance of each word is important). ᴴḥogadara was angry and he cursed his babe in the womb thus "Since your mind seems to be crooked let your body also be of that type, with
When Sujātā delivered the child it had eight heads and light curves and so the boy was named Āstāvakra, meaning one with eight bends. (Chapter 132, Vana Parva, M.B.)

2) Father died before he was born. When Sujātā was pregnant they suffered much from poverty and at the insistence of Sujātā, Khagodara went to the King Janaka, to beg for some money. Janaka was performing a yāga then and so Khagodara had to wait. When at last he went to the royal assembly he was asked to enter into a polemical contest with Vândina, the court scholar and having been defeated by him was asked to drown himself.

Uddālaka got a son named Śvetaketu and Sujātā delivered Āstāvakra. Both the boys grew in the āśrama on great intimacy and Sujātā withheld the news of the death of her husband from the boys. (Chapter 132, Vana Parva, M.B.)

3) How Khagodara was got back. One day the two boys went to bathe in the river and during a controversial talk Śvetaketu said that Āstāvakra had no father. This teased him much and Āstāvakra went to his mother and gathered all the facts about his father. He went, then, straight to the royal assembly of King Janaka. He was not allowed inside. The gatekeeper said that he was only a boy and only learned men could go inside the sacrificial hall. Āstāvakra contended that neither size nor age was any indication of one’s knowledge or worth and got himself admitted into the hall. There he entered into a polemical contest with the same court scholar, Vândina, who had killed his father. Vândina was defeated and was thrown into the same river in which his father had drowned himself. The moment Vândina fell into the river Khagodara rose up from there and the father and son along with Śvetaketu returned to the āśrama. Khagodara then took his son for a bath and when it was over Āstāvakra became a bright boy without crooks. (Chapter 133, Vana Parva, M.B.)

4) Marriage. Āstāvakra wanted to marry Suprabhā, the daughter of a sage named Vādaṇya. When Vādaṇya was approached for this the Sage decided to test the love which Āstāvakra had towards his daughter and said: “I am going to test you. You go to the north to the Himālayas. Pay homage to Śīva and Pārvati and go further north. There you will find and return a very beautiful damsel. You talk to her and return and when you come back I shall give you my daughter.”

Accepting this challenge Āstāvakra went north. When he went to the Himālayas Kubera entertained him. He remained there for a year enjoying the dances of celestial maidens and then, after worshipping Śīva and Pārvati went further north. There he came across seven very attractive women. At the command of Āstāvakra the eldest of the lot, Uttarā, remained with him; all the rest left the place immediately she started making love with him and requested him to marry her. But Āstāvakra did not yield and told her about his promise to Vādaṇya. Pleased at this reply Uttarā revealed that she was the queen of the north in disguise and was testing him. She then blessed Āstāvakra who fulfilling his mission successfully, returned and married the girl he wanted. (Chapter 19, Anuśasana Parva, M.B.)

5) Another version of how the body became crooked. There is another story also about Āstāvakra. Once there lived a sage named Asita. He did great penance to please Śīva to bless him with a child. Śīva blessed him and he got a son named Devala. Rambhā, the queen of devaloka, fell in love with him but Devala did not yield to her wishes. Then Rambhā cursed him and made him into one with eight crooks. Thus Devala came to be called Āstāvakra. He then did penance for six thousand years and Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa accompanied by Rādhā appeared before him. Rādhā was shocked by the ugliness of the sage and did not relish his sight. But Kṛṣṇa asking her to remain quiet went and embraced him. At once Āstāvakra lost all his crooks and became a beautiful man. At that time a chariot descended from heaven and all of them went to heaven in it. (Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa).

6) Other information. (1) Āstāvakra was also present among the rṣis who partook in the coronation ceremony conducted after Rāma’s return to Ayodhya from Lanka. (Uttararāmāyaṇa).

(2) Āstāvakra cursed those celestial maidens who rebelled against him for his ugliness and they were born on earth as the wives of Śī Kṛṣṇa. When after the death of Kṛṣṇa they were being taken by Arjuna to the north they were forcibly taken by some of the shepherds. (Chapter 15, Agni Purāṇa).
3) Rebirth of Aṣṭavasū. The Aṣṭavasū were pondering over the curse and were thinking of how to bear it without hardship when Gaṅgādevī appeared before them and they then appealed to her: ‘Devī, if you become the queen on earth of some noble King we shall be born as your sons and you must throw us into the river as soon as we are born’. Gaṅgādevī accepted their request. Once there was a King called Pratīpa in the Candra dynasty. One day when this ascetic King was worshipping Śārya on the banks of the river Gaṅgā a beautiful damsel arose from the waters and sat on the right thigh of the King. Surprised the King told her thus: ‘Oh beautiful maiden, who are you? Do you realise what unrighteous thing you have done? I am not one who goes after women and it is a bit daring of you to have taken me as a beau. Please understand that the right thigh is intended for a daughter and daughter-in-law. You can claim this right when you become the wife of my son.’ The beautiful girl was none other than Gaṅgādevī herself and she disappeared soon on receiving the rebuke.

Pratīpa got a son named Śāntana and Gaṅgādevī became the wife of Śāntana. (For more details about this see under Gaṅgā). When Gaṅgādevī became the wife of Śāntana she made a condition to be his queen: ‘Whether good or bad you should not obstruct any action of mine. You must never give me any opinion of yours on any matter. You must obey what I order. If at any time you break any of these promises I will leave you that instant.’

It was while Gaṅgādevī was living on earth as the wife of Śāntana that the Aṣṭavasū were born to her. One after the other she threw into the river seven sons but when she was about to throw the eighth the King objected to it and Gaṅgā disappeared immediately. That son was Bhisma, who was none other than Dyaus born on earth by the curse of Vasiṣṭha. All the others, released from the curse, went to heaven. (More details under Bhisma).

4) A missile to Bhisma. When Bhisma had to fight against his guru, Paraśurāma, the Aṣṭavasū gave him the missile, Pravāpā. (See Ambā) (Ślokas 11 to 13, Chapter 183, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

5) Sons of Aṣṭavasū. The sons of Āpa, the first of the Vasūṣ, are: Vaitandha, Śrama, Śanta and Dhvanī, Kāla, the destroyer of all, is the son of Dhrūva. Varac is the son of Soma. Dharma got of his wife Manohari five sons Dravīṇa, Hutaḥavayavāhī, Śīśirā, Prāṇa and Varuṇa. Śīśa was Anila’s wife and she got two sons, Manojava and Avijñātāgati. Agni’s son Kumāra was born at Sanastamba. Kumāra got three brothers, Śākha, Viśākha and Naigameya. Kumāra is known as Kārttikeya because he was born of Kṛttikas. The sage, Devala was the son of Pratyāśa. Devala got two sons of great intelligence and forbearance. Varastri, sister of Bhṛṣpati and a woman of great yogic powers and world-wide travels became the wife of Prabhāśa. She gave birth to the famous Viśvakarmaprājapati. He was the inventor of a great many handicrafts and ornaments. He became the consulting architect of the devas and ranked first in that art. The aeroplanes of the devas were designed by him. Men on earth depend on his art even now. That architect had four sons: Ajīkṣapā, Ahirbudhya, Vasiṣṭha and Rudra, the bold. The great ascetics, Viśvarūpa, Hara, Bahurūpa, Tryambaka, Aparājita, Viṣākapi, Śambhu, Kapardi, Raivata, Mrgavyādha, Śarva and Kapāli were the sons of Vasiṣṭha. These are known as the twelve Rudres. Purāṇas say that there are a hundred Rudres like this. (Chapter 15, Artha 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

AṣṭAVIḌHAṆAYIKĀ(S). Eight kinds of heroines of the stage:
(1) Śuddhina[pati]kā. Fit to be a counterpart in a love scene and play the role of one who is always fondled by her husband.
(2) Vāsakasajjikā (Vāsakasajjī). Adorning herself well and waiting for her lover in a well decorated bedroom.
(3) Virahokṣapī ṇī. Exhausted by the sorrow of separation from her lover.
(4) Viṭralabdhā. Cheated by her lover after fixing a date and a rendezvous.
(5) Khaṇḍī. Angered at the arrival of the husband in the early hours of the morning with suspicion about his character.
(6) Kalahāntarī. Repenting after having arrogantly disobeyed her husband.
(7) Prasītabhartrikā. One who has gone weak and moody thinking about her husband in a foreign place.
(8) Abhisārī. One who approaches her husband with great passion. (Nāyākrama).

AṣṭAVIḌHAṆAPRAKṛTYAVASTHĀ(S). Earth, Water, Agni, Air, Ether, Mind, Intelligence and Egotism.
AṣṭAVIḌHAṆAPRATIMĀ(S). Śilāmā, Dhātumā, Lohāmā, Lepā, Lekhā, Mṛṣymā, Maṇimāyī and Maṇomāyī.
AṣṭAVIḌHAṆAKUSTHĀ(S). Vimarcika, Bhadru, Maṇḍala, Śukti, Siddhmāka, Kṛṣṇa, Śukla and Tārūṇa. (Aṣṭāṅgahṛdaya).

AṣṭAVIḌVĀHĀ(S). Eight kinds of marriage. (1) Brāhma (2) Daiva (3) Arṣa (4) Prājapati (5) Gāndharva (6) Āśura (7) Rākṣasa (8) Paśāca. Brāhma is the one where the father gives his daughter with sacred water to a bachelor without accepting anything in return. When the father gives his daughter to the priest at the time of a yāga it is called Daiva. It is Arṣa if the father gives the daughter and gets in return a cow or bullock. When the father gives the daughter with her blessings it is Prājapati. The marriage between two lovers is Gāndharva. It is Āśura when the male takes his mate by force and it is Paśāca (most cruel and mean) when the girl is taken as his wife when she is in a state of unconsciousness.

AṣṭAVOGINĪ(S). The eight hermit-maidens who are the attendants of the goddess, Durgā. (1) Mārjati (2) Karpūratilakā (3) Malayagandhinī (4) Kaumudikā (5) Bheruṇḍā (6) Mātalī (7) Nāyakī (8) Jayā (Śubhā-cārā).

AṣṭOPĀYĀ(S). Eight ways of attaining salvation. Yajñā, Dāna, Vedādhyayanā, Tapas, Dama, Satya, Rjuśila, and Mārdava. These are the qualities required for attaining salvation.

ASTI. Daughter of Jārāsandha, King of Magadha. Kaniṣa married Astī and also another daughter of Jārāsandha. (Ślokas 29 to 32, Chapter 14, Śabhā Parva, M.B.). Chapter 12 of Agni Purāṇa states that Jārāsandha went to war with the Yādavas because of the persuasion of these daughters.

ASTRA. After killing the demoness, Tāṭakā, Viśvāmitra reveals to Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa the secret of using a great many varieties of Divyāstras (Divyāstra is a missile charged with power by holy incantation). Some of those astras are named below:

1. Daññacakra  2. Dharmacakra
5. Indracakra  6. Vajrāstra
7. Saivaśūla  8. Aśiṣa
11. Modakśīkhāstra  12. Dharmpāsa
15. Vārūnapāsa  16. Paramāstra
17. Pīṇākāstra  18. Nārāyaṇāstra
19. Āgneyāstra  20. Śikhāstra
23. Kruñcāstra  24. Hayaśirāstra
29. Māñavāstra  30. Prasthānapāstra
31. Prasamānāstra  32. Saurāstra
33. Varṣaṇāstra  34. Soṣaṇāstra
35. Santāpanāstra  36. Vīlānastra
37. Madanāstra  38. Mohāstra
39. Saumanāstra  40. Saṃvartāstra
41. Satyāstra  42. Māyādhārāstra
43. Tejaprabhāstra  44. Saumyāstra
45. Śīśirāstra  46. Tvāṭāstra
47. Sudānānāstra

The astra aṣvapati received all these astras standing facing east. (Sarga 27, Bālagāndha, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa)

ASURA. Those born to Kaśyapa of his wife Danu are called Dānavas and those born of his wife Ditī are called Daitivas. They belong to the demoniac dynasty (Refer under 'Asvaranīśa' in the genealogy chart). Renowned among the asuras were the following:

ASURA. One of the eight daughters born to Kaśyapa of his wife Pradhā. (Sloka 41, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

ASŪRBANIPAL. (See under Gilgamis, Jalapralaya).

ASŪRTARAJASA. A son born to King Kuśa of his wife Vaidarbi. Kuśāmba, Kuśānābhā, Aṣurtarajasa and Vasu are the four sons of Kuśa. (Sarga 32, Bālagāndha, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

ĀSVA I. A demon. This was the same demon who later on was born as Aśoka, King of Kaliṅga. (Chapter 67, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

ĀSVA II. A mahārāṣṭri. The sage Vāsa is the son of this rṣi. (Sūkt 112 of Rgveda).

ĀSVA (Horse). Horses and camels were born in this world, of Tāmrā, wife of Kaśyapa, grandson of Brahmā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

ĀSVAGHOSA. A famous Sanskrit poet. He has written many Sanskrit books prominent among which are the two great poems, Buddhaśacarita and Saundarananda and a drama called Sāriputraśrākaparāṇa. He lived in the 2nd Century A.D. His history of Buddha (Buddhacarita) was translated into Chinese during the period 414 to 421 A.D. He was known under the following names also: Ācārya, Bhadanta, Mahāvādī and Bhikṣu.

ĀSVAGRIVA. Son born to the Sage, Kaśyapa by his wife, Danu. (Sloka 24, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ĀSVARATDA. A mantra (sacred incantation) for controlling the horse. (See under 'Āksahdrdaya').

ĀSVAKETU. Son of King Gāndhāra. He fought on the side of the Kauravas and was killed in the battle by Abhimanyu. (Sloka 7, Chapter 48, Drona Parva, M.B.).

ĀSVAKRTA. A river. Once a sage called Rīṣika went to Gādhi and asked for the hand of his daughter, Satya-vati, in marriage. He demanded as dowry a thousand horses black in colour and with only one ear for each. Rīṣika prayed to Varuṇa and he gave him the horses required. The river Āsvakṛta (created by horse) was made by the flow of urine from those horses. (Chapter 57, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

ĀSVAMEDHA I. A country of ancient India which was ruled by a King named Rocamān. Bhimaśena conquered him during the world-wide conquering campaign. (Sloka 8, Chapter 29, Saṣṭha Parva).

ĀSVAMEDHA II. A yāga. Kings used to conduct this in order to get absolved of all sins. Fixing a victory card on the head of a horse it is allowed to roam about freely. If anybody stops the horse and ties it, the King should go and defeat him in battle and bring back the horse. If you do a hundred such yāgas you can become Indra.*

ĀSVAMEDHA. Son of King Sahasrāṇiṇa (Refer under Sahasrāṇiṇa).

ĀSVAMEDHADATT. Son born to Śatāniṇa of the princess of Videha. (Sloka 86, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ĀSVAMEDHAPARVA. A parva of the Mahābhārata. See under Bharata.

ĀSVANĀDĪ. A river in the country of Kuntibhoja. Āsvanādi joins Carmanvī ṣvaṇā and the latter joins the Yamunā and the Yamunā joining Gaṅgā falls into the ocean. It was through this river that Kuntīdevi floated in a box in the infant Karṇa. At night accompanied by her maid, Kunti floated the box containing her illegitimate son and stood on the banks of Āsvanādi weeping bitterly. Then thinking that her father would notice her absence from the palace she returned home soon. The box floated and reached the country, Campāpurī, ruled by a charioteer. (Slokas 22 to 26, Chapter 308, Aranyā Parva, M.B.).

ĀSVARATHĀ. A river in the Gandhamādana valley flowing near the Āśrama of the sage Arśiṭeṇa. Many kings of the Candra dynasty used to come and stay in this āśrama. (Sloka 10, Chapter 160, Vana Parva, M.B.).

ĀSVASANKU. Son of Kaśyapa born of his wife Danu. (Sloka 21, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ĀSVAPATI I. Father of the most chaste woman, Śāvitrī. He was King of Madra. He was without children for a long period and for eighteen years he worshipped the goddess, Śāvitrī and got a maiden from Agnihotra whom

* Āsvamedha or horse sacrifice was performed by autocrats to establish their supreme sovereignty. For this the horse let out to roam about should go into all countries. Those who opposed the sovereignty of the King could stop the horse and tie it. Then the King had to defeat him before conducting the yāga. The vedas enjoin that the sacrificial horse should be followed by a hundred young men, ready to fight those who opposed the King. Indra had conducted a hundred such yāgas.
he named as Sāvitrī. For more details see under Sāvitrī. (Chapter 293, Vana Parva, M.B.)

ASVAPĀTI II. The son born to Kaśyapa of his wife Danu. (Ślokas 24, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

ASVASENA. A serpent which lived in the forest of Khāṇḍava. This was the son of Taṅsaka and he tried his best to escape from the fire that burnt the forest. (Ślokas 5, Chapter 239, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

Once when Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa were sitting on the banks of the river Yamunā, Agni approached them and requested them to help him burn the forest of Khāṇḍava (see under Khāṇḍavatadāha). They agreed to help him and Agni started burning the forest. Indra poured rains over the fire; Arjuna created a canopy of arrows and prevented the rains from falling down. Asvasesa, son of Taṅsaka tried to escape from the fire but Arjuna obstructed his way by arrows. Then Asvasesa’s mother swallowed him and kept him in her stomach. Arjuna cut off her head. Seeing this Indra sent a cyclone to smash the canopy of arrows and Arjuna fell fainting. Taking the opportunity Asvasesa escaped. When Arjuna woke up from his unconscious state he found Asvasesa missing. Then Arjuna cursed him thus: “Let not you get refuge anywhere.” (Chapter 226, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

Asvasesa kept his grudge against Arjuna till the end. In the great battle Arjuna and Karna met for a fight and when Karna sent his Nāgāstra (serpent missile) against Arjuna, Asvasesa hid himself in that missile and burnt the beautiful headwear of Arjuna. But Karna did not like this foul play and refused to accept him when he came back. Enraged at this the serpent attacked Arjuna directly and was killed. Before his death he got acquainted with Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 96, Karna Parva, M.B.)

ASVAŚIRAS I. A son born to Kaśyapa of Danu. (Śloka 23, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

ASVAŚIRAS II. Bhagavān Hayagriva who was teaching the Vedas at Vaibhāyasakunḍa near Naranārayanapātra. (Śloka 3, Chapter 127, Śanti Parva, M.B.)

ASVAŚIRASTHĀNA(M). A sacred place in ancient India. Arjuna dreams of going to Śiva with Kṛṣṇa and in that dream they visit this place also. (Chapter 80, Drona Parva, M.B.)

ASVĀTAKA. A country of ancient India. (Śloka 15, Chapter 51, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.)

ASVATARA. A serpent. A sacred pond built in Prayāga also carries this name. (Śloka 76, Chapter 55, Vana Parva and Śloka 10, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

ASVATĪRTHA. An ancient holy place on the banks of the river, Ganges, near Kanauc. It was at this place that the horses rose from the earth at the request of Reka Rṣi to Varuna (See under Aśvakṛta). (Śloka 17, Chapter 4, M.B.)

ASVATTHĀMĀ. 1) Birth and genealogy. The semen of Bharadvāja Rṣi fell into the hollow of a bamboo and from there was born Drona. As per the instructions of his father Drona married Krṣṇa, daughter of the sage, Sārādvata. The good-natured Krṣṇa gave birth to Āsvatthāmā. (See under Drona for genealogy). (Chapter 130, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

2) How he got his name. The moment he was born he made a loud hoot like Uceiṣravas and the sound resembled the braying of a horse. Immediately a voice from heaven said that the boy should be named Āsvatthāmā. The boy was, therefore, named so. (Ślokas 48 and 49, Chapter 130, M.B.).

3) Training in archery. Āsvatthāmā took his lesson in archery from his father Drona. At that time Drona got new lessons from Paraśurāma and they were also imparted to Drona’s disciples. When Drona became the preceptor of the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas Āsvatthāmā also went with him. (Ślokas 52 to 64, Chapter 130, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

4) Drona’s affection for his son. Drona was very affectionate to his son and wanted to teach him somethings special in archery. So he used to instruct him during the time the other disciples went to fetch water for the āśrama. Arjuna came to know of this and he, thereafter, started bringing his quota of water quickly enough to join the special class of Drona. Thus Arjuna and Āsvatthāmā learned a lot more than the others in the military art. (Ślokas 17-19, Chapter 132, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

5) The Mahābhārata Battle and Āsvatthāmā. In Sābhā Parva we find Āsvatthāmā participating in the Rājasūya of Yuddhiṣṭhira. After that we meet them only at the Kurukṣetra war. Fighting on the side of the Kauravas he played a very important role in that war. He killed many veteran warriors and kings including the following: Nila, Anjanaparva, Suratita, Sautrūnjaya, Balānīka, Jayāṇīka, Jayāśvā, Srutāśvā, Hemāmāli, Viṣṇudhara, Candrasena, the ten sons of Kuntibhoja, Sudāraṇa, Vṛdhakṣetra, Cedīrāja, Malayadvaja and Suraatha. He defeated many including Śikhanda, Abhimanyu, Virāṇa, Sātyaki and Vindhyā. By using Agneyāstra (the arrow of fire) he made Krṣṇa and Arjuna fall fainting in the battle-field. He commanded the Kaurava army once. He killed many Pāṇḍallas and Somakas while they were sleeping. In Chapter 139 of Drona Parva we read about Arjuna defeating Āsvatthāmā in a single combat one day.

6) Āsvatthāmā sees a ghost. Dhṛṣṭadyumna, son of King Pāṇḍu, killed Drona. When Āsvatthāmā heard of his father’s death his rage knew no bound. He immediately went to the heart of the military camp of the Pāṇḍavas, Krṣṇa and Sātavata following him. There at the gate of the camp he beheld a ghastly apparition. It is described in the Bhaṭṭa Brāhart (Malayālam version of M.B.) as follows: He saw a huge figure standing at the door with a body blazing like the Sun and the Moon. Bathed in blood and wearing a tiger’s skin in the loins the figure wore a snake as his sacred thread and covered his upper body with a deer-skin. There were innumerable hands for this ghost and in each hand adorned with snake-bangles he held a deadly weapon. With crooked teeth and a ghastly face the ghollin gave a shiver to those who saw him. Flames bursting forth from his eyes, ears, nose and mouth he barred the way of Āsvatthāmā. Undaunted the son of Drona showered divine arrows on the figure. But the ghost by his supreme powers absorbed the arrows to his body; they touched him. In despair Āsvatthāmā meditated on Śiva and the latter appearing before him in person gave him a divine dagger. While that he entered the bed-chamber of Dhṛṣṭadyumna, woke him up by striking him with his foot, caught hold of him by the hair on his head and killed him.

7) Āsvatthāmā and his jewel. The anger of Āsvatthāmā did not abate even after killing Dhṛṣṭadyumna, the butcher of his father. With a view to destroying the whole Pāṇḍava dynasty he sent against the Pāṇḍavas the all-powerful Brahmāśāstra (a missile charged with great power by a holy incantation). But Drona had given the same type of missile to Arjuna also and so he sent forth his two sons to meet the other. It created such a great explosion that all the elders on both the sides joined together and requested them to withdraw the missiles. Arjuna demanded the jewel on Āsvatthāmā's head to withdraw his missile. But Āsvatthāmā refused to part with it. He said, 'This jewel of mine is more valuable than all the wealth of both Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas put together. If you wear this you need not be afraid of your enemies, disease, hunger and thirst. No harm will come to you from Yaśās, Nāgas or thieves. I will never part with such a jewel'.

(Ślokas 28-30, M.B., Chapter 15, Sautika Parva). After great persuasion Āsvatthāmā surrendered his jewel but without withdrawing the missile directed it towards the womb of Uttarā who was bearing a child then. We are reminded of an incident which happened when the Pāṇḍavas were residing in Upalāvya; a poor brahmin looking at Uttarā said, "When the Kauravas will be weakening in power a child will be born to you. The boy will have to bear a test even while in the womb and so you must name the child Parīkṣit (One who has been tested)."

When the powerful missile was flying straight towards Uttarā's womb Śrī Kṛṣṇa said, "Even though the child in the womb will die of this arrow it will be reborn. Oh, Āsvatthāmā, you will be denounced by all as a sinner for killing this unborn babe. To suffer for this evil deed you will roam about in the earth for three thousand years. Nobody will associate with you; you will be shunned by society. You will be tormented by all diseases on earth. But the babe which you have now killed will be a famous scholar and brave King. He will rule this country for sixty years. He will be known as the next Kururāja. Look, I am giving life to the babe you have killed". Vṛṣṇi supported Kṛṣṇa, and Āsvatthāmā repenting on his hasty action gave the jewel to the Pāṇḍavas and left for the forest with Vṛṣṇi.

(Sautika Parva, M.B.).

8 Synonyms of Āsvatthāmā. The Mahābhārata has used the following names also for Āsvatthāmā: Ācāryananda, Ācāryaputra, Ācāryasuta, Ācāryatanaya, Ācāryasattama, Draunī, Draunīyani, Droṇaputra, Droṇāsū, Guruputra, Gurusuta and Bhāratācārya.

ĀSVATTHĀMĀ II. Indravāmśa, King of Mālava, had an elephant of this name and it was killed in the battle by Bhīmasena. (Śloka 15, Chapter 190, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

ĀSVAVAT. A river. It is believed that if one just thinks about it at daybreak, midday and sunset one will get salvation. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Śloka 25).

ĀSVAVĀN. The first child of King Kuru. (See under genealogy of Kuru). His mother was Vāhinī. He is known as Aviṣkṛt also. He got eight sons: Parīkṛt, Śāhāśvī, Ādirāja, Virāja, Sāmalī, Uccaśārasva, Bhayānkarā and Jītārī. (Ślokas 50 to 53, Chapter 94, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ASVAVIKUMĀRĀ(S) (ASVINIDEVAS). Satya and Dasra, the two sons of Sūrya (The Sun) are called Āsvavikumārās. (Ślokas 17 and 18, Chapter 150, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.). They are also known as Āsvins, and Āsvinidevas. These two are the physicians of the devas. (Śloka 12, Chapter 123, Aranyā Parva, M.B.). country began to witness the evil effects of this cruel deed. People stopped passing urine or faeces. Even animals were affected. The King and his ministers were worried. People came on deputation to the King to describe the disaster that had gripped the state. The King began to doubt that somebody must have done some great injury to the sage, Cyavana. He started enquiries asking his subjects one by one about this. But everybody replied in the negative. He bribed, he threatened. The result was the same. Then one day while the King and his courtiers were sitting despondent Sukanyā approached her father and confessed what she had done. She said: “While I was playing with my friends in the tapovana I saw this huge shrub-heap and two points gleaming from inside. I took a pin-stick and pricked them both and on drawing it out I found it wet also. But I left the matter there and never made any enquiries thereafter”. Saryāti now knew the cause of this national disaster and so immediately rushed to the sage for forgiveness. Prostrating before the ṛṣi the King pleaded “Oh, best of ṛṣis, forgive us for this injury done unknowingly. My daughter who is only an innocent child did this playful while she was playing in this garden with her friends. She never knew what she pricked for a fun were your eyes. Oh, the best of sage, thou art rich in forgiveness and so please do condone this mischief and bless us.” Cyavana replied that he would forgive if he gave Sukanyā in marriage to him. Saryāti was depressed. How could he give his only and beautiful daughter to this aged senile ugly and blind ṛṣi? While the King was thus pondering over this, Sukanyā herself came to him and said, “Oh, dear father, please do not worry on my account. I shall go as his wife. If he is satisfied the nation would be saved from a calamity and I am prepared to sacrifice my happiness for the sake of the country. I will be only too glad to do so.” With suppressed unwillingness the King gave his daughter in marriage to Cyavana.

Sukanyā after her marriage engaged herself fully in the service of looking after the welfare of her husband. She gave her husband healthy and tasty fruits and vegetables, bathed him daily in hot water, placed before him all the materials for his pūjā and when the time came for his meals gave him his food sitting by his side. After the meals she gave him tāmbūla and only after putting him on a bed would she go to attend to her own affairs. After finishing her meals she would come again to her husband and sit by his side massaging him. In the evening she would make ready all the things required for the pūjā and after the pūjā feed him with nourishing food. Whatever remained after his feed would be taken by her. At night she would be at the foot of her husband and take a nap. In the morning she would attend to all the details of the ablutions of her husband. Thus Sukanyā lived true to her husband always anxious to please him. Then one day the Āsvinikumāras saw her going to the aśrama after her bath. They were very much attracted by the stunning beauty of the maiden that they approached her and asked: “Oh, beautiful maiden, who are you? We are Āsvinikumāras. You seem to be alone. How did you happen to come to this place? You are one who should always move about with friends and courtiers and what is the reason for your living like this?” Sukanyā replied, “Revered Devas, I am the daughter of Saryāti and wife of Cyavana. Forced by certain circumstances my father gave me in marriage to this sage who is very old and blind. He is living in the aśrama nearby. I am living with him looking after his comfort. If you think it convenient you can come and accept our hospitality.” Hearing this the Āsvinikumāras told her thus: “Sweet girl, you are fit to be the wife of one who is better than this blind old ascetic. So please do accept one of us as your husband”. Sukanyā did not relish this talk and threatening them that if they did not withdraw she would curse them to ashes. The Āsvinidevas were a bit surprised and also frightened at the attitude of Sukanyā. “Oh, Princess, we are immensely pleased at your sense of righteousness and chastity and you can ask of us a boon. We are physicians of the devas and can give your husband his sight and can also make him young and virile. But there is a condition for this. As soon as your husband becomes young and handsome we will also become like him and then you can select one among us. Are you willing? If so we will make your husband charming and handsome at this instant.

Sukanyā was well pleased with this offer but the condition placed did not satisfy her. So she ran to the aśrama and told her husband thus: “Lord, I met the Āsvinidevas on my way from the river after my bath and enamoured of my beauty they have made this offer. We will make your husband young and beautiful giving him back his eyesight and then we will change ourselves to resemble him. You have then to select one of us as your husband. I am not able to understand their cunning and so I have come to you to get from you the answer for their question. I am anxious to see you young and handsome with your eyesight regained. I shall do as you direct.”

Cyavana said: “There is nothing in this for great thinking. You go and tell them that you would do as they wish and bring them down here. On hearing this Sukanyā went to the Āsvinikumāras and took them to the aśrama. They asked Cyavana to take a dip in the lake nearby and as he entered the lake the Āsvinidevas also entered it and took a dip in its waters along with Cyavana. Lo! As they rose from the waters all the three became young and handsome looking alike. The Āsvinidevas then requested Sukanyā to select one among them. Sukanyā was in a fix and she prayed to her goddess to give her power to identify her husband. She was blessed with that power and she selected Cyavana from the lot at which the Āsvinidevas were also pleased. (Seventh Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

4) Cyavana’s gratitude. Cyavana who got back his eyesight and youth asked the Āsvinikumāras what boon they wanted. They then told him thus: “We are the physicians of the devas. Devendra has unnecessarily put a ban on our drinking Soma (juice extracted from the creeper Soma). When Brahmā performed a yāga at Mahāmeru this leader of the devas did not allow us to take a soma drink. If you are capable of doing it you should get us the right to take this celestial drink.” Cyavana promised to do that.

Before long, King Saryāti and his wife came to the aśrama to enquire about the welfare of their daughter. To their great amazement they found a young and handsome ascetic at the aśrama and were a bit suspicious of the character of their daughter. But soon all doubts were cleared and they were immensely pleased. Cyavana then told the King the request of the Aśvinidevas and Śaryāti also promised his help on this matter.

On their return to their palace Śaryāti decided to perform a big yāga to which all the devas were also invited. Cyavana officiated as priest. The Aśvinidevas were also present quite to the dislike of Indra. The time came for distributing soma, and when Cyavana called the Aśvinikumāras to take their share Indra objected saying that since they were physicians of the devas they could not be given that drink. Cyavana argued against that and after a great verbal combat Cyavana succeeded in making the Aśvinikumāras take the drink. For more details look under ‘Cyavana’. (Seventh Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

5) Other information regarding Aśvinikumāras.

(1) How they tested Upamaṇyu. This story is given under the word Apodadhamyā.

(2) Birth of Nakula and Sahadeva. Kunti, wife of Pāṇḍu, had obtained from Sage Durvāsā five sacred mantras, the chanting of each of which would give her a child. Even before her marriage Kunti tested the power of the mantras by chanting one of them. Sūrya appeared and she had to take a son from him who became the famous Karna later. By chanting the second, third and fourth meditating on Yama, Vāyu and Indra, Kunti got respectively the sons Dharmaputra, Bhima and Arjuna. The fifth mantra she gave to Mādrī and she meditated on the Aśvinidevas and got Nakula and Sahadeva.

(3) The Aśvinidevas were present for the marriage of Pāncālī. (Śloka 6, Chapter 166, Ādi Parva, M.B.). During the burning of the forest Khāṇḍāva the Aśvinidevas stood on the side of Arjuna.

(4) King Yuvanāśva became pregnant and bore a child. It was the Aśvinidevas who took the child out by surgery. The boy became known as Māndhātā later. (Śloka 3, Chapter 62, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

(5) During the Mahābhārata, the Aśvinidevas handed over some Pārśadas to the god, Skanda. (Śloka 38, Chapter 43, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

(6) The Aśvinidevas like very much oblataions of Ghee. The others who like it are Brāhaspati, Pūṣan, Bhaga and Pāvaka. (Śloka 7, Chapter 65, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

(7) The month of Āśvina (October-November) is the month of Aśvinikumāras and if a man gives ghee to the Brahmins freely in that month he will acquire more physical beauty. (Śloka 10, Chapter 65, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

(8) One who offers Ghee as oblation to the fire for twelve months in succession will reach the country of the Aśvinikumāras. (Śloka 95, Chapter 107, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

(9) The great poet of Kerala, Vallathol, in his commentary on the 93rd Śūkta of the Rgveda states that there is a belief that the Aśvin and Candrasūryas (the Sun and Moon) are one and the same.

(10) Dirghaśiras son of Dirghatama once prayed to the Aśvinidevas to get rains and it is said that they gave a downpour of sweet water. (Rgveda, Śūkta 112, Rk 11).

(11) Once a sage named Gotama was lost in a desert and craved bitterly for drinking water. He prayed to the Aśvinidevas for water and they dug a well itself in the desert and quenched the thirst of the sage. (Rk 9, Śūkta 16, Rgveda).

(12) The sage Dadhyāṃśi taught the Aśvinidevas the technique, Madhuvidyā. There is an interesting story about it. It was Indra who taught this to Dadhyāṃśi and while teaching him he had threatened that if he gave away that secret to anybody else his head would be cut off. Aśvinidevas found a way to tide over this difficulty. They at first cut off his head and fixed the head of a horse on him. It was with the head of a horse that Dadhyāṃśi taught them Madhuvidyā and as soon as the teaching was over his horse-head was cut off and the real head placed in its place. (Rk 22, Śūkta 116, Rgveda).

(13) The vehicle of the Aśvinidevas is a donkey. Once this donkey in the disguise of a wolf went and stayed with Rjarāśva, son of the Rājaśī Vṛṣāgir. Rjarāśva gave the wolf to eat hundred goats belonging to the people of the place. Vṛṣāgir got angry at this act of his son and cursed him. The son became blind and he got back his eyesight by pleasing the Aśvinidevas by prayer and offerings. (Rk 16, Śūkta 115, Rgveda).

(14) Once Sūrya decided to give his daughter in marriage to the owner of the horse which would win a horse-race which Sūrya would conduct. In the race the horse of the Aśvinidevas won and they thus married Sūrya’s daughter. (Rk 17, Śūkta 117, Rgveda).

(15) The Aśvinikumāras killed an asura of name Viṣvak and destroyed his dynasty also. (Rk 16, Śūkta 117, Rgveda).

AŚVINIKUMĀRATIRTHA. It is believed that the physical beauty of man would be increased if he bathes in this lake. (Śloka 17, Chapter 83, Vana Parva, M.B.).

AŚVINISUTA. A son born to Sūrya of the wife of Sutapas. There is this story about it in Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa. Once when the wife of Sutapas was on a pilgrimage Sūrya happened to see her. The beautiful and venerable lady refused to accede to the desire of Sūrya and so the latter used force and took her. They had a son who was named Aśvinisuta. On her return after the pilgrimage with her son she explained all that happened and the sage sent both of them out. Sūrya taught his son Aśvinisuta astrology and made him a master in that science. Knowing that, Sutapas cursed him and said he would turn to be one very diseased. Later the sage amended his curse and added that he would be free from disease if he worshipped the sun.

AŚVINTIRTHA. Promises bodily splendour if one takes a bath in this lake. (Śloka 21, Chapter 25, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

ATALA. This is one of the seven sections of Pātalā. The seven sections are : Atala, Vitala, Sutala, Talātala, Mahātala, Rasātala, Pātalā. Of them Atala has been described as follows : Atala is the first world of Pātalā. There reigns Bala, the son of Maya who is the famous but haughty magician. He has created 96 Mayas who are capable of granting all kinds of desires. Even now certain persons who are interested in the practice of Black magic, learn some of these 96 arts and practise them. When this mighty fellow opens his mouth for yawning, three groups of women known as Purīścalīs, Svairīṇīs and Kāmīnīs emerge from his mouth. He has with him a rāṣṭayana called hātaka with which he can easily entice and seduce all who enter Atala and to strengthen them for satisfying his lust. After enticing them with it, he enjoys uncontrolled pleasure with them, showering on them his amorous glances, bewitching smiles and embraces. (Devī Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha)

ATAVĪŚIKHARA. Name of a village in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 48).

ATHARVA(M). Among the Vedas, this has the fourth place. It comprises different kinds of incantations of occult powers for the destruction of enemies. Atharvan the son of Vasiṣṭha was the author of this Veda. In Chapter 6 of the third section of Viṣṇu Purāṇa the following reference is made to Atharvaveda: “Sumantu Mahārṣi who was of infinite glory, first taught this Atharvaveda to his disciple Kabandha. (Sumantu Mahārṣi was the son of Jāminī, who was the disciple of Vedavyāsa). Kabandha divided Atharvaveda into two parts and communicated them to two Mahāris named Devadarśa and Pathya. Devadarśa’s disciples were: Medhī, Brahmabali, Sautkāyani and Pippalāda. Pathya had three disciples named Jābali, Kumudādī and Āsana. They also made Atharvaveda compilations. Śaunaka divided his compilation into two and gave one part to Bābhr and the other to Saṁdhava. Muṇjikēśa learnt it from Saṁdhava and divided the compilation first into two and later into three parts. The five divisions of the Atharvaveda—Naksatrakalpa, Vedalkalpa, Śaṁhitākalpa, Āgīrasakalpa and Śaṁti-kalpa, were made by Muṇjikēśa. Naksatrakalpa contains Brahma's works: Śaṁhitākalpa contains Mantra Vidhi; Āgīrasakalpa contains ābhiścara and Śaṁti Kalpa contains taming of horses, elephants etc.

The mantras (incantations) in Atharvaveda and their uses are given below:

ATHARVA. This muni is referred to in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 50, as a professional chanter of Chandavēda. Once under the curse of Bhṛgu Mahārṣi, Agni hid himself under the sea. (See “AGNI”). At that time, it was Atharvā who, at the suggestion of the Devas, went under the water and discovered Agni. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 8).

Atharvā recovered Agni, and re-created the worlds which were lying dormant owing to the absence of fire. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 19).

Atharvā was born from Brahmā’s face. His wife was Śaṇtī, the daughter of Kardama. Citti was another name for Śaṇtī. But there are some Purāṇas which refer to Citti as another wife of Atharvā. Also, there are Purāṇas which say that Atharvā was Aṅgiras himself.

ATHARVĀΝGIRAS. See AṅGIRAS.

ATHARVĀNA. A son of Vasiṣṭha. (Bhāgavata, Fourth Skandha, Verse 42).

ATHIDHA(M). Name of a Janasthāna (Town) in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 64).

ATIBAHU. He was a Gandharva born to Kaśyapa by his wife Pradhā. He had three brothers: Hāhā, Hūhū and Tumburu. (M.B., Aḍi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 51).

ATIBALA. A mantra. Viśvāmitra who took the boys Rāma and Laksmana to the forest taught them two mantras, Bala and Atibala, to liberate them from hunger and thirst. Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 22)

ATIBALA I. The Mahārṣi Atibala was the cause of the death of Śri Rāma and Laksmana. After the war with Rāvana, Śri Rāma returned to Ayodhya with his retinue and began his reign. After renouncing Sītā while Śri Rāma was living in the palace with Laksmana, Śatrughna and their families, one day Brahmā summoned Yama and said: “Śri Rāma is the incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu. He has fulfilled all the purposes of the incarnation. Now Viṣṇu has to be recalled to Vaikuṇṭha”.

On hearing this, Yama assuming the guise of a Sannyāsī named Atibala appeared before Śri Rāma. He said he had to tell a secret to Śri Rāma. Accordingly Śri Rāma sent everyone else out of the audience chamber.
Lakşmana was asked to guard the entrance. It was announced that if anyone entered the hall, Lakşmana would be killed.

At this stage, Maharsi Durvásas arrived at the entrance accompanied by many of his disciples. He had come after having performed penance for a thousand years and in great hunger and thirst. He wanted to see the King to ask for sumptuous food. Lakşmana requested him to wait a little but Durvásas refused to do so. He even threatened that he would reduce all of them to ashes by his curse. Finding no alternative, Lakşmana entered the hall and informed Śri Rāma of the situation. Durvásas was given a sumptuous meal. But for the fulfilment of the condition Lakşmana’s death became necessary. Śri Rāma eried with a broken heart. The honest Lakşmana went alone to the Sarayu river and drowned himself in its depths. Soon after, Śri Rāma entrusting the affairs of the state to others and in the presence of thousands of spectators plunged into the Sarayu river and renouncing his earthly life, returned to Vaikuṇtha.

(Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

ATIBALA II. The name of a follower given to Skanda by god Vāyu on the battle-field. (M.B., Sāya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 44).

ATIBALA III. There was another King named Atibala who was a great scholar in Nitiśāstra. From the time of his accession to the throne, he began to lead a vieious life. This Atibala’s father was a King named Anaṅga. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 92).

ATIBHIMA. One of the sons of the Agni, Tapasvī. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 11).

ATIKAYA. One of the sons of Rāvana.

1) Previous Birth. This is a story concerning the initial stage of the creation of the Universe. After completing the task of creation Brahmā, in his pride fell into a sleep. In order to slight Brahmā a little, Mahāviśvā produced two Rākṣasas called Madhu and Kaṭiṭaḥa from his ears. Hearing their terrible roar Brahmā woke up in fear and fled to Mahāviśvā seeking refuge. Viṣṇu called Madhu and Kaṭiṭaḥa and asked them what boon they would like to ask. They proudly replied that they would grant a boon to Viṣṇu. In that case Mahāviśvā wanted them to grant him leave to kill them. They answered: “We will not break our promise about granting the boon. But since our passion for fighting has not been abated, you must fulfill our eager desire.” Mahāviśvā said: “I agree. But let my boon be carried out first. After that I shall see that your wish is properly fulfilled. After your death, one of you will be reborn under the name of Khara and the other under the name of Atikāya. In the Tretāyuga I shall kill Khara in single combat after allaying his passion for fighting. Lakṣmana who is the incarnation of Ananta will fight with Atikāya to his full satisfaction and kill him. Thus both of you will get Virakta and Mukti.”

After saying this, Mahāviśvā made the two asuras stand on each of his thighs and killed them with his Sudarśana Cakra. They were born again as Khara and Atikāya. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

2) Birth. There is a story about the birth of Atikāya in the Yuddha Kāṇḍa of Kamba Rāmāyaṇa : After his victory over Kubera Rāvana was returning in his Puspaka Viṁśā. On his way he saw some beautiful Gandharva women playing in the valley of Mayūragiri. Their leader was Citrāṅgi, the wife of Citrāṅgada.

Rāvana seduced her and had a secret union with her. At once she became pregnant and gave birth to a dazzingly bright baby. The mother handed over the child to Rāvana and returned to the world of the Gandharvas. Rāvana, in his paternal love, took the child into the Viṁśā and proceeded. On the way, the Viṁśā knocked against a mountain peak and the baby was thrown overboard and fell in the forest. Rāvana stopped the Viṁśā and made a search for the baby in the forest. He found the child without the slightest injury, smiling and lying on a flat rock in the deep woods. He failed in his attempt to take it up even though he used ten of his hands. The child began to grow steadily in size. Then he tried again to lift the baby up using all his twenty arms. The boy, who had by this time grown into enormous size, suddenly sprang up and getting into the Viṁśā took his seat in it. Rāvana gave him the name Atikāya. On his arrival in Lankā, he presented him as adopted son to the barren Dhanyamālā. Atikāya was brought up by Dhanyamālā.

3) The Boons. Atikāya went to Gokarṇa and did penance to please Brahmā. Brahmā appeared, but being fully absorbed in Śamādhi, Atikāya was not aware of his presence. Even his life-breath had been stopped. Brahmā, by his power, instilled life-breath into him and restored him to consciousness. He granted Atikāya all the boons he asked for. They were three in number. The first was the gift of Brahmāstrā which could smash anyone. The second was the gift of an armour which was unassailable by anyone. The third was absence of thirst, desire and other cravings.

4) Education. Atikāya went to Kailāsa and received his education from Śiva. He learnt all the sciences, Arts, Śruti, Smṛti etc. from there. On the completion of his course he asked what Gurudakṣiṇā he should pay. Śiva made him promise that he would never practise Black magic. Pleased with him, Śiva awarded him the Pāśupatāstra.

5) Victory in Battle. Atikāya had an uncle, a Rākṣasa named Candra. Once he was defeated by Indra. It was at this time of chagrin that he came to know that Atikāya had reached Lankā with the Pāśupatāstra. Candra Rākṣasa ordered Atikāya to bring Indra as a captive. Atikāya went to Svarga (Heaven) and began a war with Indra. Mahāviśvā who came to help Indra used his Sudarśana cakra. Atikāya shot his Pāśupatāstra. Knowing Atikāya’s history well, Mahāviśvā brought the battle to a close. Both parties accepted the position that Devendra had lost the battle and Atikāya had won.

6) Death. In the Rāmāyaṇa battle Atikāya fought on the side of Rāvana. After a most terrible conflict, Lakṣmana killed Atikāya. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

ATILOMĀ. An Asura who was killed by Śri Kuṣṇa. (M.B. Sāya Parva, Chapter 38).

ATIMANYU. He was one of the ten sons of Manu.

ATIRATHA. There was a King named Matināra in Puruṣavāsa. (See PŪRVUVAMŚA). Four sons were born to him: Tāṁśu, Mahān, Atiratha and Druhyu. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 14).

ATIRĀTRA. He was one of the ten children born to Manu by Nādvāla. (See MANU VAMŚA). Kuru, Pāru, Śatādyumna, Tapasvī, Satyavān, Śuci, Agniṣṭoma, Atirātra, Sudyumna and Atimanyu were the names of the ten brilliant sons of Naṣvalā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 13).

ATISHANDA. After his death Balabhadrā Rāma went to Pātāla in the guise of Ananta. All the serpents worshipped him. Among them was a serpent named Atishanda. (M.B., Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

ATISHANGA. Vinḍhya presented two pāṛṣadās to Skanda on the battlefield. They were Atīrīrga and Uchṛīrga. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verses 49, 50).

ATISTHIRA. Mahāmeru presented two pāṛṣadās named Atithira and Śēhlā to Skanda on the battlefield. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 48).

ATITHI (guest). In ancient Bhārata Atithi-satkarā (hospitality to a guest) was considered as a yajna. In Manusmrī, Chapter 100, Verse 3, it is said that even if one lives on the scattered grains in the fields after harvest, and even if penance is offered in the midst of Paścīṣṭugatau (five fires) unless the Brahmin who comes as a guest is fed, all virtuous deeds would be useless. Besides, Manu has made the following remarks about the Atithi (guest).

“A new visitor at night must be treated as an Atithi. An Atithi is one who comes occasionally, not daily. But one who lives in your village and goes about as a vagabond for a living, does not deserve to be treated as an Atithi. The guest who comes either before or after mealtime should not be sent away without being fed. Even a Vaiśya or Śūdra who comes as a guest to a Brahmin’s house has to be given food when the servants are given food.”

ATITHIYAGA. He was a King referred to in the Rgveda. He had another name, “Divodāsa”. This King had fought several battles against Asuras with the help of Indra. It is said that once, being afraid of the Asuras, he tried to hide himself under the water. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 10, Sūkta 53; Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 16, Sūkta 112).

ATIVARCAS. Himāvan gave Skanda two Pāṛṣadās on the battlefield. They were Ativarcas and Suvarcas. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 46).

ATIYAMA. God Varuṇa gave Skanda on the battlefield two Pāṛṣadās (attendant soldiers). One of them was Yama and the other was Atiyama. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 45).

ATRI I. 1) The son of Brahmā. Atri Mahārṣi was one of the mānasaputra of Brahmā. The mānasaputra were: Marici, Angiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha, and Kratu (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 10).

2) One of the Saptarṣis. Brahmā’s sons, Marici, Angiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu and Vasiṣṭha are known as the Saptarṣi (seven sages). (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 208).

3) Creator of the pracetases. The sage Pracīnaṁahrīṣ was born in the family of Atri Mahārṣi. Ten Pracetases (Prajāpatī) were born as the sons of this Muni. (M.B., Śākti Parva, Chapter 208).

4) Citra Śikhāṇḍi. Among the seven Munis known as Citra Śikhāṇḍis, we see Atri Mahārṣi as one of the Aṣṭaparakṛitis which form the basis of the Universe.

5) Important events. 1) How Mahāvīṇu became Atri’s son. Kaśyapa had a son named Kaśipū. He was a very mighty ruler and carried on his reign in an ungodly manner. In a terrible battle which took place at that time between the Devas and Asuras Kaśipū was killed. Prahlāda became the Asura King. Then there was a battle between Indra and Prahlāda. After six years’ war, Prahlāda withdrew, defeated. Later Mahābāli, the son of Virocana (grandson of Prahlāda) became emperor of Asuras. War broke out again between Mahābāli and Indra. In this war, Mahāvīṇu helped Indra. The Asuras were utterly defeated. They sought refuge with Śuka, the Asura guru. Śuka promised to help them. He set out to the Himalayas to receive a powerful mantra from Śiva. The Asuras kept waiting for Śuka’s return.

At this stage, Mahāvīṇu who was the protector of Indra, came to Śuka’s aśrama and killed Śuka’s mother, Kaśyamātā. Seeing this impudence of Mahāvīṇu, Bhrigu Mahārṣi was enraged and cursed him that he should be born many times in human wombs. It is on account of this that Mahāvīṇu had to take many avatāras (incarnations). It was in this way that Mahāvīṇu incarnated as Dattātreya, the son of Atri. (Devī Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

2) Atri and Parāśara. It was a time when Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra were in a state of mutual ill-will. Once King Kalmāśapāda was going about in the forest on a hunting expedition. He met Śakti, the eldest son of Vasiṣṭha in the forest. The King did not respect him properly. Śakti transformed Kalmāśapāda into a Rākṣasa by his curse. The Rākṣasa who was also a cannibal, first swallowed Śakti himself. Viśvāmitra offered whatever help he could, to destroy Vasiṣṭha’s family. Kalmāśapāda ate successively all the 100 sons of Vasiṣṭha. Vasiṣṭha, in great sorrow and Śakti’s wife, Adīśyantī lived in an aśrama. Adīśyantī was pregnant at the time of Śakti’s death. In due course she gave birth to a boy who was called Parāśara and who later on became the father of Vyāsa. When Parāśara grew up, he came to know that his father Śakti was eaten by the Rākṣasa. Enraged at this, he started a yajña to annihilate the whole race of Rākṣasas. As the yajña gained intensity and force Atri Muni arrived there with certain other Mahārṣis and dissuaded Parāśara from the yajña. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 181).

3) Atri’s dispute with Vainya. Atri Mahārṣi and his wife once got ready to go for Vanavāsa. At that time the poor Mahārṣi’s wife was in great distress because they had no money to be distributed to their disciples and children. She requested her husband to go to King Vainya and to beg for some money. Accordingly the Mahārṣi visited King Vainya at his yāgaśāla (The shed where a yāga is held). He began to flatter Vainya by saying that he was the first among kings and so on. Vainya did not like it. He began to dispute with Atri. Vainya remarked that Indra was the first King. To settle the dispute they went together to Sanatkumāra Muni. Sanatkumāra sent them away reconciled. After that Vainya gave Atri much wealth. After distributing all this wealth among their sons and disciples Atri and his wife set out to the forest to perform penance.

4) How Atri became Sun and Moon. Once there was a fierce battle between Devas and Asuras. Owing to the shower of arrows from the Asuras, the Sun and Moon became dim. Darkness spread everywhere. The Devas began to grope in the dark. They requested Atri Mahārṣi to find a remedy for this. Moved by their distress, Atri suddenly transformed himself into the Sun and Moon. The Moon gave light to the Devas. The Sun burnt up the Asuras by his intense heat. Thus the Devas were saved. This story was told by Vāyu Bhagā-Atri, to Arjuna. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 156).

(5) Atri and King Vṛṣādharī. In the Mahābhārata we find a story about a difference of opinion between King Vṛṣādharī and some Mahārṣis. This story was told by Bhīṣma to Yudhīśhṭhīra about the kind of persons from whom Brahmans may accept gifts. Once the Munis, Kaśyapa, Atri, Viśāṭi, Śrīmadgupta, Viśvāmitra, Jamadagni, and Paśuṣakāḥ, with Arun-dhati and Gaṇḍā, who were the wives of two Munis, travelled round the world. Their object was to go to Brahmaloka. At that time there was drought in the world. King Vṛṣādharī, the son of Śibi, suggested that the above-mentioned Munis should be called and given wealth. They refused to accept it. Vṛṣādharī became angry. He performed Homa in Āhavanīyagnī and from the agnikūṇḍa, the Rākṣāsī Yātudhānī (Kṛtyā) arose. Vṛṣādharī sent Yātudhānī to destroy Atri and all other Munis. As Yātudhānī was guarding a lotus pond in the forest, the munis led by Atri happened to come that way. The Mahārṣis were able to recognize Yātudhānī. They beat her with their tridāndu (Trident or a kind of magic wand) and reduced her to ashes. After satisfying their hunger by eating the lotus flowers the Mahārṣis went to Brahmaloka. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 93).

(6) Atri and Śrāddhā. There is a passage in the Mahābhārata in which Atri gives advice to the emperor Nimi who belonged to Atri’s family. The story of how Śrāddhā originated in the world which Bhīṣma had told Dharmaputra was retold by Atri. A son named Dattātreyavas was born to Atri, the son of Brāhma. Dattātreyavas became King. Nimi was his son. Nimi’s son died after one thousand years. Nimi who was in deep grief at the death of his son, ordained a Śrāddhā in memory of his son. On that occasion Atri Mahārṣi came there and explained to Nimi the importance of Śrāddhā. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verses 20-44).

(7) How Brāhma, Viṣṇu and Mahākāra (Śiva) were born as sons of Atri. There is no other woman in the Purāṇas who surpasses Śīlāvati in her fidelity to her husband. In order to enable Ugrārṣavas, her husband, to satisfy his passion, she once carried him on her own shoulders to a prostitute’s house. On the way, Māṇḍavaya Munī pronounced a curse that Ugrārṣavas should die before sunrise. The grief-stricken Śīlāvati pronounced a counter curse that the sun should not rise on the next day. As the sun failed to rise, the Trimūrti (Brāhma, Viṣṇu and Śiva), accompanied by Anasuyā, Atri’s wife, went to Śīlāvati. Anasuyā persuaded Śīlāvati to withdraw her curse. The Trimūrti who were happy at the success of their mission (of bringing about the Sunrise) asked Anasuyā to demand any boon she wanted. Anasuyā expressed her wish that the Trimūrti (Brāhma, Viṣṇu and Śiva) should be born as her sons and they agreed. Mahāviṣṇu, under the name of Dattātreyas, was born as the son of Anasuyā. Śiva was born to her under the name of Durvāsas. There is a story about it in the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa. Once Śiva got angry with the Devas. They began to flee for life. But Brāhma alone did not run away. Śiva who became more furious at this, pinched off one of the heads of Brāhma. Still he was not pacified. Pārvatī who was alarmed, approached Śiva and begged him to suppress his anger. At her request, Śiva’s fury was transferred and deposited in Anasuyā, Atri’s wife. Durvāsas is the embodiment of that element of Śiva’s fury.

According to the promise, Brāhma also took his birth as the moon from Anasuyā, the wife of Atri. (For that story, see PURURAVAS). There is a story about that also in the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa. Once when Brāhma was performing the task of creation, he experienced carnal passion. Sarasvatī was the offspring of that passion. When Brāhma saw her, he fell in love with her also. This made him feel angry towards Kāmadeva. He pronounced a curse that Kāmadeva should be burnt up in the fire from Śiva’s eye. (This is why Kāmadeva was later burnt to death by Śiva). Although Kāma had retreated from Brāhma his passion had not been suppressed. Brāhma transferred his passion to Atri Mahārṣi. The Mahārṣi gave it to Anasuyā, his wife. Since she was unable to bear such a violent passion, she gave it back to her husband. That passion emerged from Atri’s eye in the form of the Moon. This is why lovers experience strong passion for each other at the time of the rising of the moon. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 39-43).

(8) Atri and Gaṅgā Devī. Once, while Atri Mahārṣi was performing penance in Kāmadeva forest, there was a terrible drought in the country. At that time, his wife Anasuyā made a Śivaliṅga of sand and offered worship to it. Then Atri asked her to give him a little water. There was no water anywhere. Suddenly Gaṅgā Devī appeared there and said to Anasuyā: “There will be a hole here. Water will come out of it in a torrent.” Pure water began to flow from the place pointed out by Gaṅgā Devī. Anasuyā begged Gaṅgā Devī to stay there for a month. Gaṅgā Devī agreed to do so on condition that Anasuyā would transfer her Tapāśakti to her for one month.

Atri was pleased by drinking the water. He asked Anasuyā where she got such nice fresh water. She explained to him all matters. Atri expressed his desire to see Gaṅgā Devī. She appeared before him at once. Anasuyā prayed to her that Gaṅgā should continue to exist in the whole world always. Gaṅgā Devī answered that she would do so if Anasuyā was prepared to give her the fruit of one year’s Tapāśakti and of devoted service to her husband. Anasuyā agreed to that condition. Suddenly Śiva appeared there in the shape of a Linga. At the request of Atri and Anasuyā Śiva took his seat there permanently assuming the name of “Atriśvara”. (Śiva Purāṇa).

(9) Other Details. 1. Besides Dattātreyas, Durvāsas and Candra. Atri had another son, Prācinabhārīs. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 6).

2. Many Prāvakas had been born in Atri Varāṇa. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verses 27-29).

3. When the Kaurava-Pāñjāva war was raging with great fury, many Mahārṣis went to Droṇa and advised him to stop the battle. Atri Mahārṣi was one of them. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 190, Verse 35).

4. On another occasion, a King named Soma performed a Rājasūya (Royal sacrifice). Atri Mahārṣi was the chief priest at this yāga. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 47).

5. Atri was also among the Mahārṣis who had gone to witness Paraśūrāma’s tapas. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 64).
6. Rgveda, 5th Mandala was composed by Atri. (Rgveda Sritihita, Preface).

8. Once the Asuras tried to burn Atri alive. (Rgveda, 1st Mandala, 16th Anuvāka, Śāktka 112).

9. The Asuras at another time made Atri lie down in a machine with a large number of holes and tried to burn him alive in it. At that time he prayed to the Āśvins and they liberated him. (Rgveda, 1st Mandala, 17th Anuvāka, Śāktka 116).

10. Atri was among the Mahārṣis who visited Śrī Rāma, on his return to Ayodhyā after the war with Rāvana. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

11. From the navel lotus of Viṣṇu Brahmā was born, Atri from Brahmā, Soma from Atri, and Purūravas from Soma were born. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 12).

12. Atri beget by Anaśīyā, Soma, Durvāsas and Dattātreya yogī. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

ATRI II.

In the Purāṇas another Atri, the son of Sukṛācārya, is also seen (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 27).

ATRI III.

The term Atri has been used as an epithet of Siva. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 38).

AU. This word means Mahēśvara (Śiva). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

AUDAKA. This is the place where Narakāsura with his ten thousand girls was once imprisoned. It is a plateau on the top of Maṇiparvata. Because water was in plenty there the place was called 'Audaka'. An asura named Nṛū was the keeper of this plateau. (Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

AUDDĀLAKA. A holy place of ancient India. The place got this name because the sage Uddālaka lived there. It is believed that if one bares in this holy place one will be absolved of all his sins.

AUDUMBARA. The King of the state of Udumbara. This king once paid respect to emperor Yudhishṭhira and gave him several presents and gifts. (Śloka 12, Chapter 53, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

AUKTHYA. A glorifying prayer in Śāmaveda. (Śloka 36, Chapter 134, Vana Parva, M.B.).

AURASIKA. A country of ancient India. Śrī Kṛṣṇa conquered this land. (Śloka 16, Chapter 11, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

AURVA I. (Urū, Urūja). A fierce saint of the line of Bhṛgu Mahārṣi.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu, Brahmā, Bhṛgu, Ćyavana, Aurova. Ćyavana Mahārṣi married Arūṣi, daughter of Manu. Aurova was her child who was the grandfather of Jamadagni and the great grandfather of Paraśurāma.

2) Birth. The Preceptors of the Bhṛgu dynasty were the hereditary gurus of the Kings of Ḫeṣaya. Kṛṭavrīya a famous King of the Ḫeṣaya dynasty and father of Kārttyvāyjuna had his education from a Bhṛgu rsi living in his abode. On competing his education the king paid lavishly and the Bhṛgaus became rich by the wealth of their ancestors. Knowing this the Bhṛgas started burying their wealth under the earth. Once a Kaṭhrīya king forcibly dug out from the house of a Bhṛgu the wealth he had safely buried and from that day onwards the Kaṭhrīyas and the Bhārgavas became enemies. The Bhṛgas were hunted down by the Kaṭhrīyas kings and the Bhārgavas frightened by this move left their abode and went and hid in Caves in mountains far away. Among those who thus fled was Arūṣi, wife of Ćyavana. Arūṣi was pregnant at that time and she hid her 'Gaṛba' in her thighs while fleecing. A brahmin women who saw this went and informed the Kaṭhrīyas and they immediately went and caught hold of her. Then the thief broke and a boy came out of it. Because he was born from the thighs the boy was named Aurova. (Urū = Thigh and so, born of a thigh). (Chapter 179, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

3) The effulgence of Aurova. Aurova was born with fiery radiance and the sudden effulgence made the Kaṭhrīyas Kings blind. Frightened they craved for pardon and praised him. They got back their eyesight then.

4) Aurova and Baḍāvāgni. Aurova bore a deep grudge against the Kaṭhrīyas who had massacred his forefathers. Aurova started doing rigorous penance and by the force of his austerities the world started to burn. At that stage the Pitrīs appeared before him and persuaded him to withdraw from his penance. Aurova then told them thus: 'Pitrīs, while I was lying in the thigh-womb of my mother I heard hideous groans from outside and they were of our mothers when they saw the heads of our fathers being cut off by the swords of the Kaṭhrīyas. Even from the womb itself I nurtured a fierce hatred towards the Kaṭhrīyas. No helping hand was raised before the pitiable wails of our mothers'.

The Pitrīs were astounded at the firmness of the vow of Aurova and horrified at the thought of what would happen if the penance was continued. They pleaded again to cease his austerities and then submitting to their request Aurova withdrew the fire of his penance and forced it down into the sea. It is now believed that this fire taking the shape of a horse-head is still living underneath the sea vomiting heat at all times. This fire is called Baḍāvāgni. More about this can be had under the head Baḍāvāgni. (Chapter 180, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

5) Aurova and the birth of Sagara. Ayodhīya was once ruled by a celebrated King of Ikṣvāku dynasty named Subāhu. He had as his wife Yadavī a good natured and well behaved woman who was a gem among queens. One day Tālajārīgha a King of the Ḫeṣaya line of rulers who was then the King of Māhīṃmāti defeated Subāhu in a battle. Yadavī was then pregnant. Jealous co-wives poisoned her; Yadavī did not die but the poison affected the child in the womb. After the defeat, Subāhu an I Yadavī went and stayed with Aurova in his āsrama. For seven years they lived there and then Subāhu died. Grief-stricken Yadavī was about to jump into the funeral pyre and end her life when Aurova stopped her from the act pointing out that she was soon to deliver a child. After a few months she delivered a son and Aurova called him 'Sagara' meaning one with 'garā' (poison) in him. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 16, 17).

6) Aurova and the sister of Garuda. Garuda, son of Vinātaba, had a sister named Sumati. Upamanyu, a sage, wanted to marry her but neither she nor her relatives liked it. Enraged at this the sage cursed Sumati saying... that the brahmin who married her would have his head burst. The marriage of Sumati thus remained a problem for her parents. There was a friend of Vinatā, a sannyāsī, living in a forest and to find a way to escape from the curse Vinatā sent Garuḍa to her. The sannyāsī advised Garuḍa to approach Aurva to find a solution for the problem and Aurva was therefore approached for advice.

It was at this time that the people of Ayodhya came in search of Subāhu and Yaḍavī who had left them years before. When they knew of Subāhu’s death they were plunged in sorrow but were glad to know a son of Subāhu, Sagara, had grown up to be a successor to Subāhu. When Garuḍa made Aurva acquainted with the pitiable tale of his sister Aurva decreed that Sumati should marry a Kṣatriya instead of a brahmin and thus tide over the curse. He then asked Sagara to marry Sumati and blessed them saying that Sagara would one day become an emperor and perform an Āśvamedha yāga. Aurva then sent Sagara along with the people to Ayodhya where Sagara after defeating all his enemies became the emperor of Bhārata-varṣa. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 18-21).

7) Sagara’s sons and how Aurva helped in getting them. Sagara ruled the land for three thousand years. He had besides Sumati another wife, Keśinī. Both of them bore no sons for Sagara. Dejected he entrusted the administration of the state with his ministers and left for the āśrama of Aurva. Aurva blessed them and prophesied that Keśinī would deliver a son to continue the dynasty and that Sumati would deliver sixty thousand sons of no great use at all. Sagara and his wives, returned to the palace and very soon both his wives became pregnant. In due time Keśinī delivered a son who was named Asaṃjñas. But Sumati gave birth to a lump of flesh. Grieved pained the King was about to throw it away when Aurva appeared there and stopped him from doing that. He directed him to cut the piece of flesh into sixty thousand pieces and put one piece each in a jar of ghee. Every year one prince would be born from one of them. Thus Sumati got sixty thousand sons. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 92).

8) Teaching of Aurva. In the evening of his life Sagara went and stayed in the āśrama of Aurva. Aurva gave him instructions on many a divine subject. He taught him the importance of the four āśramas, the rituals to be practised by the different castes of Brahmāṇda, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra and many such other things. Finally Aurva gave Sagara Brahmajñāna. (Chapter 8, Athāśam 3, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

9) Aurva’s āśrama. All the Bhārgava rṣis together once stayed in the āśrama of Aurva. Paraśurāma visited the āśrama one day during that time and paid respects to Bhṛgu, Khyāti, wife of Bhṛgu, Gyavana, son of Bhṛgu and Aurva, son of Gyavana. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapitre 63).

AURVA II. A brahmin living in the country of Mālava. This brahmin got a daughter named Śāmika by his wife Sumedhā. She was married very early to Mandāra, son of Dhaumnayaka and disciple of Śaunaka. After some days when Mandāra found his wife fully grown he went to Aurva to bring his wife home. Aurva sent them both to the house of Mandāra with his blessings. On their way home they met the Maharṣi Bhuṣūndi and burst into laughter at his sight. The sage cursed them and made them into two trees. When Aurva found his daughter and son-in-law missing he started a search for them. Then he came to know that both of them had changed into trees by a curse. Aurva and his wife then prayed to God for help. Aurva then lived in the tree of Śamā in the shape of Agni and Śaunaka made an idol of Gaṇapati with the root of the Mandāra tree and worshipped him. Gaṇapati was pleased by the devotional deeds of Aurva and Śaunaka and changed the trees again into Śamīka and Mandāra. (Gaṇeśa Purāṇa).

AUSANAS (Kapālamocana). A holy place on the banks of the river, Sarasaṇī. Brahmā, the devas and many mahārṣis lived here once. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

This place is called Kapālamocana also. There is a story behind the place getting this name. At the forest of Daṇḍaka Śrī Rama killed many demons. The force of the arrows took the skulls of the demons to far off places in the forest. One of the skulls thus sent fell on the feet of a sage named Mahodara who was then going that way. The skull went deep into his foot and not only did it wound his foot but it stuck to his foot so hard that it could not be drawn out also. With his foot in pain the sage visited all the holy places but with no relief to his pain. At last Mahodara came to AUSANASA and to his surprise the skull came off from his foot healing his wound. He remained there for some time and obtained many divine attainments. From then onwards the place was called ‘Kapālamocana’. After this incident Brahmā, Viṣṇumitra, Balabhadra and many other divine persons visited the place. (Chapter 39, Sālīya Parva, M.B.).

AUSIJA I. A King of ancient India. He equalled Īdṛa. (Śloka 226, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

AUSIJA II. An ancient sage. There is a reference to this sage who is the son of Āgiras in Rgveda. This rṣi was a brilliant member of the royal council of Dharmaputra. (Chapter 206, Sānti Parva, M.B.).

AUSINARA (AUSINARI). Śibi, son of the King of Uśinara. See under Śibi.

AUSINARI (USINARĀ). A Śūdra girl born in the country of Uśinara. Gautama Muni got his sons Kakṣīvan and others of this girl. (Śloka 5, Chapter 21, Subhā Parva, M.B.).

AUSIYIKA(M). An ancient place in India. The King of this country paid respects to Dharmaputra offering him several gifts. (Śloka 17, Chapter 51, Subhā Parva, M.B.).

AUTATHYA. Son of Utathya (See under Utathya).

AVUVAYĀR. A celebrated Tamil poetess. She was born in a Paraya (lowest of the Hindu castes) family. Her mother left her as soon as she was delivered and a low caste Śūdra brought her up. She lived for 240 years before she left on a long journey never to return. She wrote several books in Tamil. The important ones are Āticñiti, Kontaiavunta, Muttrurai, Natvali, Katvali, slukka, Nannuṅkova, Nannanikova, Aruntamilmala, Darṣanappatu, and Jnānakuru. She has made a dictionary in verses also.

AVABHĪRTHAM. The bath taken at the end of a sacrifice.

‘Then all the Kṣatriya Kings approached Dharmatana (Dharmaputra) who had completed successfully, under the protection of the Mighty Lord of the bow, the cudgel and the wheel, the great sacrifice of the Rājasūya (imperial inauguration) and taken the avabhṛta-snāna (the bath at the end of the sacrifice)."

(Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 40, 41).

AVĀČINA. The son born to Jayatāsena, a king of the Puru dynasty, by his wife Suśrāva the princess of Vidarbha. To him was born Arīha of Maryādā the princess of Vidarbha. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanzas 17 and 18).

AVADHUTESVARA. An incarnation of Śiva. Once Indra and Bṛhaspati went to Kailāsa to do homage to Śiva who clad in air only hindered their way. Indra requested that person to get out of the way. He requested repeatedly several times but in vain. Indra who got angry took his weapon of Vajra. But Śiva froze it. Moreover fire emanated from his eye on the forehead. At the request of Bṛhaspati Śiva turned the fire from his eye towards Lavaṇa Sāmudrā (the sea of Salt). Jalandhara who was killed by Śiva had his origin in this fire. (Śiva Purāṇa).

AVAGAHA. A warrior of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. (Maḥābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 27).

AVAIṢAKHA. (See Dhanavaṃśa).

AVĀKĪRṢA (M). A holy place on the bank of the river Sarasvatī. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 41).

AVANTI. A country called Mālava in ancient India. The famous Ujjayini was the capital of Avanti. This city is situated on the bank of Śiprā. The renowned poets such as Kālidāsa and others, lived in this city. This is one of the seven cities considered to be capable of giving Mokṣa (heavenly bliss). (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 43).

AVANTI VAMŚA. (The Dynasty of Avanti). The dynasty of Avanti Kings had its origin in the Yadu dynasty. Candra was born to Atri the son of Brahmā. Budha was born to Candrā, Purūravas to Budha, Ayus to Purūravas, Nahuṣa to Ayus, Yavāti to Nahuṣa and Yadu to Yavāti. Yadu had five sons, the eldest of whom was known by the name Sahasarajit. The rest of them were known as Nilānjika, Rāghu, Kṛṣṇa and Sātajit. Sahasarajit had three sons called Sātajit, Hailaya and Repuhaya. Dharmanetra was born to Hailaya, Sahana to Dharmanetra, Mahimān to Sahana, Bhadrasena to Mahimān, Durgama to Bhadrasena and Kanaka to Durgama. From Kanaka were born the four sons Kṛtavīrya, Kṛtāgni, Karavīrya and Kṛtājjas. Arjuna (Kṛtavīryajuna) was born as the son of Kṛtavīrya.

Arjuna renowned as Kṛtavīrya became the supreme lord of the earth comprising the Saptadvipa (Seven Islands) by the merits of his penance. He got invisibility and thousand hands in battles, as boons. He performed ten thousand sacrifices all in conformity with the rules and regulations. To escape from loss of wealth one had only to remember his name. It was ordered that Kings other than Kṛtavīrya, however, great the extent of their might and prowess, and the number of sacrifices, offering of alms and penance done be, would not stand on a par with him.

Kṛtavīrya had a hundred sons, of whom the most famous were Śrācasena, Śūra, Dhṛṣṭa, Kṛṣṇa, and Jaya dhvaja. Jayadhvaja the most renowned of these five ruled in Avanti as King Tālajāṅgha who had several sons, was born from Jayadhvaja.

The family of the Haihayas was split into five. They were the Bhojas, the Avanti family, the Vitthotra family, the Savyāniyātā family and the Šaṅdikīeya family. (Āgni Purāṇa, Chapter 273).

AVARODHA. A King of the family of Bharata.

AVASĀNAM. An ancient Bath in Bhārata. One could attain the merits of Sahasragodāna (giving a thousand cows as alms) by bathing in this holy bath. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 128).

AVATĀRA. (Incarnation). The incarnations of Maḥāviṣṇu:—

1) General information. God takes three kinds of incarnations such as avatāra, āveṣa and aṁśha. That which has full power is avatāra; that which has power only for the time being is āveṣa and partial incarnation in aṁśavatāra.* The incarnations of Viṣṇu are countless. Hermits, Manus, Devas (gods) and sons of Manus are incarnations in part (aṁśavatāras) of Viṣṇu. Complete avatāras are ten in numbers of which Balabhadra Rāma is not considered as an avatāra by some. Instead of him they place Buddha.

b) Reason for the incarnations. Maḥāviṣṇu has taken so many incarnations in the world. In the Śrī Maḥādevi Bhāgavata a story occurs to the effect that Maḥāviṣṇu was forced to take so large a number of incarnations due to the curse of the great hermit Bhṛgu. The story is as follows: Kaśyapa had a son named Kaśiṣu. He was daring and brave and ruled the country as an enemy of the Gods. There arose a severe battle between the gods and the Asuras. Kaśiṣu was killed in that battle. After Kaśiṣu his son Prahlāda became King. He too was an enemy of the Gods. So there was a battle between Indra and Prahlāda. The battle continued for a hundred years. At last Prahlāda was defeated. He felt very sad at the defeat. So he anointed Bali, son of Virocana, as King and leaving the Kingdom he went to the Gandhamadāna and began to do penance. The fight continued between Bali and Indra. In this fight Maḥāviṣṇu helped Indra. The Asuras were completely defeated. The defeated Asuras went to their teacher Śukra who promised to protect them by spells and incantations and herbs. The Gods knew that Śukra had undertaken to protect the asuras. Leaving the asuras behind, Śukra went to Kailāsa to get more power of spells and incantations from Śiva. Before going to Kailāsa Śukra had asked the Asuras to wait for him with faith. After this the Asuras sent Prahlāda to the Gods for a truce. Prahlāda, though an Asura was in good favour with the Gods. He reached the court of Indra and said, "Gods, we have no desire at all for war. We have decided to spend the remaining period in penance wearing barks of trees and tufts of hair. How wicked a deed is battle and how delightful it is to become a devotee of God! So hereafter you will not be troubled by us. Likewise I hope you will not do us innocent people any harm."

The gods believed Prahlāda. The Asuras, in the guise of hermits waited for Śukra in the hermitage of Kaśyapa. Śukra reached Kailāsa and bowed before Śiva and requested that he might be given the power of defeating the Gods by some means quite unknown to Bṛhaspati the teacher of the devas (Gods). Śiva was in trouble. He could refuse neither Sukra nor the Gods. At last he told hermit Sukra that to come by such a spell he had to stand head downwards, inhaling smoke for a thousand years. Siva said so thinking that when the dreadful nature of the feat was considered, Sukra might desist from the attempt. But Sukra began that penance instantly.

The Gods understood everything. The deceit of the Asuras, the crookedness of Sukra all were now clear to them. They trembled with fear and began to consult how to get over the difficult situation. Finally they decided to go to war with the Asuras. The gods did accordingly. The Asuras were in trouble. They were not strong enough to face the Gods. So they all went to Kāvyamātā, the mother of Sukra. The devas (gods) with Mahāviṣṇu at their head chased the Asuras. Kāvyamātā, by the merits of her devotional meditation petrified Mahāviṣṇu and Indra. Mahāviṣṇu thought of his Sudāraśana (wheel-weapon of Viṣṇu) which instantly made its appearance and cut off the head of Kāvyamātā. The great hermit Bhṛgu got angry because Mahāviṣṇu committed woman-slaughter, and cursed him thus: "You are a crooked being, a viper, a deceit. The hermits who adore you as the seat of all that is good are mere fools; you are wicked, of a black character, and I curse you to take countless incarnations in the world, and painful confinement by and by because of your sins." (Śrī Mahāidevi Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

Thus having cursed Viṣṇu, the hermit Bhṛgu took some water from his water-pot and sprinkled it on the face of Kāvyamātā, who woke up as if from sleep. (For the remaining portion of the story see Sukra).

2) Daśāvatāras. (The ten Incarnations). Owing to the curse of Bhṛgu, mentioned above, Mahāviṣṇu had to undertake so many incarnations, complete as well as partial. Complete incarnations are ten in number. They are called Daśāvatāras (The Ten Incarnations).

Matsyaḥ Kūrmaḥ Varāhaḥca Narasimhaḥca Vāmanah | Rāmo Rāmaṣṭa Rāmaṣṭa | Kṛṣṇaḥ Kalkiḥ Janardanāḥ //
Matsya (Fish), Kūrma (Turtle), Varāha (Pig), Narasimha (Lion-man), Vāmana (Dwarf), Rāma (Paraśu-rama), Rāma (Śrī Rāma), Rāma (Balabhadra-rāma), Kṛṣṇa (Śrī Kṛṣṇa), Kalki (Yet to come). These are the ten incarnations of Janārdana.

The daśāvatāras are described one by one below.

1) Matsyāvatāra. (Fish Incarnation). To Kaśyapa, the son of Marici, and the grandson of Brahmā a son was born, by his wife Aditi. He was called Vivasvān and the Manu who was the son of Vivasvān is known as Vaivasvata Manu or Satyavatā Manu. It was during the time of this Manu that Viṣṇu incarnated as a Matsya (fish).

Once, while Brahmā was reciting the Vedas (the Scriptures) Hayagrīva, an asura, stole the Vedas from the side of Brahmā and with them he went under water to the bottom of the ocean and hid himself there. So Mahāviṣṇu decided to take the form of a fish to recover the stolen Vedas. Vaivasvata Manu, the first and foremost of the godlyear, was once doing penance in a place known as Badaṁ. He got down into the river Kṛtamālā to take a bath. Then a small fish said to the Manu: "Oh King, I am afraid of large fishes. So please don’t forsake me". Hearing this the Kind Manu took the fish in his hand and put it in an earthenware pot and brought it up. In a few days the fish began to grow. When the pot became insufficient the King put it in a larger pot. When that also became too small, the King put the fish in a pond. When the pond could not hold the fish any longer the King put it in the Ganges at its request. After a few days the Ganges also became too small for the fish. Finally the fish told the King: "Oh, King, within seven days there will be a great flood in the world. You should make a boat and take the seven hermit-sages with you in the boat and escap. I will help you."

Hearing this he got an immensely large boat ready and obeyed the instructions of the fish. Within seven days rain started in torrents. Everything in the world, the moving and the not moving, were under the flood. A horn began to sprout from the head of the fish. Manu tied his boat on that horn. The fish reached the summit of the Himalayas with the boat, which was tied to the highest peak. Since the peak came to be called 'Nau bandhana Śrīga' (The peak to which boat is tied). The rain ceased to pour. It was seen that everything in the world had been destroyed except the Manu and the seven hermit-sages and some of the germs, saved in the boat. (This story occurs in the great Hindi work 'Kāmāyāni' of Jayaśankar Prasād). (M.B.; Aranya Parva, Chapter 187; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 2; Bhāgavata 8th Skandha, Chapter 24).

This story of the incarnation of Viṣṇu as fish is seen in the Bible figuratively. "In the order of the generations of Adam, the first creation of God, Seth, Eno, Cainan, Mahalil, Jāred, Enoch, Methuselah, Lamech and Noah were born. When Noah was five hundred years old he begot Shem, Ham and Japheth. There was a great flood during the time of Noah. God said to him: 'The end of all flesh is come before one, for the earth is filled with violence through them, and behold, I will destroy them with the earth. Make thee an ark of gopher wood; rooms shalt thou make in the ark and shalt paint it within and without with pitch. And this is the fashion which thou shalt make it of. The length of the ark should be three hundred cubits, the breadth of it fifty cubits, and the height of it thirty cubits. A window shalt thou make to the ark and in a cubit shalt thou finish it above and the door of the ark shalt thou set in the side thereof, with lower, second and third stories shalt thou make it. And behold, I, even I, will bring a flood of water upon the earth, to destroy all flesh wherein is the breadth of life from under heaven and everything that is in the earth shall die. But with thee will I establish my covenant, and thou shalt come into the ark, thou and thy sons and thy wife and thy sons' wives with thee, and of every living thing of all flesh, two of every sort, shalt thou bring into the ark to keep them alive with thee; they shall be male and female. Of fowls after their kind, and of cattle after their kind, and of every creeping thing of the earth after their kind, two of every sort shall come unto thee to keep them alive. And take thou unto thee of all food that is eaten and thou shalt gather it to thee, and it shall be for food for thee and for them.' Thus did Noah according to all that God commanded him, so did he. And the Lord said unto Noah, 'Come thou and all thy house into the ark, for thee and for all flesh. Have I seen righteous before me in this generation. Of every clean beast thou shall take to thee by sevens the male and his female and of beasts that are not clean by two the male and his female. Of fowls also of the air by sevens the male and the female to keep seed alive up on the face of all the earth. For yet seven days and I will cause it to rain up on the earth forty days and forty nights, and every living substance that I have made will I destroy from off the earth.” And Noah did according unto all that the Lord commanded him.

And Noah was six hundred years old when the flood of waters was up on the earth. And Noah went in, and his sons and his wife and his sons’ wives with him into the ark because of the waters of the flood. Of clean beasts and of beasts that are not clean and of fowls and of everything that creepeth upon the earth. There went in two and two unto Noah into the ark the male and the female as God had commanded Noah. And it came to pass after seven days that the waters of the flood were upon the earth. In the six hundredth year of Noah’s life in the second month on the seventeenth day of the month the same day were all the fountains of the great deep broken up and the windows of heaven were opened and the rain was up on the earth for forty days and forty nights. In the self-same day entered Noah and Shem, and Ham and Japheth the sons of Noah and Noah’s wife and the wives of the sons with them into the ark. They and every beast after his kind and all the cattle after their kind and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth and every fowl after his kind, every bird of every sort. And they went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh wherein is the breadth of life. And they that went in, went in male and female of all flesh as God had commanded him and the Lord shut him in. And the flood was forty days upon the earth, and the waters increased and bore up the ark and it was lifted up above the earth. And the waters prevailed and were increased greatly upon the earth and the ark went up on the face of the waters. And the waters prevailed exceedingly upon the earth and all the high hills that were under the whole heaven were covered. Fifteen cubits upward did the waters prevail and the mountains were covered. And all the flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl and of cattle and of all beast and of every creeping thing that creepeth up on the earth, and every man. All in whose nostrils was the breadth of life, of all that was in the dry land, died. And every living substance was destroyed which was up on the face of the ground both man and cattle and the creeping things and the fowl of the heaven, and they were destroyed from the earth. And Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark. And the waters prevailed upon the earth for hundred and fifty days. And God remembered Noah and every living thing and all the cattle that was with him in the ark and God made a wind to pass over the earth and the waters became calm. The fountains also of the deep and the windows of heaven were stopped and the rain from heaven was restrained. And the waters returned from off the earth continually and after the end of the hundred and fifty days, the waters were abated. And the ark rested in the seventh month on the seventeenth day of the month upon the mountains of Ararat. And the waters decreased continually until the tenth month.

In the tenth month on the first day of the month were the tops of the mountains seen. And it came to pass at the end of forty days that Noah opened the window of the ark which he had made. And he sent forth a raven which went forth to and fro until the waters were dried up from off the earth. Also he sent forth a dove from him to see if the waters were abated from off the face of the ground. But the dove found no rest for the sole of her foot and she returned unto him into the ark for the waters were on the face of the whole earth. Then Noah put forth his hand and took her and pulled her to the ark. And he stayed yet other seven days. And again he sent forth the dove out of the ark. And the dove came in to him in the evening, and lo, in her mouth was an olive leaf plucked off. So Noah knew that the waters were abated from off the earth. And he stayed yet other seven days and sent forth the dove, which returned not again unto him anymore. And it came to pass in the six hundredth and first year in the first month the first day of the month the waters were dried up from off the earth and Noah removed the covering of the ark and looked and beheld the face of the ground was dry. And in the second month on the seven and twentieth day of the month the earth dried. And God spake unto Noah saying: “Go forth of the ark, thou and thy wife, and thy sons and thy sons’ wives with thee. Bring forth with thee every living thing that is with thee, of all flesh both of fowl and of cattle and of every creeping thing that creepeth up on the earth, that they may breed abundantly in the earth and be fruitful and multiply up on the earth. And Noah went forth and his sons and his wife and his sons’ wives with him. Every beast, every creeping thing and every fowl and whatsoever creep up on the earth after their kinds went forth out of the ark. And Noah built an altar unto the Lord and took of every clean beast and of every clean fowl and offered burnt offerings on the altar. And the Lord smelled a sweet savour and the Lord said in his heart: “I will not again curse the ground anymore for man’s sake. For the imagination of man’s heart is evil from his youth. Neither will I again smite anymore every thing as I have done. While the earth remaineth seed time and harvest and cold and heat and summer and winter and day and night shall not cease.” (Holy Bible, Genesis, Chapters 6, 7 and 8)

2) Kūrma-nātāra. (Incarnation as a tortoise). Long ago when Durvāsas visited the realm of Gods he presented Devendra with a garland made of flowers of exquisite fragrance. Indra tied it on to the tusk of Airāvata (the elephant of Indra). When the beetles which gathered on the garland for honey became a nuisance, Airāvata destroyed that garland. Durvāsas who got angry at this cursed the gods as a whole that they would get wrinkles and grey hair. The gods were advised by Mahāviṣṇu that if they got Ambrosia (Amṛta—celestial honey) from the sea of Milk by churning it they could escape from this. Accordingly the Gods called the asuras for help, and they approached the sea of Milk. They made use of the Mountain of Mandara as churn-drill and the huge snake Vāsuki as churning rope, and the churning commenced. The gods took hold of the tail of the snake and as the churning was proceeding the churn-drill, the mountain of Mandara, having no fixation at the bottom sank down. Then Mahāviṣṇu took the form of a turtle, and got under the Mandara mountain and lifted it up on his back. By the force of lifting it went higher and higher up. Then Mahāviṣṇu took the form of an eagle and sat on top of the mountain and it came down a little and placed itself in the right position. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8, Chapter 7; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 3; Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakanda, Sarga 45).

3) Varāhavātāra. (Incarnation as a Pig). Jaya and Vijaya were the two watchers who stood at the gate of Mahāviṣṇu. Once the great hermit-sages Sanaka and others reached Vaikunṭha to visit Mahāviṣṇu. Then Jaya and Vijaya treated the hermits without respect. The hermits cursed them that they would become Dānavas (Asuras or giants). They also said that when they were slain thrice by Mahāviṣṇu they would reach heaven. At that period when hermit Kaśyapa was carrying on his evening prayer and devotional rites, his wife Diti approached him with lustful desire. Kaśyapa told her that as he was engaged in prayer and meditation it was not proper on her part to select that particular moment for her lustful desire. But she persisted and the sage yielded and out of that union two sons were born. They are the two asuras Hiranyakaśīpa and Hiranyakāśīpa. Of these Hiranyakaśīpa was the incarnation of Jaya and Hiranyakāśīpa of that of Vijaya.* With the birth of these two the whole world began to tremble. These two asura brothers began to terrorize the world. They wandered about causing destruction and devastation wherever they went. Once Hiranyakāśīpa got down into the ocean and began to beat the waves in the ocean with his cudgel. The ocean began to sway and surge. Varuṇa (the Lord of water) was terrified and he ran to Mahāviṣṇu and sought protection. Mahāviṣṇu took the form of a Pig and came to the ocean. When Hiranyakāśīpa saw Mahāviṣṇu he took the earth in his hand and ran to Pātala (the nether world). Mahāviṣṇu followed him and killed him and recovered the earth. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 3, Chapter 18; Bhāgavata, Skandha 2, Chapter 7 and Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 4).

4) Narasimhavātāra. (Incarnation as lion-man). With the death of Hiranyakāśīpa, his brother Hiranyakāśīpa became furious more than ever. He wanted to avenge the death of his brother. His fury was turned towards Mahāviṣṇu. So he got on the top of the Mountain of Mandara and did penance before Brahmā and Brahmā appeared and granted him boons, one of which was that nobody but Viṣṇu should be able to kill him. He returned with gladness and began to roam about torturing devotees of Viṣṇu everywhere.

A son named Prahlāda was born to him. He was a godfearing child and from birth an ardent believer in Viṣṇu. Hiranyakāśīpa tried his utmost to change his son to a hater of Viṣṇu. He got a special teacher for the purpose and Prahlāda was taken to the house of the teacher to live with him until he changed his mind. The result was that the teacher and all others who advised him ultimately became believers in Viṣṇu. Anger overpowered Hiranyakāśīpa. Prahlāda was thrown before mad elephants. But the tusks of the elephant missed the aim and were driven into the earth and broken. Venomous snakes were employed and those which bit him had their fangs broken. Finally the child was put in blazing fire. But the child felt the fire to be cool and soothing. From that fire a ghost arose and tried to kill Prahlāda. Instantly the Sudarśana, the wheel-weapon of Viṣṇu came down and cut off the head of the ghost. Hiranyakāśīpa jumped with anger and called out, “Where is your Viṣṇu?” His son replied that his Viṣṇu dwelt in every movable and immovable thing. Hiranyakāśīpa kicked at a stone pillar close by and asked him, “Is your Viṣṇu in this pillar?” Prahlāda replied, “My Viṣṇu is in Pillar and in fibre.” Before he had finished, the Pillar broke open and a monster as horrible as the Destroyer Śiva, in the shape of a lion-man made its appearance.

5) Vāmanāvatāra. (Incarnation as a Dwarf). It was to expel the Emperor Mahābali, that Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as a dwarf. To Kaśyapa, the son of Marici and the grandson of Brahmā, was born of Diti, Hiranyakaśipu. And from Prahlāda the son of Hiranyakaśipu was born Viśvāmitra and Bali was the son of Viśvāmitra. Bali got the name Mahābali because of his prowess. He was the emperor of the Asuras. A fierce battle began over the Ambrosia got from churning the sea of Milk, between the Asuras and the gods. In the battle Indra cut Mahābali down with his Vajrāyudha. The Asuras took the body of Mahābali to Pātalā (the nether world) where their teacher Śukra brought him to life again. Then Mahābali worshipped the Bhūgarvas and became more powerful than before and went to heaven again and renewed the battle. This time he defeated the Gods altogether and subjugated the realm of the Gods who were scattered to all sides. The devas or gods are the sons of Kaśyapa born by his wife, Aditi. She felt very sorry at the defeat of the gods. Seeing that she was silent and sad Kaśyapa asked her the reason. She replied that she was thinking of ways to enable the gods to recover their lost power and position. Kaśyapa advised her to please Mahāviṣṇu by observing Dvādaśī vrata (fast of the twelfth lunar night). Aditi did so and Viṣṇu appeared before her and asked her what she desired. Her request was that Viṣṇu should take birth in her womb and recover Indra to his lost power and position. Thus Viṣṇu took birth as the younger brother of Indra in the shape of Vāmana (dwarf.). At this time Emperor Mahābali was celebrating a sacrifice on the bank of the River Narmadā after having subjugated the whole of the world. A large number of hermits gathered there. Vāmana also was among them. He requested Mahābali to grant him three feet of ground as alms. The teacher Śukra warned Mahābali against granting the request. But the emperor granted the request and asked Vāmana to measure the ground. Vāmana immediately enlarged his body and measured the heaven, the earth and the Pātalā (the upper realm, the earth and the lower realm) in two steps and asked for place for the third step. The honest Mahābali showed his head and requested to complete the three steps. Vāmana put his step on the head of Mahābali and pushed him down to Pātalā. Thus the gods regained their lost places. (Viśvāmitra, Skandha 8, Chapter 19).

A description that by the toe of Vāmanas' raised foot (raised for measuring the third step) the testicle of Brahmā was cut open where from the Ganges originated, is seen in the Bhāgavata, Skandha 5.

When Viśvāmitra took Rāma and Lakṣmana to the forest they entered a holy hermitage and Viśvāmitra told the boys that it was the hermitage where Aditi, long ago had observed dvādaśī fast. It was in that same place that Vāmana incarnated and placed his step on the head of Mahābali.

"The bright Madhava took birth in Aditi as Vāmana and went to Mahābali, requested for three feet of ground and brought under control the three worlds for the good of all. By binding Bali by might, he gave to Indra the three worlds and this hermitage is the place where He once placed his steps. I am a devotee of that Vāmana." (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kanda, Sarga 29).

6) Parasurāmavatāra. (Incarnation as Parasurāma). Once Kārttavīryārjuna pleased the hermit-sage Dattātreya the son of Atri, by doing penance and got the boon of one thousand hands. One day he went to the forest for hunting and entered the bank of Narmadā. The hermit Jamadagni had been living there with his wife Reṇukā and sons Parasurāma and others. The King being tired of hunting got into the hermitage. Parasurāma was not there. The hermit called his divine cow Rāmdhenu, which provided the King and his followers with a very good supper.

When the King departed he asked for the wonderful cow. The hermit did not consent. The King caught hold of the cow by force and went to his city. Parasurāma went to Mahīṣmatanagār the capital of Kārttavīryārjuna, killed the King and took Rāmdhenu back. From that day onwards the sons of Kārttavīrya were waiting for an opportunity to take revenge.

Once Reṇukā went to the river to bring water. A gandharva (semi god) named Citaratha was bathing in the river. She happened to look at him for a while. When she returned the hermit was very angry and asked each of his sons to cut off the head of their mother. They all refused. But Parasurāma immediately obeyed his father and cut off her head. His father was pleased and said that he might ask any boon. He requested his father to bring his mother back to life. Accordingly Reṇukā was brought back to life.

Once the sons of Kārttavīrya got into the hermitage, at a time when Parasurāma was away and cut off the head of the hermit Jamadagni and took it off. When he returned his mother told him how his father was killed. She cried and beat her breast twentyone times. Parasurāma became an incarnation of revenge, and travelled over the world twentyone times and killed every Kṣatriya King. The blood of all those Kings flowed into one channel and gathered in a holy Bath called Syamanta-paṁśukam. Thus Mahāviṣṇu took his sixth incarnation as Parasurāma and fulfilled his duty of destroying the wicked Kṣatriya Kings. (For details about Parasurāma see under Parasurāma and Kārttavīryārjuna). (Viśvāmitra, Skandha 9, Chapter 16).

7) Śri Rāmāvatāra. Mahāviṣṇu took the incarnation of Śri Rāma to kill Rāvana. (For further information see the words Śri Rāma and Rāvana).

8) Balabhadraṁrāmatāra. (The incarnation of Balabhadraṁrāma). (See the word Balabhadraṁrāma).

9) Śri Kṛṣṇaṁrāmatāra. (The incarnation of Śri Kṛṣṇa). (See the word Kṛṣṇa).

10) Kalkyaṁrāmatāra (The incarnation as Kalki). At the end of Kaliyuga (the Age of Kali) all the people would become atheists and sceptics. Rewards will be received from the depraved. The classes will be mixed. People would become degenerate having no good qualities. A religion called 'Vājasaneyam' with its fifteen doctrines only will be acceptable. People would become irresponsible wearing the garment of duty. Lawless people would take the form of Kings and will begin to eat men. In those days Lord Viṣṇu will incarnate as Kalki, the son of Viṣṇuyāṣas and the priest of Yājñavalkya and learn the arts of wielding weapon and handling missiles and destroy all lawless ones. The subjects will be brought back to the four classes and the four āśramas or stages of life and the doctrines and directions of the long-established religion and peace and order will be restored. Then the Lord will cast away the form of Kalki and go to heaven. After that, as of old, Kṛtayuga (the first age) will begin class distinctions and the four stages of life and such other establishments will once more prevail. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 16).

3) The Incarnations of Mahāviṣṇu.

It is mentioned in Śrī Mahādevi Bhāgavata, Skandha 1, Chapter 3 that Mahāviṣṇu had taken the twenty-six incarnations given below:

In the first Skandha of “Bhāgavata Kilippattu” the incarnations are exhaustively dealt with as follows:

“...and after that to make it possible for the Lord with four faces to rule his subjects justly and well. He took various incarnations with his portions, the first four of which are four persons, Sanaka, Sananda, Sañātana and Sanatkumāra, in the order given, four or five-year old children, well-versed in the four Vedas, the four always inseparable wandered everywhere come to the world to show the merits of Brahmācarya (the vow of celibacy). To kill Hiranyaka and to lift up the earth He took the form of Sūkra (pig). To show the world the tattva (essence) of Sat (good) and tama (darkness) He took the form of hermit Nārada. To show the merits of penance He became Nara and Nārāyaṇa. To impart to the world the meaning of Śāṅkhya Yoga (Indian Philosophy dealing with evolution and union with the Supreme Spirit) He came as Kapila the learned. To teach the world the laws of chastisement He was born as Datta the wife of Atri. Then He came as Yajñavāla to become Indra. The next incarnation He took was Rṣabha, the noble King. To shorten and flatten the earth He came as Pṛthu. To recover the Vedas He took the form of Matsya (fish). To remove wrinkles and grey hair the gods had churned the sea of Milk and then to lift the mount Mandara He went under it and as a bird He got up on it. To give the world Ayurveda (the scripture of medicine) He came as Dhanvantari. To entice the Asuras and to recover Ambrosia from them He took the form of Mohini. To save the devoted Prahlāda and to slay his father He came in the form of Narasimha. Then as Vāmana the younger brother of Indra to deceive Mahābali and to recover the lost worlds for the gods He came. To destroy the Kings who were haters of Brahmā He came as the son of Jamadagni. Then He took the incarnation of Veda Vyāsa. And to slay the giant Rāvana He became Śrī Rāma. Next we see Him as Balabhadrārāma. Then He came as Devakiṣuta [son of Devaki (Kṛṣṇa)]. Next He came in the Kaliyuga as Śrī Buddha and at the end of Kaliyuga He will come as Kalki. And there are many incarnations still to speak of.”

AVIŚC. One of the twenty-eight hells. The following are the twenty-eight hells:

1) Raurava 2) Sūkra 3) Rodha 4) Viśāsana 5) Mahāvīra 6) Tāšā 7) Tāpatikambha 8) Lavanā 9) Vīlohitā 10) Rūdhirādhas (11) Vaitaranī 12) Kṛmīśa 13) Kṛniḥbhoja (14) Asita 15) Kṛṣṇa 16) Lalābhakṣa 17) Dāruṇa 18) Pāyavāha 19) Pāpa 20) Vahanīvāla 21) Adhaśāsīras 22) Sandānāśa (23) Kālasūtra 24) Tamās 25) Avīci 26) Svabhjojanā (27) Apratīśka (28) Aprācī. (Viśu Purāṇa, Ā śiśa 2, Chapter 6). The hell called Avīci is described thus: “This is the hell meant for those who stand false witness, who take false oath and false name. The soldiers of Yama will push these false people into the hell of Avīci, from the top of a mount which is a hundred yojanas (league) high. The place of Avīci, like the waves of the ocean, is swelling and falling and swaying and surging always. When sinners fall there their bodies will be crumbled to pieces. Their life will enter into new bodies and then the punishment will be repeated again and again.” (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

AVIJNĀTAGATI. Two sons were born to Anila, a vasu by his wife Sīvā. They were called Avijnātagati and Manojava. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 25).

AVIKAMPANĀ. This ancient King got from the hermit Yecṣṭha Sātvatadharma (righteousness). (M.B., Śanti Parva, Chapter 384, Stanza 47).

AVIKŚIT I. A famous King. The son of Karandhama and father of Marutta. He was honoured even by Brhaspati, having performed a hundred horse sacrifices. Mention is made in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa that Avikṣit had seven wives: Vārā, Gaurī, Subhadrā, Līlāvati, Viṣṇu, Viṣṇavati, and Kumudvati. Besides them Vaiśālī the princess of Viśālā also was his wife. He had taken this Vaiśālīnī from her Svayabhūva dais (the bride herself selecting a husband from those who are present), defeating the Kings who were present there. Those defeated Kings, later, joined together and defeated Avikṣit and took him a prisoner. Finally Karandhama rescued him. His greatness is described as follows:

“The righteous man Avikṣit is equal to Indra in prowess. This austere and righteous man has become a great sacrificer. In brightness he is equal to the sun, as forgiving as the earth, in intelligence equal to Brhaspati and as firm as the Himalayas. By his thought, word, and deed and self control and noble actions he kept his subjects in peace and prosperity.” (Bhāṣā Bhārata, Ā śvamedhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanzas 19-21).

AVIKŚIT II. Five sons were born to King Kuru by his wife Vāhīnī. Avikṣit was one of them. [See the word Vaiśāvalī (Genealogy)].

AVIMUKTA (M). The middle part of the city of Kaśi. There is a holy temple here. It is said that those who commit suicide in this temple would attain heaven. (Vana Parva, Chapter 64, Stanzas 78 and 79). For more information see the word Divodāsa.

AVINDHYA. A giant in whom Rāvana had confidence. But he held the opinion that Śitā should be returned to Rāma.

“The aged giant and noble leader Avindhya, who had earned the confidence of Rāvana, brave, learned and of good qualities, pleaded with Rāvana and said that Rāma would exterminate the entire race of the giants, but the wicked Rāvana would not pay heed to his words.”

(Srī Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kānda, Sarga 37, Stanzas 12 and 13). This aged giant had sent Trījātā to the Asoka park to console Sītā. Hear what she says: “The famous giant leader, the noble aged well-wisher of Rāma, Avindhyā, had told me about you.”

“(M.B., Aranya Parva, Stanza 56). There is a situation in Vana Parwa when this noble giant prevented Rāvana from his attempt to kill Sītā. “When he saw the decision of Rāvana to kill Sītā, Avindhyā pacified Rāvana” and said, “you, a great King of a great kingdom should not deteriorate to the level of killing a woman. A woman who is in prison and at your disposal is as good as dead. But in my opinion, even if you cut her body into pieces she would not die and if she must die you will have to kill her husband.”

From this statement the wonderful intelligence of Avindhyā could be understood. It is seen in Stanzas 6 and 7 of Chapter 291 of M.B., Vana Parwa that it was Avindhyā who had taken Sītā before Srī Rāma when he had captured Lāṅkā.

AVIVĀHITA. (Splinter). In the Mahābhārata a statement regarding spinsters and widows is seen. “Place meat on the ground and many birds will come to it. So also men will gather round the woman who is having no husband.” (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 12).

AVYAYA. A serpent of the Dhṛtarāṣṭra family. This serpent fell in the sacrificial fire meant for serpents, prepared by Janamejaya. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 16).

AYASĀNKU. A great Asura. He was born as a Prince of the Kekeya Kingdom. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 10).

AYASIRAS. A son of Kaśyapa by his wife, Danu. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 23). He was born a prince of Kekeya. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 10).

AYATAYAMA (S). See Guruparamparā.

AYATI. Son of King Nahuṣa and brother of Yayāti. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 30).

AYAVAHAM. A place in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 5).

1) Disciple Aruṇi. He belonged to Pāṭcāla, and once his guru deputed him to construct embankments in the field. But, his attempts to construct embankments did not succeed. Finally he lay himself in the field where the embankment was required, and then the flow of water stopped. The guru enquired about Aruṇi, who was thus lying in the field. Then only he knew the reason for Aruṇi’s absence. The guru went to the field and called Aruṇi. Then the embankment burst open and Aruṇi came out, and because of that Aruṇi got the name Uddālaka. (M.B., Chapter 3, Verses 21-33).

2) Disciple Upamanyu. Once Dhaumya (the guru) asked his second disciple Upamanyu to tend the cows. He used to take care of the animals grazing in the woods during daytime and return home at dusk and prostrate before the guru. Looking at the plump and healthy body of Upamanyu the guru asked him how he was feeding himself. His reply was that he was begging alms and feeding himself with what he got thus. Then the guru asked him to hand over to him (guru) all alms got in future. After that he used to give everything he got by way of alms to the guru. And, he continued returning to the Gurukula at dusk and prostrating before the guru. Finding Upamanyu even then as plump and healthy as he was formerly, the guru said: My son Upamanyu, you hand over to me all the alms you get, and yet your body looks as trim as of old. How happens it so?” Upamanyu replied: “After giving the alms I get first to you, my guru, I do again beg for alms and feed myself.” To this the guru reacted thus: My boy, what you do is not the proper thing. By the second course of alms-taking you stand in the way of other people getting their food. It is gross injustice to do so.”

Upamanyu, from that day onwards strictly followed his guru’s instruction, and continued returning at dusk to the guru and doing obeisance to him. Even then finding Upamanyu to be quite plump and healthy the guru told him: “Well, now you hand over to me all the alms you get, and you do not take alms a second time the same day. Yet you are quite fit and fat. How is it so?”

To this Upamanyu’s reply was that he was feeding himself on the milk of the cows he tended. The guru told him that this too was not just and proper on his part. The guru had not permitted him to drink milk thus.

Upamanyu agreed to obey his orders. And, as usual he continued tending the cows and returning at dusk. Even then he maintained the same plump and healthy physique. And the Guru told him as follows: “You do not eat the food you get at the first alms-taking, you do not go in for alms a second time the same day, nor do you drink milk. Yet, how is it that you maintain the same fat and healthy physique as in former days?”

Upamanyu’s reply was that he was feeding now-a-days on the foam of milk bristling at the mouth of the calves when they had fed on their mother’s milk. And the guru said: “if that is so the calves will be, out of kindness and sympathy for you, releasing much foam of milk out of their mouths. That will affect them. So, do not repeat the manner in which the guru forbade him to have food in any manner as detailed above, Upamanyu, while tending the herd of cows in the forest, ate the bitter and poisonous leaves of a tree one day to satisfy his burning hunger. The leaf was bitter in taste and injurious in its properties. Therefore, this new way of satisfying hunger affected the health of the eyes of Upamanyu and he became blind. Moving about in this condition he fell into a neglected well in the woods. When, even after the sun had set, Upamanyu did not, as usual, return, the guru enquired about him from other disciples. Naturally, they told the guru that Upamanyu was out in the forest with the cows. As the guru felt that Upamanyu was staying away late in the forest since he had been prevented from doing everything he (guru) went to the forest accompanied by other disciples and called out for Upamanyu, and Upamanyu responded from deep down the well. He also told the guru how he happened to fall into the well. After telling him that if only he would pray to the Asvinidevas they will cure his blindness the guru returned to the Aśrama with other disciples. Upamanyu, accordingly offered praises and prayed to the Asvinidevas, who were so pleased with him that they appeared before him and gave him a bread. Upamanyu refused to eat the bread without giving it to the guru. Then the Asvinidevas told him thus: “In the past when we gave your guru a bread like this he ate the same without giving it to his guru. You may just imitate him and eat the bread yourself”. Even then Upamanyu did not eat the bread. The Asvinidevas were so much pleased at this that they blessed Upamanyu thus: “The teeth of your guru will turn into hard iron and yours into pure gold. Your blindness will be cured and all happiness and prosperity will be yours.”

The blessings of the Asvinidevas took full effect, and Upamanyu hurried to his guru and prostrated at his feet. Dhaumya and the other disciples of his congratulated Upamanyu. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Verses 34-77).

3) Disciple, Veda. Ayodhadhaumya one day said to Veda, his third disciple: “You stay with me for some time serving me. That will bring you all prosperity in life.” Veda agreed, and stayed for a long time in the Aśrama in the service of the guru. Without even the slightest murmur he put up with every discomfort and hardship, be it acute hunger and thirst or extreme cold or heat, and gladly performed all the work and duties the master imposed on him. The guru was absolutely pleased and his blessings resulted in all prosperity and omnipotence for the disciple. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Verses 78-80).

AYODHYĀ. A city in North India which enjoyed great importance and reputation for many years as the capital of the Kings of the solar dynasty. (See Iksvāku dynasty). All the Kings of this dynasty ruled the country from this city as their capital. Vasiṣṭha, the great preceptor of the Iksvāku Rājas, came to Ayodhya during the period of the reign of Kalmāsapāda, who was the thirty-fifth ruler in succession to Iksvāku. A quarrel broke out between Kalmāsapāda and Vasiṣṭha during a hunting expedition, and Vasiṣṭha cursed the King and as the result the latter became a Rākṣasa. After regaining his former form as King, he apologized to Vasiṣṭha and they became friends again. At the request of the King in the interests of his dynasty Vasiṣṭha came to Ayodhya, and the people were greatly elated. A son was born to Vasiṣṭha by Kalmāsapāda’s wife and that son was Aśmaka. After that Vasiṣṭha used to go to Ayodhya frequently and was installed as family preceptor of the Iksvākus. Till the time of Śrī Rāma the city of Ayodhya maintained its pomp and glory, and after that gradually its decay and fall set in. Laudatory references to the city are found in most of the Purāṇas like the Mahābhārata, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa etc. (See Kosalā).

AYOMUKHĪ. A Rākṣasa woman. She met Śrī Rāma and Laksmanā on their way to Mataṅgāśrama in search of Sītā, and requested Laksmanā to marry her. Laksmanā, as in the case of Śūrpanakhā cut off her nose and breasts and drove her away. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kānda, Chapter 69).

AYUTANĀYI. A king of the Pūru Vaniṣṭha; he was the son of Mahārajā Bhauma. Suyajñā, Kāmā and Akroda were the names respectively of his mother, wife and son. He came to be known as Ayutanāyi because of his having performed 10,000 Puruṣaṣadhas. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verses 19-20).

AYUTĀYU. A king who ruled his state for 1000 years. The Pūrāṇas like Bhāgavata, the Matsya and the Vāyu refer to him as the son of Śrūtaśravas.

AYUTAYUS. Father of King Ṛṣiprana. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha). For genealogy see Iksvāku dynasty.

A. (*vī) This word means Brahmin and also anādara-vākya (a word showing disrespect). In the indeclinable form it means limit, anger and pain.

ĀBHĪRAS.

A. few details: 1) A low caste people. People living in the estuary of the rivers of Sindhu and Sarasvati were generally called Ābhīras. In the Sābha Parva of Mahābhārata we find Nakula defeating these people during his victory march after the great Mahābhāratā battle.

2) Once Ābhīras went to Dharmaputra with many gifts. (Ślokas 11-13, Chapter 51, Sābha Parva, M.B.).

3) Once it was prophesied by Mārkaṇḍeśa Śrī, that low-caste people like Ābhīras and Śakas would become rulers of states in different parts of Bhārata during Kaliyuga. (Ślokas 35-36, Chapter 168, Vana Parva, M.B.).

4) In the Garuḍavyūha (Battle array named Garuḍa) which Drona created during the Kurukṣetra battle he included Ābhīras also. (Śloka 6, Chapter 20, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

5) Because of the hatred of Śūdras and Ābhīras a sacred lake named Vināśana disappeared from the river, Sarasvati. (Ślokas 1 and 2, Chapter 37, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

6) Ābhīras were Kṣatriyas formerly. Afraid of Parāśurāma they fled and lived in mountain-caves not continuing their hereditary work and thus became Śūdras. (Śloka 16, Chapter 29, Alvamedhika Parva, M.B.).

7) When Dvārakā was destroyed by floods and all the Yādavas were killed Arjuna went north taking along with him the wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. At that time Ābhīras were among those who attacked and carried away the women. (Ślokas 47-63, Chapter 7, Mausalya Parva, M.B.).

ĀCAMANA. First drink water three times accompanied by incantations and then with water wipe your face twice and your eyes, ears, nose, shoulder, breast and head once. This act is called Ācamana.

“Ṭirārāmachadapāh pūrvaṁ
Dvīḥ pramrjyāttato mukhaṁ
Khāṇi caiva śpṛśedadbhir
Ātmānaṁ śīra eva ca”

(Manuśrutī, Śloka 60, Chapter 2). Devī Bhāgavata in its eleventh Skandha says about Ācamana like this: “Drinking water by your right hand is called ācamana. Curve your palm into the shape of a spoon, hold water in it and drink. There must be enough water in the palm to cover a green-gram seed, not less nor more. If it falls short or exceeds the measure it is considered to be like drinking alcohol. While shaping your palm neither your little finger nor your thumb should touch the other fingers. At the time of ācamana you should support your right hand by your left hand. Otherwise: the water will turn impure.

ĀČĀRAMARYĀDĀS. See under Pājāvidhi.

ĀḌAMBARA. One of the five Pārśadas whom Brahmā gave to Skandadeva. Brahmā gave Kunda, Kusuma, Kumuda, Damba and Āḍamba.

ĀḌI. A mighty son of the demon, Andhakāśura. He did penance to please Brahmā and obtained from him a boon to seek vengeance on Śiva who had murdered his father. The boon was that Āḍi would die only when he left his present form and took another form. After obtaining the boon Āḍi went to Kailāsa and outwitting the sentries entered the abode of Śiva in the shape of a serpent. After that he disguised himself as Pārvatī and went near Śiva. But Śiva knew the trick and killed him. (Śṛṣṭi Khaṇḍha of Padma Purāṇa)

ĀḌĪBĀKA. A combat without serving any useful purpose and conducted out of sheer spite between two people to the surprise of others. The fight between Vasīṣṭha and Viśāvatru was of this kind. (Śkanḍha 6 of Devi Bhāgavata).

ĀḌĪGADĀDHĀRA. It was with the bones of an asura (demon) named Gada that Mahāviṣṇu made the first gada (mace). By that mace Viṣṇu killed Heti and other asuras of that lot and got the name Ādīgadādhāra (He who first handled the mace). (See under Gada).

ĀḌĪKURMA. The mountain of Mandara which was used as a churn-stick to churn the great milky ocean, Kyārābdhi went down the ocean. Then Mahāviṣṇu took the shape of a tortoise to lift it up and this first tortoise was called Āḍīkurma. (Śloka 12, Chapter 18, Āḍi Parva, M.B.).

ĀḌĪPARVA. One of the parvans of the epic Mahābhārata. It is the first parva. (See under Bhārata).

ĀḌĪPARVATA. The place of abode of Śiva in the Himalayas. (Śloka 22, Chapter 327, Śantī Parva, M.B.).

ĀḌĪRĀJA. The son of Kuru who was a king of the Pāru dynasty. (See under Pāru).

ĀḌĪSĪRĀ. One of the disciples of Śākalya. Vyāsa, made the Vedas and taught his son Śākalya a portion of it. Śākalya divided his portion into five different and equal divisions and taught each of his five disciples, Vāśyāyaṇa, Maudgalya, Śāli, Āḍīśīrā and Gokhālī a division. (Śkanḍha 12, Bhāgavata).

ĀḌĪṬI. The disciple who was ordained by his preceptor to observe celibacy for a stipulated number of years.

ĀḌĪTYA. The twelve sons born to the sage Kaśyapa of his wife Aditi are known as the twelve Āḍītyas. They are the following: Dhāti, Mitra, Aryāmā, Rudra, Varuṇa, Śūrya, Bhaga, Vivasvān, Puṣā, Savitā, Tvāṣṭa and Viṣṇu. Besides these Āḍīti had twentyone children including Indra. All of them are called Āḍītyas meaning children of Āḍīti. From the thirtythree sons of Āḍīti were born the thirtythree croutes of devatās. Of these the eldest is Indra and the youngest, Vāmanā. (Śloka 36, Chapter 66, Āḍi Parva, M.B.). (There is corroboration for this in Śloka 14, Sarga 14, Aranyā Kaṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

Sirdar K.M. Panikar in his preface to the book “Rgveda-saṁhitā” writes thus about Āḍītyas: “Generally we think of Śūrya (the Sun) when we hear the word Āḍītya. But there are many different Āḍītyas in Rgveda, chief of them is Varuṇa. Though Savitā, Puṣā and Mitra are all synonyms of Śūrya in Rgveda they are all separate devas. There is no end to the varieties of Āḍītyas and their prominence in the Vedas. Summarising we can say thus. The familiar devas like Indra, Agni, Varuṇa and Śūrya are not found in the same form or power as we are taught to believe. Those whom we have lowered down to the posts of the eight sentries of the universe are very prominent devatās in the Vedas. Many Āḍītyas have merged in Śūrya and winds in the god of Vāyu. Rudra has merged in Śiva. Who will believe that the all-powerful Deva of the Rgveda and the vainglorious Indra who lives in fear of men doing penance are one and the same person?”

ĀḌĪTYAΗΡΙΔΑYA. A mantra (incantation) of great power to destroy all enemies. During the combat with Rāvana at one time Rāma fell exhausted in the battlefield. Seeing this the sage Agastyā rushed to him and taught him this mantra. (Sarga 107, Yuddha Kaṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

ĀḌĪTYAΗΕΤΕ. One of the sons of Dīrgharāja. Bhīma sena killed him in the great battle of Kurukṣetra. (Śloka 102, Chapter 67, Āḍi Parva and Śloka 28, Chapter 88, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

ĀḌĪTYAΣΕΝΑ. A very brave King. Stories about this King are found in Kathāsaritsāgara. (Tāraṅga 4, Kathāpīṭhālambaka).

ĀḌĪTYAΗΙϦΡΗΔΑ. An ancient holy place on the banks of the river, Sarasvatī. (Śloka 17, Chapter 99, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

ĀḌĪTYΑVARNA. A king who always ordered without thinking and repeated later. The book Kathāsaritsāgara tells the story of this King in the fifth tāraṅga of its part, Kathāpīṭhālambaka.

ĀḌΙΚΑΣΗ. A sage of old. He attended the sacrifice conducted by the King Upāricara. (Śloka 9, Chapter 336, Śantī Parva, M.B.).

ĀΓΝΕΥΑΠΟΡΑโย. See under Agnipurāṇa.

ĀΓΝΕΥΑΣΤΡΑ. A powerful weapon or missile. One night Arjuna fought against a gandharva, Aṅgārāparpa, on the banks of the river Ganges. Arjuna then described to him how he came into possession of this missile. This powerful missile was given first to Bhāradvāja by Bhṛṣpati and Bharadvāja gave it to Āgniśeṣa who in turn gave it to Droṇa and the latter gave it to Arjuna, his most favourite disciple. (Ślokas 29-30, Chapter 170, Āḍi Parva, M.B.).

ĀΓΝΕΥ. Wife of Kuru, son of Manu. Śambhu wife of Dhrūva gave birth to two sons, Śiṣṭi and Bhavya. Succhāya wife of Śiṣṭi gave birth to five sinless sons Ripu, Rupūṇīyā, Vīpa, Vṛkala and Vṛkataejas. Cākṣuṣa was born of Bhṛti, wife of Ripu. Manu was born to Cākṣuṣa of his wife Puṣkariṇī, daughter of the great Vīraṇaprajāpati. Puṣkariṇī hailed from the dynasty of Marutta. To Manu were born of Nāḍalāḥ ten sons, Kuru, Puru, Śatadyumna, Tapasvi, Satyavān, Śuci, Agniṣṭoma, Atriṣṭra, Sudyumna, and Abhimanyu. Of these, Kuru got of his wife Āgniṣṭō seven sons: Āṇa, Sumanas, Khyāti, Krautu, Aṅgiras and Śibi. Vena was born to Āṇa of his wife Sunithā. (Chapter 13, Anīśam 1, Viṣṇu Pūṇāṇa).

ĀΓΝĪDΗΡΑ. See Agnidadhra.

ĀΓΝΙΒΕϹɅ (AGΝΙΒΕϹΑ). An ancient sage who received an armour and the sacred mantras associated with it from Bhṛṣpati. He was the Ācārya of Dhanurveda and the revered preceptor of Droṇa. (Ślokas 67 and 68, Chapter 94, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

ĀGRĀYĀNA. The fourth son of the Agni, Bhānu. (Ślokas 13, Chapter 221, Vana Parva, M.B.).

ĀGROYA. A country conquered by Karṇa. (Ślokas 19-21, Chapter 254, Vana Parva, M.B.).

ĀHAVANĪYA. An agni. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 67).

ĀHUKA. A king of Yadu Varṣa. He was the father of Ugraśena, the father of Kaṇha. (Some Purāṇas say that Āhuka and Ugraśena were the names of the same person). For genealogy, see “YADU VAMŚA”. In M.B., Saṁhāra Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 33, we find that Ākritra had married Sutaṇā, the daughter of Āhuka. Āhuka had a hundred sons. (M.B., Saṁhāra Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 56). There were constant quarrels between Āhuka and Akṛttra. (M.B., Śaṁti Parva, Chapter 81, Verses 8-11).

ĀHUTI. A Kṣatriya King. Śrī Kṛṣṇa defeated this King in the city called Jārūthi. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 30).

ĀJAGARA. An ascetic. Śaṁti Parva of Mahābhārata in its 179th Chapter states that Prahlāda conversed with this sage.

ĀJAGARA PARVA. A sub-division of the Vana Parva of Mahābhārata. (See under M.B.).

ĀJAGARAVRATA. The vrata practised by the sage, Ājagara. (A vrata is a predetermined course of action which is followed with continued persistence). In his own words it is the following: “If I get a grand feast I will accept it but I will go without food for days together if I do not get any food at all. People used to feed me well sometimes, sometimes a little and sometimes not at all. I will eat vegetables and cakes sometimes. I will eat meat and any kind of food. I will lie on soft bed or on bare earth sometimes and in big houses if I get the chance. I will wear costly clothes if I get them or I will wear dried leaves and animal skins. If I get food from yāgaśālas I will never refuse it, but I will never go seeking for it.” (Ślokas 19-25, Chapter 179, Śaṁti Parva, M.B.).

ĀJAGAVA. The bow of Māndhātā and Prthu and the Gāndiva of Arjuna bear the name Ājagava. (Ślokas 33 and 34, Chapter 126, Vana Parva; Ślokas 94, Chapter 145, Droṇa Parva, M.B. and Chapter 13, Anuśaṇa 1 of Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

ĀJAMĪDA. A king born of the family of Ajamīda.

ĀJANEYA. A species of good horses. (Ślokas 10, Chapter 270, Vana Parva, M.B.).

ĀJAYA(S). A community of Pitṛs belonging to the dynasty of Pulaha. They are called so because they drink during yāgas the ghee made out of goats milk (Ājya) (Matsya Purāṇa). They live in the land of Kardama Prajāpati. Their daughter Virājī is the wife of Nahuṣa. (Śrīgī Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

ĀKARA. People living in the land named Ākara are called Ākargas. (Ślokas 11, Chapter 34, Saṁhāra Parva, M.B.).

ĀKASHAJOANAI. Holes made on the walls of a Fort. Bullets are sent out from the fort through these holes.

ĀKATHA. Son of Maṇiśa. He was a great devotee of Śiva and once when his house was burnt completely the idol of Śiva inside his house was partially destroyed. Worried much over this loss Ākatha was about to give a portion of his body also to the flames when Śiva appeared before him and blessed him. (Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

ĀKROŚA. A king of ancient Bhārata. He was king over the land of Mahottaha. Nakula conquered him during his victory march. (Ślokas 5 and 6, Chapter 32, Saṁhāra Parva, M.B.).

ĀKRTI. A king of ancient Bhārata. This king ruled over the land of Saurāstra. (Ślokas 61, Chapter 31, Saṁhāra Parva, M.B.).

ĀKRTIPUTRA. Ruciparva, son of Ākrti. He fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas and was killed by Bhagadatta. (Ślokas 40 to 47, Chapter 27, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

ĀKUTI. Wife of Ruciprapāti. Brahmā’s son Śvāyambhuva Manu got of his wife Satarūpa two sons Priyavrata and Uttanapada and two daughters Prasūti and Akūti. Prasūti was married to Dakṣaprāpati and Akūti to Ruciprapāti. Akūti delivered twins named Yajña, a son, and Dakṣīṇa, a daughter. (Chapter 7, Vaiṣṇa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

ĀLAJĀLA. See under “YAMAJIHVA”.

ĀLAMBHA. An ancient sage. He flourished in Yudhiṣṭhira’s court. (M.B., Saṁhāra Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 5).

ĀLAMBAYANA. A comrade of Indra. (M.B., Anuśaṇa Parva, Chapter 13, Verse 15).

ĀLVĀR. See the word NAMMALVĀR.

ĀMA. See under AVATĀRA.

ĀMARATHA. A place in ancient Bhārata. (Ślokas 54, Chapter 9, Bhiṣma Parva, M.B.).

ĀNA I. (A Malayalam word meaning elephant). Bhāgavata relates the story of how Indradyumna became an elephant by the curse of Agastya. (See under Indradyumna).

ĀNA II. (Elephant). Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa narrates the origin of elephants thus: “Kaśyapa was born to Marica, son of Brahmā. Kaśyapa married the daughters, Adīti, Dīti, Danu, Kālikā, Tāmra, Krodhavāsa, Manu and Anālā, of Dakṣaprāpati. Of these Krodhavāsa gave birth to ten girls, Mrīgī, Mṛgamadā, Hari, Bhadramatā, Mātāṅgi, Sārdūli, Svētā, Surabhī, Surasī, and Kadrī. Elephants were born as the sons of Mātāṅgi. (Sarga 14, Aranya Khaṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa). There is a story in the Mahābhārata to explain why the tongue of the elephant is curved inside. “Bīṛgu Mahāṛsi cursed Agni and greatly dejected over this he disappeared from public and hid somewhere. The Devas started searching for him and it was an elephant that showed the devas the hiding place of Agni. Agni then cursed the elephants and said that thereafter all the elephants would have their tongues curved inside. (Ślokas 36, Chapter 85, Anuśaṇa Parva, M.B.). The signs of good elephants and the treatment to be accorded to sick ones are detailed in Agni Purāṇa. “Elephants with long trunks and heavy breathing belong to the top class and they will possess great endurance power. Those who have nails eighteen or twenty in number and who became turbulent during winter belong to a superior class. Those ones whose right tusks are a bit raised, whose cry is stentorian as that of thunder whose ears are very big and whose skins are spotted are the best of the species. Other varieties especially the dwarfish type and she-elephants in the early stage of pregnancy are not good and not fit to be tamed. Elephants who have Varna, Sattva, Bala, Rūpa, Kāṇṭi, Sārīragaṇa and Vega will conquer enemies in a battle; there is no doubt about it. Elephants are an ornament for any battle-array. The victory earned by a King with his elephants is more respected.

For all diseases of an elephant Anuvāsana or Sneha-vasti is recommended. A bath after anointing it with oil or ghee is good. For skin diseases the ghee may be combined with Manjal (Turmeric), Maramanjal or gomūtra (cow urine). If it suffers from enlargement of the belly, giving it a bath with sesame oil is good. It can be given half Pippali, Ashvatthā and Vārūṣimadaya to drink. If there is fainting it must be given rice mixed with Vīlāri, Triphala, Cukku, Mulaku and Tippali and water mixed with honey to drink. If there is headache anointing the head with sesame oil and inhalation of the same is good.

For diseases of the foot, treatment with Sneha-pūtas is prescribed. To get motion of the bowels Kālkantha Kaśāya (infusion of sugar candy) is good. To those who have shivers should be given the flesh of peacock, Tittīri bird and Lāva bird mixed with Tippali and pepper. For dysentery the tender fruit of Kāvala, skin of Pāccotti, flower of Tittīri should be dried and powdered and be given mixed with sugar along with rice. For Karagrahā (pain inside the trunk) Nasyam of ghee with Intappā mixed in it should be done. It must be given “Muttaṅga Kaṇci with tippali, Cukku and Jiraka in it. For Utkārṇaka (pain in the ear) flesh of pigs should be given. For Galagrahā (pain in the neck) a liniment made of Daśamūla, Mūrtrappu and Kākkanappi in oil should be rubbed at the site of pain and the elephant kept under chains. If there is difficulty in passing urine light liquor containing powdered Aṣṭalavoṣa should be given. For all skin diseases use Vep oil as an ointment and give the infusion of Aṣṭalovāja to drink. For worms (inside the stomach) give cow’s urine with powdered Vīlāri in it. If the elephant is getting reduced and weak it should be given milk or meat soup with Cukku, Tippali and grapes well mixed in it. If there is lack of appetite it is to be given Mulgauḍana (rice boiled along with Cerupayar) to which is added Cukku, Mulaku and Tippali. If it is Gulaṃ it should be given sesam oil boiled with the following: Trikotpakkonna, Cukku, Mulaku Tippali, Kotuvēlikkilaṅgu, Nāgadanti-veru, Erikkinnveru, Nātktottakkonna, Milk and Attitippali. Navara rice with sort of cerupayar can also be given. For swellings on the face, a paste made of tender Kāvāla fruits can be rubbed at the site of the swelling. For all sorts of pains in the stomach rice well mixed with the powder made by grinding together Vālāri, Kutakappalayari, Aśaloetē, Carala, Maṇja, Maramañja may be given. The best food for elephants is the rice of Navara, Vrihi and cennellu. Yava and wheat are next to the above. Any other food is inferior to these. Yava and sugarcane will give strength to elephants. Dry yava rice is not good. Milk and meat cooked with carminative ingredients are good for elephants who have gone lean.

If the elephants receive great injuries in a battle the meat of birds like crow, fowl, cuckoo and Hari mixed with honey is good. Fumigation by the burning of chilli, fish, Vālāri, caustic soda, Puttala, Pirām and maramañja mixed together is effective. Dropping honey medicated with tippali tandula, sesame oil, and fruit honey in the eyes is not only good for the eyes but is also inductive of digestion. Make an ointment with the faces of the birds cētaka and Pāvavāta mixed with the burnt skin of Nātānara dissolved in light spirit. If this ointment is applied, the elephant would defeat all enemies in a battle. Powder Nilotpala, Muttaṅga and Takara and make an ointment using rice gruel. Applying this ointment in the eye is excellent.

If the nails grow they should be cut at least once a month. Once in a month an oil bath is good for the elephants. Elephant sheds should be spread with cow dung discs and dust. Doing Seka with ghee during autumn and summer is advisable. (Chapter 287, Agni Purāṇa).

1. Vālāri—The grain of Vīl—Viḍāṅga (Bābṛgṛṇ)
2. Triphala—A combination of the three fruits:
   a) āmalaki (Emblīc Myrobalam) b) Vībhitakī (Beleric Myrobalam) and c) Haritaki (Myrobalam)
3. Cukku—Sūṭṭhi (dry ginger)
4. Mulaku—Raktamarica (chilli)
5. Tippali—Pippali (long pepper)
6. Kāvala—Vīva (Bengal Kinc)
7. Pāccotti—Lodīrta (symplocos Racemosa)
8. Tittīri—Diḥātaki (Grisles Tomentosa)
9. Nasyam—A method of introducing medicine through the nose
10. Intappu—Salakī Puṣpa (Flower of Boswellia Thūṛṣēra)
11. Muttaṅga—Muttā (Gyperus Rotendus) Kaṇci means rice boiled with water and Muttaṅga Kaṇci means rice and muttaṅga boiled together.
12. Jiraka—Jiraka (cumin seeds)
14. Mūrtrappu
15. Kākkanappi—Kākatiṇdu
16. Aṣṭalavoṣa—Eight salts like common salt, rock salt, magnesium sulphate etc.
17. Aṣṭalovāja—Atarama (Vasaka)
18. Cērupayar—Mudga (green-grain)
19. Gulaṃ
20. Trikotpakkonna—Trīrī (Turīthroot)
21. Kōṭuvēlikkilaṅgu—Gītaraka (Plumbago rose)
22. Nāgadanti-veru—Root of Nāgadanti (Glances leaved Physicnut)
23. Erikkinnveru—Root of Arēka (Giganic swallow wort)
24. Nākktottakkonna—Krṣṇa Trīrī
t25. Attitippali—Hastipippali
27. Carala—Saralā (long leaved pine)
28. Maṇja—Haralā (Turmeric)
29. Maramañja—Dāvṛī dVrihi—Cināḥ (A kind of paddy)

ANAKA. A person of the Yadava dynasty. (See under YADAVAVAMSA).

ANAKADUNDUBHI. An epithet of Vasudeva, father of Sri Krsna.

ANANDA. A forest on the top of the mountain Mahameru. It was inhabited by celestial damseis, devas, gandharvas and Maharsi. (Chapter 93, Bhumi Khandha, Padma Purana).

ANANDA (CAKSU). Son of Maharsi Anamitra. It was he who was born as Cakṣuṣa, the sixth Manu. There is a story behind his birth. One day, while his mother was keeping him in her lap and caressing him the baby laughed and questioned "Oh mother why are you caressing me, but look at those two cats. They consider me as their food". After some time one of the cats took the child away and put it in the cradle of the child of King Vikrant. Vikrant took the child as his for granted and reared him. At the time of Upanayana the King asked the boy to prostrate before his mother at which the boy exclaimed "Oh King, I am not your son. Your son is at some other place. By births and rebirths all of us have many mothers and so it is better to be above rebirths". After having said so much Ananda went to the forest and started doing penance. Brahma appeared before him and blessing him said that he would become the sixth Manu and lead the world to righteousness. By the blessing of Brahma Ananda was reborn as Cakṣuṣamanu. (See under Cakṣuṣa). (Marakandeya Purana).

ANANDAVARDHANA. A great critic of Sanskrit literature. He lived in the 9th century A.D. He expounded his theory of Dhvanivāda by 120 Kārikās. His own commentary of the Kārikās is the book called Dhvanīyāloka. There are four parts for Dhvanīyāloka and each part is called an Udyota.

There is a belief among a few that the Kārikās were written by another scholar, Saḥrdaya, and that Anandavardhana had written only a commentary on it. He was a member of the royal council of Avantivarmā who ruled Kashmir during the period 854-884 A.D. It is believed that he wrote Dhvanīyāloka in 850 A.D. Many commentaries have been written of Dhvanīyāloka of which the one written by Abhinavagupta is considered to be the best.

ANARTTA. Grandson of Vaivasvatamanu. He was a king, son of Saryāti.

Sixteen sons were born to Vaivasvatamanu: Manu, Yama, Yami, Ādivinākurā, Revanta, Sudīvumā, Iksvāku, Nirga, Saryāti, Diṣṭa, Dhṛṣṭa, Karīṣṭa, Nārisyaṇa, Nābhaga, Praḍāhrā and Kavi. Of these Saryāti got two children, Sukanyā and Anartta. Sukanyā became the wife of Casyavana.

2) Other details. It was this king who built the fortresses at the town of Kuṣasthalī (Dvārakā). Varuṇa submerged in the ocean all the fortresses built by him and the place for sometime remained as a forest-land. (Daśama Skandha, Bhāgavata Kilippattu). It was after that that Śrī Kṛṣṇa made that land beautiful and called it Dvārakā. The country ruled over by Anartta was called Anarttam. During his regime there lived in his land a very great scholar named Vedarratha. (Umeśānnavrata, Siva Purāṇa) See under Vedarratha.

ANARTTA (M). A place in ancient Bhārata. Arjuna conquered this place. (Sloka 4, Chapter 26, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

ANDHRA. The present Andhra Pradeśa. It was famous even from purānic times and it was annexed by Sahadeva by defeating its ruler in a game of dice.

ĀNGARIŚTHA. A king of ancient Bhārata. (Slokas 13 and 14, Chapter 123, Santi Parva, M.B.).

ĀNGIRAŚAKALPA. A saṁhitā division of Atharvaveda. The five saṁhitā divisions of Atharvaveda written by Muñjikeša are the best. They are: The Nakṣatra Kalpa dealing with the pūjā rites of the stars; The veda Kalpa dealing with the rites associated with Brahmā, the Rūvik; The Saṁhitā Kalpa, dealing with the use and practice of Mantras; The Āngirasaka Kalpa dealing with sorcery; and the Sāntī Kalpa dealing with matters relating to the welfare and control of animals like horses and elephants. (Chapter 6, Aṁśam 3 of Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

ĀNGIRASI. A very chaste wife of a Brahmin. By the curse of Śakti, son of Vasiṣṭha Kalmāṣapāda, a king of the Iksvāku dynasty became a demon. That demon killed and devoured the husband of Āngirasi. Enraged at this the Brahmin lady cursed Kalmāṣapāda saying that if he touched his wife thereafter he would die. That was why Vasiṣṭha had to beg a son for Kalmāṣapāda of his wife. (Slokas 16-22, Chapter 181, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ĀNHRIKA. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra who were Brahmadevis. (Sloka 54, Chapter 4, Anuśasana Parva, M.B.).

ĀNJALI. A sage who was a classmate of Śaunaka. (Skandha 12, Bhāgavata).

ĀNJANA KULA. A division of elephants (in the army). (Slokas 17 and 18, Chapter 112, Drona Parva, M.B.).

ĀNUŚASANIKA PARVA. One of the Parvans of the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata).

ĀPA. One of the Aśvavasus. The Aśvavasus are Āpa, Dhrjusa, Suṣma, Dharma, Anila, Agni, Pratyuṣa and Prabhāsa. The sons of Āpa are Vaitana, śrama, Śanta and Śvami. (See under Aśvavasus). (Chapter 15, Aṁśam 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

ĀPAGĀ. A sacred river. It is said that if one gives food to one brahmin on the banks of this river it will be equivalent to giving food to a crore of brahmins elsewhere. (Sloka 68, Chapter 83, Vana Parva, M.B.).
APASTAMBA. An ancient sage. He once consoled King Dyunnaisena. (Śloka 18, Chapter 298, Vana Parva, M.B.).

1) How he got his name. Once a brahmin did not get a suitable man to officiate as priest for a śrāddhā ceremony. He then prayed to his ancestors, Viṣṇudevas and Mahāviśnu for help and then Apastamba appeared before him. The brahmin gave him food to his heart’s content and asked him how he felt. To the surprise of the brahmin Apastamba replied, he wanted some more and thus made the Śrāddhā ineffective. The brahmin got angry and cursed him by sprinkling on his face water taken in his palm. But before the water-particles reached his face Apastamba ordered the water-drops to remain still. Water stopped still and still midway by the power of the sage. Because water (Āpa) became stiff (Stamba) the ārṣi was named Apastamba. (Brahma Purāṇa).

2) How Apastamba tīrtha came into existence. Once he met Agastya Muni and asked him who was superior among the gods Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva. Agastya declared that Śiva stood supreme of the lot and gave him advice as to how to please Śiva. Following his instructions Apastamba did penance on the banks of the river Gau- tami and Śiva appeared before him, blessed him, and made that place a holy one. Śiva declared that those who, bathed at that place would obtain ‘Divya-jñāna’ (Divine knowledge enabling one to know the past, present and future). From then onwards that place was known as Apastamba tīrtha.

3) Other details. Apastamba had a very chaste and humble wife named Añjasiṇṭrā. Their son was Gārki. ‘Gṛhyaḥtārasaṁgraha’ containing a prayer and two mantras is a contribution to the holy science by Apastamba. Many Hindus follow it even now. He had stated that the decrease in the number of great sages was because of the fact that people were not practising the control of the senses as before.

APADDHARMA PARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata).

APAVAN I. Another name of sage Vasiṣṭha. (Śloka 5, Chapter 99, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

APAVAN II. An ancient sage. Kārttavīryārjuna once burnt the āśrama of this ārṣi and he cursed Agni and Kārttavīryārjuna. (Ślokas 42 and 43, Chapter 49, Śanti Parva, M.B.).

APADHAUMYA. (See Ayodhaumya).

APTA. A well-known serpent of the Kaśyapa dynasty. (Śloka 8, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

APURAṆA. A well-known serpent of the Kaśyapa dynasty. (Śloka 6, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva).

AR. The significance of the number six among the ancients, is given below. (In Malayālām Ar means six).

1) Six factors which reduce the span of life. Eating dry meat, drinking curd at night, sleeping at dawn, drinking impure water, exposure to sun’s heat in the morning, inhaling fumes from dead body.

2) Six divine qualities. Omniscience, Omnipresence, Omnipotence, Sarvakāraṇa (being the cause of everything); Sarvanitya (immortality) and Sarveśvaratva (having domination over everything).

3) Six noblest qualities. Truth, Wisdom, Mercy, Justice, fortitude in grief, control of anger.

4) Six Rṣi Dharmas (Duties of Sages). Brahmacarya, Absolute truth, Japa, Jñāna (wisdom), Niyama, Sense of Justice.

5) Six qualities of noble wives. A minister in business, a servant-maid in action, the goddess Lakṣmī in appearance, the Earth in patience, a mother in love and a prostitute in bed.

6) Six qualities of a bad wife. Habit of dispute, stealing of money, showing favour to strangers, scandal-mongering, taking food earlier than the husband, spending most of the time in other houses.

7) Six Veda-gāyas. Śikṣā, Kalpa, Vyākaraṇa, Nirukta, Jyotiṣa, Chandas.

ARĀLIKA. A mahout who could control elephants that had gone mad temporarily. (Śloka 9, Chapter 2, Virāṭa Parva, M.B.).

ĀRANEYAPARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata).

ARCOKA. A mountain in front of the forest Saindhava inhabited by Maniśipuruṣās. (Śloka 16, Chapter 125, Vana Parva, M.B.).

ARJAVA. Son of Subala and brother of Śakuni. He was killed by Irāvān son of Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

AROCAKA(M). A country of ancient Bhārata. The people of this place are called Arocakas. (Śloka 7, Chapter 51, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

ARŚA(M). A form of marriage. Brāhma is the form of marriage in which the bride is given to a man of good ancestry and fine character. Marriage by giving the bride after receiving a pair of cows from the bridegroom is called Arśa. Prājāpatya is the form of marriage in which the bride is given to the man who asks for her. When the bride is given with dowry, the marriage is known as Āsuram. Marriage with the mutual love and consent is Gāndharva. Capturing the bride after a fight and marrying her by force is Rākṣasa. Marriage after deceiving the bride is called Paśāca. These are the seven types of marriage. According to the author of the Smṛti another form of marriage known as ṬAIWA is also mentioned. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 154).

ARŚIṆENA. A Mahārṣi. In the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 159 there is a reference to the Pāṇḍavas visiting this sage during their life in the forest. ArśiṆena’s āśrama was midway between Badayūśrama and Kubera’s capital.

Power of Tapas. In Kṛtyaṅga this sage did rigorous tapas in Pṛthūdaikārtha. Owing to the rigour of the tapas he obtained all the chief vedas. He gave three boons to that sacred tīrtha —

1. Those who bathe in this tīrtha will get the benefit of Aśvamedha yāga.

2. There will be no fear of snakes in this tīrtha.

3. A slight effort made here, will be rewarded with greater results.

After giving these three boons to the river Sarasvatī which is Pṛthūdaikārtha the sage attained Brahmahood and entered Dvālaka. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 40, Verses 3-9).

ĀRṬṬĀYANI. Salya, son of Ārṭiyan. He was noted for his great honesty and love of truth. (Śloka 56, Chapter 32, Salya Parva, M.B.).

ĀRṬIMĀN. A mantra which eliminates all kinds of fear. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 50, Verses 23-26).

ĀRUṈI I. A disciple of the sage Ayodhaumya. (For details see under Ayodhaumya).
ARYAS. The Rgveda gives us most of the information regarding the Aryans who came to the north of India during the times of the Vedas through the passes on that north-western side of Bharata. Sirdar K.M. Panikar writing in his preface to the ‘Rgvedasarhita’ by Poet Vallathol summarises the information available in the Rgveda about Aryan culture and says: “When the Aryans first entered India they were rich in cattle. They used to breed goats, dogs, donkeys, and horses. The elephant was unknown to them. In the Vedas the vehicle of Indra is a horse and not an elephant. When hailing Indra they shout ‘come, come on your horse-back’. The Veda does not say anything about how Indra got the elephant, Airavata, as his vehicle. Sing to the glory of Indra against whom in his chariot driven by two horses no enemy would dare to face.

The Rgveda gives great importance to agriculture. Areas under cultivation were called Urvara and ‘Kṣetra’. Fields were ploughed by attaching six, eight and even twelve bullocks to the plough. Water was taken from hradas and Kulyakas (ponds and tanks) for the purpose of irrigation. Agriculture was a very familiar art to them. They used to cultivate all sorts of grains and grains including yava. They conducted trade by the exchange of goods generally. There is a reference in one place of the use of a coin ‘Niska’.

The Aryas were clever in the art of leather work, woodwork and metallurgy. They were well versed in medicine also. In a sūkta of the ninth manḍala it is stated that the father of a ṛṣi was a medical practitioner. There are references to many industries also. Weaving was a very important industry at that time. Cotton cloth and woollen blankets were made by them on a large scale. Iron was used by them with great skill. The manufacture of armours and the descriptions about them in Rgveda are ample evidence of the proficiency of the Aryas in iron mongery and blacksmithy. Sea voyage was not familiar to them. References to traders cruising in boats in the Sindhuriver do not give much importance to the cruising. In food rice and ghee were important. Meat was also relished. Ṛṣis wore animal skins but others wore dhotis and shawls.

During the Rgvedic times their social structure was divided into four stages: Grāma was a colony of families and was the nucleus of the society. A number of gramaas formed into a place called Viṣāya. A number of Viṣayas became what was known as ‘Janam’. The importance of Janas can be understood by the statements made about Pañcajanatas and the existence of special Janas like Yādava Jana and Bhārata Jana. There is no wonder why the Aryas who had to live among enemies accepted kingship. The Rgveda narrates the difficulties people would have to encounter if they were left to fight their enemies without a proper leader and so advocates Kingship and gives it an exalted position in their social structure. Sūkta 22, Anuvāka 12 of Manḍala 10 describes the coronation of a King thus: ‘I do hereby crown you as King. Come to our midst. Rule us with courage and an unwavering mind. Let all your subjects love you. Let thy kingdom remain with you for ever’. The next mantra is also of the same idea. A King is above punishment. The veda speaks about many famous kings of which the following are worth mentioning. Divodāsa, Sudās, Ambariṣa, Nahaṣa and Purūravas.

The chief priest was always the political advisor also. Viśvamitra and Vasiṣṭha were two great priests of the Bharata dynasty. There were other priests also. Mention is there about a Rājasabha though nothing is said about their powers or functions. It can be surmised that the Sabhā was constituted of only men of character and learning.

It is interesting to note the type of domestic life in vogue then. A father had the right, to sell his children, to cite an example is the story of Sunaṣṣepha who was made into a cow and sold to Viśvamitra who looked after him well. The father had the right to make his children lose all rights over his properties. Viśvamitra sent out from his family fifty sons who refused to obey him. Dowry was current then. Sūkta 11, Anuvāka 3, Manḍalam 10 ordains that the bride should go to the house of her husband after the marriage. Polygamy was not objected to. There is a mantra to harass the co-wife and its purpose is to make the husband more attached to her who hates the co-wife. The originator of this mantra was Indrāṇi, the queen of Indra. Indra had many wives. Marriage was considered as a necessary duty. Widow marriage was allowed.

The Rgveda gives the picture of a society of people who were always at war with each other. ‘We are surrounded by mighty enemies. Help us’. This is the slogan that rings out from the Rgveda.

The Rgveda is a history of the Aryas. The march from Kubhāṭa (Kubul) to the banks of Yamunā is depicted there. It was at Kubhāṭa that the mantras were first made. When they reach the banks of the Ganga the period of Rgveda ends. The crossing of each of the five rivers of Pançanada is treated as a big event by the ṛṣis. When they saw the huge and deep river, Sindhu, they were amazed. The wonder is reflected in a lovely mantra. It was after crossing Sindhu that they had to oppose the ‘Dasyus’. The Rgveda itself records that the Dasyus were more cultured than the Aryas. Sambhara, a Dasyu King, was the ruler of a hundred cities. Their fortresses were strong. They have been described in the Rgveda as Sāvamayi, Āyasi and Satabhuiḍa. The chief opponents of the Aryas were a tribe of people called Paṇis. From the Nirukta of Yāṣka we are given to understand that the Paṇis were mainly engaged in trade. The Rgveda names many Dasyu kings of which the following few were more daring and brave and the Aryas acknowledged their superior strength and courage: Dhūni, Ĉumuri, Viprū, Varsis and Sambhara. Among the several divisions of the Dasyus, the Śimyus, Kīkaṭas, Śigrus and Yaḵṣus ranked foremost in power. They are described as having black colour and flat noses and speaking a language different from that of the Āryas. We may surmise from these facts that they belonged to the Dravida class of people. They never conducted yāga nor did they worship gods like Indra. They were idol worshippers for they had been abused as ‘Śiṣṇu-devas’. Later the Āryas learnt from the Dasyus the worship of Śiva, Devi and Liṅga.

Conquering these daring and cultured enemies the Āryas reached the banks of the Yamunā to find to their pleasant surprise a radical change in themselves. The Bharatas settled themselves in the land between the Yamunā and Gaṅgā and remained friendly with the Dasyus living to the east of Gaṅgā. The Āryas who settled down in Paṅcanada were strong and to prevent them from coming and conquering them Bharata tried to keep them remain on the other side of Śutudri (Śutilej). This led to a war called Dāśārājaḥ.

This war is to be considered as one of the most important of wars in the world. Those who opposed Sudās were Āryas though among the supporters of Sudās were also Āryas. It was the people under Sudā who came out victorious in that war and put a stop to further conquests by the Āryas. From thereafter the Āryas joined hands with the aborigines and laid the foundation for the great Hindu civilization. Thereafter the Rgveda states about prayers for help to combat ‘our enemies of Āryas and Dasyus’. The gods who were recognised later were those who were not found in the vedas of the Āryas. The worship of Mahāyugi and Devi found in Mohenjodaro is an evidence of this change.

ĀRYA. One of the seven mothers who were present at the birth of Subrahmanyā. (Śloka 13, Chapter 228, Vana Parva, M.B.)

ĀRYAKA. A famous serpent. (Śloka 7, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva, M.B.) Āryaka is associated with Bhūmasena in the following story. Once Duryodhana gave snake poison in his food to Bhūmasena. Unaware Bhūma took his food as usual and went to bathe in the river. After some time Bhūma became unconscious due to the effect of the poison and fell flat in the river.

Immediately Duryodhana bound him by ropes and put him in more deep waters. Bhūma reaching the bottom was bitten by all the snakes there. This fortunately served as an antidote and the poison in Bhūma’s body was neutralized and Bhūma became his old self again and killed all the serpents. Those serpents who escaped went and brought their chief, Vāsuki. At that time it was Āryaka who advised Vāsuki to give him ‘rasapāṇa’. (Śloka 64-68, Chapter 127, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

ĀRYAKU. Another name for Durgādevī. (Chapter 12, Agni Purāṇa)

ĀRYĀVARTA. Another name for Bhārata. There is also a place of that name. According to Smṛti the land lying between the Hilmālayas and the Vindhayas is called Ārāvarta. (Śloka 15, Chapter 325, Śanti Parva, M.B.)

ĀRYĀVARTA. A king of the dynasty of Viśvakarmā. Genealogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu are Brahmā, Dharma, Prabhāsa, Viśvakarmā, Priyavrata, Agrīndhra, Nābhi, Ṛṣabhā and Ārāvarta.

Of these Ṛṣabhā got of his wife Jayanti twenty sons: Bharata, Kuśāṃvarta, Ilīvarta, Brahmāvarta, Āryāvarta, Malaya, Ketu, Bhradraṇa, Indraśpṛk, Vidarbha, Kikāṇa, Kavi, Hari, Antarikṣa, Prabuddha, Pippalāyana, Āvīrhotra, Dridaṇa, Camasa and Karabiṇājana. Of these Bharata ruled over this land and gave it the name Bhārata. Brothers of Bharata ruled different parts of this land. Dridaṇa’s land became known later as Drāvīḍa (Dakṣinabhārata).

ĀŚADHA I. A Kṣatriya King. He was the incarnation of a Rākṣasa called Krodhaśva. Kaṣyapa was the son of Marīcī, Brahmā’s son. Kaṣyapa married Krodhaśva, daughter of Dakṣa. The Rākṣasa group called Krodhavāsas were the children of Krodhaśva. Many Kṣatriya kings trace their descent from this group of Rākṣasas. The names of such Kṣatriya Kings are given below: Madraka, Karṇaiveśha, Śidhārtha, Kita-kariddha, Subāhu, Bālīka, Kṛatha, Vicitra, Suratha, Ciravāsas, Kauravya, Dantavakra, Kukśi, Janamejaya, Āśadha, Vāyuvega, Bhūritejas, Ekalavya, Sumitra, Gomukha, Vātādīnna, and Kṣamadāntrī. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 6, Verses 99-64).

ĀŚADHA II. Śiva. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 121).

ĀŚADHABHUTI. See under Paṇcatantra.

ĀŚADHA. Name of a month. By feasting in this month, one will have many sons and much wealth. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 26).

ĀśADHA. Name of a star. After observing a fast on the day of this star, if curd is given to a Brahmin of noble birth, one can take rebirth in a family having many cows. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 61, Verses 23-26).

ĀŚADHAKA. A mahout in the Udayana story. In Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāmukhalambaka, 5th Tāranga, we find a reference to an elephant called Bhadravati and a mahout named Āśadha in the palace of the heroine, Vasavādattā.

ĀSAMGA. See under ANASA.

ĀSAMGAŚAYOGI. A King, who was generous by nature. In the Rgveda, there is a reference to this King who once lost his masculine power and was transformed into a woman but was restored to manhood by a Muni named Medhyātithi.

ĀSANA. Posture in Yogābhyāṣa. There are different types of āsanas. The chief of them are given below:

1) Bhujangāsana. Lying flat, face downwards on a sheet with hands placed close to the body on either side. After relaxing all the muscles of the body, concentrate the mind on health. Keeping the feet close together and pressing the knees against the ground, raise the soles upwards to the sky. Place both palms, pressing against the ground, touching the shoulders on both sides. Then raise the head and bend the neck backwards as far as possible. At this time, the trunk and legs should be in close contact with the ground. Gradually raise the chest, supported by the hands on the ground. Bring the head down in the same way as it was raised and restore the body to its former position. This āsana strengthens the backbone.

2) Śalabhasana. Lie flat on the sheet, face downwards. Keep the legs close together and raise the feet up with the heels touching each other. Place the hands close to the body on either side and close the fists upwards. Place the fists and shoulders close to the ground and make the whole body stiff after inhaling the breath. Then try to raise the legs. Support the weight of the body with the breast and hands. This is possible by... pressing the fists, firmly against the ground. Until the āsana is completed, do not send out the breath. Keep the legs straight and stiff. The lower abdomen and legs may be raised slightly. This makes the āsana complete.

On feeling suffocation, the legs must be brought down slowly.

Besides these, there are many other āsanas like Dhanur-āsana, Paścinātānāsana, Halāsana, Mayārāsana, Sarvāngāsana, Matsyāsana, Śīrṣāsana, Ardhamatsyendrāsana, Pādāhasāsana, Udrājyāsana, Naulī, Viparītakarana, Yogamūrdra, Śāvāsana, etc. (See under Yoga.)

ĀŚĀVAHA I. A son of Kaśyapa and Aditi. From Viṣṇu Brahmā, from Brahmā Marici and from Marici Kaśyapa were born. Kaśyapa married Aditi, daughter of Dakṣa. Aditi gave birth to ten sons: Bṛhadbhānu, Cakṣurāṭmā, Vibhūvāsū, Rēkita, Savitā, Arka, Bhānu, Āśāvaha, Ravi and Vīvavān. Vaivavatā Manu was the son of Vīvavān. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter I, Verse 42).

ĀŚĀVAHA II. A prince of the Viṣṇu dynasty. He was present at the Svaṁyāvara of Draupadī. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 19).

ĀŚRAMA. Āśramites (Inmates of an Āśrama) have to pass through four stages. The four stages of Brahmacarya, Gārhaḥṭha, Vānaprastha and Sannyās are known as the four Āśramas. Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part III, Chapter 9 describes each of the Āśramas as follows:

1. Brahmacarya. “After Upanayana a boy should maintain a Brahmacāri’s vratas, engage himself in the study of the Vedas, suppress his indriyas (the five senses) and live in the house of the preceptor. Living there with proper observance of āsūca, customs and vratas he should serve and attend on the Guru. The study of Vedas should be with proper observance of Vratas and steady attention. A Brahmacāri should worship with concentration, the Sun and Āgni at the time of the two sandhyās (dawn and dusk) and after that he should do obeisance to the Guru. When the Guru stands, he should also be standing. When the guru walks, he should walk behind him and when he sits, he should sit in a lower position. The Śiṣya (disciple-pupil) should not do anything against the guru. When the guru himself asks, the Śiṣya should sit in front of him and recite Vedas without attending to anything else. After that, with his permission he may eat food which has been got by begging. The Śiṣya may take his bath in the water only after the Ācārya (guru) has taken his bath in it. Everyday the Camata, darbha, water and flowers which the guru needs, must be brought and supplied (by the Śiṣya).

2. Gārhaḥṭha. After the study of the Vedas the intelligent Śiṣya gives Gurudakṣiṇā (Payment to the preceptor) and with the consent of the Guru, enters into Gṛhaṭhaṣṭhram. Then he is to marry and by earning money from a suitable occupation, should fulfil all obligations of a Gṛhaṭha according to his capacity. The Gṛhaṭha who worships the Pītṛ with Pindādaṇa (offerings of rice balls), Devas with Yāgas (sacrifices), RĪṣis with Śvādhya (self discipline), Prajāpatis with begetting of children, spirits with bali (offering of food etc.) and the whole world with love, attains the holy world by his own virtuous deeds. Gṛhaṭhaṣṭhram is the only source of support for sannyāsins and brahmacāris who beg their food. Therefore feeding them is an act of nobility. Brāhmaṇas travel from country to country to study Vedas, for pilgrimage and for seeing the places. The Gṛhaṭha is the only refuge and support of those who are homeless, who do not carry their food with them and those who spend the night wherever they reach. If such people come to his house, the Gṛhaṭha should welcome them with kind and loving words, and give them bed, seat and food. The guest who leaves a house disappointed, is really departing after transferring his own sins to that householder and taking away all the virtuous deeds of the householder. It is not proper for the Gṛhaṭha to treat a guest with disrespect, to behave rudely or treacherously towards him, to regret what has been given to the guest, or to obstruct or rebuke him. The Gṛhaṭha who performs the supreme duty of Gṛhaṭhaṣṭhrama in this way properly, is liberated from all secular bonds and reaches the noblest worlds.

3. Vānaprastha. After having finished all his duties in this way, to his satisfaction, the Gṛhaṭha, with the commencement of old age, should go to the forest, either after entrusting his wife to his sons or taking her also with him. There, he should use leaves, roots and fruits for his food, grow hair and beard, sleep on the bare ground, lead the life of a tāpasa and receive and honour all classes of guests. His clothes, sheets and blankets should be of deer-skin and darbha grass. The rule is that he should bath three times a day. Worship of gods, performing homas, hospitality to all guests, mendicancy—all these are the laudable features of Vānaprastha.

Any oil that is available in the forest is to be used for his oil bath. Enduring heat and cold, performing tapas, are also his duties. The Muni who observes this rule in Vānaprastha with due austerity, burns up all his evils as with fire and attains the eternal worlds.

4. Sannyāsa. The fourth Āśrama is that of the Sannyāsa. Before entering upon the fourth Āśrama one has to renounce the love of travel, wealth and wife and also give up all spirit of rivalry. One who embraces sannyāsa should abandon completely the efforts for the three Puruṣārthas of Dharma, Artha and Kāma, treat friends and foes alike and continue to love all living beings. Not even a single creature should be offended by thought, word or deed. Conquering all passions, the Sannyāsa should renounce all bonds and attachments. He should not stay in a village more than one night and in a town more than five nights. Even that should be in such a way that no one feels any love or hatred towards him. For sustaining life, he should go about begging food from the houses of the people of the three castes—Brahmins, Kṣatriyas and Vaishyas. It should be after all people have taken their food and put out the cooking fire. The Sannyāsa should cast away all vices like Kāma, Krodha, Garva, Lobha, and Moha and should not have any thought of self in anything. The Muni who goes about giving shelter to all creatures will not have to fear any creature. The Brāhmaṇa who follows the Sannyāsāśrama as described above with a pure heart and without difficulty will shine like fire without fuel and attain Brahmāloka in peace.

ĀŚRAMAVĀSA PARVA. One of the Parvas in the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata).

ĀŚRAMAVĀSAKA PARVA. One of the Parvas in the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata).

ĀŚRĀVYA. A muni (sage) in Indra’s assembly. (M.B., Śabha Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 18).
The son of the Maharsi Jatakāru and his wife, also named Jatakāru. He stopped King Janamejaya's Sarpasatra and saved the nāgas.

1) Birth. There is a story about Āstika's birth in the Devi Bhāgavata. Long ago the people of the world were so much troubled by the serpents, that they sought protection from Kaśyapa Prajāpati. To find a remedy for this, Kaśyapa discussed the matter with Brahmā. To put an end to the troubles from the serpents, Brahmā suggested that a number of mantras and a deity as the basis of those mantras should be created. Accordingly Kaśyapa created many mantras and Manasa Devī as the basic deity of those mantras. She is named "Manasa-devī" because Kaśyapa created her by his mental power. Manasa-devī has eleven other names also, namely, Jatakāru, Jagatgauri, Sādhahogini, Vaiśnavi, Nāgabhagini, Saivī, Nāgēśvari, Jatakārupriyā, Āstikāmatā, Viṣhahrā and Mahājānāyatā.

Manasa-devī (Jatakāru) when quite young, went to Kailāsa for doing tapas (penance). There she did tapas to Śiva for a thousand years. At last Śiva appeared and blessed her with divine wisdom. She returned with great learning and devotion. (Devi Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

At that time, a Muni (sage) named Jatakāru, when travelling through the forest happened to see his pitṛs (souls of forefathers) hanging over a precipice at the end of a blade of grass. They were hanging precariously at the end of a reed grass, head downwards, about to fall into the abyss. Jatakāru enquired why they were lying in that condition. They explained that they were in that plight because their descendant Jatakāru had no children. As he is a bachelor there is no hope either, of his having any issue. Since he has no children, we will not get to heaven, they added. To save the Pitṛs from their predicament, Jatakāru decided to marry. But he wished to marry a woman who had the same name as his. Once Vāsuki met Jatakāru and told him that he had a sister named Jatakāru and that he would be very happy if Jatakāru married her. Jatakāru accepted the offer readily and married Jatakāru.

After their marriage, while they were living together in a place called Puṣkara tīrtha, an unexpected event happened which interrupted the happy course of their life. One evening, the husband was sleeping with his head in the wife's lap, under a tree. The sun was about to set. As the Maharsi did not wake up before sunset, the wife became anxious. It is believed that he who does not wake up before sunrise and he who does not offer prayers at dusk will be guilty of the sin of Brahahatiya (killing a Brahmin). Nor was it proper to wake him up from a sound sleep. But in the end, she did wake him up. The husband sprang up in great fury. He denounced the wife then and there. Weeping bitterly, she begged for his forgiveness. At last Jatakāru relented and told her: "You will have a very noble, brilliant, renowned, virtuous, scholarly and devout son who will be a devotee of Viṣṇu and a preserver of the family". After this Manasa-devī set out to Kailāsa. When she reached there Paramā-Siva and Pārvatī comforted her. Manasa-devī was pregnant. The precepts and spiritual advice given by Jatakāru, Paramā-Siva and Pārvatī were heard by the child in the womb and so even before his birth he became a Jānī and a yogī. In due course Manasa-devī gave birth to a son who was a part of Nārāyana (Viṣṇu). Since he was the son of Manasa-devī who had deep devotion to the Guru and to the Gods, the boy was named Āstika.

The Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, gives another reason for giving this name to the boy. When the sage Jatakāru abandoned his wife, he had blessed her saying that the child in her womb would be a brilliant and devoted son. That is why this boy came to be called Āstika.

2) Boyhood. Āstika was taught Veda, Vedāṅgas etc. by Parama-Siva himself. After receiving the blessings of Parama-Siva, Āstika went to Puṣkara tīrtha and did tapas to Viṣṇu for many years. Having received Viṣṇu's blessings also, he returned to Kailāsa. After living happily with his mother for some time, one day they started to the Asrama of Kaśyapa Prajāpati, the father of Manasa-devī. Kaśyapa was very much pleased to see his noble-hearted daughter and her brilliant son. To enhance the fame and accomplishments of the boy Kaśyapa gave a sumptuous feast to ten crores of Brahmins. (Devi Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

Vāsuki was Manasa-devī's brother. Āstika grew up under the care of Vāsuki. It was Čyavana Muni who taught Sāṁgavedas to Āstika, at this time. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 18).

3) Āstika at the Sarpasatra. Once King Parikṣit, the son of Abhimanyu was travelling through the forest for hunting animals. He picked up a dead snake with the tip of his bow and put it on the shoulder of a sage named "Samika". Samika's son, Śrīngī came to know of this. In his anger, Śrīngī pronounced a curse that King Parikṣit should die within seven days by the bite of Takṣaka. When Parikṣit heard of this, he had a palace built on a single pillar in the middle of the ocean, quite inaccessible to Takṣaka and took shelter there. The most famous physicians and wizards were engaged to ward off the approach of Takṣaka to that place. Six days passed like this. On the seventh day, determined to make a final attempt, Takṣaka disguised himself as an old Brāhmaṇa and set out to the King's place of shelter. On his way he met Dhanvantari who was proceeding to Parikṣit to protect him. They became friends and as a result of it, Dhanvantari returned after receiving a large number of rare precious stones given to him by Takṣaka. Assuming the form of a small worm, Takṣaka secretly entered into a fruit which was to be presented to the King. As soon as the King took that fruit in his hand, Takṣaka took his own shape and size and bit the King who died immediately. Janamejaya was the son of this King Parikṣit.

Janamejaya performed all the obsequies of his father. After that, in a spirit of revenge, with the object of annihilating the whole race of serpents, he summoned Brāhmaṇas to conduct a sarpa satra (snake sacrifice). In the sacrificial fire specially prepared at that yāga, many serpents were being burnt up. It seemed that the whole race of serpents would shortly be wiped out. But Takṣaka alone was not to be seen. The officiating priests were beginning to get angry. Impatient cries of Where is Takṣaka rent the air. The frightened Takṣaka fled for life to the palace of his friend Indra and there lay down, curling round Indra's cot. When the priests understood this they decided to use their charms and mantras which would bring Indra, his bed, cot and all, along with Takṣaka to the sacrificial fire.
At this stage, all the gods rushed to Manasa-devi and fell at her feet and begged her to save the situation. The kindhearted Devi called her son Astika and advised him to persuade Janamejaya to stop the Sarpasatras. Astika went to Janamejaya and requested him to give him the lives of Takṣaka and Idrā as a gift. Janamejaya, after consulting the munis and priests and at their advice, agreed to do so. In this way, the Sarpasatras were stopped and the remaining serpents escaped with their lives. (Devi Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha, M.B., Ādi Parva).

ĀSTIKĀ PARVĀ. One of the Parvas in the Mahābhārata. See Mahābhārata.

ĀSURA. A form of marriage. (See VIVĀHA).

ĀSURAṆA. A son of Visvāmitra. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 56).

ĀSURI. An ancient Mahārṣi. He was the acarya of Kapila Sāṃkhya-darṣana and the guru of the mahārṣi Pañcasikha. Once Āsuri had a full vision of God. He gave many precepts on spiritual matters to other Mahārṣis. The Bhāgavata says that Āsuri received his spiritual enlightenment from his wife, Kapilā. (M.B., Śanti Parva, Chapter 218, Verses 10-14).

ĀŚVALAYANA I. A son of Visvāmitra. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 54).

ĀŚVALAYANA II. An Ācārya. He was a disciple of Saunaka. Āśvalayana composed three famous works: Āśvalayana Gṛhyaśūtra, Āśvalayana Śrutasūtra and Āśvalayana Stuti.

ĀTAKA. A serpent born of the Kaurava dynasty. This serpent was burnt at the Sarpasatras of Janamejaya. (Śloka 12, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

ĀṬAVIṆUṆI. An ancient city in India, Sahadeva conquered this city. (M.B., Śabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 72).

ĀṬHARVĀṆA. A sage. When Arjuna dreamed of going to Śiva accompanied by Kṛṣṇa they visited in the dream the āśrama of this sage also.

ĀṬMADEVA. See under Gokarna.

ĀṬREYA. A sage. This sage had acquired the power to go from one planet to another. Once this rṣi went to devolaka as the guest of Indra and there he drank Amra (the celestial elixir) and enjoyed the dances of the celestial maidens. A desire to have a similar heaven of his own budded in his mind and he approached Viśvakarman who gave him a new heaven of his own. But before long the demons took over this heaven from him. Though Viśvakarman took back the same from the demons, Ātreya did not go back but returned to his old āśrama on the banks of Gomati and doing penance there for a long time attained salvation (Brahma Purāṇa).

More details. Ātreya was also present among the ascetics who assembled at the sarpasatras of Janamejaya. (Śloka 8, Chapter 55, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

2) Ātreya was a disciple of Vāmadeva. (Śloka 6, Chapter 192, Vana Parva, M.B.).

3) This rṣi taught his disciples about Nirguṇabhrama. (Śloka 7, Chapter 137, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

ĀṬREYA(M). A place of ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 68, Chapter 9, Bhīma Parva, M.B.).

ĀṬREYA I. Wife of King Īrū. Śvāyambhuva Manu got of his wife Satārūpā two sons, Priyavratra and Uttānapāda. Uttānapāda got a son named Uttama of Suruci and one of name Dhruva of Sunītī. Dhruva got three sons, Śiśi, Bhava and Śambhu. Śiśi got five sons, Ripu Ripuṇḍjaya, Śīptra, Vṛkala and Vṛkṛtejas. Cākṣuṣa was born to Ripu of his wife Bhṛati. Manu was born to Cākṣuṣa of his wife Viraṇi. Īrū was the son of Manu. Īrū got of Atreyi Aṅiga, Sumanas, Śvāti, Karuṭu, Aṅgiras and Gaya. (Chapter 18, Agni Purāṇa).

ĀṬREYI II. A river. (Śloka 22, Chapter 9, Śabhā Parva, M.B.).

ĀṬREYI III. Anasūyā, wife of Atri is also called Ātreya.

ĀṬREYI IV. Daughter of Mahārṣi Atri. She was married to Aṅgiras, son of Agni. Aṅgiras always spoke rudely to her and pained at this she once approached her father and told him about this. Her father told her thus: “Your husband is the son of Agni. That is why he appears unbearable to you. Therefore give him a cold bath always and he would gradually become mild.” Hearing this the devout Ātreya transformed himself into a river and started to cool him down by constant showers. This river later on became the famous Parasūṇi Nadī. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa).

ĀVĀḤA. A Vāyu. (M.B., Śanti Parva, Chapter 328, Verse 37).

ĀVAṆTIKĀ. Daughter of Yaugandharāyaṇa, a famous character in the story of Udayāṇa. (See under Yaugandharāyaṇa).

ĀVARAṆA. A King of Viśvakarma’s dynasty.

Genealogy. From Viśgu were born in the following order: Brahmā - Dharma - Prabhāsī - Viśvakarma - Priyavrata - Āgni - Śabha - Bharata - Āvāraṇa. Bharata married the world-beauty, Pañcājani. Five children, Sumati, Rāṣṭrābhī, Sūdāraṇa, Āvārana, and Dhūmāketae were born to her. (Bhāgavata, Daśāma Skandha).

ĀVARTANANDĀ. A sacred Tīrtha. One who bathes in this tīrtha will be able to enjoy life in Nandanaavana. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 45).

ĀVAŚIRĪ. A place in ancient India. It is said that Karṇa conquered this place. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Verse 9).

ĀVAŚTHYA. An Agni. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 5).

ĀVIRHOTRA. A king of Viśvakarma’s dynasty.

Genealogy. From Viṣgu were descended in the following order: Brahmā - Dharma - Prabhāsī - Viśvakarma - Barhiṣmatī - Priyavrata - Āgni - Śabha - Āvihotra. Jayanti, Śabha’s wife bore to him twenty children who were: Bharata, Kuṣṭhā, Ilīvātra, Brahmāvarta, Ayāvarta, Malaya, Ketu, Bhdraṇasā, Indrásṛk, Vīdhrabhī, Kīkajā, Kavi, Hari, Antarikṣa, Prabuddha, Pippaliyāṇa, Āvihotra, Drmāṅḍa, Camasa and Karabhījana. The eldest of them, Bharata, became the ruler of India. From him this country came to be called “BHARATA”. All the younger brothers ruled over the different parts of this country.

ĀYATI. A daughter of Mahāmeru. Two daughters were born to Mahāmeru, Āyati and Niyati. Āyati was married by Īśu- and Niyati by Viḍhātī. Īśu and Viḍhātī are the two sons born to Viṣgu Mahārṣi of his wife Kṣyati. Īśu got a son, Prāṇa, of Āyati and Viḍhātī, a son, Mṛkaṇḍu of Niyati. Prāṇa got a son Duyūtim and he got a son Rājyāṇa. (Chapter 10, Anūśāman, Viṣgu Purāṇa).

ĀYAVĀSA. A King. There is mention about this king in Śākta 128, Maṇḍala 1 of the Kṛgveda.
BABHRUVĀHANA

BABHRUVĀHANA. A son of Arjuna.

1) Birth. When the Pāndavas were residing in Indraprastha after marrying Pāṇcāli, Nārada went to see them once. With a view to avoiding any quarrel between the Pāndavas over the one wife they jointly possessed, Nārada suggested that each should take Pāṇcāli for a year in turn and he who violated the arrangement should go to the forest for a year. Once Arjuna went to the house of Yudhiṣṭhira who was with Pāṇcāli and for thus violating the arrangement Arjuna had to go to the forest for a year. During this exile while he was staying at Gaṅgādvāra he married the serpent girl, Ulīpi and got a son called Irāvāṇa of her.

After that he went to a country called Maṇalūr. At that time that country was being ruled by a king called Citraṅgada. Prabhānjana one of the forefathers of Citraṅgada had, by hard penance for a progeny, acquired from Śiva a boon and each of his successors got a son each to maintain the line. But when it came to Citraṅgada to his surprise he got a girl instead of a son. But he got her up as a son and named her Citraṅgada. It was when she was ready for marriage that Arjuna went there. The king received Arjuna with respect and after enquiring about his welfare requested him to marry his daughter. Arjuna married her and stayed there for three months. Leaving that place Arjuna went to Pañcatāthra and there he gave salvation to the celestial maidens who were lying in the ūrthas as crocodiles. When he went back to Maṇalūr Citraṅgada had delivered a son whom he named Babhruvāhana. Promising them that he would take them later to Hastināpura, he left the place.

2) His fate to kill his own father. It was by a ruse that Arjuna made Bhīṣma fall. Arjuna put Śīkhaṇḍi before his chariot and Bhīṣma refused to take arms against a eunuch and accepted defeat. But Gaṅgādevi witnessing the battle between Bhīṣma, her son, and Arjuna from above could not bear this foul play and so cursed that Arjuna would die at the hands of his son. Ulūpi the servant wife of Arjuna heard this curse and went to her father Kauravya who in turn went to Gaṅgā and begged for a relief from the curse. Gaṅgādevi then said that Arjuna would be killed by Babhruvāhana but would be brought to life by Ulūpi by placing the Mṛtasaṅjīvani stone on the dead man's breast.

3) The killing of Arjuna. The Mahābhārata battle was over. When Yudhishṭhira was performing the Āsvamedha yāga Arjuna conducted a victory march with the yāga horse. On his way he reached Manuśūrī. At once Ulūpi called Babhruvāhana and asked him to challenge Arjuna. Babhruvāhana with his bow and arrows attacked Arjuna and in the grim battle that followed Arjuna fell dead. Seeing this Citrāṅgadā came to the place of battle weeping and abused Ulūpi for persuading Babhruvāhana to kill his own father. Ulūpi immediately went to the serpent world and brought the Mṛtasaṅjīvani stone and as she placed it on Arjuna’s breast he came to life as if waking up from a sleep. When he saw Citrāṅgadā, Babhruvāhana and Ulūpi he smiled and asked them why they had all come there. Ulūpi then explained to him the story of the curse and extremely pleased over the end of the curse Arjuna took them all to Hastināpura. (Chapters 216 to 210 of Ādi Parva and Chapters 79 to 82 of Āsvamedha Parva, M.B.).

4) Other details. (1) On reaching Hastināpura Śrī Kṛṣṇa gave Babhruvāhana as a present a chariot drawn by divine horses. (Śloka 6, Chapter 88, Āsvamedha Parva, M.B.).

(2) The different names given to him in the Purāṇas are as follows: Citrāṅgadāsuta, Manīppūrpati, Dhanāṇjaya- suta and Manīpureśvara.

BADARIKĀSRAMA. (BADARYĀSrama). A very holy place in the Himālayas. It was here that Nara and Nārāyana did penance for thousands of years and the Purāṇas, therefore, give it a very prominent place in them.

BADARIṆĀCAṆA TĪRTHA. (BADARAPĀCAṆA). A sacred place in Kurukṣetra. If one lives here fasting for twelve years eating dates only, one will become as great as Vasiṣṭha. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BADARIVANA. A sacred place. Viśalapuri an ancient city of purānic fame is near this place. The Badarikā- srama comprises Badarivana and Viśalapuri also.

BADAVĀŅI. See under Aurva.

BADHIRA. A serpent of the Kaśyapa dynasty. (There is a reference to this serpent in Śloka 16, Chapter 74, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

BADULI. A son of Viśvāmitra. He was a follower of the Brahma cult. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 53).

BAHIRGIRI. A mountainous region of ancient Bhārata. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sahā Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 3 that this country lying in the vicinity of the Himālayas had been conquered by Arjuna during his conquest of the North.

BĀHU I. A king of the Sārya-varāha (solar dynasty). He was the father of Sagara. He is known by the name Subhā also. This king was once defeated in a battle and being weary and sad he entered the hermitage of Aurva. His queen was given poison by another wife of the king. But the child in her womb did not die. The queen wanted to jump into the fire in which the body of her husband was to be burned. But Aurva told her that her son would become a famous king and that she should not commit suicide. Thus she desisted from committing suicide. A son was born to her. As she had been poisoned when the child was in her womb the son was given the name Sagara (with poison). It is said in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva that this prince became a famous king later.

BĀHU II. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 22, that the Pândavas thought of sending an invitation to a king named Bāhu for the battle between the Kurus and themselves.

BĀHU III. A king of the Śundara dynasty. Mention is made in this king in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74.

BĀHUṬHĀRYĀṬVA. (Polygamy). Polygamy was a custom in vogue in ancient India. It was not prohibited for a man to have more than one wife. It was customary to give dowry also. It is said in the Ṛgveda, Manḍala 10, Anuvāka 3, Sūkta 11 that the bride should proceed to the house of the husband, after the marriage. A spell (mantra) meant for keeping one's co-wife, is seen in the Ṛgveda, Manḍala 10, Anuvāka 11, Sūkta 17. It is a prayer to destroy the love of husband for a co-wife and to direct that love towards oneself. The deity of this spell is Indrīṇi the wife of Indra who was a polygamist. In those days marriage was an essential duty. Widow marriage was not forbidden.

BĀHUḌA. A holy bath. If one stays in this place for a night in celibacy and fast, one will get the fruits of performing a sacrifice to devas (gods). The modern investigators say that this place is on the bank of river Dhavala which flows near Ayadhī. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 23 that the hermit Likhitā had recovered his lost hand, by bathing in this holy place and giving oblations to his ancestors.

BĀHUḌĀMA. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 10).

BĀHUḌANTAKA. A book on the science of Ethics (Niti- śastra), the work of Brahmā. It contains ten thousand chapters. This book was abridged into five thousand chapters by Purandara. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 69, Stanza 83).

BĀHUḌANTI. Mother of Purandara who was the Indra during the Manvantara. (Period of a Manu) of Manu Vaivāvata. (See the word Purandara).

BĀHUḌASUYAŚA. The wife of Parikṣit, a King of the Kuru dynasty. A son named Bhīmasena was born to her. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 95).

BĀHUḍAṬA. A king born of the family of Yayāti. (Bhāṣagava, Skanda 9).

BĀHUṆA I. A serpent born in the family of Kauravya. This snake fell in the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya and was burnt to death. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 13).

BĀHUṆA II. The pseudo-name assumed by Nala when he was living in the palace of Rūpāṇa in disguise. For further information see the word Nala.
BĀHUĻĀ I. A river. In Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 29, mention is made about this river which is famous in the Purāṇas.

BĀHUĻĀ II. An attendant of Subhramaṇya. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 3).

BĀHUĻĀ III. Wife of Vidura a Brahmin, who frequented the houses of harlots. Bhulā was in the habit of going to the temple of Gokarna and hear Purāṇas, after the death of her husband. By this good deed Vidura got deliverance from sin. (Skanda Purāṇa 3.3.22).

BĀHUĻĀSVAN I. A king of the family of Śrī Rāma. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

BĀHUĻĀSVAN II. A king of Mithilā. He was god-fearing. Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa visited his palace. At that time he received much good advice from Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

BĀHUMLĀKA. A serpent born to Kaśyapa Prajāpāti of his wife Kadru. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 16).

BĀHUPUTRA. A Prajāpāti (creator). He was one of the spiritual sons (Mānasaputras) of Brahma. (Vāyu Purāṇa 65:53).

BĀHUPUTRIKĀ. An attendant (female) of Subhramaṇya. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 3).

BĀHURĀTHA. A king of the family of Bharata. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

BĀHURĀPA. One of the eleven Rudras. Eleven Rudras were born to Kaśyapa by his wife Surabhi. Surabhi, who had been purified by Mahēśvara whom she had pleased by her penance, got as sons, Aja, Ekapād, Ahirbudhnyā, Tvāṣṭṛ and Rudra. The renowned Viṣvarūpa was the son of Tvāṣṭṛ. The eleven Rudras are Hara, Bahurūpa, Tvyambaka, Aparājīta, Vrśākapī, Śāmbhu, Kapardin, Raivatva, Mrgayvāda, Sarpa and Kapālī. The number of the Rudras is one hundred lakhs. They pervade everything moving and not moving. (Āgni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

BĀHUSALI. A prince of Avanti. He was a friend of Śrīdatta. (For Further information see the word Śrīdatta).

BĀHUṢUVARVAYAKA. An ancient city on the bank of the Ganges. (Kathāsīrāgara).

BĀHUVDAYA. A country in ancient India. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 55.

BĀHUVIDHA. A king of the family of Āṅga. (Āgni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

BĀHUYOJANĀ. An attendant of Subhramaṇya. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 9).

BĀHVĀSI. One of the hundred sons of Dvārakāsīrīa. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 28 that he was killed by Bhimasena in the battle of Mahābhārata.

BĀHYAKARĪKA. A serpent born to Kaśyapa Prajāpāti of his wife, Kadru. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 9).

BAHYAKUNDA. A serpent born in the family of Kaśyapa Prajāpāti. Mention is made about this serpent in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103.

BAHYĀSVAN. A king of the Furu dynasty. He was the son of King Purūjāti. Five sons were born to Bāhyāsvan called Mukula, Śrījaya, Bhṛadiśṭha, Yavinara and Kṛṇīla. These five sons became famous as Pāñčalas. Of these, the family of Mukula became the Maukulyas, who were having temples and were of two classes. A son named Pañcāśva was born to Mukula. A son named Dīvodaśa and a daughter named Ahalāya were born to Pañcāśva. Ahalāya got child from the hermit Sāravatva and gave birth to a son named Satānanda. (Āgni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

BĀKA. Daughter of the demon, Sūtnāli. He had four daughters: Bākā, Puspotakā, Kaikāsi and Kumbhinadī. Rāvaṇa is the son of Kaikāsi. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

BĀKA I. A demon. The Pāṇḍavas escaping from the trap of Arakikila (lacr-house) through a secret tunnel went to the village Ekačakrā on the banks of the river Gaṅgā and stayed there in the house of a brahmin. Bāka was a demon who was terrorising the villagers there. He used to come to the village freely and carry away people for his food. Because of this nobody lived in peace and so they all joined together and decided to send one man daily with plenty of other eatables to the demon in this cave. Days went by like that and one day the turn came to the brahmin who was sheltering the Pāṇḍavas. That brahmin had besides his wife one son and a daughter. The problem arose as to who should go to the demon. The father was willing but the wife did not want him to go and vice versa. The children began to cry and hearing the noise Kunti, mother of the Pāṇḍavas, went there to enquire and learned the tragic story of the family. She immediately went to Bhīma and acquainted him with the problem before the brahmin. Bhīma at once volunteered to go to the demon deciding to kill the man-eater and thus putting an end to his depredations. Bhīma started on his journey to the demon carrying a cartload of rice and curry. Deliberately Bhīma arrived at the place of the demon very late. Bāka rolled his eyes in anger at the sight of the late-comer. But Bhīma without heeding him sat in front of the demon and started eating the rice and curry. Bāka charged at Bhīma with fury but Bhīma defended and a battle ensued in which Bāka was killed and he fell dead like a mountain-head dropping down.* (Chapters 157-164, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

BĀKA II. A demon. As young boys Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balarāmabhadrā were once playing in Ambādi (Gokula) on the banks of the river Yamunā when the demon, Bāka, despatched by Kaṁśa, went to them in the form of a huge terrible-looking stork. In no time opening its ferocious beaks the stork swallowed Kṛṣṇa. But the touch of Kṛṣṇa burnt the throat of the bird and vomiting Kṛṣṇa the bird fell dead.

*Kirmira, a demon, was the brother of Bāka. (Śloka 23, Chapter 11, Aranyya Parva, M.B.).

It is in the 10th Skandha of Bhāgavata that the story of this Bāka occurs. But in the vernacular translation of the same the story is not so clear. Hence the original in Sanskrit is quoted below:

Śrīvai Bāka nāma mahānāsura bāhurāpadīr
Agatya kalasā Kṛṣṇam titkṣantuno 'grassaduali
Kṛṣṇam mahābākagraśanādī vṛtāma vṛtāma vṛtāma.
After the death of Balasura his wife Prabhavati went to their preceptor (Kulaguru) Sukracharya and told him all that took place and requested to bring back to life her lost husband. But Sukracharya regretted that he could not give life again to her dead husband but could by his powers make her hear his voice again. Prabhavati agreed to that and then she heard her husband say "Leave your body and join me". Prabhavati immediately courted death and joining Bala became a river.

(Padma Purana, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 6).

BALA(M). To know what are Daśabalaś see at Patu.

BALABANDHU. A king of ancient Bhārata. There is a reference to him in Śloka 236, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva, M.B.

BALABHADRĀ. (Balabhadramā, Balarāma, Baladeva). The elder brother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the eighth incarnation of Mahāvīṣṇu.*

1) Birth. When the number of wicked kings increased Bhūmidevi (goddess of Earth) turned herself into a cow and took refuge in Mahāvīṣṇu. Mahāvīṣṇu then promised to be born as the sons of Vasudeva named Balabhadrāma and Śrī Kṛṣṇa and destroy the wicked. Vasudeva was the son of the Yādava, Śūrasena. King of Madhurā. To Devaka the brother of another Yādava King, Ugrasena, was born a daughter Devaki. The marriage of Devaki with Vasudeva was celebrated but on the same day an Aṣārireṇi (a heavenly voice from above) said that the eighth child of Devaki would kill Kamsa. Instantly Kamsa put both Vasudeva and Devaki in jail. The first six sons born to Devaki were killed the moment they were born by striking them against the ground. Devaki became pregnant for the seventh time. The babe in the womb was Ananta incarnate by Viṣṇu’s directive to be of help to him when he would also be born soon as Kṛṣṇa. Therefore it was necessary to save the child from the cruel hands of Kamsa as it was certain he would kill the babe the same way he had killed all the others before. So he ordered Māyādevi to take the child from the womb of Devaki and place it in that of Rohini, another wife of Vasudeva. Māyādevi did so and the boy got the name Sanīgharaṇa, also because of this. The news spread that Devaki aborted. Rohini delivered a boy and was named Sanīgharaṇa alias Balabhadrarāma. (Daśāma Skanda, Bhāgavata).

2) The colour of Balarāma and Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Śrī Kṛṣṇa is the eighth child of Devaki. The elder brother Balarāma is white in complexion while the younger, Śrī Kṛṣṇa is black in complexion. There is a story behind this. The devas decided to be born as Gopālas (shepherds) in the earth to be of help to Kṛṣṇa in his duty of killing the wicked. They informed Mahāvīṣṇu of their decision and the Lord was immensely pleased. He then took one white hair from his head and said that it would go to Rohini’s womb and change into Balarāma and

*Since the life of Balabhadrā is so mixed with that of Kṛṣṇa a complete life story of Balarāma could be had only if it is read along with that of Kṛṣṇa.

taking a black hair said that it would go into Devaki’s womb and change into Śrī Krṣṇa. It was thus that Balabhadrā became white and Śrī Krṣṇa black. (Chapter 199, Adi Parva, M.B.)

3) Brothers. Balabhadrārāma had six brothers born of his mother Rohiṇī. They were: Gada, Sāraṇa, Durdamā, Vipula, Dhruva, and Kṛṣṇa. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

4) Till their marriage Śrī Krṣṇa spent his childhood in Aiṁbādi and Balarāma, in Madhurā. Once the sage Garga went to the house of Vasudeva and it was he who then told the story behind the births of Balarāma and Krṣṇa. Hearing this Vasudeva went to Madhurā and brought Balabhadrārāma also to Aiṁbādi. Gargamuni then performed all those sacred rites which were usually done to boys of that age and both of them then remained in Aiṁbādi. Several important events happened during their stay here, notable among which are: Pūtanāmoṣam (killing of the demoness Pūtanā and giving her salvation). Śaṅkāṣurasuravadha (killing the asura, Śaṅkata), Ṭṝṇāvarītavadha (killing the asura, Ṭṝṇāvarīta), Vatsāṣurasuravadha (killing the asura, Vatsa), Bakavadha (killing the demon bird, Baka), Aghāṣurasuravadha (killing the asura, Agha), Dhenukāṣurasuravadha (killing the asura, Dhenuka), Kāḷīamardana (beating the snake, Kāḷī) and Praḷambavadhana (killing Praḷambā). (See under Krṣṇa for more details).

Kaṁśa conducted a Cānapūjā (worship of the bow) to kill Krṣṇa. It was on a festive scale and both Krṣṇa and Balarāma went to Madhurā to attend the same. There they killed Kaṁśa and after that went to the āśrama of Sāndīpaṇa Mahārṣi for education. When they completed their education they at the request of the preceptor gave as Gurudakṣiṇā (The fee you pay in the end for the instructions given) the lost child of the guru. Then they went to Madhurā and there several events took place, important among which was the fight between Krṣṇa and Jarāsandha. By this time the Yadavas were becoming lean financially and so to make some money Krṣṇa and Rāma went to the diamond-infested mountain of Gomantaka. On their way they met Parasurāma doing penance under a Banyan tree. On the advice of Parasurāma they killed Śrīgālavasudeva and got immense wealth. On their return Rāma and Krṣṇa along with many Yadavas went and settled down in the island, Dvārakā, in the western ocean. (Daśama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

5) Marriage. Before the advent of Balarāma and Krṣṇa the island Dvārakā was known as Kuṣṭhālī. It was ruled over by a famous Rājārṣi, Revata. This king was the son of King Ānarta and grandson of emperor Śaryāti. Revata got a hundred sons, Kukudmuni being the first and a daughter named Revati. When the time for marriage of his daughter came the King was anxious to find out a fitting husband for her and he went to Brahmaloka to take the advice of Brahmā. Revati also accompanied him. There stupefied he saw Vedas, Yajñās, mountains, rivers, oceans, Śrutis, all in divine figures standing before Brahmā, worshipping him. The sweet celestial songs gave them both untold happiness. He then told Brahmā the purpose of his visit and Brahmā meditating for some time told him that Balabhadrārāma, son of Vasudeva, was the only one person suited for her. The king returned to Dvārakā and gave his daughter in marriage to Balarāma. (Saptama Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

6) A pilgrimage. When the great Pāṇḍava-Kaurava battle started Krṣṇa became the charioteer of Arjuna and Balarāma went to the forest, Naimiṣā. He was not much interested in the battle. At the forest of Naimiṣā he saw Śūta telling Purāṇic stories to the several sages assembled there before him. Śūta did not rise up when he saw Balarāma and the latter moved to anger very soon cut off the head of Śūta. The sages assembled there decreed the act of Balarāma and lamented deeply over the incident. At this Balarāma promised that he would give birth, from the dead body of Śūta, to one who will be well versed in all the Vedas, śāstras and sciences. The sages then blessed Balarāma.

During that time there lived in the vicinity of Naimiṣā forest a demon called Balvala (Vatkala). He used to annoy the sages there and the sages requested Balarāma to put a stop to the atrocities of that demon. He immediately killed the demon by his weapon, Hala, and then raised from the dead body of Śūta a pañḍita of great erudition. Later, to remedy the sin of killing Śūta, Balarāma, repentant, visited all the sacred places in Bhārata. Once when he heard about the grim battle between Duryodhana and Bhīmasena, he went to the battle-field and tried his best to stop the war. Disappointed he returned to Dvārakā. (Daśama Skandha, Chapter 79, Bhāgavata).

7) Death. Once the rṣis Nārada, Kaṁśa and Viśāmitra came to Dvārakā. To make fun of them some of the Yadavas dressed a Yādava like a pregnant woman and producing her before the sages asked them what child she would deliver. Enraged at this the munis said in one voice that she would deliver a mace and that iron mace would be the cause of the end of all Yadavas.

After the Mahābhārata battle the Yādava dynasty remained alive only for thirtysix years. After that by the curse of the brahmin the Yadavas were all killed in a drunken brawl between themselves in the very presence of Krṣṇa and Balabhadrā. This happened on the shore of Prabhāsa tīrtha and Balarāma was sitting there then in deep meditation. Suddenly the soul of Balarāma went out from his mouth in the shape of a white serpent and the serpent entering the nether world was given a warm welcome by the prominent serpents there. (Mausala Parva, M.B.).

8) Other details.

(1) It was Balabhadrārāma who taught Bhīmasena the mace-fight. (Sloka 4, Chapter 138, Adi Parva, M.B.).

(2) Balabhadrārāma was present along with Śrī Krṣṇa at the marriage of Pāṇīcāli. (Sloka 17, Chapter 185, Adi Parva, M.B.).

(3) Balabhadrārāma became very indignant when he heard about Arjuna carrying away Subhadrā and it was Krṣṇa who pacified him. (Chapter 22, Adi Parva, M.B.).

(4) He was present at the marriage of Abhīmanuṣyam conducted at the city of Upalāvya. (Sloka 21, Chapter 72, Virāṭa Parva, M.B.).

(5) He was very insistent that the Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas should come to a truce. (Chapter 2, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

(6) He witnessed the battle of maces between Duryodhana and Bhīmasena at Kurukṣetra. (Chapter 54, Śalya Parva, M.B.).
It was a peculiar creature. That creature had done penance before Brahmā, from its young age with the view of destroying everything. Brahmā appeared before the creature and granted it the boon that it would have the power to make anything blind. Brahmā also said that anybody who killed the creature would be given a place in the realm of Gods. The creature had been wandering in the forest making blind every creature it met, and one day it was drinking water and it was then that Valāka shot it down. As soon as the creature fell down the gods showered flowers, and took him to the realm of Gods in a divine chariot. (M.B., Karṇa Parva, Chapter 69).

BĀLAKHĪLĪYA (S). (VĀLAKHĪLYAS). A group of hermits.

1) Ōriṃ. Sixty thousand hermits were born to Kṛatu, one of the Saptarśis (seven hermits), by his wife, Santāti.* They are called Bālakhīlyas. Everyone of them was only the size of half a thumb, but they were as bright as the blazing sun and had attained control over their senses. (Viśnu Purāṇa, Arṇā I, Chapter 10).

2) Garuḍa (Eagle) and Bālakhīlyas (S). A story connecting the birth of Garuḍa with Bālakhīlyas occurs in the Purāṇas.

Once Kaśyapa Prajāpāti performed a sacrifice to obtain children. The work of bringing firewood for the sacrifice was entrusted to Indra and the other devas (Gods) and the Bālakhīlyas. When Indra was heaping up on heaps pieces of big logs the Bālakhīlyas who were very small were bringing in chips of wood. Seeing this Indra laughed. The Bālakhīlyas got angry and stopping the work entrusted to them began to do penance with a view to create another Indra. Knowing this Indra was much flurried. He went to Kaśyapa and told him everything. Kaśyapa went to the Bālakhīlyas and pacified them. At this time Vinatā, a wife of Kaśyapa, was doing penance to obtain a son. Kaśyapa said that the penance of the Bālakhīlyas would not be fruitless and that as a result of their penance a son who would overpower Indra would be born to Vinatā. Accordingly a son was born to her. Garuḍa was that son. The fact that Garuḍa overthrew Indra when he went to heaven for ambrosia, is well known. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 31).

3) Routine of life. The Bālakhīlyas live in the maṇḍala of Śrīya (solar region). They travel in front of the sun in the shape of birds. They wear hides of animals. They are righteous and are only as big as a thumb. They are very ardent in doing the works of devas (Gods). They are sinless. There are Bālakhīlyas living in the lunar region also. They worship the Sun daily. All the world stand firm in truth because of the penance of the Bālakhīlyas. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 141.)

*In some other Purāṇas the mother of Bālakhīlyas is given the name ‘Sannatī’. This may be a mistake in the manuscript.
4) Other information. (1) Garuḍa (Eagle) who went to the realm of devas (gods) for Amṛta (ambrosia) took rest on the branch of a banyan tree, and that branch was broken from the tree. Sixty thousand Bālakīhayas were doing penance hanging head downwards on that branch, Garuḍa knew this only after the branch was broken. Fearing the curse form them he took the branch in his beak and flew away here and there. At last, according to the advice of Kaśyapa, he took the branch to the mount Gandhamādaṇa and without causing any harm to the small hermits placed it there. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 30).

(2) When Dusyanta entered the hermitage of Kaṇva he saw the Bālakīhayas doing penance, hanging down on the trees in the vicinity. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 7).

(3) In Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 51, it is mentioned that the Bālakīhayas were engaged in prayer and meditations and offering oblations to fire in the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha.

(4) It is mentioned in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 51, that in the period of the Rāmāyaṇa, in South India, when Rāvana was going to the house of Mārīcchika, he saw the Bālakīhayas doing penance.

(5) The Bālakīhayas learned the Vedas and Śāstras (scriptures) sitting in the chariot of the sun. (Kāma Rāmāyaṇa, Purvakaṇḍa).

BĀLAKĪHYA SAMHITĀ. See the word Guruparamparā.

BĀLĀKI. (VALĀKI). One of the hundred sons of Dvīpta-rāṣṭra. Mention is made in the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 2, that Valāki had been present on the occasion of the svayānvara (wedding) of Draupadi.

BĀLĀKI. A hermit. He is called Gargya also as he is a son of Garga. He acquired much knowledge and so he became arrogant. Because of this some called him Deptabālāki.

Once the hermit went to the King of Kaśi and told him that he would impart to him the knowledge of Brahma. The King replied that he would give thousand cows in return. Bālāki declared that the sun-god was Brahma. The king said that he had known it. Everything that Bālāki said had been known to the king earlier. So, in the end Bālāki had to become the disciple of the King. Then the King took him to a man who was sleeping. The King called the sleeping man. But he did not wake up. The King woke him up and then asked the hermit, where he had gone when he was sleeping. Bālāki could not say where men go when they are sleeping and where they return from when they wake up. The king said "In our sleep we attain Sārūpya (assimilation to god). But we are not aware of it. Though we get eternal bliss we do not know it. If we can get eternal bliss when we keep awake that is Atma-jñāna (knowledge of Supreme Soul). As the flames emanate from fire, and as the spider weaves its net and sits in its centre, the soul creates everything, controls everything and pervades everything." (Bhādāranyakopaniṣad).

BĀLĀKSA. An ancient king of Bhārata. While the Pāṇḍavas were living incognito in the kingdom of Virāṭa, Duryodhana and his brothers stole the cows of Virāṭa, in consequence of which there was a battle. The devas (gods) came in planes to see the fight between Arjuna and the teacher Krpā. It is mentioned in the Mahā- bhārata, Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, that the King Bālākṣa was there with the gods when they came to see the fight.

BĀLAMITRA. A king. Satrughna who led the yāga horse of Śrī Rāma fought with Vīraṁani and at that time Bālamitra fought on the side of Vīraṁani. (Chapter 40, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

BĀLĀMODAKA. The son of Suratha, the King of Kuṇḍalanagarī. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 40).

BĀLĀNIKA (VALĀNIKA) I. A son of the King Drupada. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 156, that Aśvatthāma killed him in the battle of Kurukṣetra.

BĀLĀNIKA (VALĀNIKA) II. A brother of Matisya, the King of Virāṇa. During the battle of Kurukṣetra he had taken the side of the Pāṇḍavas and had fought against the Kauravas. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158).

BĀLĀSVAṢMI. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B., Saiya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 74).

BĀLĀVAṬI. The daughter of hermit Kaṇva. She did penance to please the Sun to obtain a husband of a very good nature. The Sun appeared before her and gave her some dates and asked her to prepare food with them and bring them back. Bālāvati began to cook the dates. Though all the faggots she had gathered were consumed it was not properly boiled. As there was no firewood she put her leg into the oven. Seeing this the Sun-God was pleased and said "All your wishes will be realized". From that day onwards that place was called by the name Bālāpā. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 152).

BĀLĀVINAṢTAKA. The hero of a story, given in Kathāsarasīgara, Kathāmukhalambaka, Tārāṅga six, to show that it is not good to make others angry. The story is as follows:—

Long ago there was a Brahmin named Rudra Śarmā. He had two wives. Both gave birth to a son each. The elder wife died and her son also was brought up by the younger wife. Being jealous she fed the child with food too hard for the child and it became lean with stomach swollen and the bones projecting. It looked an uncouth figure. Seeing him like this Rudra Śarmā called him Bālāvināṣtaka (one who is lost when he is a boy). He gradually grew up. When he was only five years old he showed extraordinary intelligence. One day he decided to teach his foster-mother a lesson. On that day he was sitting alone on the lap of his father. He said to his father, "Father, I have two fathers". Thenceforward the father began to doubt his wife, that she was having a lover. He grew jealous. He would not talk to her. The foster-mother thought Bālāvināṣtaka was the cause for this change in her husband's behaviour. One day she called the boy to her mildly and asked him for the reason for the change in the behaviour of his father towards her. He said that he would bring about a change in the behaviour of his father if he would be cared for properly. She agreed. Then he took a mirror and held it before his father and when the reflection of his father fell in the mirror he said, "Father, I have two fathers". Immediately the doubt of his father was removed. It is not right to make even a boy angry.

BĀLĀYANI. An ācārya (Teacher). In Bhāgavata, Stanha 10, it is seen that Bālāyani was taught Bālakīhyam samhitā by Bāskala.
BALYOΓI

BALYOΓI. A king of the Áṅga dynasty. He was the son of Bali, who had six sons named Áṅga, Vánga, Kalinya, Puḍra, Bāleya and Balyogí. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277)

BALYUS. One of the eight sons born to Puruṇavas by Urvāśī. (Padma Purāṇa, Śṛṣṭi, Chapter 12).

BĀLHIKA. (BĀLHIKA) I. A powerful king born in the family of Ahara. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 25).

BĀLHIKA II. A king who in his previous life was the asura called Krodhavaśa. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 96, Stanza 12, that this king helped the Kauravas in the battle of Kurukṣetra.

BĀLHIKA III. A king who was the third son of Janamejaya and the grandson of King Kuru. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 56).

BĀLHIKA IV. A son of Praśa, a King of the Kuru dynasty. He had two brothers, Devaśi and Śantānī. It is said in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94 that Sunandā, the princess of the country of Śibi was their mother. Mention is made in Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, Chapter 22, Stanza 18 that this king Bālhika had a son named Somadatta. Bālhika was a friend of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas. Bālhika exhorted them strongly, not to engage in a battle. Still, when the battle was begun, Bālhika sided with the Kauravas. Bālhika was once elected as the general of eleven divisions of the army of Duryodhana.

The achievements of Bālhika in the battle of Kurukṣetra are given below:

1) There was a combat on the first day of the battle between Bālhika and Dhṛṣṭaketu. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 38).
2) Bhimasena defeated Bālhika. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 104, Stanza 26).
3) Fought with Drupada. (Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 18).
4) Bālhika fought with Śiśaṅga. (Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 96, Stanza 7).
5) Bhimasena killed Bālhika. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157, Stanza 15).

BĀLHIKA V. The charioteer of Dharmaputra. (M.B., Śāli Parva, Chapter 58, Stanza 20).

BĀLHIKADEŚA. A country in ancient Bhārata. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9.

BALI (MAHĀBALI) I. An emperor of the Asuras. He was the son of Virocana and the grandson of Prahlāda.

1) Genealogy and Birth. The Asuras or the Daityas are the sons born, of his wife Diti, to Kaśyapa Prajāpati, son of Marici and grandson of Brahmā. There were so many Asura born as the sons of Diti. But among them Hiranyākṣa, Hiranyakaśipu, Śrīrapadāṁśa, Śrīśavaktra, Tārkāśura and Gomukha were notorious. Of their sisters Sṛitiḥkā and Ajanukhī were famous.

Four sons called Prahlāda, Samhreśa, Hrāda and Anuhrāda were born to Hiranyakaśipu. Virocana was the son of Prahlāda and Mahābhāli was the son of Virocana. Bāṇa was born from Hiranyakaśipu and four crores of Asuras called Nivatākavacas were born from Bāṇa.

2) The churning of the ocean. Once Mahābhāli had stolen the wealth of Devendra. While he was carrying it to his house, it all fell in the ocean. Mahāviṣṇu ordered the devas (gods) to recover the lost wealth from the ocean. It was impossible to churn the ocean without the help of Mahābhāli. So the devas went to Mahābhāli and sought his help. Mahābhāli agreed to help them.

The real aim of the devas was not to regain the lost wealth but to obtain the celestial nectar known as Nectar of Immortality (Amṛta) and to defeat the Asuras in battle. On the side of the Asuras there was the knowledge of the Mṛutasālaṇīvāna (life-restoring remedy). So the dead were being brought to life. But it was not possible for devas to do so. It was to make up this deficiency, by obtaining Ambrosia from the sea, that the devas tried to churn the sea, under the pretence of recovering the lost wealth. Mention is made in the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa I, Chapter 9 and Matsya Purāṇa, Chapters 250 and 251 that these events took place during the regime of the Indra named Mahabhadruma in the Cākṣuṣamānvantara (the period of the manu named Cākṣuṣa).

3) War with Indra. The great teacher Śukra again anointed Bali, who was brought to life again, as Indra. After that he performed the sacrifice of Viśvajit (conqueror of the world) on behalf of Bali. Assuming the responsibilities of government, Bali performed one hundred Āsvamedha yāgas (Horse sacrifices) (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

After the Viśvajit sacrifice, Yajñadeva (god of sacrifice) who was greatly pleased at the sacrifice, presented Bali with a divine chariot, equal in all aspects to that of Indra, a golden bow, two quivers, which would never become empty and a divine armour, and his grandfather gave him a garland that would never fade, and the teacher Śukra gave him a divine conch, and Brahma presented a garland. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 216).

4) Attainment of the Position of Indra. Mahāviṣṇu had not been on good terms with the devas, for a time. Taking this opportunity, Śukra-carṇya the teacher of the Asuras, persuaded Bali to engage the devas in a battle. Bali defeated the devas completely in a pitched battle. Thus the realm of the gods came under the sway of Mahābhāli. Once, during that period Bali invited his grandfather Prahlāda to heaven and requested him to accept the most honourable seat there. Prahlāda accepted his invitation and anointed Bili as Indra. Bali enquired of Prahlāda as to the method of carrying on the government of heaven. Prahlāda said thus in reply: "Only virtue will always win. Rule the kingdom without deviating from virtue." (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 74).

Because Bali had ruled his kingdom according to the advice of Prahlāda, he became famous in the three worlds. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 75).

According to the version of Bhāgavata, Prahlāda when he grew old, left his kingdom in the hands of his son Virocana and went to the forest for penance. Virocana was not as famous as Prahlāda. After the period of Virocana, Mahābhali came to the throne. He was a mighty king. Within a short time he became the emperor of the Asuras. It was during this period that the churning of the Milk Sea took place. The Asuras and the Devas (gods) sat on either side and using the mount Mandara as churn-drill, churned the Milk Sea and obtained Amṛta (the celestial nectar of immortality). A battle took place between the Asuras and the Devas for the possession of Amṛtakalasa (the Ambrosia and the container) and the emperor Mahābhāli was killed in the battle. The Asuras carried the dead body of Mahābhāli.
bali to his capital, where Sukrācārya (their teacher-priest Sukra) brought him to life again by the help of sacred herbs. Mahābali instantly waged another war, fiercer than the previous ones, with the devas, and having defeated them, he drove them out of their realm and brought it under control. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

5) The curse of Prahlāda. As the whole of heaven came under the sway of Bali, the devas began to leave the country one by one. Everybody was happy and comfortable under the rule of Bali. But the devas and Brāhmaṇas were denied the privileges they deserved. They approached Viśuṣu and represented their grievances. Viśuṣu told them thus: “Bali is devoted to me. Still, to redress your grievances I shall take the incarnation of Vāmanā shortly.”

In course of time the Asuras and their countries began to be weakened. Seeing the approach of destruction emperor Bali became thoughtful. He approached Prahlāda to learn the reason. Prahlāda told Bali thus: “Lord Viśuṣu is now staying in the womb of Aditi for his incarnation as Vāmanā. That is why the country and the Asuras are subjected to destruction. Hearing this Mahābali said: “Our Rākṣasas are more powerful than that Viśuṣu.” Hearing these haughty words of Bali, Prahlāda got angry and cursed Bali “Let your country be destroyed.” Bali requested Prahlāda to pardon him. Prahlāda advised Bali “You will get salvation only by relying on Viśuṣu”. (Vāmanā Purāṇa 77).

6) Defeated by Vāmanā. The defeated devas had taken refuge in forests. Aditi the mother of the devas was very sorry at this. She shed tears before her husband Kaśyapa Prajāpati, who advised his wife to take a fast of twelve days, and taught her the rules and rituals of the fast. Accordingly she took the fast, Viśuṣu appeared before her and asked her what boon she wanted. She requested Viśuṣu to take birth as her son, to drive away Bali and to restore her sons, the devas (gods), to their kingdom of heaven. Mahāviṣuṣu agreed. Aditi became pregnant and gave birth to the son Vāmanā. He was an incarnation of Mahāviṣuṣu. [The 5th incarnation (avatāra) of Viśuṣu].

At this time Mahābali was performing a sacrifice on the bank of the river Narmadā. Vāmanā came to the place of sacrifice in the dress of a hermit boy and told Mahābali that he was a helpless hermit boy and requested that he might be given three steps of ground. Mahābali was pleased with the boy and told him that he was willing to give the boy even the country called Bhṛgāraka and that he was prepared to forego the kingly pleasures for the boy. The hermit boy did not show any desire for them. So many gathered round them to witness this sight. The teacher Sukrācārya called Mahābali and said that the boy was a cheat and that his request should not be granted. But Mahābali decided to grant the wish of the boy and as a token of his gift he began to offer the boy water from a waterpot. Then the teacher got into the mouth of the pot in the shape of a mote and water would not flow freely out of the mouth of the pot. Knowing this Vāmanā took a grass of Darbha and pushed it at the mouth of the pot. The grass pierced one eye of Sukrācārya. From that time onwards Sukrācārya had only one eye. Water flowed freely into the hands of Vāmanā. Sukra got angry and cursed Bali. Vāmanā began to measure the ground and simultaneously began to grow. The asuras who were horrified at this, began to attack Vāmanā with anything they could lay hands on. Still Vāmanā was growing. Finally he became an immensely large being. With one step he measured the whole of earth and with the second step he took the whole of heaven. Then he asked Bali, where to place the third step. Mahābali said that he had only his body left, as his own, and that Vāmanā might take it and complete three steps. Vāmanā placed his foot on the head of Bali and pushed him down to Pātāla (the Netherworld). Thenceforward the asuras became the inhabitants of Pātāla. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

7) Bali and Rāvana. Once Rāvana visited Bali who was under custody in Pātāla, and said to him, “I have come to save you from here. So get yourself free from the custody of Mahāviṣuṣu, with my help.” Hearing this, Bali asked Rāvana to fetch the two earrings of Hiranyakāsīpu, which were shining like blazing fire a little away from them. Rāvana moved forward to take them. But he fell unconscious. Bali caused him to recover and said: “These earrings were worn by my great grandfather Hiranyakāsīpu. How could you, who are not even capable of taking his earrings, save me from his slayer, Viśuṣu? Viśuṣu is Almighty and All-powerful and Supreme Lord of everything.” Hearing this, Rāvana was filled with shame and he returned. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Uttara Kāṇḍa, Prākṣipta Sarga).

8) Bali born as a Gardabha (Ass). Bali, who was fallen from power took birth in the womb of an ass and roamed about. Brāhmaṇī instructed Indra to find out Bali. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapters 216-218).

9) Other information.

(1) Mahābali shines in the durbar of Varuṇa. (M.B., Sābhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 12).

(2) Once Mahābali went to Prahlāda and repented of his sins and begged for pardon. Then he began to make enquiries on spiritual matters. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 28, Stanza 3).

(3) From his childhood Mahābali was a hater of the Brāhmaṇas. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 90, Stanza 24).

(4) Once Mahābali was engaged in a serious contest with Indra. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 223).

(5) After having lost his kingdom Mahābali ridiculed Indra in various ways. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 225, Stanza 30).

(6) Once Mahābali talked with Sukrācārya about giving gifts of flower, smoke and light. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 98, Stanza 15).

(7) Lakṣmī Devī had forsaken Mahābali because he behaved haughtily towards Brāhmaṇas. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapters 216-218).

(8) In the religious Books such as Yogavāśīśtha the story of Mahābali is given to illustrate disinterestedness (Anāsakiti).

Bali II. A hermit. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 10, that this hermit lived in Hastinapura.

Bali III. An incarnation of Siva. Siva incarnated in the hermitage of the Bālakhilyas in the mount of Gandharvādāna during the period of Varāha Kalpa (Kalpa—one day of Brahmā or the period of 14 manus). It is seen in Siva Purāṇa, Satapatha Brāhmaṇa that Bali had four sons, called Sudhāmā, Kaśyapa, Vasiṣṭha and Virāja.
Bali IV. A king of the Yadavas. He was the son of Krtavarnam. Bali married Carumati, the daughter of Rukmini. (Bhagavata, Skandha 10).

Bali V. A famous monkey-king of the country of Anava. This King who was the son of Sutapas was a contemporary of the great King Sagara. Bali did penance and Brahma appeared before him, and blessed him and said, “You will become a great sage and will live till the end of the Kalpa (a period of world age). Your power will be inimitable. Nobody will overthrow you in battle. You will be loved by your subjects and they will obey you. You will be versed in the knowledge of law and its observance and the learned will recognize your knowledge. You will re-establish caste system in your kingdom.” (Harivamsha, 1. 31.35.39).

Sudeśā was the wife of Bali. The couple had no children. At last they appealed to Dirghatamas a hermit, from whom they got five sons called Aniga, Vargha, Kaliniga, Pāṇḍu and Suhma (Brahma Purāṇa). In Bhagavata it is mentioned that he had one more son called Andhra.

Bali left his body at the end of the Kalpa and entered heaven. Before his death he had divided his kingdom equally among his sons. (Bhagavata, Skandha 9, Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 92).

Bali. A mighty monkey-king.

1) Birth. Bali is the son of Indra. There is a story about the birth of Bali as follows:—

Śilavatī who was devoted to her husband once carried her husband Ugratapas who was a leper, on her shoulder to the house of a harlot one night. On the way they saw the hermit Animmādevya who had been placed on a trident by the order of the King, beating his limbs with agony. Lying on the trident he saw Ugratapas. Seeing the amorous nature of Ugratapas Animmādevya cursed him that before sunrise he would die. Śilavatī who was a woman of great purity and loyalty hearing the curse said, “Let the Sun not rise tomorrow.”

Next day, though it was time the sun did not rise. The night prolonged. Aruṇa the charioteer was ready at the usual time but saw the Sun sitting motionless. Wasting time was intolerable to the charioteer. So he decided to make the best use of the time at his disposal by witnessing a little of the dance of the celestial beauties in the realm of the devas. But males had no admittance there. So Aruṇa took the shape of a beautiful woman and got in. Seeing a new person, very beautiful to look at, sitting in the midst of the celestial maids Indra grew amorous. He secretly took her to a dark place and a son was born out of that coition. That son is Bali. When Aruṇa returned the Sun was standing full of anger. Being afraid of him Aruṇa confessed everything to the Sun. When he heard the whole story the Sun expressed his desire to see that figure which Aruṇa had adopted. Accordingly Aruṇa again became a woman. The Sun also had coition with her and Sugrīva was the son born out of this coition. Bali and Sugrīva were brought up by Ahalayadevi in the hermitage of Gautama.

At that time a monkey-king named Rksarāja had been ruling over the forest with Kīśkindhā as his capital. He had no sons and so he approached Indra and placed before him his grievances. Indra brought Bali and Sugrīva from the hermitage of Gautama and handed them over to Rksarāja. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 107; Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 42; Uttara Rāmāyaṇa and Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Pārvakāṇḍa).

2) Marriage and kingship. Owing to difference of opinion, Bali defeated the asuras who came for the churning of the Sea of Milk. The devas who were pleased at this, gave Bali, a woman named Tārā, derived from the Sea of Milk. Thus Tārā became his wife and he got a son by her, named Arīgada who became famous as a mighty warrior-prince. Sugrīva married Rumā. At that time Rksarāja died and Bali became King. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Pārvakāṇḍa).

3) Enmity with Hanumān. It was during this period that Hanumān was born. While Śiva and Pārvatī were living in the forest as monkeys Pārvatī got with child. The child was given to Bhagavān Vāyu (Wind-God) with the womb. Vāyu placed the womb with the child in Aṛjanā Devī’s stomach. Nārada informed Bali all these things. Bali thought that his position would be lost, if a being born of Śiva, grew up in the form of a monkey. In accordance with the advice of Nārada, Bali melted Paścaloha (Five metals) and passed it into the womb of Aṛjanā. Still the child in the womb was not killed as it was the sperm of Śiva. The molten metals became earrings of the child in the womb. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Pārvakāṇḍa).

4) Sugrīva separated. Once, the son of Maya, the carpenter of the asuras, wanted to defeat Bali by a combat or cunning sleights as he was an expert wrestler and magician. He came to Kīśkindhā in the midnight and standing before the palace, challenged Bali, who getting angry came out followed by Sugrīva. Seeing the two of them the magician began to run. Bali and Sugrīva chased him to a cave. Placing Sugrīva at the mouth of the cave Bali followed the magician. Before going, Bali said to Sugrīva: “Brother, I will go in and kill the Magician and return, Be brave and stay here. If the asura dies milk will appear at the mouth of the cave and if he kills blood will be seen. If the latter happens close the mouth of the cave firmly and return to Kīśkindhā and live happily there.”

Bali did not return even after a year. Finally the asura was killed. But by the cunning sleights of the magician it was blood that appeared at the mouth of the cave. Thinking that his brother was slain by the magician Sugrīva felt sorry. Then he closed the mouth of the cave firmly with stone and returned to Kīśkindhā. Hearing about the death of Bali the monkeys anointed Sugrīva as King. After a time Bali returned stronger than before and saw the mouth of the cave closed. He thought that Sugrīva had closed the mouth of the cave deliberately to kill him and to usurp his throne. Bali reached Kīśkindhā and drove Sugrīva away. Sugrīva fled to Mount Rāyaṃukācala which was prohibited area for Bali due to a curse. Mātaṅga had cursed him that if he entered that mountain his head would be broken. So Sugrīva was safe in that mountain.

The desire of Bali to take revenge on Sugrīva increased everyday. Everyday he used to go to the four seashores and conduct bath, prayer, meditation etc. and return to Kīśkindhā within a short time. With one jump he will reach one place from another, and in each jump he would put one step on the head of Sugrīva in the Rāyaṃukācala. Hanumān was the minister of Sugriva. He was much annoyed at this habitual torture of Sugriva. One day as usual Bāli was stepping on the head of Sugriva to jump to another place, when Hanumān caught hold of Bāli by his waist. Hanumān thought that if Bāli was dragged down on the mountain somehow or other, his head would break and there would be an end of his wicked deeds. Bāli thought that if he could jump into Kīśkindhā with Hanumān it would be easy for him to destroy Sugriva. But both were of equal strength. So Bāli did not jump with Hanumān to Kīśkindhā and Hanumān did not drag Bāli to the ground. Both did not know how to stop the fight. At last they made a treaty. Bāli agreed to stop torturing Sugriva and Hanumān agreed not to cause any trouble to Bāli. Both returned to their own places. After that Sugriva lived in Rāyāmūkācala with his ministers and Bāli in Kīśkindhā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kīśkindhā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 10; Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Pārvakāṇḍa).

5) Bāli was cursed by Mātanga the great hermit. See the word Dūndubhi pāra 4.

6) Defeating Rāvana. Bāli had got a boon from the Gods that he would get half the strength of his opponent who stood face to face with him in fight. This power enabled Bāli to defeat all his foes and bring the countries in all directions under his sway. Rāvana heard about this and decided to overpower Bāli somehow or other and approached Kīśkindhā. Bāli knew this. His minister, Tāran, went to Rāvana and told him about the power of Bāli and of the boon by which Bāli got half the strength of his opponent. When Rāvana heard of this peculiar boon he decided to kill Bāli. His idea was to kill Bāli by going behind him when he went to the sea-shore to take bath in the morning. Next morning Bāli went to the eastern sea-shore and began his prayer and meditation. Rāvana approached Bāli from behind and sat close to him. Perhaps the idea of Rāvana might have been to take Bāli by his tail and beat him on the ground. Bāli knew that Rāvana was sitting behind him. But pretending that he knew nothing put his long tail on the body of Rāvana, and passed it lengthwise and breadthwise through every part of his body and tied him like a bundle of faggots, and made a jump into the air. Within a short time he visited all the usual places and reached Kīśkindhā. Seeing Rāvana hanging by the tail of Bāli, even the women folk laughed. Thus Rāvana admitted defeat. Bāli let him go unharmed. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

7) Death. After Sītā had been stolen away Rāma and Lākaṣmāna wandered about in the forest. Then they met with Hanumān, who took them to his King Sugriva. Śrī Rāma and Sugriva entered into a treaty, by which Śrī Rāma was to kill Bāli and to restore to Sugriva his wife who was under the custody of Bāli, and to make him the King of Kīśkindhā, in return for which Sugriva and his men had to help Śrī Rāma to find out and recover Sītā. In accordance with the conditions of the treaty, Śrī Rāma and Sugriva reached Kīśkindhā, to confront with Bāli. Śrī Rāma and Sugriva had hit up on a plan, by which Śrī Rāma was to shoot Bāli down, when Sugriva was engaged in boxing with Bāli. Sugriva challenged Bāli to a single combat. Bāli came out and a horrible boxing began between the two. But Śrī Rāma could not distinguish one from the other. Their faces were so alike, Sugriva, being defeated, recoeded from fight. Śrī Rāma and Sugriva returned to Rāyāmūkācala. Sugriva spoke ill of Śrī Rāma. But Śrī Rāma revealed the truth, and Sugriva believed it. Next day morning both of them started for Kīśkindhā to kill Bāli. Śrī Rāma had put a flower garland around the neck of Sugriva to distinguish him from Bāli. This time Tārā tried to the utmost to dissuade Bāli from fighting. But without paying any heed to her words Bāli engaged Sugriva in fighting. Śrī Rāma, sitting in ambush, instantly sent an arrow to the breast of Bāli who looked to the side from which the arrow came. Before falling down, looking at Śrī Rāma Bāli said “It is not right on the part of the King of Ayodhyā to have shot an arrow from ambush”.

Hearing that Śrī Rāma said, “If you see me face to face you will become devoted to me. It is not right to kill one’s devotee. You are a friend of Rāvana, who as you know, is my foe. If I let you alone Rāvana is likely to get your help. Besides, you have a boon that you will get half the strength of the foe who faces you, and as such you cannot be killed by anybody in direct fight. It is unavoidable for the safety of Sugriva, for my interest, for the protection of the world at large, and for the preservation of law and order that you should be killed. Was it not a violation of duty on your part to steal the wife of Sugriva?”

Bāli fell down. Immediately Tārādevī and Aṅgada arrived there. Tārā spoke very harsh words to Śrī Rāma. At last Bāli entrusted Tārā and Aṅgada with Śrī Rāma and then he died. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Kīśkindhākāṇḍa).

BĀLĪHĀM. A dynasty of Kṣatriyas. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 14 that there was a king named Arkaṇa in this dynasty.

BĀLĬSĬKHA. A serpent born to Kaśyapa prajāpati of his wife Kadru. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 8).

BĀLĪVĀK. A hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 14 that this hermit had been a member of the durbar of Yudhiṣṭhira.

BĀLLĀ. Son of a Vaiśya named Kalāṇa. From childhood Ballāla was an ardent devotee of Gaṇapati. When he was a child he used to gather pebbles and make a heap and then worship it, imagining it to be Gaṇeśa (Gaṇapati).

His parents did not like this. They tried their best to dissuade him from this habit. Once they tied him to a tree and gave him severe cuts. But their attempts were futile. One day an image of Gaṇapati arose in the place where the child used to worship. (Gaṇeśa Purāṇa 1 : 2).

BĀLLĀVA (VALLĀVA). A country in Bhārata. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9.

BĀLLĀVA (VALLĀVA). This is the pseudo-name assumed by Bhumascena, while the Pāṇḍavas were living in pseudonymity in the kingdom of Viṛā. In some Purāṇas this name is shown as ‘Valala’. (M.B., Viṛā Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 1).

BĀLOTKAṄṭÁ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B., Sāya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 23).

BĀLVALĀ (VALAKALĀ). An asura. This asura had been tormenting the hermits of the forest of Naimiśa.
This asura was killed by Balabhadrarāma.* For detailed story see para 6 of the word Balabhadrarāma.

BĀNA (BĀNAHATTA) I. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 7th century A.D. He was a member of the assembly of emperor Harṣavardhana. ‘Harṣacarita’ (prose) is the most important work of Bāna. Though many of the descriptions in this book contain exaggerations it affords plenty of scope for investigation into the features of ancient Sanskrit literature. He has mentioned about Vyāsa, Bhaiṣṭāra-hariścandra, Sātvāhana, Pravarasena, Bhāsa, Kālidāsa and such others. Harṣacarita, in a sense, is a Romance. It is divided into eight Ucchāvasas. From the first two or three chapters informations could be had of Bānabhāṭṭa. His mother Rājyadevi died when he was a little boy. At the age of fourteen his father also died. After that he arrived at the palace of Harṣa. The story of Harṣacarita begins with the death of Prabhākara-Vardhana, father of Harṣa. The Book ends with the story incomplete. Harṣacarita is the only historic prose work available in Sanskrit.

BĀNA II. A mighty and powerful Asura.

1) Genealogy and birth. Descended from Mahāviṣṇu in the following order: Brahmadeva-Mara-Śiva-Sātvatāra-Parvata-Sūtras-Dana-Parvata-Maha-Videha-Krisna. 2) Getting a boon. Bāna began his reign with the city of śāntapura as his capital. Then he went to the vicinity of the Himalayas and began to do penance thinking of Sīva. Sīva made his appearance and asked him what he wanted. He replied that he should be considered as the son of Pārvatī and that he should be given thousand hands so as to destroy all his enemies. Sīva granted him the boon. From that day onwards Pārvatī considered him as the younger brother of Subrahmanyā. He returned to his Kingdom and began to reign.

3) Battle with Śrī Kṛṣṇa and his fall. (See the word Aniruddha).

4) Other information. (1) In the Purāṇas Bānasura is often called by the name Mahākāla, which is the name of an attendant of Śiva. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 20). (2) Sukrācārya (the teacher of the Asuras) always worked for the uplift of Bāna. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38, Stanza 29). (3) In the Battle with Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Bāna was helped by Śiva, Subrahmanyā, and the Gods like Agni (fire) and others. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38). (4) Śrī Kṛṣṇa cut down the thousand hands of Bāna with his Cakrāyudha (the wheel weapon). (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38). (5) Bāna often stood under the cover of the mountain of Krauṇca and attacked the devas (gods). So once Subrahmanyā had to cut the mountain Krauṇca with his arrows. (M.B., Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 82).

BĀNA III. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. Mention is made about this Bāna in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 67.

BĀNA IV. An asura. During the regime of Śrī Rāma this asura fought against the King and his brothers. A Sivalinga had been consecrated in the throat of this asura. So it was not possible for Lakṣmaṇa to defeat him though he had fought with him for so many days. Lakṣmaṇa heard an ethereal voice saying, “Unless and until the image of Sivalinga is removed from his throat Bāna could not be killed.” By the operation of arrows Lakṣmaṇa smashed the image of Sivalinga in his throat. With the same arrow he cut the throat of the asura also and thus Bāna was killed. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Uttaṇa Kāṇḍa).

BANDHUDAYĀDA. A son who can claim to be a heir. The Purāṇas state about six different kinds of Bandhudyādas.

1) Suryanājāta. A son born to one’s wife without a progenitor.

2) Praśasta. A son born to one’s wife by the blessing of any holy man.

3) Putrīkāputra. Son of one’s daughter.

4) Puñnarbhava. A son born after a re-marriage.

5) Kāṇīna. A son born before marriage.

6) Bhaiṣṭā. Son of one’s sister. All these sons are heirs. (Chapter 119, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

BANDHUMĀN. A king of the country of Videha. (Chapter 6, Brahmanda Purāṇa).

BANDHUMATI. A lady attendant of Vāsavadattā, wife of Udayana. (See Vāsavadattā).

BARBARA. A country of purānic fame. The people living there were called Barbaras. They were considered as low caste people. There is also a statement that these people were born of the sides of the cow, Nandini. (Sloka 37, Chapter 174, Ādi Parva, M.B.). During the victory march of the Pāṇḍavas Bhimasena conquered the Barbaras. Nakula also conquered these people. (Chapter 32, Sabhā Parva, M.B.). In the Rājasya yāhya of Dharmaputra the Barbaras were present with gifts.

BARBARIKA. Son of Maurvi born of Ghaṭotkaca, son of Bhima. Skanda Purāṇa gives the following details about him.

Barbārika was a Yakṣa in his previous life. Once the devas unable to bear the insufferable harm done to them by the Dānavas approached Lord Mahāviṣṇu for help and then the Yakṣa who was present there at that time said with arrogance, “There is no need for Viṣṇu to curb the activities of the Dānavas. I shall do it myself.” Hearing those arrogant words Brahmā cursed him saying that in his next life he would be killed by Viṣṇu.

True to the curse the Yakṣa was born in his next life as Barbārika, son of Ghaṭotkaca. To lessen the force of the curse Kṛṣṇa advised him to worship Devī. At last pleasing the goddess by the kindly help of a brahmin named Viṣayā Barbārika killed a demoness called Mahājīva and a demon of name Repalendra. The brahmin further gave him a weapon named Vībhūti which could split the vital centres of the body of an enemy and said, “Use this weapon against the Kauravas who oppose the Pāṇḍavas.”

Once Barbārika defeated his grandfather Bhima in a battle and greatly grieved over the injury done started to commit suicide. Then Devī appeared before him and reminded him thus, “You will get salvation only if you are killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and so desist from committing suicide.”

* In the original of Bhāgavata this name is given as Balvala. But in the Malayalam translation the name used is “Valkala.”
The great war started and Barbarika fighting on the side of the Pāṇḍavas started using his weapon Vībhūti. He sent it against all excepting the Pāṇḍavas, Kṛpa-cārya and Aśvatthāmā. He did not leave even Kṛṣṇa alone and the weapon fell on the feet of Kṛṣṇa also.

Enraged at this Kṛṣṇa used his Sūdarsana Cakrā and cut off his head; at once Devī appeared and brought him to life. After the great battle on the advice of Kṛṣṇa Barbarika went and lived in Gupṭakṣerṭa.

BARHĀNAŚVA. A king born of the dynasty of emperor Pṛthu. Descending in order: Pṛthu-Viśvarāndhī-Gandra-Yuvaṇāśva-Sāvantā - Bhṛdayaśva - Dhumundhura (alias Valayāśva) - Drīḍhāśva - Haryaśva - Nikumbha and to Nikumbha was born Barhānasva and from him Kṛṣṇa-Prasenajit-Yuvaṇāśva - Māndhātā. (Saptama Skanda, Devī Bhāgavata).

BARHISAD. A devagandharva clan. These were born to Kaśyapa prajāpati of his wife Pṛthā. (Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

BARHISĀD (S). A class of Manes. It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20 that some classes of manes such as Agniśvāttas, Barhīsads, Anagnis, and Sāgnis are said to have derived from Bṛahmā. Bṛahmā created two different sets of Pitrās, Agniśvāttas and Barhīsads. (Chapter 10, Aṣṭāsāṃ, Viśu Purāṇa).

These Barhīsads who are members of the Yamasābhā (council of the God of Death) perform the mātric rites for the dead. The name brings into its fold the world of the seven sacred sages also. (Chapter 208, Sānti Parva, M.B.). It was through these Barhīsads that Bṛahmā taught Sātvadadharmā to a bṛahmin who became well-known later as Jyeṣṭha. (Chapter 34, Śloka 45, Sānti Parva, M.B.).

Manusmṛti states that the Barhīsads are the sons of the Māharṣi Atri and the Pitrās of all the Dāyātras, Dānāvās, Yakṣas, Gandharvas, Urāgas, Rākṣasas, Suvārjas and Kinnaras. Dāyātraṇavāyakṣaṇāṁ Gandharvagaranārājaṇāṁ Suvārjanārājanāṁ Srīrā Barhīsadō tṛijaś (Manusmṛti, Śloka 196, Chapter 3).

BARHISMATI. Wife of Priyavrata, son of Svāyambhuvu Mahānu and brother of Uttānapāda. She was the daughter of Viśvakarmaprajāpati. Priyavrata married another daughter of his named Surūpā. Surūpā delivered ten sons and a daughter. They were: Agneśhtra, Idhaṃjīva, Yajñabāhu, Mahāvītra, Rukmaṣukra, Gṛhtraprīṭha, Savana, Madhākṛti, Vitihotra, Kavi and a daughter Urjivasī. Priyavrata got of his wife Barhīsmaṇi three sons, Uttama, Tamas and Raivata. These sons became in due course the Manvantarāṇdhipatis. (Aṣṭama Skanda, Devī Bhāgavata).

BĀRHAŚPALI. The Nitiśāstra of Bṛahmā. Bṛhapsati condensed and codified the laws of Ethics by Bṛahmā. This was compiled by Bṛhapsati. This book contains three thousand chapters. Mention is made about this Book in Mahābhārata, Śaṃti Parva, Chapter 59, Stanza 84.

BĀŚKALA I. A king of the asuras.

1) Birth. Two sons, Hīranyākṣa and Hīranyakaśipu and a daughter Sirīhikā, were born to Kaśyapa prajāpati of his wife Diti. Sirīhikā became the wife of Vipraciti. Four sons, Anuhṛdā, Hṛdā, Prahlāda and Saṅhlāda, were born to Hīranyakaśipu. Hṛdā was the son of Hṛdā. Three sons Ayuśmān, Śibi and Bāśkala were born to Saṅhlāḍā.

2) Later history. Bāśkala became one of the ministers of the famous and mighty hero Mahiśāsura. Cikṣūra was the minister of law and order. Tāmra was the Finance Minister, Asiloṃa was the Prime Minister and Bṛīḍāla the minister of foreign affairs. Udārka was the general of the army; Bāśkala, Trinetra and Kālabandhaka were members of the administrative council. Ādkrācārya was the minister of education. Bāśkala played an important part in the battle between Mahiśāsura and Indra. When soldiers were killed by thousands, Mahiśāsura sent lastly, Bāśkala and Durmukha. Bāśkala engaged himself in a combat with Devī who fought on the side of the Devas. Bāśkala became angry and aiming at the breast of Devī he gave a severe blow with his club. But Devī evaded him with her club and gave him a severe thrust with her trident at his breast and Bāśkala fell dead. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19; Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 5).

BĀŚKALA II. One of the disciples of Vyāsa. (See the work Guruparamparā).

BĀTU (VATU). A bṛahmin who reads the Gītā daily. Because in life he held fast to duty he was carried to heaven after death. The dead body was eaten away by birds and the bony skeleton remained. When rains started the empty skull was filled with water and a sinner passing that way touched the skull and the sinner got salvation. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttra Khaṇḍa).

BAUDHĀYANA. A teacher-priest who acted according to Kalpa Śītras (rituals of sacrifices).

BHADRA II. One of the four elephants which, from Pāṭala, support the world. (See Aṣṭadīggaṇajas).

BHADRA III. Son of Śraddhā, daughter born to Svāyambhuva Mahānu by his wife Satarūpa. Śraddhā had the following sons: Subha, Prasāda, Maitriputra, Abhayā, Dayātmaja, Saṃti, Bhadra, Muda, Tuṣṭija Smaya, Puṣṭija and Yoga. (Bhāgavata, Caturtha Skanda).

BHADRA IV. A yakṣa, one of the ministers of Kubera. He had to be born as a lion on account of the curse of sage Gautama.

BHADRA V. People of the kingdom of Bhadragna are generally called Bhadras. It is stated in the Sāmbha Parva that the Kṣatriya princes of Bhadragnā present ed lots of money in connection with the Rākṣasāyajña of Yudhīṣṭhīra.

BHADRA VI. A mahāṛṣi, son of Pramati, and father of Upamanyu.

BHADRA VII. A son born to Śri Kṛṣṇa of Kālindī. (Bhāgavata, Daśāma Skanda).

BHADRA I. See Bhadrakāli.

BHADRA II. The beautiful daughter of King Kaṅkīvān. She was married to King Vyūṣītāsva of the Pūru dynasty. When Bhadra, in unbearable grief lamented the death of her husband his soul appeared on the skies and blessed her. Accordingly she got pregnant by the corpse of her husband and delivered six sons. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 120, Verse 38).

BHADRA III. One of the wives of Kubera. Kunti once related the story of Bhadrā to Pāncalī and exhorted her to live like Bhadrā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 198, Verse 6).
BHADRĀ IV. The word Bhadrā is used as another name of Subhadrā, sister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa in Verse 14, Chapter 218 of Ædi Parva.

BHADRĀ V. Yet another Bhadrā, daughter of the King of Viṣāla is mentioned in Chapter 45 of the Mahābhārata. She did penance for getting the kingdom of Karuṣa, when Siṣūpāla, disguised as King Karuṣa appeared on the scene and carried her away.

BHADRĀ VI. There is reference to another Bhadrā, daughter of Soma in Chapter 154 of the Anuśāsana Parva. She once did intense penance to secure Utathya as her husband. Ātri maḥāraṣṭ, father of Soma, came to know of the desire of his granddaughter, and got her married to Utatya. Varuṇa once fell in love with Bhadrā, who was an exceptionally beautiful woman, and abducted and concealed her in the sea. When Utatya returned to the Āśrama, his wife was missing. He understood what had happened to Bhadrā by the light of his divine knowledge (television of mind). Burning with anger he drank up the sea completely dry, and Varuṇa shuddering with fear returned Bhadrā to Utatya and profusely apologised. Thus ended the problem.

BHADRĀ VII, Verse 24, Chapter 7 of the Mausala Parva, states that Bhadrā, one of the four wives of Vasudeva, father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa died by jumping into the funeral pyre of her husband.

BHADRĀ VIII. A daughter of the King of Kāśi. The grandson of Sagara, a king of the Solar dynasty married Bhadrā, daughter of the King of Kāśi. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 96).

BHADRĀ IX. One Bhadrā, daughter of Meru was married by King Agniratha. She had eight sisters, viz. Meru Devī, Pratīrūpī, Ugradaṃśī, Lātā, Rāmyā, Śyāmā, Nārī and Devavīti. (Bhāgavata, Pañcama Skandha).

BHADRĀ X. See Viḍāsaka.

BHADRĀ(M). A kingdom in ancient India. The Kṣatriya princes of Bhadrām gave costly presents to Dharmaputra at the Rājaśīya Yāga (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 14). Kāṃra, in the course of his digívaya (conquest of countries) subjugated this kingdom. (Vana Parva, Chapter 254.)

BHADRĀBAHU. A king of Pūruvaṇīśa. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

BHADRĀCARU. A son of Pradyumna. (Bhāgavata, Daśāma Skandha).

BHADRĀDEHA. A king. According to the Viṣṇu Purāṇa he was one of the sons of Vasudeva by Devaki.

BHADRĀKA I. A king belonging to the Áṅga dynasty. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

BHADRĀKA II. A brahmin outcaste. This brahmin, who spent his whole life in committing sins, by chance, took māgha bath for three days at Prayāga, and thus got himself sanctified.

King Virasena, who was then ruling the Avanti kingdom had earned ample sanctity by the performance of seventeen Asvamedha yāgas. The Deaths of King Virasena and Bhadraka took place on one and the same day. Though Bhadraka was immoral in his life, he went to heaven along with Virasena after death as he had taken the māgha bath. (Padma Purāṇa, Utarā-khaṇḍa).

BHADRĀKALI. Another form of Pārvatī.

1) General. Lord Śiva, on hearing about the self-immolation in fire of his wife, Śatī at the famous yajña conducted by Dakṣa rushed in all anger to the spot, and beat the earth with his matted hair, and there ensued two forces called Vrīabhadra and Bhadrakāli. This Bhadrakāli was really Śatī or Pārvatī in another form.

2) Bhadrakāli and Kāma. There is a story in the Daśama-Skandha of Bhāgavata that Kāma took away from the room in which Devaki had delivered Śrī Kṛṣṇa the child of Yaśodā by whom Kṛṣṇa had been replaced, and dashed the child against a rock, and that the child then escaped from his clutches and rose up to the sky. That child was Bhadrakāli in another form. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 12).

3) Kampa, Lāṅkālakṣāmi and Bhadrakāli. Lāṅkālakṣāmi, who was guarding the city of Lāṅka, was the first to prevent Hanumān from entering the city. Tamil Purāṇas aver that this Lāṅkālakṣāmi was an incarnation of Bhadrakāli. Hanumān thrashed Lāṅkālakṣāmi with his left hand at which she vomitted blood and fell down unconscious. On regaining consciousness remembrance of the past occurred to her, and after thanking Hanumān, who restored her to her former form, she returned to Kailāsa. She complained to Śiva that she could not witness the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war. Then Śiva told her thus:

"You go to the Drāviḍa country and be put up in the 'Svayambhūlinga' temple there. I shall be born there as Kampa, compose the Rāmāyaṇa in Tamil and get conducted the dolls-play. Then you would be able to enjoy the story of Śrī Rāma, especially the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war, both by hearing and seeing the same in better manner than by actually seeing the war.

Bhadrakāli acted according to this bidding of Śiva. There lived a great scholar named Śaṅkaraśāraya close to the temple. His wife was Cīkāravalli. Lord Śiva, as decided upon previously was born as the son of Cīkāravalli, who had become a widow while she was worshipping 'Svayambhūdeva' for the gift of a child. But, Cīkāravalli, who feared scandal in her, a widow, becoming a mother, forsook the child in the temple precincts and left the place. One Gaṇeśakaunta sighted the orphan child, and took it to Jaya-pavallan, the Kauṭa chief. The Kauṭa chief, who was without children brought up the orphan child as though it had been his own child. Since the child was recovered from the foot of the flagstaff it was named Kampa. Kampa, who was very intelligent even in his infancy, but lazy by nature turned out to be a great scholar and good poet in Tamil by the time he grew up to be a youth, and he became, consequently a prominent member in the 'poets' assembly' of King Cola. When to his name was added the plural suffix 'r' as a token of great respect he came to be known as Kampaar.

Once King Cola asked Kampaar and Oṭṭakākāta another member of the poets' assembly to compose in Tamil poetry the story of Śrī Rāma. The King's direction was that Oṭṭakākāta should compose his poem up to the incident, Setubandhana (building a bridge in the sea up to Lāṅka) and Kampaar should write the story of the war in his poem. Oṭṭakākāta completed the task allotted to him within six months. But Kampaar had not attempted to write even a single line. Having been informed about the matter the King ordered that the poem, Rāma-yaṇa should be recited in the assembly the very next day itself. Kampaar, who began writing his poem the same day with the object of completing it in the night itself fell asleep without writing anything at all. When Kampar awoke early in the morning. He saw a divine form disappearing from his room and exclaimed, "Oh! mother! You have slipped away!" To this the divine form replied, "Oh, Kampar! I have finished writing." And, then the divine form vanished completely.

When Kampar got completely out of sleep and looked about he found the Rāmāyaṇa story fully written in verse on his desk. Kampar inferred that the poem was composed by Śāradābhaṅgavāti, the presiding deity of learning and literature, and he was wonder-struck. He recited the poem in the royal assembly, and the King and others too were wonder-struck. And, afterwards, according to the orders of the King, the story of the war (Yuddhaṅkāṇḍa Kathā) began to be exhibited as doll-play in the presence of the idol of the Devi in the temple. Thus Śiva incarnated himself as Kampar, recited the story of the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war in the temple, and hearing it Bhadrakālī danced.

The above is the chief legend about Kampar.

BHADRĀKĀLIPATTU. (Pāṭṭu—Song). Folk song very popular in Kerala temples. The practice is to sing songs in praise of Bhadrakali.

BHADRĀKĀRA. A king of ancient India; he once left his kingdom, in fear of Jārāsandha, and took refuge in South India. (Sahā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 26).

BHADRĀKARNEŚVARA(M). A sacred place. He who visits this place conducts worship will never have to face ill fate. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 39).

BHADRĀMATĀ (BHADRĀMĀNA). Daughter born to Kaśyapa prajāpati of his wife, Kroḍhavāṣa. The ten daughters of Kroḍhavāṣa are: Mṛgī, Mṛgani, Hari, Bhadrāmatā, Mātāngi, Śārdūṭi, Śvetā, Surabhi, Suraśa and Kadru. (Sarga 14, Aranyaka Kanda, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

BHADRĀMATI. A very poor brahmin. This brahmin had six wives and two hundred and forty-four daughters. (Nārada Purāṇam).

Once, hearing the glory of Bhūdāna (giving away land free to the deserved) he was much impressed and from then onwards he became filled with a strong desire to give land free to the poor. He had no land of his own. But he went to the king of Kauśambi and begged for some land which when received was immediately given as gift to poor brahmans. After that he went and bathed in the Pāpanāṣaṇa tirtha situated in the mount of Venuṭācaala. Bhadrāmati got salvation by this good deed. (Skanda 2,1,10).

BHADRĀSĀKA. A name of Subrahamanya. It is the figure of Subrahamanya in the shape of a goat that is known as Bhadrāsāka. (Śloka 4, Chapter 228, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHADRĀSALA(M). A forest on the top of the Mount Bhadrāsvaṇa which lies to the east of Mahāmeru. There is a tree called Kāḷāmla in this forest. This is a very sacred tree standing miles high above other trees and is being worshipped by the Vṛdhahaṇḍarānas. By worshipping this tree the men have become white and majestic and by drinking its juice prepared from its leaves the women keep themselves eternally young. Chapter seven of Bhīṣma Parva says like this about this tree: "Kāḷāmla stands towering miles high bearing flowers and fruits at all times of the year. The Vṛdhahaṇḍarānas worshipping it are white, strong and majestic. The women drinking its juice are lotus-complexioned, beautiful, Moonfaced, well versed in music and dance and having a life-span of over a thousand years, remaining young all the time."

BHADRĀŚĀRA. A king in the region of Kāśmīra. His only son, Sudharmān, was very much devoted to Śiva and spent most of his time worshipping him. The father tried his best to withdraw his son from this excessive devotion but failed.

Then one day the great sage, Parāśara, came to the King as his guest and the King then requested him to make his son withdraw from his Śiva-worship. But Parāśara then told him about the previous life of Sudharmā and consoling him persuaded the King to do the 'Rudrāhīṣeṇa' (uninterrupted pouring of cold water over an idol of Śiva) by himself. The King then entrusted the state with his son and left for the forests accepting an ascetic life. (Skanda Purāṇa, 3.3.20-21).

BHADRASENA. A King. Uddālaka Mahārṣi performed a devotional yāga to destroy this king. (Satapatha-brāhmaṇa).

BHADRĀŚRAVAS. A king whom the Purāṇas extol as having ruled Saurāṣṭra in Dvāparavaya. At the forest of Nāmīśa sage Śīta told the following story to explain how Lākṣmī (goddess of wealth) took her abode in the houses of men.

Bhadrāśravā (Bhadraśravas) who was ruling Saurāṣṭra had seven sons and a daughter of his wife, Surātikā. The daughter was named Śyāmabālī. Once truthful-Śyāmabālī was sitting under a green-wood tree with her playmates playing with diamonds and gold sand when the goddess of wealth disguised as an aged brahmin woman went to the gates of the palace and asked for permission to see the queen, Surātikā. The sentries pressed for details about her and then she said this: "My name is Kamalā. My husband is a man named Bhuvanāśva and we live in Dvārakā. Your queen in her previous birth was a Vaśyā woman. One day she quarrelled with her husband and he beat her hard and then crying loudly she ran out of the house. I met her and when she told me her story I instructed her to observe a Puyavratra (Fasting to any particular deity). She did it willingly and as a result she acquired great wealth and happiness.

One day the husband and wife died. Yama, the king of Death, then sent his orderlies to bring before him that couple who had always quarrelled with each other while living. Bound by ropes the ghastly servants of Yama were about to drag them to their land when the angelic servants of Viṣṇu with the insignia of Śaṅkha-Cakra-Gadā on their lapels arrived there and those messengers of Lākṣmī headed by Śvaprakāśa cut off the ropes and carrying them in a Rājaḥaṇā chariot took them through noble paths to the land of Lākṣmī. They lived there happily for a period calculated at the rate of a thousand years for one week of Puyavratra observed. In the end to complete the goodness remaining they were born as King and queen on earth with plenty of wealth and happiness. But they have now forgotten about the Puyavratra and I have come here to remind them of it."

The gate-keeper immediately went to her mistress and told her all that happened. But the queen, Surātikā got angry when she heard the story and ordered the old woman to be sent away from there with thrash-es. The old woman ran away from the palace crying loudly and Śyāmabālī on hearing the cry went and enquired about the incident. On hearing the story from the woman Śyāmabālā got instructions regarding that Puṇyavrata from the old woman and started observing it. Within four weeks she got married and went to her husband’s house. After Śyāmabālā’s departure from the palace the wealth of the King began to wane and they became so poor that at the request of the queen the King Bhadrāśrāvā went to his daughter to ask for help. The daughter gave his father a block of solid gold draped in a paper. But on his return to the palace when he opened the bundle he found there a block of charcoal instead of gold. On seeing the mishap the king burst into a cry.

Suraticandrika then went to her daughter and was well received and attended to. During her stay there the Puṇyavrata day of the month came and the daughter tried her best to make her mother also observe the same. But the poverty-stricken queen broke the fast without her daughter’s knowledge by eating what remained in the dishes of the children. But the next month Śyāmabālā compelled her mother to observe the fast strictly and so Suraticandrika took the Vrata successfully. A few days after that Suraticandrika returned home and to her amazement found everything in plenty there once more. (Chapter 11, Bhaga 2, Padma Purāṇa).

BHADRASREOTA. A Hehaya King who was ruling a state with Māhismatī as capital. He had fought many wars with Dīvīdāsa, king of Kāśi. (See under Divoddāsa).

BHADRASV A1. A king of Puruvaṁśa. He was the son of Rahovādī. Bhadrāśva had ten sons: Rṣṣeyu, Kṛṣṣeyu, Sannateyu, Gṛhyteyu, Giteyu, Sthāndileyu, Dharmeyu, Sanniteyu, Kṛteyu and Matināra. (Chapter 278, Agni Purāṇa).

Once Agastyā went and stayed for seven days in the palace of Bhadrāśva and his wife Kāntimāti. Every day Agastyā used to speak in glowing terms about Kāntimāti and asked about the reason for it he replied: “In her previous birth Kāntimāti was a servant girl in a wealthy house. The master of the house once entrusted her with the task of seeing that none of the temple lights went out on the night of Dwādaṁśi in the month of Tulā (Aṣvin—October). She did her duty so willingly and sincerely that she was born as a queen and you a King”. Then Agastyā gave them instructions about that Vrata which both Bhadrāśva and Kāntimāti observed sincerely, receiving as a result benediction from Viṣṇu. (Vāyu Purāṇa).

BHADRASV A II. Agnīdhra, son of Priyavrata and grandson of Manu, got nine sons of his wife Pārvacitī, a celestial maiden. One of the sons was Bhadrāśva. His brothers were Nābhi, Kinturu, Hari, Ilavṛta, Ramyaka, Hiranmaya, Kuru and Ketumāla. The country ruled by Bhadrāśva was called Bhadrāśva lying to the east of the mountain Gandhamadana. (Pañcama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

BHADRASV A. An island near the mountain of Meru. Dharmaputra was ruling this land and Saṅjaya once described this land to Dhyṛarāṣṭra. (Chapter 14, Saṅti Parva and Chapter 7, Bhīṣma Parva).

BHADRATANU. An immoral brahmin. On the advice of Danta he became a devotee of Viṣṇu and attained salvation. (Padma Purāṇa, Kriya, Chapter 17).

BHADRATUNGA. A sacred place; a dip in the holy waters of this place would entitle one to Brahmaloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 80).

BHADRAVAṬA. The abode of Pārvaṭi and Paramēśvara. The glory of it is described in Chapter 82, Vana Parva, M.B.

BHADRAYU. A king who was a devotee of Śiva. He was a leper and in his life he suffered much, even the pangs of death. His wife was the dutiful and good natured lady, Kāntimāti.

On the sixteenth birthday of Bhadrāyū Śiva appeared before him in the name of Rṣabha and blessed him after instructing him on the precepts of Rājadharmā. He further gave him a dagger and a conch as weapons and twelve thousand elephants. With the might of all these, Bhadrāyū became unconquerable.

One day, while Bhadrāyū was ruling the country, Śiva came in the guise of a tiger and carried away the wife of a brahmin. Bhadrāyū, a firm protector of his subjects gave his own wife to the brahmin and prepared himself to give up his life in fire. Śiva greatly pleased at this selfless act of Bhadrāyū befitting a true King appeared before him and blessed him and gave back the brahmin his wife.

Bhadrāyū in his previous birth was a King called Mandara and Kāntimāti in her previous birth was Piṅgalā, queen of Mandara. (Skanda Purāṇa, 3.3.12; 9.14).

BHAGA I.

1) General. One of the twelve Adīyas born as sons of Kaśyapa prajapati by his wife, Aditi. Viṣṇu, Śakra, Aryaman, Dhātā, Tvaṣṭā, Puṣa, Vivasvān, Savitā, Mitra, Varuṇa, Aiśu and Bhaga—these are the Dvādasāditīyas, and they were Devas famous as Tuṣṭas in the last Čakṣuṣāmanvantara.

2) Other information. (1) Bhaga married Siddhi, and the couple begot three sons called Mahīman, Vibhu and Prabhū and three daughters called Suvarātī, Varārōhī, and Aiśā.

(2) Bhaga participated in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 66).

(3) At the time of Khāṇḍavādāha (burning of the Khāṇḍava forest) Bhaga, as a supporter of Indra, who was fighting Arjuna and Śri Kṛṣṇa, sprang upon the enemies with sword in hand. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 236, Verse 36).

(4) Bhaga shines forth in Indra’s assembly. (M.B., Sābhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 22).

(5) Bhaga was also present at the installation of Subrahmanyā as commander of the fighting forces. (M.B., Sālya Parva, Chapter 45).

(6) After Devayugā (Dev age), the Devas assembled together and decided upon the share of vajñās due to each of them, and in thus fixing shares they left out Rudra. Enraged at this neglect Rudra made a bow and fought against the Devas. During the fight Rudra, with the point of his bow, extracted the hands of Savitā, the eyes of Bhaga and the teeth of Puṣa. Ultimately the Devas satisfied and pleased. Rudra, who returned to Bhaga and others the eyes etc. which had been extracted. (M.B., Saupati Parva).

BHAGA II. Certain Purāṇas refer to Bhaga as one of the eleven Rudras. But, this view is not universally accepted.
BHAGA III. A vedic god considered to be the lord of wealth, prowess and happiness. Bhaga is also one of the six Adityas mentioned in the Rgveda, viz. Bhaga, Mitra, Aryaman, Varuna, Daksha and Aina. (Rgveda, 2.27.)

BHAGADĀ. An attendant (woman) of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 26.)

BHAGADATTĀ. Bhagadatta was King of Prāgīyotisa-pura. Mahābhārata furnishes the following information about him.
1) Bhagadatta was born from a limb of the asura called Bhīskala. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 9.)
2) He was present at the wedding of Pāñcāli. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 12.)
3) Known also as lord of the Yavanās (Yavanādíha). Bhagadatta was a friend of Pāndu, and that friendship was transferred to Yuddhisṭhira too. (Śabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 14.)
4) The triumphal tour of Arjuna in connection with the Rājaśāya yajña performed by Yuddhisṭhira evoked feelings of jealousy in the heart of Bhagadatta, and he fought against Arjuna. The courage and prowess Arjuna exhibited in the great battle astonished Bhagadatta, who congratulated Arjuna on his supreme courage and defeating every foe. (Śabhā Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 7.)
5) Bhagadatta, along with the Yavanās was present at the Rājaśāya of Yuddhisṭhira. He also made presents of horses of very high pedigree and very costly gems etc. (Śabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 14.)
6) Karna once defeated Bhagadatta in fight. (Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Verse 5.)
7) In the great war he, with his army, fought on the side of Dvīryodhana. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 15.)
8) During the first day of the war Bhagadatta fought a duel with the King of Viśēta. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 49.)
9) He was defeated in his fight with Ghatotkaca. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 59.)
10) In the fight which took place after the above defeat Bhagadatta caused Bhimasena to fall in the field. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 13.)
11) And after that he defeated Ghatotkaca in fight. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 40.)
12) Next ensued the combat with King Daśārtha in which the King was defeated. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 48.)
13) It was not long after this that Bhagadatta cut off the hands of the Kṣatradeva. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 73.)
14) Viśoṣaka, the charioteer of Bhīma-sena, hit by the arrows of Bhagadatta fell down and fainted. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 76.)
15) Bhagadatta and Satyaki fought against each other. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 111, Verse 7.)
16) Chapters 113 and 114 of the Bhīṣma Parva describe the combats fought by Bhagadatta with Bhīmasena and Arjuna.
17) Bhagadatta and Drupada fought with each other. (Drona Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 40.)
18) Bhagadatta killed king Daśārtha. (Drona Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 38.)

19) Bhagadatta killed Ruciparvan. (Drona Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 52.)
20) He shot the Vaiśjāvāstra (arrow given by Viṣṇu) on Arjuna. (Drona Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 17.)
21) Arjuna killed Bhagadatta. (Drona Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 48.)
22) After his death, his son, Vajradatta became King of Prāgīyotisa. Arjuna killed Vajradatta also. (Āvāmedha Parva, Chapter 76.)
23) King Śailālaya, who was Bhagadatta's grandfather, attained Indraloka on account of the greatness of his tapas. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 10.)

BHAGANANDĀ. An attendant woman of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 11.)

BHAGAVADHIŚYĀNA PARVA. A sub-parva of Udyoga Parva. It comprises chapters 72-150 in Udyoga Parva.

BHĀGAVATA. One of the eighteen famous Purāṇas. Gāyatrī is the main theme of this Purāṇa and based on it it dwells on the greatness of Dharma (duty) and states about the dharmas of Śirasvata-kalpa. (Śc under Purāṇa.)

BHAGAVAD GĪṬĀ.
1) General. The Bhagavad Gītā is a poem consisting of 650 verses divided into eighteen chapters. The Gītā covers chapters 23-45 in the Bhīṣma Parva of the Mahābhārata, and it is in the form of a talk or discussion between Arjuna and Lord Kṛṣṇa. The mighty armies of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas were arrayed on opposite sides for mortal combat on the field of Kurukṣetra when Arjuna, overcome by grief at the prospect of fathers, brothers, preceptors, and other Kinsmen fighting and killing one another, expressed to his charioteer, Śrī Kṛṣṇa his aversion to fighting. But, the Lord pointed out to the unwilling Arjuna, by unique and various arguments, his imperative duty, under the circumstance, to fight and fight in heroic earnestness with the result that Arjuna shed his disinclination to fight and entered the fray, which ended in the ultimate victory of the Pāṇḍavas. And the dialogue between Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa, and especially the great teaching of Kṛṣṇa on the field form the theme of the Gītā. The Gītā contains three spheres or fields of teaching; the karma yoga (philosophy of action), jñāna yoga (philosophy of knowledge) and Bhaktiyoga (philosophy of devotion). The three yogas are treated each in six chapters. The theme of the Gītā is philosophy, and it is revered as one of the most sublime philosophical texts of the Hindu religion. Many a great thinker and philosopher like Ācārya Saṅkara, Rāmānujācārya and Madhavācārya have annotated, and written commentaries on the Gītā. There is a school of thought which believes that the Gītā was taught to Arjuna by Kṛṣṇa himself on the battle-field in something like tabloid form and that Vyāsa elaborated the mighty teaching in its present form. The poet, Bāṇa, who flourished in the 7th century A.D., and the great Saṅkara, who lived in the 8th century believed that the Gītā was sung by Kṛṣṇa himself. But there are some modern thinkers, who argue that the Gītā was composed some time between the third and fourth centuries B.C. and it was interpolated into the Mahābhārata in the second century A.D.

The Gītā has translations in all the languages of the world. The whole world has acclaimed it as a very weighty and valuable contribution in the sphere of philosophy.

2) Theme of the Gītā. Its form is mentioned above that the Gītā comprises 25-45 in the Bhīṣma Parva of the Mahābhārata. The subject-matter of each chapter of the Gītā is given below.

Chapter 25. Arjunaśīvadā yāga:—Both the armies take positions in Kurukṣetra. At the sound of the conches Arjuna becomes dejected and sorrowful at the prospect of killing relations, preceptors and Kinsmen.

Chapter 26. Śāmkhya yāga:—The greatness and majesty of the Śāmkhya and the Karak yogas.

Chapter 27. Karma yāga:—The need for action according to the Jñāna and the Karma yogas.

Chapter 35. Vīvarūpa-adāśanasan yāga:—Arjuna's prayer to be shown Viśvarūpa (cosmic form), description of Viśvarūpa by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Sañjaya, Śrī Kṛṣṇa revells Viśvarūpa to Arjuna; fear-stricken at the sight, Arjuna sings the praise of Kṛṣṇa.

Chapter 36. Bhaktiyoga:—The great benefits of worshipping God with form and without form.

Chapter 37. Kṣetra-kṣetrajñā Vībhāga yāga:—Description of Kṣetra-kṣetrajñā with Jñāna, and of Prakṛti and Puruṣa.

Chapter 38. Gopālayinbhāga yāga:—The greatness of Jñāna; world's origin from Prakṛti and Puruṣa, the three guṇas, sattva, rajas and tamas; means to attain god; marks of Yuga-tītapuruṣa.

Chapter 40. Dātāśāra sampadāvibhāga yāga:—Good actions, evil deeds, scientific actions and unscientific actions.

Chapter 41. Śradhā-kṛcchrayinbhāga yāga:—Descriptions of Scientific tapas, diet, yajñatapas and dāna. Interpretation of Om.

Chapter 42. Mokṣasanyāsa yāga:—Tyāgam, Śānkhyā theory, Vārpadharmas, jñānaisthā, Niśkāmakarmayoga with bhakti and the greatness of the Gītā. (For another story about the greatness of the Gītā see Duṣśāsana II).

BHAGAVATI. The words Bhagavān and Bhagavati mean Paramātman (universal self) and Prakṛti (Nature and its modifications) respectively. Prakṛti is also called by the name Sakti. The following elucidation once given by Mahāviśvān about Bhagavān and Bhagavati is greatly illuminating.

Time, space, atmosphere and the universe (Brahmādam) are, just like Paramātman, eternal. This is the truth and reality. Below this eternal Gokula exists Vaikuntha-loka, which also is, like the former, eternal. Just like this, Prakṛti, which is a sport to Brahma and is also without beginning or end (Sanātana) too is eternal. In the same manner as flame exists in fire inseparable from it, moonlight in moon, beauty in the lotus flower and brightness in the sun, so does nature exist in soul inseparable therefrom. In the same way as the goldsmith cannot make gold ornaments without gold and the potter cannot make pots without clay, the Paramātman will not in the least be able to function unaided by Prakṛti. Prakṛti (Nature, Devi) is all powerful. 'Para' becomes powerful enough to do everything when he joins the Devi.

The sound 'Sa' means welfare and good fortune, and the sound 'kṛ' means prowess. Hence 'Sakti' means the embodiment of welfare and prowess or she, who is the giver of welfare and prowess. Bhagavatī combines in herself knowledge, affluence, riches, fame and strength. As the Paramātman is always with and inseparable from such Bhagavatī he is called Bhagavān also. When Prakṛti and Paramātman remain combined it is called Parabrahama, which possesses neither form nor attributes. And, when Prakṛti and Puruṣa separate, of their own accord, they assume forms and attributes.

The above is Śaiva doctrine in a nutshell. The Vaiṣṇavas do not accept this position. They ask, 'How is it possible to have brightness or effulgence without there being an effulgent one?' Therefore, the Vaiṣṇavas believe in the existence, at the centre of an effulgent sphere, of a thing possessing the utmost effulgence and brightness equal to that of Brahma. This 'thing'—Deva—is very efficient and effective to remedy sorrows due to birth, death, disease etc. and to him the life-time of Brahma is just one minute only. This Deva is called Paramātman, Parabrahama and Kṛṣṇa by the Vaiṣṇavas. 'Kṛṣṇa' means maximum devotion (love) towards Paramātman, and 'na' means he who becomes slave to such devotion. Hence Kṛṣṇa means he who becomes a slave to the love of his devotees. There is another meaning also for the word Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa means all and 'na' means seed or root; and thus Kṛṣṇa means he, who is the root of everything. In the very beginning there was only this Kṛṣṇa; and this Lord, subject only to his own will and pleasure, divided himself into two, the left side becoming woman and the right side man. (Devi Bhāgavata, Navama Sandha).

BHAGINĪ. A word used in addressing women. Verse 129 in chapter two of the Manusmṛti lays down that the wife of another person and women who are not one's relatives should be addressed either as Bhavati, Subhage or Bhagini.

BHAGIRATHA.

2) Recluse. Many years had not lapsed after his coronation as King when, in the heart of Bhagiratha spiritual thoughts began to crop up. A great sage called Tritula was his guru. Once Bhagiratha asked the guru what was the means to get rid of worldly sorrows, and the guru replied as follows:—

The ego will be annihilated when the tendencies and cravings towards objects of the senses are absolutely suppressed and the whole and perfect truth is realised through knowledge, the practice of concentration etc. The ego will not disappear as long as one does not become one’s real self by completely overcoming the sense of pride, shame etc. which form the outer case of worldly life. The egoless state is the ultimate achievement and most supreme state. Oh! Bhagiratha! if you would get rid of sentiments like pride etc., give up all attachment to material objects, become fearless and gift away, with thoughts concentrated on the inner self, all your wealth to enemies, and then move among those enemies, without any sense of ego and pride about this material body, and take alms from them (enemies) and also give up me, who am your preceptor in the matter of knowledge; then you will become the most sublime Brahma. This advice of the guru affected him so much that Bhagiratha, holding his duties firmly in mind, engaged himself in spiritual practices, and after spending some time thus he performed, according to rules, the Agniṣṭoma yajña aimed at gifting away everything. All wealth like cows, land, horses, gold etc. were distributed in gifts to noble brahmins and the poor folk according to their eligibility for the same. Within three days he had gifted away everything except the clothes he was wearing. And, then he invited his neighbouring enemy king and gave to him, without the least hesitation, the kingdom which had been bereft of all wealth. The ministers and other citizens felt very sorry about the whole thing. But, Bhagiratha left the country at once for other places having with him only the clothes he was wearing. He spent his days in various places and forests where he was not known even by name. Ere long, Bhagiratha attained ultimate spiritual solace. And, then he accidentally came to his former kingdom, which was then being ruled by the enemy King. The ministers and other citizens to whose houses he went begging for alms recognised him, and with sorrow unbearable they appealed to him to accept the throne again and rule the country. Bhagiratha rejected their request, and, after staying there for some time, he started for other places. During this wandering of his he met his old preceptor, Tritula, and both of them, in company, toured for some time cities and forests. They felt it very painful to keep on to their body like that. They thought like this: ‘Why should the body be kept like this. What if this material object continues to exist or perishes? But let it (the body) continue as long as it exists without in any way being against the order of things and ethical practices’. And, in this frame of mind they traversed the forests. Now, the minister of a distant kingdom who was on the look out for a successor to the King who had died heirless, persuaded Bhagiratha to accept the Kingship of that country. The ministers of Bhagiratha’s former Kingdom also now requested him to resume his old kingship, especially since its new ruler had already expired. Bhagiratha obliged them, and became once again King of his own country. (Jñānaviṣṭham).

3) Bhagirathaprayatnam, (Himalayan or Herculean effort). Sagara, an old predecessor of Bhagiratha had two wives called Keśini and Sumati. Keśini had one son named Asamañjas and Sumati 60,000 sons. Sagara once conducted an Aśvamedha yajña in the Indo-Gangetic plane, when Indra stole away the sacrificial horse and kept it quite near to sage Kapila who was doing tapas in Pātāla. The 60,000 sons of Sagara set out in search of the horse and found it out in Pātāla. At the sight of the horse they shouted themselves hoarse. Enraged at this sage Kapila reduced those sons of Sagara to ashes in the fire which emanated from his eyes.

After entrusting Asamañjas with the duty of performing the funeral rites of his 60,000 sons Sagara expired. Asamañjas transferred that duty on to Añśumān, and he to Bhagiratha. Bhagiratha did penance on the seashore concentrating his mind on Gangadevi. The Devī appeared before Bhagiratha and asked him to choose what boon he would, and he requested the Devī to perform the funeral rites of 60,000 sons of Sagara remaining in the form of ashes in Pātāla. To this Gangadevi replied that the earth will not be able to withstand the impact of her powerful flow, but she shall, if Śiva permits, flow into his matted hair. And, Gangadevi asked Bhagiratha to first get that permission. This did not dishearten Bhagiratha, who went to mount Kailāsa to do penance so that Śiva might grant him his prayer. He thus did penance for 1000 years. Śiva appeared to him and agreed to receive the rushing flow of Gaṅga water on his matted head. And, accordingly Śiva stood in position to receive the rushing waters of Gaṅgā, and Gaṅgā flowed on to his head. Even the most powerful flow of Gaṅgā water on his head did not cause Śiva to move from his position even by a hair’s breadth. This awakened the conceit in Gangadevi, understanding which Śiva contained her on his head. Without finding any outlet the waters of river Gaṅgā flowed along the matted hairs of Śiva for thousand years. So, Bhagiratha had once again to please Śiva. Thus pleased again Śiva shook his matted head and one drop of water fell on the ground, and that is the river Ganges in North India. The Gaṅgā flowed along plane ground to Pātāla and performed the funeral rites of Sagara’s sons. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 106; Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kānda, Canto 42; Brahmapāṇḍa purāṇa, Chapter 97; Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha, Kampa Rāmāyaṇa (Tamil), Yuddha Kānda; Padma Purāṇa, Part 4, Chapter 21).

4) Other Information.
(1) Bhagiratha is a member of Yama’s assembly and serves him. (M.B., Sābhī Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 11).
(2) Śiva bestowed boons on him. (Vana Parva, Chapter 180, Verse 1).

*According to verse 12, Chapter 25, of Vana Parva, Bhagiratha is the son of Dīlīṇa. For next of the Turās refer to him a the son of Añśumān. that they were born as mortals in their next birth. (Kālikā Purāṇa 53)

The Purāṇas mention eight Bhairavas called Asitāṅga, Ruru, Candra, Krodha, Unmatta, Kapāli, Bhīṣṇa and Saṁhitā.

5) Shape. Bhairava has a terrible shape. He wears the crescent moon and plaited hair on his head. His weapons are, sword, arrow, dagger, bow, trident, rope and club. At times he is dressed in elephant-skin. He has five faces. Serpents are his ornaments. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapters 52-80).

BHAIRAVI. One of the eight Ambas. They are: Rudrācchā, Rudracandana, Naṭeṣvara, Mahālakṣmi, Siddhacacupindikā, Siddhayogeśvarī, Bhairavi and Rūpavīḍyā. All these are the eight different forms of Devi. (See the word DEVĪ).

BHAGIRATHA. The family of Bhagiratha included their king. They were called the Citraratha. Verses (Bhagiratha 51, 52).

BHAIRAVA. Described in the Bhagiratha Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 17. He was born up at the Sarapasatra performed by King Janamejaya.

BHAIRAVA II. A Pārśaṇḍa of Siva.

1) General. Immediately after his birth, this terrible monster subdued all the Devas without getting the permission of Siva. Enraged at it, Siva turned him into a tree by a curse. But Siva was soon pacified and lifted the curse by declaring that those who offered pūjā to the gods would get the full reward for their worship only if they offered pūjā to Bhairava also.

Bhairava became a tree as soon as he was cursed. He became a tree because he subdued the gods. Therefore that tree came to be called “DAMANAKA” tree (Damana = Subdue). It has another name, “TATIRI” tree. Even now, pious people offer pūjā to this tree. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapters 52-80).

2) Birth. Once Brahman and Viṣṇu became swallowed with pride. In his haughty way, Brahman insulted Siva. Under the insult, Siva was infuriated and out of the fire of his fury was born Bhairava with his black form. (Liṅga Purāṇa 1.90).

3) Brahmahatya. As soon as he was born, Bhairava rushed towards Brahman and pinched off his fifth head which had insulted Siva. By this, he incurred the sin of Brahmahatya. For the expiation of this sin, as ordered by Siva, Bhairava started on a journey to go abergiving, with Brahman’s severed head in his hand. Siva then created a woman named “Brahmahatya” and asked her to follow Bhairava.

Although Bhairava visited many holy places, he was not able to liberate himself from the sin of Brahmahatya. At last, at the suggestion of Siva, he went to Varanasi and washed off his sin. Brahman’s head which he carried, was also deposited there and the place became famous under the name of “Kapilāmocana tirtha”. (Siva Purāṇa, Satarudra Sāṁhitā).

4) Family. In Kālikā Purāṇa there is an elaborate account of the family of Bhairava. According to this Purāṇa, Viṣṇu, the reputed King of Varanasi was born in the family of Bhairava. Kālikā Purāṇa also says that Viṣṇu destroyed the Ḍāmanda city and set up the Kañcāḷava forest in its place. According to Kālikā Purāṇa, Bhairava and Viṣṇu were, in their previous births, two Śivapārśadas named Mahākāla and Bhṛgni. It was by the curse of Pārvatī.
BHALLĀTA(M). A place of habitation in ancient India. Bhīmasena conquered this land during his victory march. (Śloka 5, Chapter 30, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

BHĀLUKI I. A Rṣi, who was a member of Yuddhiṣṭhīra’s assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 15).

BHĀLUKI II. A mahaṇi. He also accompanied the Pāndavas to Dvaitavana. (Vana Parva, Chapter 27).

BHĀLUKI III. An acārya. He was a disciple of Lāṅgali, a member of the Śaṅkha line of disciples of Vyāsa. (Vāyu Purāṇa).

BHĀMĀ. A critic who lived in the sixth century A.D. He was one of the top critics in the Sanskrit language. His important work is ‘Kāvyālāṃkāra’. This is also called Bhāmahālāṃkāra by a few. There are six chapters in this. The first chapter deals with Kāvyāśārira, the second and third with Alāmākāra, the fourth with Kāvyādoṣa the fifth with Nāyā and the sixth with Sādāsuddhi. As against Daṇḍi Bhāmāya separates Kāthā from ‘Ākhāyākā’. According to him the requisites of a good Kāvyā are sweetness, pleasantsness and liveliness. Daṇḍi prescribes ten attributes for a good Kāvyā. Bhāmāya is of opinion that Vakrakoti is no alāmkāra at all. In a wider sense it is ‘atīṣayōkṭi’ (exaggeration). But Bhāmāya admits it has a place in Kāvyā.

BHĀMĪ. Wife of Avīkṣit, King of Vaisālī. The famous Maratta is the son born to this couple. The Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa states that Bhāmī once went to Nāgaloka to give refuge to the serpents there.

BHĀṆV. A river. Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmāna on their way to the forests from Citrākūṭa crossed this river, Bhāṅv. (Sarga 52, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyana).

BHĀṆDĀYANI. A mahaṇi. This sage sits in Devaloka and worships Indra. (Śloka 12, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

BHĀṆDĪRA(M). An ancient forest. It was in this forest situated in Ambādī that Śrī Kṛṣṇa with his cowherd chums conducted his childhood exploits. There was a huge tree of name Bhāṇḍīra in this forest and it was under this great tree that Kṛṣṇa and his friends met daily for their play. This forest is on the northern bank of Gaṅgā in front of Keshigāṭṭa in Vṛṇḍāvana. The Purāṇas proclaim that it was here that Brahma conducted the marriage of Kṛṣṇa with Rādhā. (Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva, Dākṣiṇātya Pātha, M.B.).

BHĀNGA. A serpent born in the Takṣaka dynasty. Bhāṅga was burnt to ashes at the Serpent Yajña performed by King Janamejaya. (M.B., Chapter 57, Verse 9).

BHANGAKĀRA II. A king of the Yadu dynasty. He attended the grand celebrations held at Mount Raivata. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 218, Verse 11).

BHĀNGĀSURI I. Another name of King Rūpapāṇa.

BHĀNGĀSVAN (BHĀNGĀSVANA). A king in ancient India. For the story of his transformation into a woman refer to para 42 under ‘Indra’.

BHĀṆU I. A son born to Kṛṣṇa of Satyabhāmā. (Daśāma Skandha, Bhāgavata).

BHĀṆU II. Son of Dvārakā; this Bhāṇu was a guru of Śūrya. (Śloka 42, Chapter 1, Adi Parva, M.B.).

BHĀṆU III. A devagandharva born to Kaśyapa praja-pati of his wife Prīthā. (Śloka 47, Chapter 65, Adi Parva, M.B.).

BHĀṆU IV. He is the son of an agni called Pāṇcajanya. He was born of the spiritual essence of Angiras and Cyavana. This Bhāṇu is called Manu and Bṛhadbhāṇu. (Chapters 220 and 221, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHĀṆU V. A king of ancient Bhārata. This king took a flying tour of Kurukṣetra in Indra’s acroplane to witness the battle between Ārjuna and Dronā. (Śloka 9, Chapter 56, Virāṭa Parva, M.B.).

BHĀṆU VI. A yādava. He learnt the art of archery from Pradyumna. Sahadeva married the daughter of this Bhāṇu called Bhāṇumati. (Vana Parva, 180, 27 and Harivānśa 2.20.12).

BHĀṆUDATTA. A brother of Śakuni. In the Mahābhārata battle he fought against Bhīma and died. (Śloka 24, Chapter 157, Drona Parva, M.B.).

BHĀṆUDEVA. A warrior of Pāṇcāla state. Kaṇa killed him in battle. (Śloka 15, Chapter 48, Kaṇa Parva).

BHĀṆUKOPA. A demon. He fought against Subrahmaṇya. (Asura Kṛṣṇa, Skanda Purāṇa).

BHĀṆUMĀNI. I. A king of the dynasty of Śrī Rāma. He was the father of a King called Sakraduyāna. (Navama Skanda, Bhāgavata).

BHĀṆUMĀN II. A son born to Kṛṣṇa of Satyabhāmā. (Daśāma Skandha, Bhāgavata).

BHĀṆUMĀN III. A prince of Kaliṅga. He fought on the side of the Kauravas and was killed by Bhīmaśena. (Chapter 54, Bhīma Parva, M.B.).

BHĀṆUMATĪ I. The daughter of Bhāṇu, a leader of the Yādavas. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa went with his retinue of Yādavas to visit the holy palace called Piṅḍāraka the Yādavas conducted a wine festival. During that festival a demon of the name Nūkumbha carried away Bhānumati. This was because of a curse to Bhānumati from Durvūsas whom bhānumati did not respect once when they met at the garden of Raivata. Durvūsas had after the curse consorted her by assuring her that she would be saved and married by Sahadeva, one of the Pāndavas. True to this, Bhānumati was married to Sahadeva in the presence of Nārada and Kṛṣṇa. (Viśṇu Parva, Chapter 90).

BHĀṆUMATĪ II. Daughter of Kṛtaśīvya. She was the wife of Aḥāṃyati, a king of the Pūru line of monarchs. They had a son named Śrīvābhaunma.

BHĀṆUMATĪ III. Daughter of Angiras. She was extraordinarily beautiful. (Śloka 3, Chapter 218, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHĀṆUSENA. A son of Kaṇa. He was killed in the battle by Bhīmaśena. (Śloka 27, Chapter 48, Kaṇa Parva, M.B.).

BHARADVĀJA I. Another name of Dirghatamas.

 Dirghatamas is also called Bhāradvāja. But the Bhāradvāja of purānic fame is not Dirghatamas. Dirghatamas is the son whom Bhṛguspati legitimately got of Māmata, his brother’s wife. There was then another legitimate child in the womb of Māmata. Knowing this the devas told her ‘Bhāradvāja’ meaning ‘bear the brunt of two’ and so the son of Bhṛguspati got the name of Bhāradvāja also. The real name of this son was Dirghatamas or Vitatha. Dirghatamas is not the Bhāradvāja who was the father of Drona. The famous Bhāradvāja was the son of Atri. Dirghatamas or Vitatha was the adopted son of Bharata, son of Dusyanta. (Bhāgavata and Kampaṟāmāyaṇa. For details see under Bharata I and Dirghatamas.) BHARADVĀJA II. The sage Bharadvaja of Purānic fame.

1) General information. Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa of Kampa Rāmāyaṇa states that this sage was the son of Atri Maharṣi. He lived for many thousands of years. He is connected with Vālmiki and the story of Śrī Rāma. Bharadvaja was for many years a disciple of Vālmiki. He was present with Vālmiki when the hunter killed one of the couple of Krauṣṇa. When Vālmiki and Bharadvaja reached the shores of the river, Tamasā, that day Vālmiki told Bharadvaja thus: “Look, Bharadvaja, what a clean ghat this is. The water is pure and clear. Place your water-jug here and give me my vālkala. We will get down here in this sacred water.”

Then Vālmiki taking the vālkala from the disciple walked along the shore admiring the beauty of the forest trees and found on his way the historic Krauṣṇa couple. (Sarga 2, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

2) Bharadvaja and the study of Vedas. Bharadvaja gave himself untiringly to the study of the Vedas. He obtained from Indra a boon to extend his term of life on earth to many thousands of years by different stages, each stage covering a span of a thousand years of life. All these years he devoted to an incessant study of the Vedas. Finding the term not sufficient for completing the study of the Vedas he appealed to Indra again for extension and Indra appearing in person took him before three mountains and giving him three handfuls of sand told him thus, “What you have studied about Vedas till this time is equivalent to the amount of sand I have now given and what is yet to be studied about the Vedas is as big as the three mountains before you”. Any other mortal being would have been disheartened by this revelation made by Indra, but not Bharadvaja. Undaunted he continued his studies. (Bhágavata).

3) Bharadvaja in the role of a magician. The āśrama of Bharadvaja was in Gitrākūṭa and Śrī Rāma and Laksmanā in the beginning of their exile went to his āśrama accepting his blessings. Bharata on his return from Kekaya knew about the exile of his brothers and hoping to bring them back to Ayodhyā went in search of them with a big retinue of soldiers and men. Keeping the retinue outside, Bharata went to the āśrama of Bharadvaja. The latter decided to give Bharata and his people a grand reception and calling Viśvākarma to his side asked him to arrange a royal banquet that night. Devas, Gandharvas, Apsaras, Āśitākṣikṣaḷas and all such people were invited for the night. Renowned dancers from devaloka like Gṛhitācī, Hemā, Viśvācī Mīrakācī and Alambuṣa appeared for entertainment. Even Vanavājī took part in the dance. Dishes of food came to the guests of their own accord. The night came to an end wonderfully and at daybreak everything vanished and all were amazed at the magic of the sage. (Sarga 91, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

4) Droṇa’s origin. Droṇa was the son born to Bharadvaja of the celestial woman, Gṛhitācī. (see under Droṇa).

5) How Bharadvaja died once but was born again. See under Arvāvaṣu.

6) The name Bharadvaja. This is how the connotation of the word is explained.

Bhare ca bhārāyāmavyājād
Bharadvajo’smī sōbhane
(protect even those who are not my sons, I protect my disciples, I protect devas and the brahmans. I protect my wife and all these I do with ease and so I am named Bharadvaja).

(Bhágavata)

7) Other details.

(1) Bharadvaja once gave refuge in his āśrama to Manoramā, daughter of the King of Kaliṅga and her son. (See under Manoramā).

(2) The sixth maṇḍala of Ṙgveda contains the songs of Bharadvaja.

(3) He was among the sages who once went to Dvārakā and cursed Samba. (See under Samba).

(4) Bharadvaja had a daughter Devavarāṇinī whom Viśravas married and got the son, Kuber. (see under Kuber).

(5) Once Bharadvaja was travelling through an uninhabited forest with his son when he became exhausted by hunger and he then begged of a śādra, Pṛthu, several cows. (Sūkta 107, Chapter I, Manusmṛti).

(6) This sage took part in a birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Sūkta 57, Chapter 122, Adi Parva, M.B.).

(7) Because of the blessing of Bharadvaja Bharata got a son named Bhūmānyu. (Sūkta 22, Chapter 94, Adi Parva, M.B.).

(8) Bharadvaja taught the secret of the missile Agnya to Agrivaṇa. (Sūkta 39, Chapter 129, Adi Parva, M.B.).

(9) He worshipped Brahmā sitting in the council of Brahmā. (Sūkta 22, Chapter 11, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

(10) This sage came to the battlefield during the Mahābhārata battle and requested Droṇa to lay down his missile. (Sūkta 35, Chapter 196, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

(11) Once Bṛṛgu Maharṣi asked him some questions on the creation of this universe and Bharadvaja gave him satisfactory answers. (Chapter 182, Śanti Parva, M.B.).

(12) This sage performed the sacrifice Putrakāṃṣṭi, and gave a son to Divodāsa. (Chapter 30, Anusāsana Parva, M.B.).

BHARADVĀJA III. The eldest son of the Agni, Śāmyu. (Sūkta 5, Chapter 219, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHARADVĀJA IV. A renowned sage. Bharata, a King of the Pūru line of kings, had no sons and as he was spending his days in sorrow Marutta gave Bharata this Bhārata as a son. Bharadvaja who was by birth a brahmin from then onwards became a Kṣatriya. (Matsya Purāṇa 49. 27-39 and Vaiyu Purāṇa 99. 152-158).

BHARADVĀJA V. A maharṣi born of the line of Arjīrās. He was the father of Yavakrīta and a friend of Raibhya, son of Viśvāmitra. Once Raibhya created a Kṛitya and that Kṛitya killed Bharadvaaj’s son Yavakrīta. Unable to bear the loss of his son Bharadvaja was preparing to give up his own life by jumping into the fire when Arvāvaṣu brought to life Yavakrīta and gave him to the sage. Immensely pleased at the regian of his son Bharadvaja ended his life on earth and went to heaven. (M.B., Vana Parva, 165-168).

BHARADVĀJA VI. A brahmarṣi who lived in the Purva-manvanta. He was living on the shore of Gaṅgā doing rigorous penance. One day desirous of conducting a special type of Yajña he went to bathe in the river along with other sages. There he saw the celestial beauty, Ghṛtāci, standing in all splendour after her bath. Bhāradaṇī had seminal emission and from that was born a daughter, Śrutavatī, to him. (Chapter 47, Sāya Parva, M.B.).

BHĀRADAṆĪ VII. A great scholar well-versed in all the Śastras. He is the author of ‘Dharmasāstra’ and ‘Śrutasāstra’. (The Viśvādīyālāya of Bombay keeps a handwritten copy of his work Śrutasāstra written in Pāṇdu script).

BHĀRADAṆĪ I. A Mahārṣi. It was he who convinced Dyumatsena, father of Satyāvān that he (Satyāvān) would be endowed with long life. (Vana Parva, Chapter 288, Verse 16).

BHĀRADAṆĪ II. The collective name of a particular sect of preceptors mentioned in the Upaniṣads. The Brahmārṇavaka Upaniṣad refers to this sect of preceptors as disciples of Bhāradaṇī, Pārāśarya, Valiṅka, Kauśika, Aitareya, Āṣāryaṇa and Baṅjavāpayaṇa.

BHĀRADAṆĪ III. A gramarian. According to the Rktantra, prātiśākhya of Sāmaveda, it was Brahmā, who first composed the science of grammar. This science was taught by Brahmu to others in the following order: Brahmā to Bhāspaci, he to Indra, Indra to Bhāradaṇī and he to his disciples. Pāṇini has discussed the grammatical concepts of Bhāradaṇī. Prātiśākhya and Taṅtiṭyāya have quoted the opinions of this gramarian.

BHĀRADAṆĪ(M). A place of habitation in ancient Bharata. (Śloka 68, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.).

BHĀRADAṆĪJATIRDHA. One of the five sacred places (bathing ghāts in sacred rivers). (See Varga).

BHĀRADAṆĪJ. A famous Indian river mentioned in the Purāṇas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 29).

BHĀRADAṆĪJPUTRA. A preceptor, who was a disciple of Pārāśariputra. In the Brahmārṇavakopanisad he is referred to in many contexts as Vātismādaviputra.

BHARANĪ. One of the twentyseven constellations. Puṣya is assured if one gives as gift a cow to a brahmin on that day. (Śloka 35, Chapter 64, Anuśasana Parva, M.B.).

BHARATA I. Son of Duṣyanta born of Śakuntalā.

2) Birth. Duṣyanta was once hunting in the forests when he hit a fawn with his arrow. The fawn fled to the Āśrama of Kanva Muni and the king followed it. On reaching the Āśrama grounds he saw Śakuntalā watering the plants helped by her companions Anasūya and Priyārvadā. Duṣyanta and Śakuntalā fell in love with each other at first sight. Kanva was absent from the Āśrama and they married according to the Gāndharva rites and Śakuntalā became pregnant soon. The king gave her his signet ring as a sign of faith and left for his palace. When Duṣyanta left her Śakuntalā fell into a deep reverie and she never knew about the arrival of the arrogant sage, Durvāsas to the Āśrama. Durvāsas mistook her as disrespectful and cursed her saying that she would be forgotten by the man of whom she was thinking then. Śakuntalā never knew about the curse also.

Kaṇva Muni when he returned to the Āśrama and knew everything, sent Śakuntalā to the palace of Duṣyanta. But Durvāsas never recognised her and when Śakuntalā was returning deeply grieved Menakā her mother, took her and left her in the Āśrama of Kaṅṣyapa. There Śakuntalā delivered a son. The boy grew brave and fearless and he could subdue even the wildest of animals around there. Kaṅṣyapa, therefore, named him Sarvadamanas.

Once when Duṣyanta was returning home after visiting Indra he saw Śakuntalā, recognised her, and took her and the boy to his palace. This was the boy who later on became known as Bharata. (Chapter 73, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

3) Marriage and reign. Bharata was a partial incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu. Even while he was young he became a ruler and conquering the world destroyed the wicked. Bharata had three wives. All the sons born to them were bad and so the mothers killed them all. Aggrieved over the loss of his sons he worshipped the devas to get a son for him. At that time the great preceptor Bhāspaci forcibly married Mamata the wife of his brother. Mamata was pregnant then and when she conceived from Bhāspaci also she bore two children. On delivery she threw the child of Bhāspaci in the forests and went away with the other son. The Devas took care of the discarded child and named him Bhāradaṇī and gave the child to Bharata. Bharata gave the boy the name Vītatha (Dirghatamas). Bharata ruled over his land for twentyseven thousand years and the land was, therefore, called Bharata. (Śloka 96, Chapter 2, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

After ruling the land ideally he left for the forests entrusting the land to his son, Vītatha. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgasvata).

Vītatha also was called Bharata and he had five sons: Suhota, Suhota, Gay, Garbha and Sukuṭu. (Chapter 278, Agni Purāṇa).

BHARATA II. Son of Daśaratha.

2) Birth. Daśaratha, King of Ayodhyā, had three wives: Kaushalyā, Kaikeyi and Sūmitrā. Kaushalyā gave birth to Śri Rāma, Kaikeyi to Bharata and Sūmitrā to Laksman and Satrughna. Kaikeyi, mother of Bharata, was the sister of Yudhajit, Rāja of Kekeya. Bharata was born on the day of Pāya. (Śloka 14, Sarga 18, Vāṃśika Rāmāyaṇa).

Daśaratha remained in sorrow without children for a very long time and then he performed a Putrakāmeṣṭi yāga (A sacrificial ceremony to get children) with the Maharṣi Rṣyaśṛṅga as the officiating priest. From the sacred fire arose a divine figure carrying a pot of pudding and it was after taking that pudding that the wives of Daśaratha became pregnant. (Sarga 15, Bālakāṇṭha, Vāṃśika Rāmāyaṇa).
3) Till the end of Śrī Rāma's forest life. The sons of Daśaratha married the daughters of Janaka, King of Mithilā. Śrī Rāma married Sītā, Bharata, Māṇḍavī, Lākṣmāṇa, Urmilā and Śatrughna, Srutakirti. Daśaratha made arrangements to crown Rāma as King and then leave for the forests and lead an ascetic life. At that time Bharata and Śatrughna were in the country of Kekaya with their uncle, Yudhajīt. When the day of coronation was drawing near Kaikēyī demanded of Daśaratha the execution of two boons which were once promised by Daśaratha to her long ago during a battle between the devas and asuras. One of them was to crown her son, Bharata, as king and the other to send Rāma to the forests for a period of fourteen years. Daśaratha was shocked to hear that. But, without any hesitation, Rāma and Lākṣmāṇa accompanied by Sītā went to the forests and Daśaratha overcame with immense grief caused by this unpleasant turn of events fell down dead. Messengers were sent then to Kekaya to bring Bharata and after traveling for three days Bharata and Śatrughna reached Ayodhya. Though they were not informed of the death of their father they were worried all the way because of the several bad omens which they saw. On entering Ayodhya they were shocked to find all the roads desolate and arriving at the palace they found it silent and gloomy. Kaikēyī then told him all that had happened and when Bharata knew that his mother was at the root of all this calamity his rage knew no bounds. Forgetting himself he drew from the sheath the glittering sword and stood before his mother, with the drawn sword wavering to strike or not to strike and musèd to himself "No, Not a woman and not one's own mother, No, it should not be done". Immediately after this was decided, he swung the sword straight to his throat. But adroitly Śatrughna intervened and swept away the sword before it fell at its aim. This strong move of Śatrughna brought Bharata to his senses and he looked at his mother so fiendishly that at his stare his mother turned pale like a flower brought near a burning flame. Bharata immediately changed into the dress of a Sannyāsī and started to go to the forests. Śatrughna followed his brother. Vasiṣṭha also started. The news spread like wildfire and people began to crowd at the palace eager to follow the brothers. Very soon a huge procession was seen moving towards the forests. Vasiṣṭha and Arundhati in a chariot in the front, Kausalyā and Sumitrā in another next to it and Bharata and Śatrughna closely following the chariots, walking. People joined the procession from behind. The great crowd of people reached the banks of the river Gaṅgā. Guha coming to know of the great exiles of people from Ayodhya through spies went and saw Bharata, at first in disguise, and later as himself made his acquaintance. He then took Bharata and Śatrughna across the river to the presence of Śrī Rāma at Citarakūṭa. When they reached Citarakūṭa only Bharata-Śatrughna, Vasiṣṭha and Arundhati, Kausalyā and Sumitrā entered the Āśrama of Śrī Rāma, all the others remaining outside. When Rāma and Lākṣmāṇa were told about the death of their father they were filled with grief. All the sons, then, Vasiṣṭha officiating, performed the obsequies of their father. Rāma and Bharata then discussed the future. Śrī Rāma persisted in his vow and said he would return to his country only after fourteen years and insisted that Bharata should rule the country during that period. Bharata accepted the arrangement saying that if his brother did not come back after fourteen years he would give up his life by jumping into the fire. Śrī Rāma then gave his sandals to Bhārata who accepting the same with due respect returned home followed by others. On reaching Ayodhya Bhārata did not go to the royal palace which he considered as empty because of the absence of his brother, Rāma and abhorrent because of the presence of his mother, Kaikēyī. Instead, he went to a nearby village called Nandi and installing the sandals there lived there and ruled the country.

4) Return of Śrī Rāma. Śrī Rāma when he came back to Ayodhya after fourteen years was crowned King. Bharata got two sons of his wife Māṇḍavī, Subāhu and Śrīrasa. While they were thus living happily in Ayodhya, message was sent through an ascetic by Yudhajīt from Kekaya that some gandharvas were creating trouble in that country. It was the state of Sindhu in Kekaya which was subjected to this molestation and on the advice of Rāma Bharata went and subdued the trouble, killing the gandharvas. He then created two small states on either side of Sindhu and made his two sons the Kings of those states. When Śrī Rāma gave up his life in Sarayū river and rose to heaven as Viṣṇu Bharata and Śatrughna also gave up their lives and took the forms of the conch and the wheel which adorn the hands of Viṣṇu.

BHARATA III. A son of Rṣabha.

Emperor Priyavrata partitioned his empire to his eight children. Agnīdhra got Jambudvīpa. Agnīdhra had nine sons: Nābhī, Kimpuruṣa, Harivarṣa, Īlvarṣa, Ramya, Hiraṇyan, Kuru Bhadrāya and Ketumāla. On the death of the father Jambudvīpa was divided into nine states and Nābhī got the land called Hima, Nābhī married Merudevi and got a son, Ṛṣabha. Ṛṣabha had a hundred sons and Bharata was the eldest. (Chapter 1, Ātriṣam 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

2) Marriage, administration and entry into Āśrama life. Bharata took over the administration of the kingdom on the death of his father, Ṛṣabha. He married Paīcajanī daughter of Viśvarūpa. They had five sons, Sumati, Rāṭrābrīṭ, Sūdrasana, Avarana and Dhūmraketu. The Paṇḍavam Skanda of Bhāgavata contains a statement to the effect that India got the name Bhārata from this king. (It is worthwhile remembering at this juncture a previous statement that the name Bhārata was obtained from Bharata, son of Dusyant.), Bharata like his forefather was very erudite and affectionate and always respected his duties. He always meditated on Brahmā and in his heart there shone the Parama-puruṣa in the figure of Viṣṇudeva adorned with Śrivatsa, Kauśāmbī, Vaṇamālī, Śrīśrī, Cakra, Gādā and Padma. He ruled the country for a crore of years and after that dividing the country among his sons went to the Āśrama of Pulaha Mahārṣi to spend the rest of his life there. On the rocks lying in the river flowing in front of the Āśrama were the marks of Cakra on one side and Nābhī on the other and the river therefore came to be known as Cakranābha. Bathing in this river and doing pūjā Bharata lived there oblivious of the world outside. (Pañcama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

3) Bharata and the deer. Bharata led a purely ascetic life performing everyday the rites laid down by scriptures and muttering the mystic formula of Brahmā-kṣara. One day a thirsty pregnant deer went to drink water in a nearby pond. As it was drinking it heard the loud roar of a lion nearby. Frightened the poor animal without even waiting to quench its thirst ran into the forest and on its way delivered a child and the deer-babe fell into the river. The deer exhausted and tormented by fear ran into a cave and fell down dead.

Bharata happened to see the new-born deer floating on the river and took it to his āśrama. From then onwards Bharata’s mind was diverted from the spiritual to the mundane effort of taking care of the young deer. The deer followed him wherever he went and if it did not turn up in time in the evening after grazing Bharata went about in search of it weeping. Ycars went by and Bharata became old and died with the name of the deer on his lips. (Pañcama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

4) Rebirths of Bharata. Because he died with the thought of the deer in his mind he was reborn as a deer. The deer was aware of his previous birth and regretted that he spent the life of a man for the sake of a deer. The deer, therefore, left the house of his mother in the mountain of Kālañjara and went to the āśrama of Pulaha. The pious animal daily bathed in the river and died there on the bank of that river. So in its next life the deer was born as the son of a brahmin in the line of Aṅgiras. That brahmin had two wives and got nine sons of his first wife and one of the second. The son born to the second wife was none other than Bharata. In due course the brahmin died and his second wife jumped into the funeral pyre and ended her life. Thrown an orphan Bharata became a puppet in the hands of his brothers. Bharata was asked to look after the cattle and fields of his brothers for his living. With great forbearance Bharata did all he was told.

One day Bharata was keeping watch over the fields of his brothers. It was midnight. In the neighbourhood the Čandālas were making merry over the birth of a child to one of the women. Some of them were bringing a man bound by ropes to be given ‘Narabali’ to the goddess Kāli. (Narabali is the offering of a human being with his head cut off to propitiate a deity). On the way the man escaped and the disappointed Čandālas were roaming about in search of a substitute when they came across Bharata keeping watch over the fields. Immediately he was bound by ropes and taken before the idol of Kāli. The effulgence of the brahmin astounded Kāli and getting angry for bringing such a pious brahmin for sacrifice she devoured the Čandālas and allowed the brahmin to go free.

Escaping from there Bharata reached a village walking all the way. That village was being ruled over by a king called Rahūgana and that king was going to see Bhagavān Kapiḷa Mahārṣi along the banks of the river Iksumati in a palanquin. The palanquin had not enough bearers and so the brahmin was asked to join the team of bearers. As they were moving the palanquin shook because of the wrong steps kept by Bharata. The king reproached Bharata and Bharata then gave the king fitting replies based on the ethics of Vedānta. The thundering of Bharata greatly impressed the king and he stepped down from the palanquin and bowed to Bharata.

Bharata went from there to the forests singing devotional songs in praise of Viṣṇu and at last attained salvation. (Pañcama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

BHARATA IV. A sage and the famous author of Nātya-śāstra. He was a critic who lived around the year 400 B.C. His book on Nātya-śāstra (Histrionics) is world famous. Kālidāsa in the second act of his drama, Vikramorvaśīya states that this Bharata used to coach the devas in the art of acting. Nātya-śāstra is a book comprising thirty-seven chapters dealing with the art of dance and music. He has written in detail about the four Alarākāras, Upamā, Dīpaka, Rūpaka and Yamaka and also about the ten requisites of a Kāvyā. He has not forgotten to write about the defects and demerits of Kāvyā also. Commentaries on Nātya-śāstra have been written by lions in the profession: Mitragupta, Harṣavardhana, Śaṅkuka, Udbhata, Bhajaṇāyaka and Abhinavagupta. Of these ‘Abhinavabhārāti’ the commentary written by Abhinavagupta is the only one freely available now.

BHARATA V. The Mahābhārata speaks about a few other Bharatas who were sons of Agni. Samyu is a son of Agni known as Bharata. This Bharata has got another name, Urjā. (Ślokā 6, Chapter 219, Vana Parva, M.B.). There is an Agni of name Bharata with a son named Bharata. When this Agni is propitiated one gets healthy and strong and so this Agni is called Puṣṭimān also. (Ślokā 7, Chapter 219, Vana Parva, M.B.). There is another Bharata son of an Agni called Adbhuta. It is this Agni that burns dead bodies. As this Agni lives permanently in Agniṣṭoma Yājñaś it gets the name of Niyata also. (Ślokā 6, Chapter 222, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHARATA (MAHĀBHĀRATA). An epic written by Vyāsa.

1) General information. The Mahābhārata is an epic. Bharata is acclaimed as the first emperor of Bharata. The theme of this great epic is the fight between the two lines of princes belonging to the dynasty of Bharata. That is why the book is called Mahābhārata. The great size of the volume and the greatness of the wisdom contained therein have contributed much to its getting the name, Mahābhārata. Once the devas put the Mahābhārata in one pan of a balance and the Vedas in the other pan. Then the devas were convinced that the Mahābhārata weighed more than all the Vedas put together. (Ślokas 269-271, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva, M.B.).* This book contains over a lakh of verses. There is no subject on earth which is not dealt with in the Mahābhārata. None of the world's epics is so big as Mahābhārata. In size the Mahābhārata is double that of Homer's Iliad and Odyssey put together. The following poem about it is worth mentioning now:

Yathā samudro bhagavan
Yathā ca himāvan giriḥ
Khyātāvābhau ratanānidiḥ
Tathā bhāratamucyate //

Mahābhārata is not a mere epic. It is a whole literature in itself containing a philosophy which has been an unfolding and perennial source of spiritual strength to the people of India. Above all it has for its core the Gītā which is perhaps the noblest of scriptures. The Mahābhārata comprises eighteen books, each book being called a Parva. There are 2109 chapters in it, the chapters differing in size. Besides, there is an annexe called Harivaṇaḥ which deals with the life and history of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

2) Contents. The contents of each Parva are succinctly given below: The Parvas are so named as to give a hint of their central theme.

(1) Ādi Parva. (Ādi = beginning). Pāṇḍu and Dhṛtarāṣtra, king of the Candra dynasty, are brothers. Bhiṣma brought them up. Dhṛtarāṣtra was born blind and he got a hundred children of his wife Gāṇḍhāri. They were the Kauravas. Pāṇḍu had two wives Kunti and Mādrī and got of them five sons called the Pāṇḍavas headed by the eldest Yudhiṣṭhira.

(2) Sabhā Parva (Sabhā = court). The Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas lived together in the court at Hastināpura. There, the Kauravas entered into a game of dice with Yudhiṣṭhira and through the deceitful tactics engineered by the keen-witted Sakuni, Yudhiṣṭhira was defeated and he lost everything he possessed. The Pāṇḍavas were then compelled to go into exile to the forests for twelve years and spend another year after that incognito. If they were found out during that period of incognito they were to go into exile for another term of twelve years. The Pāṇḍavas accompanied by Pāṇḍālī left for the forest.

(3) Vana Parva (Vana = forest). This is one of the longest of Parvas and describes the life of the Pāṇḍavas in the forest Kāṁyaka. The well known stories 'Nala Carita' and 'Kīrātārjuniya' are told in this Parva.

(4) Virāṭa Parva. (Virāṭa = name of a King). The Pāṇḍavas after completing their term of exile in the forests spent the year of their life in incognito at the court of King Virāṭa. Many wonderful events took place during their stay there and this Parva deals in detail about them.

(5) Bhiṣma Parva (Bhiṣma = The first generalissimo of the Kauravas). The great Mahābhārata war was fought in the vast expanse of Kurukṣetra lying to the northwest of Delhi. Bhiṣma was the first generalissimo of the Kauravas and Dhṛṣṭadyumna of the Pāṇḍavas. Vyāsa describes the events of the battle classifying it according to the generalissimos of the Kaurava army giving the four generalissimos a Parva each. Bhiṣma fought for ten days and was struck down on the tenth day by an arrow from Arjuna.

(6) Droṇa Parva (Droṇa = The second Generalissimo). When Bhiṣma fell Droṇa took charge as the supreme commander. This Parva deals with the fight under his command. Droṇa was killed in the end by Dhṛṣṭadyumna.

(7) Karṇa Parva. (Karṇa = The third generalissimo). This Parva deals with the war under the command of Karṇa. Karṇa fell in the end at the hands of Arjuna.

(8) Śaśya Parva. (Śaśya = The fourth and last of the Generalissimos). When Karṇa fell Śaśya took over charge of the Kaurava army. As the war was coming to an end most of the big warriors of the Kaurava army were killed. In the end Bhiṣma and Duryodhana met in a grim fight with maces in which Duryodhana was killed. This Parva deals with the final stage of the battle.

(10) Saṃśiva Parva. (Saṃśiva = pertaining to sleep). This Parva tells us the tragic story of how Kṛṣṇa, Kṛtavarmā and Śaśvatthāma who were the three left with Duryodhana after the great battle went into the camp of the Pāṇḍavas at night and killed all the brave warriors of the Pāṇḍava army, excepting the Pāṇḍavas, who were sleeping in their camp unaware of the foul play lying ahead.

(11) Śrī Parva. (Śrī = woman). This Parva deals with the great lamentation in the battlefield, after the war, of Gāṇḍhāri and other women.

(12) Śaṃśi Parva. Yudhiṣṭhira was crowned king and even at that time Bhiṣma was lying on his bed of arrows awaiting death. Before taking up his duties of the state Yudhiṣṭhira went to where the grandsire lay dying and took his blessing and instruction in dharma. This instruction of Bhiṣmaśīrṣa to King Yudhiṣṭhira of the three dharmas, Rājadharmā, Apaddharma and Mokṣa-dharma is the famous Śaṃśi Parva.

(13) Anuśādana Parva. (Anuśādana = Instruction). Bhiṣma still on his death-bed continues his instructions on several topics, like duty, freedom and fasting, giving entertaining stories to illustrate the essence of his teaching. This Parva is devoted to this.

(14) Āśvamedha Parva. (Āśvamedha = yāga conducted by emperors). This Parva deals with the yāga conducted by Yudhiṣṭhira when he became the emperor of Bhārata.

(15) Āśramaśīkha Parva. (Āśramaśīkha = life in a hermitage). Dhṛtarāṣtra, the blind and his wife Gāṇḍhāri accompanied by Kunti left for the forests and lived there for two years in a hermitage. One day the forest caught fire and the three without trying to escape sat on the ground facing eastwards in yoga posture and calmly gave up themselves to the flames. This is dealt with in this Parva.

(16) Maṇusala Parva. (Maṇusala = Mace). This Parva gives the story of how the Yādavas fought against each other with maces and were destroyed and how Dvārakā sank down into the ocean. It describes the death of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma also.

(17) Maṇḍapavatī Parva. (Maṇḍapavatī = Death). Dharma putra entrusts his kingdom to his successor and along with his four brothers and wife Pāṇḍālī sets out on a long journey to Mahāmeru never to return. This journey to death is detailed in this Parva.

(18) Vaṃśgaṇha Parva. (Vaṃśgaṇha = Heaven). This Parva describes the entry of the Pāṇḍavas and their relatives into Vaṃśgaṇha, heaven.

3) Mode of Narration. Most of the verses in the Mahābhārata are in the Anuśūp metre. At certain places other metres also have been used. There are prose pieces also in it. There are twenty notable pieces, three in Ādi Parva, seven in Vana Parva, seven in Śaṃśi Parva and three in Anuśāsana Parva. All the pieces are statements by realised souls. The style of the poetry is simple and the method of presentation lively. At times the imagination of the poet extends up to the horizon.
Though there is a flow of spiritualism throughout the matter is purely mundane.

4) Authorship. Bhagavān Vyāsa is believed to be the author of Mahābhārata. He was a contemporary of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas. Many of the events of the Mahābhārata were personally witnessed by Vyāsa. He took three years to write this book. The following ślokas will support the above:

Kururāja kulaṣṭhānāṁ
Dṛṣṭāṁ vṛttataṁ ca yatṣḥitam /
Tatsarvam bhagavāṁ Vyāso
Varṇayāmāsa Bhāratae. //
(Padmā purāṇa)

Tribhivarṣaṁiḥ sodothāyī
Kṛṣṇadvipaśyaṁ muniḥ /
Mahābhāratamākhyānāṁ
Kṛtvānādattamuttamam. //
(Slokā 55, Chapter 62, Ādi Parva).

The Varāha Purāṇa states that Vyāsa composed the Mahābhārata at a period when the end of Dvāpara yuga merged with the dawn of the Kaliyuga. The Bhāgavata states that Śrī Kṛṣṇa passed away on the first day of Kaliyuga. The Bhāgavata is devoted to admire and praise the life of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. This book also is written by Vyāsa. This śloka found in the first Chapter of Ādi Parva clears the doubt:

Vāsudevasya māḥāmyāṁ
Pāṇḍavāṁcā ca satyataṁ /
Durvṛttāṁ Dhārtaṁbhārāpāṁ
Uktavān Bhagavānvi. //
(The original name of the Bhārata which Vyāsa composed was 'Jaya'. In the first Chapter of Ādi Parva is this śloka to support this statement:

Nārāyaṇāṁ namaskṛtya
Nāraṁ caiva nārottamaṁ/
Deviṁ Sarasvatīṁ caiva
Tato Jayamudrāyati//)

After the death of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas the disciples of Vyāsa, Sumantu, Jaimini, Paila, Sūka and Vaiśampāyana gave this book great publicity. They wrote books based on this story of Bhārata of which only the 'Bhārata' of Vaiśampāyana and the Aṣvamedha Parva of Jaimini are now available.

Vyāsa's Bhārata was first expounded by Vaiśampāyana at the Sarpa-satra of Janamejaya. At the request of Janamejaya, Vaiśampāyana added some more facts to the original work known then as 'Jaya'. Jaya with the accretions came to be known as Bhāratasamhiṭṭā. Śūta who narrated this story to Saunaka and others at the forest of Naimiśa added some more matter to the Bhāratasamhiṭṭā and made it larger. The present
Mahābhārata is this expanded edition.

The following facts prove that the Mahabhārata has thus passed through three stages of evolution:

1) This book is known by three names: Jaya, Bhāratasamhiṭṭā and Mahābhārata.4

2) There is a reference to the three parts of the book in Śloka 66, Chapter 1 of Ādi Parva.2

3) There are three different opinions regarding the total number of ślokas in the Mahābhārata. According to Ugrāravas there are 8800 verses, according to Vyāsa 2400 verses and according to another statement a lakh of verses.3

4) The narration appears to be of three different kinds, descriptive, philosophical and oratorical, indicative of three different authorships.

5) Śūta and Vaiśampāyana have made accretions to the original work 'Jaya' of Vyāsa.

Viewed with these facts we are led to believe that Vyāsa has composed only the very essence of Mahābhārata comprising 8800 ślokas and that work was known as 'Jaya' as referred to in the first invocatory verse of the epic. Vaiśampāyana added a few verses of his own and brought the number to 24,000 and gave the book the name of 'Bhāratasamhiṭṭā'. It was Śūta who made many more additions and made the book so big as to fetch it the name of 'Mahābhārata'. The epic which is now current among us contains a lakh of verses and it took perhaps centuries to get this transformation of the book from 'Jaya' to 'Mahābhārata'.

6) Period of publication. The Kali Varṣa starts from 3102 B.C. The great Mahābhārata war was fought at a period when the end of Dvāpara yuga merged into the dawn of Kali yuga as could be gathered from the following verse from the epic:

Antare caiva samprāpte
Kalidvāparayorabhut /
Samanapāncake yuddhaṁ
Kurupāṇḍavāsenaṁ. //
(Sloka 13, Chapter 2, Ādi Parva).

So it can be deduced that the great war was fought round about 3102 B.C. Dhṛtarāṣṭra lived for eighteen years after the great battle and the Pāṇḍavas ruled the country for 36 years. (Śrī Parva, M.B.). It was when Śrī Kṛṣṇa died that the Pāṇḍavas ended their rule and commenced the Mahāprasthāna. So it can be surmised that Śrī Kṛṣṇa lived for 36 years after the war.

(Ādi Parva, Chapter 1).
Sri Kṛṣṇa died on the first day of Kali yuga, 3102 B.C. Therefore it is clear the Mahābhārata battle was fought in 3138 B.C. There are indications in other purāṇas to support this theory. There was that rare phenomenon of a Saptatragraha yoga (Combination in astronomical position of seven planets) while King Parīkṣit, son of Arjuna, was ruling the country. This happened in a month of Māgha (January) and a probe into the dates of such previous occurrences revealed that a similar one had happened in the month of Māgha in the years 3177 and 477 B.C. (The next one is to happen in 2223 A.D.). This phenomenon repeats itself in every hundred years and so it is to be believed that one of the kind happened in 3077 B.C. precisely during the period of Parīkṣit. It is therefore confirmatory to the statement that the great war occurred in 3138 B.C.

The Pāṇḍavas ruled the country for 36 years after the war and Vyāsa wrote this divine epic after the death of the Pāṇḍavas. Vyāsa took three years to complete his work. Therefore, it can be well concluded that Vyāsa wrote the epic in 3100 B.C. The Pāṇḍavas commenced their Mahāprāsthāna after entrusting the administration of the state into the hands of Parīkṣit. This must have happened in 3102 B.C. Parīkṣit ruled the country for 60 years and so his son Janamejaya became King in 3042 B.C. It was after two years of his becoming King that he conducted the Sarpaśatra and it was at this Sarpaśatra that Vaśampāyana first expounded ‘Jaya’ (Mahābhārata) to the sages assembled there.

This fixing of the date of Mahābhārata is based on the conclusions arrived at by the pandits of Bhārata, but foreign chronologists differ from us. They argue that it was in the 10th century B.C. that the Mahābhārata battle took place on the strength of the following:

The theme of the Mahābhārata is a fight between Kurus and Pāṇḍavas. After the war the two join and there is a statement in the Yajurveda of a people formed by the merger of the two. Therefore the great war should have happened in the 10th century B.C. It was a period of hero-worship and songs on the heroic deeds of the Kurus and Pāṇḍavas were sung and handed over from one generation to the other and gradually those songs took shape in the form of the Mahābhārata.

There is another school of thought. In the Mahābhārata, Brahmā is given great prominence. But in Vedic times Brahmā was not counted at all. During the golden period of the Buddhists Brahmā had a conspicuous hold on Hinduism. Therefore it should be deduced that the Mahābhārata was written during the 6th century B.C. Then there were about 8,000 verses in the Mahābhārata.

Towards the second stage of Mahābhārata the epic grew in size bringing into its fold about 24,000 ślokas. It was at this stage that the Mahābhārata got a vaisaṃvīte colour and Śri Kṛṣṇa was adored as an incarnation of Viṣṇu. Megasthenes who visited India in 300 B.C. records that the majority of Hindus were vaisaṃvītes at that period. There are references in certain parts of the Mahābhārata to Greeks and Buddhists. Therefore a set of foreign chronologists conclude that those portions of the Mahābhārata could have been written only after Buddha and after the attack on Bhārata by the Greeks i.e. by 300 B.C.

The third stage of the Mahābhārata is its present form and it was at this stage that it included new philosophy in it. The Dharmasāṁhitā of Manusūtra became popular in the fifth century A.D. and therefore the third stage of the Mahābhārata must have started before that, in the 3rd century A.D.

BHĀRATA II. (Bhāratavarṣa. India).

The purāṇas describe the Earth to be constituted of seven continents: Jambudvīpa, Maṅkalavās, Śalimalavīpa, Kuśadvīpa, Kṛta, Kṛṣṇadvīpa and Puskaradvīpa. Of these India is Jambudvīpa.

The Bhāratavarṣa was constituted of nine islands at that time in the following positions: In the centre was Ilāvṛta and to the east was Bhadravāra. To the south-east was Hiraṇyaka and to the south was Bhārata. To the southwest was Hari and to the west was Kaṭumāla. To the north-west was Camba and to the north was Kuruvāra. Beautiful Kītāpurūṣa varṣa stood to the north-east of Ilāvṛta. There was neither the passage of time nor the fear of ageing or death in any of these continents excepting Bhāratavarṣa.

This Bhāratavarṣa itself is a group of nine islands each separated from the other by oceans and thus made not easily accessible between each other. Indradvīpa, Kaśerumāṇ, Tāmraparṇa, Gāhastimāṇ, Nāgadvīpa, Kaṭāla, Sīnhalā and Vārūṇa are the eight others and the ninth is this island of Bhāratavarṣa. This island is called Kumāra also. On the eastern boundary of this island live Kītāra, on the western side, Yavanas, on the southern boundary Andhras and on the northern Turuṣkas. In the Centre live the Brāhmīns, Kṣatriyas, Vaśīyas and Śūdras. The eight sacred mountains of this place are Mahendhra, Malaya, Sahya, Śuktimāṇ, Rkṣaparvata, Vindhya and Pārīyātra. There are several other mountains also in Madhyaparadeśa. They are: Kolāhala, Vaibhṛīja, Manḍara, Durdhāra, Vātadhumā, Vaidyuta, Maināka, Sarasa, Ūṇga-prastha, Nāgagiri, Govardhana, Ujjayanta, Puspagiri, Arbuda, Raivataka, Rṣyamūtika, Gomanta, Clītrakūṭa, Kṛṣnamatra, Śrīparvata and Kōṅkana. This place is inhabited by Aryas and Mlecchas. The rivers which they use for drinking water are the following: Sarasvatī, Pañcarūpā, Kālindī, Hiraṇyavatī, Satadru, Candrikā, Nīla, Vitastā, Īravatī, Kuṇu, Madhubhī, Hārāvī, Uśīrī, Dhātaki, Rasā, Gomati, Dhūtapāpā, Bahudhā, Drṣadvatī, Nisvarā, Gāndakī, Citrī, Kāuśikī, Vadhūśara, Sarayū and Lohitya. All these rivers originate from the base of Himavān. Those originating from Pārīyātra are: Vedāśmitṛ, Vedasavani, Viṛrgrāhni, Sindhu, Parpaśā, Nandini, Pāvani, Mahī, Śara, Carmanvati, Lāpī, Vīdhīṣa, Venevatī, Citrī and Oghavatī. Those flowing down from the Rkṣaparvata are: Soṇa (alias Mahānāda, Narmadā, Surasā, Kṛṣṇa, Manjākā, Daśārṇa, Clītrakūṭa, Devikī, Citrotpūla, Tamasā, Kara-toṣa, Piśācikā, Pippalāśreṣṭa, Vipāṣa, Vanijñalavati, Satsaṅṭa, Śuktimān, Cakrī, Tridīvā, Vaiṣvāvānī). From the base of Vindhyā flow down the following rivers: Sīvā, Payoṣi, Nirvindhyā, Tāpī, Veṇā, Niṣadhāvati, Vattarantar, Śīnibhū, Kumudvatī, Toya, Reva, Mahāgaurī, Durggāya and Antaṣṭhīva. Those originating from the base of Sāhya are the following great rivers: Godāvāri, Bhamarathī, Kṛṣṇā, Veṇāyā, Saridvati, Viṣamādrī, Suprayogā, Vāhīya, Kāverī, Dugdhdhā, Nalīni, Vārīsenā, and Kalhasanā. Those arising from Suktimān are the following: Krātmaḷā, Tāmravārni, Vanijjula, Upalāvatī, Śuni and Sudāmā. All these rivers are very sacred and are considered to be abode of saviors, mothers of the universe and wives of oceans. There are bad rivers also besides these.

The Madhyapradēsa comprises the following states: Matsya, Kuṣūdrā, Kuḍālā, Pānčāla, Kosala, Vṛka, Śaka, Barbara, Kaurava, Kālinī, Vaṅga, Śīva and Marmakā. The states lying to the north are the following: Abhirā, Sāthiyadhanaka, Bāhīka, Vattadhana, Abhirā, Kālatoyoḍa, Aparāṇa, Śādā, Pahlava, Kheṭaκa, Gandhāra, Yavana, Sīndhu, Sauvira, Bhadraka, Sātadrava, Lalīthīa, Pārāvata, Māśika, Māṭhara, Urukaḍhāra, Kekaya, Dāmīśha, Kāmbhoja, Darada, Argha, Lokīka, Veṇī, Tūṣāra, Bāhīya, Todara, Atreyā, Bhāradvāja, Prathallā, Daśacerak, Labakama, Tāvākārāma, Cūḍika, Tāṁgaṇa, Alasa, Alīḥadhra, Kīrīta, Tāṁsasa, Mahāsamgāra, Supārśva, Ganaka, Kuḷūṭa, Kūrīka, Ķūrma, Uṃnapāḍa, Kukkūta, Māṇḍāyava and Pāṇīdva. Those lying to the east are the following: Śīva, Vaṅga, Madgurava, Antargīri, Bahirgīri, Pravangī, Vāṃgeya, Māṭhāda, Baladantika, Brahmottara, Prāvijaya, Bhāρgava, Anīgeya, Māṭraka, Prājyotīsa, Vṛṣadddha, Vīdeha, Maila, Vīmālā, Tāmralīptaka, Magadhā and Āṇanda. The states lying to the south are the following: Ṛṣḍṭra, Keralā, Kolā, Kūlyā, Jānuka, Mūśikāda, Kumārāda, Mahāśaka, Mahārāṣṭra, Māṭhika, Kālinī, Ādīra, Vaiśīka, Āratīra, Šabara, Pulinda, Vīṃḍhyāsaḷēya, Vīdarbhā, Daṇḍaka, Paurīka, Śārīka, Āṣmaṇa, Bhogavadhana, Naimika, Kuntala, Āṇdrā, Uddhīda and Nalakāraka. The western states are: Sūṛppāṛaka, Vāḍīḥdīna, Durgā, Cālīkaṇa, Pulīya, Sunīla, Tāṁsasa, Tāpasa, Kārakara, Bhūmi, Nāśikāṇa, Sunārmadda, Dārūkaccha, Śumāheya, Śārasvata, Vāṭsīya, Surāṣṭra, Avantya and Ārbudra. The following states lie adjacent to Vīndhya: Kūraṇa, Ekalavya, Mekala, Utikala, Utamaraṇa, Daśārṇa, Gopī, Kekarava, Tosala, Kosala, Traipura, Kekīliṣa, Turaga, Tumbara, Vahela, Nīṣadha, Anūpa, Tuṇḍikera, Vīṭhotra and Avanti.

There are a few more states which lie attached to mountains: Niṛāra, Mahāsamgāra, Kupatha, Tāṁgaṇa, Khaśa, Katha, Prāvarana, Āṭāṇa, Apāḷaśa, Suhūhuka, Trigarta, Kīrīta, Tomara, Sasīkha and Adrika. (Chapter 13, Vāmana Purāṇa).

BHĀRATASAMHĪTĀ. Another title of the Mahābhārata.

(See Bhārata 1).

BHĀRATI. A famous river mentioned in the Purāṇas. It is stated in Verse 25, Chapter 222 of the Vana Parva that Agni (fire) originated in this river.

BHĀRATI. Daughter of the Agni called Bhārata. (Śloka 9, Chapter 219, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHĀRAVĪ. A Sanskrit poet who flourished in the 6th century A.D. He is the author of the mahākavya called Kirātarjunīya. Raghuvarsha, Kumāravamsa, Kirātarjunīya, Śūṣṭapādavaha and Naisadha are the five...

bhārtrhari

rākṣasa bade farewell to his disciple and departed leaving his body behind. Vidyāsāgara then got down from the tree and performed the obsequies of his guru. Vidyāsāgara while he was learning used to note down the instructions of the guru on the leaves of the banyan tree. It had come to a huge bundle on completion. Taking the bundle along with him Vidyāsāgara left for his country. By the time he left the forest area the power of the mantra faded and Vidyāsāgara began to feel the pangs of hunger and thirst. By dusk he reached Kāliyā and there he came to the door of a dancing girl named Mandākīnī. The door was locked as the owner was away in a Śiva temple nearby. Exhausted by the journey, hungry and thirsty, Vidyāsāgara lay down on the doorstep and soon fell asleep with the leaf-bundle as a pillow. Mandākīnī when she returned from the temple at about ten at night saw a brahmin sleeping on the doorstep, tired and exhausted. She soon asked her servants to get him inside and sent for a doctor. By the clever treatment of the doctor and the expert nursing of Mandākīnī, Vidyāsāgara survived. When he was fit for travel he started to go but Mandākīnī objected and requested him to marry her. Vidyāsāgara did not agree to it and she took him to the King and told him all that had happened. Finding Vidyāsāgara to be one with great erudition and good manners he decided that Vidyāsāgara should marry his daughter (a Āśīrvariya), daughter of his minister (a brahmin), daughter of Kulāpati (a vaisya), and also Mandākīnī (a Sudra). There was an injunction in those days that a brahmin should marry a Sudra only after having married from all the higher castes. The decision of the king surmounted this difficulty for Vidyāsāgara to marry the Sudra girl, Mandākīnī. Marriages were all conducted in order. The king's daughter bore the name Kalāvatī, the minister's Mālati and Kulāpati's Sumānagali. Each delivered a son. The brahmin boy was named Vararuci, the Āśīrvariya boy, Vikramāditya, the Vaśya boy, Bhātī and the Sudra boy, Bhātrhari.

2) Kingship. When the King of Kaliyā became old he gave the kingdom to Vidyāsāgara and when Vidyāsāgara died all his other sons made Bhātrhari the King. Bhātrhari gave his father on his death-bed a promise that he would see that no sons were born to him. So though Bhātrhari married three wives he was careful enough not to produce any children by them.

3) Bhātrhari becomes a sannyāsi. Bhātrhari was living happily with his wife when one day a yogi of divine disposition came to his house and giving him a ripe mango said: "If you eat this mango you will never become old. It is because you are perfect in education and fortune should live long for the benefit of the people that I am giving you this." So saying he gave the mango and left the place. When the sannyāsi left him Bhātrhari thought thus: "After some years my wife would become old and die. What is the use of my remaining alive after she is gone. So this mango should be given to her. Let her live long." He, therefore, gave the mango to his wife explaining to her the greatness of the fruit. That wife whom poor Bhātrhari accepted to be very loving and chaste had a lover. He was none other than the horse-groom of her husband and that prostitute thought thus: "Of what use is my life when my lover is dead? Let him live for ever." So thinking she sent for her lover and giving him the mango explained to him the greatness of the thing. But the horse-groom was well devoted to his wife and desiring that his wife should remain young always he gave it to her. The groom's wife was a servant-maid of the palace and it was at the time of her departure from the palace after her day's work that she was given the mango by the horse-groom and so she carried it home in her hand. Bhātrhari who was returning from somewhere to the palace saw the woman carrying the mango and questioned her and knew how she got it. On coming to the palace she sent for the horse-groom and though at first the horse-groom tried to shield the queen, he was compelled to tell the truth in the end. The truth pained him much. "Phew! It was this wretched and unfaithful woman whom I was believing to be so chaste and loving. Woman can never be believed. Look, she has fallen in love with an ugly-looking servant of mine and unless he was her lover she would not have given this mango to him. It is better that this matter is not pursued any further now. We will decide about the future course of action later."

Thinking thus, he sent away the horse-groom and went to his bed-chamber and lay there immersed in thoughts. The horse-groom immediately informed the queen of everything that took place and the queen felt sorry that her secret had come to light. She knew that besides the punishment that her lover would get her name would also be blackened and so decided to kill her husband before the affair became public. At once she made an oṭṭaṭa (flat bread made of wheat or rice) with poison in it and bringing it to the bed-room told her husband thus with much pretended affection. "It will take some time for your lunch to be ready. Let not you lie with an empty stomach. Eat this now." So saying she placed the bread in the hands of Bhātrhari and left the room. Bhātrhari suspected foul play and mused. "This bread has been prepared by her with poison to kill me. It is better to give up living with her. There is no doubt about it. Of the four Āśramas the fourth, Sannyāsa, is the best. It is pleasant and sorrowless. Therefore gradually Āśrama should be accepted." Thinking thus he came out from his room with the bread and placed it hidden somewhere in the lower end of the roof of the house remarking "Oṭṭappam Viṭṭhececutum (The oṭṭaṭa will burn the house). Then taking an earthen bowl for begging he left the house unnoticed by any. The moment Bhātrhari left the house the house caught fire and everything in it was burnt to ashes.

Bhātrhari renouncing all and changing himself into the robes of a sannyāsi went about living by begging. After some time he decided that he would never beg but would eat only that which others gave him voluntarily. He had by that time reached a big temple in south India where in one of the entrances to the temple, the east one, was sitting the famous sannyāsi Paṭṭanatt Pillayar. Bhātrhari, therefore, went and sat at the western entrance with his bowl before him. Whatever food fell into the bowl was eaten by him. Sometimes for days together he went without food. But he never was sick or felt weak.

1. There is a belief that if a son is born to a Sudra who was himself born of a brahmin the brahmin father would go to hell.

2. This temple is believed to be the Chidānabarāna Temple.
One day a beggar went to the eastern gate and asked Paṭṭanatt Pillayār for alms. Pillayār said, "I am also a beggar like you. I have nothing in my hand to give you. But there is a man sitting in the western gate. He is a rich man and he may give you something." The beggar went to Bhartrhari and asked for alms. Bhartrhari also expressed his helplessness in the matter. But then the beggar said, "The man sitting at the opposite entrance told me that you were a rich man." Bhartrhari smiled. He knew then why Paṭṭanatt Pillayār said so. A man who has renounced everything need not keep even a bowl to beg. The bowl was a luxury and a sign of wealth. Bhartrhari threw away the bowl and remained at the temple entrance till the end of his life. It was while sitting there that he wrote his famous poems.

4) His well-known works are: (1) The Niti Sataka (2) The Śrīpaṭā Sataka (3) The Vairāgya Sataka and (4) The Subhāṣītās.

BHARTRSTHĀNA (M). A very holy place in ancient India. It is said that even those who merely visited this place would get the benefit of performing an Ātavamedha yajña. The place got its importance because Lord Subrahmapya lived there. (Śloka 76, Chapter 84, Vana Parva, M.B.)

BHĀRU. A daughter of Daḵṣaprājāpati. The prajāpati, at one stage begot sixty girls of Vairini and gave them to Kaśyapa, who distributed them among several Devas. Bhāru was the woman so given to the Viśvavedatās. (Hari Vaiṣṇa, Chapter 3).

BHĀRUKA. A king of the Solar dynasty. He was the son of Sudeva and father of Bāhuca. (Nāvama Kanda, Bhāgavata).

BHĀRUKAṆṢA (M). A village of ancient India. Śūdras lived there. At that time of the Raṇāṣyā of Dharmaputra these Śūdras brought gifts to the King. (Chapter 51, Sabhā Parva).

BHĀRUNDĀ. A particular kind of bird found in the Kingdom called Uttrakuruvarṣa. These birds carry in their strong beak corpses to their caves and eat them. (Bhīṣmaparva, Chapter 7, Verse 12).

BHĀRΥ. Wife. Bhīṣma points out the sanctified importance of BhārΥ (wife) as follows:—
Without her even the palace will prove itself to be just a forest. She will be a great support (to the husband) in the matter of dharma (duty) artha (wealth) and Kāma (enjoyment of material comforts). (These three precede the ultimate state of Mokṣa (salvation) and the wife will be a great support in fulfilling the conditions during the first three stages.) While on tour in foreign places she will remain faithful to him and instil confidence in him. BhārΥ is great wealth to man. In his forlorn life on earth the wife is of great help to man. To him, who is suffering from diseases and is otherwise in distress there is no remedy (medicine) like a good wife. There is no relative like a wife. In the matter of practising dharma there is no other support to match the wife. If one has no good wife to take care of domestic affairs one will be driven to the forest; the home will be like a forest. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 144).

BHĀṢA. A very prominent dramatist in Sanskrit. As Bāṇa and Kālidāsa have noticed him in their works, it may safely be assumed that Bhāsa lived in an earlier period. Since Pratīmā nāṭaka and Abhiṣeka nāṭaka, which are universally admitted to have been composed by Bhāsa, depend for their themes on the Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, it is clear that Bhāsa lived after Vālmiki. Kālidāsa’s period has not yet been fixed beyond doubt. It is almost settled that Bāṇa lived sometime between the sixth and seventh centuries A.D. Prof. Keith has been of the view that Vālmiki lived before the 4th century B.C. In the light of all such factors it could be presumed that Bhāsa lived in the period between the 4th century B.C. and 6th century A.D.

Though Bhāsa has so many glories to his credit he does not fully match Kālidāsa, and this might have been the reason why Indians did almost forget Bhāsa with the advent of Kālidāsa on the literary arena.

We are not in a position to name with unerring definiteness the works of Bhāsa. The general belief is that he has written nearly twenty three dramas. In 1922, Pandit Gaṇapati Śāstri unearthed from various sources thirteen dramas of Bhāsa. Three out of them, viz. Pratīmāyaugandharāyaṇa, Svapnavāsavadatta and Avīmāraka owe their themes to the Bhṛkathā, while Pratīmā nāṭaka and Abhiṣeka nāṭaka have Rāmāyaṇa as their basic inspiration. Out of the eight remaining dramas six, viz. Madhyama vāyūya, Paṇcarātra, Dūtavākya, Dūtaghaṭotkacā, Karṇabhāra and Urubhaṅgā owe their themes to the Mahābhārata, while the last two dramas, Bālacarita and Ācāruttā are dependent for their themes on anecdotes about Śrī Kṛṣṇa and on yāka stories.

Though Dr. Gaṇapati Śāstri has strongly contended that all the above thirteen dramas were written by Bhāsa himself, his view has not yet received universal acceptance. Whatever that be, it is an admitted fact that Svapnavāsavadatta is by far the best among the thirteen dramas. It is a continuation of the story of Pratīmāyaugandharāyaṇa. The wedding of King Udayana and Vāsavadattā is the subject matter of Svapnavāsavadda.

With his killing of the Rākṣasa ‘Avi’ the Sauvīra king comes to be known as Avimāra, and Avimāra’s falling in love with Kuralī, daughter of Kuntībhōja forms the theme of the drama, Avimāraka. In Pratīmā nāṭaka is told the story narrated in Rāmāyaṇa from Ayodhyā-kāṇḍa to Paṭṭābhiśeka. Abhiṣeka nāṭaka codifies the stories in the Kīkṣindhā Kāṇḍa and Sundara Kāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa and describes the coronations of Sugrīva and of Śrī Rāma. Though the characters in Paṇcarātra are borrowed from Mahābhārata the story is entirely Bhāsa’s. Madhyama vāyūya, Dūtavākya, Dūtaghaṭotkacā, Karṇabhāra and Urubhaṅgā are one act plays. These five plays have as their basis some of the anecdotes in the Mahābhārata. In Ācāruttā is treated the love story of Ācāruttā and Vasantasena.

Indisputable evidence is still lacking to credit Bhāsa with the authorship of all the thirteen plays referred to above.

BHĀSAS. (See Bhāsi).

BHĀSĀKARNA. A military captain of Rāvaṇa. Hanumān killed him in fight. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa 46, 47).

BHĀŚI. Daughter of Tāmrā, Daḵṣa’s daughter. Kaśyapa prajāpati married the following daughters of Daḵṣa: Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kālikā, Tāmrā, Krodhavāśa, Manu and Anala. Tāmrā had five daughters, viz. Krauni, Bhāsi, Śyenī, Dhṛtarāṣṭri and Śukī. And, the sons of Bhāsi are the Deva sect called the Bhāsas. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Āraṇya Kāṇḍa, Canto 14).
BHĀSKARA. One of the Dvādaśādityas born of Kaśyapa prajāpati and Aditi. (Anuśāsana I arva, Verse 150).

BHĀSKARĀCAYA. A master astronomer of ancient India. It was he who declared, much earlier than western experts, that the earth is round in shape.

BHĀSKARI. An old mahārṣi of India. He accompanied the Rṣis who visited Bhūma on his bed of arrows. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 12).

BHĀSMA. (Sacred ash). To know a story about the greatness of Bhāsma see under the word Durjaya.

BHĀSMAŚURA. A demon. There is no mention about this demon in any of the Sanskrit purāṇas but Śivalilāmārta in Marāṭhi contains the following story about him. Bhāsmaśura was born of the Bhasma dust (ashes) on the body of Śiva. Pleased at the great devotion of the demon towards him Śiva asked him to name any boon he wanted. Bhāsmaśura said that he wanted the power to burn to ashes anybody on whose head he placed his hand. Bhāsmaśura became arrogant with the boon and he became a nightmare to the whole world. Then Mahāviṣṇu appeared before him in the form of Mohini, an attractive dancer and alluring him by her charm started on a dance called Muktaṇṭya. During the course of this dance Bhāsmaśura was forced to place his hand on his own head and the moment his hand touched his head he was burnt to ashes.

BHĀSVARA. One of the two attendants presented by Śūrya to Subrahmanya; the other was named Subhrajā. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 31).

BHĀṬTANĀRĀYANA. A sanskrit poet who flourished near about A.D. 700. Veṇusāhāra, a drama in six acts is the only composition of his found out, yet. He is also known by another name, Mrgarājālakṣma. Certain scholars opine that he might have lived before Bāṇa and after Vāmana.

BHĀṬṬANĀYAKA. A literary critic who flourished in the 10th century A.D. in India. He composed a critical study on the science of dance (Nāṭya) named Hṛdayadarpaṇa based on the Nāṭya śāstra of Bharata. But, the book has not been found out, yet. Contesting the dhvanīvāda (the rhetorical theory that in poetry suggested or implied meaning is superior to the explicit meaning) of Anandavardhanācārya, he established the rasavāda (that sentiment is supreme in poetry). Abhinavagupta also has supported the rasavāda. Hence, it may be inferred that Bhāṭṭanāyaka lived in the period after Anandavardhana and anterior to Abhinavagupta. Bhāṭṭanāyaka’s theory is that Abhidhā, Bhāvakatvāna and Bhojakatvāna should be the three excellences of good poetry.

BHĀṬTI. A sanskrit poet who lived in the 7th century A.D. His most important composition is the Mahākāvya, Rāvaṇavadha, which has become very popular and famous by the name Bhāṭtiḍāvya. This mahākāvya deals with the story of Rāma’s life in its twentytwo Kāṇḍas (canto). The kāvya is believed to have been composed at Valabhi in obedience to the request of King Śrīdharaśena.

BHĀUMA I. The fourteenth Manu. In the time of this Manu, the person called Suci will be Indra. Under his control there will be five groups of Devas. These groups are called Cākaṇas, Pavitras, Kānṭhas, Bhājikas and Vāpavṛddhas. The Saptasīs (seven sages) of that Manvantara are Agnihōu, Suci, Sukra, Māgadha, Agni, Yukta and Jita. At that time, the sons of Manu who will be protecting the earth will be Uru, ganiḥbhirabuddhi and other Kings. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 3rd Part, Chapter 2).

BHĀUMA II. Another name of Narakāśura. (See the word Narakāśura).

BHĀUTYA. See the word Manvantara.

BHĀVA I. One of the eleven Rudras. He was son of Śīthaṇu and grandson of Bṛha. (Chapter 66, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

BHĀVA II. A sānśāna Viśvadeva. (Chapter 60, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

BHĀVA III. One of the sons born to Kaśyapa of Sura-bhī.

BHĀVA (M). I. A famous forest mentioned in the Purāṇas. Bhāva was near the Veṇumanda mountain, which was close to Dvārakā. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

BHĀVA. One of the twelve Devas born to Bhṛgūvāraṇu Rṣi of his wife Divyā.

BHĀVAVHŪTI. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 7th century A.D. His important works are the three dramas, Mālati-mādhava, Mahāvīracarita and Uttararāmācarita. Bhāvavhūti was a brahmin of the Kaśyapa-gotra. He was the son of one Nilakaṇṭha and one Jātukarṇī. He was a great devotee of Śiva and he got his name Bhāvavhūti later because of this. His original name was Nilakaṇṭha. Bhāvavhūti was born in Padmapura in the state of Vidarbha. But Bhāvavhūti spent most of his life in the palace of Yasodharmā, king of Kannauj.

Bhāvavhūti’s first drama is believed to be Mahāvīracarita. There are seven acts in this. The theme is based on the story of Śrī Rāma. But there are some variations from the original Rāmāyaṇa in this drama. Bhāvavhūti states that even at the time of the svayāmvara of Sūl, Rāvaṇa was a suitor. There is an opinion among certain critics that Bhāvavhūti did write only up to the 46th verse in the fourth act and the rest was written by another poet named Subrahmanya.

Mālatimādhava is a drama of ten acts. It is a love-story of Mālati and Mādhava. Mālati was the daughter of the minister of Ujjayinī and Mādhava was the son of the minister of Vidarbha. It was while Mādhava was having his education in Ujjayinī that he came to love Mālati. It was Kāṇḍakā who was a classmate of both the ministers and who became a sannyāsī later who pulls the strings of this love story. The king of Ujjayinī wanted Mālati to marry Nandana, a friend of his. But Mālati did not love him. Yet afraid of getting the displeasure of the king, Mālati’s father decided to give her in marriage to Nandana. In despair Mādhava was about to commit suicide when from the temple nearby Mādhava heard an agonised weeping. He rushed to the site of the sound and found to his bewilderment the gruesome sight of Mālati being dragged for sacrifice by a sorceress named Kapālakūṇḍalī helped by her guru Aghoraghaṇṭa. Mādhava killed Aghoraghaṇṭa and saved Mālati. Disappointed Kapālakūṇḍalī swore that she would seek revenge on Mādhava and disappeared. Mālati went back to her palace. At this time Madayantikā, sister of Nandana and Mākaranda, a friend of Mādhava became lovers. Once Madayantikā was attacked by a tiger in a Śiva temple and Mākaranda saved her from the wild beast, and they became lovers thereafter. The proposal to give Mālāti in marriage to Nandana was still pending then. The marriage day was fixed and a day before that by a clever ruse played by the keen-witted Kāmanṭakī Mālāti and Mādhava eloped together. Makaranda, friend of Mādhava, was disguise and dressed in bridal robes and Nandana little suspecting the trick played on him married the substitute. Before they went to the bridal chamber for the night Nandana’s sister came to see her new sister-in-law and the moment she put her eyes on her she understood what it was and that night they also eloped. Thus poor Nandana was left alone.

Kapālakundalā by her sorcery separated Mālāti from Mādhava but luckily Saudāmini a disciple of Kāmanṭakī saved her from Kapālakundalā. Later Mālāti married Mādhava with the permission of the King. This is the story of Mālāti-Mādhava.

Uttararāmacarita is a play of seven acts. The theme is the story of Rāma after his return to Ayodhyā after the exile. It begins with the renouncement of Sītā by Rāma and ends with the vanishing of Sītā.

All these three dramas used to be enacted during the festival of ‘Kālapriyaanātha’ at Ujjayinī. The predominant emotion in Mahāvīrācarita is ‘Vira’, in Mahā-Mādhava, ‘Srīgāra’ and in Uttararāmacarita ‘Karunā’. In expressing and elaborating the emotion of ‘Karunā’ Bhavabhūti excels Kālidāsa. The one draw-back which keeps him second to Kālidāsa is his lack of humour and wit. The sanskrit poet Dhanapāla in his book ‘Tilaka-nāmā’i’ speaks about Bhavabhūti thus:

Spaṭabhāvārāsa citrāi
Padanyāsa pravartitā
Naṭakeṣu naṭāstriva
Bhārati Bhavabhūtinā

BHAVADĀ. A follower of Skandadeva. (Chapter 45, Sālya Parva).

HĀVANMANYU. A king of Pāruvaṇāśa. He had five
B sons: Brhatkṣatra, Nara, Garga, Mahāvīrya and Jaya.
(Chapter 19, Anśa 4, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

BHĀVANIKĀ. A companion of princess Mrgaṇīkāvatī.
(See Śrīdatta).

BHAVATI. The word prescribed by Manu to be used while addressing women. Not all women should be addressed like that. All women who are not your relatives and the wives of others should be addressed using any one of the following words: Bhavati, Subhagē or Bhaginī.

Parapatnī tu yā sṛti syād asambadāhā ca yonitaḥ /
Tāṁ brūyād bhavatīteyeva
Subhage bhaginīti ca //
(Manusmrīti, Chapter 2).

BHĀVAYAVYA. A muni, whose glories are sung in the Rgveda. He married Ramaśā, daughter of Bhṛhaspati. Once she approached her husband with the request for coinage, and the husband laughed at her. (Rgveda, Mandala 19, Anuvāka 19, Sūkta 127).

BHĀVINI. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā: (Sālya Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 11).

BHĀVIṢYA PURĀṆA. This purāṇa contains the instructions given by the god Śūrya to Manu. There are about fourteen thousand books in this purāṇa and they deal with almost all subjects on earth including such important ones like, Śrṣṭi (creation), Kālamāṇa (time), Garbhādhāna (conception), Godīna (gift of cows), Aṣṭamādharmas (utensils of a hermit) Linga Śāstra (science of sex), Viṣeṣakīśa (treatment of poisoning) and Ayurveda (Medical science). (Chapter 272, Agni Purāṇa).

BHĀVĪṢYARĀMAYA. A. The part after Uttararāmayaṇa. Uttararāmaṇya states about bhavīṣyaramayana being sung by Kuśa and Lava in the presence of Śrī Rāma.

BHĀVUKA. A king of the solar dynasty. He was the son of Raviya and father of Cakrodhata. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

BHĀVYA I. A son of Dhrūva. He got of his wife Śambhu two sons, Siṣṭ and Bhayya. (Chapter 13, Anśa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

BHĀVYA II. A clan of devas in Raivatamanvantara.
Parimiti, Priyaniśāya, Mati, Mana, Vicitasa, Vīṣṇya, Suyaya and Syoda are some of the prominent devas of the clan. (Brahmanda Purāṇa, 2:36, 71-72).

BHĀVYA III. One of the Saptarṣis (seven sacred saints) of Dakṣaśavarnī Manvantara.

BHAYA. A demoness, sister of Kāla who presides over the land of death. She was married to Heći, son of Brahmat and brother of Praheti. Vidyutkeśa was her son and he married Sālakaṇṭakā, daughter of Sandhyā. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

BHAYA (M). Hīṅsā is the wife of Adharma. They got a son named Anṛta and a daughter named Nīkrī. From them were born Bhaya, Nara, Māyā and Vedanā. Of these Māyā produced Mṛtyu, destroyer of matter. Vedanā got of her husband Raurava son named Duḥkhā. From Mṛtyu were born Vyādhī, Jārā, Soka, Trṣṇā and Krodha. (Chapter 20, Agni Purāṇa). Another version about the birth of Bhaya is found in Śloka 54, Chapter 66 of Ādi Parva, M.B. Adharma married Nīrītī and to them were born Bhaya, Mahābhaya and Mṛtyu, three sons of demonic disposition. These three sons led a sinful life.

BHAYANKARA I. A prince of the country of Sauvīra. He was a dependant of Jayadratha. He was this Bhayānkarā who followed Jayadratha with his flag when he was trying to kidnap Pāñcālī. Arjuna killed him. (Chapter 265 and 271, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHAYANKARA II. A sanātana Viśvedeva. (Chapter 91, Anuśāsan Parva, M.B.).

BHAYANKARI. A follower of Subrahmanyā. (Śloka 4, Chapter 46, Sālya Parva, M.B.).

BHEDI. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 13).

BHELA. A disciple of Punarvasu Ātreyā who was an Ayurveda ācārya. He was a contemporary of Agniveśa and has composed a work on Ayurveda, entitled ‘Bhelā-samhitā’.

BHIERSVTĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā.
(M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 26).

BHIMA. Bhūmasena, one of the five Pāṇḍavas.1
1) Genealogy. (See genealogy of Arjuna).
2) Birth and childhood. King Vītarāvyra of Candra vaṇāśa (lunar dynasty) had two sons called Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu. The Kauravas (Duryodhana etc.) were sons born to Dhṛtarāṣṭra of his wife Gandhārī, and the a brief description of Bhima is given under the captions Dharmaputra, Arjuna, Nakula, Sahadeva and Pāñcālī only Pândavas were the sons of Páṇḍu and his wives Kunti and Mādri. Dharmaputra, Bhíma and Arjuna were the sons of Kunti, and Nakula and Sahadeva of Mādri.1 Kunti directed a mantra gifted to her by Durvásas towards Vaýubagavān (the wind-god) and the result was the birth of Bhíma. Hence he is called Vaýu-putra (son of the wind-god). At the time of his birth a celestial voice announced that the boy would grow up to be the strongest among the strong. (Adi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 14). On the tenth day after birth the child Bhíma fell from his mother’s lap on a rock. Bhíma was not injured in any manner by that fall, although it crushed the rock into power. (This story is told in the southern texts of the Mahabharata in Chapter 132 of Adi Parva). The naming ceremony of the child was performed by the Maharṣis, who stayed at Sataśrūgā. Kaśyapa Mahārṣi, family priest of Vasudeva performed the ceremonies like wearing of the sacred thread. Bhíma learned fighting with the gāḍā (club or mace) from Súka, the famous Rājārṣi.

The Kauravas and the Pândavas spent their childhood in Hastinápurá. Droṇācārya taught them fighting with weapons. The Kauravas and the Pándavas often engaged themselves in children’s games. In all such games Bhíma used to hurt and defeat the Kauravas, and to this fact the unending hatred of the Kauravas towards Bhíma owed its origin. Once they administered poison to Bhíma who fell down unconscious, and then they threw him into the depths of the Gaṅgā (Ganges). Going deeper and deeper in the waters Bhíma, at last, reached the Nágaloka, where the nágas (serpents) bit him which neutralized the effects of the poison in his body. There he got acquainted with a nágá called Āryaka, who introduced him to Vásuki, king of the nágas, and Vásuki presented him with much wealth and other costly gems. But, what use was all this wealth to Bhíma? Then Vásuki agreed to give him a divine drink, which would give the user of it the strength of thousand elephants. Bhíma drank at one draught eight pot-fulls of that divine drink, and thus became tremendously strong. But, he had to wait in Nágaloka for eight days so that the drink might be thoroughly assimilated, and on the ninth day the nágas saw him off in all pomp and splendour. Bhíma returned to his mother and brothers and consoled them, who were terribly anxious at his absence.

When the training of the princes in the use of weapons was over a competition or test was conducted. Duryodhana and Bhíma entered into a ‘club-fight’, and when Karṇa tried to intervene in the fight his nobility was questioned by Bhíma. Duryodhana then insulted Bhíma. Arjuna agreed to present King Drupada before Droṇācārya as gurudakṣiná to him. In the fierce war the Pándavas fought with Drupada, Bhíma annihilated the elephant division of the latter’s army. And, afterwards Bhíma underwent higher training in club-war at the hands of Balabhadraáma. (Adi Parva, Chapter 136, Verse 4).

3) The Pándavas left Hastinápurá. As enmity between the Kauravas and the Pándavas began growing stronger and stronger, Duryodhana, with his father’s permission, removed the Pándavas to várāvāvata and settled them there. They were put up there in a palace specially made of lac. The Pándavas divined the secret of it and escaped from the fire, when the palace was set fire to. Verse 10, Chapter 147 of the Ádi Parva states that it was Bhíma, who set fire to the palace. Escaping thus through a tunnel the Pándavas travelled a great distance in the forest. Kuntí and four of her sons got tired by the exertions of the travel and were forced to sit down for rest on the way. Bhíma, continued the journey carrying the mother and his four brothers on his shoulders. With their entry into Hidimba forest the weakness left them, and they became their former selves.

4) Hidimba killed. Kuntí devi and four sons slept under the shade of a tree at dusk, and Bhíma kept guard over them. There dwelt in the forest a Rágasa called Hidimba with his sister, Hidimbi. Hidimbi looked around that particular day from the top of a tree, and detecting Bhíma his mouth watered. He deputed Hidimbi to bring Bhíma over to him. Hidimbi having not returned even after a long time Hidimba went over to the spot, and there finding Hidimbi in love-talks with Bhíma he got terribly angry. He wanted to kill Hidimbi. Bhíma, who could not suffer the killing of a woman in his presence rushed against Hidimba, The noise of the fight awakened the other Pándavas from sleep, and at the instance of Arjuna, Bhíma killed Hidimba. Thus rendered helpless and forlorn Hidimbi again craved Bhíma for love. On the suggestion of Kuntí, whose heart melted at the sight of Hidimbi’s helplessness Bhíma took her as his wife. But, one condition was stipulated for their enjoying the honey-moon. The condition was that they might enjoy honey-moon, from dawn to dusk in the sky and on mountain tops, Hidimbi, who was endowed with magic powers carrying Bhíma with her. And, after dusk Bhíma was to be returned to Kuntí. Accordingly Bhíma and Hidimbi spent one year, and to them was born a son called Ghaṭotkaca. Promising that he shall return when wanted, Ghaṭotkaca with his mother went into the forest. The Pándavas also left for the village called Ekacakrá. (Adi Parva, Chapters 147–154).

5) Killing of Baka and the wedding of Páncaálī. While at Ekačakrá Bhíma killed the Rágasa called Baka and freed the people of the village from their distress. Afterwards the Pándavas attended the Svayamvara (free choice of the husband by woman) of Páncaálī, who became their wife. There Bhíma defeated Śaláya in fight. And, the Pándavas duly returned to Hastinápurá. (For details see Baka, Páncaálī and Arjuna).

6) Again to forest. On their return to Hastinápurá the Pándavas took their residence in the palace built by Maya. There Maya presented a magnificent club to Bhíma. (Sabáh Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 18). It was Śrí Kṛṣṇa, lord of Dvárakā who served as the right hand of the Pándavas. Jārāsandha, who was then King of Maghadha fought with Kṛṣṇa eighteen times and got defeated. Yet he did not yield, and at last Kṛṣṇa decided to do away with him. Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna and Bhíma, in disguise, set out for Maghadha. They entered Jārāsandha’s palace and challenged him to a duel. Bhíma and Jārāsandha clashed, and at the instance of Kṛṣṇa Bhíma rent the latter in two and threw him on the ground. Though Jārāsandha was alive again, Bhíma rent him in two and threw away the two parts to two places.
(M. B. Sahā Parva, Southern Text, Chapter 24).
The main impediments and thorns in their way thus having been removed, Dharmaputra decided to perform Rājasūya. Bhima was deputed to conquer all the kingdoms in the eastern part of India. Bhima achieved the object and returned with great wealth to Indraprastha. Though Bhima got ready to kill Śiśupāla, who alone refused to acknowledge the suzerainty of Yudhiṣṭhira, he also yielded on the tactful advice of Bhīṣma. The Rājasūya Yajña went off quite successfully. It was Bhima, who, after the Yajña was over, took Bhīṣma and Yudhiṣṭhīra to Hastināpura. Afterwards, in the contest in the game of dice played between Dharmaputra and Duryodhana, the Pāṇḍavas lost everything. The Kauravas brought Pāṇcālī into the assembly hall and attempted to strip her naked in public. Bhima who got enraged at this shouted that the hands of Yudhiṣṭhīra who played dice should be burnt in fire. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 6). And, Bhima took then and there the terrible pledge that he would, with his hands stained by blood from the chest of Dussāsana, who tried to rip Pāṇcālī naked, tie up Pāṇcālī’s hair which got untied in the scuffle. He also swore that he would break the thigh of Duryodhana. In uncontrollable rage Bhima also shouted that he would turn into ashes all those who took part in the game of dice. Bhima took also the vow that all the Kauravas would be killed.

According to the terms and conditions laid down with regard to the contest in the game of dice the Pāṇḍavas went into the Kāmyaka forest to live there for twelve years and then to live incognito for one year.

7) Life in forest and life incognito. There lived in Kāmyaka forest a Rākṣasa called Kīrmīra, brother of Bala, whom Bhima had killed on an earlier occasion. Kīrmīra, who was awaiting an opportunity to avenge the murder of his brother, now clashed with Bhima in the forest. Bhima did very easily kill him. (For details see Kīrmīra).

Thus the Pāṇḍavas spent their days once again in the Kāmyaka forest under the spiritual leadership of sage Dhauumya. They thought about their lost kingdom. Should they go to war against the Kauravas or should they spend the rest of their lives in the exercise of dhārmic injunctions? At one time Bhima advised Yudhiṣṭhīra against war; but on another occasion he pleaded vehemently in favour of war. It was during this time that Arjuna went to the Himālayas to please Śiva by penance and get from him the Pāḍupatāstra. (Arrow called Pāḍupata). The Pāṇḍavas naturally got nervous and upset at the rather long absence of Arjuna; Bhima was more anxious and sorry than the others. The Pāṇḍavas set out in search of Arjuna, and travelled up Mount Gandhamādāna. Then the party got so tired that they could not proceed any further. Pāṇcālī fell down fainting. Then Bhima remembered Ghaṭotkaca, who appeared before his father (Bhima) at once. As directed by Bhima Ghaṭotkaca mounted the Pāṇḍavas on his shoulders and the journey continued. They reached the Āśrama of Naranārāyaṇas, and rested there for six days. One day the wind blowing from the north-east dropped near Pāṇcālī a Saugandhika flower. And, Bhima set out in the north-east direction to fetch saugandhika flowers for Pāṇcālī, who felt a special liking for them.

Walking and walking Bhima entered Kadālivana. Hanūmān, his skin wrinkled and hair grey due to old age, was living in this forest. He obstructed the path of Bhima. Hanūmān awoke from sleep and raised his tail with a terrific sound. Bhima walked up to the place whence the sound was heard. (Vanaparva, Chapter 146). In the clash that ensued between Hanūmān and Bhima the former came out victorious. Hanūmān, however, congratulated Bhima and directed him on the path to the saugandhika forest.

Bhīmasena reached the saugandhika forest, which was being guarded by the Rākṣasas called Krodhavāsas. Bhima overcame them, collected the flowers and returning with them stayed in the Badarikāśrama with his brothers and Pāṇcālī. Her it was that Bhima killed Jāṭāsura. (For details see Jāṭāsura II).

Four years were thus spent; yet Arjuna had not returned. The Pāṇḍavas continued their journey northward. On the 17th day they came to the Āśrama of Vṛṣaparvā in the Himālayas. They were duly received by the maharṣī, who directed them in their onward journey. Continuing the journey they reached the Āśrama of Arśīśuṇa whence, after crossing various mountain peaks and still walking they reached Kuberā’s Alakāpūrī where a Yāśaka called Manimān obstructed their further progress. Bhima killed Manimān and the other Yāskras who rushed to his support. Finally Kuberā himself saw Bhima and blessed the Pāṇḍavas.

While they were returning from Kuberā’s palace Bhima was caught by a python. But, it was really Nahuṣa transformed into a python on account of a curse. Bhima killed it and it assumed its original form as Nahuṣa. (See Agastya, Para 8). By this time Arjuna had obtained Pāḍupatāstra from Śiva and he duly returned to his brothers, and the Pāṇḍavas continued their journey in the forest.

Meantime, knowing that the Pāṇḍavas were put up in Dvaitavana, the Kauravas started for their dwelling place in a procession led by Duryodhana with the army and camped nearly two furlongs away from a pool in Dvaitavana. While thus camping Duryodhana clashed with a Gandharva called Citrasena, who with a number of his comrades came to the pool for water games, and in the encounter the latter made Duryodhana prisoner. Bhīmasena who witnessed the scene very much laughed at Duryodhana. But, Arjuna intervened and set free Duryodhana and others.

The Pāṇḍavas again entered the Kāmyaka forest, and it was at that time that Jayadratha abducted Pāṇcālī. Bhima killed Kotikāśa who acted on behalf of Jayadratha. (See Kotikāśa). Moreover Bhima captured Jayadratha, got his head shaved clean and declared that he was a slave of Dharmaputra. It was here at Dvaitavana that Dharmadeva tested the Pāṇḍavas, who had gone to a nearby pool to fetch water; all the Pāṇḍavas except Yudhiṣṭhīra died at the pool, but were brought back to life again. (See Dharmaputra, Para 7). The

1. When raised, Hanūmān’s tail was as high in the sky as the flag of Indra. and produced a thunderous sound. As though the mountains were vomiting through their mouth, the sound produced by the raising of the tail shook the mountains. Drowning the trumpeting of excited elephants the sound reverberated all around the mountains. Hearing the sound Bhima, his whole body horrified entered the forest in the direction of the sound. In the middle of Kadālivana, on a mighty rock, Bhima saw Hanūmān.
twelve years’ forest-life of the Pāṇḍavas now came to an end.

According to the advice of Dharmadeva the Pāṇḍavas selected the Vīraṭa palace for their life incognito, Bhima—senia assuming the name Vallava (Valala). And, here Bhima killed in a duel Jīmūta, the pugilist. (See Jīmūta 11). It was also here that Bhima killed Kīcaka and the Upākīcakas. (See Kīcaka). On another occasion, at the instance of Yudhiṣṭhirā Bhima took Sudharmā, King of Daśārṣa to Yudhiṣṭhirā captive; but he was later set free. Next year the Pāṇḍavas defeated Duryodhana in the fight in connection with the theft of the cows of the Vīraṭa King, and then they declared that their forest life and life incognito were over.

8) Bhima in the great war. Even after the return of the Pāṇḍavas after the forest life and life incognito the Kauravas refused to give them half of the kingdom. So, both the parties began preparations for war. Given hereunder is the main incident relating to Bhima from this period to the Svargārohoja (going to Heaven) of the Pāṇḍavas after relinquishing the kingdom in favour of Pārīkṣiṣṭa, including their victory in war and the administration of the country.

(1) Saṇjāya described to Dhrūtarāṣṭra the prowess and achievements of Bhima. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 50).
(2) Śrī Kṛṣṇa before leaving for the Kaurava assembly for compromise talks asked for the views of Bhima about the whole problem, and Bhima opined that peace was preferable to war. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74).
(3) When Śrī Kṛṣṇa admonished Bhima he opted for war and waxed eloquent about his heroism and prowess. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 76).
(4) Bhima wanted Śīkaṇḍa to be appointed chief of the army. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 161).
(5) Bhima sent back with an insulting reply Ulīka, who was sent by Duryodhana to the Pāṇḍavas with a message. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 163).
(6) Bhima questioned Dharmaputra who, when the armies had taken position on opposite sides, went on foot to the Kaurava assembly without bow and arrows. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 17).
(7) The world shuddered at the war cry of Bhima. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 8).
(8) On the first day of the war Bhima fought a duel with Duryodhana. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 19).
(9) In the fight with the Kaliṅgas Bhima killed Śakra-deva. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 24).
(10) Bhima killed Bhānumān. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 39).
(11) He killed Satyadeva and Śālya, who guarded the chariot wheels of Śrutāyus, King of Kaliṅga. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 76).
(12) Killed Kētumān. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 77).
(13) Annihilated the elephant division of the Kaurava army, and rivers of blood flowed. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 103).
(14) Defeated Duryodhana. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 16).
(15) Fought against Bhiṣma. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 1).
(16) Fought against the whole lot of Kauravas, and in this fight eight sons of Dhrūtarāṣṭra viz. Senāpati, Jarrāsandha, Susena, Ugrā, Virābahu, Bhīma, Bhirmaratha and Sulocana were killed. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 32).
(17) Fought a fierce war against Bhiṣma. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 21).
(18) Fought with Duryodhana. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 17).
(19) Defeated Duryodhana the second time. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 11).
(20) Defeated Kṛtavarmā. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 60).
(21) Killed Bhiṣma’s charioter. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 12).
(22) Killed eight more sons of Dhrūtarāṣṭra. (Chapter 88, Verse 13, Bhiṣma Parva).
(23) Struck by the arrow of Bhiṣma, Droṇācārya fell down unconscious. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 18).
(24) Killed nine more sons of Dhrūtarāṣṭra. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 23).
(25) Defeated Bālhika. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 104, Verse 18).
(26) Fought a duel with Bhūriśravas. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 10).
(27) Killed ten mahārathis (heroes in chariot war) of the Kaurava army. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 113).
(28) Dhrūtarāṣṭra applauded the prowess of Bhiṣma. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 13).
(29) Bhiṣma fought with Vīvīntā. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 27).
(30) Defeated Śalya in club fight. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 8).

BHIIMA IX

Bhima, son of King Parikṣit and brother of Janamejaya. (Adi Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 1). It was this Bhima who, at the yajña conducted at Kurukṣetra attacked, without reason, the son of Saramā, a dog of the Devas.

BHIIMA III. A Deva gandharva delivered by Munī, the wife of Kaśyapa prajakāti. (Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 42). He took part in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Adi parva, Chapter 122, Verse 55).

BHIIMA IV. Yet another Bhima, grandson of King Āvikṣīt of the Lunar dynasty and son of Parikṣit is mentioned in Chapters 94 and 95 of Adi Parva. His mother was Suyaṣā. He married Kumārī, daughter of Kekaya Rāja and they had a son called Pratīṣṭravas.

BHIIMA V. Father of Divodāsa, King of Kāśī. (Udyoga-parva, Chapter 117, Verse 1).

BHIIMA VI. A Sudra who attained Svarga as on his head fell water with which the feet of a brahmin were washed. The following story about him occurs on page 619 of the Padmapurāṇa. In the dvāpara yuga there lived a Sudra called Bhima, who engaged himself in the profession of Vaiṣyaṇas. An outcaste from practices pertaining to Sudras he enjoyed life with a Vaiṣya woman. He was a terrible fellow, who killed many brahmans, and also enjoyed the wives of many elderly people including his teachers. He was a robber as well. Once he went to a brahmin house, and with the object of robbing his wealth spoke to him in a pathetic tone as follows:—"Respected sir, you will please listen to my grievance. You appear to be kind-hearted. Please give me some rice, or else I will die this very moment."

Brahmin:—"Oh hungry guest! There is no one here to cook food. I shall give you daily some rice, which you may cook yourself. I have neither father, mother, son, brothers, wife nor any other relatives. All of them are dead and gone. The unfortunate fellow that I am, I am staying here alone. No servants or others here." Bhima:—"Oh revered brahmin! I too am a lonely person. I shall live here for ever serving you. I am a Sudra."

These words of Bhima pleased the brahmin so much that he cooked some food quickly and served the Sudra with it. He stayed with the brahmin from that day onwards. His idea was to rob the brahmin of his wealth at some convenient time and get away. But, since he used to pour on his head everyday the water with which the brahmin's feet were washed he got redemption from all his sins.

One night a thief got into the brahmin's room to steal his earnings. Seeing the thief Bhima rushed at him to give him a good thrashing. But, the thief, in the twinkling of an eye, cut off Bhima's head and escaped from the scene. At once there came down the attendants of Lord Viṣṇu to led Bhima to Vaikuṇṭha. A divine chariot drawn by Rājahrīṣas (swans) also came down. Bhima got into the chariot and reached the abode of Viṣṇu.

BHIIMA VII. Father of Damayantī. (See Damayantī).

BHIIMA VIII. One of the hundred sons of Dhrītarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhima, one of the Pāṇḍavas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 86).

BHIIMA IX. Verse 17, Chapter 94 of Adi Parva, Mentions about one Bhima born to King Ilīn of his wife Rathandharī. This Bhima had four brothers, viz., Duṣyanta, Śūra, Pravasu and Vasu.

BHIIMA II. The Mahābhārata makes mention of another

1) During one of those days Bhāhruvāhana visited Bhima, who sent the former back loaded with money and foodgrains. (Aṣvamedha Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 6).

2) It was Bhima who held the umbrella to Śrī Kṛṣṇa in the chariot on his way back from the company of the Pāṇḍavas to Dvārakā. (Aṣvamedha Parva, Southern Text, Chapter 92).

3) Bhima opposed Dhrītarāṣṭra's demand for money to perform the rituals of those who had died in war. (Aṣvamedha Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 7).

4) After Dhrītarāṣṭra, Kunti and Gāndhārī retired into the forest Bhima visited them once. (Aṣvamedha Parva, Chapter 23).

5) Bhima's conceit put down. While, after the great war, the Pāṇḍavas and Śrī Kṛṣṇa were discussing several matters all the Pāṇḍavas except Bhima said they owed their success in war to Kṛṣṇa. But, Bhima, in all haughtiness claimed the credit for victory to his personal prowess. With the object of putting down this conceit on the part of Bhima, Śrī Kṛṣṇa, with Bhima seated along with him on Garuḍa, set out on a journey to the south. After crossing the sea and Mount Subela Śrī Kṛṣṇa, pointing out to Bhima a lake twelve yojanas wide and lying near Laṅkā, asked him to find out the source of the lake and return with the information. Though Bhima walked some distance he could not find out its source. Not only that, all the warriors there jointly attacked Bhima, and finding himself impotent to counter the attack he ran back to Śrī Kṛṣṇa for refuge. Then Śrī Kṛṣṇa with his ring eloped and threw away the lake, and said to Bhima as follows:—"This is the skull of Kumbhakarṇa killed by Śrī Rāma in the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war. The warriors who attacked you are the asuras called Sarogeyas." These words of the lord put down Bhima's conceit, and he apologised to Kṛṣṇa. (Skanda Purāṇa, 1.2.66).

6) Death. After entrusting matters of administration of the country to Parikṣit the Pāṇḍavas set out on their great journey. Yudhiṣṭhīra walking in the front, they started for Kailāsa. During the course of their journey Pāṇčālī, Sahadeva, Nakula and Arjuna one after the other fell down dead. Bhima asked Yudhiṣṭhīra the reason for the deaths and he was given suitable answers by the latter. At last when Bhima too was about to fall down and die he asked the reason thereof, and Yudhiṣṭhīra replied that Bhima's over-eating was the reason. Afterwards when Dharmaṇputra entered Heaven he found his brothers had already their seats there. (See Arjuna, Para 31).

7) Other information. (1) Bhima had a son named Sutasoma by Pāṇḍālī. (Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 75).

8) A son called Sarvāga was born to Bhima of Baladharā, daughter of the King of Kāśī. (Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 97).

9) The following names are found used in the Mahābhārata as synonyms for Bhima. Acyutānāja, Anilātma, Arjunāgraṇāja, Arjunāḥṛtvajja, Vallavā, Bhīma-dhanvā, Jaya, Kaunteya, Kaurava, Kuśāḍāḍīla, Marutāṇājā, Māruti, Pāṇḍāvā, Pārthā, Pavanāṭmaja, Prabhāṣanāsuta, Rākṣasakaṇṭaka, Śāṁraṣatuta, Vāyu-putra, Vāyuṣuta, Vṛkodara.

10) Other information. (1) Bhima had a son named Sutasoma by Pāṇḍālī. (Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 75).

A son called Sarvāga was born to Bhima of Baladharā, daughter of the King of Kāśī. (Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 97).

The following names are found used in the Mahābhārata as synonyms for Bhima. BHIMA X. One of the five attendants given to Subrahmanya by the Deva called Añña. Parigha, Vaata, Dahati and Dahana were the other four. (Satyada Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 34).

BHIMA XI. A king of ancient time. He sits in yama's assembly worshipping yama. There are hundred kings in yama's assembly, having the name Bhima. (Sabha Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 24). It is on account of the penance of the hundred Bhimas that the difficulties of people are lifted. (Vana Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 11). These one hundred persons were kings in ancient days. Owing to several adversities they left their kingdoms for the assembly of yama. (Santi Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 49).

BHIMA XII. A yadava king, the father of Andhaka. This Bhima was a contemporary of Sri Rama. He conquered Madhurapurī founded by Satrughna after killing the Daitya called Madhu.

BHIMA XIII. A friend of Ravaṇa, king of Lanka. It was on the top of Bhima's house that Hanuman rested for the first time after arriving at Lanka. (Valmiki Ramayana, Sundara Kanda, Canto 6).

BHIMABALA I. (BHUJIBALA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra killed by Bhima. (Satyada Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 14).

BHIMABALA II. One of the five Vinayakas born from the asura called Pāncajanya. These Vinayakas cause difficulties and obstructions to the yajnas of Devatās. (Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 11).

BHIMABHAṬA. A gandharva. The following story has reference to his past life. On the death of Srutadhar, king of Ekalavyanagara the younger of his two sons, Satyadhar drove out of the kingdom the elder brother, Siladhar. Thus ousted from his kingdom Siladhar died due penance and got from Siva the boon that Satyadhar be killed while he himself be made a gandharva. Owing to the blessing of Siva Satyadhar died, and he was born again as Samarbhaṭa, son of Ugrabhaṭa, King of Rādhānagara, and Siladhar was born as Bhimabhaṭa, brother of Samarbhaṭa. On the death of Ugrabhaṭa Bhimabhaṭa, after killing Samarbhaṭa ascended the throne. And, on one of those days, he was transformed into a wild elephant as the result of the curse of a muni. But, he remember his previous existence, and, though turned into elephant could speak like men. Bhimabhaṭa became a gandharva because he received and treated well once a traveller and related to him his (Bhimabhaṭa's) own story. (Kathāsaritsagarā Saśāṅkavatlaṁbaka).

BHIMAJANU. A king in ancient India. He remained in the assembly of yama serving the latter. (Sabha Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 21).

BHIMAKSA. A Rākṣasa, who used to attack the kingdoms of Kaśī and Kosala often. Finally the above kings jointly encountered him. He was killed by King Har-yaśvan. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

BHIMARATHA I. A king of the family of Viśvāmitra. His father was Ketumāṇ and Dwiveda his son. (Bhāga-vata, Navama Skandha).

BHIMARATHA II. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra killed in the war by Bhima. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 36).

BHIMARATHA III. A hero who fought on the Kurav side. It was this Bhimaratha who stood at the centre of the garuda vyuha (army formation in the form of the bird garuḍa, Kite) set up by Drona. (Drona Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 12). He killed Sālva, the Mleccha king and a supporter of the Pandavas. (Drona Parva, Chapter 25, Versc 26). When Yudhīśhṭhira was king at Indraprastha Bhimaratha sat in Pañḍava assembly as a comrade of the Pañḍavas. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 26).

BHIMARATHI (BHĪMA). A river in the South exulted in the purāṇas. Sins of those who bathe in this river will vanish. On its shore is a sacred place called Pañḍhara-pura. (Vana Parva, Chapter 88, Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9).

BHIMASARA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 99).

BHIMAVEGA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 99).

BHĪRU. A son born to Maṇḍhūśrav and his wife Purjayani.

BHĪSAṆA. Son of Baka. From the day his father was killed by Bhima Bhīṣaṇa was impatiently waiting for revenge. When the Pañḍavas began the Aśvamedha yajña he obstructed it at a place near Ekacakra. Arjuna fought and killed him. (Jainimi Avancmdha Parva, Chapter 22).

2) Birth and Boyhood. Bhīṣma's name in his boyhood was Devavarta. He was the eighth son of Santanu, a king of the lunar dynasty and Gaṅga-devi. This boy was the human embodiment of Dyau, one of the Aṣṭavasus. Santanu, his father was the re-birth of another king, Mahābhīṣeka. The story concerning this, as given in the Mahābhārata is as follows:—

King Mahābhīṣeka after his death, attained Visphuloka. Once he went to visit Brahmā at Satyaloka. At that time Gaṅga-devi was also present in Brahmā's assembly. In that pious atmosphere, a gentle breeze began to blow and Gaṅga-devi's clothes were slightly deranged. Just at that moment, Mahābhīṣeka took a stealthy glance at her and she also returned that glance. This was noted by Brahmā who turned both of them into human beings by a curse. Gaṅga-devi begged pardon and Brahmā lifted the curse and blessed her that the Aṣṭavasus would come to the earth to be born as her sons and that afterwards she could come back to Heaven. After that Gaṅga-devi was born as a mortal woman in the world under the name Gaṅgā and she spent her days in the forests near the Gaṅgā river valleys.

In those days the ruler of the Lunar dynasty was a king named Pratīpa. Having no children, he went to the bank of the river Gaṅgā and performed tapas there. Gaṅga-devi who was moving about in the forests nearby, saw the King deeply absorbed in his tapas. She approached him and sat on his right thigh. She wanted the King to be her husband. He explained to her that the right thigh is the proper seat of a daughter-in-law.
and so she would become his son's wife in due course. In course of time, Pratīpa had a son, Santanu, born to him. When Santanu grew up into a young man, one day he went for a hunt to the Gaṅgā-valley and there he met Gaṅgādevī. He fell in love with her at first sight and courted her: Gaṅgādevī agreed to become his wife on condition that he should not say anything to displease her and if he violated that condition she would leave him. The king accepted the condition and they became man and wife.

At about that time, the wife of Dyo, one of the Aṣṭavasus, happened to see the sacrificial cow of the sage Vasiṣṭha and wished to have it. She expressed her desire to her husband, Dyo. Dyo, with the other seven vasus went and took away by force, Vasiṣṭha's cow. Vasiṣṭha in his anger cursed the Aṣṭavasus to be born as mortals. They repented and begged pardon from Vasiṣṭha. The sage told them that all of them would be born as the sons of Gaṅgādevī and all except Dyo, who actually stole the cow, would return to Heaven at the time of birth itself. As for Dyo, he would continue to live in the world for a long time, as an adventurous hero.

Gaṅgādevī became pregnant and gave birth to her first child. She carried the child to the river Gaṅgā and threw it into the river. Santanu who followed her up to the river bank, did not say anything against her, remembering his promise.

Seven children were born to her and she threw all of them into the river in this way. When she gave birth to the eighth child, Santanu insisted that he would not allow her to throw away that child into the river. As he had violated the condition, the angry Gaṅgādevī left the palace with her child. She named it Devavrata and brought him up in the forest. The sage Vasiṣṭha and Gaṅgādevī taught him all branches of knowledge.

Thirty-two years later, the king went to the same forest for hunting. He saw a handsome boy stopping the flow of the river Gaṅgā. Getting interested in the boy, the King approached him. But by that time he had disappeared. The King prayed to Gaṅgādevī to give back the child. She appeared with the child and after handing over the child to him vanished. The king returned to the palace with the child. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapters 93-100).

3) The name Bhīṣma. Devavrata was anointed, as heir-apparent. One day King Santanu reached the forest near the Gaṅgā river valley, for hunting. As he was hunting, absorbed in the beauty of the forest scenery, he felt the perfume of musk filling the air in the forest. He wondered from where it could come. He went on and on trying to find out the source of this smell until he reached the cottage of a fisherman. The fisherman had a daughter named Satyavatī. It was from her that the fragrance of musk spread all around. The king fell in love with her at first sight. He asked the fisherman to give the girl to his son. But the brave fisherman did not yield to the king's demand immediately. He laid down several conditions, one of which was that Satyavatī's sons should succeed to the throne of Santanu. The king was in a fix. Devavrata was the eldest son and heir-apparent. To deny kingship to his sons would be highly improper. Unable to find a solution to this difficult problem, the king returned to the palace, much depressed and gloomy. There he avoided all company and took to his bed, passing his time in sadness and solitude.

When Devavrata knew about his father's condition, he called the Ministers and asked them about it. They told him everything in details. At once, without informing even his father, Devavrata went to the fisherman's cottage on the bank of the river Gaṅgā and begged for Satyavatī on behalf of his father. The fisherman repeated his former condition. Devavrata agreed that Satyavatī's son shall be given the right of Kingship. The fisherman pointed out that disputes were likely to arise between Devavrata's sons and Satyavatī's children regarding the right of succession to the throne. At once Devavrata stood up and made a solemn pledge that he would remain a bachelor for life. The fisherman gave Satyavatī to Devavrata to be taken to the King. Devavrata took her to the palace and presented her to his father. The King, when he came to know of the part played by his son in the matter, rose from his bed and embraced Devavrata with tears of joy and gratitude. The gods showered flowers on the scene. Because he had taken such a solemn oath, it was declared that henceforth he would be known by the name “BHĪṢMA”. The loving father Santanu also gave him a boon that Bhīṣma would die only when he wished. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 100).

4) Affairs of the Kingdom in crisis. Two sons named Vicitravrīya and Cītrāṅgada were born to Satyavatī by Santanu, who died shortly afterwards. As desired by Satyavatī, Bhīṣma crowned the boy Cītrāṅgada as king. Although Cītrāṅgada's reign was a prosperous one, it could not last long. Once a Gandharva named Cītrāṅgada attacked him at Kurukṣetra and after a battle which lasted for three years, the Gandharva Cītrāṅgada killed the King Cītrāṅgada. It was Bhīṣma who performed the funeral rites of the King Cītrāṅgada. After that Vicitravrīya was crowned King.

It was at that time that the Svayamivara of the three daughters of the King of Kāśi, Amābā, Amābikā and Amābalikā, was held. Bhīṣma thought that it would be good if Vicitravrīya married them. So Bhīṣma attended that function. The presence of Bhīṣma who was an old man, at the Svayamivara, frightened the girls. The other kings who were present, stopped him from entering the place, since he had taken an oath to remain a lifelong bachelor. The old Bhīṣma stood up and spoke at length about the eight different forms of marriage and after defeating several kings like Śālva, he seized the three daughters of the King of Kāśi and took them with

1. Satyavatī's original name was Kāli. The fisherman got her from the stomach of a fish. (See the word Adrikā). Since she had the smell of fish she got the name of "Matsayagandhi." She used to assist a fisherman in his work as a ferryman in the river Gaṅgā. Once the sage Parāśara happened to get into her boat and fell deeply in love with her. The sage removed the smell of fish from her and gave her the perfume of musk instead. By this mystic power he created a mist at noon and under its cover, he had a sexual union with her. As a result of it the child Krṣṇa (Vyāsa) was born. The child immediately left the mother to perform tapas in the forest after promising to return to her whenever she wished for his presence. Although she gave birth to a child, Parāśara blessed her to be a virgin. The whole episode remained a secret. As usual, Satyavatī returned to the fisherman's cottage in the evening and continued to live with him. It is at this stage that Santanu was attracted by the perfume of musk and came to the cottage where he met Satyavatī, him in his chariot to Hastinapura. Preparations were made for the marriage of Vicitravirya with the three princesses. Then Ambā approached Bhīṣma and told him that she had already dedicated her heart to the king of Sālva. Bhīṣma generously allowed her to return home.
(For the rest of Ambā’s story, see the word “Ambā”).
Vicitravirya married Ambikā and Ambālīkā. He ruled over the country for seven years at the end of which he died of consumption. The dynasty faced a crisis, as there was no one to succeed him. Satyavatī approached Bhīṣma with a suggestion to beget children by Vicitravirya’s wife. But Bhīṣma stood firmly on his solemn oath to continue as a life-long bachelor. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Verse 100-104).
5) Bhīṣma’s Wire Pulling. After that Satyavatī summoned Vyāsa to Hastināpura and sons were born to Ambikā, Ambālīkā and their maid by him. Ambikā gave birth to Dhrītarāṣṭra, Ambālīkā gave birth to Pāṇdu and the maid gave birth to Vidura. They grew up and Dhrītarāṣṭra married Gandhāri and Pāṇdu married Kunfā and Mādri. Duryodhana and his brothers were born to Dhrītarāṣṭra, while the Pāṇdavas were born to Pāṇdu. Pāṇdu died at the Sātaśrīga vana and Mādri observed sati by jumping into his funeral pyre and burning herself alive. After that, the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas who lived in the palace at Hastināpura, split up into two blocs. When the palace made of lac was destroyed by fire, the Pāṇḍavas went into the forest and came back to the country after their marriage with Pāṇcālī. They ruled over the country with Indraprastha as their capital. In the gambling contest between Dharmaputra and Duryodhana, the Pāṇḍavas lost their kingdom and everything and so they went to the forest again. They lived for twelve years in the forest and spent one year incognito in the palace of the King of Virāṭa.
At that time the Pāṇḍavas reappeared in the battle which took place as a result of the theft of King Virāṭa’s cows by the Kauravas. Duryodhana asserted that he would not give so much land to the Pāṇḍavas as to put a dot with a needle. With the failure of Śrī Kṛṣṇa’s mediation, the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas encamped on the opposite sides of the field of Kurukṣetra, preparing for a grim battle.
Bhīṣma was the chief protagonist in all these events relating to the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas. At every stage in the story we see Bhīṣma’s influence. The main events in which this superman who used to give shelter to Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas alike, played a decisive role, are given below:—
(1) Bhīṣma sent a messenger to Subala, king of Gāndhāra, to ask for the hand of Gāndhāri, to be married to Dhrītarāṣṭra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 11).
(2) He went to the palace of Śalya, king of Madra and secured Mādri to be married to Pāṇdu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 112).
(3) He brought about the marriage between Vidura and the daughter of Devaka. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 2).
(4) The Mahārṣis who were the inhabitants of Sātaśrīga told Bhīṣma about the birth of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B.
Ādi Parva, Chapter 125, Verse 22).
(5) Bhīṣma offered ‘Jalānjalī’ (worship with holy water) to Pāṇdu at his death. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 126, Verse 27).
(6) He performed the death anniversary of Pāṇdu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 1).
(7) He engaged Dronācārya to teach archery to the princes. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 77).
(8) He burst into tears and wept bitterly on hearing that Pāṇḍavas were burnt to death in the palace of lac and was about to offer them ‘Jalānjalī’. Just then, Vidura came to him and secretly informed him that the Pāṇḍavas were not dead. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 149, Dākṣiṇātīya Pāṭha).
(9) He advised Duryodhana to give half the kingdom to the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 202).
(10) He had taken part in Dharmaputra’s Rājasīya Yajña. Dharmaputra had entrusted to Bhīṣma, the arrangements for that yajña. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 6).
(11) He advised Yudhiṣṭhira to give the highest place of honour in that yajña to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 28).
(12) Bhīṣma ridiculed Śiśūpāla (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 33).
(13) Śiśūpāla insulted Bhīṣma. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 41).
(14) Bhīṣma stopped Bhīṣma who rushed out to kill Śiśūpāla. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 42, Verse 13).
(15) It was Bhīṣma who narrated the life story of Śiśupāla. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 43).
(16) In the battle against Śiśūpāla, Bhīṣma selected powerful Kings to help Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 41).
(17) Once Bhīṣma asked the sage Pulastya about the value and importance of pilgrimage. (Vana śāra, Chapter 82, Verse 4).
(18) Bhīṣma advised Duryodhana to be on friendly terms with the Pāṇḍavas. (Vana śāra, Chapter 253, Verse 4).
(19) In the battle which was fought by Kauravas against King Virāṭa, Bhīṣma arranged the regiments in order, after sending Duryodhana to Hastināpura. (Virāṭa śāra, Chapter 52, Verse 16).
(20) A grim fight took place between Arjuna who went to help the Virāṭa army and Bhīṣma. At last, it was the charioteer who removed Bhīṣma, (who had fallen down unconscious) from the battlefield. (Virāṭa śāra, Chapter 64).
(21) When the Kauravas were contemplating to fight against the Pāṇḍavas who had returned after their incognito life, Bhīṣma ridiculed Karṇa and praised Arjuna. (Udyoga śāra, Chapter 21, Verse 16).
(22) At that time, he explained to Duryodhana, the greatness of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna. (Udyoga śāra, Chapter 49, verse 2).
(23) Duryodhana proposed to bind the hands and feet of Śrī Kṛṣṇa who was expected to come as the envoy of the Pāṇḍavas. Hearing this, Bhīṣma in great anger, walked out of the council hall. (Udyoga śāra, Chapter 88, Verse 19).
(24) Bhīṣma strongly advised Duryodhana to make a treaty of peace with the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga śāra, Chapter 125, Verse 2).
(25) He declared that he would not kill the Pāṇḍavas but would kill 10,000 soldiers of the Pāṇḍavas everyday.
Udyoga śāra, Chapter 156, Verse 21).
(26) As desired by Duryodhana, Bhīṣma declared the Rathis and Mahārathis who belonged to the Kaurava side. (Udyoga Parva, Chapters 165-168).

(27) Bhīṣma described all the Mahārathis of the Pāṇḍava side to Duryodhana. (Udyoga Parva, Chapters 169-172).

(28) Bhīṣma told Duryodhana that Śiṅkaṇḍi and the Pāṇḍavas should not be killed. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 172, Verse 20).

(29) Bhīṣma offered pājā to Paraśurāma. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 123, Verse 27).

(30) Arība who was allowed by Bhīṣma to marry her lover, King Śālva, was rejected by him and returned to Bhīṣma again. But he did not accept her. Although Paraśurāma pleaded with him on behalf of Arība, Bhīṣma did not marry her. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 178, Verse 32).

(31) In connection with Arība’s case, a duel was fought on the field of Kurukṣetra between Bhīṣma and Paraśurāma. Bhīṣma started the duel after asking for the permission of Paraśurāma. Pleased with the fight, the Vasus presented to Bhīṣma, the Prasvāpana arrow. But he did not use that arrow against Paraśurāma, since the gods and Nārada prevented him from doing so. At the request of the gods, pīṭṛs and Gaṅgādevī, Bhīṣma stopped the fight and prostrated at the feet of Paraśurāma. (Udyoga Parva, Chapters 178-185).

(32) Bhīṣma narrated to Duryodhana the story of Arība who was re-born as Śiṅkaṇḍi. (Udyoga parva, Chapters 188-192).

(33) Bhīṣma himself told Duryodhana that he had the strength to annihilate all the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 195, Verse 14).

(34) Before the beginning of the battle, Yudhīṣṭhira went to Bhīṣma and asked for his permission to start it. Bhīṣma granted him permission and blessed him. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 44).

5) Bhīṣma in Bhrāta Yuddha.

(1) On the first day of the battle a duel took place between Bhīṣma and Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 8).

(2) In the battle Bhīṣma killed Śveta, the son of king Virāṭa. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 3).

(3) There was again a terrible fight with Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 52).

(4) Śāyaki killed Bhīṣma’s charioteer. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 114).

(5) Seeing that the army of the Kauravas was being scattered in all directions by the violent strokes of Arjuna Bhīṣma ordered to stop the second day’s battle. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 53, Verse 42).

(6) Bhīṣma challenged Śriṅkaṇḍa for the fight. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 96).

(7) Fought again with Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 60, Verse 25).

(8) Bhīṣma gave orders to Droṇācārya and Duryodhana to save Bhagadatta who fell in danger. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 64).

(9) Bhīṣma told Duryodhana that Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa were the incarnations of Nara and Nārāyaṇa. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapters 65-68).

(10) Bhīṣma praised the greatness of Brahmaṣṭrotatra. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 2).

(11) Seeing Śiṅkaṇḍi rushing forward to oppose him, Bhīṣma put an end to the battle. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 69, Verse 29).

(12) A terrible fight took place between Bhīṣma and Bhīmaṣena. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 70).

(13) There was again a fight with Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 71).

(14) Bhīṣma wounded Bhīmaṣena and defeated Śāyaki. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 71, Verse 21).

(15) Bhīṣma wounded King Virāṭa. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 2).

(16) Duryodhana who was frightened by Bhīmaṣena’s deeds of valour, was encouraged by Bhīṣma. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 80, Verse 8).

(17) He deprived Dharmaputra of his chariot. (Bhīṣma parva, Chapter 86, Verse 11).

(18) When Bhīmaṣena killed Bhīṣma’s charioteer, the horses turned round and ran away, dragging the chariot with them. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 12).

(19) He ordered Bhagadatta to fight with Gaṅgotakac. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 17).

(20) He swore that all except Śiṅkaṇḍi would be killed. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 98, Verse 4).

(21) Śāyaki and Bhīṣma fought again. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 104, Verse 29).

(22) Bhīṣma killed 14,000 Mahārathis who belonged to the Cedi, Kāśi and Karuṇa countries. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 18).

(23) Bhīṣma explained to Dharmaputra, the method by which he (Bhīṣma) could be killed. (Bhīṣma parva, Chapter 107, verse 76).

(24) He declared that he would not fight with Śiṅkaṇḍi, who was neither man nor woman. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 108, Verse 43).

(25) He allowed Yudhīṣṭhira to launch an attack on himself (Bhīṣma). (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 13).

(26) Bhīṣma, shot by Arjuna’s arrow, fell down unconscious. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 64).

(27) Bhīṣma who recovered and rose again, killed Satānikā, brother of King Virāṭa. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 27).

(28) Bhīṣma routed the Pāṇḍava army most disastrously. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapters 118, 119).

(29) He considered the misery of life and the sweetness of death. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 119, Verse 34).

(30) Bhīṣma who was wounded by Arjuna’s arrows, described to Duśśāsana, the heroism of Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 119, Verse 56).

(31) Arjuna shot his arrow at Bhīṣma and made him fall down from his chariot. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 119, Verse 87).

(32) He told Hanīsa that he would remain alive until the sun came to Uttarāyana. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 119, Verse 104).

(33) Bhīṣma who fell and lay on a bed of arrows begged for a pillow to the Kings. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 120, Verse 34).

(34) When he found that they were not paying any heed to his entreaties, he asked for a pillow to Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter, 120, Verse 28).

(35) He exhorted the Kings to put an end to the battle. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 120, Verse 51).

(36) Bhīṣma begged for water to Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 121, Verse 18).
(37) He advised Duryodhana to end the battle. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 121, Verse 38).
(38) As Karna wished for 'Virasarga' (Heaven for the valiant) Bhīṣma permitted him to fight. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 122, verse 34).
(39) Vyāsā sent Dharmaputra to Bhīṣma to learn the mysteries of 'Dharma' from Bhīṣma before his (Bhīṣma's) death. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 5).
(40) Bhīṣma said that Śri Kṛṣṇa was more competent to give advice on 'Dharma' than himself. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 2).
(41) When the frightened and ashamed Yudhiṣṭhira approached him, Bhīṣma cheered him up. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 19).
(42) Bhīṣma explained to Yudhiṣṭhira, with the help of various examples and illustrations, "Rājya Dharma", "Āparadharmā", and "Mokṣa Dharma". (Śānti Parva, Chapter 56, to Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165).
(43) After giving his advice to Yudhiṣṭhira Bhīṣma gave him permission to enter Iśātināpura. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 166, verse 50).
(44) He gave advice to Dhrtrāṣṭra regarding his duties and responsibilities. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 167, Verse 30).
(45) He asked for Śri Kṛṣṇa's permission to renounce his body. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 167, Verse 37).
(46) With Śri Kṛṣṇa's permission, Bhīṣma renounced his body. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 2).
(47) The Kauravas performed the funeral rites and Jālanjali (purification by sprinkling water) of Bhīṣma (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 10).
(48) Gangādevi lamented that Śikhanda, who was neither man nor woman, killed Bhīṣma. (Anuśāsana Parva, 168, Verse 21).
(49) Vyāsā and Śri Kṛṣṇa told Gangādevi that Bhīṣma died by Arjuna's arrow. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 30).
(50) On a later occasion Vyāsā invoked into the river Gangā, those who died in the battle and among them Bhīṣma was also present. (Āśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 32, verse 7).
(51) After his death, Bhīṣma remained in Heaven as Dvau, one of the Aṣṭavasus. (Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 11).

Other names of Bhīṣma. Āpagaṇa, Āpagaṇasuta, Bhāgīrathiputra, Bhrārata, Pitāmaha, Bharatarasabha, Bharatāsattama, Bhīṣmaka, Ṣāntanava, Ṣāntanuputra, Ṣāntanu, Ṣāntanu, Devavarta, Gaṅgāsūta, Gaṅgeya, Jāhnaviputra, Kaurava, Kauravanandana, Kauravya, Kuruvārdülā, Kuruvārsheṣa, Kuruvāra, Kurukula, Kurukula, Kurukulodvaha, Kurukulodvaha, Kurumukhya, Kurunandana, Kurupati, Nadija, Prapitāma, Sāgarasūta, Satyasandha, Tālādhvaja, Vasi are other names of Bhīṣma used in the Mahābhārata.

BHIṣMAKA. King of Vidarbha and born in the Bhoja dynasty. Bhīṣmaka was the father of Rukmiṇi, the wife of Śri Kṛṣṇa. He had five sons. A friend of Bhīṣma, he conquered and ruled over a fourth of the world. He defeated the Krathas, Pāḍyās and Kaśikas. He was very much devoted to Jārāsandha. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 21).

Sahādeva, who was on a triumphal tour in connection with the Pāḍḍava's āsvamedha yaja sought and defeated Bhīṣmaka at Bhojakatanagara. Bhīṣmaka was also called Hiranyaroma. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Udugya Parva, Chapter 158, Śānti Parva, Chapter 4).

BHIṢMA Parva. A sub parva in the Mahābhārata.
BHIṢMASVARGĀROHĀNA Parva. A sub division of Anuśāsana Parva. Chapters 167 and 168 of Anuśāsana Parva are included in this.

BHIṢMAVADHA Parva. A sub Parva of Bhīṣma Parva. It comprises Chapters 43-122 of the Bhīṣma Parva.

BHOJ. A term used for greeting elders. When saluting an elderly person, the term "Bhoj" is used as a suffix to his name.

For example:
"Someśvar na ma aham asmi bhoj"
Bhoj śabdāṁ kirtayedante
Svasya nāmābhivādane /
Nāmāṁ svarūpa bhāvo hi bhohbhāvo ṛṣibhiḥ smṛtai //
(Manusmṛti, Chapter 2, verse 124)

BHOGAVĀN. A mountain—Mahābhārata, Śāhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 12 says that in the course of his triumphant over-running of the eastern lands, Bhīmasesa conquered this mountain also.

BHOGAVATI I. Nāgaloka or Pāṭāla. When Sugrīva sent monkeys in all directions in search of Śītā, he gave instructions to them to go and search for her in Bhogavatipura. Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, 41st Sarga, Kīśkindhākāya describes the place as the city infested with serpents (nāgas) and guarded by them. Vāsuki, 'King of serpents, lives there.'

BHOGAVATI II. Gaṅgā or Pāṭāla. (M. B. Śāhā Parva, Dāśāṇīyā Parātha, Chapter 38).

BHOGAVATI III. A place of holy bath at Prayāga. It is better known as Vāsuki tirthā. Mahābhārata Vana Parva, Chapter 85 says that a bath at this tirthā is as efficacious as an Āsvamedha yaja.

BHOGAVATI IV. Another name for the river Sarasvati. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 24, Verse 20).

BHOGAVATI V. A female attendant of Subalimanyā. (M.B. Śāhā Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 8).

BHojA I. A king of the ancient country named Mārtti kāvata. In Mahābhārata Ādi Parva, Chapter 183, Verse 6, we see that this king had attended the Śvayamvara of Draupadi. He was slain by Abhimanyu at the battle of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 8).

BHojA II. A king of Yaduvṛṣa. Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 79 says, that he died under the stroke of the sword of Mahārāja Uśīnara. Bhovarṣa takes its source from this king.

BHojA III. A king who became renowned as a Sanskrit scholar. It is believed that he lived from 1018 to 1054 A.D. His capital city was Bhoja. Bhova is credited with the authorship of two scholarly books entitled, "Sarasvatikāṁdhirāṇa" and "Śrīgāprakāṣa".

Of these, the first is a compendious volume in five chapters, dealing with the merits and defects of poetry, figures of speech, etc. Bhova observes that besides the four styles (in poetry) laid down by Rudraka, there are two more styles, namely, "Avanti" and "Māgadhī".

BHojA IV. A follower of Sudās. In Rgveda, 3rd Mapdana, 58th Anuvāka, 7th Sūkta we find that this Bhova had given help to sage Viśvāmitra in performing his Āsvamedha yaga.

BHojA V. A king of Kārakatubba. Once this king Bhova met a woman with a fantastic shape. Her body was of human shape while her face was that of a female deer. When the king asked her about her strange shape, she related her past history as follows:—"In my previous birth, I was a female deer. On one occasion the whole of my body except my face, was plunged in a river and those parts of the body under the water were transformed into human shape. From that day, I have been changed into this form.'

On hearing her story, the king took her to the holy river and immersed her again in it. She was at once transformed into an actual woman and the king married her.

(See Markandeya, 5th-2-2.)

BHÖJÅJA. An exquisitely beautiful virgin of the country, Sauvira. Mahabharata Droja Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 33 says that Satiyaki abducted her and made her his wife.

BHÖJO (M.). (BHÖJAVAMŚA). This is a branch of Yaduvania (M.B. Aidi Parva, Chapter 217, Verse 18).

BHÖJAKAṬA. The capital of Vidarbha. Once Saha-deva, one of the Pândavas conquered this city. It was at this place that Sri Kṛṣṇa defeated Rukmi, the brother of Rukmini's Svayamvara. The original name of Bhójakaṭa was "Kuḍḍinapura". (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31 and Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158).

BHÖJIKĀ. A Brāhmaṇa. (See the word Pāṭaliputrā.)

BHÖJOYĀ. A Bhoga princess. She was abducted by Ṣyāmagha of the Yādava family and married to his son, Vidarbha. (See Ṣyāmagha.)

BHÖSA. A word meaning a comic, stupid or eccentric person. Bhōsas are of eight kinds. Those who feel derided, those who babble, those who are obstinate, or sophists, those who indulge in hollow laughter, those who pretend to be blind, those who pretend to be deaf, and those who try to assert their self-importance—these are the eight classes of "Bhōsas".

BHRAMARA. A prince of the land of Sauvira. He was a comrade of Jayadraṭha. M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 265 describes how Bhramara walked behind the chariot of Jayadraṭha with banner in his hand, when the latter was defeated by the Pāṇḍavas. Bhramara was killed by Arjuna.

BHRĀMĀRI. A Rākṣasā who was the follower of Jāṇihāsura. As directed by Jāṇihāsura, she took birth in the house of Kaśyapa to kill Gāneśa. One day she treacherously gave poisoned sweets to Gāneśa. Gāneśa detected her treachery and fisted her to death. (Gāneśa 2-21).

BHRĀŚAṁKARAṆA. A Rākṣa. He was the son of Kūtumati, by the Rākṣa, Sumāli. They had ten sons—Prahasta, Akampa, Viṣṇu, Kāla-kūmukha, Dhumārka, Danjha, Supārśva, Sainhrāda, Prākvaṭa, and Brāśaṅkarṣa and four daughters—Vekā, Puspotkaṭa, Kaikasā and Kuśabhīnāsi. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

BHRGU. 1) General. A sage, the son of Brahmā. He was the founder of Bhṛgu varṇa. Members of the Bhṛgu varṇa are called 'Bhṛgavas.' Bhṛgavaniṣṭa has been reputed for many of its members who were Rṣis of great sanctity and grandeur.

2) Birth. "Utsaṅgād Nārado jāne
Dakṣo 'ṁguṣṭhaḥ svayamihhuvah/
Prāṇādvasiṣṭhaṁ sadānā Bhṛgustvacaḥ kāraṅkrañā।"

*Nārado was born from Brahmā's lap, Dakṣa from his Aiṁgustha, Vasiṣṭha from his Prāṇa, Bhṛgu from his skin and Kratu from his arm.

From these lines we see that Bhṛgu was born from Brahmā's skin (tvak). But in M.B. Aidi Parva, 5th Chapter, we find another version regarding his birth. In that passage we read that Bhṛgu was born from "Vaṁśa" (fire). In the light of these two statements, we may examine Bhṛgu's birth.

Bhṛgu had two incarnations. The first time he was born from Brahmā's skin. In course of time, the sage Bhṛgu became famous. In the Daksayāya, this sage was present as one of the Rtviksv (officiating priests). On that occasion, Satīdevi who was in rage and grief because her husband (Śiva) was not invited to the yajña, committed suicide by jumping into the sacrificial fire.

Hearing about this, Śiva was enraged and the monster spirits who emerged from his matted locks caught hold of the Rtviksv. Bhāgavata caturtha skandha says that the Bhūta named Nandivāra, who emerged from Śiva's locks, caught hold of Bhṛgu and killed him.

"Therefore the Bhṛgu who was born from Brahmā's skin must be considered as having died at Daksayāya. Bhṛgu was born again in Vaivasvata Manvantara. This second birth was at the famous Brahmayāṇa of Varuṇa. He was reborn from fire, as Brahmā's son. This child who was born from Brahmā's semen which fell in the sacrificial fire, was brought up by Varuṇa and his wife Carsaniputra. Consequently Bhṛgu is referred to as "Varuṇaputra" and "Carsaniputra" in some Purāṇas. Since he was born at Varuṇa's yaga he is sometimes called "Vāruṇī Bhṛgu".

3) Bhṛgu Varnā. (Bhṛgu family). Each birth of Bhṛgu gave rise to a separate family. They are given below separately:—First birth: Bhṛgu and his wife Khyāti had a daughter Lakṣmī and three sons, Dhitāt, Vidhātā and Kavi. Mahāmeru's daughters, Ayati and Niyati became the wives of Dhitāt and Vidhātā, respectively. Two sons, Prāṇa and Mrkanṭu were born to those two couples. Mrkanṭeya was born to Mrkanṭu and Kavi became the wife of Mrkanṭeya. Mrkanṭeya was born to Vedaśīras. Prāṇa had a son, Dytimān who had a son Rājavān. From that Rājavān, Bhṛgu Varnas multiplied. The family tree of this first Bhṛgu Varna is given below:—(See Viṣṇu purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 10).

Second Birth: The second Bhṛgu Varna is the family which took its origin from the second birth of Bhṛgu as the son of Varuṇa. Varuṇa's son, Bhṛgu married the woman, Pulomā. They had six children who were, Bhūta, Ciyavana, Vajraśīrṣa, Suci, Sukra, and Savana. By his first wife Bhūta, he had his sons, "Ekādāsa Rudras" (eleven Rudras) and "Rudra Pāṛṣadas".
(Attendants of Rudra) and by his second wife Sarūpā he had a crore of Rudras. Cyavana had two wives, Sukanyā and Aruśi. Aurva, a son was born to Aruśi. From Aurva was born Rcika, from Rcika Jamadagni and from Jamadagni, Paraśūrama. Cyavana had a son, Pravati, by his wife Sukanyā. Ruru or Sunaka was the son of Pravati by the Apsarā Ghṛtācī. Ruru and his wife Pramadvarā had a son, Saunaka. Suka, the son of Bhrgu had two sons, Caṇḍa and Alarka and a daughter, Devayāṇī. This is the second Bhrgu Varma. The family tree is given below.

Varuṇa = Carśaṇi

Vāruṇi Bhṛgu—Pulomā

Bhṛgu set out to Devaloka. First he went to Brahmā’s assembly. There, in the presence of Brahmā who was seated in the midst of many Munis, Bhṛgu took his seat on a stool. Brahmā was provoked by this act of disrespect. Bhṛgu left the place without a word and went to Śiva’s place. Śiva rose from his seat and approached him to embrace and welcome him. Bhṛgu, shrank back saying, “Do not touch me?” Śiva became angry and was about to hit him with his trident when Pārvati stopped him.

Bhṛgu then turned his steps to Vaiṣṇṇa, the abode of Mahāviṣṇu. There he saw Mahāviṣṇu in a deep slumber. Seeing Mahāviṣṇu whose task is the preservation of the world, sleeping like an irresponsible person, Bhṛgu gave him a kick on his breast. Viṣṇu who sprang up suddenly, saw Bhṛgu standing before him. He begged pardon of the sage. He declared that he would carry Bhṛgu’s footprint permanently on his chest as a sign of his repentance for having shown disrespect to the Mahārṣi. This foot-print still remains on Viṣṇu’s chest and is known by the name “Śrīvatsa”. In this way, the Munis came to the conclusion that Mahāviṣṇu is the noblest of the Trimūrtis. (Bhāgavata, Daśamā Skandha).

4) Bhṛgu cursed Mahāviṣṇu. Once a terrible war broke out between Devas and Asuras. In that war, not only were the Asuras defeated but many of them were also killed. Dīti, the mother of the Asuras, with tears in her eyes, complained to Bhṛgupati. Pulomā, Mother of Śukra, promised to find a remedy for this somehow. She at once went to the forest and started a tapas for the annihilation of the Devas. As the tapas gained force, the Devas were alarmed and they sought the protection of Mahāviṣṇu. Mahāviṣṇu used his Vajrāyudha (Vajra weapon) against Bhṛgu’s wife, Pulomā. Under the stroke of Vajra she fell down, a headless corpse. The enraged Mahārṣi Bhṛgu cursed Mahāviṣṇu to be born as a mortal in this world and to suffer the pangs of separation from his wife. When the curse was pronounced against Mahāviṣṇu, he directed his weapon Cakra against the Mahārṣi. Bhṛgu fled in panic and at last begged pardon and prayed for shelter to Mahāviṣṇu himself in the ocean of milk. Viṣṇu withdrew his Cakra. Bhṛgu himself restored Pulomā to life. To fulfil the condition of Bhṛgu’s curse, Viṣṇu agreed to incarnate in the world as Śrī Rāma, the son of Daśaratha and to experience the pain of separation from his wife. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

5) Bhṛgu kicked Viṣṇu. Long ago all the Mahārṣis joined together to perform a yaga on the bank of the river Sarasvatī. A dispute arose among them as to who was the most mighty among the Trimūrtis. Some of them voted for Brahmā, others declared that Viṣṇu was more mighty than the other two, while a third group stood for Śiva’s superiority. They unanimously elected Bhṛgu to ascertain and find out the truth of the matter.

1. Devi Bhāgavata, Saptama Skandha says that Bhṛgu had married two daughters of Dakṣa. Mahābhārata Anuśāsana Parva Chapter 85, Verse 127 says that Bhṛgu had seven sons, namely Cyavana Vajrāsila, Suci, Aurva, Śukra, Vareṇya, and Savana.
Brahma and other Devas and the Kinnaras still worship this Bhrgu Tirtha. All sin is removed by a mere sight of this sacred Tirtha. Those who bathe in the holy water of this place attain Heaven and they will not be born again. Even by hearing about the greatness and glory of this Bhrgu Tirtha, one will be cleared of all sins and find an easy way to Sivaloka. (Padma Purana, Chapter 20).

7) Other details. (1) It was Bhrgu who gave the boon for having progeny to Sagara, King of the solar dynasty. Sagara, with his two wives, Keśi and Sumati, performed taps at Bhrgu prasravana in the Himalayas. After a hundred years, Bhrgu, who was pleased, blessed the king that he would have numerous children by one wife and one son who would be progenitor of a varña, by the other wife. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakānda, 38th Sarga).

(2) Once when some Munis went to Dvārakā, Samba and other Yadavas mocked them and the Munis cursed them. Bhrgu was one of those Munis. (See the word Samba).

(3) Parāśurāma, after exterminating the Kṣatriya kings, went to the Āśrama of Bhrgu, the founder of the family and received his blessings. (Brahmānḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 62).

(4) Bhrgu Mahārṣi was a prominent member in Yudhiṣṭhira’s assembly. (M.B. Chapter 4, Verse 16).

(5) He was also a member of Indra’s assembly. It was by Bhrgu’s brilliance that Indra’s glory was heightened. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 29).

(6) Bhrgu was a member of Brahmā’s assembly also. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 19).

(7) Once Bhrgu blessed his son Rṛṣa and his daughter-in-law Satyavatī that they would have children. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 116, Verse 35).

(8) Śrī Kṛṣṇa who went as the messenger of peace to Hastinapura, travelled in Dakṣināvatā, along with the sage Bhrgu. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 27).

(9) Bhrgu entered the scene of battle between the Kurus and Pāṇḍavas and tried to persuade Dronācārya to withdraw from the fight. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 190, Verse 34).

(10) Once Bhrgu lectured on the origin of the earth, Philosophy of life, etc. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 128).

(11) Bhrgu explained to Bharadvāja how the Pañcaka-bhūtas except the sky originated (Śānti Parva, Chapter 183).

(12) Bhrgu discussed in a logical manner, the principle of life and the transmigration of the soul. (Śāntiparva, Chapter 187).

(13) He made a critical examination of the merits and defects of racial discrimination. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 187).

(14) Once Bhrgu bestowed Brahminhood on a King named Vītarāvya. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 57).

(15) He got the name “Bhrgu” because he was born out of fire. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 105).

(16) It was Bhrgu who gave the necessary advice to Agastyā to depose Nahuṣa from Indra’s post.

(17) There is a story that Nahuṣa kicked Agastya on the head while the latter was carrying Nahuṣa’s palanquin and that Bhrgu, who was hiding in Agastya’s locks of hair, cursed Nahuṣa and changed him into a python. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 100).

BHRGTIRTHA. A place made sacred by the performance of taps by Bhrgu. (For more details see the 6th para under Bhrgu).

BHRGUTUNG. A peak on which the sage Bhrgu performed taps. Rṛṣa had lived there with his wife and children. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakānda, 61st Sarga).

BHRGUP. A Mahārṣi who was a devotee of Śiva. Once he went to Kailāsa and began to go round Śiva to pay homage to him. But since Pārvatī and Śiva were sitting together as one body, he could not go round Śiva separately. He did not have much reverence for Pārvatī. So he took the form of a female beetle (Bhrṅgi) and bored his way through a hole made in the place where their bodies were united and thus went round Śiva alone. Pārvatī was angry at this slight shown to her and cursed him to become physically weak. His legs became so weak that they were unable to support his body. So he prayed to Śiva again and he blessed him with a third leg. In this way Bhrṅgi became a Mahārṣi with three legs. (Mahārṣis).

BHRUSUNDI. A fisherman. He used to earn his living by theft.

Once when the Mahārṣi Mudgala was passing through a forest, Bhrusundi stopped him. But in the presence of the Brahmanic effulgence of the Mahārṣi, the fisherman was dazed. Mudgala took pity on Bhrusundi and advised him to worship Lord Gaṇeṣa.

From that time Bhrusundi gave up his evil ways, and accepting the advice of Mudgala, started the worship of Gaṇeṣa with single-minded devotion. As a result of it, an elephant’s trunk began to grow from the middle of his forehead. Bhrusundi who thus acquired a shape closely resembling Gaṇeṣa, was visited by Indra, mistaking him for Gaṇapati. (Gaṇeṣa : 1.67).

BHŪ (ḥ). In the creation of the world, the Lord broke the beginningless “Aṇḍa” (the primal egg or seed) and from it the sound “Oṁ” emerged. The first sound of it was “BHŪH”; the second was “BHUVĀH”; and the third was “SVĀH”. So the combination “Bḥū Bhuvāḥ Svāḥ” was formed. Then came the most adorable and superlative effulgence of the creator (Savitā). That radiance dried up all water. A little of the water became a highly viscous substance. This viscous matter gradually solidified and became the earth. Where the aṇḍa originated, and was the source of that supreme effulgence. As it was the first radiant light, it came to be called Aditya (aḍī- first). The great procreator Brahmā seemed to emerge from the centre of the aṇḍa. The garbhajala (the water contained in the aṇḍa) became the oceans and rivers of the world. (Vāmāṇa Purāṇa, Chapter 43).

BUJaketu. A king who fought on the side of Duryodhana in the Bhārata Yuddha.

BUJANGA. A son of Kadrā by Kaśyapa prajapati.

BUJJY. A Rāja (royal sage), the son of Tugra. King Tugra sent his son with an army across the sea to conquer the enemies in a distant island. When the boat in which they sailed had reached mid-ocean, it was caught in a storm and wrecked. The prince and the soldiers sank into the sea. At that time the prince prayed to the Āsvins who saved Bhujyu from drowning and carried him back to the palace in boats and chariots travelling through the air. This story is given in the Rgveda where the adventures of Āsvins are described. (Rgveda, 1st Manḍala, 17th Anuvāka, 116th Sūktā.)

BHUKAMPA. (Earthquake). The cause of earthquake according to ancient belief is given below:—

The earth is being supported and held in its position by an elephant called Virūpākṣa. When he feels the burden too heavy he shakes his head and earth tremors follow. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakanda, 40th Sarga.)

BHULIṢṭA (M). A bird which lived on the opposite side of the Himalayas. The cry of this bird resembles "MĀ SAHASA". But this bird lived by pecking at and eating the flesh between the teeth of a lion. Sīūpāla mentioned this bird as an example to illustrate that Bhūṣma's advice was at variance with his practice. The bird exhorts people not to act in a rash way (MĀ Sāhasa) and at the same time acts rashly.

BHUMANYU I. A king who was the grandson of King Dushiyanta and the son of Bharata. From Mahābhārata Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 19, we see that he was born by the blessing of Bharadvāja. His mother was Sunandā, daughter of Sarvasena, King of Kāsi. When Bhūmānī grew up, his father Bharata entrusted him with the affairs of the kingdom. Bhūmānī had six sons by his wife Puṣkarīṇī; they were Divirātha, Suvrata, Suhotā, Sutvā, Suyāju, and Raṇika. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 33, we see that he had another son Suhotra by a woman Vijayā, a Daśārha maid.

BHUMANYU II. There is another Bhūmānī, grandson of Kuru, a King of the Solar dynasty and son of Bṛhṛtaśrtra, mentioned in Mahā Bhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 39.

BHUMANYU III. A Deva Gandharva. He participated in the celebrations connected with Arjuna's birth. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 35).

BHUMI I. The earth.

1) General. The Purāṇas maintain that Bhūmi has a Devī (goddess). The births of Bhūmi and its basic goddess are in two different ways.

The Mahābhārata, (Dākṣiṇātya Pātha) says that the goddess Bhūmi was the daughter of Brahmā and that she was married by Mahāviṣṇu. The earth on which we live is the Mṛtpiṇḍa of which the basic deity is this Bhūmidevi. Of the many versions given in the Purāṇas regarding the origin of earth, three are given below:—

1) Long ago, towards the end of the age of floods, the earth was in a liquid state. At that time, Śiva cut open his thigh and let fall a drop of blood in the water. It assumed the form of an "aṅga" (egg). Śiva took that aṅga and split it. A man came out of it. From him was made Nature (Prakṛti) for the creation of the Universe. One half of the broken aṅga became sky and the other half became the earth. (Kathāsārasūgrā, Kathāpithaapārābha, 2nd Taranāga).

2) Mahāviṣṇu lay on the surface of water which spread everywhere in the beginning. A lotus sprang up from the navel of Viṣṇu and from its top Brahmā was born. Liquid matter began to flow out of Viṣṇu's ears on both sides. From it were born two Rākṣasas named Madhu and Kaīṭabhā. They persecuted Brahmā. Mahāviṣṇu woke up and killed Madhu and Kaīṭabhā. The thick fat of these Rākṣasas hardened into the earth. (Devī Bhāgavata, Navāna Skandha).

3) In the beginning Mahāviṣṇu (Mahāvīra Puruṣa) spread everywhere. In every pore of that Mahāvīra, who was lying on the surface of the water, there was a Brahmā. In course of time that Viṣṇu obtained mind. That mind stood connected with each of the pores equally. Later from it were formed the "Paṇcamahābhūtas". From their combination was formed the Bhūta called "Mahā Prthvī". It was cut into many pieces and each of the pieces was deposited in each pore. It was these Prthvī pieces which became "Bhūmis" at the time of creation. At the time of the floods, these Bhūmis sank again into those pores as before. In each of these Brahmās, there are the earth, mountains, forests, oceans, the seven islands, Himāvān, Meru, Sun, Moon, Stars and other planets. Also, each of them has its own Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva and other Devas. Since all the different Bhūmis in all the Brahmās had been formed artificially, they all perish in the floods. (Devī Bhāgavata, Navāna Skandha).

3) Bhūmi Devī (Goddess Earth) is the wife of Mahā Viṣṇu. In Varāha Kalpa (Age of the Pig) the Asura Hiranyaṅkaša carried the Earth and Submerged it under water. At once Mahā viṣṇu appeared in the form of a Pig and lifted up the Earth on its horns. When the Earth floated on the surface of water like a lotus leaf, Bhūmi Devī who was pleased, stood up in her charming figure. Mahāviṣṇu fell in love with her and with the brilliance of a crore of suns, had sexual union with her for the period of one Devavārṣa. It is from that time that Bhūmi Devī became Mahāviṣṇu's wife. As a result of their union, a son named Maṅgala was born to them.

Ghaṭeṣa is the son of Maṅgala. Maṅgala has another name, Covva. After the birth of Maṅgala, at the behest of Lord Viṣṇu, all people began to offer worship to Bhūmidevi. Mahāviṣṇu himself first worshipped her by reciting the mantra—"Om Hirin-Śrīn-Śrīn-Śrīn-Śrīn-Vasudhāyai Śvāhā". After that this mantra became popular for worshipping Bhūmidevi. (Devī Bhāgavata, Navāna Skandha).

Narakāsura was Bhūmidevi's son by Hiranyaṅkaša, the Asura. When Hiranyaṅkaša, in the form of a pig, carried Bhūmidevi on his horns to Pātaḷa, the horns came in contact with Bhūmidevi and she became pregnant. In Bhāgavata, Daśāma Skandha we read that Narakāsura was born as the result of this contact. (See the word Naraka I).

Sitā was the daughter of Bhūmidevi, born on another occasion. Sitā was married by the Kosalā King Śri Rāma. When she was abandoned by her husband, she was at last accepted by Bhūmidevi within her own self. (See the word Sitā).

4) Bhūmi and Pralāda. Since Bhūmidevi had been the wife of the Asura Hiranyaṅkaša she has also been called the mother of the Asura clan. Hiranyaṅkaša's brother was Hiranyakasipu. Prahlāda, the son of Hiranyakasipu, was a devotee of Viṣṇu. The father did not like the son's devotion to Viṣṇu. So he persecuted Prahlāda in various ways. Once he threw down Prahlāda from the top of a high building. At that time Bhūmi devi appeared there and received him in her arms. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 24).

5) Bhūmidevi and Prațhu. Once the Emperor Prațhu turned Bhūmidevi into a cow and milched all resources from her. (For details, see the word Prațhu).

6) Pārvati's curse. Once Pārvati and Śiva indulged in their sexual act for many years. The earth began to shake to its foundations. The gods approached Śiva with a request to refrain and he agreed. Śiva's semen was discharged and fell on the earth. Pārvati who was angry at this, cursed Bhūmidevi as follows:— "You Bhūmidevi! You will assume many forms and become the wife of many. Since you have prevented me from giving birth to a son, no children will be born to you in future." (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakaṇḍa, 36th Sarga).

7) Other details.

(1) Narākāśura has another name, "Bhauama". (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Dākṣinātyā Pātha, Chapter 38).

(2) Bhūmidevi prayed to Śrī Kṛṣṇa and obtained Vaiśaṇḍa-vātra for her son Narākāśura. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 30).

(3) When Paraśurāma was carrying on the annihilation of Kṣatriyas, Bhūmidevi induced the sage Kaśyapa to entreat Paraśurāma to stop his massacre of Bhūpalas. (Protectors of Bhūmi—Kṣatriyas). (M.B. Śantī Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 44).

(4) Once she (Bhūmidevi) described to Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the greatness of Brahminhood. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 22).

(5) At another time she explained to Śrī Kṛṣṇa the nature of Gṛhasthāramadhaṁ, (Duties of a householder). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 97, Verse 5).

(6) On one occasion, when King Aṅga touched her, Bhūmidevi lost her own form and vanished. At that time, Kaśyapa praṇāpate paralysed her. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 152, Verse 2).

(7) Paraśurāma gifted the whole earth to the sage Kaśyapa. From that time Bhūmidevi has been called "Kaśyapī" (daughter of Kaśyapa). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 154, Verse 7).

BHŪMI II. Wife of Dhuṇa. This Bhūmi devi, the daughter of Śiśumāra had two sons named Kalpa and Vatsala, by Dhuṇa. (Bāhagavata, Caturāṇa Skandā).

BHŪMI III. Another Bhūmi, who was the wife of a king named Bhūmpati is mentioned in M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 14).

BHUMIŅJAYA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas. He took his position in the centre of the "Garuḍa Vyūha" (Name of a phalanx) formed by Drona. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 13).

BHŪMIPĀLĀ. A Kṣatriya king of ancient India. He was born from a portion of an Asura called Krodhavāsa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 61).

BHŪMIPARVA. A subdivision of Bhīmparva in Mahābhārata. Chapters 11 and 12 of Bhīma Parva are included in this.

BHUMIPATI. A king of ancient India. There is a reference to this King in M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 14.

BHŪMISAYA. A king in ancient India. M.B. Śāntip Parva, Chapter 166, verse 75 says that King Amātrayās gave a sword to Bhūmisaya who gifted it to Bhūrī, the son of Dusyanta.

BHUPATI. A viśvedeva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 32).

BHŪRI I. A king of the Kuru dynasty. Somadatta, king of the Kuru dynasty had three sons, Bhūri, Bhūrisravas and Sāla. In M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, we read that they had attended the Śvayamvara of Draupadī and in Sābhā Parva, Chapter 94 it is said that they had taken part in Yuddhiṣṭhirā's Rājasyiya. In Droṇa Parva, Chapter 166, we read that this King Bhūri was slain by Śaṭayaki during the war between Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas. After death, Bhūri obtained a place with the Viśvedevas. (M.B. Vṛṣagāraṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 16).

BHŪRI II. A son of the sage Śuka. Vyāsa's son, Śuka married Pivari, the daughter of Pitṛs. She had four sons by Śuka, who were named Kṛṣṇa, Gauraprabha, Bhūri and Devaśrūta, and a daughter named Kirti. (Devi Bāhagavata, Prathama Skandha).

BHŪRIBALĀ. (BhūmaBalā). One of the hundred sons of Dṛḍharaśtra. Mahābhārata Śalīya Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 14 says that at the battle of Kurukṣetra he was slain by Bhīmasena.

BHŪRIDYUMNA I. A king in the assembly of Yama. He attained Heaven (Svargaloka) by virtue of his having performed godāna (gift of cow). (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 8, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 76).

BHŪRIDYUMNA II. A Mahārṣi. This sage once went to Hastināpurā as a messenger of peace. On the way he met with Śrī Kṛṣṇa whom he reverently worshipped by doing "Pradakṣiṇā".

BHŪRIDYUMNA III. He was the only son of Vīradyumna, a King. Bhūridyumna was lost somewhere in the forest. (M.B. Śantī Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 14)

BHŪRIHAN. A Rākṣasa. He was a king in ancient times. (M.B. Śantī Parva, Chapter 277, Verse 51).

BHŪRIKIRTI. A king. He had two daughters, Campli and Samatī who were married by Lava and Kuśa respectively. (Ānanda Rāmāyaṇa, Vivāha Kāṇḍa).

BHŪRISRAVĀ (BHŪRISRAVAS).

(1) General. He was the son of Somadatta, a king of Kuruvamha (Kuru dynasty).

(2) Other details. Bhūrisravas had two brothers named Bhūri and Sāla. They were all present at the Śvayamvara of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 14).

(3) He once described to Duryodhana, the heroic qualities of the Pāṇḍavas and advised him to maintain peaceful relations with them. (M.B. Ādi-Parva, Chapter 199, Dākṣiṇātyā Pātha).

(4) He took part in Yuddhiṣṭhirā's Rājasyiya yajña with his father and brothers. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 8).

(5) In the war between Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas, he arrived with an "Ākṣauḥpiṇī" (A division of the army) in order to give help to Duryodhana. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 16).

1) In Agniseruṣa, Chapter 278, we see another statement that Śaṁant, king of the Lunar dynasty, had three sons, Devāpi, Bālīhika and Somadatta and of them Bālīhika had four sons, Somadatta, Bhūri, Bhūrisravas and Sāla.
(6) Bhīṣma once remarked that Bhūrīṣravas deserved to be counted among the Rāthus and Yāthispati.
(Udyoga Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 29).
(7) On the first day of the battle at Kurukṣetra Bhūrīṣravas fought a duel with Śaṅkha. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 35).
(8) He fought with Śātyaki (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 33).
(9) He killed the ten sons of Śātyaki. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 25).
(10) Defeated Dhrūṣṭaketu in battle. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 35).
(11) He fought a duel with Bhīmasena. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 44).
(12) A duel was fought with Śīkhaṇḍī. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 45).
(13) Bhūrīṣravas fell down under the stroke of Śātyaki. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 142, Verse 59).
(14) Arjuna cut off the left arm of Bhūrīṣravas. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 141, Verse 72).
(15) Enraged by Arjuna's action, Bhūrīṣravas squatted on the ground to attain Śvarga (Heaven). (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 143, Verse 33).
(16) Śātyaki killed Bhūrīṣravas. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 143, Verse 54).
(17) After death Bhūrīṣravas became a Vīśvedeva. (Śvargaśravaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 16).
(18) Some of the other names of Bhūrīṣravas given in Mahābhārata are: Bhūrīḍakṣiṇa, Saḷāḷagṛaja, Kaurava, Kauraveya, Kauravya, Yūpaketana, Yūpaketu, Śārdulā, Kurusreṣṭha, Kurudvahā.

BHUŚUṆḌA.

A king in ancient India. He was born from a portion of the Asura Krodhavāsa, according to Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 63).

BHUŚUṆḌA. A dispassionate and large-hearted crow. The residence of this crow was a Kalpavr̥kṣa standing on a beautiful peak surrounded by luxuriant vegetation in the north-eastern corner of Mahāmeru. There were numerous bird-nests on the southern branch of that Kalpavr̥kṣa. In one of them lived this centuries-old bird.

Once when the sage Vasiṣṭha went to Devaloka, he happened to hear about this crow. He went to see Bhūṣuṇḍa in its nest. The crow recognised Vasiṣṭha at once. They exchanged greetings. The sage opened the conversation as follows:—"Oh, King of birds! when were you born? How did you become a great soul? How old are you? Have you recollections of the past? Who was the prophet who suggested this residence for you?"

The bird calmly replied as follows:—"If you are interested in hearing my past history I shall tell you. Lord Śaṅkara the Almighty lives in this world. He has numerous attendant spirits. Besides these spirits who have hooms on their head, hands in the hooms, teeth in the hands and stomach in the face, and who have faces resembling those of monkeys, camels, and elephants, he has also hooms of Mātr̥s in his retinue. The Mātr̥s, attended by spirits continue their dance in the presence of the Lord. Mountain peaks, the sky, the different worlds, deep pits, cremation grounds, etc. are their haunts. Chief among these Mātr̥s are eight sisters named, Jayā, Vijayā, Jayanti, Aparāhītā, Siddhā, Raktā, Alambuṣā and Uplalā. They have other followers also. Alambuṣā's vehicle is the crow named Caṇḍa. All these Mātr̥s assembled together on one occasion to celebrate a festival in the sky. There was a display of many kinds of entertainments at that time. Disputations in spiritual matters, music, dancing, drinking and other forms of hilarious activities were freely indulged in.

In another part of the sky, their vehicles were also enjoying themselves with similar celebrations of drinking, dancing, and merry-making. The swans who were the vehicles of Brāhmaṇḍevi were dancing in one place, intoxicated by drink. Caṇḍa, the crow, who was Alambaṣā's vehicle, also joined their company. Completely absorbed in their delirious raptures, the intoxicated swans indulged so freely in their amorous pleasures with Caṇḍa that they became pregnant. At last when the merry-makings ended and all of them dispersed, the swans became aware of their plight and informed Brāhmaṇḍ about it. The gracious goddess (Brāhmaṇḍi) told them that in their present state they were unable to discharge their duties in drawing her chariot and so they were allowed to go and enjoy themselves wherever they liked. After this she entered into a trance. The swans in the fullness of time, gave birth to twenty-one sons. We, the twenty-one brothers, are those children. We and our mothers went to Brāhmaṇḍevi and offered worship to her for a long time. As a result, the Devī woke up from her trance and pleased with us, gave us her blessing. After that, we went to our father (Caṇḍa) and offered our devoted services to him and prostrated before him and Alambaṣādevī. They blessed us. We asked our father to suggest a most suitable place for a secluded life. This Kalpa Vṛkṣa is the secluded place recommended by him. We paid obeisance to our father and Alambaṣādevī and came to settle down here. Many ages have passed since then. Now your visit and holy presence here, have liberated me from all worldly bonds and ennobled my life. My twenty brothers lived for many Kalpas and yugas at the end of which, convinced of the meaninglessness of worldly life, renounced their bodies and attained Śīvaloka.

On hearing this, Vasiṣṭha asked Bhūṣuṇḍa to tell him more about his past life. Bhūṣuṇḍa resumed his story:—"Long long ago, the whole earth was full of big rocks, without trees, forests or mountains. After a great flood the surface of the earth was covered with ashes. In one caturyuga (a period equal to the length of the four yugas, Kṛta, tretā, dvāpara and Kali) the earth was filled with forest trees and in another Caturyuga, mountain ranges appeared. I have seen an age in which Brāhmaṇḍas were drunkards, Śūdras were virtuous and women of noble families committed adultery. You have now been born in the eightieth "Jānma" as the son of Brahmat. You were born once from the sky, at another time from water, then from the mountain and again from fire. I can remember this earth sinking into the ocean five times and Lord Viṣṇu taking the form of a tortoise, lifting it up, above the water. I have seen the ocean of milk being churned twelve times. I know that Hiranayāka had taken the earth three times to Pātāla (underworld). The Lord has incarnated six times as Bhargava Rāma. Incarnation of Buddha has taken place in six Kaliyugas. Tripuradahana (burning of the Tripurāsuras) has taken place thirty times. Dakaṣa yāga was broken up twice. Lord Śiva has slain ten Indras. He fought seven times with Śri Kṛṣṇa for the sake of Bāṇa. I also remember another epic entitled BHUTADHAMĀ. An Indra. This Indra is different from the actual Indra. There is reference to this Indra in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 28.

BHUTAJYOTI. A king who was the father of Vasu and son of Sumati.

BHUTAKARMĀ. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas in the battle at Kurukṣetra. He was killed by Satānīka, the son of Nakula. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 25).

BHUTĀYAYA (M). A famous village in the purāṇas. It was a resort of thieves and robbers. Dead bodies were often thrown into the river which was flowing through this village. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 129, verse 9 says that it was against Śastras to bathe in this river.

BHUTAMATHANA. A warrior of Subrahmānya. (M. B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 69).

BHUTASANTĀPANA. One of the sons of Hiranyakṣa, (Bhāgavata, Saptama Skandha).

BHUTAŚARMA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pāṇḍavas. He had taken his position in the "Garuḍavṛttā" (name of a phalanx) formed by Droṇācārya. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 6).

BHUTAS. (A set of beings created by Rudra).

1) General. A Mānava class or sect in ancient India. In the Purāṇas, this Mānava sect is classified into four subdivisions. (1) Bhīmaśarva (2) Iśvarapala (3) Kāśyapapala (4) Pulahapala.

2) Birth. In the Brahmāṇa Purāṇa there is the following story about the birth and shape of Bhutas—Bhutas are one of the subdivisions of Pulaha's creations. Long ago, Brahmā asked the Rudra, Nilalohita, to perform the function of creation. Accordingly he begot thousands of Bhutas in the womb of his wife Sati. All the issues were the exact replica of his own figure. Lean limbs, long ears, thick hanging lips, red eyes, bushy eyebrows, long, pointed and protruding teeth, long nails, matted dirty hair etc, were the grotesque features of these Bhutas. These music-haters used serpents as their Yajnopavitas (sacred threads). These spirits who loitered in Siva's assembly were, as a rule, naked and carried skulls on their heads. But at times they wore fantastic dress with elephant skin. Their chief weapons were, trident, bow, sword, etc.

3) Bhūta Čīte. In the Purāṇas, Rudra is acknowledged as the Bhūta chief. That is why Rudra is known by such names as "Bhūtanāyaka", "Gaṇanāyaka", "Rudrānīcara", "Bhavaparāśa" etc. But since the common name Rudra is used for the ruler (king) of all the Bhutas, Vāmana Purāṇa declares that Rudra is not an individual. Both Vāmanapuraṇa and Matsyapuraṇa represent Virabhadra and Nandikeśvara as two Rudras who are the masters of Bhutas. (Matsyapuraṇa 181, 2; Vāmanapuraṇa 4, 17).

In Vāmana Purāṇa, the number of Bhutas is given as 11 crores. Skanda, Sākha, Bhairava are the chief among them. Under them are innumerable Bhutas, Ashes and Khatvāṅga etc, are their weapons. The emblem on the banner is a cow or a bird. That is how the Gaṇanāyakas have got the titles like "Māyārādhva", "Māyārāvāna". (Vāmanā Purāṇa 67, 1-23).

4) War with Asuras. In the war between Śiva and Andhakāsura, the Bhutas fought on the side of Śiva. It was Vinayaka, the master of the Bhuta hordes who first came into conflict with the Asura. In that battle Andhaka defeated Vinayaka. After that, Nandi, another leader of the Bhutas, attacked Andhaka jointly with Vinayaka and defeated him. At last, Andhaka approached Śiva himself for protection, and Śiva received him and appointed him as commander of one of his hordes of Bhutas. It is this Andhakāsura who later became famous under the name of Bhīrūga.

In this way, the Bhutas had fought many battles with the Asuras, joining the party of the Devas. But at the time of Dakṣa's yajña, they joined the party of the Asuras and opposed the Devas.

Although the Bhutas won all the battles they fought both on the side of the Devas and on the side of the Asuras, in the end they had to leave north India and come to settle down south in India. By the time Vaivasvata manvantara they had already become South Indians.

BHŪTIVARMĀ. A Rākṣasa who was the friend of Kanabhubi. (Kathāsāritsāgara).

BHUVANA I. A Māhārṣi who visited Bhīma when he was lying on the verge of death. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 81).

BHUVANA II. A sanātana Viṣvadeva. There is a reference to him in M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 35.

BHUVANA II. A sanātana Viṣvadeva. There is a reference to him in M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 35.

BHUVANA. Bṛhaspati's sister. She was married to Prabhāsa, one of the Aṣṭavasus. A son named Viśva-karmā was born to them. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, 3-3-21-29).

BHUVANEŚA. See the word Bhadraśravas.

BIBHATSU. One of the ten names of Arjuna. He got this name because he desisted from doing loathful acts. "I will never resort to loathful deeds in war. Therefore the devas and men call me Bibhatsu". (Mahābhārata, Vīrata Parva, Chapter 44, Stanza 18).

BIDALĀ. A minister of Mahiṣāsura. (Devī Bhāgavata).

BIDALOPĀKYĀNA. See the word Dīnḍika.

BIDAUJAS. A son born to Aditi by the blessings of Viṣṇu. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmi-kāṇḍa, Chapter 3).

BHILVA. (VILVA). A devotee of Viṣṇu. There is a story in Skanda Purāṇa about Bhilva who lived as a Vaiṣṇavite first and then was converted to a Śaivite.

In the beginning Brahmā created many things among which Viśṇu (tree) (Crataeva religiosa) also was created. Under that tree an anonymous man began to live. Brahmā gave him the name Viśṇu. Being pleased at the behaviour and devotion of Bhilva, Indra asked him to turn the wheel of administration of the earth. Accepting the offer Bhilva requested Indra to give him the Vajra (diamond) for the smooth running of the administration of the earth. Indra told him that vajraśuddha (diamond-weapons) would be at his disposal, when he thought about it, if the occasion required it.

Once Kapila a Śaivite reached the palace of Bhilva. After a long conversation both became fast friends. One day there was a debate between Bilva and Kapila as to whether penance or Action (doing one's duty) was appreciable. In this discussion Bilva lost the equilibrium of his mind and thinking of the diamond-weapon of Indra cut off the head of Kapila. In Kapila there was the power of penance as well as the power of Śiva. So through Śiva Kapila got immortality. In the meanwhile Bilva went to Viśṇu and got a boon that every living thing in the earth should fear him. But the boon was futile. This was a turning point for Bilva. The mind of Bilva changed to devotion for Śiva. He concentrated his attention on the worship of Śivalīnga at the forest of Mahākāla. One day Kapila came by that way and was greeted by Bilva with honour and regard, and they again became fast friends.

BILVAKA. A famous serpent born to Kaśyapa prajāpati of his wife Kadrū. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 12).

BILVAKATĪRTHA. A holy place in Haradvāra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anusāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 13 that those who bathe in this holy Bath will attain heaven.

BILVAPĀṇḌURA. A serpent. The father of this serpent was Kaśyapa and mother, Kadrū. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 12).

BILVAPATRA. A serpent born in the family of Kaśyapa prajāpati. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 14).

BILVATEJA. A serpent born in the family of Takṣaka. This serpent was burnt to death by falling in the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 9).

BINDUGA. A Brāhmaṇa who lived in the village of Bāṣkala. Being a frequenter of the houses of harlots and of various other mean habits, he had led his wife Caṇḍalā also to lead an immoral life. Once Binduga called his wife and told her thus: "You may continue the life of a harlot; but all the money acquired must be handed over to me." Thus they continued their lives and after their death both were reborn as devils in the mountain of Vīndhya. In the midst of their life as devils, once it chanced for Caṇḍalā to hear the Śiva Purāṇa recited and she got her shape of devil changed. She requested Pārvatī to change the shape of her husband also. Pārvatī sent her attendant Tumburu to Binduga to tell him the story of Śiva and thus he also got his form changed. (Śiva Purāṇa Māhāmya).

BINDUMATI. The queen of the great King Māndhātā. Bindumati was the daughter of the King Śaśābindū. Purukutsa and Mucukunda were the two sons born to her from Māndhātā. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

BINDUSARAS. A holy place famous in the Purāṇas. The following information is obtained from the Purāṇas about this holy place.

(1) Bīndusarās lies on the north of the Mount Kailāsa. (Mahābhārata Sābhā Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 2).

(2) It was at Bīndusarās that Bhagiratha did penance to bring down Gaṅgā to the earth (Śābhā Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 10).

(3) Devendra performed hundred sacrifices at this place. (Mahā Bhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 3).

(4) Once Śiva performed a sacrifice at Bīndusarās. (Śābhā Parva, Chapter 3).

(5) Śrī Kaṭṭha did penance here for several years to get righteousness. (Śābhā Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 11).

(6) At this place, Maya, the asura gave Arjuna the famous conch known as Devadatta and to Bhīmasena the famous club of Vṛṣaparvā. (Śābhā Parva, Chapter 3).

BODHA. A king. In the Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 20, mention is made that this King fled to South India with his brothers and relatives fearing the attack of Jarāsandha.

BODHA M. A place in ancient India. It is famous in the Purāṇa. Mention is made about this place in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 39.

BODHAYANA. An individual of the lineage of teachers. (See the word Guruparaṉṭā).

BODHISATTVA. A good-natured husband generally quoted in Sanskrit works. The following is the story given about him in Kāthāsārīśāgara, Tārāṅga 9. Once there lived a wealthy Vaiśya, who had a son named Bodhisattva. When the childhood of the boy was at an end his mother died. The Vaiśya married again and got his son also married. Because of the ear-buzzing of his wife, the Vaiśya drov his son out of the house. Bodhisattva left the house of his father, with his wife. By and by they reached a desert. Not a drop of water was to be had. There was not even the shoot of a grass. It was a sandy place with nothing else in sight. He walked for seven days carrying his wife on his shoulders. His wife grew wary and worn with hunger and thirst. Seeing that she was about to die he gave her his flesh and blood. The wicked woman took them and saved herself from death. On the eighth day they reached the jungles of a hilly place full of fruit-trees and with a river with grassy banks, flowing down to the valley. With fruits and cool water he appeased the hunger and thirst of his wife. Then he got down to the river to take a bath. He saw a man with his limbs cut off, coming afloat. Now and then he was producing pitiable sounds. The kind son of the Vaiśya, without minding his weakness due to fast for the last seven days, swam to the man and brought him to the bank of the river. He did all services possible for him. Then he asked him who had cut off his limbs. He replied that his enemies had done so, with the intention that he might die suffering severe pain for a long time. The Vaiśya's son stood still for a little while. Then he took his bath. With his wife he lived in the forest doing penance. The wounds of the man he saved had been healed. The Vaiśya's son, one day, went out to the forest to gather fruits and roots for their food. At that time his wife grew lustful and had coition with the man without limbs. Gradually she began to dote on him. She decided to kill her husband who was an impediment on her way. She pretended to be ill. The Vaiśya's son began to treat her. One day she took her husband to the edge of a very deep well and said: "See, there is a divine herb at the bottom of this well. I will be cured if I could eat it. This is a goddess told me in a dream yesternight". Hearing this her husband made a rope, and tied it to a tree. Then he began to go down the well by the rope. She cut the rope and the man fell into the well. There was a passage from the well to the river. The current took him through that passage to the river. He got out of the river, and sat under a tree thinking of the wickedness of women. There was a city close by. At that time the King of the city was dead and there was no heir left. The subjects of the city brought an elephant and said, "whom ever this elephant takes and places on his back shall be our king". They sent the elephant out. The elephant was pleased at the virtuous character of the son of the Vaisyā. So taking him, as if he was God, placed him on its back and walked to the city. The people gathered round him and anointed him as their King. The son of the Vaisyā became King. He never even thought of women who are generally fickle and wicked. The wicked wife of the Vaisyā’s son took the limbless man on her shoulder and wandered about saying, “The enemies of my husband have put him in this plight. Because of my conjugal fidelity I carry him thus and earn our daily bread. Please give us alms”. In this manner she spent her days in begging. Thus wandering from place to place she reached the city where the Vaisyā’s son was the King. The people, seeing her loyalty to her husband, honoured her and spoke highly of her. Hearing that a very loyal wife had reached his city the King sent for her. The King recognized her instantly. But she did not know him. The King reminded her of her deeds of the past one by one and began to tease and scold her. Finally when she understood that the King was her husband she was dumb-founded. The amazed ministers looked at each other. The King revealed everything to them. The ministers disfigured her and drove her away.

BODHYA. A famous teacher-priest. Once there was a discussion between Nahuśa and Bodhya on Philosophy. The summary of what Bodhya said is as follows:—
Before I advise others, I do it myself first. I am the teacher of none. I take the world as my teacher. I learned the lessons of harmlessness from snakes, disappointment from Pīngala, self-sacrifice from animals, concentration from the archer, and loneliness from a maid who is a spinster. (M.B., Śaṅti Parva, 171, 56, 61).
This hermit came to the King Yayāti and taught him philosophy and ethics. The whole of the Chapter 171 of Mahābhārata, Śaṅti Parva, comprises the exhortations of this hermit, which are known by the famous name Bodhya-Śiṣṭa (Song of Bodhya).

BRADHINĀŚVA. A king. Agastya once approached this King to request him for some wealth. (See the word Agastya).

BRAHMĀ:
One of the trimūrtis of the Hindu Pantheon. The trimūrtis are Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva.

1) General information. God who is the creator of the Universe. It is mentioned in the Purāṇas that Brahmā creates, Viṣṇu preserves and Paramāśiva destroys the universe.

2) The birth of Brahmā. The birth of Brahmā is from the navel of Viṣṇu. It is mentioned in Devī Purāṇa, Skanda 1, about the birth of Brahmā as follows:—

In the beginning Mahāviṣṇu lay on a banyan leaf in the shape of a baby and began to think, “Who am I? Who created me? What for? What is my work? Where to work?” and so on. At that time an ethereal voice said:—
“Sarvaṁ khalidvamevāṁ nānyadasti sāntanaṁ”. * Mahāviṣṇu was amazed at this ethereal voice. He did not know whose oracle it was. Still He lay meditating upon the words. Then Mahādevi, with four hands and weapons such as Śaṅkha (conch), Cakra (wheel), Gadā (club), Padma (lotus) and maids who are prosperity and having worn glorious clothes and ornaments, and accompanied by the Saktis (powers) named Rati, Bhūti, Budhī, Mati, Kirtī, Dharī, Śrī, Svarādh, Medhā, Svadhā, Śvāhā, Kṣudhā, Nirā, Dayā, Gati, Tuṣṭi, Puṣṭi, Kṣamā, Lajjā, Jñābhā and Tandrā, appeared before Mahāviṣṇu, who was struck with wonder. Mahādevi said, “Oh, Viṣṇu, what is there to wonder at? Every time the universe is subjected to creation, preservation and destruction, you are born thus due to the great power of the supreme spirit. It seems that you have forgotten those matters. Know that the supreme power is beyond qualities. We are all with qualities. Your main quality is Sattva. From your navel Brahmā will be born. His attribute is Rajoguṇa (activity, passion or motion). From the middle of the eyebrows of Brahmā, will be born Rudra, whose attribute will be Tāmasaṅgūṇa (darkness). Brahmā, with the power of penance, will acquire the ability of creation and by his attribute of Rajoguṇa will create the world in the colour of blood. You will be the preserver of that world. The same world will be destroyed by Rudra at the end of the Kalpa (world age)”.

Accordingly from the navel of Viṣṇu a lotus grew up and in that lotus flower Brahmā took his form. The same Brahmadeva did penance before Mahāviṣṇu and Jagaddambā, who were pleased at his penance and gave him all the boons he wanted. After that Brahmā began the work of creation. He created with his mind the Saptarśis (seven sages) and then the Prajāpatīs (the lords of emanation). From them all the movables and the immovables in the universe came into existence. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

In manuṣyā, Chapter 1, the following stanza about the creation of Brahmā occurs.

“Tadānāṁmahāvad haimam Sahasrāṁśusamaprabhaṁ /
Tasmin jajne svayaṁ Brahmā Sarvalokāpatmapaṁ”

That egg was as radiant as the Sun, with the colour of gold. Brahmā the great grandfather of everything in the world took birth by himself in it.
From the supreme power, an egg fell on the water which was the first creation. That egg became a germ of golden colour. Creating a life, which had done penance in its former births in such a way as to enable it to become Brahmā, in the golden germ of the egg, the supreme power entered the life that is to become Brahmā as its inner guide. That Brahmā is known as the Pitāmaha (Grandfather of the manes) or Paternal grandfather of all the worlds.”

Vāmanapurāṇa Chapter 43 states as follows about the creation of Brahmā:

Ages before the beginning, when all the worlds with everything they contained were submerged in the single ocean of the great flood, the germ of living things formed itself into a big egg. Brahmā who had been inside the egg went to a long sleep. The sleep continued for a thousand yugas (ages) when Brahmā woke up; as Sattva guṇa (purity) was the foremost attribute of him, he saw that the world was void. When the thought of creation occurred in his mind Rajoguṇa (activity or passion) became his foremost attribute. Rajas is the attribute that creates and Sattva, that which preserves. At the time of destruction Tamoguṇa (darkness) becomes the foremost attribute. That Bhagavān (Supreme (Spirit) the Puruṣa (the Male creative Energy) pervades over everything, in all the living worlds. That Eternal Being is Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva.

Knowing that the world was lying in pure water, the Bhagavān (Supreme Being) cut the egg open. From it the Oṁkāra (the sacred syllable 'Oṁ') emanated. The first sound of it was 'Bhūḥ', the second, sound, 'Bhuvah' and the third sound 'Svāḥ'. So they came to be known as 'Bhūbhuvah Svāḥ'. Then the glorious radiance of the sun was born from it and Brahmā the grandfather of the worlds originated in the centre of the egg.

9) Instigation to compose Rāmāyaṇa. It was Brahmā who instigated Vālmiki to compose the Rāmāyaṇa.

A fowler of the forest tribe shot down one of a couple of snipes which were carrying on love-making, on the banks of the River Tamasa. Seeing this Vālmiki cursed the fowler. The curse came out of the mouth of Brahmā in the form of a verse, "mā niśāda pratiṣṭhām tvamagamāḥ sāvatiḥ samāḥ, yat krauṣṇamithunādekam, avadāhī kāmāmābham", which according to hearsay, is the first piece of poetry in the world. Brahmā who was attracted by the poetry came to the hermitage of Vālmiki and instigated him to compose the story of Rāma in verse. It is stated in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākāṇḍa, Sarga 2, that the Rāmāyaṇa was composed thus.

4) Rāvaṇa is given a boon. It was Brahmā who made Rāvaṇa an ever-powerful hero. Penance was done by Rāvaṇa in the vicinity of the Himālayas and Brahmā appeared before him and granted him the boon that no living creature except man, would kill him. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 16).

5) The loss of a head. Long ago Śiva plucked off a head of Brahmā. This story occurs in various purāṇas with slight changes. Two of them are given below:

1) In olden days, in the period of Satayuga, Mahāviṣṇu did penance in Svetadvipa (the island Sveta) to obtain Eternal Bliss, being deeply engaged in the study of Brahmavidyā. Brahmā also went to another place and began to do penance for the suppression of passions. Both were doing severe penance. So they began to walk in order to take rest from the penance. On the way they met each other. One asked "who are you?" The other also asked the same question. The talk ended in a contest as to who was the greater of the two. Each claimed himself to be the supreme power of the world. Neither of them was prepared to recognize the claims of the other. In the midst of this contest, a phallus, extra-ordinarily bulky and fair appeared before them and an ethereal voice said from the sky: "You need not quarrel as to who is superior. He who reaches the extremity of this phallus is the superior person. So both of you proceed, one upwards and the other downwards and find out the end." Hearing this Viṣṇu went downwards to find out the bottom and Brahmā, upwards to the top. Viṣṇu travelled for a long time and finding no end thought the attempt futile and returned to the starting point with disappointment and sat down. Brahmā travelled upwards for a long time and found no end. On the way he saw the petal of a paṇḍānus flower, coming down from the sky. Brahmā took it and joyfully returned and said haughtily to Viṣṇu: "See, I have taken this flower from the head of the Phallus. I have brought this to convince you. You have been defeated. So can you not admit that I am the superior?" Mahāviṣṇu did not believe the words of Brahmā. So he called the Paṇḍānus flower to him and questioned it. The Paṇḍānus flower took false oath and witnessed in favour of Brahmā, who had asked the flower beforehand to be on his side. Mahāviṣṇu did not believe this either and said, "Let Śiva be witness to this flower!" Śiva at these words appeared before them and revealed the deceit played by Brahmā and the flower and then cursed the Paṇḍānus flower that thenceforward it should not have a place among the flowers of oblation to Śiva. Then Śiva got angry and plucked off a head of Brahmā. That is the skull Śiva uses for receiving alms. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 5.2)

2) In days of old all the worlds with everything in them were under water in a single ocean. The Sun, the Moon, the Stars, air, fire, everything was destroyed. A day of utter darkness appeared. Grass, bush all were destroyed. Nothing could be seen and recognized. All existents and non-existent were destroyed. Bhagavān, (Supreme Being) was sleeping continuously for so many thousands of nights. At the end of the night Bhagavān assumed the attribute of Rajas (Activity) and got ready for the work of creation. He, the knower of all Vedas and Vedāṅgas appeared in the shape of a wonderful being with five faces. Another being with three eyes, matted hair, a trident in one hand, and a garland of beads in the other, and with darkness as its attribute took shape. That being was called Puruṣa (the male creative energy). Then the Mahātmā (the Supreme Spirit) created Ahamkāra (Egoism). It affected Brahmā and Śiva. Overcome by egoism, Śiva said to Brahmā:—"Who are you? Who created you?" Swelled with egoism Brahmā asked in reply:—"Who are you? Who are your parents? Let me hear it." This talk ended in a quarrel. The origin of Bhagavān (the Lord) was from this quarrel. Immediately after his birth the Lord took an unparralled lute and playing it, went up to the sky. Śiva being defeated by Brahmā, bowed his head and coloured. While Parameśvara was standing angrily thus, the fifth face told him, "You, who are having three eyes and whose attribute is darkness! look here! I will tell you all. You, who wear air as garments, and ride on an ox, are the destroyer of the world." Hearing these words Śiva grew more and more angry, opened his third eye and looked steadily at Brahmā to burn him. Seeing the faces shining like the Sun Brahmā said, "When you beat on water, bubbles will appear. But do they have any prowess? Hearing this, Śiva plucked off the head of Brahmā with the tip of his finger nails. (Vāman Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

5) Changing Vijayalakṣmi to Lākkālakṣmi, by curse. Vijayalakṣmi, one of the eight Lākmīs, was the treasurer-keeper of Brahmā. Once she became careless in discharging her duties. Brahmā got angry and cursed her. "You go to Rāvaṇa and keep his tower" She humbly requested for absolution from the curse. Brahmā said, "At the time of the incarnation of Śrī Rāma, a monkey-hero named Hanumān will reach Lākṣā in search of Śrī Rāma's wife, whom Rāvaṇa had kidnapped. You will obstruct him, and he will strike you down. On that day you will be absolved from the curse and you will return here instantly." Accordingly Vijayalakṣmi was born in Laikā under the name Laikālakṣṇi. When Hanumān jumped to Laikā she prevented him, and he struck her down to the ground. (Kāraṇa Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa).

6) Brahmā cursing the daughters of Himāvān. Three daughters named Kūṭilā, Rāgīṇī and Pārvatī and a son named Sunābha were born to Himāvān by his wife Menā. The three daughters went to the Himālayas for penance, to get Śiva as husband. They were not even six years old then. The devas saw them. The Ādiptas and the Vasus took Kūṭilā who was doing penance, to the world of the gods. All the gods gathered together and asked Brahmā, “Oh Lord, be pleased to tell us if this girl will be able to bear a son who could kill Mahiśāṣura”. Brahmā replied, “This poor girl will not be capable of bearing the radiance of Śiva. So let her go away.” Kūṭilā got angry at Brahmā and said “Lord, I will try to become fit to bear the unbearable radiance of Śiva. Harken, I will do penance properly and please Viṣṇu and make Śiva bow his head. I take a vow to that effect.” Brahmā became angry and told Kūṭilā, “You, wicked Kūṭilā, you did not succumb to my words. So by my curse you will be turned to water.”

Kūṭilā having been cursed by Brahmā became water and began to flood the world of Brahmā. Seeing the flow of water, Brahmā made cause-ways on four sides with the Vedas of Rg, Yajus, Sāma and Aṣṭāvakra. Thus being tied up she stays in the world of Brahmā.

The Devas took Rāgīṇī also before Brahmā and put the same question. The reply of Brahmā was the same as before. She also got angry and said to Brahmā, “I will do great penance so as to enable to give birth to one in my family to be the killer of Mahiśāṣura.” Brahmā cursed her also. “You are deliberately disobeying my words which even devas won’t gainsay. So you will become the colours of the twilight.” Thus she became the fast colours of the twilight, and her body was divided among the Pleiades. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

7) Giving a boon to a tiger and golden colour to Pārvatī. The first name of Pārvatī, the daughter of Himāvān was Kāli. She was given this name (Kāli) because of her dark complexion. After the marriage Śiva and Pārvatī led a household life in the golden house built by Viṣṇu. Once Śiva called Devī humorously, by the name Kāli. Pārvatī got angry and said to her husband, “A wound by an arrow will be cured. If you cut down a tree by an axe it will sprout again. A wound inflicted by hard words will never be cured. The arrows of words shoot out of the mouth. Those who are hit by them suffer pain day and night. Wise people should not shoot them at others. You have violated that principle. So my lord, I am going to do intensive penance. I will endeavour to create such a condition, that you may not call me by the name Kāli again.” Saying thus, Pārvatī bowed before Paramesvara and bidding good-bye she went up into the air and reached the peak of Himālayas and thought of Jayā, Vijāyā, Jayantī and Aparajitā. Instantly they arrived to see Kāli. They got permission and stayed with Pārvatī to attend on her.

While Pārvatī was engaged in doing penance, a tiger, with his weapons of tusks and claws came there from the jungles of the Himālayas. Umā (Pārvatī) was standing on one leg. The tiger began to think, “I shall do it when it is needed”. Thinking thus it gazed at the face of Devī with staring eyes and consequently it lost one eye. Pronouncing the word Brahmā Devī did penance for a hundred years. After that Brahmā, the Lord of the three worlds appeared before her and said to her: “I am much pleased. Your penance was flawless. Ask your boon.” Kāli replied, “Oh, Lotus-born! First give this tiger a boon. It will please me.” Then Brahmā gave the wonderful tiger leadership of the Gaṇas, devotion to Śiva, invincibility and righteousness. After giving the tiger this boon Brahmā told Pārvatī, “Now, Ambikā, ask your boon. Don’t hesitate, I will grant the boon.” Then Pārvatī asked the boon. “Brahmā, give me golden colour”. Brahmā said “Let it be so”, and disappeared. The dark complexion of Pārvatī disappeared. She got the colour of the filament of the lotus flower. From the discarded skin Kātyāyani was born. Then Indra appeared and asked for her as a gift. Indra requested Pārvatī on behalf of heaven. “Let me have her. Let this Kauśikī be my sister. Because she was born from your Kōsa, (outer skin) she is Kauśikī, I am also Kauśikī.” Devī gave the beautiful Kauśikī to Indra. Sahasrākṣa (Indra who has thousand eyes) took her to the Vindhyā mountain; when they reached there Indra told her. “You stay on this mount, honoured and revered by gods. You will be known as Vindhyavāsini (who stays on the Vindhyā). He consecrated the goddess there. She was given a lion as her carrier (Vāhana) “You destroy the asuras” saying so Indra returned to Heaven. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 54).

8) Brahmā became river. Long ago in the period of Cākṣuṣa manvantara (the age of a Manu), Brahmā decided to perform a sacrifice on the Sahya Mountain and preparations were made for it. Brahmā came with Viṣṇu and Śiva. Bhṛgū and the other hermits took their seats. Mahāvīru called Svarādevi, the wife of Brahmā. But she was very slow in coming. The hermit Bhṛgū said to Viṣṇu : “You yourself have gone to call Devī. But she is very slow. The auspicious moment is coming to an end. So how are we to commence the rituals? If Śvarā does not appear before the end of the stipulated time we shall seat Gāyatrī in her place”, said Viṣṇu. Śiva also agreed to it. So Bhṛgū seated Gāyatrī on the right side of Brahmā and the rituals were performed. By then Svarā reached the sacrificial hall. When she saw that Gāyatrī was placed in her place and the rituals were performed she became angry, because of her quarrel with her co-wife. She called out: “Where the person to whom respect is due, is not given respect and where the person who ought not to be respected is given undue respect, there, scarcity, death and fear will be rampant. She dared to sit on the right in my place. So she will grow lean and become a river which will not be seen in the world. All of you will become rivers because you have placed a person lower than me in my position.” Hearing the curse of Svarā, Gāyatrī rose up trembling, and cursed Svarā also to become a river. Before Svarā was changed to a river, Brahmā and the other gods rose up and requested for absolution from the curse. Svarā said, “Gods, it is because you have not given oblataions to Gānapati in the beginning of the sacrifice, that this break, due to my anger, has been caused. My curse cannot be futile. So each of you change to a river by your portions and we, your wives, will also become rivers by your portions, and flow to the west.”
Thus Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Maheśvara became rivers with their portions. Brahmā became the fast-flowing Kukumati, Mahāviṣṇu changed to river Kṛṣṇa and Śiva, the river Veṣṇi. The devas also changed their portions to rivers and flowed from the Sahya mountain to the east and their wives changed to rivers by their portions and flowed to the west. Svarā and Gāyatrī flowed as two rivers to the west and then joined together as one river called Śāvitrī. Viṣṇu and Śiva who were consecrated at the sacrifice by Brahmā came to be called Bala and Atibala (Powerful and more powerful). This is the origin of the rivers in Kerala. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 113).

9) Brahmā is not worshipped. Long ago Brahmā and Viṣṇu went to see Śiva near Himavān. They saw a shining phallus there in front of them. It was of immense size. One of them went downwards and the other upwards to find out the end of it. Both returned without reaching the top or the bottom and by penance they pleaded Śiva who appeared before them and asked them what boon they desired. Brahmā asked Śiva to take birth as his son. Śiva did not like this and said that nobody would worship Brahmā because of his extravagant desire (namely, to have Śiva as his son). Viṣṇu requested that he should be made a servant at Śiva’s feet. So Viṣṇu incarnated as Śiva’s Śakti (power). That Śakti is Pārvatī. So Viṣṇu and Pārvatī are one and the same in a sense. (Kathāsārītāgāra, Kathāpīṭhālambakaṁ, Tārāṅga 1).

10) The abode of Brahmā. It is said in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8, that the abode of Brahmā is on the top of Mount Mahāmeru. There are nine towns there. Mano-vatī which is in the centre, is the town of Brahmā. Due east of Mano-vatī stands Amara-vatī, the town of Indra. On the south-east corner there is Rajovatī which is owned by Agni (fire-god). Due south of Brahmāpurī there is the town of Sānīyamani which is the town of Yama (God of death) On the south west corner there is the town of Nīrītī. It is named Kṛṣṇānąga. On the west there is the town called Śraddhāvatī. It is the abode of God Varuṇa. On the north-west corner there is the town called Gandhavatī which is the abode of Bhagavān Vāyu (Wind-God). Due north to Brahmāpurī stands the town of Kubera (God of wealth). It is known by the name Mahodaya. On the north east corner there is the city of Śiva. It is known as Yaśovatī.

11) The sons of Brahmā. Brahmā is the creator of all the living things in the world. Still mention is made in the Purāṇas about countless divine persons who were born from the mind and body of Brahmā, directly and indirectly. They are given below in groups

1) Marici, Anigirās, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha, and Kratu. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 10, that these six grand hermits were born from the mind of Brahmā.

2) Dvātā and Visūtā. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 51 that these two were good sons born to Brahmā.

3) Rudra. Mention is made in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20, that Brahmā had a roaring son who was named Rudra.

4) Svāyabhnāhu Manu. It occurs in Bhāgavata Skandha 11, that Manu Svāyabhnāhu was the son of Brahmā.

5) Kandarpa (Kāmadeva—Cupid). In Kathāsāritāgāra, Lāvānakalāmbakā, Tārāṅga 6, it is mentioned that Cupid was born from the Egoism of Brahmā.

6) Madhukā and Gokā. In Uttara Rāmāyaṇa, mention is made that from the playful habit of Brahmā, a giant named Madhukā and a giantess named Gokā were born.

7) Bhrigu. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 8, that the hermit Bhrigu was the son of Brahmā.

8) Jāmbavān. It is seen in Kapāla Rāmāyaṇa that Jāmbavān was born from the sweat of Brahmā.

9) The Sanakas. In Bhāgavata mention is made that the Sanakas (Sanaka, Sanandha, Sanatana and Sanatkumāra) were sons of Brahmā.

10) In Mahābhārata, Amuśāsana Parva there is a passage given as the words of Vasiṣṭha spoken to Bhrigu, about the birth of many of the sons of Brahmā. “May I tell you a story I have heard long ago about the revelation of Brahmā of himself?”

Lord Rudra took the form of Varuṇa and performed a sacrifice. Many hermits, all the devas, Agni and others, Vaśātka (Exclamation in sacrifice) which took body, and all yājñāṅgas came to the sacrificial hall. All the expediens, all the glories which are thousands in number took shape and came to the sacrifice. Ṛgveda arrayed in garments of heroism came there. All the omens, all the voices, all the emotions, all the etymologies of pronouncing Veda Sūktas, all the svabhaktikas, Oṃkāra (the syllable Oṁ) the eye of all the Vedic metres and their theories, all restraints and donations, all Vedas, Upaniṣads, accomplishments, Śāvitrī, the past, the near future and distant future, all these came there. The Lord Śiva held everyone of them. He offered his spirit by his spirit. The sacrifice took many forms and shed rādianes. Paramaśiva is heaven, the sky, the earth, is the ether and the husband of the Earth, is the lord of all accomplishments, is noble and the lord of radiance. This Lord is lauded by the names Brahmā, Śiva, Rudra, Varuṇa, Agni, and Prabhāvatī. Śiva is the King of all the worlds. Penances, sacrifices, vows embrazed by fast, all the directions and gods of directions, Indras, celestial maids, mothers of the worlds, all these assumed forms and came to the sacrifice in multitudes. Everybody who witnessed the sacrifice of Paramesvara, who was in the form of Varuṇa, was greatly pleased. Seeing the pleased celestial maids standing in rows passion arose in Brahmā. He had seminal discharge. Aḍīya (the Sun) took the earth on which the semen fell and threw it into the sacrificial fire, which blazed furiously. Brahmā who became the offerer of obligation had discharge again. He got it in the sacrificial ladle and with recitation of spells offered it in the sacrificial fire as if it was ghee. The powerful semen contained the three attributes of Satvā, Rajas and Tamas. From the attribute of Rajas arose the living world which had activity as its purpose. Radiance is the quality of Satvā which entered the living and nonliving world. It gives light to everything. It also gives the power of discrimination. From the semen offered in the fire, three sons with body and the attributes of demi-gods came out. The male who originated from the flame called ‘Bharjana’ became Anigirās. The male who originated from the burning coals became Kavi. Over and above these three radiances, other radiances also originated from the sacrificial fire. From the Marcies...
(rays) of the fire Marici the father of Kaśyapa was born. From the Kuśa-grass spread on the floor of the hall of sacrifice, the Bālakhiyās were born. Atri also was born from the Kuśa-grass. The noble hermits called Vaikhañnasas, who have grown powerful by penance and became the seat of all good qualities, were born from the sacrificial ashes. From the stream of fire which are the eyes of the sacrificial fire the handsome Āśvins were born. The rest of the Prajāpatis were born from the cars of the fire. From the pores of the skin of fire were born the hermits, from the sweat the 'chandhas' (metre of Vedas) and from might, the mind. For this reason the Vedic scholars and knowers of the Śruti and those who see the superiority of Vedas, say that fire is a combination of all the gods. The trees that feed the fire are called Māsas (months), the sap of the tree is called Pakṣa (half of the month i.e. full moon to new moon and new moon to full moon), the pith of the tree is called night and day and the flames are called Muhūrtas (auspicious moments). Rudras were born from the blood of fire and the golden coloured gods, the Maitras, also were born from the blood of fire. From the smoke of the fire, the Vāsas, from the flame of the fire Rudras and the Ādityas of the extreme radiance were born. The planets and stars which stand in their places in the sky are the charcoal of the fire. Brahmā declared that fire was Brahmā the supreme spirit, eternal and the giver of all wishes. The sinless Mahādeva, who was in the form of Varuṇa said, "This sacrificial fire is mine, and I am the sacrificer. So the children born as the first fruit of this sacrifice are mine. So Bhṛgu, Aūgiras and Kavi are my sons, no doubt. Let everybody who moves along the sky know that these three are my sons, the fruit of my sacrifice." Agni said, "These are born from my organs. They had been depending on me for their sustenance. So they are my sons." Brahmā the teacher of all the worlds and the grandfather of all living beings said, "They are my sons. I offered my sperm to the fire, and these sons were born therefrom. How can they be claimed by anybody else? Here, I am the utterer of the spell and the offerer of the sperm. I am the owner of the sperm. Am I not the owner of the fruit? There is no contest on the point that the birth of Bhṛgu and others is from the obliation of my sperm." The Gods who heard these arguments bowed their heads before Brahmā and greeting him said, "Lord Brahmā, It is not only us that are born from you, but the entire world of living and non-living is born from you. So let Agni and Deva in the shape of Varuṇa have their wishes."

12) Brahmā and the giantess Karkkāṭī. In days of old, a ferocious giantess named Karkkāṭī lived on the northern side of the Himālayas. Because of the huggeness of her body and the scarcity of food she became famished. She began to do penance for the alleviation of her hunger and thirst. She stood on one leg in the Himālaya Mountain, fixing her eyes on the sun in the day and on the Moon in the night, and the severe penance continued for a thousand years. Then Brahmā appeared before her and told her that she could ask for any boon. She said "I wish to become a Sūcī (Needle) as hard as iron, having the form of disease. This is the boon I pray for, Brahmā". Brahmā blessed her and said, "Let it be so, my daughter, you shall be a sūcikā (needle) with the prefix 'V' that is Vīśčikā (Spasmodic cholera). You can eat those who sit in places where they ought not to sit and those who are hard-hearted. Enter into their bodies and affect their hearts, spleens and life-breaths. Thus carry out the work of destruction! You can affect both the good and the bad. But good people should not be killed. So to save them from death, you can use this mantra (spell)."

Saying these words Brahmā disappeared. Karkkāṭī made her body smaller and smaller and finally assumed the shape of a needle. After that she began her work by entering the body of those who had lost their energy because of illness, in the form of a needle of gout and caused Cholera, and the body of those who were lean and weak and waxy, in the form of internal cholera. Thus assuming two bodies and killing countless people she travelled for a long time in the earth and the sky, until she herself felt aversion to her work. When she remembered her original form she loathed the needle-form. Karkkāṭī again went to the vicinity of the Himālayas and began to do penance, which lasted for another thousand years. Thus she became pure and by the power of thinking, she acquired spiritual knowledge. Then she wanted to be saved from the mirage of birth and death, to attain which, she did penance for yet another thousand years at the end of which, the highly pleased Brahmā appeared before her and said, "daughter Karkkāṭī, all the darkness is erased from your heart and you have attained deliverance from delusion. Now I will bless you according to your wish. Receive your original body and walk about in the worlds eating the ignorant, bad beginners, the imprudent, those who sit in bad places and dwell in bad places."

She became a giantess again, but as she had attained purity of soul, she engaged herself in deep meditation which was free from doubt. The meditation lasted for a long time. Finally, her mind waved. Then she remembered about worldly things and felt hunger. She remembered, "Brahmā has ordained the wicked as my food. So I shall seek them." Thinking thus she went to a jungle in the vicinity of the Himālayas. That was the dwelling place of foresters. In that dark night the King and the minister of the foresters approached the place where Karkkāṭī sat. Karkkāṭī seeing them thought, "let me know first if they are good or bad." So she decided to ask them some questions. She asked them in a voice like thunder. "Who are you? Are you enlightened sages or ignorant fools? say quickly." The king of the foresters hearing this replied in a cynical way. "You insignificant ghost? What is your form? Where do you sit? Let us see your powerless body. Who is there to fear at your sound which is like the humming of a she-beetle?"

Hearing this reply Karkkāṭī showed her tusks and laughed loud, to spread light, and to terrify them. They heard the loud roaring sound of her laugh and saw her huge form in the light. But those mighty heroes were not at all shaken by the sound they heard or the sight they witnessed. The Minister looked at her and said, "Hei, Giantess! These delusions of yours will have no effect on us. Even if a number of mosquitoes like you come before us, they will be only dry leaves before wind. You are acting like this merely for food. So what is your need? Tell us, we will satisfy you.

Hearing the words of the minister Karkaṭi knew that her might was useless before such valiant men. She thought them to be sages. So she said "Hey mighty heroes, Who are you? Tell me the truth". The minister said; "This the King of foresters and I am his minister. We came for a night-walk to find out and punish wicked people like you."

The giantess appreciated them and said; "I am about to put some questions to you. If you give me suitable answers you will be saved." The King agreed. The questions put by her are given below in the order they were asked:

1) Inside what atom which is unit and multiple at the same time, do the lakhs of universes originate and vanish as bubbles in a sea?
2) What does shine as ether and non-ether?
3) What is it that is something and nothing?
4) What is it that is going and not going at the same time?
5) What is it that has taken form from voidness?
6) What is it that is moving and at the same time stationary as a rock?
7) Who draws pictures in clear sky?
8) In what seed do the worlds exist as a big tree in its seed?
9) From what substance can the living and non-living things in the worlds, not be separated as the foam and waves cannot be separated from the ocean?
10) What substance is dualism not separate from (others) as fluidity from water?

The reply given by the minister to each question is given below in the order of the questions:

1) Hey, Giantess: All the questions you have put before us encased in figurative words discernible only to the Vedic sages, are concerned with the supreme Being. The atom is the supreme Spirit which is beyond all knowledge of the mind and the senses. As it is without organs of action it is as unmanifested as the sky. And inside that supreme atom which could be felt only by the mind, crores and crores of bubbles of universes originate and vanish due to frailty.

2) The impersonal Supreme Being, having no substance, pervades everything. This Supreme Being, Brahman, is pure knowledge (jñānasvarūpa). It is the sky and the non-sky.

3) As it is indescribable the Impersonal Supreme Spirit is nothing, but as it is a reality it is something.

4) As it pervades everything accessible, the Impersonal Supreme Spirit has the quality of motion. But as it has no emotions and as there exists no space beyond, it is motionless.

5) As it is inaccessible to others the Supreme Spirit is having no existence, but as it is the essence of everything that is good, it has existence.

6) The Supreme Spirit is the radiance of motion or activity and as there is nothing else to be found out, that is, as it doesn’t know anything else it is as rigid as a rock.

7) In the clear sky the Supreme Spirit draws the pictures of the universe.

8) Exists in the Supreme Atom.

9) As the entire visible world cannot be separated from the Supreme Spirit nothing is other than the Impersonal Supreme Spirit.

10) The differentiations of the various worlds are mere appearances of the Supreme Spirit and so dualism is of the same figure.

The King drew Karkaṭi nearer to the Impersonal Supreme Spirit. He advised her not to commit slaughter. She accepted the advice. The King asked her to come to his palace assuming the form of a beautiful woman. She asked, what could he offer to a giantess as food. The King said; "You good woman, we shall find out a way for that. You change yourself to a beautiful woman wearing golden ornaments and stay in my palace for a while. I shall arrange to gather sinners, robbers and such other wicked people who are to be given capital punishment, in thousands from various places, and shall give them to you. You can take your original form and take them all to the peaks of the Himalaya and feed on them.

Gluttonous people like to eat in solitude. After having eaten sumptuously, take some sleep, and a little rest in meditation. When you wake up you come again and take away people destined to be killed. The slaughter done for the sake of righteousness is not a sin. It is said to be equal to mercy. When your desire for meditation is over you must come to me. If an attachment of love is formed even with bad persons it is difficult to break the love."

Karkaṭi obeyed the King. They all reached the palace. Within six days three thousand wicked persons, who were sentenced to death, were brought before the King, from his own country and the various dependent countries, and were given to Karkaṭi. In the night she took her original form, gathered all the wicked people, who deserved killing and bidding good bye to the King, went to the Peaks of the Himalayas. (jñānavāśītha).

13) Brahman and Haindavas. At the end of the day of Brahman there was the great flood, and destroying all the heavens, Brahman went to sleep. He woke up next morning and after the usual morning ablutions, prepared for creation. He looked around at the sky, and saw some heavens still engaged in usual activities. He was amazed at this unusual occurrence. Ten Brahmanas and the countless devas (gods) under them were doing their routine work. Brahman stood at the worlds for a long time thinking "How is it". Then he by his divine power caused one of the suns, working in a heaven, to come to him, and asked him. "Who are you, shining one? How have these worlds come into existence?"

The Sun said with humility. "Your sons Marici and others erected a beautiful shed called Suvamataśam, in a corner of Janibudvīpa in the valley below Kailāśa. A Brahma named Indu arose from that hall. The Brahmana who was a Vedic scholar, righteous and peaceful, led the life of a house-holder with his wife for a long time. But they were childless. So they went to Kailāśa and did penance to get children. They entered a natural arbour which was quite silent and began severe penance. Śiva appeared and said that they would get children. In course of time, ten sons were born to them. After a long time, when the sons had reached manhood the old parents died. The sons felt very sorry. They regarded life as short and full of woe and misery. So they went for penance, as they had no relatives left to care for them. They abstained from all the pleasures of the world and reached Kailāsa. They began to meditate upon the shortness of life. “What is there which is noble in this world? Is there anything except woe and misery? How simple is the desire of man for greatness? One thinks himself prosperous if he becomes a house-holder. The head of the village is more prosperous than a householder. The King of a dependent state is more powerful than the head of a village. An independent king is far more prosperous than a dependent King. When we think of the state of an emperor how simple is an independent king! When compared with Indra, the Lord of the three worlds what is an emperor after all? But there is nothing glorious in the state of Indra also as it ends in a Brahmamuhārtta (a period in the life of Brahmā). So what is there substantial and eternal? ‘Brahmā alone is eternal and indestructible’” said the eldest brother. “Concentrate your mind and say to yourself, ‘I am the supreme Being Brahmā seated on a lotus’, and meditate upon it and pray for it and knowledge of Brahmā will be conferred upon you.” They understood this and thus the ten brothers became Brahmās. There are ten heavens of them. They are ten worlds in the sky of mind. I am the sun who creates day and night in one of them,” saying thus the Sun went away. Brahmā commenced his activity. (Jñānavāśīṣṭha).

14) The age of Brahmā. Forty-three crores twenty lacs of human years is one four-yuga period called Devacaturyuga (a period of four yugas of the devas or gods). One thousand deva caturyugas will make one Mahāyuga (great yuga). A Mahāyuga is a day time of Brahmā. During the period of one Mahāyuga, that is, during one day of Brahmā, fourteen Manus, one after another, help Brahmā in doing the work of creation. This is the time of the seventh Manu in the present day time (Kalpa) of the present Brahmā. The period of six Manus are over in the present day time of the present Brahmā. Vaivasvata is the present Manu. Brahmā wakes up in the morning—the beginning of a Kalpa. Those which underwent destruction in the night, are created again in the morning. As Brahmā wakes up daily in the morning, what are the things created before, which do not undergo destruction? At that time there will remain, without destruction, six or twenty-four tattvas (principles) which are natural creations. These twenty-four principles are not the creation of Brahmā. He who is beyond names, He who created Brahmā in the lotus flower, created them. Brahmā who was originated in the lotus which grew from the navel of Nārāyaṇa performs the work of creation guided by these twenty-four principles. The work of creation performed by Brahmā is called Pratisarga (substitute creation). Everything Brahmā created in the day time will be destroyed in the evening. After a day time is over there is the night time and sleep for Brahmā. The life of Brahmā is hundred years, that is thirty-six thousand Brahmā days and and Brahmā nights. At the expiry of this period the life of Brahmā will come to an end, and will dissolve in Nārāyaṇa. Thus crores and crores of Brahmās have appeared and passed away and in future also crores will appear and pass away. (Bhāgavata).

15) The creations and substitute creations of Brahmā. The creations performed by Brahmā are of two kinds. The first is Sarga or creation and the second is Pratisarga or substitute creation. In the first Kalpa when a Brahmā is born from the lotus, certain creations are made and the things thus originated do not undergo destruction in the evening or at the end of the Kalpa. They are the sarga or creation. On that day and every day of the life of Brahmā they help Brahmā in the work of creation. In a sense they could be called Prajāpatis (the lords of emanation). But as most of them have not left sons, and for other reasons also, they are not well known by that name. Only the persons mentioned here have as long a life as that of Brahmā. The Sanakas, Kardamam, Marici, Atri, Aniguśas, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Bhrgu, Vasiṣṭha, Dakṣa, Nārāyaṇa, Dharma, Adharma, Nirṛti, Sarasvatī, Kāma, Atharva, the Manes, Agni, Īśānu, and Śvāyambhuva; these do not end at the end of a Brahmā’s day (or Kalpa) and will be dissolved only when Brahmā is dissolved. A Brahmā creates in his first morning not only persons from Sanaka to Śvāyambhuva, but also creations which have a history only up to the end of that day, such as the lokas (worlds) of Bhūloka, Bhuvanloka and Svarloka, and minerals, plants, animals, humanity etc. Sarga or creation is called Prākṛta Sṛṣṭi (natural creation). Pratisarga or substitute creation is called Aprākṛta Sṛṣṭi or unnatural creation. At the end of the Kalpa, Sanvartakāgni (Fire which destroys the universe) and Sanvartaka varṣa (Rain which destroys the universe) will occur and all the unnatural creations will be destroyed. In all the morning, following the first morning of a Brahmā substitute creation takes place, and they are destroyed at the end of each Kalpa by Sanvartakāgni and Sanvarttakavārṣa. (Bhāgavata).

(51) Once Brahmā gave the devas (gods), Śrīs (hermits) and the Nāgas (serpents) the ekākṣara mantra (the one-syllable-spell) ‘OM’. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 8).
(52) In almost all the Purāṇas Brahmā is called ‘Caturmukha’ (having four faces) and to substantiate this the following story is given in the Matsya purāṇa. Brahmā created Śatarūpā with half the portion of his body, and accepted that bright and beautiful woman as his wife. He could not bear his beautiful wife to be away from his sight even for a moment. So much had he become attached to her.
One day Śatarūpā was walking round Brahmā. The daughters born from his mind also were seated close by. So he could not turn round and look at his wife as she was moving. To solve this problem, in place of one face, there arose four faces.
Once Śatarūpā was walking in the air. To see her at that time there arose a fifth head on the top of his matted hair. It is this face that was plucked off by Śiva.
(53) Various stories occur in the purāṇas regarding how Śiva plucked off the fifth head of Brahmā. They are given below.
(1) Once Brahmā praised Śiva and pleased him and asked him to become his son. Śiva did not like it. He got angry and cursed, "I shall become your son. But I will pluck off your fifth head."

(2) In the beginning Brahmā created the incarnation of Śiva, called Nilalohita also, along with the creation of worlds and everything in it. In later creations Brahmā did not think of Nilalohita. Seeing Brahmā carrying on the work of creation forgetting him, Nilalohita got angry and cursed Brahmā, "Your fifth head will shortly be destroyed."

(3) After Brahmā became five-faced the brightness of the devas began to decrease day by day. Seeing this the conceivable Brahmā said to Śiva: "I am the first who got existence in this world. So by all means I am the eldest." Hearing this Śiva got angry and plucked off the fifth head of Brahmā and threw it away. (Matsyapurāṇa, 183, 84-86).

When the fifth head was gone, the rest of the heads were benumbed. The sweat which flowed from them was thrown into the earth by Brahmā. Out of it came out a horrible monster, which began to chase Śiva, who caught hold of it and gave it to Viṣṇu. (Skanda, 5, 13, 4).

(4) In the Śiva-Rudra collections a story occurs about the quarrel between Śiva and Brahmā. Once Brahmā fell in love with Satī the wife of Śiva; coming to know of this Śiva tried to kill Brahmā. Mahāviṣṇu tried to pacify Śiva, but it was of no avail. Śiva took away the fifth head of Brahmā and made him ugly, and consequently Brahmā became invincible in the world.

(5) Once Śiva showed his daughter Sandhyā to Brahmā who grew lustful instantly; Śiva insulted Brahmā by showing this ill-born passion of his to his sons (Brahmā's sons). As a revenge Brahmā created Satī and insulted Śiva through Daśa. (Skanda, 2, 2, 26).

17 Various names of Brahmā and their meanings: In Amara-kośa, the following names are given to Brahmā.

Brahma. See Parabrahma.

Brahma. A kind of marriage. The bride is adorned with all kinds of ornaments and is taken to bridegroom; and given to him as wife. This is called Brahma marriage. Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 73, Stanza 8 states that this mode of marriage was allowed to all the four castes of ancient Bhārata.

Brahmacarya. An individual of a dynasty of teachers. (See Guruparanipāra).

Brahmacāri I. See Brahmacarya.

Brahmacāri II. A devagandharva (a class of Gods) born to Kaśyapaprājapati of his wife Prīthā. He took part in the Birth festival of Arjuna. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapters 65 and 122).

Brahmacarya. In ancient India an ideal life was considered to pass through four stages, and Brahmacarya is one of the stages of life. The four stages are Brahmacarya (Vedic student vowed to chastity), Gārhaṭṣṭhya (married householder), Vānapraṣṭha (forest hermit) and Sannyāsa (an ascetic who has renounced the world). Brahmacarya, the first stage of the four is considered as the period of education. The rules and conduct of a Brahmacāri are given in Manusmṛti, Chapter 2.

The brahmacāri who lives with the teacher has to obey certain rules and principles. He should bathe in the river at sun-rise and offer oblations to gods and manes. A brahmacāri has to abstain from using honey, meat, fragrance, flowers, flower of chrysanthemum (Ind.) women, curd, milk, ghee, churned-curd, slaughter, bath applying oil, anointing the eyes with collyrium, sands, umbrella, lust, anger, covetousness, dance, music, gambling, slander, ridicule, falsehood, and causing injury to others. A Brahmacāri should go to bed alone. Women should not be made to discharge through lust. If seminal discharge occurs in dream he should take bath early in the morning and worship the Sun, pronouncing the mantra or spell 'Punah' thrice. The Brahmacāri should live on alms. It is the duty of the brahmacāri to bring water, flower for oblation, cowdung, soil and darbha (grass) for the teacher. He should receive alms only from the houses of those who believe in the Vedas and sacrifices. He should not go to the house of his teacher or his heirs and their families for alms. Provided there are no other houses he may receive alms from the houses of his teacher's relatives and in the absence of such houses he may approach the houses of heirs to his teacher and in the absence of such houses he may receive alms from the house of the teacher. He should fetch 'Camata' (fuel chiefly from buteca frondosa) from a place of purity in the forest, as instructed in rules and dry it in the sun; in the absence of which it may be got dried in a sheltered place. This fuel should be put in the sacrificial fire in the mornings, at noon, and in the evenings. If a healthy Brahmacāri fails in doing his duties consecutively for seven days it will be considered that his vow of Brahmacarya is broken and then he will have to take the vow of ‘Avakāśa’ again. Without waiting for the order of the teacher, the Brahmacāri (student) should engage himself in devotion and meditation and in the service of the teacher daily. When the student is before the teacher he should stand with folded hands controlling his body, speech, brains, sensitive organs, and mind. Only when he is asked to sit, should he do so before the teacher, covering the portions of his body, which are to be covered, with clothes. He should rise up in the morning before his teacher wakes up, and go to bed only after the teacher has retired for sleep. When his teacher calls him, he should not give reply lying, sitting, walking, eating or looking in the opposite direction. He should not gainsay the teacher. Similar should the student attend to the orders of the teacher and comply with them, sitting if the teacher is sitting, standing if the teacher is standing, standing back if the teacher is advancing towards him, running behind if he is walking, standing close by when he is facing the opposite direction, folding his limbs when the teacher is lying or sitting near. The student should have his seat and bed one step lower than those of his teacher. The student should not sit in a careless manner in places where the teacher’s eyes could reach. He should not utter the name of his teacher. If anybody speaks ill of his teacher he should close his ears and run away from the spot. If a Brahmacāri scoffs his teacher, he will be born as a donkey, and as a dog if he scorns him, and as a worm if he steals the wealth of his teacher and as a beetle if he becomes jealous at the greatness of his teacher. When the teacher is angry the brahmacāri should not go near him. The Brahmacāri should not speak unasked. A Brahmacāri could sit with his teacher only when they are in a vehicle, or on a camel or in a tower or on the steps or on rocks or in a boat. He should consider the teacher of his teacher as his teacher. He should not address his parents who visit the house of the teacher, without the permission of his teacher. He should respect learned men, holy men, sons of the teacher and those who are born of his family, as a teacher. If the wife of the teacher is of the caste of the teacher, the brahmacāri should consider her as his teacher. If the wife is not of the same caste the brahmacāri needs only to stand up and make obeisance to her. A brahmacāri should not apply oil to the body of his teacher’s wife, wash her, massage her body, and comb her hair. A brahmacāri may either shave his head or grow matted hair. He should never be asleep at sunrise or sunset. For learning Vedas etc. the student should not give the teacher cows, clothes etc. as free gifts beforehand. On completion of education, when the student asks the teacher for permission to get married, he should give the teacher what he demands. A brahmacāri who has fully complied with the rules mentioned above, will attain heaven after his death.

BRAHMADATTĀ I. A famous king of Kāmpilyapura

1) Birth. Brahmadatta was born in the family of Bhūkṣatra who was a scion of the Solar dynasty. Bhūkṣatra begot Suhotra, Suhotra begot Hasti, Hasti begot Ajāmīḍha, Ajāmīḍha begot Bhṛṣidu, Bhṛṣidu begot Bhṛṣiddhānu, Bhṛṣiddhānu begot Bhṛṣiddhārma, Bhṛṣiddhārma begot Satyajit, Satyajit begot Viśvajit, Viśvajit begot Śenajit and Śenajit begot Rucira, Rucira begot Prthuṣena, Prthuṣena begot Nipa, Nipa begot Parā, Parā begot Prthu, Prthu begot Sukṛta, Sukṛta begot Vībrājā, Vībrājā begot Aṣuha, and Aṣuha married Kṛtvā, the daughter of hermit Śukra. Brahmadatta was born to Aṣuha by Kṛtvā.

2) Previous birth and kingship. In Padmapurāṇa, Part III, Chapter 10, there is a story stating how the seven sons of Kauśika, a hermit, became fishermen by a curse and how they got absolution and attainment of heaven by offering oblations to the manes. The story is given below. Brahmadatta was the rebirth of Pitrvarṭtī, one of those seven sons. In days of old there was a hermit named Kauśika in Kurukṣetra. His seven sons, Śvarūpa, Krodhana, Hiṃsra, Piśuna, Kavi, Vāḍuṣṭa and Pitrvarṭtī were studying under Garga, a teacher. Their deeds were as bad as their names indicated. Their father died. The sons were in want. There was no rain anywhere in the world. These brothers had taken the milking cow of their teacher Garga to the forest for grazing. They decided to kill the cow of their teacher. The youngest of them said, “If we kill the cow we can use it as offerings to the manes, and the sin will not be visited on us.” The elder brothers agreed to it. Accordingly Pitrvarṭtī killed the cow and began sacrifice to the manes. Two of the elder brothers were detailed to give oblations to the devas, and three of them to offer oblations to the manes. One was detailed to be the guest and himself as the sacrificer. Thus remembering the manes the sacrifice was completed with the necessary rituals. In short, those seven hermits got divine power and became daring wicked men and ate the cow of their teacher. They told the teacher that the cow was eaten by a leopard and gave him the calf. In course of time they all died and were born again as wild men in Daśapura. But because of their offerings to the manes they had retained memory of their previous births. So they fasted in holy baths and discarded their lives before the people. They were born again as deer in the mount of Kālanjara. Because of the power of knowledge and the penance and fast they discarded the body of deer in Prapatana and got rebirth as Cakravāka (ruddy goose) in the lake called Mānasasaras. In this birth their names were Sumanas, Kusuma, Vasu, Citradāsī, Sudāsī, Jīātā and Jīnāpārāga, names suitable to their character. Those seven loving brothers were saints by virtue of their harmony with the Supreme spirit. But owing to mental disturbance three of them lost their attainments. Seeing the pleasures that King Aṣuha of Pāñcāla was enjoying by his wealth, vehicles, big army and beautiful women one of the Cakravākašas, Pitrvarttī, the devoted Brahmāna, who being loyal to his father had performed sacrifice and given offerings to the manes, desired to become a king. The other two brothers seeing the wealth, glory and power of the two ministers, wished to become ministers. Thus Pitrvarttī was born as the son of Aṣuha with the name Brahmadatta and the other two were born as Pundarīka and Subālaka, sons of the two ministers. Brahmadatta was anointed as King of Pāñcāla in the great city of Kaṃpilya. The King loved his father. He was mighty and powerful. He was regular in performing sacrifices and giving offerings to the manes. He had the attainment of harmony with the supreme spirit. He understood the thought and speech of birds and animals. He married Sannati, the daughter of Sudeva (Devala); she was in her former birth the cow of Garga.

Once as the King was walking in the garden with his wife, he saw two ants. The minute creatures, who were husband and wife were engaged in a petty quarrel. The male one, with loving words, pacified the female one, who instantly came close to her husband and they became happy. The King felt amazed at this conversation of the ants, and he laughed. Because of the attainments of his previous lives, he had the power to understand the language of animals, birds, etc. Seeing the King laughing without any reason the queen Sannati asked him why he laughed. She said that there was no reason whatsoever for the king to laugh just then. The King replied, “Oh, beautiful one! just now there was a quarrel between a female and a male ant. I heard it. That is why I laughed. There is no other reason.” The queen did not believe the King. She thought that the King had been scoffing her. She asked him how he came to understand the language of such creatures. The King could not answer her question. He fasted for seven days. On the seventh day Brahmā appeared before him and told him, “The King will know everything from the words of a Brāhmin, whom he would meet when he goes to walk in the streets.”

Brahmadatta returned to the palace and spent the night there. Next morning he started with his wife and ministers, for a walk. When they left the palace they saw an old Brahmin coming towards them. Seeing the king the Brāhmin recited a verse:

“Brāhmaṇas in Kurukṣetra which seven as wild men in Daśapura?
Stags in Kaḷāṇjara, ruddy geese in Mānasa,
Then, are we, now living here”.

When the King heard this verse the memory of his former births revived and he fell down in a swoon. There is a reason why the old Brāhmin recited the verse. The Ruddy geese mentioned before took their next birth as sons of a poor Brāhmin in the same city. They had the memory of their previous births. They were called Dhātumā, Sarvadarśi, Vidyācandra and Tapodhika, names suitable to their character. The Brahmin boys decided to go for penance to attain supreme bliss. Then the poor father asked them, “My dear sons, what is this? You are going away leaving your poor and aged father. Is that dutiful? The sons replied, “We will tell you a way to earn wealth. You recite to the King, to-morrow morning this verse, which we will teach you now. You will get plenty of wealth.”

The boys taught their father this verse and then they went to the forest. Their father, the old Brahmin, came to the gate of the palace at Kaṃpilya. The King was Brahmadatta.

There is another story how Brahmadatta became the King of this place. Long ago Aṇuha, the King of Pāñcāla did penance before Brahmā, who appeared before the King and asked him what he desired. The King made his request that he might have a son who should be a mighty hero, a learned man, a great hermit and who could understand the language of all living creatures. Brahmā granted him boon and thus Brahmadatta was born to Aṇuha. It was before this Brahmadatta that the Brāhmaṇa recited his verse and it was that King who swooned and fell down.

The two ministers were Subāla the son of Bābhruvya who was the author of the Kaṃḍāśatra and Puṇḍarika the son of Pāñcāla who propagated the science of medicine. They also remembered about their former births and also fell down unconscious. When they recovered the King Brahmadatta and the minister Subala and Puṇḍarika bemoaned the loss of powers they had attained before by devotion, meditation, penance and sacrifice. They cried, “Fate has made us desirous of the objects of oursenses and we have lost our harmony with the Supreme Spirit.” They repeated the cry again and again and they spoke about the blessings obtained by offering oblation to their manes. Brahmadatta gave the old Brāhmaṇa plenty of wealth and several villages and sent him fully satisfied. Then he anointed his capable and fully qualified son Viśvakṣena as King and with his retinue retired to Mānasa-saras for penance.

3) A bird as his wife when he was King. When Brahmadatta was the King of Kaṃpilyapura a bird named Tapanīyā become his friend. Her head was purple coloured and body black. By and by this bird became his wife. A daughter named Sarvasena was born to Brahmadatta by his bird-wife. The King had sons by other wives. Tapanīyā would wash her child and place her in the cradle early in the morning and then go to the forest and fly about in the air. She would return in the evening and tell the King news all over the world. It went on like this for a long time.

Once, when there was nobody in the room a prince took Sarvasena from the cage and choked her to death. Tapanīyā returned and seeing the dead body of her daughter, waited for a long time. Finally she pecked out the eyes of the prince and flew away into the air.

(HarivRaṣa, Chapter 20).

BRAHMADATTA II. Another King who ruled over Kaṃpilya. This King was the son of the hermit Cālī and his wife Somadā, a Gandharva woman whose mother was Īrmiḻa. When he was ruling Kaṃpilya, Kuśanabhā was the King of Kuṇyakubha. One hundred beautiful daughters were born to the King Kuśanabhā. One day while they were playing in the jungle Vāyubhagavān (wind-god) saw them and grew lustful. But they did not yield to his request. So he got angry and cursed them and they became hump-backed. The King was very sorry. He presented his hundred hump-backed daughters to King Brahmadatta, who, by his divine power straightened their backs. When they regained their former form they became the wives of Brahmadatta. This story occurs in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākāṇṭha, Sargas 32 & 33.

BRAHMADATTA III. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Bhaviṣya Parva, Chapter 104, about another Brahmadatta. He was the King of Sālva. Though he had two wives he had no children. Finally by the grace of Śiva two children were born to them. They were called Haṁsa and Dībhaka. (For further information see Dībhaka).
BRAHMADATTA IV. A king who ruled over the country of Kâsî. One night he saw two swans flying in the air. They were of golden colour. There were a number of swans around them. They seemed like two lightnings in the midst of white clouds. Brahmadatta wished to see them again. His desire increased to such an extent that he had desire for nothing else. He consulted his ministers and made a lake. Every creature which seemed beautiful to him was brought to that place. Hearing these two swans also came there. By and by he named them and asked them how they got the golden colour. The swans said thus: "Oh King! you might have heard of the famous mountain Mandara, which is the field of games of the Devas (gods). At the time of the churning of the milk sea when this mountain was used as churn-drill, Amârtâ (celestial nectar of immortality) touched this mountain. So the flowers, fruits and roots in the vicinity of this mountain got the power of removing death, wrinkles etc. Candracâda also will come to this mountain occasionally to play on the top of it and so it became more glorious than the mountain Kailâsâ. One day when Mahâdeva was playing in those gardens he had to leave on an urgent matter concerning Gods. So he left Pârvati there and went away. Devî began to walk about in those gardens with pangs of separation. Spring season came. The Gañas (servants of Śiva) and the maids of Pârvati attended on her. One day Manîpupesâvara, a Gaqa, hankered after Candralekhâ, daughter of Jaya. She was engaged in fanning Pârvati. Both were young and their figures suited each other. Candralekhâ reciprocated his love. Understanding this Pîngesâvara and Guhesâvara, two gañas looked at each other and smiled. Seeing this Devî looked round with anger to see what caused them to smile. They squinted their eyes and showed Manîpuspeâvara and Candralekhâ to Devî. Because of separation she had been much worried, weary and sad. So all these affairs made her angry. She said: "It is good that you behave like this when I am in this plight! The two are making love. Seeing that, you are laughing. May these two dotards be born on the earth and become husband and wife there. Let you two who laughed before me without humility also be born on the earth, first as poor Brahmanas, and then as Brahmarâkṣas (demons friends), outcasts, robbers, dogs with tails cut off and finally as various kind of birds." Thus she cursed the four gañas. Then a gaqa named Dhrîrâja said to Pârvati: "Devî, this is unfortunate. They have not commited any severe crime." Devî got angry at him and cursed him too: "May you also be born on the earth as a human being." After this Jaya the loved maid of Pârvati requested her for absoluition from curse, for all. The Devî said that all of them would get absoluition at the place of penance of Brahma and other gods and would return here. Of these, Candralekhâ and her husband and Dhrîrâja would be happy on the earth. The two others would lead a miserable life on the earth." (Kathâsarasvatigara, Padmâvatilavibaka, Taranga 1).

BRAHMADEVA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pâṇḍavas against the Kauravas in the battle of Mahâbhârata. His duty was to protect the army in the rear. (M.B. Udyaoga Parva, Chapter 196, Stanza 25).

BRAHMADUMBARA. A holy place in Kurukshetra. In Mahâbhârata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 71, it is said that this place is auspicious to Brahma.

BRAHMAHÂTYÂ. Killing a Brâhmaṇa is called Brahmatyā. In ancient India killing a Brâhmaṇ was considered to be a great sin. He, who committed this sin had to build a hut in the forest and live there for a period of twelve years, or make an alms-pot called Śivasirodhvajâ and wander about begging alms, to purify his soul, or else to attempt to jump into a blazing fire thrice with bowed head, or perform one of the three sacrifices Aśvamedha, Śvarjit or Gosavâ. If none of these was possible, he had to give all the wealth he had to Brâhmins well-verseed in Vedas, as gift. It is mentioned in Agnipurâṇa, Chapter 169, that if any of the vows mentioned above was performed he would be absolved from the sin of Brahmatyā.

BRAHMÂJIT. A son of Kalâmeni. (Brahmaṇḍa Purâṇa 35.38).

BRAHMAHÂMEDHYÂ. A river, famous in the Purâṇas. Mention is made about this river in Mahâbhârata Bhîṣma-parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 32.

BRAHMÂMUHURTÂ. The period of forty-eight minutes before the sunrise is called Brahmacmuhurtâ. The deity of this period is Brahma. In Agni Purâṇa, Chapter 155, it is instructed that one should wake up at this period and engage in prayer and meditation.

BRAHMÂNA. (BRAHMÂNI). (1) Origin. Brâhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas, and Śûdras are the caturvarṇas or the four castes. The Purâṇas say that the four castes originated from different parts of the body of Brahma. See Manusmrîti, Chapter 1, Stanza 87: "Sarvasyasya tu sargasya Guptyartham sa mahâdyutih Mukhabhûtapajjâman Prathakkarmâya kalpaçaya. (With a view to sustain the world, Brahma ordered activities, for the four castes (Brâhmaṇa Kṣatriya, Vaiśya, and Śûdra) who were born from his face, arms, thighs and feet). From this statement it is seen that the Brâhmaṇas were born from the face, Kṣatriyas from the arms, Vaiśyas from the thighs and Śûdras from the feet of Brahma.

2) The activities of a Brâhmaṇa. The duties of a Brâhmaṇa are, performing sacrifice, and encouraging others to perform sacrifice, learning Vedas and teaching Vedas, giving gifts and getting remuneration. A Brâhmaṇa has two births in one life. Till the time of investiture with the sacred string is one birth and from that period onwards is the second birth. So a Brâhmaṇa is called 'dvîja' or twice-born.

The Brâhmaṇas were allowed to do the works of agriculture, keeping cows, trade and commerce and Kusîda (money-lending). Living on the interest of money giving out as loan is Kusîda. But they should not trade on products from cow, jaggery, salt, lac and flesh. The suffix 'Sarm' should be added to the name of Brâhmaṇa. A Brâhmaṇa can have four wives.

BRAHMÂNA(M). See Veda.

BRAHMÂNDÂ. The word Brahmandâ means the aṇḍa of Brahma (aṇḍa-egg), the Supreme Being which is the root of the origin of the universe. At a time long ago, which is beyond reckoning, there was nothing but an egg. This egg was split into two and from it a male child with the radiance of innumerable suns came out. This wonderful child was helpless. After his birth he cried for a while, because of hunger and thirst. He got no help. There was nobody to feed it. So this wonderful child looked up and lay there. This helpless child was called ‘Virāṭpurusa’ (the next emanation from Brahmā) by those versed in the Purāṇas. The boy was so called because he was the most material of materiality. But he was an atom of atoms and the first figuration of God. From each pore of the skin of the great virāṭ, who was the base of all the worlds a universe came into being. Thus all the countless universes were born. Each universe has its own trinity of Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva and dvāpas (the bright ones), the protectors of the eight zones. One universe comprises fourteen worlds or realms, from Pāliā to the Brahmā-loka (the from the ether world to the upper world or the realm of Brahmā). Countless such universes exist. Over and above all these universes there is Vaikuṇṭha, and above Vaikuṇṭha there is another world with an area of fifty crore yojanas (leagues), called ‘Goloka’ (the world of cow). Only the two worlds Vaikuṇṭha and the Goloka are eternal. Bhūloka (the earth) consists of seven islands and sixty-four peninsulas. There are seven worlds above and seven worlds below. The seven upper worlds are Bhūloka, Bhuvanalo, Svāloka, Jana-loka, Tapaloa, Satyaloa and Brahmaloka. Thus a universe consists of fourteen worlds. This is the idea given by the Purāṇas about Brahmāṇḍa. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandhas 9).

Mention is made, in the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṣṭā 2, Chapter 7, about the construction of Brahmāṇḍa. This Brahmāṇḍa, like the seed of the Kapīṭha tree (Vitar—the wood-apple), is covered under, above and all around by anḍakatāṭha (egg-shell). The anḍa (egg) is covered by water ten times the egg in volume. This water-shell is covered by a shell of fire. Around the shell of fire there is the shell of air and the air-shell is covered with ether. Around the shell of ether there is the shell of Egoism of darkness. Over the shell of Egoism there is the shell of glory and the shell of glory is covered by Prakṛti, the Divine Nature. It is immeasurable. Prakṛti contains numberless Brahmāṇḍas. As oil exists in sesame, God pervades the whole universe. This is the connection between Prakṛti and Puruṣa. (The Nature and the Supreme Spirit).

BRAHMĀṇḌAPURĀṆA. One of the eighteen puruṇas. This puruṇa contains a talk by Brahmā about the glory of Brahmāṇḍa. There are twelve thousand verses in this puruṇa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 272).

BRAHMĀṆḌAPĀṬTU. (Pāṭu=song). A performance connected with the temples of Kerala.

BRAHMĀṆḌALI. When a disciple stands before his teacher he should have both his arms folded. Folding both arms in this way is called Brahmatāḷi. (Manu-smṛti, Chapter 2).

BRAHMAPRALAYA. See Manvantara.

BRAHMAPURĀṆA, (BRAHMAPURĀṆA). This is a great book of twenty-five thousand verses taught to the great hermit-sage Marci by Brahmā. It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 271, that if a copy of this book is taken and offered to a Brahmin on the full moon day of the month of Vaishākhya with cow and water, the giver will attain heaven.

BRAHMAPURI. The abode of Brahmā. Brahmapuri is on the summit of Mahāmeru, with an area of fourteen thousand yojanas (leagues). Around this city, at the four sides, (East etc.) and at the four corners (South-East etc.) there are eight towns, very big and beautiful, kept by eight protectors such as Indra and others. The river Gaṅgā which springs from the feet of Mahāviṣṇu wets the whole of Candramāṇḍala (Lunar region), falls down on the Brahmapiur, and dividing itself into four rivers called Sītā, Alakanandā, Cākṣuṣ and Bhadra flows in four directions. The river Sītā flows through the top of the mountains and passing through the mountain in the east called Bhdrāśva, falls in the Eastern Ocean. The river Alakanandā flows to the south and reaches Bhrārata. Then it divides into seven rivers which unite in the ocean. The river Cākṣuṣ passes through the mountains in the west and enters the country called Ketumāḷavarṣa and then flows into the ocean. The river Bhadra passes through all the mountains in the north and flows through the north country of the Kurūsa and falls in the North Ocean. The mountain of Mālyāvān in the west and the mountain of Gandhamāṇḍa in the east are as long as the mountain of Nīṣadhā in the south. Mount Meru shaped like an earring stands in the middle of these four mountains. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṣṭā 2, Chapter 21).

BRAHMAŚĀṬA. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 87, Stanza 23, that the moment one visits this holy Bath in the river Gaṅgā, one would attain heaven.

BRAHMASARAS. A holy place in Dharmāraṇya. If a man fasts in this holy place for one night, he would reach the world of Brahmā. In this holy place there is a peg driven down by Brahmā himself. One who walks round this peg will attain the fruits of performing a Vājapeya yajña (a drinking sacrifice). There is another holy bath of the name Brahmasaras in Gayā. (M. B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 89).

BRAHMASĀVARNṬI. Tenth Manu. (See Manvantara).

BRAHMAŚIRAS. See Brahmāstra.

BRAHMASTHĀNA. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 103, that a person who visits this holy place will get the fruits of performing Āśvedaḥ yāga. (Horse sacrifice).

BRAHMĀSTRĀ. This is known by another name Brahmāśirāstra also. This weapon was given to Agastya by Sīva. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 138, Stanza 9, that Agastya gave this weapon to Agnivesa, who gave it to Droṇa and Droṇa gave it to Arjuna and instructed him about the use of it as follows:

“You should never shoot this arrow. at man. If it is used against mean people the three worlds would be destroyed. It is said that this weapon has no parallel in the world. Keep this pure, and give ear to what I say. If an enemy, other than human being attacks you, this weapon may be used to kill him in battle.”

BRAHMATIRTHA. A holy place in Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 2, that a non-brahmāṇa who bathes in this holy place will attain Brahmāvatva. (the state of being a brahmāṇa).
BRAHMATUÑGA. A mountain. Arjuna dreamt that Śrī Kṛṣṇa and himself went to the presence of Śiva. Brahmatuṅga was a mountain that Arjuna saw on the way in his dream-travel. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 80, Stanza 31).

BRAHMAVAIVARTAPURĀṆA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. Sāvārga Manu taught this Purāṇa to Nārada. The theme of the Purāṇa is the story of Rādhāndhara. This Purāṇa contains eighteen thousand verses. It is stated in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 272, that this Purāṇa is good to be given as a gift on the full moon day of the month of Māgha.

BRAHMĀVARTTA. A holy place situated in Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 53, that he who takes a bath in this holy place will go to the world of Brahmā. Manusmṛti, Chapter 2, Stanza 17, refers to this Brahmāvartta. Manu says as follows:

“This place between the two rivers Sarasvatī and Drṣṭadvatī is called Brahmāvartta, which was made by the devas.”

BRAHMAVEDHYĀ. A river, famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made about this river in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 30.

BRAHMAYAJNA. A special sacrifice to be performed by a Brāhmin only. The rules and rituals of the sacrifice are given below:—

The Brāhmaṇa should rinse his mouth three times. Then he should wipe his mouth twice and face once. Then he should take water in his hand and sprinkle it on his hands and legs, and then sprinkle it on his head, eyes, nose, ears, chest and forehead. After that uttering the name of the place, date, time, star etc. he should say to himself, “I am beginning to perform Brahmayajna.” For this he should have to place two darbhas (grass—Poa cynosuroides) in his right hand, three in his left hand, one on the seat, one each on his Brahma-string (sacred string worn by brahmins), hair and legs, and then think of the time, place, etc. and say to himself, “I am about to perform Brahmayajna to please the gods known in the Śūktas (hymns in the Vedas) for the absolution of all my sins.” Then recite Gāyatrī (spell) thrice. Then recite the following Vedic mantras or spells, in the order given: Mantras beginning with; “Agniśūle,” “Yadaśa,” “Agniśvā,” “Māhāvratām,” “Pañṭhā etacca;” “Śaṁhitāṃ mahamahatvam;” “Māhāvratāsa;” “Iṣṭe tvorjye,” “Agniṇāyāḥ” and śanandevih. Then in conformity with the number of letters used, he should recite the grammatic Sutra known as Vṛddhrādaic. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 11).

BRAHMAYONI. A holy place in Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 143 that one who bathes in this holy Bath will attain the world of Brahmā.

BRAHMAHUTAM. A sacrifice. There are five kinds of sacrifice, known as A hut, Huta, Prabhuța, Brahmahutam and Pṛāṣita. A hut is sacrifice to Brahmā, Huta is sacrifice to devas or Gods, Prahuța is sacrifice to Ghosts, Brahmahuta is sacrifice to man and Pṛāṣita is the sacrifice to the manes. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 3).

BṛBU TAKṢA. A king of the period of the Vedas. He was liberal and interested in architecture and all kinds of construction work. In the Rg Veda and Śāṅkhya-yāna Śrauta Sūtra mention is made that this king offered plenty of presents to the hermit Bharadvāja.

BṛDHNAŚVA. A king. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 98, that Agastya once went to this king and begged him for wealth.

BṛHADĀNTA I. A king of the country known as Ulūka. Once in a battle, Arjuna defeated this King. Thenceforward he was friendly with the Pāṇḍavas. Bhṛdānta offered Arjuna a good deal of costly presents. In the battle of Bhārata, this king fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas and was killed in the battle. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Ādi Parva, Chapter 165, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4; Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23 and Karṇa Parva, Chapter 9).

BṛHADĀNTA II. Brother of the king Kṣemadhūrti. He fought against the Kauravas and was killed in the battle. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25; Karṇa Parva Chapter 5).

BṛHADĀSVĀ I. An ancient hermit. He had much respect for Dharmaputra. It is stated in the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 32, that Bhṛdāsva went to the forest Kāmyaka with Dharmaputra. Bhṛdāsva narrated the story ‘Nalopākhyaṇa’ to Dharmaputra in order to divert his mind from the thought of the loss of his kingdom. When he had finished the story he taught Dharmaputra, the two important spells, Akaṇḍayā and Aśvāsiras.

BṛHADĀSVĀ II. A king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. His father was Śrīvāstva. The King Kuvalayāśva was the son of Brhada va. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 7).

BṛHADĀTTMĀ. A king of the Aṅga dynasty. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

BṛHADBALA I. A king in ancient India. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 237).

BṛHADBALA II. Son of Suba, a King of Gāndhāra. He was present at the Pāṇcālī Svayamvara (marriage of Pāṇcāli) with his brothers Śākuni and Vṛṣaṅka. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 5).

BṛHADBALA III. A king of the country known as Kosala. During his conquest of the East, Bhūmasena defeated this king. This powerful King of Kosala had given fourteen thousand horses for the Rājasya (imperial inauguration) of Yudhīṣṭhira. He fought with Abhimanyu and Ghraṭokaka in the battle of Bhārata. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 40, Stanza 20, that Abhimanyu killed this Bṛhadbala in the battle.

BṛHADBĀLIKĀ. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 4).

BṛHADBHĀNU. A fire. A hermit who had acquired great knowledge in Vedas and Vedāṅgas (scriptures) also has this name. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Stanza 8).

BṛHADBHĀSA. See Bṛhadkīrti.

BṛHADBHĀSA. A daughter of the Sun. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Stanza 9, that Bṛhadbhāsā was the wife of the Agni (fire) called Bhūnu.

BṛHADBRAHMĀ. See Bṛhadkīrti.
The A river. King A was hated by the people. As Sabha lacked a wife, there was a forest near Bramhava. The people gathered there to see the portion of the river. A hermit, who was a leper, was in the forest. He stated in Brahama Parva that this hermit recovered from leprosy due to the Sun-worship.

A giant, who was famous, walked in the forest. He made fun of the hermit, saying, "I hate my husband very much. So I am ready to come with you, of my own accord." Taking her in his chariot, the giant went to Gangasagara sahagama. When she learned that the place was under the rule of her husband, she died of fear. Being unable to bear separation from Kesini, the giant also died. As these two had died at the holy place of Gangasagara sahagama, both attained the world of Visha.

A river in India is famous in the Puranas. Mention is made about this river in Mahabharta, Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 32.

Son of emperor Sibi. (For further information about him see Arjaka.)

A person named Yati. He was one of those who were against sacrifice. (For further information see Pitruham.)

A king in ancient India. Mention is made about this king in Mahabharta, Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 233.

A king of the family of Bharata, (Bhagavata, Skanda 9).

A king of the Puru dynasty. (Agni Purana, Chapter 279)

A king. He went to the forest to lead a life of retirement after having installed his eldest son on the throne. He began to do penance in the forest for the attainment of heaven. One day the hermit Sakyanya appeared before him and told him that he might ask any boon. Accordingly the king said, "Tell me, what eternal Truth is and give me Spiritual knowledge?" The hermit complied with his request. (Maithri Upashiad).

A king of the Anga family. It is stated in Agnipurana, chapter 277 that he was the son of Jayadratha and that Vivasvat was the son of Bharadha. The Ramsuras, a forest tribe of the mountain of Grdhhrakuta, saved this king from the attempt of extermination of the Ksatriyas by Parasurama. (Mahabharta, Santi Parva, Chapter 49; Dhrota Parva, Chapters 57 and 62).

A king of the Puru dynasty. This Bharadha was one of the seven sons of Girik, Kuśa, Yadu, Pratyagra, Bala, Masyakalā and Vira were the brothers of Bharadha. A son named Kuśagra was born to Bharadha. (Agni Purana, Chapter 275).

Son of Uparicara, the king of Cedi. Uparicara made his son Bharadha, king of Magadh. In course of time he became a powerful emperor. This Bharadha was a mighty warrior-king with an army of three aṣṭauḥpiṣi (an aṣṭauḥpiṣi is a complete army consisting of 21870 horses and 10930 infantry). Though he had married two daughters of the King of Kasi he was childless. The sorrowful king went with his wives to a hermit named Cāṇḍakaṇāka and pleased him by giving him precious stones. The king told the hermit about his sorrow due to lack of children. The hermit gave them a mango fruit and said that the King should enthone the son who would be born by eating the mango, and return to the forest for penance. The hermit gave eight boons for the son who was to be born.

The king and his wives returned to the palace and divided the mango fruit into two and both of his wives ate the fruit and became pregnant. Each of them gave birth to half of a child. The lifeless forms of these half children were thrown out. A giantess called Jāru put them together and instantly the pieces joined together and became a living child. The giantess took that child and made a present of it to the King. That child grew up and was known by the famous name Jarāsandha. From that time onwards Giantess-worship began in Magadh. When Jarāsandha came of age the King anointed him as King and went to the hermitage of Cāṇḍakaṇāka with his wives and began to do penance. After coming to the forest Bharadha killed a giant named Rasbha and with his hide made three Big drums and placed them in the city. The sound of one beat on the drum will last for a month. When Bhūma, Arjuna and Śri Kṛṣṇa came to Magadh to kill Jarāsandha they broke these drums. (M.B. Adi Parva, 53; Sabhā Parva, Chapters 17, 19 and 21).

A king who lived in a portion of an asura named Śāksma. This king was present at Pańcāli svayambara (marriage of Pańcāli). (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 185).

An Agni (fire). As this Agni is the son of Vasishtha he has got the name Vasishtha also. A son named Praṇjiti was born to this Agni. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 220).

A river in India, purāṇically famous. Mention is made about this river in Mahabharta, Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 30.

A king of the family of Bharata. (Bhagavata, Skanda 9).

He was the son of the hermit named Pañcājanya. He was transformed to a god, who is remembered at the beginning of the sacrifice known as agnihotra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Stanza 13).

See Arvāvasu.

The son born to Āṅgiras of his wife Subhā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 218, Stanza 2).

A deva Gandharva. (A class of Gods). It is mentioned in Mahabharta Adi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 57 that this Gandharva was present at the Birthday celebration of Arjuna.

See Bhāratkīrti.
BRHANMANAS II. A hermit. This hermit was one of the seven sons born to Angiras of his wife Sumanā.
(M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 208).

BRHANMANTRA. See Brhatkirti.

BRHANMEDAS. A king of the Yādavas. He was the son of Vapiśmān and father of Śrīdeva. (Karma Purāṇa, 1 : 24 : 6—10).

BRHANNALA. The name adopted by Arjuna during the concealment of the Pāṇḍavas in the Kingdom of Virāṇa. (For further information see Arjuna).

BRHANTA I. A king. Yudhīṣṭhira performed a horse sacrifice. Arjuna was taking the sacrificial horse round, for the conquest of the North when King Brhaspati opposed him. Arjuna defeated him and brought him under subjugation. He presented Arjuna with a large quantity of precious stones. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 177).

In the battle of Mahābhārata Brhanta fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas, and was killed by Duśāsana. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 4).

BRHANTA II. A warrior on the side of the Kauravas. He was the brother of Kṣemadhūrti. Brhanta was killed in a fight with Sātyaki. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 4).

BRHANTA. One of the seven mothers of Subrahmanya.
(M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 118, Stanza 10).

BRHASPATI. The teacher of the devas (Gods).

1) Birth. The father of Brhaspati was Angiras, the son of Brahmā. Brahmā grew amorous, at the sight of some celestial maids who were present at a sacrifice performed by Rudra; and he had seminal flow. Brahmā put the semen in fire. From that fire the devas such as Mārīcī, Bhṛgu, Angiras and others were born.

The name Angiras was given because he was born out of angāra (live-coal). Eight sons were born to Angiras by his wife Vasūḍa. They were Utathya, Brhaspati, Vayasya, Śānti, Ghora, Vīrūpa, Saṅivarta and Sudhanvā. All of them were sages who had attained oneness with the supreme Spirit by knowledge, and who had hankered free from worldly pain. Of these Brhaspati, Utathya and Saṅivarta became famous through all the worlds. In some purāṇas Vasūḍa, the mother of Brhaspati, is given the name Śraddhā also.

It is stated that Brhaspati had a sister named Angirāśi. She was a follower of the Brahmā cult. She became the wife of Prabhāṣa the last one of the eight Vasus. Vīśvakarmā was her son. (Bhāgavata Skanda 4, Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 66).

2) Is Brhaspati the son of Agni? In some purāṇas Brhaspati is described as the son of Agni. Its authority is given below. Angiras, the father of Brhaspati was once doing penance in his hermitage. When the fire of penance increased the brightness of the real fire decreased, Agni (fire) stood before Angiras and said "Oh Lord! your brightness surpasses mine. From this day onwards you are the real fire. So you shall be this fire and I will be the fire of Prajāpati which is the second fire."

Because of this boon of Agni, the devas (gods), recognized Angiras also as a fire-god. So in some Purāṇas Brhaspati is mentioned as the son of Agni (fire-god).
(Bhāgavata, Skanda 4).

3) Teacher of the Devas. The story of how Brhaspati became the teacher of the devas, is given in the Bhāšābhārata, Chapter 76 as shown below:
"The Suras and the asuras (the gods and the demons) became enemies from time immemorial, regarding the possession of wealth and prosperity in the three worlds. To secure victory in the battles the gods made Brhaspati their teacher and likewise the asuras made Sukra their teacher."

The devas and asuras began to fight for prosperity and wealth. At that time the devas selected Brhaspati and the asuras selected Sukra, as their teacher.

4) The conjugality of Brhaspati. Tārā was the wife of Brhaspati. She was very beautiful. Seeing Candra's handsome figure she doted on him. There arose several quarrels over this affair. Finally the devas intervened and Tārā was given back to Brhaspati. Budha was born to Candra by Tārā.

The individual called Tāra in the family of the monkeys, was a son of Brhaspati. It is mentioned in Vālmikī Rāmāyana, Bāla Kānda, Sarga 17, Stanza 10 as follows, which proves this fact.
"Brhaspati begot the mighty monkey Tāra." In the Rgveda, Manşala 1, Anuvāka 19, Sūkta 126, it is mentioned that Brhaspati had a daughter named Romāśā. When her husband teased her Romāśā said to her husband: "You please come and feel your hand on my body. Don't think that my organs are small. Though I am hairy like the goats of Gandhāra, I have got all the organs fully grown." This is the statement in the Rgveda. In the Uttara Rāmāyana, it is stated that Brhaspati had a Brāhmana son named Kuśadhvaja, and that a daughter named Devavati was born to Kuśadhvaja. Devavati was born from his mouth while Kuśadhvaja was engaged in devotional recitation of the Vedas. Śiśa was the rebirth of this Devavati. It is stated in the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 69, that Droṇa, the son of Bhrādvāja, was born from a portion of Brhaspati. Kacca was another son of Brhaspati. For full particulars of the story how Devavātī (daughter of Sukra) hankered after Kaca, see "Kacca." Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 1, that Brhaspati had a wife called Cāndramasi and that she gave birth to six Agnis. In Kampa Rāmāyana, Yuddhkāṇḍa mention is made that Brhaspati had a daughter named Sūlkhā. Six sons and a daughter were born to Cāndramasi. The six sons were six Agnis (fires): In sacrifices the burnt offerings and the ghee were the portions meant for the great and mighty fire Śāmyu, the son of Brhaspati. It is to satisfy this great fire which blazes with numberless pointed tongues, that in sacrifices such as Cāturmyāṣa, Ātvamedha etc. animals are slaughtered. The daughter of Dharma was the wife of Śāmyu. The name of the wonderful being (Śāmyu's wife) is Satyā. A son named Dīpti and three daughters were born to Śāmyu. The son of Dīpti is Bharadvāja who is the recipient of first portion of Ghee oblatted in sacrifice. On all full-moon days offerings of sacrifices are meant for Bharata. Bharata had a son named Bhārata and a daughter named Bhārati. Bharata the Agni is said to be the son of the Agni who is Prajā-pati Bharata. Thus Bharata got the famous name ‘the great’. Bharata married Víra and a son was born to them called Víra. This Víra like Soma is the recipient of sacrificial ghee, according to the belief of the Brähmanas. As this Víra is the recipient of the second ghee offered in sacrifice, as Soma, he is known by names such as Rathaprabhu, Rathadhvána and Kumbharetas. Víra married Sarayú and became the father of Siddhi—Siddhi the Agnídevatā—who is remembered in all fire songs. Fire which has no action on prosperity, fame and vigour has the name Niścyavana. Niścyavana praises the earth. Satya is the son of Niścyavana. Satya which blazes by flame determines time. Satya is known by another name Nískríti. The Agni Śvāna spreads diseases. The Agnis called Vipulaprabha, Yatātmā and Brāhmaçāra are invoked in simple domestic sacrifices by Brähmanas. The awful fire Bādavāgni is supported by life. The sixth son of Brhaspati and Tārā is called Śvetakṛt. The oblation offered to this Agni is known as Udadvāra. Svāhā was the daughter of Cāndramaśi. Svāhā had three sons. They are three Agnis called Kāmāgni, Amoghā, and Ukthyā. (Brāghavata, Skandha 4).

5) Growing amorous on the wife of elder brother. A story stating how Brhaspati begot a son by the wife of Utathya is given in Skandha 9 of Bhāgavata. Māmatā, the wife of Utathya, was pregnant. Brhaspati had coition with her when her husband was away. The mother and the child in the womb who opposed the act of Brhaspati were cursed. Māmatā gave birth to two children. Fearing that her husband might cast her out she left the son of Brhaspati in the forest and was about to go, when there was a divine voice from above, “Mādhava, Brāhadvājīnamāma bhara dvājān Brhaspati.” “You senseless woman, bring up this one born of the two. Brhaspati, bring up this one born of the two.” Hearing this ethereal voice Brhaspati took the child and gave him the name Bharadvāja and brought him up. After that the child was given to emperor Bharata. The famous archer Droṇa was the son of this Bharadvāja.

6) Personation of Brhaspati. The enmity between the devas and asuras increased day by day. Śukrācārya the teacher of the asuras began to do penance before Śiva in the Himālayas, with a view to get a divine spell or incantation to destroy the devas. The duration of the penance was thousand years. Indra came to know of this secret and sent his daughter Jayantī to get the spell from Śukra by deceit. She stayed with Śukra as his disciple and servant. Thousand years passed by. Śiva appeared before Śukra and gave him the spell, capable of destroying the devas. When he was about to return Jayantī accepted him as her husband. Because of his familiarity with her, of a long standing, he could not refuse her request. Śukra told her that he would become her husband, for a period of ten years and that during that period both of them would be invisible to the world. Thus the couple began an invisible life.

Brhaspati thought of making the best use of this period. He personated himself as Śukrācārya and went to the Asuras, who thinking that their teacher had returned after a long penance gave him a loving and sincere welcome. Brhaspati sat on the seat of Śukrācārya and began to exhort the asuras in such a manner that within the period of ten years he was able to remove factionalism and hatred from them.

At the expiry of ten years’ invisible life Śukra returned having sent Jayantī away. The asuras saw two Sukras together and were amazed. They declared that the real Śukra was he who had been teaching them for the last ten years. Being dismayed at the ingratitude of the asuras he cursed them that they would shortly be destroyed and then left the place. At this juncture Brhaspati also assumed his real form and returned to heaven. Thus the asuras became a people without a leader like sheep without a shepherd. At last they approached their teacher Śukra who became their teacher again, when they begged for his pardon. But he said that his curse could not be recalled. But he gave them absolution by saying that they would regain their lost power during the time of Manu Sávarni. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

7) Cursing Rāvana. Once Rāvana was returning haughtily and proud after having defeated the devas and conquered heaven, when Sulekhā the daughter of Brhaspati, got terrified and ran away to hide herself from him. Rāvana chased her and when she was caught he tried to ravish her. Brhaspati got angry and cursed him. “You, who have grown rank by the dart of Cupid, will meet with death by the dart of Rāma”. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

8) Brhaspati and Hanumān. Aṅjanā the mother of Hanumān was a servant of Brhaspati in her previous birth. Her name then was Pūjīkāsthali. She once went to fetch water. At that time many Vidyādhara young people, both male and female, came there and engaged in amorous acts. Pūjīkāsthali witnessed these love-scenes for a long time and then returned home. It is mentioned in Kamba Rāmāyaṇa that Brhaspati cursed her to be born in the next birth as a female monkey.

Aṅjanā gave birth to Hanumān. When he grew up Hanumān desired to learn Vedas and Śastras (scriptures). Hanumān approached Brhaspati to learn from him. But Brhaspati was not prepared to teach a monkey who jumped about everywhere. The disappointed Hanumān went to the Sun, who asked him how it could be done by him as he was engaged in travelling without stop. Hanumān said that he would move in front of the sun always. Thus Hanumān who had been rejected by Brhaspati became the disciple of the Sun. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

9) Other information.

(1) It is mentioned in Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 1, that Brhaspati was the teacher of the hermit Sukha.

(2) In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51, it is instructed that Brhaspati should be consecrated in temples as wearing a necklace of beads (Elao carpus seeds) and a water pot.

(3) Mention is made in the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Stanza 21 that Brhaspati gave Bharadvājā Agnēyāstra (the arrow of fire).

(4) During the period of emperor Prthu, when the Earth-goddess was changed into a cow the gods employed Brhaspati to milk the cow to obtain the things they needed. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69).

(5) Once Brhaspati gave Subrahmaṇya a stick as a present. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 46).

BRHATKARMA

(6) Once Brhaspati advised Indra to use sweet words.
(M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 84).

(7) Once Brhaspati got angry with Mahaviṣṇu at the sacrificial hall of Uparicaravas.
(M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 336, Stanza 14).

(8) Brhaspati cursed Jaladeva (goddesses of water).
(M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 242, Stanza 27).

(9) Brhaspati and Candra are said to be Brāhmaṇa Kings.
(M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 8).

10) Conclusion. Brhaspati was a deep thinker and one who had firm convictions in many matters. He was a man of vast knowledge. Every movement of the gods had its origin in the brains of Brhaspati. There is no philosophy which does not contain the exhortations made by Brhaspati at various times to the devas (gods) or kings or hermits.

BRHATKARMA. A king of the family of Aniga. (Agni-Puruṣa).

BRHATKATHA. See Guṇḍālyya.

BRHATKĀYA. A king of the family of Bharata. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

BRHATKETU. A king in ancient India. Mention is made about this king in the Mahābhārata, Aśi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 237.

BRHATKIRTI. A son of Angiras. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 218, that seven sons, named Brhatkirti, Brhajyotisa, Brhadbrahmā, Brhadmanā, Brhadmantra, Brhadāśa and Brhaspati and a daughter named Bhānumati were born to Angiras and his wife Subhā.

BRHATKSATRA I. A king. Scion of the family of Bhagiratha. In the Mahābhārata, Aśi Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 21, it is mentioned that this king attended Pāñcālī Svayamīvara (Marriage of Pāñcālī).

BRHATKSATRA II. A king of the country called Kekaya. On the first day of the battle of Bharata at Kurukṣetra, this King fought with Kṛṣṇa, the teacher. Later he killed Kṣemadhūrī in the battle. In Mahābhārata, Drona Parva, Chapter 125, mention is made that he fought with Drona, the teacher and was killed.

BRHATKSATRA III. A king of the country known as Nisadha. In the battle of Bharata, he fought on the side of the Kauravas and was killed in the battle, by Dhrṣṭadyumna (Drona Parva, Chapter 337, Stanza 65).

BRHATPUTRA. A king of the Puru dynasty. King Suhotra was his father. King Brhatputra had three sons, Ajamīḍha, Dvīṃđha and Purumīḍha. (Agni Puruṣa, Chapter 278).

BRHATSAMA. A teacher born in the family of Angiras. The Kṣatriyas of his time had troubled and harassed him a great deal. Mention is made in Atharva Veda that the Kṣatriyas met with destruction as a consequence.

BRHATSAMA(N). The name of a hymn. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 10, Anuvāka 1, Sūkta 52).

BRHATSENA I. A king born of the family of Bharata. (Bhāgavata Skandha 9).

BRHATSENA II. An asura (opponent of gods) born from a portion of Krodhavāsā, a dāitya (asura). Lakṣmaṇā, the daughter of Brhatseṇa was one of the wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. In the battle of Mahābhārata, Brhatseṇa was on the side of the Kauravas.

BRHATSENA III. A teacher. It is mentioned in Garuḍa Puruṣa that Nārada had taught Brhatseṇa, Brahma-vidyā (theosophy).

BRHATSEṇA. A female attendant of Damayanti. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 60, that when Nala was defeated in the game of dice, Damayanti sent Brhatseṇa to inform the ministers about the defeat of the King.

BRHATTA I. Another name of the Sun. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 42).

BRHATTA II. A king born to Kāleya, an asura. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 55).

BRHATTA(M). A song of Sāma (conciliatory—one of the four expedients) originated from the head of hermit Pāñcājanya. From the face of this hermit another song of Sāma called Rathantara also originated. These two songs of Sāma are very effective expedients. So they are called Tarasāhara (quickly effective). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Stanza 7).

BRHATI. Mother of Cākṣuṣamanu. Two sons, Śiṣṭi, and Bhavya were born to Dhruva by his wife Sambhu. Suchāyā, the wife of Śiṣṭi gave birth to five sons, Ripu, Ripuṇjaya, Vīpraj, Vṛkāla and Vṛkatejas. These sons were sinless. Brhati was the wife of Ripu. Cākṣuṣa Manu was born to Ripu and Brhati. (Viśu Puruṣa, Amśa 1, Chapter 13).

BRHATI I. One of the seven horses of the Sun. The seven horses of Sun are, Gāyatri, Brhati, Uṣṇik, Jagati, Trīṣṭup, Anuṣṭup and Paṅkti. (Viśu Puruṣa, Amśa 2, Chapter 8).

BRHATVA. A devagandharva (a class of gods). In the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, mention is made that this gandharva had participated in the birth celebration of Arjuna.

BRHLANA (BILHANA). A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 11th Century A.D. Brhīṇaśa is the author of Vikramāṇikadevacarita, Āurapāñcāśikā, Karṇasundari and such other works. Of these Karṇasundari is a four-act play. The theme of the play is Kāmadēva the king of the Cālūkya marrying Karṇasundari a vīḍyādhara woman. The King at first sees her in a dream and falls in love with her. She then appears before the King in the guise of a boy. But the intelligent minister recognizes her by her fragrance and introduces her to the King and the King marries her. Brhīṇaśa had written his dramas on the model of Mālavīkāgnimitra, Ratnāvalī and such other dramas.

BUDBUDA. A celestial maid. She was the hand-maid of Vṛgā a celestial beauty. (For further information see Vṛgā).

BUDHA I. Son of Candra.

1) Birth. Brhaspati the teacher-priest of the devas had a very beautiful wife named Tārā. One day seeing the handsome figure of Candra, Tārā became amorous. Candra was the Disciple of Brhaspati. It was not right on the part of the wife of the teacher to feel amorous towards a disciple. Brhaspati came to know of the affair and sending for Candra asked him to return his wife. Both Candra and Tārā did not pay any heed to Brhaspati. Both sides were about to engage in a battle. The devas arrayed themselves on both sides. Seeing that this was not an honourable thing some devas tried for a compromise. Finally Candra returned Tārā to Brhaspati. At this time Tārā was pregnant. Both Candra and Brhaspati claimed the paternity of the child in the womb of Tārā, who witnessed that Candra was the father of the child. All accepted the words of Tārā. Budha was the child Tārā gave birth to.

2) Marriage and birth of a child. Budha grew up to be a youth. During the period the King Sūdumuna one day entered Kumāravana (a forest) and was changed to a woman. When the King became a woman the name adopted was Īḷā, who grew amorous of Budha. The famous King Pūrūravas was the son born to them.

(For more information see Īḷā, Candra and Pūrūravas).

3) Other information

(1) Budha wears a necklace of Rudrākṣa beads (Elaeocarpus Seeds) and has a bow. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

(2) Candra performed the christening ceremony of Budha. (Bhāgavata Skandha 9).

(3) Budha is a luminous member of the assembly of Brahman. (M.B. Sakha Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 29).

BUDDHA II. A hermit. Once he spoke about the importance of Vānaprastha (retirement in the forest). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 244, Stanza 17, that this hermit spent the whole of his life in Vānaprastha (retirement in the forest) and at the end he entered heaven.

BUDDHA III. A scientist on ethics. He has written a book called Dharmāstra on the different kinds of rites of consecration, initiation etc. from formation in the womb till Upanayana (investiture with the Brahman string), different kinds of marriages, Paciṣamahāyajñas (the five essential sacrifices) Śraddha (offering to the manes), Pākayajña (simple domestic sacrifices), Somayāga (drinking the moon-plant juice at the Soma sacrifice) and such other matters of ethics.

BUDDHA IV. A Bṛāhmaṇa who lived in Gaudadeśa. Budha who was the incarnation of all vices drank too much and spent a whole night lying unconscious on the veranda of the house of a harlot. His father became anxious about him as he had not returned though the night had advanced much. He searched everywhere and finally came to the place where he was lying unconscious. He reviled the son, who getting angry killed his father then and there.

After that he returned home. His mother advised him to leave off his vices. His wife shed tears before him. Seeing that his mother and wife were impediments on his way, he put an end to their lives.

Once this Bṛāhmaṇa carried away Sulabhā the beautiful wife of hermit Kālābhūti and ravished her. Sulabhā cursed him and made him a leper.

Budha wandered about and reached the city of King Śrāṣṭrapāla. On that day the King was about to go to Heaven with the entire city by aeroplane. However hard the pilots might try the plane would not move an inch. Then the devas told the King: “Drive away the leper there. The vices of that sinful murderer have made the plane stationary.”

Śrāṣṭrapāla who was kind and righteous, near the leper and cured him with the sūtrākṣaramantra (a spell of four letters) and got ready to take him also to heaven. (Ganeśa Purāṇa I : 76).

BUDDHA. The founder of Buddhism. Some consider him to be an incarnation of Viṣṇu. In days of old in a battle the devas were defeated by the asuras and the gods approached Viṣṇu with their grievance. Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as the son of Suddhodana with the name Gautamabuddha (Siddhārtha). Then he went to the asuras and made them reject the Vedas and the laws thereof. All the Daityas (Asuras) became Buddhists. There is a story in Agnīpurāṇa, Chapter 16, that thus it was the purpose of Buddha to convert every asura to Buddhism and send him to hell.

The story given above is in accordance with the Purāṇas. The following are the facts gained by historic investigations.

Gautama Buddha was born in B.C. 560, in Kapilavastu near the Himālayas. His father was Suddhodana. He was born in the family of the Śākyas. The word ‘Śākya’ is another form of the word Kaśatriya. The real name of Buddha was Siddhārtha. Suddhodana brought up his son in such a way that he should not be subjected to any sort of mental pain or worry. So he kept Buddha aloof from the outer world. Thus he spent his childhood in comfort and pleasure. Once by chance he happened to see a sick man, an old man and a dead body. The sight made him thoughtful. He began to think upon a way to remove sorrow and pain from the world and to bring about peace and comfort.

The change that appeared in the son worried the father. So at the age of sixteen he made Siddhārtha marry Yaśodhāra. A son was born to them. But the mind of Siddhārtha was restless, distressed and agitated. One day Siddhārtha discarded everything and went out of the palace alone.

Siddhārtha wandered from place to place learning from various teachers. But he did not find peace.

Once on a full-moon day while he was sitting in meditation under a banian tree he got ‘Bodha’. (Insight or conviction). From that day onwards he began to be known by the name ‘Buddha’. After that he came to Kāśī, and told his disciples how he got Bodha or conviction. The number of his followers increased day by day. Thus Buddhism came into being. Buddha said that the reason for pain and sorrow in the world was desire and that sorrow could be exterminated only by controlling and overcoming all desire. To attain Eternal Bliss one should be true and righteous in thought, deed and word and that ‘Not Killing’ was the foundation of righteousness. Buddhism spread everywhere in Bhārat.

Gautama Buddha died at the age of eighty.

BUDDHAGHOṢA. An ancient Sanskrit poet. It is believed that he lived in the 4th century A.D. The most important work of this poet who was a Buddhist, is ‘Padyacādāmaṇi’. The life of Buddha is described in this Book in ten Kāṇḍas (sections). A similarity to the poems of Kālūṣa and Aśvaghosa is seen in this poem. Buddhaghoṣa is said to have reached Ceylon in 357 A.D. and translated some Buddhist literature.

BUDDHI. A wife of Dharmadeva. In Viṣṇu Purāṇa Atriśa I, Chapter 7, it is mentioned that Dharmadeva had married thirteen daughters of Daksa. They are Śraddhā, Lakṣmī, Dṛṣṭi, Tuṣṭi, Medhā, Puṣṭi, Kriyā, Budhi, Laññā, Vāpas, Śānti, Siddhī and Kirtī.

BUDDHIKĀMA. An attendant of Śubhramaṇya. (M.B. Sāraka Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 12).

BUDDHISM (BUDDHA-MATA). The origin of Buddhism was in the sixth century B.C. This new religion was shaped out of Hinduism that prevailed at that time. Buddhism which had its origin in North India, prevailed everywhere in India up to the eleventh century A.D. During that period there was an overflow of this religion to the other parts of Asia. Now this religion has its full sway over the people of Burma. 90% of the population there, are adherents of Buddhism. 90% of the people of Thailand, 60% of the people in Ceylon and Japan and 17% in China are now Buddhists. In India, Pakistan and the Philippines the Buddhists are only a minority. Even though Indonesia is a Muslim country there is a small class of Buddhists there. Cambodia, Laos and Tibet are considered to be Buddhist countries. In Nepal there are only two religions, Hinduism and Buddhism. In countries outside Asia there are followers of Buddhism. Statistics reveal that there are one hundred and sixty-five thousand Buddhists in North America, one hundred and thirty-five thousand in South America, and ten thousand in Europe. The number of Buddhists in the world today is 150,31 crores.

C. (q) The letter C has two meanings, viz., evil people and pure man.

CAITYA. Sisupāla, king of Cedi. Dhṛṣṭakum, King of Cedi, is also known by this name. It was this Caitya who led the Krauṇevyūha created by Dhṛṣṭadyumna in the great battle. (Kraunyevyūha = A battle array in the shape of a stork). (Sloka 47, Chapter 50, Bhīṣma Parva).

CAITRARATHA. A prince born to King Kuru of his queen Vāhinī (Sloka 50, Chapter 94, Adi Parva).

CAITRARATHA (M). A forest of purāṇic fame. Once King Yayati enjoyed sexual acts with the apsaras Viśvācī in this forest. (Sloka 43, Chapter 75, Adi Parva). It was here in this forest that Pāṇḍu spent some days once with his wives Mādri and Kuntī. (Sloka 48, Chapter 118, Adi Parva).

As a support to the great mountain Mahāmṛtunjaya were four mountains, Mandara, Merumandara, Supārśva and Kumuda. Above each of these was a garden-wood, Nandana, Caitraratha, Viśbhṛjaka and Śarvotobhadra. Thus it is to be presumed that Caitraratha was on Merumandara. (Chapter 16, Pañcamā Skandha, Bhāgavata).

CAITRARATHA PARVA. A sub-division of Adi Parva, (See under Mahābhārata).

CAITYAKA. A mountain. This mountain is situated near Girivraj, the capital city of Magadh. This mountain was very dear to the people of Magadh. The followers of Bṛhadraṇa deemed it as a God and worshipped it. (Chapter 21, Sabhā Parva).

CAKATA. (See Brahmaddatta I)

CAKRA. A son of Vāsuki, the Nāga king. He died at the serpent yajña (Sarpa Satra) of Janamejaya by falling into the fire. (Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 6).

CAKRA II. One of the three attendants given to Subrahmanya by Viṣṇu, the other two being Sāṅkrama and Atikrama (Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 40).

CAKRA III. One of the two attendants presented to Skandhadeva by Tvaṣṭa, the other one being Anuekara. (Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 40).

CAKRA (M) I. Suddārśana Cakrā (disc) of Mahāviṣṇu. The Viṣṇu Purāṇa contains the following story about the origin of the Cakra. Sāṁyadeva (the Sun God) married Sāṁjñā, daughter of Viṣvakarmā. But, due to the insufferable heat of her husband the marital life of Sāṁjñā became miserable, and so she requested her father to lessen the heat of Viṣṇu. And, accordingly Viṣṇakarmā ground Viṣṇu on a grinding machine and thus diminished his effulgence. But, the grinding could diminish only 1/8 of that effulgence, which glowing red-hot dropped on the earth, and with that Viṣṇakarmā made the Sudarśana Cakra, the Trisūla, the Pūpakavimāna and the weapon called Sakti. Out of these four things the Trisūla came to be possessed by Śiva, the Pūpakavimāna by Kubera and Sakti by Brāhma. The Sudarśana Cakra which was glowing like anything was deposited in the sea. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 2).

There is a story in the Mahābhārata as to how the Cakra thrown into the sea came into the possession of Mahāviṣṇu. While Śri Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna were picnicking on the shores of the Yamuna, Agnideva went to them and requested them to give Kaḥḍava forest to him for food. As Taṅkāka, friend of Indra, was living in the forest the latter was causing heavy rains to fall there. Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna realized the fact that Agnī would be able to consume the forest only after subjugating Indra. But, how to manage it? Then Agnī said that he would supply the weapon to fight Indra with, and accordingly he meditated upon Varuṇa, who presented to him (Agni) a chariot and flag with monkey as symbol, a quiver which would never become empty of arrows, a bow called Gāndiva and the Sudarśana Cakra. Agnideva gave the Cakra to Śri Kṛṣṇa and the other things to Arjuna. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 297).

CAKRA (M) II. A city in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 45).

CAKRADEVA. A warrior born in Viṣṇu vineśa. (Viṣṇu dynasty). (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 57).

CAKRADHANUS. A synonym of Kapila mahārshi. (See Kapila).

CAKRADHARA. A very intelligent brahmin. One-eyed and bent down in body he is a character in Vatsarājaracita. (See Vidūṣaka).

CAKRADHARMA. Chief of the Vidyādhāras. He, with his younger brother is engaged in singing the praise of Kubera. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 27).

CAKRADVĀRA (M). A great mountain. Indra performed a yajña on this mountain. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 185).

CAKRĀKA. The son, a Brahmanādin, of Viśvāmitra. (Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 64).

CAKRAMANDA. A nāga (a serpent). It was this nāga which was deputed by Ananta (nāga king) to lead the soul of Balarāma on his death to Pātala. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

CAKRANEMI. A woman attendant of Skandadeva. (Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 5).

CAKRĀTI. A town in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 45).

CAKRĀVĀN. A mountain very much extolled in the Purāṇas. When deputing monkeys in quest of Stīr, Sugriva instructed them to make a special search in Mount Cakravān. It was on this mountain that Viṣṇu-karma made the Sudarśana Cakra. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiskindhā Kāṇḍa, Chapter 42, Verse 16).

CAKRAVYŪHA. A Phalanx.

A particular pattern of army formation on ground. In the Kaurava-Pāṇḍava war Dronā-ārya formed a Cakravyūha wherein Abhīmanyu, son of Arjuna got himself trapped and killed. (Abhimanyu, who forced himself inside the Vyūha did not know the method of getting out of it which Arjuna alone knew). Cakravyūha is made in the form and shape of Cart-wheels. Vyāsa has described the Cakravyūha made by Droṇa as follows:—
The great preceptor made the Cakravyūha and posted in it to maximum capacity kings, who were equal to Indra. In every opening of the vyūha were posted princes equal in prowess to the Sun. All the princes were organised compactly. And, all of them wore red uniforms and were adorned with other things also red in colour and held red flags. They also wore golden ornaments and garland scent with Sandal paste.

Ten thousand strong they rushed forward to fight with Abhimanyu. Duryodhana’s son, Lakṣmaṇa, led the onrush. In the centre (of the Cakravyūha) stood Duryodhana in the company of heroes like Karṇa, Duṣśasana and Kṛpa. And, at the head of the army stood Droṇa, the captain of the army, who looked like the rising sun. Then there was the King of Sindhu, and near him stood Aśvatthāmā, and there stood in front of them thirty Kauravas, all of them equal to Devas.

On the flanks were great heroes like Salya, Bhūrīśravas. And then did the battle rage. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 34).

CAKRIKA. A forest hunter. The following story is told about him in Chapter 16, Kriyāyoga of the Padma Purāṇa.

Devoted much to his parents, Cakrika was a great devotee of Viṣṇu. He used to worship Viṣṇu daily with fruits, (edible) roots etc. But, he did so only after himself tasting them. One day while thus tasting a fruit, somehow or other it got itself lodged in his throat, and all his attempts to dislodge it failed. The fruit had to be, at any rate, offered to Viṣṇu and therefore Cakrika drew his sword and cut his throat with it.

Lord Viṣṇu who was so please at such great devotion of the man appeared on the scene and brought him back to life. Sometime afterwards Cakrika expired at the Dvārakā temple, and thus attained salvation.

CAKRODDHATA. A king in the dynasty of Yayāti. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

CAKSUS I. A synonym of the Sun. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 42).

CAKSUS II. A tributary of river Gaṅgā. Starting from Viṣṇupāda (Svarga) the Gaṅgā falls into Devayāna and thence into the moon and after flooding the whole area it divides itself into four tributaries, viz., Sītā, Cakṣus, Alakanandā and Bhadrā and falls into Brahmaloka and flows in four directions. Of the four tributaries the river called Caksus falls on the peak of Mount Mālayavān and then flows through Ketumāla and falls into the western sea. The Gaṅgā which flows through India is a branch of the above-mentioned tributary, Alakanandā. (Devi Bhāgavata, Āṣṭama Skandha).

CAKSUS III. A king born in the lunar dynasty. He was the son of King Anudruhyu. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

CAKSURVARDHANIKĀ. A river which flows through Śākadvipa, (Śāka island). (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 33).

CĀKYĀRKUTTU. A very important art practised in temples mainly in Kerala. It is called so because it is exhibited by Cākyārs (a sect attached to temples). In important temples a place called Kātambala is set apart for displaying the art. The Kāttu now prevalent in Kerala temples is not exactly of its old form. Kulaśekharavarmā permūl (elected ruler of old Kerala) effected some changes in the old art form, and Bhāskara-ravivarmā permūl and Tolakavi made further reforms in it. The art of Kāttu was evolved with the object of relating purānic stories in such a manner as will help devotional feelings grow in man.

The main aim of the Kāttu is to narrate purānic stories in such a way as to instil Bhakti in the hearers and to create an interest in them in the Purāṇas. The Cākyār (the man who gives the discourse who usually belongs to the Brahmin sect called Cākyār) tells the story in a very interesting way, reciting appropriate passages from the Purāṇas and illustrating them with apt examples and similes. The narration is from the beginning till end humorous. The Cākyār who delivers the discourse is usually a man with a good sense of humour and a sense of what is odd, strange or eccentric in nature and human character. There are three varieties of Kūṭṭu: Prabhandhari Kūṭṭu, Nairbhar Kūṭṭu and Kōṭṭāṭum. Of these the first is narrative (Ākhyaṇa-para) while in the second and third type, the element of acting is more important (Abhinayapara).

CALĀ. Lakṣmīdevi. The following story is told in the Devī-bhāgavata as to how this name came to be applied to the devi. Once Revantā the very handsome son of Sāryadeva came to Vaiśāṅtha riding Ucealīśravas, Indra’s horse. Devī, who was at that time with Viṣṇu gazed for a few minutes in wonder at the horse. She did not, therefore, attend to Viṣṇu’s talk. Angered at this Viṣṇu told the devi: "Since your eyes find enjoyment on unnecessary things and move about among such objects, you shall be called from today onwards Rāma and Calā. Also you will be born as a mare on earth. Accordingly Mahālakṣmi was born as a mare on the banks of river Sarasvati, and regained her old form only after delivering a son by Viṣṇu. That son was Ekaśīra, founder of the Hehaya kingdom. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

CAMARA. (CAMARI). An animal whose tail is its most important and valued organ. In the course of its movements in the forest if the tail gets entangled anywhere it is supposed to lie down there till the tail is freed by itself. About the origin of Camara, the following story is told in the Vālmikī Rāmāyaṇa. Krodhavāsā, daughter of Daśaprajāpati and wife of Kaśyapa had ten daughters, viz. Mṛga, Mrgamadā, Hari, Bhadrampadā, Mātaṅgī, Sārdūli, Sveti, Surasā, Surabhi and Kadrū. To Mrgamadā the Sṛmaras and Camaras owe their origin. (Vālmikī Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kāṇḍa, Canto 14).

CAMARA (M). A rod (handle) with a large tuft of hair, fibre or feathers at the end. A symbol used by kings and brahmins. Camara of the king should have a golden handle, and it should be made of the wings of the swan, the peacock, the balākā bird etc. But, the wings of different birds shall not be intermixed. Circular in shape, the Camara should have on its handle 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, or 8 sandhis (joints, knots). (Agnipurāṇa, Chapter 245).

CAMASA. A yogi, the younger brother of Bharata, a king born in the dynasty of Priyavrata, son of Manu. This country got its name Bhārata from king Bharata (country ruled by Bharata). Bharata had nine brothers called Kuśāvarta, Ilāvarta, Brahmvarta, Āryāvarta, Malaya, Bhadraketu, Sana, Indraspyk and Kikaṭa. Bharata had also nine other brothers renowned as navayogīs, born of another mother. Camasa was one of them, the other eight being Kavi, Hari, Ambariṣa, Prabuddha, Pippalāyana, Avirhotra, Dāma and Kharabhajana. (Bhāgavata Pañcama Skandha).

CAMASODHEDA. A holy place in Saurāṣṭra which forms part of the very reputed sacred place called Vināśana. It is said that it was here that the river Sarasvati which once became invisible, was detected. A bath here is as efficacious as performing the Jyotishāṇya yajña. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 112).

CAMATKĀRA. (See PATTU).

CAMOHARA. A viśvadeva. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 191, Verse 35).

CAMPA. A king born in the Āṅga dynasty. (See CANDRAVAMŚA).

CAMPA. (CAMPĀPURI). A city on the banks of river Gaṅgā. Campā is often referred to in the Purāṇas. It was here that Lomapāda lived in tretāyuga. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 15). In Dvāparayuṅga the city was ruled by a Sūta called Atiratha, who got Karna, while he and his wife were brooding over their lack of a child. In after years Karna also ruled the city. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 7).

CAMPĀKA. A vidyādhara. Once he visited the banks of river Yamunā with his wife Madālāsā when they got from the forest nearby a child. The child in later years became famous as Ekavīra, founder of the Hehaya dynasty. (See EKAVĪRA).

CAMPĀKĀRANYA. (CAMPĀKARA). A holy place in Northern India. One day’s halt at the place and a bath there is considered to be as good as giving away one thousand cows as gift. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84).

CAMPYEA. Son of Viśvāmitra who was a brahmavadīn. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 58).

CAMPU. A literary form of presenting a story in a mixture of prose and verse, and abounding in beautiful descriptions: “Gadyapadyamayam kāvyam Cempūrītyabhidhīyate”. Over and above prose and verse the Campūs use dāṇḍakas (very long, involved and poetical prose). This literary form had its origin first in Sanskrit and other Indian languages adopted it with some variations. For instance, though prose in Sanskrit Campūs is really prose, that in Malayalam is something akin to metrical prose. There are more than two hundred Campūs in Malayalam. The most famous of the Campū writers in Malayālam are Punam Namboothiri, Mahāmaṅgalam Namboothiri and Nilakṣaṇa.

CAMŪ. A division of an army. (See Aksauhinī).

CĀMUŅDA. (See Pārvati).

CĀṆAKA. The auspiciousness of Cāṇaka (cowdung) is due to Lakṣmi. (See Lakṣmi, Paras 1 and 6).

CĀṆAKYA (KAṬŪṬILYA). The famous author of “Arthaśāstra” a treatise on political economy. Eastern and western scholars have made exhaustive researches on this intellectual giant of ancient India, Cāṇaka. But, nothing definite has yet been established about his time or life. Indians have accepted as a fact the traditional legend that he was a minister of Candra-gupta, the founder of the Maurya dynasty. It is also firmly believed that it was this mighty intellect of a brahmin who made Candragupta a powerful emperor and steered the ship of his state. The phrase Cāṇaka’s kuṭilā (crooked tactics) has become proverbial. Some scholars hold the opinion that he came to be called “Kaṭūṭila” because of his Kuṭila (crooked) tactics; but evidence to establish this view-point is yet to be adduced. It is his famous Arthaśāstra, which has made Cāṇaka’s name a world famous one. The great German thinker Jolly has described the Arthaśāstra as a unique composition in the Sanskrit language. And, Johann Meyer, the great western scholar has the following to say about the book:—

“Kaṭūṭila’s Arthaśāstra is not one single text, it is a collection and collateralization of all books in ancient India. To study the greatness of the theories and principles contained in it today requires continuous and constant study at least for twenty years and the unremitting efforts of a scholar with unbounded knowledge are required.”
Even his name has not yet been confirmed beyond doubts. Kauṭilya is also called Viṣṇugupta, Candakya, Drameila, and Aṇgula. Modern researches place the date of the Arthasastra at about 400 B.C. In Viśākhadatta’s Mudrārākṣasa (drama) the name Kauṭilya is used.

The Authors of Nitiśāstra maintain that the name of the author of Arthasastra was Viṣṇugupta. It may be gathered from the Mudrārākṣasa that he became famous as Candakya as he was the son of Caṇḍaka, and that he possessed great erudition in Nitiśāstra, Dharmaśāstra and astronomy. There is another legend to the effect that this brahmin (Caṇḍaka) belonged to Kaniciepurā and that he migrated to Pāṭaliputra, the seat of learning and scholarship. As Kāmandaṅka, who lived in the fourth century B.C. has eulogised Caṇḍaka in his Nitiśāstra it may be surmised that Caṇḍaka lived sometime near about that. Candragupta and Caṇḍaka are referred to in the Viṣṇu and the Vāmana Purāṇas. Kauṭilya was keen-eyed and scholar par excellence.

“Arthasastra” is a great book written by him after thoroughly examining the viewpoints of previous scholars, and then establishing his own views and theories. From the Daśakumāracarita of Daṇḍi (A.D. 709) it may be seen that there are 6000 verses in the Anuṣṭupu metre (eight letters in one line) in the Arthasastra composed by Viṣṇugupta for the use of Candragupta Maurya. The Arthasastra has been held in praise by Bāṇabhaṭṭa, who lived in the 7th Century, Somadevasūri, who lived in the 10th century and also by Hemacandra, the author of Kavyānusāsana, who lived in the 12th century. The book is a discourse on the principles and practices that are necessary to establish a strong government of an ideal empire. Candakya has mentioned in his book with respect the old scholars like Manu, Śukra, Bṛhadapati, Nārāyaṇa, Kātyāyana and Govinda dikṣīta. (For the puranic story about Caṇḍaka see Vararuci, Para 6a).

Caṇḍakāśi. A notorious harlot who lived in dāvapara yuga. When one day at midnight she came to the appointed place to meet a paramour the latter had not arrived. While waiting impatiently there she was attacked and killed by a leopard. Emissaries of Viṣṇu as also of Yama arrived to carry away the soul of Caṇḍakāśi. Yama’s men argued that she had sinned throughout her life, and therefore claimed the harlot’s soul. But the emissaries of Viṣṇu countered the argument thus: “once on her way to conduct her trade Caṇḍakāśi got into a temple and munched tāmbūla in the course of which she rubbed some lime on the walls of the temple. Taking into consideration this fact of her having spent sometime thus to clean the temple wall her soul deserves to be led to Viṣṇuloka”.

In the argument the emissaries of Yama were defeated and the soul of Caṇḍakāśi was taken to Vaikunṭha by the emissaries of Viṣṇu. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

Caṇḍalakṣi II. A vidyādha girl. Once while she was concentrating her mind in prayer over Mahālakṣi, Rāvana, King of the Raḵṣasas, committed rape on her, and she cursed him that he should die on account of Mahālakṣi herself and accordingly at last he was killed by Rāma on account of Stā, the incarnation of Mahālakṣi. (Kāmpa Rāmāyaṇa).

Caṇḍa. (See Caṇḍamahāṣena).

Caṇḍabala. A prominent monkey. In the Rāvapa war this monkey caused much trouble to Kum-bhakarna. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 287, Verse 6).

Caṇḍabāṅgarava. A maharṣi born in the dynasty of Cyavana Muni. A very erudite scholar and deeply versed in the Vedas, it was this maharṣi, who performed Janamejaya’s famous Sarpa sattra. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 4).

Caṇḍaka. A forest hunter who attained salvation by the worship of Śivalinga. (Phaluss of Śiva).

While once hunting in the woods Caṇḍaka saw a Śiva temple in ruins, and the Śivalinga lying on the ground uncarved for. This sight greatly grieved him, and he told Śrībhaketu, son of the Pāṇcāla Rāja who happened to come to that way all about the temple and the liṅga. To his query as to whether the Śastra permitted a hunter like himself to worship Śivalinga, Śrībhaketu answered there were injunctions in the Śastras for people like him (Caṇḍakas) to instal Śivalinga on rock and then worship it daily, the worshipper wearing ashes from the burning ghat on his body. Accordingly Caṇḍaka installed the liṅga on a rock and began worshipping it daily along with his wife, Pulindī. But after sometime there was left no ashes in the burning ghat and Caṇḍaka and Pulindī discussed between them the means to get ashes for the next day. Then Pulindī suggested that she should burn herself to ashes and that Caṇḍaka should continue worshipping the Śivalinga wearing on his body the ashes. Very unwillingly Caṇḍaka agreed with the sad proposal of his wife, and the next day he worshipped the Śivalinga wearing on his body the ashes of Pulindī. And, at the close of the worship he called aloud for Pulindī, and lo! wonder of wonders! she stood there before him more healthy than formerly. Moreover a vimāna descended from the skies and conducted both Caṇḍaka and Pulindī to Sivaloka. (Śiva Purāṇa, Sambambaṇāhāyama).

Caṇḍakauśika. A muni, son of Kaśivān, the son of Gaṅgā. Bṛhadraṅga, King of Magadhā, was having no issues when, one day, Caṇḍakauśika went to the palace and blessed the King as a result of which a son called Jārasandha was born to him. Caṇḍakauśika continued to live at Magadhā for long as the preceptor of the kings of that land. (See Jārasandha).

Caṇḍalā. (See Cāturvarṇya).

Caṇḍamahāṣena.

1) General. A very prominent and reputed king of Ujjayini. Vāsavadātā, wife of Udayana was his daughter.

2) The name Caṇḍamahāṣena. His real name was Mahā-seṇa. After ascending the throne he began doing tapas to get a noble wife and a good sword. When he cut his own flesh and made an offering of the same to the sacred fire after a long period of tapas the Devi became pleased, and offered him a sword of exceptional excellence and said that as long as he had that sword with him no enemy would defeat him. The Devi also assured him that ere long An̄gāravati, daughter of the asura called An̄gāraka and the fairest damsel in the three worlds would become his wife. Since he (Mahā-seṇa) did the most austere rites and rituals, the Devi said, he would come to be called Caṇḍamahāṣena. Afterwards the sword given by the Devi and the elephant called nādāgiri proved as successful and effective to him as were Vajrāyudha and his elephant Airāvata to Indra.
3) Marriage. One day, during a hunting expedition a boar escaped unhurt by the king's arrows and after turning turtle his chariot it went into a cave. The king in great anger followed the pig into the cave, and going forward some distance he saw a beautiful animal whereupon he seated himself on the side of a tank. There he saw, amidst a number of women an exceptionally beautiful woman moving about. Casting her charming eyes glistering with love the woman approached the King. During their conversation, when the king told her about himself she began crying. To the query as to the reason for her crying she answered as follows:—

"The boar you saw is my father, Aṅgārakāsa. His body is harder than even diamond, and none can inflict any injury on it. The women you see around arc princesses captured by my father from various palaces for my help, and my name is Aṅgāravati. My father became a Rākṣasa as the result of a curse; he is now asleep in the assumed form of a boar. On awaking he is sure to eat you for food, and it was that thought which brought tears to my eyes". To these words of Aṅgāravati, the king replied as follows:—"If you have any love for me you would go to your father and begin crying when he wakes up, and to his question as to why you are crying you should reply that thoughts about your future in the event of your father's death brought tears in your eyes."

Aṅgāravati agreed to the above proposal of the King. She hid the King in a safe place and went and stood by the side of her father. Everything happened as was anticipated and Aṅgāraka consoled his daughter by saying that none would be able to kill him whose body was as hard and strong as diamond, there being only one opening through which he might be struck on the left wrist which might be concealed by the bow.

Candamahāsena who heard the above talk came out of his hiding place and challenged the asura to war. He raised his left hand to show the sign, "just coming, please wait", and the king then shot his arrow through the opening on his left wrist. The asura fell dead.

4) Birth of Vāsavadattā: And, now Candamahāsena married Aṅgāravati and returned to his kingdom with his wife. Two sons, Gopālaka and Pālaka were born to the royal couple, and the King celebrated an Indrotsava for the welfare and prosperity of the children. Pleased at the utsava Indra appeared to the King in sleep and blessed him saying that a daughter would be born to him and that her son would be crowned emperor of the Vidvādhaus. Accordingly a daughter was born to the King, and she was called Vāsavadattā. (given by Vāsaya, i.e. Indra). Udayana married Vāsavadattā. (See Udayana).

CANDAMUNDA. Two brothers born in the Asura dynasty, the elder brother being called Caṇḍa and the younger Muṇḍa. These brothers collected, like the other asura leaders Dhumrākaśa, and Raktabija, thousands of soldiers and lived all pomp and glory. During this period two asura brothers called Śumbha and Niśumbha had returned from the Himālayas after securing from Brahman a boon that they would meet with their death only at the hands of a woman. Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa became their friends and attendants. Śumbha and Niśumbha set out on a triumphal tour and conquered heaven, earth and pātāla. The Devas took refuge in a forest. After wandering in the forest for a long time, at the instance of Brhaspati they sought asylum with Pārvatī. Pārvatī stood for sometime in deep concentration, and there emerged from her divine body Kaśikī or Kāli. Pārvatī assured the Devas that she would kill Śumbha and Niśumbha. And, then Kāli sat alone on a rock in the thick forest. Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa, who happened to pass that way were attracted by the great beauty of Pārvatī and imparted the news to Śumbha and Niśumbha, and they deplored Dhumrākāśa and 60,000 soldiers to bring Pārvatī over to them; but by one humākāś (sound "hum") she reduced them to ashes. Ultimately she killed Śumbha and Niśumbha also. (Devi Bhāgavata, Padma Skanda).

CANDATUNDAKA. A son of Garuda. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 9).

CANDAVEGA. A gandharva. (See Purāṇa).

CANDIKĀ. A terrifying form of Pārvatī, who is worshipped in temples under the name Candikādevī. The Devī's idol has twenty hands. In the hands on the right side are held Śūla (three-pronged weapons) sword, Vela (rod), Cakra, pāśa (rope), parigha (shield), āyudha, abhaya, dama and Śakti, while the hands on the left side hold nāgapāśa, small parigha axe, Aṅkūsa (a long-hooked rod), pāśa, mani, flag, gadā, mūrdhar, and an iron cylindrical rod. There are also idols of Candikā with ten hands. At the feet of the Devī lies Māhiṣāsura with his head severed from body. There will also be standing near the idol a puruṣa (man) born from the neck of the Māhiṣa brandishing his weapon, and with the Śūla in his hand in all rage and wounding blood and with red hairs and eyes. That puruṣa is bound strongly on his neck with rope. The vehicle of the Devī is a lion. The Devī is mounted on the lion with her left leg on the asura lying below. This Candikādevī thus stands with weapons in the hand, as annihilator of enemies and with three eyes, and she should be worshipped in pūjāmandala with nine padma (tantric divisions) along with her idol. Firstly the Devī should be worshipped in the central padma and Indra and others in the other padmas. There is also another Candikādevī (Durgā) with eighteen hands. She holds in her right hand a skull, shield, mirror, broom, bow, flag, dama and pāśa (cord) and in her left hand rod, iron pounder, Śūla, Vajra, sword, Aṅkūsa (a sticklike weapon with one end bent to hold on to things) Šara (arrow) Cakra and śalākā. There are nine other Durgās having the same weapons as the above except the Šara and the broom. But, they have only sixteen hands each. These nine Durgās are called Rudrācandā, Prañcaṇḍā, Ugraśandā, Caṇḍānayikā, Atitacandikā, and Ānugandikā. The Durgā standing at the centre will have the colour of gorocana (red sandal paste) and the others will have the following colours: arunavarna (red) Kṛṣṇa varna (black), nila vartā (blue), śukla vartā (white), dhāmra vartā (brown) pīta vartā (yellow) and śveća vartā (white). The nava Durgās (nine Durgas) are installed for the prosperity of children etc. And all these are different forms of Pārvatī.

Also, in various aspects or poses, Pārvatī is called by other names. She is called Siddhā when installed in Rākshā-vana wearing aksamālā (garland of beads), kirīṣa (crown) and agni. The same Siddhā without the fire is called Lalitī. Gaurīdevi with one of the CANDRA I.

A prominent asura, also called Candra-varman. It was this asura, as beautiful as Candra (the moon) who was born as the king of Kumboja under the name Candra-varman (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 31).

CANDRA II. A king born in the Solar dynasty and the son of Visvarandhi and father of Yuvanāśva. See Vaimāvati.

CANDRA III. The Purāṇas declare that Candra was one of the invaluable things got at the churning of Kṣīrābdhi (ocean of milk) Candra, Mahālakṣmi, Surā, Uccālīśravas, Kaustubha, Pārijāta, Kāmadhenu, Dhanvantari, Amṛtām and Kālakīta were the things thus got from the Ocean of Milk. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 18 and Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 9). Also, the evil devata called Jyeṣṭhā, Airāvata, the gem named Cintāmanī and fair damsels like Tārā and Rūmā were got from the Kṣīrābdhi, (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa). For general information about Candra, see Grahas.

CANDRA IV. (CANDRA DEVA).

1) Birth. The child born to Atri by Anasuyā. (See Purūravas). In Skandha 4 of the Devībhāgavata it is stated that it was Brahman who was born as Candra. (See Atri).

2) Candra led married life with the wife of his guru. Tārā, the very beautiful wife of Brhaṣpati, preceptor of the Devas happened to reach Candra’s home during her perambulation one day. Candra and Tārā fell in love with each other at first sight and lived in conjugal happiness. And thus days passed by. Brhaṣpati, being informed of the fact on enquiry, deputed his disciples to bring Tārā back, but to no purpose. Brhaṣpati sent his disciples again and again to Tārā, but all to no purpose. Then Brhaṣpati himself went to the house of Candra and invited Tārā, this time also to no purpose. Enraged at this the Deva guru spoke to Candra as follows: “The brahmin-killer, gold-thief, drunkard, he who marries another’s wife and he who associates himself with the above three types are responsible for the most terrible five sins, and you, therefore, are not fit enough to reside in Devaloka. Unless you return my wife to me I will curse you.” None of the threats of Brhaṣpati could shake Candra. He told the Devaguru that Tārā who had gone to his house on her own accord would also leave him when she was satiated with him. These words of Candra made Brhaṣpati all the more angry. He returned home and waited sometime more for Tārā’s return. But, he got disappointed, and getting impatient he started again for Candra’s house. But, this time the gatekeepers did not let him in. “Terribly angry at the cruel rebuff” Brhaṣpati sought help of Indra. Indra sent word to Candra asking him to send Tārā back home or be prepared for war. Even then Candra refused to yield, and Indra started for war against Candra. But, there was somehow some difference among the devas about all this, and the news reached the asuras. At once Śukra, preceptor of the asuras and an old enemy of Brhaṣpati met Candra and assured him all support in case war broke out between Indra and Candra. He also strongly advised Candra not to return Tārā to Brhaṣpati. And, ultimately a fierce war began between Indra and Candra. All activities in the world were thrown into confusion and chaos. At this Brahma on his hamsa (swan) came to the scene and admonished Candra and Śukra. They could not but obey Brahma and so were forced to stop fighting. Moreover, Candra returned Tārā to Brhaṣpati.

The quarrel and fighting thus ended for the time being, but another problem cropped up. At the time Candra returned Tārā to Brhaṣpati she was carrying, and Brhaṣpati was not aware of the fact. And at last Tārā delivered an exceptionally beautiful male child. The naming ceremony of the child was duly performed, Brhaṣpati himself acting as its father. When the news reached Candra he sent a messenger to Brhaṣpati claiming the child was his. Brhaṣpati too claimed its fatherhood. This controversy developed almost to the brink of a second devāsura war. At this stage Brahma went to Brhaṣpati’s house and questioned Tārā as to who really was her child’s father, and she named Candra. Upon this Brahma asked Brhaṣpati to release the child to Candra. Brhaṣpati did so. (Devi Bhāgavata, Prathama Skandha).

3) Wives of Candra. Candra took twentyseven daughters of Dakṣa as his wives. (Devi Bhāgavata, Saptama Skandha). These twentyseven wives are the twentyseven stars. Candra circumambulates Mahāmeru along with these, his twentyseven wives (Stars). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 163, Verse 33). The names of the twentyseven wives are given hereunder: Āśvini, Bharaṇi, Kṛṣṭikā, Rohiṇī, Mrgaśīrṣa, Ardṛa, Puranavasu, Puṣya, Āśleṣa, Janakaśi, Phālguni, Uttaraphālguni, Hastā, Citrā, Svāti, Visākhi, Anurdhā, Jyeṣṭhā, Mūlā, Purvāṣadā, Uttarāṣadā, Śrōṇa, Śravīṣṭha, Pracetas, Purvapraśṭhapadā, Uttarapraśṭhapadā, Revati.

Solar eclipse according to the Purāṇas. The Devas and the asuras jointly churned Kṣīrābdhi wherefrom emerged Dhanvantari with the Amṛtakumbha (pot of nectar). (See Amṛtām).

But an asura māyāvī (magician) called Sainihkeya abscended to Pātāla with the Amṛtakumbha which nobody noticed as everybody was busy with dividing other divine objects. Only after the māyāvī’s disappearance was it noticed that the Amṛta Kumbha was missing. At once Mahāvīṣṇu assumed the figure of a beautiful woman, got back the Kumbha and gave it to the devas. The devas began drinking the amṛtā in when, at the instance of some other devas, Sainihkeya, the māyāvī assuming the form of an old brahmin reached svarga, got a share of the amṛta and began to drink it. Śrīyā and Candra (Sun and Moon) who were on guard at the gates divined the secret of the old brahmin and informed Mahāvīṣṇu about it. He cut the throat of the pseudo-brahmin with his Sudarśana Cakra. But, half of the nectar he had drunk stayed above the throat and the other half below it. Therefore, though the head and the trunk were severed they remained alive. These two parts, in course of time, evolved as Rāhu and Ketu.

When the throat was cut some blood as well as some amṛta dropped on two places on the ground, and they became the red onion and the white onion respectively. Some vaishvaka brahmins used to consider the red onion objectionable for consumption as it was evolved from blood, while the white onion was considered usable as it was evolved from amṛtam.

Rāhu and Ketu still maintain their hatred for Sūrya and Candra who had betrayed the asura, who, disguised as brahmin tried to drink the amṛta. Eclipse is the phenomenon of Rāhu and Ketu swallowing Sūrya and Candra as and when opportunity presents itself for it. But, since the throat is severed from the body, Sūrya and Candra thus swallowed get out through the throat. That is the reason why Sūrya and Candra become visible after the eclipse in over. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa and Bhāgavata Aṣṭāma Skandha).

5) Candra became Calf. Once emperor Prthu transformed Bhūmidevi into a cow and milked from her all things and provisions. On that occasion it was Brahmā, who acted as Calf. And, following Prthu when the Rṣis milked the cow Candra served as Calf. (For details see Prthu).

6) Waxing and waning of Candra, the purānic story regarding it. Of the twentyseven daughters of Dakṣa whom Candra had married he loved Rohini much more than the other twentiesix wives, and so kept her always with him. This annoyed the twentiesix wives, who complained about it to Dakṣa. Dakṣa’s advice to Candra to treat all the wives on an equal footing had no effect on him. So, the twentiesix neglected wives again complained to Dakṣa as follows: “We shall stay in the āśrama and serve you. Soma (Candra) does not associate with us, he will not accept your advice.”

Though Dakṣa warned Candra a second time, that too had no effect on him. So the twentiesix wives, for the third time, complained to Dakṣa. Dakṣa got angry at this and cursed that Candra should suffer from tuberculosis. Thus Candra was afflicted by consumption. Though Candra performed many a yajña to get cured of the fell disease, they did not produce the desired effect. Candra remaining a tubercular patient, the growth of medicinal plants stopped with the result that all living things contracted consumption. When people began becoming thinner, the devas asked Candra for an explanation, and he told them all the details. They then sought the help of Dakṣa, who gave Candra redemption from the curse by ordaining that if he dived in the Sarasvatī tīrtha in the western sea he would be free from consumption for half of every month. Hence-forth Candra made it a practice to dive in the Sarasvati tirtha and that is the reason why Candra is exempted from Kṣayaroga for fifteen days. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 35).

7) Candra—King of stars and of medicines. During the reign of emperor Prthu, he changed Bhūmidevi into a cow. Later the Rṣis also changed bhūmidevi into a cow and milked her. It was Candra who served as calf then. Pleased at this Brahman crowed Candra as king of the stars and medicines. (Harivānśa, Chapter 4, Verse 2).

8) Other information about Candra

1) Candra is 11,000 sq. yojanas in area, 33,000 yojanas in circumference and a volume of 5,900 cubic yojanas. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12).

2) Candra presented two attendants called Maṇī and Sumati to Subrahmāṇya (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 32).

3) Candra once made a discourse on the superior qualities of brahmins to Sambarāsura. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 13, Southern Text).

4) All welfare and prosperity accrue to him, who on full-moon day at moon-rise tenders offerings to Candra of bread in copper vessels with honey poured into it. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 13, Southern Text).

5) Candra is one of the aṣṭa-vasus. Candra had four sons, Varcas, Śīśira, Pṛiṇa and Ramaṇa by his wife named Manoharā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 18).

6) Abhimanyu was Candra’s son, Varcas, reborn as the son of Arjuna. (See Abhimanyu).

CANDRA. An important river in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 29).

CANDRAGUPTA I. Second son of Rāvaṇa. Once when Śrī Rāma was King, Candragupta abducted the daughter of Sugriva and the daughter-in-law of Vibhiṇḍa. Hanumān released them both as ordered by Śrī Rāma. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa Uttara Kāṇḍa; also see Sahasravīkha Rāvaṇa).

CANDRAGUPTA II. A minister of Kārtaviryaṛjuna. Kārtaviryaṛjuna was once fed sumptuously by Jamadagni at his āśrama with the help of Śūsilā, the deva-surabhi (divine cow). Candragupta, at the instance of Kārtaviryaṛjuna tried to capture Śūsilā by force, which disappeared immediately in the sky. Kārtaviryaṛjuna’s servants then forcibly took away its calf. Candragupta thrashed to death Jamadagni, who tried to obstruct their action. (See Kārtavirya, Para 9).

CANDRAHANṬA. An asura, who was reborn as King Sunaka. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 677, Verse 37).

CANDRAHARTA. A son born to Kaśyapa prajāpati of Śrīnihāka, daughter of Dakṣa. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 31).

CANDRAHĀSA. Son of King Sudhārmiṇa of Kerala. The following story about him is told in Jaimini Asva-medha Parva.

Candrahāsa, born under the star Mūlam had a sixth finger on the left foot indicative of poverty and of all other evils. And, therefore, on his birth enemies killed Sudhārmiṇa and his wife followed him soon to the other world. The child thus left an orphan was taken to Kauḍalakapuri by a female inmate of the palace. But unfortunately the woman died within three years of the above incident. The child, just for very existence, took to begging. After sometime some women jointly took up charge of the boy. Once he went to the house of Dhrṣṭadbuddhi, minister of Kauḍala where a feast was in progress. The munis present there were impressed by Candrahāsa and prophesied that he would become a King. To Dhrṣṭadbuddhi, the munis said that the child would guard his wealth. Angry and suspicious at the prophecy of the munis Dhrṣṭadbuddhi asked his men to kill the boy. They led him to the forest. On the way Candrahāsa got a Śālagrāma (a small sacred stone which represented some upadcvatā) which he applied very devotedly to his face. They did not in fact kill the boy, but cut off his sixth finger on the left foot and showed it to their master.

Thus left alive in the forest by the murderers the boy was roaming about when the King of Kalinda on a hunting expedition saw the destitute boy, and taking pity on him he took him back with him to the palace. The boy was put under the care of Medhāvī, the King's consort. The king named him Candrahāsa. Since the King took a special interest in the education of the child he became adept in all arts and sciences. At the age of twelve Candrahāsa, with the permission of the king, set out on a triumphal tour, and the king welcomed Candrahāsa on his return after his glorious victory that brought him wealth.

At the instance of the Kalinda king, Candrahāsa, sent by his messengers tribute to the Kaundāla king, who, understanding from them that so much wealth had been brought to the Kalinda king by Candrahāsa started at once for the Kalinda palace. On being told the whole story about Candrahāsa, Dhṛṣṭabuddhi, the minister of the King of Kaundāla made up his mind to do away with him somehow or other for which he despatched a letter to his son, Madana, through Candrahāsa.

Candrahāsa on his way to Kaundāla slept on the banks of a river, Campakamālinī, the daughter of the King of Kaundāla and Viṣayasī, daughter of Dhṛṣṭabuddhi, happened to go to the river bank where Candrahāsa was sleeping. Campakamālinī, who became subject to great love for Candrahāsa removed the anklets on her feet and approached him slowly, and when she took up and read a letter she found lying beside him, she felt awe and sorrow to find therein a suggestion to poison him to death. Without wasting much time in thought she changed the word 'viṣamāsa' (give him poison) to 'Viṣayāsīma' (give him Viṣayasī) and put it in its former place. After some time when Candrahāsa awoke from sleep and reached Kaundāla city and delivered the letter to Madana its content pleased him very much. As for Viṣayasī, she was spending her days in constant prayer that Candrahāsa should marry her. In the circumstances the marriage of Candrahāsa and Viṣayasī was solemnised on the earliest auspicious day.

In due course Dhṛṣṭabuddhi returned to Kaundāla with all the wealth he could lay his hands upon after capturing Kalinda. He wept with grief and rage at the news that Viṣayasī had been married to Candrahāsa. All the explanations offered by Madana did not satisfy him. He persisted in his determination to kill Candrahāsa.

The evil-minded Dhṛṣṭabuddhi one day asked Candrahāsa to go and worship at the Devī temple after having made arrangements for his murder there. But, as fate would have it, it was Madana who, instead of Candrahāsa, was killed. Even before the above incident had happened the Kaundāla King had married his daughter Candramālinī to Candrahāsa, and after relinquishing the kingdom also in his favour the King took to the forest to lead a hermit's life.

The above developments added fuel to the fire of anger in respect of Dhṛṣṭabuddhi, and when he saw in the temple precincts, his son's corpse he became well-nigh mad. Crying out that all this was the result of his having troubled the Vaṁśa of Candrahāsa he dashed his head against the pillars of the temple and died.

Candrahāsa was grieved over the death of Dhṛṣṭabuddhi. He worshipped Devī offering his flesh in the sacrificial fire. Devī appeared and granted him two boons which helped him to bring Dhṛṣṭabuddhi and Madana back to life. And, when the Kalinda king and his wife, fearing the wicked Dhṛṣṭabuddhi were about to end their lives in flaming fire, Dhṛṣṭabuddhi went to them and imparted to them the secrets about the life of Candrahāsa. The Kalinda king and his wife dropped their former decision to end their life, and Candrahāsa took up the reins of government at the behest of the King. Candrahāsa, who won repute as a very powerful and effective ruler, during the Asvamedha sacrifice of Yudhisṭhir captured the sacrificial horse, and Arjuna, at the instance of Kṛṣṇa had to enter into a pact with Candrahāsa, who promised him help for the success of the sacrifice. Candrahāsa had a son called Makarākaṇḍa by Viṣayasī and another son, Padmākaṇḍa by Campakamālinī.

CANDRAHASA (M). Rāvana's sword. Rāvana, in the course of his triumphal tour after receiving the boon from Brahman, subjugated kings, and marching northward reached the valleys of Mount Kailāsa. But, Nandikēśvara stopped him there, and Rāvana, threatening to throw away Śiva, master of Nandikēśvara along with Kailāsa, put his twenty hands under it to pull it out, and the great mountain shook violently. Pārvatī got frightened and running up Śiva embraced him. Śiva, who divined the reason for all these with his eye of supreme knowledge grounded the mountain firmly on earth, crushing Rāvana's hands under it. Unable to take away his arms from under the mountain, Rāvana remained there for about thousand years singing the praises of the Lord. At last Śiva appeared to Rāvana and presented him with a sword called Candrahāsa. It was this sword which won victories for Rāvana in future wars. (Uttāra Rāmāyaṇa).

CANDRAKETU I. A son of Śatrughna, brother of Śri Rāma. Śatrughna had two sons, Āṅgada and Candrketu by his wife Śrutakirti (Uttāra Rāmāyaṇa).

CANDRAKETU II. A vidyādha King. See Mukta-phalaketu.

CANDRAMAS. A rishi who imparted spiritual knowledge to Sampāti and advised Jātāyu to give directions about the way to the monkeys in their search for Śītādevī. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

CANDRAMASĪ. Tārā, the wife of Bṛhaspati. She fell in love with Candra and lived with him for sometime, and came to be called Gāndramasī. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219; see also Tārā).

CANDRAMATI I. Wife of king Hariścandra reputed for his unique honesty and integrity. (See Hariścandra).

CANDRAMATI II. A city. Two sons, Taksaka and Citraketu were born to Lakṣmaṇa of Urmilā. Taksaka was crowned King of Agati, a city built on the eastern coast of the sea after annihilating the hunter tribe there, and Citraketu was crowned king of Candramati, a city built on the western coast of the sea after killing all the Mlecchas there. (Uttāra Rāmāyaṇa).

CANDRĀNGADA. Grandson of Nala. He married Simantini, daughter of Citravarman, a king of Āryāvarta. Simantini, hearing about Candrāngada fell in love with him, and it was with the help of Maitreyī, wife of Yājñavalkya, that she was wedded to him.

While once Candrāngada was enjoying a boat-race in Kālindī (river) with his friends a storm upset the boat and most of them were drowned to death. The servants of Taksaka saw Candrāngada sinking to the bottom of the river and carried him to Pāṭāla and he stayed there for sometime in the midst of amorous nāga damsels. Candrāngada's people, under the impression that he had died, performed his funeral rites, and Simantini took to widow's life. Enemies captured his kingdom and imprisoned his father, Indrasena. When once the nāga King asked Candrapāda to marry nāga girls and settle down in Pātalā he told the King that he was already married and that his wife Simantini was brooding over him, and he had, therefore, to return to her. Accordingly the nāga King sent him back with presents of a white horse, a Rākṣasa and an infant serpent.

Candrāṅgada, with his presents, came up in Kālindī where Simantini, grief-stricken was spending her days in penance, and they recognised each other. Informed about the return of Candrāṅgada the enemy kings released his father from captivity and apologised to him. And he pardoned them.

Candrāṅgada and Simantini took great interest in observing somavāravrata (fasting etc. on Mondays) and pleased at the vratā of the latter Śrī Pārvatī blessed her. Two brahmins called Devamitra and Sārasvata were living there at the time. Three sons called Sumedha, Sārasvata and Śāmavāṇ were born to Devamitra. The sons also turned out to be great scholars but they were poor. They could not get brides as they were poor. In the hope that they would get some money if they approached Candrāṅgada and Simantini the brahmins went to them. After hearing their story the king and his queen conducted them in a procession in the precincts of the palace, Sumedha dressed as husband and Śāmavāṇ as his wife. But, lo! when the procession was over Śāmavāṇ could not be divested of his womanhood, and Simantini named her Śāmavatī. Being told that his son had turned woman Sārasvata sought the advice of some munis to remedy the situation. But, all the attempts of the munis to change the woman to man failed, and they opined that only Pārvatī, who had been pleased by the Somavāravrata, would be able to find a solution to the problem. From that day onwards the brahmin youths lived as husband and wife. (Śiva Purāṇa, Somavāravrataṃ).

CANDRĀṆIĎA. A son of Janamejaya. Parikṣit was the son of Abhimanyu (Arjuna's son). Janamejaya was Parikṣit's son. Janamejaya married princess Vupasūtā of Kāśi. Two sons called Candrapāda and Śūryapāda were born to them. Candrapāda had hundred sons, who distinguished themselves as great heroes in archery. Satyakarṇa was the eldest among the sons. Śvetakarṇa, son of Satyakarṇa, married Yādavī, the daughter of Sucūru. (Bhaviśya Purāṇa).

CANDRAPRABHA. (See Śūryaprabhā).

CANDRAPRABHA. Mother of the wonderful girl, Somaprabhā. (See Somaprabhā).

CANDRASĀRMĀ I. A great sinner, who killed his preceptor. The Padma Purāṇa relates the story of four sinners named Vidura, Candrasārman, Vedasārman and Vaiśjula, who shed their sin by bathing in the Gaṅgā. The sins committed by the four were respectively Brahmahatā (killing of brahmin), Gṛhuhatā (killing of the preceptor), Agamyagamana (having sexual contact with women like the wife of guru which is debarrad) and Govadhā (killing of cow) respectively. The leader of the above four sinners was one Vidura of the Pāṇḍalā dynasty. He was begging in the streets without the tuft of hair, the sacred thread and tilaka (mark of sandal paste etc. on the forehead). He went from house to house begging for alms crying thus: "Here is come the man (himself) who committed Brahmahatā. Please give alms to the brahmin-killer who is a drunkard also." During his begging tour he visited all the tirthas also, yet brahmanahatā stuck on to him.

While this sinner Vidura, his heart cut with sorrow and remorse, was sitting under a tree, a Māgadhā brahmin called Candrasārman happened to come there. This brahmin had committed the sin of gṛhuhatā (killing the preceptor). He told Vidura:—"While residing with the guru, blinded by desire, I killed the guru, and am now burning myself in the fire of repentance."

While they were engaged thus in conversation a third person, called Vedasārman also came there in an absolutely tired condition. He told Vidura and Candrasārman that his relatives and others had cast him out as he once did the sin of agamyagamana, and by the time he had finished telling his story a Vaiśya called Vañjula came there. Besides drinking liquor he had committed gοvadhā (killing of cow) also. Though these four sinners assembled at the same place, they only talked, but did not touch one another, take food together, rest on the same seat or lie on the same bedsheet.

According to the advice of a Siddha (an evolved soul) the four sinners dived in the holy waters of Gaṅgā and came out redeemed of their sins. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 91).

CANDRASĀRMĀ II. A brahmin of Agni gotra from Māyāpura, he was the disciple and son-in-law of Devāsarman. Both of them were killed by a Rākṣasa while they were gathering darbha (a particular variety of grass used in religious ceremonies) in the forest. Candrasārmā attained Vaikūṭha as he was a very righteous person. During Krṣṇāvatāra (incarnation of Viṣṇu as Śrī Krṣṇa) he was born as Acrūra. (Padma Purāṇa).

CANDRASEKHARA. A King (son of Pauṣya). The following story about his birth is told in the Padma Purāṇa.

Though married for a long time Pauṣya did not have an issue. He began worshipping Śiva to be blessed with a son. Śiva was pleased at this and he gave him a fruit which he divided equally among his three wives. In due course the three wives delivered. But, to get the full and complete form of a child the three children had to be joined together, and so the parts were unified. This boy was Candrasekhara. Thus Candrasekhara acquired the name Tryabhakā.

Candraśekhara married Tārāvatī, daughter of Kukūtshā, a King of the solar dynasty. On account of the curse of Kapotamuni two sons, Bhṛṅgī and Mahākāla were born to Tārāvatī in Vēṭāla yoni and Bhairava yoni respectively. Dama, Uparicara and Alaka were sons born to Candrasekharā himself. (Aurasaputras).

CANDRASENA I. A king of Śiṁhala desa (Ceylon). Candrasena had two daughters, Māndodāri and Indumāti by his wife Gunavatī. Kumbhīgra, son of Sudhanvi, the chief of Mādhrac had desired to marry Māndodāri. But, since she preferred unmarried life Kumbhīgra's desire did not fructify. Some time later she refused to marry another suitor also, King Virasena of Kosala. Meanwhile the marriage of her younger sister, Indumāti was celebrated, herself having selected Sudeśa, the Mādra prince at the Suvaiyāvara as husband. Though a handsome person Sudeśa was a philanderer, and one day Indumāti saw him in bed with her maid-servant. From that day onwards, cutting asunder all marital relationship with Sudeśa, Indumāti went and stayed with her father. This story told by Mahiśasura to show that women possess only very little discretion occurs in the Pañcama Skandha of Devībhāgavata.

CANDRASVAMI. A brahmin, who got back his life by worshipping Śūrya. He stayed with his wife, Devamati in Kamalapura ruled by King Kamalavarman. A son called Mahiśāla was born to him, and at the time of the birth of the child a celestial voice declared that Mahiśāla would become King. A few years later a daughter called Candramati also was born to Candrasvami.

During this period, rains having failed, very severe famine stalked Kamalapura. Even the king unmindful of justice and righteousness began extracting from the people whatever they possessed. Finding the situation deteriorated so much Candrasvami set out for his father-in-law's house with Mahiśāla and Candramati, and on the way they had to cross what was once a wild forest, but which had by then been denuded of green trees or other foliage due to the failure of the rains. The children were severely afflicted by thirst, and so the father, after leaving them at the foot of a tree went in search of water when he was caught by the people of the forest king and taken before him. When he knew that he was about to be given in sacrifice to Devi the brahmin folded his hands and prayed to Śūryadeva, who appeared before him and assured him that not only will death not visit him, but also he would be united with his wife and children.

The children left under the tree began crying, their father having not returned to them, and a Vaśya called Sārthadhāra who came that way felt pity for the crying children and took them to his house. One day Anantasvami, a brahmin and a minister of King Tāranātha of Tārpura happened to visit Sārthadhāra. Anantasvami, who had no children of his own took away with him the children from Sārthadhāra.

One day Śūryadeva appeared to the forest king in his sleep and asked him not to kill the brahmin (Candrasvami) held captive by him. The very next morning Candrasvami was released from captivity. Roaming about in quest of his children, Candrasvami reached the city called Jalapura where he was put up as the guest of a house-holder. One day the host told Candrasvami that a vaśya called Kanakavarman had, a few days back, told him that he (Kanakavarman) had got two children, one male and the other female from the forest, and taken them to the Nālikera island. The very next day Candrasvami, along with a vaśya called Viṣṇuparvan arrived at the Nālikera island, and on enquiry they were told that Kanakavarman, with the children had left for Kātha island. Then they went to Kātha island only to be told that Kanakavarman had gone to Karpūra island.

With another Vaśya Candrasvami landed on the Karpūra island to no purpose. After thus going to the Suvārṇa and Sīrhaiveda islands too Candrasvami met Kanakavarman at Cītraśāntapura. Kanakavarman showed the children to Candrasvami, but they were not his. He burst into tears, and returned from Cītraśāntapura.

He passed on his way back many a temple and city and at dusk reached a big forest. He satisfied his hunger by eating some roots and fruits, and got upon a tree and sat on the top of it. It was mid-night, yet sleep did not oblige him. Then he saw a mātrṣaṅgha (a group of women) consisting of Nārāyaṇī and others come and dance at the foot of the tree. Nārāyaṇī saw Candrasvami and after the dance was over and her companions had left the place Nārāyaṇī called him down from the tree and gave him a flower. And, according to the advice of Nārāyaṇī the next day morning Candrasvami went to Tārpura where, accidentally he got into the house of Anantasvami, minister of the kingdom, and, for food, repeated veda hymns. The minister invited him for meals, and there he saw Mahiśāla and Candramati. He placed the flower presented by Nārāyaṇī on Mahiśāla's nose whereupon the children recognised him. their father. The people celebrated it as a happy day.

King Tārāvarman gave his daughter, Vasumati, in marriage to Mahīpāla along with half his kingdom. They went to Kamalapura and returned with their mother. All of them spent their days very happily at Tārāpur. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Alaṅkāravatī Lāṁbaka, Tārāngī 6).

CANDRĀVALOKA. A King of Citrakūṭanagara.

When once the King in the course of a hunting expedition came to the bank of a river tired and done up he saw there the very beautiful lady, Indīvaraprabhā, daughter of Mahārṣi Kanva by Menakā. Having fallen in love with each other they went to the āśrama of the mahārṣi where, at his instance, Candrāvaloka took the pledge not to kill animals in future, and Kanva married his daughter to the King. On their way back to the palace the couple went to sleep on the banks of a pool which belonged to a Brahmarākṣa, who caught hold of them, but released them on condition that they gave him in their stead a brahmin boy aged seven. Thus they returned to Citrakūṭa and told about the incident to minister Sumati. As advised by Sumati an idol in gold equal in size to a brahmin boy aged seven was made and a proclamation was issued that the golden idol would be given to him who, in return, give a brahmin boy seven years old. A brahmin boy was got, and he was given to the Brahmarākṣa. (Kathāsaritsāgara Saṅkuva-vatī Lāṁbaka, Tārāngī 27).

CANDRAVALOKA. A royal dynasty of the kings of which ruled India for a long time. Since the founding father of the dynasty was Candarvalokāśarāja, (For Candarva's birth see Purūravas). A chronological list of the kings of this dynasty is given infra.

Descended from Candarva thus, Budha—Puru-rāvas—Āyu—Nahusha. Nahusha had two sons, Ayati and Yayati. Yayati had three sons: Druhyu, Anudruhyu and Puru by his wife Sarmiṣṭha, and two sons, Yadu and Turvasu by his wife Devayāni. The genealogy of each of them is given below.

2) Anudruhyu:—Three sons, Sabhānara, Cakṣuṣ and Paroṣka were born to Anudruhyu. Sabhānara begot Kālanara, and he Śriṇjaya. Śriṇjaya had four sons: (a) Janamejaya, (b) Mahāmanas, (c) Uṣīnara and (d) Titikṣa. Uṣīnara and Titikṣa proved to be family progenitors. Their genealogy is given below:—

   c) Uṣīnara. Uṣīnara had five sons: Śibi, Vena, Kṛṣṇa, Uṣi and Darpa of whom Śibi begot five sons: Bhadra—Suvīra—Kekāya—Vṛṣadarpa and Kapatorm, and from Kekāya was born the Kicakas.

   d) Titikṣa. Descended from Titikṣa were: Kṛṣṇadatta—Homa—Sutapas and Bāli, and Bāli had seven sons: Anaghaḥānu—Anga—Kalinga—Suvīra—Pṛthu—Vṛṣadarpa and Kapatorm. Of the seven sons Anga turned out to be the family progenitor, and thenceforth the Anga royal dynasty starts its course. To Anga were born the following sons: Dadhiyavāhana—Ravaratha—Dharmaratha—Citraratha—Sararātha—Lomapāda—Caturāṅga—Pṛthu—Campā—Haryānga and Bhadraratha, and to Bhadraratha were born three sons viz: Bhadraratha—Bṛhatkarmā and Bṛhadbhānu. And Bhadraratha had the following sons: Bṛhanmanas, Jayadratha—Vijaya—Dhṛtavrata—Satyakarman and Atiratha. Kārta was Atiratha's foster son and father of Vṛṣṇesora.

   a) Pratiratha. From Pratiratha was born Kayva and Sar from him Medhātihi.

   b) Sundhuratha. He had three sons, Duṣyanta—Pravira and Sāmana, and Bharata (Vitātha) was born to Duṣyanta of Sakuntālā. From Bharata were descended the following:—Suhota—Suhotā—Gala—Garden—Suketu and Bṛhatkṣatra, who had four sons: Nara—Mahāvīra—Garga and Hasti. And, Nara begot Saṁkṛiti and he begot Rantideva and Kur. A son called Pāpākṣaya was born to Mahāvīra. Garga begot Śani. And it was Hasti who founded Hastināpura. He became the family progenitor. Hasti had three sons, Purumīḍha—Ajanīḍha and Dvīmiḍha. The King called Vipra was the son of Purumīḍha.

Ajanīḍha, the second son of Hasti had three sons, (a) Rksa (b) Bhradiṣu and (c) Nila. Their descendants are mentioned below.

   (A2) Sudhānus. The following were descended from him in order:—Suhota—Cyavana—Kṛṣṇa—Upāripa—Caravasa—Bṛhadratha and Jasāndha. Jasāndha had four sons: Soma—Sahadeva—Turya and Śrutasur. (A3) Jahnū. From Jahnū were descended:—Suratha—Viduratha—Śārvabhauma—Jayatesa—Ravaya—Āvika—Cakrodhata—Devati—Rksa—Bhīma and Pratīci. Pratīci had three sons: Devāy, Santānu and Bālika. Santānu was also called Mahābhīṣak. And, he had two wives, Gaṅgī and Satyavati. From Gaṅgī was born Bhiṣma; of Satyavati, before her marriage, was born Vyūsa by Parāśāra. Satyavati had two sons: Ciraṅgāda and Vīcitrāvīra by Santānu. From Vyūsa were born Dhritarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu, and Vidura, and from Dhritarāṣṭra the Kauravas. Kuntī and Mādri, wives of Pāṇḍu, together got from the devas five sons, viz: Dharmpatru, Bhīma, Arjuna, Nakula and Sahadeva. Dharmpatru had two sons, Devaka and Pratīvindya. To Bhīma was born of Hidimbi Ghatotkaka. Satāni was born of Reṇumati to Nakula. Arjuna's descendants were: Abhirmanu—Parīkṣit—Candrāpīḍa—Satyakarṣa Śvetakarna—Ajāpāraśa—Janamejaya—Satāni—Sahāsārakṣa—Śvāmadedha—Avirikṣṣaḥ—Gupta—Citraratha—Cūcitrāṇa—Dhitumani—Suvṛṣa—Cunata—Vucakṣas—Nala—Uparāśī—Medhāvyā—Mṛtyunjaya—Dusya—Nimi—Bṛhadratha—Satānikā—Dūrīmā—Vivināra—Dvāṇḍapani—Dvēmakā.

   B) Bhṛadiṣu. Descended from Bhṛadiṣu were: Bhṛadhanu—Bṛhatkṣa—Jayadratha—Viṣada—Sena-cita—Rucirāśa. Rucirāśa had three sons: Drīlhanu—Kāśya and Vatsa.
C) Nilà. Descended from Nilà were: Śánti—Susánti—Purüja—Arka—Bharmanyāva and Pāñcāla. Pāñcāla had five sons: Müdgala, Yavīnara, Kāmpilya, Brāhdiśu and Saṅjaya. Müdgala had two children: Divodāsa and Ahalāy. Gautama married Ahalāy. To Gautama was born Śatānanda, to Śatānanda Satyavatrī and from Satyavatrī was born Saradvān. And from Divodāsa, brother of Ahalāy was descended: Mitrāyū—Pusyā—Sudāsa—Sahadeva—Somaka and Drupada. Drupada became King of Pāñcāla and to him were born Dhrṣṭadyumna and Pāñcilī (Kṛṣṇā). Dhrṣṭaketu and Dhrṣṭaketu were the sons of Dhrṣṭadyumna.

4) Tādu. The Yadu dynasty owes its origin to Yadu who had four sons: Sahasrajit, Kṛṣṇā, Nala and Ripu. Sahasrajit, the son of Sahasrajit begot three sons: Mahāhaya, Venhuja and Hehaya (Ekavīra). Dharma was Hehaya's son, and Kani was the son of Dharma. Kani had four sons: Sadajit, Mahisman, Brahāsana and Durāma. Brahāsana begot Dhanaka and he Kṛṭavirya, Kṛṭagāma, Kṛṭavarmā and Kṛṭaujā. Kṛṭavirya-juna was Kṛṭavirya's son, and Kṛṭavirya-juna had hundred sons, Jayadavi, Śurasa, Vṛṣabha, Madhu, Mārujīta and others. Vṛṣni with whom the Vṛṣni dynasty begins was Madhu's son. From Jayadavi the eldest son of Kṛṭavirya-juna were descended in order: Tālajangha—Vītiḥotra—Ananta—Dhrṣṭadyumna.

The Vṛṣni dynasty. Vṛṣni, son of Madhu and grandson of Kṛṭavirya-juna had four sons: Sumitra, Yudhajīt, Vasi and Sārvabhauma. Śini and Nimma were the sons of Yudhajīt. From Śini came into order: Satyakā—Sātyakā (Yuyudhāna)—Jaya—Kāgi—Amitra—Prśni. Prśni had two sons: (1) Citraraatha and (2) Śvaphalka. 1) Citraraatha. Two sons (1A) Vīdūraraatha and (1B) Kuruka were born to Citraraatha.

(1A) Vīdūraraatha. From Vīdūraraatha was born Śūra, and from Śūra was born Śini. Bhoja was Śini's son and from Bhoja, Hrdika was born. Hrdika had four sons: Devavāha, Gadādiḥava, Kṛṭaparva and Śūra and one daughter Prthī (Kuntī). And ten sons were born to Śūra by Māriṣā: Vasi, Devabhāga, Devavāhasva, Anaka, Śrījaya, Kākānīka, Śyāmaka, Vatsa, Kaḍūka and Vasideva. Vasideva married Devakī. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was born as the son of Vasideva and Devakī, and Pradyumna was Śrī Kṛṣṇa's son. Aniruddha was the son of Pradyumna, and Vajra of Aniruddha.

(1B) Kuruka. The descendants of Kuruka were: Vahni—Viloman—Kapotaraṁ—Tumburundubhi—Dardira—Vasu—Nāhuku—Āhuka. Āhuka had two sons: Ugrasena and Devaka. Kaṁsa was Ugrasena's son and Devaka his daughter. Devaka had three sons: Devāpa, Upadeva and Sudeva. Devāpa had seven daughters, Śrutadeva, Śrīnadeva, Upadeva, Śrīdeva, Devarakṣīta, Sahadeva and Devakī. 2) Śvaphalka. Son of Prśni and brother of Citraraatha. Śvaphalka, had twelve sons called Akrūra, Āsaṅga, Śarayeyā, Mṛdu, Mṛduvādgī, Dharmanvīrdha, Sukarman, Kṣatropakeṣa, Arimardana, Śatrughna, Gandhamadana and Pratībhā. Of them, Akrūra had two sons: Devaka and Upadevaka.

5) Turvasu. From Turvasu were descended in order: Vahni—Bhārta—Bhānu—Trībhānu—Karandhamā—Marutta. (As Marutta had no sons Dusyanta was adopted; this Dusyanta is not the famous Dusyanta, husband of Śukuntalā). Dusyanta—Varūtha—Gāndhīra. Gāndhīra had four sons, Gāndhāra, Kerala, Cola and Pāṇḍya. From Gāndhāra came in order, Kola, Druhyu, Babhrusetu, Purovasu — Gāndhārigarman—Gṛhyu—Viduṣa—Pracetā. Pracetās had four sons—Aṅgibhū, Sahbhānara, Cākuṣa and Paramesu. From Sahbhānara came in order: Kālanara—Śrījaya—Pāraṇā—Janamejaya—Mahāśāla—Mahāmanas. All the above royal dynasties belong to Candra vaṁśa. (Agni Purāṇa, Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Bhāgavata and Brahmanda Purāṇa).

CANDRAVARMAN. A king of Kamboja. As handsome as Candra, he was born in the dynasty of the asura called Candra (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 31). Dhrṣṭadyumna killed him in the great war. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 62).

CANDRAVATI. Daughter of Sunābha, the asura. Pradyumna, son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa of Rukmīni, married Prabhāvatī, daughter of the asura called Vajrānābha. Sunābha was the younger brother of Vajrānābha. Sunābha had two daughters called Candravatī and Gunavatī. These girls once saw Pradyumna and Prabhāvatī engaged in love-talk and they were attracted by Pradyumna. They requested Prabhāvatī to select husbands for them also from among the Yādavas. Prabhāvatī, in her childhood had learnt from Durvāsas a mantra, the repetition of which by a woman thinking in mind of any male would help to secure that male as the husband for her. Prabhāvatī taught that mantra to Candravatī and Gunavatī. They thought respectively of Gada and Śamba and repeated the mantra with the result that Gada married Candravatī and Śamba married Gunavatī.

CANDRAVATI. A wife of Hariścandra in his former birth. (See Hariścandra).

CANDRAVATSA. A Kṣatriya dynasty which originated from king Candrabhata. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 16).

CANDRAVINAŚANA. An asura, who descended on earth as a reputed king under the name Jānaki. (Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 37).

CANDRARAṬA. A penance performed for the attainment of beauty, happiness and popularity among the people. It is practised during the full-moon day in Dhanu (December-January). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 110).

CANDRĀYANA. A penance. (See Vṛata).

CANDRODAYA. A brother of the Vṛśā King. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 42).

CĀṆURĀ. I. A Kṣatriya king, who served Dharma putra at the council hall built by Maya. (M.B. Sahbhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 26).

CĀṆURĀ. II. An asura, one of the attendants of Kaṁsa. Kaṁsa had employed him as his body-guards many pugilists—Pralambaka, Cāṇūra, Tṛṇāvarta, Muṣṭika, Arisṭaka, Kesi, Dhenuka, Agra and Vīvada and these pugilists were sent with Pūtanā to Gokula to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa. On the death of Pūtanā they returned to Mathurā. When Kaṁsa invited Kṛṣṇa to Mathurā Cāṇūra and Muṣṭika were the chief pugilists entrusted with the duty of killing Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa fought with Cāṇūra and Balabhadrā with Muṣṭika. Both Cāṇūra and Muṣṭika were killed. (Bhāgavata Daśama Skanda).

CAPALA. A king in ancient India. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 238).

CĀṆAYĀṆA. A programme of worshipping the bow. Kaṁsa did this yājña for fourteen days, and Kṛṣṇa was invited to witness it. And Kṛṣṇa killed Karīsa, (Bhāgavata, Daśāmā Skandha).

CARAKA. Author of Carakasaṁhitā.

CARMAMANDALA. A village in ancient India. (M.B. Bṛha-sa Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 47).

CARMAVAN. Son of King Subala. He was the brother of Śakuni. Irāvān, son of Arjuna killed him in the great war. (M.B. Bṛha-sa Parva, Chapter 90).

CARMANVATI. A river in north India, now known as river Campā. 1) General. King Saśābindu, who ruled northern India in olden days once performed a yajña. The skins (carmans) of animals killed in the yajña lay there in a heap like a hill. When rain fell there flowed from the "skin-hill" a river and it was called Carmanvati. (Devībhāgavata, Prathama Skandha). 2) Other details. (1) River Carmanvati serves Varuṇa in his assembly. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 21). (2) Once on the bank of this river Sahadeva defeated the son of Jambhaka in fight. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 7). (3) He who bathes in this river will get the same result as from the Agniṣṭoma yajña. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 54). (4) Carmanvati is one of the rivers responsible for the origin of Agni. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 23).

CĀRUDHI. A mountain near the Mahāmeru. There are twenty mountains around the Meru, viz., Kāṅga, Kuraga, Kuśumbha, Vaiśṇavika, Trikāta, Śīśā, Paraśa, Rucaka, Nila, Nisadha, Sītīvasa, Kapila, Śañkhā, Vaiḍūrya, Cārudhi, Hānisa, Ṛṣabhā, Nāga, Kālañjara and Nārada. (Devībhāgavata, Asaṃa Skandha).

CĀRUGUPTA. Son of Śri Kṛṣṇa by Rukmī. (See Carugupta). He was present at the wedding of Draupadi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185). The chief event in his life was his killing Vivindhyā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 26).

CĀRUDHIKĀ. (See Candrasena).

CĀRUDHI. A mountain near the Mahāmeru. There are twenty mountains around the Meru, viz., Kāṅga, Kuraga, Kuśumbha, Vaiśṇavika, Trikāta, Śīśā, Paraśa, Rucaka, Nila, Nisadha, Sītīvasa, Kapila, Śañkhā, Vaiḍūrya, Cārudhi, Hānisa, Ṛṣabhā, Nāga, Kālañjara and Nārada. (Devībhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

CĀRUGUPTA. Son of Śri Kṛṣṇa by Rukmī. Pradyumna, Carudeṣṇa, Sudeṣṇa, Cārudha, Sucāru, Cārugupta, Bhadrācāru, Cāruncandra, Aticāru and Cāru were the ten sons of Rukmī. She had also a daughter called Cāruṁati. (Bhāgavata Daśāmā Skandha). As distinct from the Bhāgavata the Mahābhārata, speaks of three more sons to Rukmī, viz., Cārugaśas, Cārueṣṇa and Cārueṣravas. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 59).

CĀRUDHIKĀ. (See Cārugupta).

CĀRUMATSA. A brahmavādi son of Viśvāmitra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 59).

CĀRUNETRA. A celestial woman, who spent her time in Kubera's assembly. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 10).

CĀRUSIRSA. A mahārṣi, who belonged to Ṭalaṅga-gotra. A friend of Indra, the mahārṣi once spoke to Dharmaputra about the greatness of Śiva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 5).

CĀRUSRAVAS. (See Cārugupta).

CĀRUVAKTRA. An attendant of Subrahmanya. He was much devoted to brahmins. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 71).

CĀRUVESĀ. (See Cārugupta).

CĀRUYASĀ. (See Cārugupta).

CĀRIVAKTRA. A Rākṣasa, who was a close friend of Duryodhana. The following story is told about how he happened to become Duryodhana's friend. In the Kṛṣṇa this Rākṣasa did tapas to please Brahmā at Badaryārama, and Brahmā gave him the boon that he would be safe from all beings. Then he went round the world troubling brahmins, who, at last sought refuge in Brahmā, and he pacified them with the assurance that Cāriva would become a friend of Duryodhana when he would insult Brahmans and be reduced to ashes in the fire of their anger. Accordingly Cāriva became a friend of Duryodhana. When, after the great war, Dharmaputra entered Hastināpura with his followers thousands of brahmins gathered around and blessed him, Cāriva also disguised as a brahmin came there and condemning Dharmaputra as an enemy of his own people cursed him. The brahmans recognised him and cursed him to ashes. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapters 38, 39).

CĀRIVAKTRA. Certain Sanskrit texts refer to another Cāriva, a philosopher in ancient India. He was an atheist. He controverted in a powerful manner the belief in the existence of heaven and hell after death.

CĀRVAKKI. Wife of King Bhadrārenya and daughter of Kuśāmba. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

CĀSARAKTRA. An attendant of Subrahmanya. He had deep love for brahmins. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45).

CĀTURĀNGA. A king of the Aṅga dynasty. He was the son of Hemapāda and father of Pṛthulākṣa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

CĀTURASVA. A Rajārsi. He was a prominent member of Yama's assembly. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 11).

CĀTUROŚA. A heroic asura. Once he fell in love with Rambhā, and on his request Śvayamprabhā, Rambhā's attendant, won over her mistress to the asura. The asura, Rambhā and Śvayamprabhā then shifted their residence to a beautiful palace built in south India by Maya for Cāturāṣya. But, Indra who felt Rambhā's absence badly came down to earth, killed Āturāṣya and took Rambhā back with him. Indra cursed Śvayamprabhā to remain on earth. And, he told her that she should welcome and treat well the monkeys who would be arriving there in their quest of Stītā, and then she would get redemption from the curse. The above facts were revealed by Śvayamprabhā herself while welcoming the monkeys. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa).

CĀTURASAŚIMAHAṬṬMYA. The purāṇas declare that worshipping Śiva on Caturdāśī day will satisfy all desires. There is a story in one of the purāṇas supporting this claim. (See Kumudvati).

CĀTUROḌMSTRA An attendant of Subrahmanya. He always showed great devotion towards Brahmans. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 62).

CĀTUROIKA. A harlot about whom the following story is told in Kathāsārītāgarā. Once a poor Brahmā got a picce of gold as Pratigraha (fee or daksāṇa for performing a religious rite). While he was perplexed not knowing what to do with the gold, a Viṣṇu advised him to go on tour with the money got by suing the gold. The poor Brahmin did not even know how to go on tour. Then the Viṣṇu advised him to visit a harlot called Caturikā, who lived close by and who, the Viṣṇu said, would teach him how to go on tour. Brahmin:—What should I do first after going to the harlot’s house?
Viṣṇu:—Caturikā will become friendly if you would give her the gold. Then you should use sweet and charming words, and that is all.
The Brahmin went immediately to Caturikā’s house and he was received honourably by her. Then giving the gold to her she requested him to instruct him about going on tour. This request of his evoked laughter from people around him. Then the Brahmin who was versed in the Śrūṣis began reciting the Śaman with his palm formed in the shape of the ears of the cow. All those who were present there wildly laughed at him, and somehow or other he escaped from the none too pleasant scene, and reported his experience at the harlot’s to the Viṣṇu. He very easily understood that the reason for the Brahmin being ridiculed was that misreading his advice to use ‘śāma’ (sweet words) the Brahmin recited the sāmacaya. He took the brahmin back to Caturikā and asked her to return the ‘grass’ (gold given her by the brahmin) to ‘the cow’, the Brahmin who was as simple as the cow. Laughingly Caturikā returned the gold to him. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāpiṭha Lārbakam, Ta-rāṅga 6).

CĀTURMĀSYA. A penance (Vrata) which continues for four months. During this period, the Vedas are to be studied with pure heart. The Pāṇḍavas did this penance at Gayā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 95).

CĀTURMUKHLĀNIGA. A Brahmanīya installed on the northern bank of Sarasvatī by Brahmā. Brahmā, to start with, created animate and inanimate objects, and was thinking about further creation when a beautiful girl, born of herself appeared before him. Brahmā became enamoured of that girl and showed an unbecoming passion. As a punishment for this sin one of his heads broke. Thus broken-headed Brahmā, went to the Sthāṇuṛthra, which washes off all sins, on the northern bank of Sarasvatī and installed his own liṅga, known as the Caturmukhlahniga. This installation of liṅga redeemed him from sins. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 49).

CĀTURTHĪVRATA. A fast undertaken so that one may be happy for one year, may achieve all desires and attain Sivaloka. While observing this fast one should worship Ganaḍapati on the fourth day after New Moon (Caturthī) in the month of Makara (February-March). Next day the fast should be broken by eating cooked rice and oil seeds. The Viṇūamana of Ganaḍapati is ‘gān śvāhā; hṛdayādiṣṭadāgas beginning with ‘gam’. ‘Agaçchatikāya’ is the aśvāhana mantra and ‘Gacchatikāya’ the visarjana mantra. Ganaḍapati should be worshipped with mantras ending with ‘tukśaya’ and beginning with ‘gakāra’ as also with offering of sandal paste, rice balls etc. ‘Om Mahottakāya viḍmahe vakra-tuṇḍaya dhīmaṇi tanno dantī praçodayat’ is the Ganeṣa gāyatri mantra. He or she who performs the Caturthī vrata will attain Śivaloka. If Ganaḍapati is worshipped on a Tuesday which is also Caturthī the devotee will get all his desires satisfied. Caturthī occurring in Mina (March-April) is called Avighnacaturthī, and that day fasting should be in the night. On Caturthī in April-May Ganaḍapati should be worshipped with damanaka flowers, and then the worshipper will become very happy. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 179). Also see Vināyaka Caturthī.

CĀTURUPĀYAM. The four means used by Kings in olden times to achieve their objects are called Caturupāyam. Sāma, dāna, bheda and dlāda are the Caturupāyas (four tactics). There are three other upāyas also, almost equally important as the first four, and the seven upāyas are collectively called Saptopāyas. There are also yet other upāyas, but they are not important enough to merit special mention.

1) Sāma. It is the best means to attract and convert others to one’s side. It consists in winning people with sweet words and looks. People who are friendly by temperament and straightforward may be brought around by sāma. Sāma is employed in dealings with sons, brothers and other relatives.

2) Dāna. There are five kinds or varieties of dāna (gift) viz. priti-dāna, dravyadāna, svayaṃgrāha, deya and pratimoka. If a person gets help from another and acknowledges help by reward that reward is called priti-dāna. The miser and the poor should be brought round by priti-dāna. Military captains, heroes and citizens should be won over by this dāna. Those who fall at feet should be honoured by dāna.

3) Bheda. Bhedopāya is of three kinds: to destroy or end the friendship subsisting between people, to create dissension and to make the parties quarrel with each other. He who is falsely praised, he who does not desire wealth or welfare, he who has been invited to come and then insulted, traitor to king, he who has been exorbitantly taxed, the angry one, the honourable one, the insulted, the unreasonably forsaken one, he who harbours hatred in his mind, the pacified one, one whose wealth and wife have been taken away or stolen, he who has not been respected though deserving of respect—if such people are in one’s opposite camp, suspicion should be raked up among them and thus division created in their ranks. If subordinate chieftains, and forest tribes commit offences they should be brought round by the use of sāma and bheda upāyas.

4) Daṇḍa. Daṇḍopāya is of three kinds, viz., killing, denuding of wealth, and inflicting pain on the body or torture. Daṇḍa has two other forms, prakāśa (open) and aprakāśa (secret). Those who have become objects of hatred to all people should be subjected to prakāśa-daṇḍa. People, whose killing the world will detest, should not be killed openly, but only secretly. Enemies should be killed with weapons etc. Brahmins should not be killed. Friends and allies should not be subjected to daṇḍa; friends, who are made objects of daṇḍa will wither away like worm-eaten trees. The King, who possesses the three powers (of wealth, army and people’s support) and is fully conscious of the time and environmental factors should annihilate enemies by the instrument of daṇḍa. Evil people should be defeated by daṇḍa itself.
The upāya māyā consists in practising deception by magic or other yogic powers. The powers can be acquired by the worship of the idols of certain Devatās. People who employ go about at night in various disguises. They disguise themselves as beautiful women or even as animals. They also deceive people by creating illusions of clouds, fire or lightning. For instance, Bhīma killed Kīcaka by going to him in the guise of a woman.
Not to dissuade people who indulge in unjustifiable grief, war etc. is the principal aim of the upāya called upēkṣā. Hidimbī gave up his brother Hidimba by practising Upēkṣā. Next is the Indrajālopa (magic). For example, to create illusions of clouds, darkness, rain, fire, and other magic in order to instil fear among troops of the enemy etc. To scare the enemy is the aim of Indrajāla. (For details of Caturūṇyās see Kaṇṭika).

(Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 241).

CĀTURVARṆYAM. (The four Castes, Classes).

1) General. The purāṇas tell that Brahma created the four castes like Brahmī, Kṣatriyās, Vaiṣyas and Śudrās and assigned to them duties and rules of procedure.

2) Origin. Brahma got ready for the work of Creation, concentrating his mind on the universal soul, the embodiment of Truth. And, the first to be born from his face were people with sublime qualities, and then he called Brahmīs. Then emerged from his chest people in whom the heroic or militant qualities preponderated. (Rājas). Then the Creator named Kṣatriyas. Then from his thighs were born people in whom rajas and tamas preponderated, and they were called Vaiṣyas. And, lastly Brahma brought forth from his feet another sect of people, and as tamas (darkness, cultural darkness) preponderated in them they were named Śudrās. The system of four castes is called Caturvarṇyam. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 6).

3) Code of conduct. Ahimsā (non-violence), Satyavāda (speaking truth), Bhūtāraddhā (love for all living beings), Tīrthasevā (sacrifice to holy places), Dāna (gifts), Brahmacarya (celibacy), Vinmatasaratva (absence of malice), Service of Devas, Brahmīs and Gurus (elders), to attend to all dharmas (duties), Pitrpūjā (worship of elders) eternal loyalty to King, to accomplish objects in conformity with the injunction of the Śastras, not to commit cruel deeds, Titikṣā (forbearance, to put up with equanimity the pair of opposites such as pleasure and pain, heat and cold), belief in God—these codes of conduct are common to all Castes and in all the four stations in life. Now, the special codes for each of the four castes.

1) Brahmins. To perform and get performed Yajñas, to study and to teach the Vedas, to give gifts and to receive gifts—these are the dharma (duties) of the Brahmin. Brahmins take their second birth (dvijā) on the upanayana (wearing of the sacred thread). The caste of the mother is the caste of the child. But children born to Brahmīs of their non-Brahmin wives are not Brahmīs. Children born of a Brahmin woman to a Śudrā are called Čandālās. Sons born of Brahmin women to Kṣatriyas are called Sūtas, and sons born of a Brahmin woman to a Vaiṣya are called Vaiḍēhikas. The Brahmin shall not adopt the profession of the other castes. The twice-born are, however, allowed in certain circumstances, the profession of agriculture, protection of cows, commerce and kusida (to lend money on interest). But, he shall not trade in gorasa (milk and other cow products) lāvana (salt) and flesh. If he be an agriculturist, the Brahmin may till the earth, cut medicinal plants and destroy pests. But, he must purify the soul by performing yajñas and worshipping Devas. The soil should be ploughed with eight oxen attached to the plough. He may sustain himself either with Rta (food got by begging) or Amṛta (food got not by begging). The suffix “Sarmā” should be added to the names of Brahmin children. Upanayana (wearing of the sacred thread) should be done when the child is eight years old. The mānuḍi (girdle around the waist) to be worn after upanayana should be made either of muñja grass or of the bark of trees. Brahmin brahmacārins should wear hides, and when they beg for alm the sentence should commence with the word ‘Bhavatī’, e.g. “Bhavatī, bhikṣām dehi”. The Brahmin can marry in all the castes, but he shall perform ritual only along with the wife of his own caste.

ii) Kṣatriya. To give gifts according to rules, study Vedas and perform yajña form the duty of the Kṣatriya. To look after and take care of good people and to punish evil-doers are his especial duties. Names of Kṣatriya children should take the suffix “Varmā”. After upanayana the child should wear tiger skin. He should carry a danda (rod) of the Arayāl (peepal) tree. When the Kṣatriya brahmacārins begs for alms the word ‘bhavatī’ should be used in the middle of the sentence, e.g. “Bhikṣām bhavatī dehi”. The Kṣatriya can marry in the other castes, except the Brahmin. At the time of wedding the Kṣatriya woman should hold an arrow in her hand.

iii) Vaiṣya. Agriculture, protection of cows and trade are the special duties of the Vaiṣya. Children born of Brahmin women to Vaiṣyas are called Vaiḍēhikas. Names of Vaiṣya children should have the suffix ‘gupta’ after them. After upanayana the Vaiṣya brahmacārins should wear sheep’s skin. He should carry a danda made of a branch of the Kūvāla tree. The Vaiṣya may have a wife of his own caste and one of the Śudrā caste. At the time of wedding the Vaiṣya woman should hold a cane in her hand.

iv) Śudrā. Service to the Brahmin and architecture form the duties of the Śudrā. Children born to Kṣatriya women by Śudrās are called Čandalas. Children born to Brahmin women by Śudrās are called Čandālās, and sons born to Śudrās by Vaiṣya women are called Ayogavas.

The Čandāla’s profession is to hang criminals sentenced to death, and to live by women. The Pulaka must live by hunting. Ayogava is to act on the stage and live by architecture. The Čandāla should live outside the village. The Čandāla has a right to take the clothes on corpses. He shall not have any physical contacts with the others. He will attain salvation if he died in the course of protecting others. The suffix ‘dāsa’ should be added to his name. He shall marry only from his own caste. (Agni Purāṇa, 4 Chapters from 151).

CĀTURVEDA. One of the Śaptatīrṇs (seven manes). Vairājas, agniśvātatas, gārhapatyas, somāpaś, Ekaśrīgas, Caturvedas and Kālas are the seven manes. (M. B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 47).

CĀTURUGA. (See Manvantara).

CĀTUŚKARṆI. One of the female attendants of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 25).

CĀTUŚPATHARATĀ. A female attendant of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 27).

CĀTVARĀVĀṢṆI. A woman attendant of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 12).

CĀVETTUṆṆA. (CĂVeru). (Pāṭa=army).

A particular division of the army which in olden days used to come forward to lay down their lives in the service of the country. When defeat in war was almost certain for their king an army division under royal leadership was formed of heroes, who took their last leave of their homes and people. The soldiers left their homes with their heads and eyebrows shaved, and people gave them a hearty send-off. Either victory or death in battle-field was their slogan. This system originated in Kerala. Imitating Kerala, Turkey and Egypt formed their own division of Cāveṭuṭpaṭa in the 15th century. The Cāveṭuṭpaṭa of Turkey called the Janissary was formed out of poor Christians captured in war, and that of Egypt called Mamaluk was formed out of slaves. But, the Cāveṭuṭpāṭa of ancient Kerala was self-organised out of burning love for their king and country. The families of those warriors of the paṭa who died in fight were allotted royal favours. Even before, in the 14th century A.D. there existed in Kerala this system of Cāveṭuṭpāṭa. From A.D. 1090 to 1111 A.D. many fierce wars were fought between Kerala and the Cola country, and it was perhaps during this period that this system of fighting came into vogue. Certain inscriptions of the period go to prove that RāmaMahakulaekhara Cakra-varti who ruled Kerala during the above period drove out the Colas from Quilon and captured places up to Koṭṭar.

Foreign writers have also referred to the Cāveṭuṭpāṭa. "Amouches" and "Amochi" used in the 'Rise of Portuguese power in India' indicate the Cāveṭuṭpāṭa. "In the war between Cochin and Calicut in 1504 three princes of Cochin were killed, one of them being the nephew of the ruling monarch. On his death 200 Cāveṭuṭ warriors who formed the body-guard of the nephew rushed to the field after shaving their heads and eyebrows and killed all the enemies they saw."

CEDI. A king of the Yaduvaṭa. 1) Genalogy. Descending in order from Viṣṇu:—Brahma—Atri—Candira—Budha—Pururavas—Ayus—Nahuṣa—Yayati—Yadu—Kṛṣṇa—Vrajināvan—Śvāhi—Ruśeka—Citraratha—Saśāndu—Pṛthuṛavas—Dharmā—Ruceka—Jyāmacha—Vidarbha—Romapāda—Bhadru—Kṛṣṇa—Uṣika—Cedi. The Cedi dynasty begins from Cedi and the land ruled over by Cedi came to be known as Cedi-śāra. 2) Other details regarding King Cedi. 1) Once Uparicaravasu conquered his land. (Sloka 2, Chapter 63, Ādi Parva). 2) Kareṇumati, wife of Nakula, was a princess of Cedi rājya. (Sloka 79, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva). 3) Once Śitāpāla reigned over this country. After his death his son Dhrṣṭaṇcuky was crowned king. (Sloka 36, Chapter 45, Sahbhā Parva). 4) During the period of Nala, Cedi-śāra was ruled by king Subhānu. Damayanti lived in his palace very comfortably. (Sloka 44, Chapter 65, Vana Parva). 5) Dhrṣṭaṇcuky, a king of Cedi, came to the help of the Pāṇḍavas with an akṣauhiṇi (an army of 21870 chariots, equal number of elephants, 65610 horses and 10930 infantry men.). (Sloka 7, Chapter 19, Udhyoga Parva). 6) The Kṣatriya warriors of this state helped Śri Kṛṣṇa in many ways. (Sloka 11, Chapter 28, Udhyoga Parva). 7) Cedi was counted as one of the prominent kingdoms of ancient Bhārata. (Sloka 40, Chapter 9, Bhiṣma Parva).

CEKITĀNA. (SĀTVATA, VĀnOYEA). 1) General information. An archer of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. He lived for the Pāṇḍavas and attained Vira Svarga (Heaven for the brave) in the great battle. 2) Important events. 1) Cekitāna was present at the svayainvara of Draupadi. (Chapter 171, Sloka 18, Udhyoga Parva). 2) When the Pāṇḍavas entered the hall constructed by Maya for the first time Cekitāna was with them. (Sloka 27, Chapter 4, Sahbhā Parva). 3) At the time of the Rājaśṭhiya he approached Dharmaputra and presented him with an arrow-holder. (Sloka 9, Chapter 53, Sahbhā Parva). 4) On the first day of the great battle this great archer wrestled with Susūmā. (Sloka 60, Chapter 45, Bhiṣma Parva). 5) At the Kurukṣetra in the combat with Kṛṣṇa he killed both of them. (Sloka 31, Chapter 84, Bhiṣma Parva). 6) He wrestled with Citrasena. (Sloka 8, Chapter 110, Bhiṣma Parva). 7) Cekitāna fought with Anuvinda in the Kurukṣetra battle. (Sloka 48, Chapter 14, Droṇa Parva). 8) Droṇa by his yogic powers invited the spirits of all the dead warriors on the banks of the Gaṅgā the spirit of Cekitāna was also there. (Sloka 12, Chapter 32, Aṃramāvīśaka Parva).

CEMB (U). (COPPER). The sperm of Lord Śiva which was dropped into the river Gaṅgā developed into form and gave birth to Subrahmanyā. Along with Subrahmanyā came out from Gaṅgā gold and silver and from its heat steel and copper. From the dirt came out tin. (Sarga 37, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

CENNASU NAMBUṬIŘI. Cennās Nārāyaṇ Namūṭiripad was born and bred up in Kerala. He was born in Vanneri in Ponnani Taluk in the year 1428 A.D. His father was Ravi Namūṭiripad of Bhārjava gotra. Besides his book 'Tantrasamuccaya' he has written a book 'Mānavavāṣṭhulakṣaṇa'. This book is called 'Manuṣyālayandikā' also.

CERA. (A king of serpents). See under Ruru.

CERIPPU. (FOOTWEAR). There is a story in Mahābhārata of how Cerippu and Kuka (footwear and umbrella) were born. Once the heat of the Sun became unbearable to Jamadagni and enraged at this the sage started sending arrows against the Sun. His wife Reṇukā was supplying them with arrows. When a set of arrows was finished Reṇukā brought another set. This continued without break and the Sun began to feel the attack. Unable to do anything against the sage the Sun heated the head and foot of Reṇukā on her way to supply the arrows so fiercely that Reṇukā fell down under a banyan tree exhausted. When she became well enough to walk she took the arrows to her husband who was very angry for her being late. She then explained to him how because of the extreme heat of the sun she fell down on the way. Jamadagni then started with increased fury his shower of arrows and the Sun in the disguise of a Brahmin approached and advised him that it was not possible to strike down the Sun because he was a swift-mover in the sky and so it was better to withdraw from that attempt. But Jamadagni said the Sun would be stationary for some time at midday and then he would hit the Sun down. When the Sun found that Jamadagni would never drop his attempt he accepted defeat and presented Jamadagni with a pair of sandals and an umbrella to protect against the heat from below and above. From that day onwards footwear and umbrella came into vogue.

The practice of presenting sandals and umbrella is being carried down from generation to generation and even today it is being followed; these two are given as gifts on the ‘Śrāddhā’ day. (Chapters 95 and 96, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.)

CH. This letter means a cut, amputation severance. (Chapter 348, Agni Purāṇa).

CHĀGAMUKHA. Subrahmanya. He is here idolised as one having a face like that of a goat. (Sloka 3, Chapter 228, Vana Parva).

CHANDODEVA. Sage Mataṅga was known in his previous birth by this name. (See Mataṅga).

CHATRAKETU. The second son born to Laksmana of his wife Īrulī. The eldest son was Taṇḍaka. Śrī Rāma after his return from the exile established a Kingdom called Agati on the eastern sea-shore and crowned Taṇḍaka as the King of that place. On the western side after subjugating the melechas (low-caste non-Hindu tribe) Śrī Rāma established another kingdom called Candramati and installed Chatraketu as the King of that country. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

CHATRAVATI. There was in ancient Bharata a country called Ahicchatra. Chatravati was the capital of that State. The country itself is also known as Chatravati. (Sloka 21, Chapter 165, Ādi Parva).

CHAYA. A substitute of Sañjñā, daughter of Visvakarma. Sañjñā got from Sūrya three children, Manu, Yama and Yami. The heat of Sūrya, her husband, became unbearable to her and so she created a substitute in her exact form and leaving her to look after Sūrya, her husband, she left the place and went to her father. Sūrya did not know of this replacement and taking her to be Sañjñā he produced three children by her, Saṇī, Sañvarpaśu and Taṇāpi. Chāyā loved her sons more and this made Yama angry and he raised his legs to strike her when Chāyā cursed that Yama’s legs would fall off from his body. Yama complained to his father and he amended the curse and said that only some flesh from his limbs would fall to the ground and that flesh would serve as food to the germs in the earth. Yama would escape from further injury. After consoling his son he turned towards Chāyā. The anger of Sūrya frightened her and she told him everything. Sūrya then divorced her and brought back Sañjñā. For details see Sañjñā. (Chapter 9 of Harivāna; Chapter 2, Aṇiśa 3, Viṣṇupurāṇa).

CHAYAGRĀHI. A demon who harassed Hanumān on his flight to Lankā from the Bharata shore. She, by a trick of the shade obstructed his path and Hanumān realising the danger killed her by a blow with his left foot and sprang forward. (Sundara Kāṇḍa, Kampa Rāmāyaṇa).

CHAYASUTA. Śani (Saturn).

CIBUKA. A low-caste born of Nandini, the cow, during her fight with Visvāmitra. (Sloka 38, Chapter 174, Ādi Parva).

CIDAMBARA (SITAMBARA). A Sanskrit poet of 16th century A.D. He was a poet in the court of emperor Veṅkaṭa who ruled over Vijayanagar during the period 1586 A.D. to 1614 A.D. His one great work is ‘Rāghavayādavaṇḍaṇīva’. There are three Kāṇḍas in it and one Kāṇḍa each is devoted to the story of Śrī Rāma, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the Pāṇḍavas.

CIKSURĀ. War minister of Mahiśāsura. Tāmra was his finance minister, Asīloma prime minister, Bīḍāla foreign minister, Udbharka Commander-in-chief, Śukra, minister for education and Bāskala, Trinctra and Kāla-bandhaka consulting ministers. (Devī Bhāgavata, Pañcama Skanda).

CIKURA. Son of Āryaka, the serpent king. Cikura had a son called Sumukha. Once Guruḍa ate Cikura for food. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 120, Verse 23).

CĪNAR. People of China. It is believed that the Ĉīnars were born from the body of Nandini, the cow, during her fight with Visvāmitra. (Sloka 38, Chapter 174, Ādi Parva). These low-caste people paid homage to Yudhiṣṭhira and gave him many presents. (Sloka 31, Chapter 51, Sabhā Parva).

CINTĀMANI. A diamond. This was salvaged from the ocean of milk along with other precious items like Airevata, Ucchāḷavas, Kalpavrṣa, Kaustubha, Candra, Apsaras, Mahālakṣmi, Tārā, and Rumā. (Yudha Kāṇḍa, Kaṃpa Rāmāyaṇa).

CIRADĀTĀ. There was a king called Ciradāta in the country called Cirapura. Though himself a good man he was surrounded by bad advisors. Once a foreigner, Prasāṅga, came along with two friends to the palace to see the King. But due to the bad advice of his courtiers the King did not care to see them even. For five years they stayed there without even getting a look at the King. One day the only son of the King died. All the courtiers gathered round the child and pretended to be greatly grieved. Prasāṅga and his friends also came to the scene. They saw the king and spoke to him thus: “For five years you have not cared either to see or talk to us. We were cherishing a hope that at least your son would give us a better treatment when he grew old and became King. We were living here on that hope and now that hope also has been shattered and so we are leaving the place this instant.” The King was surprised to hear that they were prepared even to wait for his son to become the King and gave them very many presents. (Tarāṅga 5, Aalakārvatti Lārhīka, Kathāsaritgāra).

CIRAKA. A place of habitation in ancient India. Once Karna conquered this land and from then onwards they started paying tribute to Duryodhana. (Sloka 19, Chapter 8, Karna Parva).

CIRAKĀRĪ. A son of Gautama Mahārṣi. He used to think deeply before doing any deed and so he earned the name Cirakārī.

Once the sage Gautama found out proof against the chastity of his own wife and enraged at this commanded his son Cirakārī to chop off the head of the latter’s mother. Giving this command Gautama went into the forest and Cirakārī in obedience to his father’s order came before his mother, weapon in hand. He did not kill her immediately but pondered over the consequences of the deed. Matricide is a great sin, he mused. Then again who would be there to look after father if mother died. Perhaps his father, when he cools down, might regret his command and come back repentant. Thus he was sitting undecided when Gautama returned full of remorse for his hasty order. On seeing his wife alive he was greatly relieved and immensely happy and he blessed Cīrakārī. (Chapter 266, Sānti Parva).

CIRAṆṆĪVĪ. The name of a crow, a character in the 'Pañcatantra'. (See under Meghavarna).

CIRANTAKA. A son of Garuḍa. (Śloka 1, Chapter 101, Udyogs Parva).

CIRAṆṆĪVAS I. A Kṣatriya King born as a rebirth of an asura Krodhavāsa. (Śloka 61, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).

CIRAṆṆĪVAS II. A yakṣa. He stayed in the court of Kubera worshipping him. (Śloka 10, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

CIRAṆṆĪUS. An ancient King of the country Cirāyu. Nāgarjuna was a minister of this King. Nāgarjuna knew the secret of 'Rasīyanasiddhi'. Once Nāgarjuna prepared a medicine for himself and the King which if taken would keep them eternally young. They took medicine accordingly. After some days a child of the minister died. Grief-stricken Nāgarjuna decided to prepare Amṛta which would eradicate death from this world. He had prepared it but there remained one more medicine to be added to this. The auspicious moment to add the same was to come only after five days and Nāgarjuna waited. The devas were frightened. If Amṛta was made available on earth men would become Devas. Devas could not bear this and so they sent the Aśvinikumāras to the earth to persuade Nāgarjuna to desist from his work of preparing Amṛta. Further they informed him that his dead child was living happily in heaven. He agreed to stop his work.

After some time Cirāyu crowned his son Jivahara as the heir-apparent. Overjoyed Jivahara ran to his mother Dhanaparā to give her the glad tidings. Dhanaparā told her son thus: "My child, why should you be so happy to think that you have become the heir-apparent. Several sons of your father had already become yuvārajas and died before becoming King. Your father has taken a medicine from Nāgarjuna and that will keep him eternally young. None of his sons can aspire to be the King. Your father is now eight hundred years old and will live long. Many of you will become yuvārajas but not the King. I will therefore suggest a way to tide over this difficulty. Everyday in the afternoon Nāgarjuna would come outside the palace and enquire whether anybody is in need of anything. At that time he would give whatever was asked for. It is an opportunity when you can ask for his head. When Nāgarjuna is dead your father would either die of grief or go to the forests. Then you can become the King."

Jivahara was pleased to hear this suggestion and he went that after-noon to the palace of Nāgarjuna and when Nāgarjuna as usual came out with his query Jivahara asked for his head. Most willingly Nāgarjuna offered his head to be chopped off. But the effect of the medicine made even the strongest cut by the sword ineffective. Jivahara lost many swords without Nāgarjuna getting even a small scratch on his neck. The hubbub brought the King to the scene and he immediately asked Nāgarjuna to withdraw his head but Nāgarjuna refused saying: "Oh, King, in my ninetynine previous births I have offered my head like this and please do not ask me to desist from making this offer for the hundredth time".

So saying he embraced the King and taking a powder from his body smeared it on the sword and asked Jivahara to strike again. This time very easily Jivahara severed the head from the body of Nāgarjuna. The King was greatly aggrieved and he renounced all and went to the forest and led a pious life.

Cirāyu's son Jivahara became King. But Nāgarjuna's sons killed him and his mother died of grief. (Tāraṅga, Ratnaprabhā Lambaka, Kathāsārītāgāra).

CIRĪ. A river. It was on the banks of this river that Vaivasvata Manu clad in bark-skin and with knotted hair did penance. (Śloka 6, Chapter 187, Vana Parva).

CITAL. (Termite). Cital has got its own place in the purāṇas. Devi Bhāgavata has the following story about the origin of it.

Mahāviṣṇu once looking at the face of Lākṣmī laughed without any apparent reason. Lākṣmī, thinking that Viṣṇu was laughing at her and that he had an eye on some other woman more beautiful than her lost her temper and cursed Viṣṇu that his head would be severed from his body.

No sooner was the curse pronounced than the asuras came in batches fully armed and challenged Viṣṇu to war. Single-handed the Lord fought the asuras with one bow. The fight did not end though it continued for thousands of years. Viṣṇu felt tired and decided to rest awhile. He planted one end of the united bow on the ground, rested his chin on the other and sat in Padmāsana. Being very tired the Lord remained asleep for a long time in this posture.

About this time the devas made preparations to perform a yajña. All the devas except Mahāviṣṇu attended that yajña. Since he was the master of yajñas performed for purposes of the devas they could not begin it in his absence. So, Brahmac and others went in search of Viṣṇu to Vaikuṇṭha. But he was not to be found there. Then Brahmac and others found out with their eyes of knowledge where Viṣṇu was and they went to the place where he was sleeping. They waited there for a long time, yet Viṣṇu did not awake from sleep. Then Brahmac hit at a plan to awaken Viṣṇu. It was to create citals (termites) to eat the end of the bow. When they had eaten away the end of the bow planted on the ground the cord binding the two ends of it would break, the bow would straighten up and the speedy movement of it would awaken Viṣṇu.

According to this plan Brahmac created citals, but his other plans were not acceptable to the citals. They argued that the advantage of awakening the Lord from sleep would go only to the devas, while its sin would fall upon them.

They argued,

Nīdrābhāṅgaḥ kathācēdo
Dampatyoḥ prītibhedaḥanam /
Śīsumāṭrībhedaḥca
Brahmāhāyāsamanah smṛtam ///

Brahmac conceded the justness of this argument and agreed that, in future, a part of the result of yajñas shall go to citals. It was after this that havis (sa crificial offering) which, in the course of being submitted to the fire falls on the sides of the pit of fire became the share of citals (termites). This promise of Brahmac pleased the citals, and they did as was bidden by Brahmac and the bow of Viṣṇu straightened up with a terrific sound. The devas were terror-stricken, the whole universe shook, the earth experienced a convulsion and the oceans too were shaken. Moreover, the head of Viṣṇu was severed from the body, rose high up in the sky and fell into the sea. Brahmā, Śiva and others opened their eyes only to find the body of Viṣṇu lying thus without the head.

This loss of Viṣṇu's head proved to be useful in another way. Now, Hayagrīva, after securing the boon from Brahmā that he would be killed only by one with horse's head, was running rough-shod over the whole earth. The devas cut off the head of a horse and attached it to the trunk of Viṣṇu. Thus Viṣṇu came to life again, and according to his orders the citals gnawed away the cord of Hayagrīva's bow as a result of which he was killed. (Devimāhātmya, Prathma Skandha).

CITĀYU. A king of the Pāru dynasty. He was the son of Bhadraśva, who had ten sons called Rkṣāyu, Kṛṣṭīyu, Sannatāyu, Gṛṭṭāyu, Citāyū, Śṭapāḍīlāyu, Dharmāyu, Sammitāyu, Kṛṣṭīyu and Matināra. (Āgni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

CITRĀ. (CITRAKESHA). One of the Pandava's sons. He was killed by Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 23).

CITRĀ. A celestial maiden. When once Aśṭāvakra went to the court of Kuberā this maiden gave a dance in honour of his visit. (Śloka 44, Chapter 14, Anuśāsana Parva).

CITRĀKUTA (CITRAWUDHA). A son of Dhrtrāṣṭra. He was killed in war by Bhīma. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 136, Verse 20).

CITRĀ. A king of the Pāru dynasty. He was the son of Subrahmanya, as a child, used to play. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 23).

CITRĀ. (CITRĀKESHA). One of the Pandava's sons. He was killed by Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 23).

CITRĀ. (CITRĀKESHA). One of the Pandava's sons. He was killed by Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 23).

CITRĀ. (CITRĀKESHA). One of the Pandava's sons. He was killed by Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 23).

CITRĀ. The blessings of Sage Aṅgiras. But, ere long the child was dead and gone, and its parents, immersed in sorrow took the dead child to Aṅgiras. Nārada also happened to be there on the occasion. Aṅgiras restored the dead child to life and asked him to live with the parents. The boy immediately stood up and told Aṅgiras that he had many parents in his many previous lives, and requested to be enlightened as to which of those parents he was to live with. Brahmā and Nārada felt confused. In the end they disappeared after imparting spiritual wisdom to Citrāketu. And, Citrāketu, who, for eight days immersed himself in concentrating the mind on God was turned into a Gandharva; his wife too turned Gandharva.

And, both of them rose up in the sky and flying over Mount Kailāśa looked down to the mountain. There they saw Pārvati being seated on the thighs of Śiva at which sight Citrāketu laughed. Enraged by the laughter Pārvati cursed him to be born as an asura, and he was born as such. Viṭṭāraṇa was Citrāketu born as asura. (Bhāgavata, Saṣṭha Skandha).

CITRĀKETU II. A son of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 12).

CITRĀKETU III. A Pāṇcāla prince who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 41).

CITRĀKETU IV. A son of Siśupāla. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

CITRAKESI. An Apsarā woman. King Vatsa begot sons like Viṣṇu of her. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

CITRĀKṢA. One of the hundred sons of Dhrtrāṣṭra. Bhīmasena killed him in the great battle. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 136).

CITRĀKUNDAKA. (DĪRGHALOCANA). One of the Kauravas killed by Bhīma. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 27).

CITRĀKUṬA. A mountain. Renowned in the pūraṇas, this mountain is on the banks of the river, Mandākini. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85). It was here, at Citrākuṭa that Śrī Rāma, Sītā and others lived for a period of time. It is said that Rājaḷakṣṇi (royal wealth and welfare) will embrace those who fast on the Citrākuṭa after a bath in the Mandākini. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 29). This mountain is in Bándā Zilla of the U.P. in modern India. Citrākuṭa is described in Cantos 56 and 94 of Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa.

CITRĀLEKHĀ II. 1. A celestial maiden. This maiden came and danced in the assembly of the Pāṇḍavas once. (Śloka 34, Chapter 9, Vana Parva, M.B.).

CITRĀLEKHĀ II. A companion of Uṣā, daughter of the demon, Bāṇa. She was a beautiful portrait painter. Uṣā once dreamt of Aniruddha, grandson of Kṛṣṇa. Even before knowing the identity of the idol of her dream Uṣā fell in love with him. Next day morning Citrālekhā gathered from the gloomy Uṣā details of her dream and Citrālekhā started making portraits of many known charming princes but Uṣā was not satisfied. She then drew in her imagination a figure which was exactly like that of Aniruddha, the man of her dream. Uṣā was satisfied and it was through the cleverness of Chitrālekhā that Aniruddha was brought to Uṣā's room and Uṣā was able to marry Aniruddha. (See under 'Aniruddha').
CITRAMUKHA. A sage. Though he was born a Vaiśya, he became a brahmin and from there gradually rose to the status of a brahmarṣi. (Chapter 56, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.)

CITRĀNGA I. (CITRĀNGA, ŚRUTĀNTAKA). One of the hundred sons of Dhrūtarāṣṭra. In the great battle Bīmaśena killed him. (Sloka 11, Chapter 26, Śalya Parva).

CITRĀNGA II. A warrior. In the Aśvamedhayajña performed by Śri Rāma Śatrughna followed the sacrificial horse and Citrāṅga blocked them on their way. Śatrughna killed him. (Chapter 27, Pāṭāla Kāṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

CITRĀNGA I. (CITRĀNGA). See under Citrāṅga I.

CITRĀNGA II. A son of the Mahārāja Śantanu: King Śantanu of the Candra dynasty had two wives, Gaṅga and Satyavatī. Bhīṣma is the son born of Gaṅga; of Satyavatī were born two sons, Citrāṅga and Viśravārya. They were very brave and learned. After ruling his kingdom for a long period, living with Satyavatī and the three children Śantanu passed away. Because Bhīṣma dedicated himself to a life of unbroken chastity Citrāṅga was crowned King. Once when he went to the forest for hunting he met with a gandharva of the same name. Both did not like the other to keep the same name and so a fight ensued. It was fought in Kurukṣetra and lasted for three years. In the end Citrāṅga was killed. Bhīṣma felt very sorry and after asking Viśravārya to perform the funeral rites crowned him as King. (Devi Bāgavata-Prathama Skandha).

CITRĀNGA III. A gandharva. See under Citrāṅga II.

CITRĀNGA IV. One of the Kings who attended the svaṇīvarā of Draupadī. He might have been the King of either Kaliṅga or Daśārma because both these states were then ruled by a Citrāṅga. (Sloka 22, Chapter 185, Ādi Parva).

CITRĀNGA V. A king of Kaliṅga. Almost all the Kings of Bhrātara attended a svaṇīvarā once held at the palace of this King. (Sloka 2, Chapter 4, Śānti Parva).

CITRĀNGA VI. A king of Daśārma. He blocked the sacrificial horse sent out by Dharmaputra during the Aśvamedhayajña and Arjuna killed him. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 33, Sloka 7).

CITRĀNGA VII. A deer. A character in the stories in the book 'Paṇeṭaṇṭra Stories' (Sec B-2 in Paṇeṭaṇṭra).

CITRĀNGA I. A celestial maiden. Once this girl gave a dance in the court of Kubera in honour of Aśṭāvakra. (Sloka 44, Chapter 19, Anuśāsana Parva).

CITRĀNGA II. A wife of Arjuna.

General information. When once Dharmaputra was cloistered with Paṇeṭālī in amorous talks Arjuna by mistake entered the room and was thus compelled as per a previous mutual agreement to go on a pilgrimage for a year. During this exile he married the serpent girl Ulūpī. After that he proceeded again on his pilgrimage and reached a state called Maṇalīr. Maṇalīr was then reigned by a King called Citrāṅga. Citrāṅga was the daughter of Citrāṅga. An ancestor of Citrāṅga greatly grieved by the lack of a son, did great penance to propitiate Śiva and Śiva blessed him and said that in future he and his successors would get a son to keep their line unbroken. Accordingly all the forefathers of Citrāṅga got a son each but when it came to the turn of the latter he got a girl instead.

Arjuna accidentally saw Citrāṅga and fell in love with her, and knowing that, the king received Arjuna in his palace and requested Arjuna to marry his daughter. Arjuna married her and the couple got a son named Bahruvāhana. Promising them that he would come back and take them to Hastināpura Arjuna continued his pilgrimage. (Chapters 219, 220, and 221, Ādi Parva).

2) How Citrāṅga came to Hastināpura. When after the great epic battle Dharmaputra conducted an Aśvamedhayajña it was Arjuna who led the sacrificial horse to the south. When Arjuna came to Manalar he came against Bahruvāhana who challenged him for a fight. In the grim battle that ensued Arjuna fell dead by the piercing arrows of Bahruvāhana, his own son. At that time Ulūpī and Citrāṅga came to the scene and seeing Arjuna lying dead, Ulūpī brought the diamond, Mṛtasanjīvatī, and placing it on Arjuna's face brought him back to life. (See Bahruvāhana for details). After this incident all of them, Citrāṅga, Ulūpī and Bahruvāhana went to Hastināpura along with Arjuna. (Chapters 79 to 81, Aśvamedha Parva).

3) Other details

(1) Citrāṅga on reaching Hastināpura bowed down before Kuntī and Pāṇeṭālī touching their feet and lived amicably with others like Subhadra. (Sloka 2, Chapter 86, Aśvamedha Parva).

(2) Kuntī, Subhadra and Pāṇeṭālī gave Citrāṅga many diamonds as present. (Sloka 5, Chapter 88, Aśvamedha Parva).

(3) Citrāṅga looked to the comforts of Gāṇḍhārī as a servant-maid. (Sloka 25, Chapter 1, Āśramavāsika Parva).

(4) Citrāṅga was one among the women who wept when at the fag end of their life Dhartrāṣṭra, Gāṇḍhārī and Kuntī started for Vanavāsa (life in the forest). (Sloka 10, Chapter 15, Āśramavāsika Parva).

(5) Citrāṅga was a beautiful woman having an enchanting figure as that of a Madhūka flower. (Sloka 11, Chapter 25, Āśramavāsika Parva).

(6) After the Mahāprasthāna of the Pāṇḍavas Citrāṅga left for Maujūpura. (Sloka 18, Chapter 1, Mahāprasthānika Parva).

CITRĀNGA III. Daughter of Viśvakarman. Once while she was bathing in a pond along with her companions in the forest of Naimiśa Prince Suratha, son of Sudeva, came that way. Seeing him Citrāṅga told her companions "This beautiful young man is in love. I must go myself to him". Though her companions objected to her doing this, waving aside the objections Citrāṅga approached Suratha. When Viśvakarman knew about this he was extremely angry and cursed her saying that she would never have a marriage. Citrāṅga fainted when she heard the curse and her companions tried their best to wake her up, but failed. They then took her to be dead and left the place in search of firewood and other things to conduct a funeral.

When Citrāṅga woke up she looked around for her companions and finding none including her lover, the prince, she ran and threw herself into the river, Sarasvati.
That river pushed her down to river Gomatī and that river in turn washed her ashore a huge forest. There she was met by the sage Rādhvaśā. Knowing her sad tale the sage felt compassion for her and cursed Viśvakārmā to be born as a monkey. Then he let her marry her lover and blessed them. (Chapters 63 and 64, Vāmana Purāṇa).

CITRĀNGI. Daughter of Bhadrāśrēṇya, a king of Hēhaya. She was the wife of Durmāda. (See under Durmāda).

CITRAPUSPĀ. A garden where peculiar kinds of flowers grow. This garden is on the higher planes of Mount Śuṅkaśa to the west of Dvārakā. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

1) Birth. Citraratha was the gandharva son of Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife Muni. (Śloka 43, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva).
2) Citraratha and Arjuna. The greatest event in the life of Citraratha alias Aṅgārāparāṇa was the defeat he suffered at the hands of Arjuna. The Pāṇḍavas after their escape from the lac palace (Lakṣaṇgrha) through a tunnel arrived in a forest and there they killed the demons Hījīmba and Baka. One night they were walking along the shores of the river Gaṅgā when they heard a sound of somebody bathing in the river. Arjuna, who was walking ahead waving a country torch went to see who was bathing at that time of the night. Arjuna then saw Citraratha enjoying a bath with his wife Kumbhinasi. That period of the night was allotted to the gandharvas, and human beings were not expected to be out walking at that time. Citraratha felt it impertinent that Arjuna a human being should be out walking at night and peep into the privacy of the gandharvas. The gandharva and Arjuna so entered into a combat. Citraratha who was a great fighter was, after a grim battle, subdued, bound hand and foot, and brought before his brothers by Arjuna. Kumbhinasi followed her exhausted, powerless and spiritless husband and pleaded to Dharmacatur to release him. Dharmacurta advised Arjuna to do so and on getting his release he taught Arjuna the famous Cākṣusāvidyā—the magic art of seeing by one's own eyes anything and everything in the three worlds : Heaven, Earth and the netherworld. Manu was the author of this magic art and from him Soma learnt it and from Soma Viśvāvasu, from Viśvāvasu, Citraratha and from Citraratha, Arjuna. Besides this Citraratha gave Arjuna many chariots and horses.

In return Arjuna taught him the secret of the missile Aṇīśvara. Exchanging faith and affection thus Citraratha and the Pāṇḍavas became friends. He then narrated to the Pāṇḍavas many interesting stories, of which the following are a few. The story of the feud between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra, story of Tapātāsanaśrāvaṇa and tales about the sage Pāraśāra, Kamāñjana, Adrśyantī, Bhārgavas, Kapravīrya and Aurvā. Citraratha advised the Pāṇḍavas to have a priest for the sacrificial rites and it was thus that they engaged Dhaumya as their family priest.

Since Arjuna had destroyed all the chariots belonging to Citraratha, the latter got a name ‘Bhagnaratha’ (devoid of chariots). Citraratha admitted that Arjuna could conquer him because of his vow of celibacy. (Chapters 165 to 183, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

3) Other details.
1) Citraratha attended one of the birthday festivals of Arjuna. (Śloka 52, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva, M.B.).
2) Citraratha worshipped Kubera sitting in the latter's council. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Śloka 26).
3) He offered as a gift to Dharmacurta four hundred excellent horses which could fly like wind. (Chapter 52, Śloka 23, Vana Parva).
4) When the gandharvas milked the earth during the time of the emperor, Prthu, Citraratha acted as the calf. (Śloka 39, Chapter 6, Harivamsa).
5) Siva once sent Citraratha as a messenger to Asura Sāṁkhaścūḍa, with a message that Sāṁkhaścūḍa should abandon his satanic activities. (Devi Bhāgavata, Navāma Skandha).

CITRARATHA II. One of the ministers of Daśaratha. He belonged to the Sūta dynasty. (Śloka 17, Ayodhyā Kaṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

CITRARATHA III. A king of Sālva. Once Reṇukā, wife of Jamadagni, after her bath in the river stayed ashoring watching this king and his queen bathe in the river with erotic plays. Reṇukā thus reached the āśrama a bit late and Jamadagni enraged at this commanded his son Pāraisurāma to chop the head of his own mother. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 59).

CITRARATHA IV. A king of the dynasty of Bharata. He was the son of King Gaya. Citraratha had a sister named Sugāti and a brother Avarodhāna. (Pañcama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

CITRARATHA V. A prince of Pāścāla. He was killed in the battle of Mahābhārata by Droṇācārya. (Śloka 43, Chapter 122, Droṇa Parva).

CITRARATHA VI. A king of the Aṅga country. He married Prahlādāvatī, sister of Ruci, wife of Devasārmā. (Śloka 8, Chapter 42, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

CITRARATHA VII. A king of the Yādava dynasty. He was the son of Uśāṅku and father of Sūra. (Śloka 29, Chapter 147, Anuśāsana Parva).

CITRARATHA VIII. Son of Virābāhu and a friend of Śrī Rāma. In the Rāja Kaṇḍa of Ānanda Rāmāyaṇa there is the following story about him. Citraratha was also one among those assembled for the swayānvara of Hemā, daughter of Kuṣa. He sent an anaesthetic missile to the assemblage and made them all fall down senseless. He then took Hemā out from the marriage hall. But on reaching outside he felt he had done a very unjust thing and so withdrew the missile and stood outside ready to fight. A fight ensued in which Citraratha defeated all. But Lava alone continued to fight with him. Virābāhu, father of Citraratha, who was closely watching the fight came to the help of Citraratha and engaging Lava in a fight struck him down. Kuṣa seeing this attacked Virābāhu and bound him hand and foot. At that time Śrī Rāma came to the scene and told Kuṣa that Virābāhu was a friend of his and set Virābāhu free. Hemā was then married to Citraratha and Virābāhu was sent away with due respect.

CITRARATHA. An Indian river of purāṇic fame. (Chapter 9, Bhāṣma Parva, M.B.).

CITRARŪPA. An attendant of Śiva. When by a curse of Mahāviṣṇu Mahālakṣmī was changed into a mare, it was through this attendant that Śiva sent a message to Viṣṇu. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).
CITRASENA. (SARASANA, CITRACAPA). One of the sons of Dhanaradha. In the great battle he was killed by Bhimasena. (Sloka 20, Chapter 136, Droṇa Parva).

CITRASENA I. A gandharva. There is reference to this gandharva in many places in the purāṇas. He had two wives Sandhyāvalī and Ratnāvalī.
1) How Arjuna saved him. Once when Citrasena with his wives was travelling in the aerial car the spittings of Citrasena fell upon the sage Gālava who was doing his sandhyā rites then. The sage complained about the incident to Śrī Kṛṣṇa who promised to bring him the head of Citrasena before sun-set. Sage Nārada informed Citrasena of this vow of Kṛṣṇa. The gandharva was taken aback and did not know what to do. But Sandhyāvali and Ratnāvali went and sought the help of Subhadrā. They made a fire pit in front of her house and decided to end their lives along with Citrasena by jumping into the fire. While Citrasena was circling the fire-pit before jumping into it his wives wept loudly and hearing the noise Subhadrā came out and saw what was happening. They then took from Subhadrā a boon to the effect that they should be allowed to live with their husband. It was only after granting them the boon that Subhadrā understood the whole situation. Subhadrā was in a fix but Arjuna assured her that Citrasena would be protected at any cost. Arjuna very cleverly shielded all the arrows sent against the gandharva by Kṛṣṇa and gradually the fight came to be one between Arjuna and Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Subhadrā came between them and it was found difficult to continue the fight. Śrī Kṛṣṇa advised Citrasena to bow down and touch the feet of Gālava. Citrasena obeyed and the issue settled without harm to both the parties.
2) Arjuna defeats Citrasena. While the Pāṇḍavas were in exile, Duryodhana knew through a spy that they were camping in the Dvaitavana forest. Prompted by Karna Duryodhana programmed to go to Dvaitavana with his retinue to enjoy the sight of the suffering Pāṇḍavas. So they started to the forests under a pretext of an annual stock-taking of the cows. They reached Dvaitavana with a huge army. There they split into parties and roamed about making merry by themselves. Soon one of the parties reached a pond near the hermitage of the Pāṇḍavas. They saw a few gandharvas making merry in the pond. With the usual hautiness they commanded the gandharvas to leave the pond and make room for Duryodhana to come and bathe. The gandharvas did not pay heed to their words and on being informed of this Duryodhana went to fight with the gandharvas. It was Citrasena who led the gandharvas and by his incessant shower of piercing arrows split the Kaurava forces and made them flee for life. Duryodhana was isolated from his army, was bound hand and foot and taken a prisoner. In their sheer helplessness they approached Dharmaśutu in his hermitage and acquainted him with the pitiable plight of Duryodhana. Dharmasūtra asked Arjuna to go to the help of the Kauravas. Arjuna faced Citrasena in a grim combat. Citrasena then appeared in his real form and Arjuna knew that he was fighting a friend. Then at the request of Arjuna Citraratha released Duryodhana. (Chapters 239 to 243, Vana Parva).

3) Other details. 1) This gandharva occupied a seat in the court of Yudhiśthira along with twentyseven other gandharvas and a few Apsārā maidens. (Sloka 32, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).
2) Citrasena is a member of the court of Kubera also. (Sloka 26, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).
3) Citrasena used to attend the court of Indra also at times. (Sloka 22, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva).
4) At the invitation of Indra Arjuna went to devaloka and Citrasena taught him dance and music. It was during this visit that Arjuna threw a cold blanket on the amorous approaches of Urvāśī and was consequently cursed by her to be an eunuch. It was through Citrasena that Indra sent word to Urvāśī to console Arjuna and give relief from the curse. (Chapters 45 and 46, Vana Parva).

CITRASENA II (UGRASENA). One of the hundred sons of Dhanaradha. He was known as Śrīmadha. (Sloka 3, Chapter 136, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

CITRASENA III. A prince of the Puru line, son of Parikṣit and grandson of Aśvatthama. (Sloka 54, Chapter 94, Ādi Parva).

CITRASENA IV. A minister of Jarāsandha. He was known as Śrīmadha also. (Sloka 32, Chapter 22, Sabhā Parva).

CITRASENA V. A king of the country of Abhisāra. He fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pāṇḍavas and was killed by Śrutakarmā. (Sloka 14, Chapter 14, Karna Parva).

CITRASENA VI. (SRUTASENA). Brother of Śrīmadha. (Sloka 14, Chapter 14, Karna Parva).

CITRASENA VII. A warrior of Pāṇḍāla. Karna killed him in the great battle. (Sloka 15, Chapter 40, Karna Parva).

CITRASENA VIII. A son of Karna. Nakula killed him in the great battle. (Sālya Parva, Chapter 10).

CITRASENA IX. A brother of Karna. In the great battle Yudhāmanu killed him. (Sloka 39, Chapter 83, Karna Parva).

CITRASENA X. One of the kings on the sea-shore. Along with his son he fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas and was killed by Śamudrasena. (Sloka 16, Chapter 6, Karna Parva).

CITRASENA XI. A serpent. This serpent joined hands with Arjuna during the Kṛṣṇarāja battle. (Sloka 43, Chapter 87, Karna Parva).

CITRASENA XII. A king of the dynasty of Vaivasvatanu. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

CITRASENA XIII. A Mahārāja who obtained salvation by observing the Aṣṭamūrthi Vrata. This king was a great sinner having committed such sins as Agamyāgamanā (Incest), Brahmavāpāharanā (stealing things belonging to Brahmā), Sūrāpāna (drinking) and Prānihīnas (causing injury to living beings). One day while hunting he followed a tiger and at dusk exhausted with thirst and hunger he reached the banks. of the river Yamunā. It was the day of Āṇiṣamīroхи Hussaini and many maidens were observing the Āṇiṣamīroхи Hussaini Vṛata there. Before them was a heap of rice and other eatables which was given as an offering to Kṛṣṇa and seeing the lot the King begged for something to eat and drink. The maidens replied that it was a sin to take food on that day of Vṛata and then there came a change in the mind of the King and he readily agreed to observe the Āṇiṣamīroхи Hussaini vṛata and did so. Because of this when the king died, though a great sinner he was, he was taken to heaven by the servants of Viṣṇu. This story was told by Vasiṣṭha to Dīlīpa to impress upon him the greatness of observing the Āṇiṣamīroхи Hussaini Vṛata. (Chapter 13, Padma Purāṇa).

CITRASENA I. An Apsaras. This celestial maiden was a dancer in the court of Kubera. (Sloka 10, Chapter 10, Aṣṭādhyāyī Parva). When Arjuna went to the land of Indra this maiden gave a dance in honour of Arjuna. (Sloka 30, Chapter 43, Aṣṭādhyāyī Parva).

CITRASENA II. A prominent river. The people of ancient Bharatā used to drink the water of this river. (Sloka 17, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva)

CITRASENA III. A follower of Subrahmanya. (Sloka 14, Chapter 40, Aṣṭādhyāyī Parva, M.B.)

CITRASENA. A purāṇīc river. The water of this river is used by the Indians for drinking. (Sloka 30, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

CITRASIKHAṆḌI. Saptasris (The seven saints) Marici, Arigiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kṛṣṇa, and Vasiṣṭha. These saints are called by the name Citrasikhaṇḍis also. (Sloka 29, Chapter 336, Śaṅkha Parva).

CITRASILĀ. A purāṇīc river. The water of this river is used by the Indians for drinking. (Sloka 30, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

CITRĀŚVĀ. Another name of Satyavān. He used to make the figure of horses using clay and people therefore gave him this name of Citrāśvaṇ. (Sloka 15, Chapter 294, Aṣṭādhyāyī Parva).

CITRĀVĀḤA. A purāṇīc river of Bhārata. (Sloka 17, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

CITRĀVĀḤANA. A king who ruled Maṇipura during purāṇīc times. (See Citraṅgada).

CITRĀVARMA I. One of the hundred sons of Dhrtaṅgasta. He was killed in the great battle by Bhīmasena. (Chapter 136, Drona Parva, M.B.).

CITRĀVARMA II. A prince of the country of Pāṇḍava. He was the son of a king called Sucitra. He had four brothers: Citraketu, Sudhanvā, Citrarathā, and Viraketu. When Viraketu was killed in the great battle all the brothers attacked Drona who killed them all. (Slokas 43 to 49, Chapter 122, Drona Parva, M.B.)

CITRĀVARMA III. Father of Simantini, wife of King Candrāṅgada. (See Candrāṅgada).

CITRAVEGIKĀ. A serpent of the family of Dhrtaṅgasta. This serpent was burnt to death at the sarpa sattra of Janamejaya. (Sloka 8, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

CITRĀYUDHA I. (CITRABHĀU). One of the hundred sons of Dhrtaṅgasta. He was slain by Bhīmasena in the great battle. (Sloka 20, Chapter 136, Drona Parva).

CITRĀYUDHA II. (DIRDHĀYUDHA). One of the sons of Dhrtaṅgasta. He was slain by Bhīmasena. (Sloka 29, Chapter 137, Drona Parva).

CITRĀYUDHA III. A King of Simhaphanta. During the victory march of the Pāṇḍavas Arjuna conquered this King. (Sloka 20, Chapter 27, Aṣṭādhyāyī Parva).

CITRĀYUDHA IV. A warrior of the state of Cedi. He fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. The horse of this warrior was blood-coloured and his weapons were of a peculiar type. Karna killed him in the great battle. (Chapter 23, Drona Parva and Chapter 56, Karna Parva).

CITRĀPACITRA. One of the hundred sons of Dhrtaṅgasta. In the great battle Bhīmasena killed him. (Sloka 18, Chapter 111, Drona Parva).

CITRĀPALA. A river of purāṇic fame. (Sloka 34, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

CITRĀVASTHĀS. States of the mind. (See under Paṭṭa).

CITRĀYĀLĪ. A holy place in South-India. (See under Agastya).

COLA. A very righteous emperor of Kaṇeṣipura. Because of the virtuous rule of this emperor his country got the name Cola. There is an interesting story in Padma Purāṇa of how the emperor attained Vaikunthaloka (The abode of Mahāviṣṇu).

Once Cola went to Vaikunthā to worship Mahāviṣṇu. As he was worshipping him with pearls and flowers of gold a brahma subject of his came there to worship him with water and Tulasī leaves. The simple offering of Tulasī leaves and flowers by this brahma, Viṣṇu-dāsa, eclipsed the expensive one by the King and the latter was greatly offended and he rebuked the Brahmin saying that he was a poor man who did not know what devotion to Viṣṇu was. But Viṣṇu-dāsa did not take the taunt unchallenged. He asked the king to wait and see who would merge with the glowing entity of the Lord earlier.

The King on returning to his palace started a Vaibhavasattrā. (An almonry dedicated to Mahāviṣṇu). This almonry was as comfortable and luxurious as the one once started by Brahmā in the temple of Gaya. Viṣṇu-dāsa on the other hand spent his life in a Viṣṇu temple leading a celibate life and observing rites pleasing to Viṣṇu.

One day after finishing his daily morning rites Viṣṇu-dāsa cooked his food as usual and kept it in its place to be taken later. But on returning to it after some time he found his food eaten by someone else. He went without food that day and it happened the next day also. It continued to happen thus for a week and all these days Viṣṇu-dāsa went fasting. Viṣṇu-dāsa then decided to watch and see who the thief was. On keeping a vigil he found a Candāla (a harijan of the lowest Cadre) timidly coming and grabbing at the food with gluttonous greed to appease his hunger. Seeing the famished skeleton-like body of the thief Viṣṇu-dāsa felt compassion rather than resentment and calling him back to take the food went after him crying “Hi, come here and take this food also with you. That food has no fat in it.” But the Candāla frightened at the sight of the owner of the food ran away as fast as his legs could carry him, Viṣṇu-dāsa following him. But soon the Candāla fell fainting on the road exhausted and tired. Viṣṇu-dāsa reaching his side started fanning him with his cloth. Very soon the Candāla changed himself into Mahāviṣṇu adorned with Śanikha, Čakra and Gadā and Viṣṇu embracing his devotee took him to Vaikunthā.

Hearing this Cola called Muddala the priest of the Vaibhavasattrā, to his side and lamented “I started this sattra to spite Viṣṇu-dāsa and now he has gone to VAIKŪṬHA. It was due to his true devotion to God that he has attained salvation. What we have done is of no use." So saying he crowned his nephew as King. Even while young he had become an ascetic and as such had no sons. From that time the crowning of the nephew as King became a precedent in Cola. Renouncing the kingdom Cola went to the sacrificial hall and circling the sacrificial fire stood before it and addressing Mukunda said "Oh Viṣṇu, grant me unswerving devotion to you in thought, speech and deed." Repeating these three times the King jumped into the fire. At this Mudgala, the priest, burst into anger and tore off the lock of hair on his head. So even today the descendants of Mudgala do not have hair-locks. Viṣṇu who is always affectionate to his devotees graciously appeared from the sacrificial fire and embraced the King. The King was then taken to Vaikūṭha.

(Chapters 110, 111, Padma Purāṇa.)

COLA (M). The three celebrated kingdoms of South-India of old were Cola, Pândya and Cera. References to these will be found in many places in the Purāṇas and a few are given below:

1) Among those present for the svayanīvara of Rukmīni were the Kings of Cola, Pândya and Keralā.
2) Descending in order from Turvasu were Varga—Gobhānu—Traśāni—Karanḍhama—Maruttā—Dusyantā—Varūṭha—Gāṇḍīra. From Gāṇḍīra were born the people of Keralā, Pândya and Cola.

(Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa.)

3) Arjuna conquered the army of the King of Cola.

(Sloka 21, Chapter 27, Sabhā Parvā.)

4) The King of Cola gave gifts to Dharmaputra.

(Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Sloka 35.)

5) When during the great battle Dhṛṣṭarāṣṭram formed the Kraunḍacayyuha the soldiers from Cola guarded the southern wing. (Sloka 60, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parvā.)

6) Śrī Keśa once conquered the land of Cola.

(Sloka 17, Chapter 11, Droṇa Parvā.)

COURAS. A set of Kṣatriyas who became Śūdras by a curse of the brahmīns.

Pândyas, Kāṇḍivas, Śirākhyas, Lāṭas, Drāviḍas, Keralās, Couras, Darvas, Daradas, Śaunḍis, Sabaras, Arbaras, Kirtās and Yavanas were all Kṣatriyas but were turned into Śūdras by a curse of the brahmīns.

CUCUKA. A low-caste tribe of south India. They were aborigines older than the Mahābhārata in origin.

(Sloka 42, Chapter 207, Śaṅti Parvā.)

CUCUKA (M). A place in ancient south India.

(Sloka 26, Chapter 110, Udyoga Parvā.)

CUDĀKARNA. The character of a Sannyāsī in a tale in Pañcatantra.

CUDALĀ. The saintly wife of King Śīkhidhhava. When once Śīkhidhhava renounced his kingdom and went to the forests, his wife gave him instruction in Ātmajñana and brought him back to his country. (Chapter 77, Yogavāṣiṣṭha.)

CUDĀMA. I. See under Sītā.

CULI. A sage. Once Somadā, daughter of a gandharva women Įurmīlā, looked after this sage and well pleased with her service he asked her what she wanted and Somadā asked for a son by him. Culi gave her a spiritual son of his and the boy was named Brahmadatta. This Brahmadatta married the hundred hunch-backed daughters of Kusānābha. (Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa.)

CULUKA. A river. People of ancient Bhrārata used to drink the water of this river. (Śloka 20, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parvā.)

CUṆCU. A King of the Hehaya line of kings. He was the grandson of Kuhitāśya and son of Hārita. King Vijaya is the son of Cucicu. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 16.)

CURAYKKĀ. While emperor Prthu was ruling the earth it was once transformed into a cow and milked. Each got a different substance and what the Nāgas got was poison. They milked the poison into a pot-like Curaykkā.

CĪṬU. (Dice). It is an imaginative purāṇic assumption that there is a satanic force latent in dice, hunting, wine and women. There is a story to support the presence of this evil power within the above four. Indra once turned the Aśvinīdevas out of his court labelling them as outcasts and banned wine to them. Discontented at this the Aśvinīdevas approached Cyavana and the latter performing a yāga invited the Aśvinīdevas and gave them the yāga wine, ‘Soma’. Infuriated at this Indra raised his celebrated Vajrayuddha (Weapon of thunder) to kill Cyavana. But the sage by his yogic powers paralysed the hands of Indra and instantly from the sacrificial fire there arose Māda a genie to kill Indra. Frightened by this sight Indra fell at the feet of Cyavana and craved for pardon. The sage then tore the genie into four pieces and threw one each into dice, hunting, wine and women. That is why all the four are as alluring as destructive. (Saptama Śkandha, Devī Bhāgavata.)

CYAVANA. A celebrated sage of the Bhārgava dynasty.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Brahmā—Bhrigu—Cyavana.
2) Birth. Bhrigu is the son of Brahmā born at the Brahmajāla conducted by Varuṇa. The beautiful and virtuous lady Puloma was the wife of Bhrigu. Even before Bhrigu married her she was being loved by the demon Puloma and her marriage with Bhrigu embittered him and he waited for an opportunity to kidnap Puloma. One day when Bhrigu went to the river for his bath Puloma entered the āśrama and there he found his love Puloma being watched over by Agni. Puloma compelled Agni to tell him the truth whether Bhrigu had married Puloma according to the rites enjoined by the scriptures. Agni confessed that it was not so and then Puloma taking the shape of a hog carried away Puloma who was then in a stage of advanced pregnancy. On the way the wife of the sage delivered and the babe dropped to the ground. Because the babe was born with a fall (Cyavana) from the womb the boy was named Cyavana. The radiance of the boy burnt the demon into ashes. Puloma weeping profusely with tears rolling down her cheeks returned to the āśrama. Her tears ran into a river and the river got the name Vadhūsāra Bhrigu on knowing how all happened cursed Agni saying that Agni would thereafter be an all-round eater, (eating anything and everything). (Chapters 5 and 6, Adi Parvā.)

3) Penance and marriage. Even when he was very young Cyavana commenced practising austerities. He went to the forests and sat in meditation without food or sleep, oblivious to what happened outside. Years went by and Cyavana did not stir from his place. Gradually earth began to cover him and soon he was completely enveloped by earth. Creepers grew on it and birds made rests; Cyavana did not know anything about it.
One day Śaryāti with his wives and children came to that forest for a picnic. Sukanyā, daughter of King Śaryāti, along with her companions separated from the King and roamed about in the forest making merry. They soon came to the place where Cyavana sat doing penance. There was an unusual radiance around the heap of earth they saw there and Sukanyā out of curiosity started striking down the earth. Then from inside came Cyavana’s voice advising her not to crumble down the earth as she was doing. Sukanyā ignored the advice and searched for the source of the voice. She then saw two points of glow and taking a thorn gave two pricks at those points and left the place with her companions.

Those glow-points were the eyes of Cyavana and Cyavana felt insufferable pain when his eyes were thus pierced through. But he neither became angry nor cursed the girl who did this havoc. Cyavana went on with his penance. But soon the country of Śaryāti began to experience the bad effects of this evil-deed. People one by one in the beginning and then the whole lot were disabled from passing either urine or faeces. From men and women the disease spread to the animals also. The country was in a chaos and the subjects flocked to the palace to complain to the King. Śaryāti knew that somebody must have in a some way tormented Cyavana and enquired of each and everyone of his subjects. Whether anybody had knowingly or unknowingly given pain to Cyavana. Nobody had done so and the King was worried. Then Sukanyā ran to her father and confessed what she had done. The King ran immediately to the place where Cyavana was doing penance and striking down the earth prostrated before the sage who was sitting there sad and miserable. The King apologised to Cyavana and requested him to pardon his daughter.

Cyavana then told the King that it was enough if he gave his daughter in marriage to him in expiation of the harm done. The King was shocked to hear this for Cyavana was not only ugly but now blind also. The King returned to the palace sad and worried and there was gloom over the whole palace. But Sukanyā approached her father and agreed to be the wife of Cyavana. The problem was solved and the King with great satisfaction took his daughter to the forests and gave her in marriage to Cyavana.

4) Cyavana attains eternal youth. It was the time when Indra had banned Somapāna (drinking of the yāga wine) to the Asvīnīdevas. Discontented at this they roamed about in the forests and soon came to the neighbourhood of the āśrama of Cyavana.

Sukanyā after becoming the wife of Cyavana did all she could to make her husband comfortable and happy. She would collect very sweet and tasty fruit from the forests and give him. She would bathe him in hot water. After arranging all the materials needed for the morning rites like yava, sesame, darbha and water, she would take her husband to the place of the pūjā leading him by hand. When the morning pūjā was over she would seat him in a suitable place and give him rice and fruits. After the meals she would give him pan to chew. Only after doing all these she go to do her daily rites and that too only after obtaining her husband’s permission. She would finish her routine in no time to come back to her husband to see whether he was in need of anything. Then she would make arrangements for the evening pūjā and after the pūjā was over she would give him his dinner. She would eat only what was left by her husband. At night she would spread a soft bedding and lull him to sleep. Then she would take a nap lying at the foot of her husband. During summer she would fan him and during winter she would make fire to give him heat. Early morning she would take him to a distant place for his excretion and after washing him would seat him in a suitable place for cleaning his teeth and face. Then the routine would start with great devotion again.

One day Sukanyā was returning from the river after her bath and on the way she came across the Asvīnīdevas. They were astounded to see such a beautiful damsels in the forest and they accosted her and requested her to select one of them as her husband. Knowing her identity they advised her to forsake her old and blind husband and come and live with one of them. She flew into a fury when she heard her husband spoken of so slightly and by logical argument convinced them the error of their request. Then they told her thus: “You are aware we are the physicians of the devas. We can give back eyesight to your husband and make him as beautiful as one of us. We will then appear before you as threes lovely young men identical in appearance and then you must select one among the three as your husband.”

Sukanyā was immensely pleased as well as surprised to hear the offer and was eager to see her husband young and beautiful. But the last condition frightened her. Anyhow she promised to give a reply after consulting her husband and ran to the āśrama to tell her husband the news. Cyavana advised her to accept the offer of the Asvīnīdevas and Sukanyā ran back to the Asvīnīdevas and brought them to her husband accepting their terms. The Asvīnīdevas took the aged and blind Cyavana along with them to the river nearby and the three plunged into the river. When they rose up after a dip the three emerged as young, lovely and charming triplets difficult to be distinguished from one another. When Sukanyā stood before the three to select her real husband she prayed to her goddess and the Devī gave her the power to identify Cyavana and so she correctly chose him from the three.

(Saptama Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata.)

5) Cyavana defeated Indra. Immensely pleased at regaining his eyesight and youth Cyavana asked the Asvīnīdevas what they wanted. The Asvīnīdevas replied that Indra had banned wine to them and they would like to have the ban lifted. Cyavana Maharṣi immediately commenced a Somayāga to which were invited all the devas and the Asvīnīdevas also. When Indra saw the Asvīnīdevas standing to partake of the Soma wine he was furious and objected to the wine being given to them. Cyavana dissented and a fight ensued between Indra and Cyavana. Indra raised his weapon ‘Vajrāyuṇḍa’ to strike at Cyavana and then Cyavana made all his limbs go stiff. He then raised from the sacrificial fire a fiendish demon called Māda to kill the devas. All those present were frightened by this demon and they ran away. But Indra could not run for his limbs were stiff. Standing there he prayed to his preceptor Brhaspati for help and Brhaspati advised Indra to surrender to Cyavana. Indra bowed his head before Cyavana and prayed to be excused. Cyavana was pleased and withdrawing the demon tore him into four pieces and threw one each into Dice, Hunting, Wine and Women. The devas and Asvīnīdevas then went back to heaven. (Saptama Skandha, Devī Dadhica (M). A holy place in Kurukṣetra. Aśīgiras the son of Sarasvatī was born in this place. From that day onwards this place became a holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 186 that he who bathes in this holy place will that he was made of the essentials of the world, with a huge body.

2) The birth of the hermit Sarasvatī. Dadhica erected his hermitage on the bank of the river Sarasvatī and began to do penance. The power of penance increased daily. Seeing this Indra was flurried. So he sent the celestial maid Alāniṃyas ā to break the penance of Dadhica somehow or other. Alāniṃyas came to the hermitage of Dadhica and began to dance and sing. When the hermit saw her he grew lustful and seminal discharge occurred to him. The semen fell in the river Sarasvatī, who became pregnant and in due course gave birth to a child. She took the child to the hermit Dadhica and told him the story of the child. The hermit was much pleased. He took the child and embraced it and blessed the river Sarasvatī thus:—

"Brahmā, the gods and the celestial maids will be pleased if your water is offered as oblation."

Dadhica then said that the child should be named Sarasvatī. He also added that when there was a drought continuously for twelve years, Sarasvatī would have the power to bring rain. Then Sarasvatī took the child to her abode and brought it up.

3) How he destroyed the asuras with the head of a horse. Once Dadhica went to the world of the devas (gods). From there he looked down and saw the earth filled with the asuras. Indra went to destroy them. But he could not. So he made a search for anything left behind by Dadhica. He understood that Dadhica had with him the head of a horse. It was found in a lake in the country of Saranyā. With the bones taken from that head Indra and Dadhica destroyed a large number of asuras. (Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 13, Sūkta 84).

4) The weapon (Vajra) of Indra was made from a bone. A story occurs in the Mahābhārata, which says that the diamond-weapon of Indra was made of a bone of Dadhica. The asuras went to fight with Indra under the leadership of Vṛtrāsura. Indra tried his utmost to kill Vṛtrāsura, but he could not. At last Indra approached Brahmā, who told Indra that if a bone of the hermit, called Dadhica was obtained it could effectively be used against Vṛtra. Accordingly Indra went with Nara and Nārāyaṇa to the banks of the river Sarasvatī and entered the hermitage and bowed before the shining hermit Dadhica and informed him of their errand. The hermit replied that he had no objection in giving his bone to save the gods. Saying thus the hermit discarded his life. Indra took the bone of Dadhica and made his weapon of Diamond (Vajra) with which he killed Vṛtra and his followers. (Mahābhārata, Chapter 100).

5) Other information

1) At the sacrifice of Dakṣa, Dadhica got angry because Śiva was not given his dues of the sacrifice. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 284).

2) Once Dadhica talked to a Brāhmaṇa called Karuṇa about the importance of the ashes dedicated to Śiva. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 101).

3) See Dhananjāya V to know how this hermit gave absolution from curse to a fly.

Dadhica (Dadhic̣i). A holy place in Kurukṣetra. Aśīgiras the son of Sarasvatī was born in this place. From that day onwards this place became a holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 186 that he who bathes in this holy place will obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice Aśvamedha, and enter the world of Sarasvatī.

DADHIMAȘODAKA. An ocean. This ocean is near the ocean Gṛhotra samudra (Mahābhārata, Bṛhma Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 2).

DADHIUMUKHA I. A famous serpent, born to Kaśyapa prajāpati by his wife Kadrū. (Mahābhārata, Ađi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 8).

DADHIUMUKHA II. A famous monkey. This old monkey was the general of a huge monkey-army. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 283, Stanza 7 that this general approached Śri Rāma once, with his army.

DADHYĀVĀNA. An ancient king of Bhārata. The hermit Gauṭama saved the son of this King from the attack of Paraśurāma (Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 49, Stanza 3).

DADHYĀVAKTRA. A monkey who helped Śri Rāma. It is seen in Adhyāyama Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Sarga 5, as follows:—

“Dadhimukhaḥ Kruddhasugrivasasya mātulaḥ”. From this it is understood that Dadhimukha or Dadhyāvakra was the uncle of Sugrīva. (For further information see Madhvavana).

DADHYĀṆ. A hermit. Indra once Indra taught this hermit Madhuvidyā (the art of mead) Indra told the hermit that his head would be cut off if he taught anybody this art. The Āśvinidevas approached Dadhyān to learn this art. Fearing Indra the hermit refused to teach them the art. Āśvinidevas cut off his head and buried it in a place. Then they cut off the head of a horse and fixed it on the neck of Dadhyān. Having the head of the horse he taught the art to the Āśvinidevas. When Dadhyān had finished teaching, they took away the head of the horse and fixed his own head in place. (Rgveda, Manualready 1, Anuvāka, 17, Sūkta 166).

DAHA I. One of the eleven Rudras. He was the grand-son of Brahmā and the son of Śtīhātu. (Mahābhārata, Ađi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 3).

DAHA II. An attendant given to Subrahmānya by Ashā, a god. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 34).

DHADHA. An attendant of Subrahmānya. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 20).

DAHATI. A warrior given to Subrahmānya by god Ashā. Mention is made about this warrior in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 34.

DAIVÁ I. Almighty God. (See Tēvāra).

DAIVÁ II. A kind of marriage. The form of marriage by which one gives his daughter to a priest. (See Vivāha).

DAIVÁLĪKA. A country. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 18, that the King and the people of Daivālīka were present on the occasion of the sacrifice of Rājasīya (imperial consecration) of Yudhishṭhira.

DAIVASAMPATI. The virtues of those who are born of a noble family.

"He Bhārata f Security, knowledge of tattvas the desire to attain harmony with the Supreme Being by the knowledge of Brahmā, alms-giving, self-restraint, performing sacrifice, self-study, penance, sincerity, truth, liberality, continuence, kindness, mildness, modesty, resolution, cleanliness, forgiveness, brightness, abstaining from committing murder and getting angry, having no malignity, covetousness, fickleness and pride and not injuring others are the Daivasampati or good qualities of a noble man." (M.B. Bṛhma Parva, Chapter 40).

DAITYADĪPA. One of the sons of Garuḍa. Mention is made about Daityadīpa in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 11.

DAITYASENA. Sister of Devasena, the wife of Subrahmānya. Keśi, an asura, married her. (For detailed story, see Devasena).

DAKINI. A class of women supposed to be proficient in magic and the performance of feats with the help of mantras. (See Kaśurāka).

DAKSHA.

1) Two Dakṣas. In most of the Purāṇas references about two Dakṣas occur. In some purāṇas both are referred to as one and the same person, whereas in some others both are considered as separate persons, so much so the stories concerning both are interlocked and entangled very often. The fact is that there was only one Dakṣa, whose life was of two stages. The first Dakṣa was killed at the sacrifice of Dakṣa, at which point, ends the first stage, or the first Dakṣa. The second stage was the rebirth of the same Dakṣa. A short biography of Dakṣa including both stages is given below:—

Brahmā created by his mind, the seven great hermits, Mārīcī, Ānirūṇā, Atri, Pulasta, Vasiṣṭha, Pulaha and Kratu. So these seven hermits are called the Mānasputras (sons born from mind) of Brahmā. After this, from the anger of Brahmā, Rudra was born, and from his lap Narada, from his right thumb Dākṣa, from his mind the Sanakas and from his left thumb a daughter named Viraṇī were born.

From this passage which occurs in Kaṇḍika Purāṇa it may be assumed that 'Asīkni' was another name of Viraṇī. Dakṣa did penance in the mountain of Vindhyā for a long time. It is mentioned in Bhāṣāvata, Skanda 8, that Mahāviṣṇu appeared before Dakṣa and gave him Asīkni as his wife. Several sons were born to Dakṣa by his wife Asīkni. The last one was a daughter named Sātī who became the wife of Śiva. At this time Dakṣa performed a sacrifice. As he was not invited to that sacrifice, Śiva sent Virābhadrā and Bhadrakālī and killed Dakṣa. Though the devas put the head of a goat in place of the lost head and brought Dakṣa to life again, no reference is made about the life of Dakṣa after the sacrifice. Thus the first stage of the life of Dakṣa ends. (Devī Bhāṣāvata, Skanda 7).

After this, once the Pracetases (the ten sons of Barhiṣ) were engaged in penance and the earth was not properly cultivated in consequence of which big trees
Dakṣa grew up and the whole of the earth was changed into a big forest. The sky was covered with tree tops. It was difficult even for the wind to pass through them and thus the forest thrived for ten thousand years. The pracetases got out of the sea after penance and entered the shore. When they saw the big forest they got angry and the ten of them discharged fire and wind from their faces. The wind up-rooted the trees and the fire dried them. Thus almost the whole of the trees were consumed. Then Candra, the King of the medicinal herbs came there and told the Pracetases “Oh, Kings, hold your anger. I will make the trees conclude a treaty with you. The beautiful Mārīṣa who was born to the trees is my foster-daughter. I give her to you as your wife. From half the portion of your minds and half the portion of my mind the great and wise prajāpāti Dakṣa is going to take birth in her womb”. The Pracetases controlled their anger and accepted Mārīṣa as their wife, at the words of Somadeva (Candra) and as the son of the ten pracetases the Prajāpāti Dakṣa was born. With this the second stage of the life of Dakṣa begins. The important occurrences in the two stages of the life of Dakṣa are given below in their order.

2) Dakṣa’s creation of the Brajūs or subjects. Once Brahmā called Dakṣa and ordered him to create Brajūs or subjects. Accordingly Dakṣa created the gods, the hermits, the Gandharvas (Demi-gods), the Asuras, the serpents etc. Seeing that the subjects he created were not proliferating as required he thought of creating subjects by coition of male and female; and he begot by his wife Asiknī five thousand sons, and they were called Haryāvas. They in their turn were about to create subjects when Nārada appeared before them and said “Oh, Haryāvas, you are mere children and ignorant of the secrets of this world. How do you intend to create subjects? You fools, since you have the power to go up and down and lengthwise and breadthwise, why don’t you try to find out the extremities of the earth?” Hearing the words of Nārada, they all ran in different directions and have not returned since. Thus Dakṣa lost the Haryāvas. Dakṣa again begot thousand sons by Asiknī and they were called Sabālaṇās. Seeing that they were also about to create subjects Nārada scattered them also, by some tricks. The Sabālaṇās who had gone to see the end of the earth have not yet returned.

Dakṣa got angry with Nārada and cursed him thus: “You also, like my children shall wander from place to place to place all over the earth”. From that dry onwards Nārada became a wanderer, without a fixed dwelling. The wise Prajāpāti Dakṣa again begot sixty damsels by Asiknī. Ten of the girls were given to Dharmadeva, thirteen of them to Kaśyapa, twentyseven of them to Soma, and four of them to Ārīṣṭanemi. Of the rest two were given to Bāhuputra, two to Āṅgiras and two to the wise Kṛṣṇa. The names of the wives of each are given below:—

1) Kaśyapa. Aditi, Diti, Danu, Ārīṣṭa, Surasā, Khasā, Surabhi, Vinatā, Tāmār, Krodhavaśa, Irā, Kadrū, Muni.

3) Soma. Aśvayuk, Bharani, Kṛṣṭikā, Rohini, Mrgaśiras, Tārakam (Ardrā), Purnavasū, Puṣyam, Āśleṣam, Janakam, Pañgūni, Uttarāḥgumā, Hastam, Gītrā, Svātī, Viṣākham, Anurādhā, Jyeṣṭhā, Mūlam, Purvāśādh, Uttarāśādh, Sroṇa, Śravijāṭi, Pracetas, Purvapraṣṭhapadām, Uttarapraṣṭhapadām, Revatī. The names of the damsels given to Āṅgiras, Ārīṣṭanemi, Bāhuputra and Kṛṣṇa are not mentioned.

Besides these damsels, twenty-four daughters were born to Dakṣa of his wife Prasūti who was the sister of Utānāpāda. Dharmadeva married thirteen of them also, named Sraddhā, Lakṣmī, Dhrī, Tuṣṭi, Medhā, Puṣṭi, Kriyā, Buddhī, Lajā, Vapus, Sānti, Siddhī, Kirtī. Of the rest, Khyāti was given to Bṛgu, Sati to Śiva, Saṁbhuti to Ātri, Smṛti to Āṅgiras, Priti to Pulastya, Kṣamā to Pulaha, Santati to Kṛatu, Anasūyā to Ātri, Urjā to Vaṣisṭha, Śvāhā to Agnideva and Śvadhi to the Manes. (Viśṇu Purāṇa, Arīsa 1, Chapter 15).

3) Sacrifice of Dakṣa. Once Dakṣa performed a sacrifice called Brhaspativasana. To this sacrifice he did not invite his daughter Sati or her husband Śiva. Dakṣa did not invite them because of three reasons according to the Purāṇas.

1) Once Durvāsas, the son of Ātri, went to Jambūnāda and meditated with the mantra or spell of ‘Māyābijā’ and worshipped Jagadambikā (mother of the world) the goddess there. The goddess was much pleased and gave him as a token of her pleasure the garland of flowers she wore from which nectar was oozing. Durvāsas wore it on his head and went to the palace of Dakṣa, the Prajāpāti. When he saw such a wonderful garland which was not of this world, he wanted to have it and Durvāsas instantly gave it to Dakṣa. He placed it in a prominent place in his bedroom and enjoying the wonderful fragrance of it he conjugated with his wife, and polluted that pure garland by his lust. Śiva and his wife came to know of this and they scolded Dakṣa, who kept this bitterness in his heart and when the sacrifice was performed, he decided not to invite them. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

2) Śiva was considered as a polluted man by Dakṣa as he had always been carrying with him the skull of Brahmā and so he thought it wrong on his part to admit his daughter and son-in-law to the sacrificial hall. The story of how Śiva came to have the skull, is given below. In days of old when the whole world was under the single ocean (of the great flood) the sun, the moon, the fire, air everything was destroyed and darkness prevailed. All the vegetables were destroyed. All the emotions and non-emotions disappeared. The supreme Lord was sleeping for so many thousands of nights together. At the end of the night he assumed the attribute of ‘Rajoguna’ (activity) and got ready to create the universe. From the face of the Supreme Lord and creator of the universes came out Brahmā with five faces. In the same way, Śiva with three eyes and matted hair, and trident and rosary of heads (Elaeo caprus) and with attribute of ‘Tamas’ (darkness—destruction) also came out. Both Brahmā and Śiva were filled with egoism and both began to quarrel with each other. It was a contest as to who was greater. The contest ended in attack. Śiva plucked off the fifth head of Brahmā, when the same face, flushed with anger, scolded Śiva. The head fell into the hands of Śiva, who could not throw it down as it didn’t come off from his hand. Brahmā cursed Śiva and made him polluted. Since Śiva became polluted, his wife Sati also was considered as polluted by Daksha. (Vaman Purana, Chapter 2).

(3) Once the prajapatis performed a sacrifice. Brahma, Visnu and Siva were present there. Daksha, who had been invited by the prajapatis also was present. When Daksha entered the hall his son-in-law Siva did not rise up. This arrogance of Siva made Daksha angry. Daksha made up his mind to take vengeance on Siva, and performed a sacrifice known as Bhapatisavan. To that sacrifice he did not invite Siva or Sati.

Hearing that her father was conducting a sacrifice Sati came uninvited. But Daksha did not even look at her. Sati Devi whose heart was broken at this treatment made a fire and jumped into it and died. Siva became furious when he came to know of this. Being overwhelmed with sorrow and anger he beat his matted hair on the ground, from which two monsters, Virabhadra and Bhadra-kali, came out. They ran to Daksha's sacrificial hall and destroyed everything they saw, killed everybody, caught hold of Daksha and cut off his head. Then they began to create havoc in the whole world. The hermits and sages began to take to flight. Men and animals shivered. Thus the three worlds began to tremble with fear. The gods approached Siva with supplication to curb his anger. The gracious Sanka was pleased to recall the monsters. After that everybody requested him to bring Daksha back to life. But the search made for the head of Daksha was futile. At last Brahma took the head of a goat and joined it to the headless trunk of Daksha. Thus he was brought to life again. (Devi Bhagavata, Skandha 7).

4) Cursing Candra. Candra had married twenty-seven daughters of Daksha. But he showed particular attachment to Rohini. The other twenty-six wives could not bear this. They made a complaint to their father Daksha. Daksha called Candra and advised him to show equal attachment to all his wives and not to show any partiality to anyone. Candra did not gainsay his father-in-law, but he did not make any change in his disposition. After a few days all the daughters except Rohini went to the palace of Daksha and told him that they were going to stay with him. This time Daksha got angry and called Candra and cursed him to become a sick man (of consumption).

From that day onwards Candra became a patient afflicted with consumption. All the vegetations in the world began to weaken. It appeared that the world was about to be destroyed. So the gods approached Daksha and requested him to show some leniency towards Candra. Daksha accordingly called Candra and told him that he would be affected by consumption only for a fortnight and after that he would recover gradually. Candra went to Prabhaha tirtha and Sarasvatii tirtha and dipped in water. He began to recover from that day. It is according to the curse of Daksha that Candra (Moon) waxes and wanes. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 35).

5) Other information.

(1) Daksha has another name 'Kan'. Daksha the Prajapati is a son of ten fathers. He has two names. They are Daksha and Kan. (M.B. Sanyi Parva, Chapter 206, Stanza 7).

(2) When the emperor Prthu milked the earth, Daksha was crowned as the King of the subjects. (See under Prthu).

(3) It occurs in Mahabharata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 18, that Daksha was a member of the assembly of Brahma.

(4) Daksha was one of those who visited Bhisma in his bed of arrows. (M.B. Sanyi Parva, Chapter 47).

(5) Mention is made in Mahabharata, Sanyi Parva, Chapter 166 that the devas, the manes, the gandharvas, the celestial maids, the Raksasas, animals and birds, fishes and all living creatures were born from the daughters of Daksha.

DAKSHA Savarni. The name of the ninth Manu. During the regime of this Manu, there will be three classes of devas (gods) called the Parpas, the Maricigarbhas and the Sudharmans. Each of these guaras or classes will consist of twelve devas or gods. Indra, their King will be known as Adbhuta. He will be mighty and powerful. In that Manvantara (age of the Manu) Savana, Duytiman, Blavya, Vasu, Medhatithi, Jyothisman and Satya will be the Saptaris (the seven hermits) and Dhraketa, Dipiketa, Panchahasta, Nirayana, Prathurava and others will be the sons of Manu, Daksasavarni. (Visnu Purana, Anish 1, Chapter 2).

DAKSHAYANI. Daughter of Daksha. This name is generally used for all the daughters of Daksha. Occasionally this name is used for the grand daughters of Daksha also.

DAKSHINA. A daughter, born to Prajapati Ruci, by his wife Akuti. The first Manu was Svayambhuva, the son of Brahma. He accepted Satarupa, his sister who became sinless by penance, as his wife. Satarupa gave birth to two sons Piyavata and Uttanapada, and two daughters, Prasuti and Akuti. Of these two daughters, Prasuti was given to Prajapati Daksha and Akuti to Prajapati Ruci. Akuti gave birth to twins, a son named Yajna and a daughter named Dakshina. To Yajna twelve sons were born by Dakshina. They were a class of devas (gods) called the Yamas in the regime of Manu Svayambhuva (Visnu Purana, Anish 1, Chapter 7). Now Dakshina is worshipped as a goddess. The same Dakshina was reborn in the Goloka under the name Susila. At that time she was a cowherd woman and friend of Radha. She liked to talk with Sri Krsna. One day Radha saw her sitting in the lap of Sri Krsna, engaged in sexual sports, in a secluded place. When Susila saw that Radha had found them out, she became dumbfounded with shame, and sat with bowed head. Sri Krsna slowly placed Susila dcvi down and instantly vanished. The angry Radha cursed Susila to become ashes if ever she entered the Goloka again. Then Radha ran about everywhere in search of Sri Krsna, but he could not be found.

Immediately after the curse, Susila got down from the Goloka and began to worship Mahalaakshe with devotion and meditation and very severe fast and vow. After a long time Mahalaakshe appeared to her and blessed her, and Susila became absorbed in Mahalaakshe. Since the absorption of Susila devi, who was the rebirth of Dakshinadevi, in Mahalaakshe, the sacrifice of the devas (gods) became fruitless. They were much grieved. They all went to Brahma to find a solution. As the matter was serious Brahma meditated upon Visnu, who became pleased with Brahmā and to save the devas, he attracted Daksinādevī from the body of Mahālakṣmi and gave her as a present to Brahmā. Brahmā gave that devī (goddess) to Yajjalpuruṣa (the god of sacrifice) so that the sacrifices of gods might become fruitful. When Yajjalipuruṣa saw that supernatural beauty he was overpowered by lust and swooned. The couple spent a hundred divine years in seclusion enjoying the company of each other, as a result of which devī became pregnant. The pregnancy matured in twelve divine years and she gave birth to a child which was named Phalada. It is this same Phalada, the son of Yajjalipuruṣa and Daksinā who awards fruits to all actions. The learned men say that Yajjalipuruṣa, Daksinādevī and Phalada divide the fruits of actions among the doers. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

DĀKSINĀGNI. A strong wind born from the fire Pāñcājanya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 229, Stanza 6).

DĀKSINAKAILĀSA. Kālahasti, Trīsvapoor and Trikonamala are known by the name Daksinakailāsa.

DĀKSITAMALLA. A country in ancient India. This country is called Mallāraja. Its capital was Kuśinagāra or Kuśinara. In Mahābhārata mention is made that Bhumasena, during his conquest brought this country under control. (M.B. Sahā Parva, Chapter 30).

DĀKSINAPĀNCĀLA. A place famous in the Purāṇas. This place lies to the south of the Ganges up to the river Carīpat. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata Sahā Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 27, that the King of this country fled to the south fearing Jarāsandha. Pañcāla lies to the south and north of the Ganges. But the country was divided into two when Droṇa defeated Drupada the King of Pañcāla, and took away from him the part of the country north of the Ganges. After that, the part taken by Droṇa was called Uttarapāncāla and the part south of the Ganges was called Daksinapāncāla. (M.B. Adī Parva, Chapter 137).

DĀKSINASINDHU. A holy place. This place is on the shore of the southern sea. If one visits this place and takes bath there he will get the fruits of performing the sacrifice of Agniṣṭoma, and the opportunity of travelling by the aeroplane of the gods. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 53).

DĀKSINĀTAYAS. The people of South India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 2, that at the time of the composing of the Mahābhārata, the leader of the Daksinātayās was the emperor Bhīṃaka.

DALA. The son of King Parīkṣit of the dynasty of IIkṣvāku. The mother of Dāla was Suśobhanā, the daughter of the King of Manḍūka. Dāla had an elder brother called Śala. Dāla became king when Śala was killed. Hermit Vāmadeva was the priest of this King. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 192). See Parīkṣit II.

DĀLBHYA (BAKAĐĀLBHYA). A Mahārṣi of Naimiṣāranya. In Vāman Purāṇa, there is a story of how this sage once performed a homa and burnt Dhṛtarāṣṭra's kingdom in the sacrificial fire. Long ago some of the sages of Naimiṣāranya approached Dhṛtarāṣṭra with a request for some money. Their leader was the sage Dālbhya (Baka). It was he who begged Dhṛtarāṣṭra for money. The king not only refused to give money, but also insulted the sage. Provoked at this, Dālbhya began performing a homa in which Dhṛtarāṣṭra's kingdom was the havis in the form of sliced meat. This homa was performed in Avākipuramahātīrtha at Pṛthūdaka. As a result of it the kingdom began to decline. The King was alarmed and consulted great scholars and astrologers about the cause of the country's decline. They told him that the cause of the disaster was Dālbhya's homa. Dhṛtarāṣṭra at once proceeded with rich presents to propitiate Dālbhya at Avākṣipuramahātīrtha. Dālbhya was pleased and as desired by the King, performed homa with milk and honey and revived all those who had died. (Vāman Purāṇa, Chapter 39).

Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 11 says that this Mahārṣi flourished in Yudhiṣṭhīra's assembly. On another occasion, he is referred to as coming to Dyumatsena, the father of Satyavān. At that time, he comforted Dyumatsena by saying that Satyavān would be blessed with longevity. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 298, Verse 17).

DĀLBHYAM. A holy place in North India. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 12).

DĀLBHYAGHOṢA. Another name for the holy āśrama, Dālbhyaam.

DAMA I. The brother of Damayanti. No other information about Dama is available in the Purāṇas.

DAMA II. A hermit. He was one of the hermits who came to visit Bhīṃa when he was lying on the bed of arrows. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 4).

DAMA. See Saṁbarā.

DAMA. A female attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 5).

DĀMAGANDRA. A King. He was a mighty hero and a friend of Dharmaputra. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 40).

DĀMAGHOṢA. The father of Śīśupāla, the King of Cedi. (M.B. Adī Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 86).

DAMANA I. A brother of Damayanti. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 8 it is mentioned that King Bhīṃa had a daughter named Damayanti, and three sons named Dama, Dānta and Damana.

DAMANA II. A hermit. Bhīṃa the King of Vīdarbha pleased this hermit, who blessed the King and said that he would get children. Accordingly the king got Damayanti as his daughter and Dama, Dānta and Damana as his sons. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 53).

DAMANA III. The son of the King Paurava. Dhṛṣṭadyumna killed Damana in the battle of Bharata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 20).

DAMANA IV. A son of Bharadvāja. After the investiture with the Brahma string (upanayana) Damana started on a travel. On the way near Amarakaṇṭaka he met with the hermit Garga who talked to him about the glory of Kāśi. Damana who was a seer of spiritual knowledge, stopped his travel and sat down to do penance and thus leaving his body he attained heaven. (Skanda Purāṇa, Chapter 2, 4, 75).

DĀMĀNAKA I. One of characters in a story, of Pañcatantra. (See Mitrabhedam).

DĀMĀNAKA II. A dāitya (asura) Mahāviṣṇu in his incarnation as Matsya (Matsyavatāra), killed this asura who was a dweller of the sea. Viṣṇu threw the body of the asura into the earth. By the touch of the Lord the body became fragrant and it was changed to a plant which is known as (Kozhunnu or Kozhuntu) Damanaka. (Skanda Purāṇa).
DAMANAKAM. The Tātīrī tree (Grislea Tomentosa). The ceremony of worshipping this tree is called Damana-kārohaṇavidhi. The Grislea tree is supposed to be Bhairava, who had been changed to a tree by the curse of Śiva. A story to this effect occurs in the Purāṇas. Bhairava was formed from the anger of Śiva. Bhairava, against the will of Śiva, destroyed the devas, and so Śiva cursed him and turned him to a Tātīrī tree. It is called Damanaka because Bhairava tried to do ‘damana’ (restraint or punishment) to the gods. Bhairava felt sorry at the curse of Śiva. He requested Śiva to withdraw the curse. At last Śiva had pity on him and said that all would worship Damanaka tree. The method of that worship is called Damanakārohaṇavidhi. It is given below:

This tree should be worshipped on the seventh or thirteenth lunar day. The worshipper should go to the tree, with those who recite mantras and spells. After the worship is over the worshipper should say, ‘O, Tree, which has originated by the power of Harishen, come to my presence. On behalf of Śiva, and by his order, I have to take you home.’ Saying thus the tree should be taken home and consecrated in the evening in accordance with the rituals. In the house, the Sun, Śiva and Agni should be evoked and worshipped and then the root of the tree should be planted in the Iśāna (N.E. point) corner of the house and when it is planted, the spell or incantation of Vāmadeva Mantra or Śrīromantra should be recited. In the same way the trunk with the branches of the tree is planted on the Northern part. The fallen leaves and flowers should be placed on the eastern side. When the root is planted the following prayer should be uttered:

Āmantritose deveśa
prātaḥ kāle mayaḥ prabho/
Karavāstapāsa labhah
Pūrṇān sarvān tavānāyā.//

After that at dawn he should take bath and with oblations of sweet-smelling flowers etc. should worship Śiva. This is Damanakārohaṇavidhi. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 80).

DAMAṆANTI Daughter of Bhīma the King of Vidarbha. The most noble of all the Indian heroines, Damayanti has secured a place in the literatures of almost all the languages in the world. The famous hero Nala is her husband.

1) The background of the story of Nala. During the time of the forest life of the Pāṇḍavas, Arjuna had gone to Kailāsa to do penance before Śiva for getting divine weapons. The rest of the Pāṇḍavas spent the time till the arrival of Arjuna, in sorrow and sadness. They spent miserable days one by one. At that time the hermit Bhadaśva visited them. They welcomed the hermit. In the midst of their conversation Dharmaputra told the hermit with tears that he was the most unhappy man in the world. Hearing this the hermit told them the story of Nala, to console the Pāṇḍavas.

2) The birth of Damayanti. The King Bhīma of Vidarbha was childless for a long time. While the King was spending sorrowful days, as he had no children, a hermit named Dama reached his palace. The King welcomed the hermit. Seeing the sorrow of the King the hermit blessed the King and the queen, and as a result a daughter named Damayanti and as her brothers three sons Dama, Dōnta and Damana were born to them.

3) The Svayāhvarā (marriage) of Damayanti. During this period a son named Nala was born to Virasena the King of Nīsadha. The child was an expert in the game of dice and he would speak only truth. He grew up and became a youth.

Once the swans which came to the palace of Damayanti from Nala, began to praise Nala. They sang about the glory of Nala. Nala also knew about the beauty and the other good qualities of Damayanti. Thus they fell in love with each other. Nala also started for Kuṇḍinapuri, the capital city of Vidarbha, to marry Damayanti. The devas (gods) Indra, Agni, Varuṇa and Yama, having heard of the beauty of Damayanti from Nārada, had gone Kuṇḍinapuri, to take part in the marriage. On the way they met Nala. They were aware of the fact that Damayanti was in love with Nala. So they called Nala and sent him to Damayanti with a message that Damayanti should accept one of the four gods as her husband. By the boon of invisibility, given by the Gods, Nala entered the room of Damayanti unseen by others and gave the message to Damayanti. But Damayanti did not agree to it. The Gods also entered the nuptial hall and took their seats in the shape of four Nalas. Damayanti entered the hall with the nuptial garland in her hands. She saw five Nalas including the real Nala, and prayed to the gods to show her the real Nala her lover. So the devas assumed their real forms and Damayanti put the garland on the neck of the real Nala and accepted him as her husband. Being much pleased with the behaviour and character of both Nala and Damayanti, the four gods blessed them. Agni promised to be near Nala whenever he thought of him. Yama said that Nala would always be righteous. Varuṇa said that Nala would obtain water at the thought of it. Indra blessed him saying that he would get mokṣa immediately after the completion of a yāga. The gods remained till the end of the marriage ceremony and then they departed. Nala and Damayanti lived in Kuṇḍinapuri.

4) The hatred between Kāli and Dvāpara. Hearing about the Svayāhvarā of Damayanti Kali and Dvāpara started for Kuṇḍinapuri. On the way they met Indra and the other gods, who were returning from the marriage of Damayanti. They told Kali and Dvāpara that Damayanti had accepted Nala as her husband. Kali and Dvāpara got angry at this and returned saying that they would destroy the kingdom of Nala. After that Kali waited for a chance to enter the body of Nala. After twelve years, once Nala, after passing urine, without washing his legs performed his evening worship. At that moment Kali entered the body of Nala. With that Nala became bereft of all senses of righteousness and duty, and challenged his younger brother Puṣkara to a game of dice. Puṣkara engaged Nala in the game of dice. Kali stood in the shape of an ox as helper of Nala. Nala lost his kingdom in the game. Seeing that her husband was being defeated continuously, Damayanti sent for the charioteer Vārṣneya and sent her son Indrasena and daughter Indrasena to Kuṇḍinapuri. After leaving the children at Kuṇḍinapuri Vārṣneya engaged himself in a travel. After visiting several countries he reached Ayodhyā and became the charioteer of King Rûtpûrana.
5) Nala and Damayantî to the forest. Pûsâkara got the kingdom, wealth and everything that his elder brother, Nala, had possessed. The miserable Nala left everything he had and clad in only one cloth got out of the palace. His wife Damayantî followed him. They stayed outside the city for three days. Pûsâkara made a proclamation that if anybody rendered any help to Nala he would be ruthlessly put to death. After that Nala stayed there for three more days, with only water for food and drink. Then he went to the forest. His wife followed him. They were hungry. Nala saw some golden birds. Nala wanted to catch them for food. So he took his only cloth and spread it on the ground. The birds took that cloth and flew away. Those birds were the dices used in the game. They were influenced by Kali. The miserable and hungerstricken Nala asked his wife Damayantî to go with the caravan traders who were going to Avanti and save herself. But she did not consent to go away from him.

They spent that night in an inn. They both fell asleep because of weakness. After a time Nala woke up. He thought that his wife would somehow or other get to some country closely and save herself, if he left her there. So he decided to take half of her cloth. How to do it without her knowledge? Thinking so he walked round the inn. He saw a good sword. He took the sword, and cut half of the cloth of Damayantî and leaving her in the inn he went away.

In a short while she woke up and missing her husband she cried aloud and ran here and there in search of him. Then she went into the forest crying. A big snake caught hold of her and began to swallow her. She cried aloud. Hearing the cry, a forester came there. He cut the snake open and saved Damayantî. But when he saw her he became overpowered by libido and tried to make her his wife. She got angry and cursed him and he instantly fell down dead. After this she began to wander in the forest aimlessly, often seeing wild animals and fearing them. At last she got on a rock and sat there and began to wail thinking of Nala.
6) Damayantî in the kingdom of Cedi. While she was sitting on the rock wailing, a caravan of traders came by that way. They had been attacked by a herd of elephants and were running away from them. They saw Damayantî. She told them her story. They brought her to the kingdom of Cedi. She wandered through the country for a while and finally reached the palace of the King Subûhû. Thinking her to be a mad woman the street boys were following her. The queen saw the woman surrounded by street boys and felt pity for her. She sent her maid and brought her to the palace. Without revealing that she was the queen of King Nala, she told everything else to the queen. The queen consoled her and said that she would get her husband back. She invited Damayantî to stay in the palace till she got her husband back. Damayantî replied as follows: "Mother, I shall stay here. But there are certain conditions. I won't eat remains and offals of vienuts, I won't make others to wash my legs. I won't talk with men who are not related to me. If anybody hankers after me you must order him to be killed. Brâhmanas may come and see me only in connection with the search for my husband. This is my vow." The queen agreed to her conditions and made her the attendant of her daughter Sunandâ.
7) Nala in Ayodhyâ. Nala filled with sorrow was walking along the forest when he saw a wild fire. From the midst of the fire somebody was calling Nala by name and crying. When Nala approached the fire, he saw the great and famous serpent Karkotakâ lying entwined in the flames. Karkotakâ the King of the Nâgas had once deceived Nârada, who then cursed him that he would become stationary in a place like an immovable thing till Nala came and rescued him. From that day onwards, Karkotakâ was remaining in that forest without moving. Then the forest caught fire. Karkotakâ being unable to move had to remain in the fire. Nala immediately saved Karkotakâ from the fire and with that he was absolved from the curse of Nârada. Karkotakâ asked Nala to walk forward, counting the steps. When Nala counted ten, Karkotakâ bit on the leg of Nala and he became ugly. Then the serpent said to the flurried Nala, "Don't fear. I have made you ugly so that others may not recognize you. Now you are ugly because of my poison. But my poison has affected Kali who is in your body. Because he had harmed you who are blameless, he has to suffer for it. So long as this poison is in you, nobody will harm you. You must go to Rûtpûrana the King of Ayodhyâ and tell him that you are Bûhûka a charioteer. You must give Rûtpûrana the spell 'Aśvâhrdaya mantra' and get from him the spell 'Aksâhrdayamantra'. After that you will have reunion with your wife and children. Here are two cloths for you. Whenever you want to get your original form you need only wear them." Saying these words Karkotakâ gave Nala two divine garments and then disappeared.

Nala started for Ayodhyâ. He reached the palace on the tenth day. There he was employed as the horse keeper of Rûtpûrana on a pay of hundred pieces of gold. Thus he stayed there under the name Bûhûka. Vârśneya and Jivala who were the horse-keepers of Rûtpûrana up to that time, were placed under Bûhûka.

Bûhûka used to recite a poem every evening when he returned from his work.

Weary and worn of hunger and thirst,
That poor woman, where might she be?
Serving whom will she be now?
Thinking of the unlucky fool?

Hearing this song of lamentation everyday, once his assistant Jivala asked Bûhûka, whom he was reciting the poem about. Bûhûka replied: "Once there was a man who was a fool. He got a good wife. For some reason they were separated. The fool is still wandering about weary and sad in search of his wife."
8) Damayantî in Kunipura. At this time Dama-yantî was living in the palace of the King of Cedi, as the maid of princess Sunandâ. King Bhûma became very sorry not knowing where Nala and Damayantî had gone. He sent men in all directions to search for them. The King proclaimed that those who found them would be awarded thousand cows, lands assigned to Brâhmins, and villages. He proclaimed that so many cows would be given even to those who could give any information about them. Hearing this Brâhmanas went in all directions and Sudeva, one of them, reached the Kingdom of Cedi. He recognized Dama-yantî who was like fire inside the cover of smoke. When Damayantî was alone Sudeva approached her and said that he had come from Vidarbha and that he was a friend of Damayanti's brother. Damayanti recognized Sudeva and she cried aloud. Sunandā who saw this scene, told her mother about it. The queen sent for Sudeva and asked him what the matter was. He revealed everything about Damayanti, to the queen. When they heard the story all the women in the harem cried. Then with tears the queen said, "Hear this, Damayanti, your mother and myself are the two daughters of Sudama, the King of Daśārā. Father gave your mother to Bhima, the King of Vidarbha and me to Virābhū, the King of Cedi. I have seen you when you were an infant."

When the King of Cedi knew everything he sent Damayanti in a palanquin to Vidarbha.

9) The search for Nala. Damayanti told her father that she didn't want to live any longer unless Nala was brought to her, Bhima had been trying hard to find out Nala. One day Parādā, one of the numerous Brahmins who were engaged in the search for Nala, came to Bhima and said, "While I was wandering from place to place, I happened to reach the palace of Rūtpaṇa, the King of Ayodhyā. There I made enquiries about Nala the husband of Damayanti, in the presence of the King. But nobody gave me any answer. When I returned Bāhuka the charioteer of Rūtpaṇa followed me. An ugly man with short hands, an expert in driving horses, and an excellent cook, he asked me several questions about Damayanti."

When Damayanti heard this she had horripilation. She secretly went to her mother and compelled her to send Sudeva the Brāhmaṇa to Ayodhyā. Her mother consented. She called Sudeva, in the presence of her mother and told him to go to Ayodhyā and tell Rūtpaṇa that the second svayāvarā (marriage) of Damayanti would take place before sunrise next day and that he should come earlier. Sudeva instantly went to Ayodhyā.

Rūtpaṇa, hearing the words of Sudeva, wanted Bāhuka to take him in the chariot to Vidarbha within the period of a day time for the second svayāvarā of Damayanti. Nala consented with a breaking heart. Immediately they started. Vāraṇeyā also got into the chariot. The chariot flew through the sky with tremendous speed, to Vidarbha. On the way the upper garment of the King fell on the ground. He ordered the chariot to be stopped for taking his upper garment. Nala said that within that winking time the chariot had travelled a yojana (league) and glorified in his power of driving horses. Then they saw in the forest a Tanni tree (Terminalia bellirica) with fruits. Seeing the Tanni tree the King said, "O Bāhuka, if you are an expert in horse-driving I am an expert in reckoning. I will tell you how many leaves and nuts are there in that Tanni Tree. There are five crores of leaves in both the branches together and two thousand and ninety-five nuts. They stopped the chariot and checked the tree and found the reckoning of the King correct. The King had the knowledge of the art called 'Aksahṛdaya'. It was with this art that the king calculated the number of leaves in the tree, at one look. Bāhuka drove the chariot with the speed of wind because he had known the art called 'Aṣvahṛdaya'. Then and there, Bāhuka taught the King the art of 'Aṣvahṛdaya' and the King taught Bāhuka the art of 'Aksahṛdaya'. The pleasant moment Nala learned Aksahṛdaya Kalī vomitted the poison of Karkota and got out of the body of Nala. Long ago, the mother of Indrasena, a god, had cursed Kalī and drove him out. Since then Kalī had been living in the body of Nala. As soon as he came out Kalī begged Nala for pardon. Nala cursed his anger, but Kalī was afraid of Nala. So he made the Tanni tree his abode. Because of that Tanni became detestable.

Rūtpaṇa, Vāraṇeyā and Bāhuka reached Kuṇḍina-pura in the evening. When the sound of the chariot of Nala reached the ears of Damayanti her heart bumped with joy. The chariot was stopped and Rūtpaṇa entered the palace. The King Bāhuka welcomed Rūtpaṇa heartily. As there was no sign of any preparation for the svayāvarā (marriage) Rūtpaṇa understood that some sort of trick had been played on him.

10) Test of Nala. Damayanti sent her maid Keśīṇī to Bāhuka to watch him. Keśīṇī had a secret talk with Bāhuka. Though Nala did not reveal himself, he cried when she talked about Damayanti. Keśīṇī returned to Damayanti and told her what she had heard and seen. Damayanti became more and more convinced that Bāhuka was Nala himself. So she sent Keśīṇī again to Nala. She discovered the following facts about Bāhuka, after a keen observation, and made a report of them.

(1) Bāhuka does not stop to pass through even a small door. The upper sill lifts by itself for him to pass through.

(2) He gets enough room for him to pass through even a big crowd.

(3) Empty pots are filled with water at a look from him.

(4) When he stretches out a grass to the sun, it catches fire.

(5) Fire does not burn him even if he touches it.

(6) When he crushes a flower, it blooms more beautiful and fragrant than before.

When Keśīṇī said all these facts to Damayanti, she became fully convinced that Bāhuka was none other than Nala himself. Damayanti sent Keśīṇī again to Bāhuka to get some meat cooked by him. Damayanti tested the taste of the meat brought by Keśīṇī and she knew that the food was cooked by Nala. She sent Keśīṇī again to Bāhuka with her children. Seeing Indrasena and Indrasenā coming to him, Bāhuka ran to them, gathered them and embraced them and cried aloud. Then he told Keśīṇī that he had done so because the children were just like his two children.

11) Reunion. After having tested Bāhuka so far Damayanti sent Keśīṇī to her mother to tell her everything, and to say that she was convinced of the fact that Bāhuka was none other than Nala and that the difference was only in shape and to request that she may be permitted to see Bāhuka in person. The queen informed the King of all these facts. With the permission of her parents Bāhuka was brought to the room of Damayanti. The moment Bāhuka saw Damayanti he began to shed tears. Damayanti also was filled with emotion. But she told him thus:

"Bāhuka, have you seen a man who had left his sleeping wife in the forest? Who else, but Nala the famous and the righteous would discard his blameless and loving wife who had been sleeping, with fatigue and hunger in a lonely place? Have I done anything wrong to him in my younger days so that he should leave me in the forest when I was sleeping? Leaving aside real gods I married him, I worshipped him. I had children from his blood and now he has abandoned me. In the presence of Gods and with fire as witness, holding my hands he had taken a vow that he would support and protect me. Where has that vow gone?"

At these words Bāhuka shed tears for a long time. Then he told her all that had happened to him since their separation. Damayanti requested Nala, not to have any misconception regarding the idea of a second svayamvara; she said to him that she committed no wrong and that her fidelity and loyalty had undergone no change. At that time Vāyu (the wind-god) in an ethereal voice said "Damayanti has committed no sin". Immediately Nala put on the divine clothes given by Karkotaka and regained his original form. Damayanti embraced Nala and cried aloud. The king her father, mother and the people of the city all ran to them.

Next day Rūparāja returned. After a few days Nala collected an army consisting of three hundred soldiers, sixteen elephants, fifty horses and a white chariot only, from Vidarbhā and went to the kingdom of Nīsadha. Reaching there Nala challenged Puṣkara for a game of dice. Puṣkara refused the challenge. Nala took his sword to cut Puṣkara into two. Finally Puṣkara agreed to play. At the first cast of the dice the life and the Kingdom of Puṣkara fell into the hands of Nala. But Nala did not kill Puṣkara; instead, he embraced him. Nala became King. Damayanti and the children reached Nīsadha. Nala ruled the country with more happiness and prosperity than before. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapters 52 to 79).

DAMAYANTI II. The daughter of Pramloca. See Viṣvākarmā, 2nd para.

DĀMBARA. One of the two attendants given by Brahmā to Subrahmanya. The other attendant’s name is Ādaṃbarā. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 39).

DĀMBHA. A dānava or asura. Damibha was the son of Vipracitti an asura born to Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. This Damibha is the father of Saṅkhacūḍa, an asura. Damibha received from their teacher Śukra, the spell known as the famous Viṣṇumātra and went to Puṣkara-tīrtha and did penance there for one lac of years. It was due to this penance that the son Saṅkhacūḍa was born to him. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

DĀMBHODHAVA. See Paraśurāma, Para 10, subsection 2.

DĀMBHODHAVA. An ancient emperor. He was a mighty warrior prince. He brought the whole world under control. At last there was nobody left to fight with. So he walked about challenging everybody he met with. But none dared to fight with him. Then Brahmā advised him to challenge Nara Nārāyaṇas who were doing penance on the northern-most point of the earth. So the emperor went with his mighty army to Gandhamādana and informed Nara and Nārāyaṇa of his desire to fight. They said that they were mere hermits and that they had no power to fight. But Dambhodhava was not satisfied. Finally Nara and Nārāyaṇa took some isikā grass and began to fight the emperor with it. Though the army of the emperor was mighty and vast it could not stand against the grass in the hands of the hermits. Finally the emperor admitted failure and bowed before the hermits. They advised him not to be arrogant in future and to lead a pure life. Hearing the exhortations of the hermits the emperor became a devoted man. He returned to his palace and led a life of righteousness. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 96).

DAMI. A famous holy place. Brahmā usually sits in this place and worships Mahēśvara. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 72, it is mentioned that all the sins of those who bathe in this place will be washed away.

DĀMŚA. The giant who took birth as the worm ‘Alark-kaṇṭ’. This giant came in the shape of a beetle and pierced the leg of Karna, the disciple of Parasurāme. Damśa once kidnapped the wife of Bṛhari, and the hermit cursed the giant and turned him to a beetle. He also said that Parameswara would absolve him from the curse. (See Kṛṣṇa, Para 4).

DĀMODARA. Śrī Kṛṣṇa. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa was a small boy, Yaśodā tied him to a mortar-stone. The boy ran about, dragging the heavy stone with him and the rope snapped. Part of the rope still remained round his abdomen. From that he got the name Dāmodara. "Dama" means rope and "Udara" means abdomen. (See Kṛṣṇa).

DĀMO. I. A sage in the assembly of Yudhiṣṭhira. Once he met Śrī Kṛṣṇa who was on his way to Hastināpura. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 13).

DĀNADĀRĪ. A town in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 52).

DĀNAM. Gift. In ancient India a spiritual significance was attached to dānam. (offering of a free gift). One who gave water was said to achieve contentment; one who gave food, eternal happiness; one who gave land, government of the country; one who gave gold would attain longevity; one who gave a house would get domestic felicity; one who gave silver would get physical beauty; one who gave clothes would reach candraloka; one who gave a horse would attain the world of the Asvinīdevas; one who gave bulls would get prosperity; one who gave cows would reach śūryaloka; according to Manusmṛti.

DANAVA. Danavas are the sons born to Kaśyapa Prajapati by his wife Danu and their descendants. (See under Danu).

DANAYUS. A daughter of Dakṣaprājapati, Kaśyaprājapati married Danayus. Four sons Viśara, Bala, Vira and Vrata were born to her. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65).

DANDA I. A king who was the son of Iksvāku. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 45, that this King was the rebirth of Krodha-hantā, an asura.

1) Birth. Iksvāku had one hundred sons. Of them Viśaka, Nimi and Dandā were famous. Danāda became a famous archer when he grew up. In the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa mention is made that this King Danāda took part in the Devāsura battle (Battle between the gods and the demons) and killed several thousand asuras (demons).

2) Administration. The king Iksvāku gave his son Danāda the country between the mountains Himālaya and Vindhya and anointed him the King of that country. Danāda built a capital city known as Madhumatta and began to rule the country. He had an army of Catūraṅga (four parts, elephant, chariot, horse and infantry). The hermit Śamana was the priest of King Danāda. (Uttarārāmāyaṇa).

3) The origin of Danāḍākāraṇya (the forest of Danāḍākāraṇya). Danāda once raped Arā, the daughter of hermit Śukra, who had been doing penance in a forest in the middle of the country of Danāda. Śukra the hermit got angry and destroyed the country of Danāda by a shower of fire. From that day onwards that country was known as Danāḍākāraṇya. (For further information see under Arā).

DANDA II.

1) General information. Another Kṣatriya King of ancient India. He was the son of the King Vidyādha. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, it is mentioned that Vidyādha and Danāda had attended Draupadi Savyārvāra (the marriage of Draupadi).

2) Other information. (1) Bhāmasena defeated the King Danāda. (M.B. Sāhā Parva, Chapter 307, Stanza 177).

(2) This King Danāda was the brother of Danāḍādhara, the king of Magadha. Danāḍādhara and Danāda were killed by Arjuna in battle. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 16).

DANDA III. An attendant of the Sun. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 68).

DANDA IV. A warrior of the kingdom of Cedi. He fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas and was killed by Karṇa. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 49).

DANDA V. A synonym of Mahāviṣṇu. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Stanza 105).

DANDA VI (DANĀKA). A thief who had made the world tremble in the Dvāpara yuga. This wicked Danāda used to steal the wealth of the Brāhmaṇas, kill those who trusted him, speak lies, rape the women of others, drink liquor, eat the flesh of cows, mingle with wicked people and do various other sinful deeds daily. Danāda once went to a Viṣṇavite temple to commit robbery. When he reached the steps of the temple he wiped his legs which were wet, on the ground and a small depression that was there, was levelled by the drawing of his legs. He broke the lock with an iron rod and entered the temple. Inside the temple he saw Kṛṣṇa, clad in yellow robes lying on a beautiful cot, with his spouse Rādhā. The thief instantly bowed before the spouse of Rādhā. By this act his sins were washed away. Still impelled by his evil nature, he took the silk garment of Kṛṣṇa, spread it on the ground, collected as many things as he could take, placed them in the garment and making them into a bundle, got out of the temple with shaky feet. The bundle fell on the ground with a loud noise. Hearing the noise the neighbours woke up and looked out. The thief began to run and was bitten by a poisonous snake and fell down dead. The men of Yama (God of death) tied the spirit of the thief with a rope and took him before Yama. Citrāgupta looked into his accounts and informed Yama that he had committed all the sins. Yama asked if there was any good deed to his account. Then Citrāgupta said “When this great sinner was going to commit theft in a Viṣṇavite temple, at the steps of the temple, he levelled a pit by the mud on his leg, and that single good deed on his part has wiped out all his sins.” Hearing this Yama gave him a golden seat and showed hospitality and then bowed before him and said “By the soil on your legs you have purified my abode today. I am grateful to you. Now you may go to the blissful world of Viṣṇu where there are no deaths or births or sorrow”. Hearing this Danāda entered Vaikuṇṭha. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 1).

DANDA VII. A giant (Rākṣasa). This giant Danāda was born to the giant Sumāki, by his wife Ketumati. The nine ministers of Rāvana, named Prahasta, Akampana, Vikatā, Kālakāmukha, Dhūmāraka, Supārśva, Sarhṛāda, Prākṣā and Bhāsakarṇa were brothers of this Danāda. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

DANDAM I. A divine weapon of Kāla (Yama). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 41, Stanza 26 that King Yama had presented this weapon to Arjuna.

DANDAM II. A holy place on the bank of river Pampā. Those who bathe in this holy place will get the fruits of giving a thousand cows as Gift. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 15).

DANDAM III. One of the four expedients. The four expedients are Sāma, Dāna, Bheda and Danāda. A king should subdue an enemy by resorting to these four expedients. Of the four expedients, sāma and danāda are considered to be the best.

Sāmādānþāma /
Caturþānþapi pañḍitāh /
Sāmadānþau praṣāmantați /
Nityam rāstraþabhiyopadhyayat. // (Manusmṛti, Stanza 109).

Wise people say that, of the four expedients Sāma and Danāda are the most effective for the prosperity of the country.

DANDABHU. A warrior of Subrahmanya (M.B. Sālīya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 73).

DANDAHARA I. A Kṣatriya King of Magadha. The following information about this King is available from the Mahābhārata.

1) Danāḍādhara was born as the rebirth of a giant known as Krodhavardhana. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 46).

2) Bhāmasena, during his conquest of the countries, overcame King Danāḍādhara and his brother Danāda.
DANDADHARA II

3. In the battle between the Pândavas and the Kauravas, Dandadhara fought from the back of an elephant against the Pândavas. When Dandadhara began to exterminate the army of the Pândavas, Śrī Kṛṣṇa persuaded Arjuna to fight against Dandadhara, who was killed in the fight. (M.B. Kṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 8, Stanzas 1 to 13).

DANDADHARA II. One of the hundred sons of Dhrtyarṣṭra. Bhimasena killed this Dandadhara in the battle of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Kṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 5).

DANDADHARA III. A king who helped the Pândavas. Very often the name Maṇḍimān also occurs along with the name of Dandadhara. They might have been brothers or sons of the same father by separate mothers. In the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 156, Stanza 7, mention is made that these two had been present at the marriage of Draupadi. Dronācārya killed both of them in the battle of Bīhārata. (M.B. Kṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 13).

DANDADHARA IV. A warrior born and bred in the country of Pāñcāla. He kept the rear of the army of Yudhishthira in the battle of Bīhārata against the Kauravas. He died by an arrow of Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Kṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 49, Stanza 27).

DANDAGAURĪ. A celestial maid. When Arjuna visited devaloka, there was a dance of this woman in honour of him. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 29).

DANDAKA. See Daṇḍa VI.

DANDAKARA. A Śūdra who had saved himself from going to hell by taking the vow called Vīṣṇu-paṇḍita. This Śūdra who lived in the tretāyuga had done a good deal of wicked deeds. Finally he accepted the advice of Brahma-pāpas and performed the vow of Vīṣṇu-paṇḍita and because of the vow he attained heaven. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 23).

DANDAKARANYA. A forest in the Indo-Gangetic Valley. For the story of how this place became a great forest see under Arā. Other information. (1) This is a holy place. He who takes bath in this place would get the fruits of giving a thousand cows as gift. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 41).

(2) During the time of the forest life of Śrī Rāma he made his cottage in this forest and stayed there for a while. It was in this forest that a part of the body of Śurpanakāhī was cut off and the infantry of fourteen thousand giants who came under the leadership of Kharana, Dūṣana and Trīśira was completely destroyed. Śūra was stolen, Mārica was killed by Śrī Rāma, and ḽaṭṭyū died by the sword of Rāvaṇa in this forest of Daṇḍakaranyā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 277 to 279.)

DANDAKETU. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pândavas. Daṇḍaketu fought on the back of an attractive horse. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 68).

DANDANTTI. (The laws of chastisement). Daṇḍaniti is the law of punishment given to the subjects by Kings of ancient India. According to the criminal laws of ancient India, fining a man up to two hundred and fifty paṇas (a coin) was called Prathama Sāhasa daṇḍa (first degree of punishment) and fining up to five hundred paṇas was called Madhyama Sāhasa daṇḍa (medium punishment) and fining up to thousand paṇas was called Utama Sāhasa daṇḍa (highest degree of punishment). If a man complains to the King that his property is stolen, when actually it is not stolen, the man will be fined the amount that is said to have been stolen. There was another law, that the owner of the stolen property and the thief would have to pay double the amount they admit, if the amount shown in the complaint differed from the actual amount stolen. For appearing as false witness, the three classes of non-Brahmins were punished with fine and if he was a Brahmin he would have to be cast out of the society. The King ordered that if one spent the property entrusted with him for keeping, the owner of the property would have to be paid double the amount. If one says that he has given the property for keeping when actually it is not the person will have to be punished as if he were a thief. If a man spends an amount without knowing that it was the property of others, the man will have to be acquitted of the charge. If an artisan has received money in advance for a particular product and fails to give the thing at the stipulated time the King will fine the artisan one svarṇa. If a man received money in advance on a promise to do a particular work and if he fails to do the work he will be fined one Kṛṣṇala of gold. (One Kṛṣṇala weighs three yavagrams). If a man conceals his diseases and marries a damsels, she will be considered as a spinster and the man will be fined two hundred paṇas. If a cowherd agrees to look after the cows of another receiving pay and food and refuses to return the cow to the owner the King will fine him hundred paṇas. If a Kṣatriya scoffed a Brāhmaṇa the fine imposed would be hundred paṇas. If it is a Vaiśya the fine will be two hundred paṇas. If it is a Śūdra he will be put to death. If a Brahmin scoffs a Kṣatriya the fine is fifty paṇas. If a Śūdra scoffs a Vaiśya the fine is twenty-five paṇas. If a Brahmin scoffs a Śūdra the fine is only twelve paṇas. If a Śūdra scoffs a Kṣatriya his tongue should be cut off. If a Śūdra advises a Brahmin, he may inflict any punishment on the Śūdra.

If a Śūdra wronged a Brahmin, the Śūdra might be punished by cutting off the organ which was employed in the crime. If one spat at a Brahmin, the two lips of the culprit might be cut off. If a man passed urine on a Brahmin the culprit would have his penis cut off. If a Śūdra sits on the seats of the upper classes his buttock will have to be cut off. If one slays cow, elephant, camel or horse half of his limbs will have to be cut off. Cutting across a road, changing of boundaries, making the water of pools and ponds impure etc, will have to be punished with a fine of two suvarnas. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 227.)

DANÇAPĀṆĪ I. A king of the family of Yayāti. This King was the son of Vībhūnara and the father of Nimi. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

DANÇAPĀṆĪ II. The son of Pauṇḍraka, the King of Kāśī. Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Pauṇḍraka. As his son DançaṆāṇi was not powerful enough to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa, he performed the sacrifice of Mahēśvara yajña. Being pleased at the sacrifice Śiva created Kṛtyā in the sacrificial fire and sent her to Dvārakā to destroy Śrī Kṛṣṇa, who aimed his Sudarśana cakra (wheel-weapon) at her. She ran to Vāraṇaśi, where the wheel turned Kṛtyā and everybody with her to ashes. (Padmini Purāṇa, Uttara Kāḍāṇa, Chapter 278).

DANDAŚUKA. A hell. See the para Naraka under Kāla.

DAṆḌI I. A son of Dṛtarāṣṭra. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 103.

DAṆḌI II. A god. This god is worshipped as a waiter of the Sun. The sun is consecrated in a chariot of one wheel, yoked with seven horses, and wearing two lotus flowers. On the right side of the sun his waiter Dandī will be standing as door-keeper with ink and pen in his hand, and on the left his waiter Pīṅgala will be standing with a stick in his hand. These two gate-keepers are the two gaṇas of the Sun. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

DAṆḌI III. A famous critic and writer of Sanskrit literature. He lived in the 6th century B.C. His critical work Kāvyādarśa made him famous. There are three chapters in this book. The first chapter is about criticism of poetry and the use of idioms. The second chapter deals with figurative language. The third chapter deals with alliteration and rhyme and the flaws in poetry.

‘Daśakumāracarita’, is supposed to be another work of Daṇḍi. (History of Classical Sanskrit Literature).

DĀNTA. Son of Bhima, King of Vidarbha. This prince was the brother of Damayanti. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 53, Verse 9).

DĀNTA. An apsaras of Alakāpurī. Once she danced in honour of the sage Asvāvakra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 45).

DANTADHAVJA. The son of Manu Tāmasa. Once Daṇḍadāvja gave as oblation his flesh and blood in fire, to get children. But it was of no use. So he put his hair of the body, of the head, his sinews, the marrow of the bones, and liver and sperm in the fire. When the sperm was put in the fire there was a voice ‘Don’t’ and with that the king fell dead. And instantly seven luminous children came out from the fire. They began to cry aloud. Hearing their cry Brahmā came there and anointed them as the Maruts (wind gods). They were the maruts of Tāmasamanvantara. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 72).

DANTAVAKTRA I. A Kṣatriya king of Kāṭuṣa. He was the rebirth of the dāitya (asura) Krodhavāśa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 62).

DANTAVAKTRA II. He was the rebirth of Vijaya, one of the two door-keepers of Mahāviṣṇu, Jaya and Vijaya. (For full particulars see under Jaya). Dantavakra was a contemporary king of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Dantavakra died in a battle with Śrī Kṛṣṇa and returned to Vaikunṭha (the abode of Viṣṇu).

DANTIMUKHA. An asura (demon). This asura was killed in a fight with Subrahmanya. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).

DANU I.

1) General information. Danu, the daughter of Dakṣa was married to Kaśyapa Prajāpati. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata that the Dānavas (demons) were born from Danu.

2) Sons. One hundred sons were born to Danu. The following are the important among them.

1. Vipracitti
2. Śibara
3. Namuci
4. Pulomā

5. Asilomā
6. Keśi
7. Durjaya
8. Ayaśīras
9. Aśvaśīkas
10. Śasvāśīku
11. Garga
12. Amūrdhā
13. Vegavāṇ
14. Ketuṃāṇ
15. Svarbhaṇu
16. Aśvā
17. Aśvapati
18. Vṛṣaparvan
19. Ajaka

(This sun and the moon (Sūrya and Candra) are not the planets).

From the sons named above ten families of Dānavas (asuras) arose. The founders of the families are mentioned below:

1. Ekākṣa
2. Amāṭapa
3. Pralamba
4. Naraka
5. Vātāpi
6. Tapanā
7. Śara
8. Mahāhanu
9. Garviṣṭha
10. Dirghajihva

All the dānavas or Asuras belong to one of these ten families. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65).

DANU II. A King. Two sons Rambha and Kṛmbha were born to this king. (See Krambha).

DARADA I. King of an ancient country known as Bālḥika. It is stated in Mahābhārata Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 58 that this King was the incarnation of a portion of the asura named Sūrya. At the time of his birth the earth was cleaved because of his weight.

DARADA II. An ancient country in North East India. The people of this country were called the Daradas. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, that Arjuna conquered this country during his conquest of countries. The Daradas paid tribute to Yudhiṣṭhira. During their forest-life the Pāṇḍavas had passed through the country of the Daradas. At the beginning of the Bhārata-battle, the Pāṇḍavas had sent invitation to the Daradas also. But they fought on the side of the Kauravas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 11 that Śrī Kṛṣṇa had conquered the Darada country. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 121, that in the battle of Bhārata the Daradas attacked Śāyaki and that Śāyaki killed them.

DARADA III. A tribe. At first they were Kṣatriyas. They grew jealous of the Brāhmaṇas and so they were changed to Śūdras. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 17).

DĀRDADAM. A place in ancient India. There is a reference to this place in Mahābhārata, Śalīya Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 50.

DARBHI. An ancient hermit. This hermit built a tīrtha (bath) named Ardhaṅkīla in Kurukṣetra. It is believed that anybody who bathed in this place and fasted could learn the mantras (spells and incantations) and become a Brāhmaṇa. It occurs in the Purāṇas that the hermit Darbhi has brought the four oceans to this bath. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 54).

DARDDURA. A mountain. The deity of this mountain is said to be sitting in the council hall of Kucbca (the god of wealth) and worshipping him, according to Mahābharata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 35.

DARI. A serpent born in the family of Dhurartstra. This serpent fell into the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya and was burnt to death. (Mahabharaata, Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 16).

DARIDRA. A king born in the family of Yayati. He was the son of Dundubhi and father of Vasu. (Bhagavata, Navana Skandha).

DARPA. A king of the family of Yayati. (Bhagavata, Skandha 9).

DARSAKA. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 53).

DARUKA I.
1) Sri Krsna’s charioteer. In the Mahabharata, we come across few persons who excel Daruka in their skill as charioteers. We find the following details about him in the Mahabharata :-
1) When Sri Krsna fought against King Salya, Daruka was over-whelmed by Salya’s arrows. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 5).
2) At the time of the battle at Kuruksetra, hearing the sound of Sri Krsna’s conch-shell, Daruka drove his chariot and brought it before Sri Krsna. (M.B. Droo Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 45).
3) When Savyaki fought with Kantha, Daruka drove Savyaki’s chariot. At that time he proved his extraordinary skill in charioteering. (M.B. Droo Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 54).
4) After being attended by Daruka, Sri Krsna’s chariot horses flew up into the Heavens. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 5).
5) It was Daruka who informed the Pandavas that the Yaduvarsha had perished. On his return, he accompanied Arjuna in his journey to Dwarka. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 5).

DARUKA II. A charioteer of Mahisasura. (Devi Bhagavata, Pañcama Skandha). For further details about this Daruka, see under Ghanatanka.

DARUKA III. A son of Garuda. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 9 contains a reference to this Daruka).

DARVANAM. A narakha (hell). See under Naraka.

DARVA. A Ksatriya king of the land called Dvaravam. Opinion is divided as to whether Dvaravam is the name of a land or of a caste. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 10).

DARVA. A country in Ancient India. Mention is made about this country in Mahabharata, Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 54.

DARVADHISARA(S). A low class people. (M.B. Droo Parva, Chapter 93, Verse 44).

DARVAM. The word Darvas indicates a particular class of Ksatriyas. In Mahabharata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 13, it is said that the Ksatriyas of this family had presented Dharmaputra with a large quantity of wealth.

DARVI. An ancient town in India. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 54).

DARVISEANKRAMANA. A holy place. Those who visit this place will get the fruits of performing the sacrifice of Aevamedha and will attain heaven. (Mahabharata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 45).

DASA. A country in Ancient India. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 56).

DASA. A term used as a suffix to the name of a Sudra. In ancient India the rule was that the proper suffix for a Brahmin’s name should be ‘Varma’, for a Ksatriya’s name, ‘Varmā’, for a Vaishya’s name, ‘Gupta’ and for a Sudra’s name, ‘Dasa’. (See under Caturvarya).

DASADRYU. A hermit. It is mentioned in Rgveda, Manjula 1, Anuvaka 7, Sukta 33 that Dasadryu was a valiant hermit.

DASAGRIVA. Ravana. (See under Ravana).

DASAPATI. A son of the King Subhra. Mention is made about him in Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 44.

DASAMALIKI. A country in Bharata. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 66).

DASHMUKHA RAVANA. Ravana, the enemy of Sri Rama. (See under Ravana).

DASANANA. See under Ravana.

DASARAJA. Foster-father of Santanu’s wife, Satyavati. His actual name was Uccaihsravas. For detailed story see under Satyavati.

DASARAJNA. A great war which took place in India in ancient times. It was a terrible clash between the Aryans who lived in Paanchana and the primitive inhabitants of India, before the Rgveda period. Sudas, the king was the adversary of the Aryans. Among the relatives of Sudas were Aryans and non-Aryans. It was the people under Sudas who got victory in this war. Anyway, with this war, (Dasarajna), a new mixed race of people came into being in North India, which was composed of the Aryans and the primitive inhabitants of the country. The Hindus are the descendants of this mixed race. (Rgveda).

DASARATHA. (Nemi). A famous king of the Iksvaku dynasty. He was the father of Sri Rama.

2) Birth. Dasaratha was the son of Aja, of the family of Iksvaku, born of his wife Indumati.1

3) Dasarathas hunt. Once during the early part of his life Dasaratha was walking through a forest engaged in hunting. He reached the bank of the river Sarayul. It was evening and the forest was thick. He walked in search of wild animals. The night was advancing and darkness getting thicker. Then he heard a sound from the river as if an elephant was drinking water. Thinking it to be an elephant Dasaratha sent an arrow in the direction from which the sound came. Instantly he heard a man crying with pain. The king was disappointed. He ran to the spot and saw a hermit boy lying in a pool of blood beating his limbs on the ground and crying. The waterpot he had been dipping in the water lay close by. In answer to the questions of the King, the hermit boy whose name was Sravana,1 said, “Oh King! What wrong have I done? My parents are sitting thirsty and blind with age, in the hermitage close-by. I, their only son, was dipping the pot to take water to them, when you sent the arrow at me. So, please take some water to them in this pot and console them.”

Hearing this, with tears the King drew out the fatal arrow from the body of the boy and with that the boy Sravana said good bye to the world. Daśaratha took water in the pot and went in search of the hermitage in the darkness. With difficulty he found out the hermitage and as he drew near, the aged parents of the boy heard his footsteps and called him eagerly. The King, with tearful eyes told them what had happened. There was loud wailing and crying in the hermitage. According to their wish the King took them to where their son lay. Then the King made a fire and placed the dead body of the boy in it. The aged and blind parents cursed Daśaratha, “You also will die of loss of children”. Then they also entered the fire and were burnt along with their son’s dead body. (Valmiki Rāmāyana, Ayodhya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 63).

4) Marriage. Daśaratha had three wives, named Kauśalyā, Kaikeyi and Sūmitrā.

5) Kaikeyī given a boon. There was a great battle in the world of the gods between the asuras and the gods. According to the request of the devas, Daśaratha went to the world of the devas to help them. Kaikeyī also went with Daśaratha. In a severe fight with Sambhara, an asura, Daśaratha fell down unconscious. Kaikeyī took him away from the battle-field. When he recovered the King got into the chariot and fought more fiercely than before. This time the wheel-bolt of one of the wheels of the chariot of Daśaratha slipped away. Without informing her husband of this danger, Kaikeyī inserted her finger into the bolt-hole and prevented the wheel from sliding away. The King won the battle. After the battle, when the King came to know of the services rendered by Kaikeyī, he promised her two boons. Kaikeyī told the King that she would ask for them later, when she needed them. Then they returned to Ayodhya. (Valmiki Rāmāyana, Sarga 9, Kampā Rāmāyana, Bāla Kāṇḍa).

6) Administration of Daśaratha. The capital of Daśarathe’s kingdom of Kosala, was Ayodhya. This city was situated on the bank of river Sarayu. Daśaratha was as famous in Ayodhya as Indra was in the realm of the gods. There were palaces in Ayodhya for the kings who brought tribute to stay. In short, as mentioned in Valmiki Rāmāyana, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 5, Ayodhya was the heaven on earth.

8) The name Daśaratha. The real name of Daśaratha was Nemi. Once the unattackable and invincible asura Sambhara conquered the throne of Indra. At the request of Brahmapāla and the gods, this King reached heaven and destroyed the armies of the asuras very easily. Sambhara got angry, assumed ten shapes and attacked the King from ten points at the same time. The King confronted the ten Sambharas at ten points, at the same time, and killed all of them at the same moment. Because he faced his chariot to ten points at the same time and fought with enemies on those ten points Brahmapāla appreciated his valiant fighting and charioteering and gave him the name ‘Daśaratha’ (one who is capable of driving the chariot to ten points at the same time). Thus his original name was forgotten and he came to be known only by the name given him later. (Kārnā Rāmāyana, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

9) Birth of Sons. Kauśalyā was the first wife of Daśa-rathe. She was the daughter of the King of Uttra Kosala. A daughter named Sāntā was born to Daśaratha by Kauśalyā. After this, no sons or daughters were born to Daśaratha for a long time.

At this juncture Lomapāda, the king of Aṅga who was the classmate and a great friend of Daśaratha, came to Ayodhya on a friendly visit. He also had no children. So he entreated Daśaratha to give Sāntā to him as a foster-daughter. Thus he took away Sāntā to Aṅga. Lomapāda gave Sāntā in marriage to Rṣyasṛṣigṛha a hermit. (See under Rṣyasṛṣigṛha).

As Kauśalyā was childless Daśaratha brought as his wife Kaikeyī the daughter of the King of Kekaya and sister of Yudhājīt. Still no children were born to them. He was much disappointed. At last he married again and brought Sūmitrā the princess of Kāśi. Of these three, Kauśalyā was the chief wife.

Though he had three wives, Daśaratha still remained childless. The King and his queens spent their days in sorrow for a long time. The King remembered the curse he had incurred when he was young. The curse was that as they had died with sorrow at the death of their son Sravana, the same thing would happen to me. So he believed that sons would be born to him. He performed several devotional acts to get children. Finally he gave up all kingly pleasures and began to lead an ascetic life. He built a temple for his own use and consecrated the idol of Mahāviṣṇu in it. Then entrusting the administration of the Kingdom to his ministers and his wives engaged themselves in daily devotion and meditation in the temple. Then the King decided to perform the sacrifice of Putrakāmeṣṭi (sacrifice for getting children) by the hermit Rṣyasṛṣigṛha under the guidance of Vasiṣṭha. The King informed Rṣyasṛṣigṛha of his decision. Rṣyasṛṣigṛha could not refuse the King’s request as the king was his father-in-law. Moreover Lomapāda and Sāntā also requested the hermit to comply with the desire of Daśaratha. So Rṣyasṛṣigṛha came to Ayodhya and the sacrifice of Putrakāmeṣṭi was begun. The air vibrated with the recitation of mantras (spells and incantations) and the Veda Śūktas. The hermit uttered the divine spell of Putrakāmeṣṭi and offered oblations in the sacrificial fire. Then a wonderful and luminous figure came out of the fire with a pot containing a pudding of ambrosia, and placed the pot before Rṣyaṛṣigṛha and then disappeared in the sacrificial fire. When the wonder ful figure disappeared, Rṣyasṛṣigṛha took the pot of pudding and gave it to Daśaratha with prayer and incantations. Daśaratha received the golden pot and in accordance with the instruction of the hermit, divided the pudding between his first wife Kauśalyā and second wife Kaikeyī, both of whom gave half of their share to Sūmitrā. Thus the three wives ate the divine pudding and by and by all of them became pregnant. Kauśalyā and Kaikeyī gave birth to a son each and Sūmitrā gave birth to two sons. The son of Kauśalyā was called Rāma, the son of Kaikeyī was named Bharata and the sons of Sumitra were called Lakshmana and Satrugna. (Karna Rama Ramayana, Bala Kanda).

1. In Agnipurāṇa Chapter 6, it is stated that the name of this hermit boy was Yaśādatta.

10) The boon of Sani (Saturn). Astronomers are of opinion that famine will occur in the world for the period of twelve years, when the planet Sani (Saturn) comes into the orbit of Rohini (a star). But now the planet Saturn does not come into the orbit of the star Rohini. There is a story in the Padma Purana, which states that this happened so because of a boon Sani had given to Dasaratha.

During the regime of Dasaratha the planet Sani approached the orbit of Rohini. Experts in astronomy said that the earth would be ruined by famine etc. if Sani cleft the star Rohini. Hearing this Dasaratha took his bow and arrows, got into its chariot, and started for the firmament. He travelled for one lac and a quarter of yojanas (leagues) and reached the hind part of Rohini, which is beyond the sun. Adorned with golden garments and a golden crown studded with jewels, seated on a golden chariot decorated with precious stones, and a lofty flagstaff and yoked with horses of the colour of swan, the king shone in the sky as a second sun. He drew the bow-string right up to his ear and placed it in the arrow of destruction. When the devas and the asuras saw the arrow of destruction they began to tremble with fear. Sani came to Dasaratha and fell before him and said that he would grant any boon to the King, and requested him to recall the arrow of destruction. Dasaratha told Sani that he only wanted Sani not to come to the orbit of Rohini. Sani agreed. From that day onwards Sani has never entered the orbit of Rohini. (Padma Purana, Uttara Kanda, Chapter 34).

11) Death. Rama and Lakshmana with Sitata went to live in the forest. Sumantra who accompanied them up to the river Ganges, returned to the palace. By then Dasaratha had fallen down filled with grief. He had never recovered from that state of unconsciousness. At the time of his death Bharata and Satrughna had been away in the kingdom of Kekaya and Rama and Lakshmana in the forest. Thus the curse he incurred in his younger days from the aged hermit, the father of Sravana, was fully realized.

12) Dasaratha appears again. Ravana was killed in the battle. Sitata was tested in fire and found sinless. Rama accepted her, seeing that her conjugal fidelity was not marred. At this time Siva appeared before Rama in a divine aeroplane. Dasaratha was seated in that plane clad in pure garments. He took Rama and Lakshmana into his lap and embraced them. He blessed them and Sitata who was standing with folded hands. Then Dasaratha disappeared. (Valmiki Ramayana, Yuddha Kanda, Sarga 122).

DAŚARHA. A king of the Yadu family. He was so famous that his descendants were called the Daśarhas. As Sri Kṛṣṇa was born as a descendant in the line of Daśarha, Sri Kṛṣṇa is sometimes called Daśarha, in certain places. For genealogy see under Yaduvanaśa.

DAŚARHĪ I. A woman belonging to Daśarha's family. Vijaya, the wife of Drumanyu, Sudeva, the wife of Vikanta, Subhāngi, the wife of Kuru, Kunti, the wife of Pāṇḍu—all these Yadava women are entitled to the name Daśarhi. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 38).

DAŚARHĪ II. In Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Dākṣiṇātyapāṭha, Chapter 38 we find that the assembly of the Yadava leaders was known by the name of Daśarhi.

DAŚĀRNA. An inhabitant of the Daśārha country. This name is also used for addressing King Daśārha. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 47).

DAŚĀRNA(M). An ancient country, famous in the Purāṇas.

1) General information. This country had been divided into two, Eastern Daśārha and Western Daśārha. The modern Patna and the surrounding places comprised Eastern Daśārha and the places of Malva, the Western Daśārha. Some are of opinion that Daśārha comprises the South-East part of the Vindhyā mountain. It is mentioned in 'Meghadūta' that Vidyāśā was the capital of Daśārha. The modern name of Vidyāśā is Bhīsā.

2) Other information regarding Daśārha.

(1) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Abhi Parva, Chapter 112, Stanza 25, that once Pāṇḍu brought the country of Vidyāśa under subjugation.

(2) At another time Bhūmasena conquered the country of Daśārha. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 29, Stanza 5).

(3) Nakula once conquered this country. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 7).

(4) King Sudāmā ruled over the country of Daśārha. He had two daughters. Bhīma, the king of Vidarbhā married the first one and Virābhā the king of Cedi married the second daughter. Damayanti was the daughter of Bhīma. A daughter named Sunandā was born to Virābhā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 69).

(5) Before the battle of Bhīrastara, Hīranyavarmā was the King of Daśārha. Sīkaṇḍinī the daughter of Drupada went in the guise of a male and married the daughter of Hīranyavarmā. The king of Daśārha who had been deceived thus, attacked Drupada. But the problem was solved because Sīkaṇḍinī actually became a male. (See the word Ambā). (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 41).

(6) The king of Daśārha took the side of the Kauravas in the battle of Bhīrastara. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 12).

(7) Citraṅgada was the king of Daśārha at the time of the Aśvamedha sacrifice of Yudhisṭhira. In Mahābhārata, Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 83, it is stated that Arjuna defeated Ciraṅgada.

DAŚĀVATVA. Tenth son of Ikṣvāku. He ruled over the city of Māhiṣmati. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśasanā Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 6, that Daśāvata had a son named Madirāśva.

DAŚĀVATVEDHA. A holy place situated in Kurukṣetra. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 14, that those who bathe in this holy place will obtain the fruits of giving a gift of thousand cows.

DAŚĀVATVEDHIKA(M). A holy place in Kurukṣetra. Those who bathe here will attain Supreme Bliss. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 64).

DAŚĀVARA. An asura. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 14 that this asura (demon) serves Varuṇa and stays in his palace.

DAŚERAKA(S). Members of a Kṣatriya tribe. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 47).

DAŚERAKA(M). A place-name. It is by observing Śrävāṇa Dvādāśi at a spot to the west of this place that a Vaiśya attained mokṣa (salvation). (See under Śrävāṇadvādāśi).
DASūRA. A sage. For further details see under Saralolnā.

DASI. An important river in India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 31).

DASRA. The first of the gods called the Āśvinīdevas.

The two gods Dasa and Nāṣatya are known by the collective name Āśvinīdevas. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 17).

DASYU. The ancient dwellers of North India. What we see in Rgveda is mostly a history of the Aryan from the period of their exodus from the plateau Kumbha till they reached the banks of the Yamunā. The plateau of Kumbhā is Kabul. The Dasyus were the first people the Aryans had to confront with after passing the Indus. Rgveda bears testimony to the fact that the civilization of the Dasyus was far advanced than that of the Aryans. Sāṁbara, King of the Dasyus, was the ruler of hundred cities. All the cities were fortified with strong walls and fortresses, which are described as ‘āśvamayī’, ‘āyāi’, “ārātī” etc. The greatest enemies of the Aryan were the ‘Panīs’ of these cities. They were a particular class of people of these cities. In the ‘Nirukta of Yāska’ it is mentioned that panīs were traders. Names of many of the Kings of the Dasyus occur in the Rgveda. Dhuni, Cumūri, Pipru, Varcas, Sāṁbara and such others are the most valiant and mighty among them. The most important of the several tribes of the Dasyus were the Śimyus, the Kikaṭas, Śigrus and the Yakṣus. They are mentioned as the Anāsas in the Rgveda. (Anāsas—without nose). Perhaps their nose was flat; more over they are stated as having dark complexion. So it may be assumed that the Dasyus were Dravidians. They talked a primitive language, and they despised sacrificial religion. They did not worship Gods like Indra and others. They possibly worshipped the Phallus, Śiva, Devi and the like.

DATAKACCHA. An ancient country on the bank of the river, Narmadā. (Kathamātrasāgara).

DATTA (DATTAKA). See under Dattatreya.

DATAMITRA. This is another name of Sumitra the King of Sauvīra. Arjuna, during his conquest of the countries, defeated this King. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 189, Stanza 20).

DATATMAN. A Viṣvadeva. (A class of gods concerned with sacrifice to the manes). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 34).

DATATREYA. (DATTA). A hermit famous in the purāṇas.

1) Birth. Anāsūya, the wife of hermit Atri gave birth to Dattatreya. But Dattatreya was the incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu.

There is a story in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa how Mahāviṣṇu came to incarnate as Dattatreya.

Once there was a hermit called Aniṃāndava (Māṇḍava). While the hermit was engaged in silent meditation, some robbers passed by that way. The King’s men who were chasing the robbers, came to the hermit and asked him about the robbers. The hermit did not break the silence. The King’s men, thinking the hermit to be the thief bound his hands and legs and took him to the palace. The King ordered Māṇḍava to be killed by piercing his body with a trident. Accordingly a trident was posted on a hill far away and Māṇḍava was seated on the tip of it. Māṇḍavya lay there in agony.

It was at this time that Śiḷavati, famous for her conjugal fidelity, went to the house of a harlot, carrying her husband Ugraśravas on her shoulder. When they passed by that way Ugraśravas scolded Aniṃāndavya; getting angry at this Aniṃāndavya cursed Ugraśravas that he would get his head broken and die before the sun-rise. Śiḷavati became very sorry when she heard the curse and she also cursed. “Let the sun not rise tomorrow”.

The sun did not rise next day. Everything in the world was in chaos. The devas were flurried. They went to Brahmā. Brahmā took them to Śiva. They could not find a solution. So all of them approached Mahāviṣṇu. The Trimūrtis (three gods) told the devas that the problem would be solved, and the devas returned. Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Mahēśvara went to Śiḷavati. Before seeing Śiḷavati, they went to Anāsūya the wife of Atri and sought her help to persuade Śiḷavati to recall her curse. Thus Anāsūya and the Trimūrtis approached Śiḷavati and spoke compassionate and consolatory words. At last Śiḷavati recalled the curse. The Trimūrtis convinced Śiḷavati, that Ugraśravas would not die. The pleased Trimūrtis asked Anāsūya to ask for any boon. She replied that she did not want any boon except that the Trimūrtis should take birth as her sons. Accordingly Mahāviṣṇu took birth as Dattatreya, Śiva as Durvāsas and Brahmā as Candra, in the womb of Anāsūya. This is how Dattatreya was born. Dattatreya did penance from his childhood and became a hermit. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 39 to 44).

2) Kārtavīryājuna and Dattatreya. When Kārtavīryājuna became King Dattatreya had become very famous. Kārtavīryājuna wanted to obtain supernatural powers. So he called the hermit Garga and asked for his advice. Garga advised him that Dattatreya was the incarnation of Viṣṇu and that he would grant his wishes. So Kārtavīryājuna and his wife came to the river Narmadā, and taking bath in the river, began to worship Dattatreya, who was doing penance closely. Dattatreya was pleased and went to Kārtavīryājuna and asked him what his desire was. He requested for thousand hands and to be a youth for ever, and such other things. Dattatreya granted his wishes. After that Kārtavīryājuna would very often go to the hermit Dattatreya for his advice. (Brahma Purāṇa, Chapter 44).

3) Cursing Rāvaṇa. Once Rāvaṇa went to the hermitage of Dattatreya. The hermit had placed a waterpot purified by reciting spells and incantations. Rāvaṇa stole that waterpot. When the hermit knew this, he cursed Rāvaṇa saying, “Since the water, which was evoked by spells and incantations, has fallen on your head, Monkeys will pollute your head by treading on it.” (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

4) Exhortation to the Śādhyas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyogya Parva, Chapter 36, Stanza 4, that the hermit Dattatreya gave exhortations to the Śādhyas (the sons of Dharmadeva by his wife Śādhyā).

5) A boon for the birth of Nahūṣa. See Nahūṣa.

DATTOLI. A son born to hermit Pulastya by his wife Priti. This Dattoli was in his previous birth, Agastya of the Svāyamābhiva manvantara. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anśa 1, Chapter 10).

DAYAKRAMA. (INHERITANCE). Dāyakrama is the system by which the wealth of parents is received by the heirs. The system of inheritance as described by Manu is as follows:—

1) After the death of the parents, all the children should divide their wealth among themselves. When either the father or the mother is alive, the sons should not take their wealth.

2) If the wealth is not divided, the eldest brother should keep the whole of it in his custody and maintain his brothers and sisters like a father.

3) Of the entire wealth, the eldest brother may take one-twentih part, the second brother, one-fortieth part and the third brother, one-eighth part and the balance is to be divided equally among all of them.

4) If there are more than three sons, the eldest and the youngest may take one-twentieth and one-eighth (of the entire wealth) respectively, and each of the other brothers may take one-eighth. The rest of the property must be divided equally among all of them.

5) After dividing like this, if there are unmarried sisters, each of the brothers should give one-fourth of his share for their marriage.

6) The ornaments which the mother had received by way of her dowry etc. may be taken after her death by her unmarried daughters.

7) If, after his marriage, one of the brothers dies, the brother who keeps his movable and immovable properties, must beget children by the brother’s wife and hand over the above properties to her issue. (See under Manusmriti).

Dayanáksetra. A famous temple of Goddess Diana in Ephesus. In Greek mythology Diana (Dayānā) is the goddess of hunting. She is also identified with the Moon Goddess. Being a virgin goddess, she came to be worshipped by virgins who regarded her as their patron. Dayānā (Diana) is one of the beautiful daughters of the supreme God, Zeus. Her idol was worshipped in many places in Greece. There was a famous temple of this goddess in the town of Ephesus. This temple was destroyed in the 3rd Century B.C. by enemies.

Deva (S). Gods or deities.

1) General information. From time immemorial belief in Devas has existed in every country and all religions have lauded their superior nature and power. It was the Hindus and the Buddhists who first applied the term ‘Deva’ to certain very subtle beings recognized in all religions. The Pārsē religion (Zaratuštroma) has spoken about seven Devarājans and their attendants, ‘Ameš pentas’ is the actual term used for the Devarājā. The Christian religion refers to nine sects of Devas like Srafi, Kherubi, Dominic, Angel etc. Islam refers to four chief Devas viz. Gabriel, the presiding Deva over revelations, Mikhail of protection, Asiriyal of death and Israfil of resurrection. An important section of the Rgveda is Stūkats about Devās like Indra, Mitra, Varuna, Agni etc. In Yaça etc. Devas occupy a very important place. The Kcnopaniṣad states that the concealed and haughty Devas were taught a lesson by God. The subject matter of the Ksthopaniṣad is the advice given by Yama to Naciketas. The Munḍkapaniṣad says that the Devas, man and birds originated from God.1 There are references about Deva worship in the Smritis. The Purāṇas and Upāpūnas contain scientific discussions, about the origin, work or functions, classes, etc. of Devas. The Mantra-śāstra and Tantraśāstra deal also about the various sects and class of Devas, their nature, and the worship to be offered to them etc.

2) Christian Devas, Satan and devils. Christian religious books commonly use the term Mālakhas for Devas. Greek mythology contains a story about the Mālakhas, who did not obey the orders of Jehovah and how He cursed them, turned them into devils and flung them into hell. And, in hell they organised a revolutionary party to fight Jehovah. Many leaders talked on the subject of how to take vengeance on Jehovah. It was nearabout this period that Jehovah created with the dust on earth Adam as his beloved son and settled him in the garden of Aden. God created from the ribs of Adam the woman called Eve, and they lived in Eden quite happily. Satan and other leaders in hell decided that the greatest revenge that could be taken upon Jehovah was to create troubles for his dear son, Adam in Eden. Accordingly Satan went to Eden and made Adam and Eve eat the forbidden fruit with the result that Jehovah cursed and turned them into human beings and turned them out of Eden. Milton in his reputed poem Paradise Lost has told the above story in inimitable language.

3) Indian Devas. Most of the Indian Devas are the sons of Kaśyapa Prājapati by Aditi, daughter of Daśa Prājapati. The total number of Devas is 33 crores. The Devas are divided into many classes or sections like Ādiyās, Viśvadevās, Vasus, Tuṣṭitas, Ābhaśvaras, Anilas, Mahārājikas, Sādhyas, Rudras, Vidyādhara, Piṭṛdevas etc. There are further divisions like Apsaras, Virūpākṣas, Bhadrās, Gandharvas, Kumābhūjas, Rākṣasas, Nāgas, Aśvinis, Kinnaras, Kīṃpurusas, Pīcās, Ghyaikas, Siddhas, Cārapas, Matras, Kūmārjas, Bhūtas, Vētālas, etc. Yet another division is into Lokapālas, Lipikas etc. The Devas are classified with special reference to bhūtānas like Pṛthvī etc. and are, therefore, referred to as Bhūdevatās, Agnidevatās, Vāyuvevatās, etc. The presiding spirit of Bhūdevatās is Kubera, of the Jaladevatās is Varuṇa, of the Agnidevatās, Vāyuvāgavān and of the Ākāśdevatās, Indra. And, under them there are various sets of Devas in charge of different departments. Sādhyas, Vasus, Ādiyās, Apsaras etc. are Ākāśdevas, Margitas and Gandharvas, Vāyuvevas. Yakṣas and Yakṣīs are servants of Kubera. Virūpākṣa, Bhadrā etc. are Bhūdevas. Virūpākṣa supports the earth according to the Vāmikī Purāṇam. Those who protect nidhis (treasures) may also be considered Bhūmidevas.

There are 33 bosses or presiding spirits for the 33 crores of Devas. Dvādaśa/Ādiyās (12) Ekādaśarudras (11) Aśtavasus (8) and Aśvinidevas (2) are the 33 chiefs of Devas. Indra is the chief of all of them.

4) The term Deva. The word Deva means light and also play. Devas shine forth, they are also playful. Thus the name is quite apt for them. (See Grāmadevatā).

Devaḥagā. A king of the Yayāti dynasty. (Bhagavata Navama Skandha).

Devaḥagārautārṣa. A rṣi, the son of Śruta and learned in yaṣīs. He had accurate knowledge as to which parts of the yajña-cow should be distributed to whom, and till death he did not impart this knowledge to anyone. But, sometime afterwards a non-human individual taught the subject to Girija, son of Babhru. (Aitareya Brāhmaṇa).

At the time when the Śrījayas and the Kuru kings were living in amity consequent upon the dākṣiṇāyaṇa yajña it was this Devabhāga who acted as the priest of both the parties. His theories on Sāvitrāgni are quoted in Taṅtirīya Brāhmaṇa.

DEVABHRAṬ. An effulgent Devatā who was the son of Ravi and father of Subhrāṭ. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 42).

DEVĀDARŚA. An ācārya in the line of Vyāsa’s disciples. He was the disciple of Kabandha, and he had many disciples. Medhā, Brahmacali, Sautāyana and Pippalāṇa were chief among those disciples. (See genealogy of Gurus).

DEVADARUVANA. A holy centre. A dip in the tirtha here is productive of very good results. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 27).

DEVADĀSA. A rich Vaiṣya extolled much in the Kathāsaritsāgara: He lived in Pātaliputra and had married the daughter of a very rich Vaiṣya of Paunḍravardhana. After his father’s death Devadāsa lost all his wealth in gambling, and his wife foresook his impecunious husband and returned home.

After roaming about for some time the helpless Devadāsa decided to go to his wife’s house, and one mid-night he went there. While hiding himself there in the darkness he heard his wife telling her paramour the following: “In the four corners of Devadāsa’s house are hidden four treasures. But he does not know about the treasures hidden thus by one of his fore-fathers. I got the information from his mother. You should purchase the property for a small price.”

No sooner did Devadāsa hear the above than he hurried back to his house and dug up the treasure and thus became wealthy again. The paramour of his wife went to him a few days later and purchased the property at a heavy price. But, when he dug up the place no treasure was found. Then he wanted to sell back the property to Devadāsa himself, but he refused to purchase it. The case was taken before the King when Devadāsa detailed the whole story. And, as ordered by the King, Devadāsa disfigured his wife and wedded another wife. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Lāvāṇakalāṁbankam, Tarāṅga 5).

DEVADATTĀ I. A famous brahmin boy whose story is described in the Kathāsaritsāgara.

Devadatta was the son of the Brahmin Haridatta of Kambukapura. Though as a boy Devadatta learnt all the arts and sciences when he grew up to be a youth he became a very wayward fellow. Dice-play became his main job. One day in a game of dice he lost even his cloths, and being afraid of his father, he left the place without returning home.

Devadatta roamed about, and during one such trip he saw a deserted temple, and a muni called Jālapāda engaged in reciting mantras. Devadatta prostrated before the muni and told him all the details about himself. The muni accepted Devadatta as his śiśya and promised to secure vidyādharahood for him.

Next night Jālapāda led Devadatta to a burning ghat, nearby the temple. After conducting Pūjā in the shade of a fig tree with offerings of Pāyasa and Vaiśvadevabali the muni told Devadatta thus: “You should come here daily and perform pūjā like this, and pray at the close of it, ‘Oh! Vidyutprabhā! please accept my pūjā.’

Devadatta acted according to the above advice of the muni, and one day, at the close of his pūjā the tree broke open into two and a beautiful female who appeared from it took him with her saying that her mistress wanted him. He was thus taken to a house studded with gems wherein he saw a noble lady seated on a cot. She caught Devadatta by his hands and after seating him alongside said to him: “I am Vidyutprabhā, daughter of the YAjśa king Ratnavarṣa. I am a virgin girl. Muni Jālapāda has worshipped me so much that I have decided to fulfil his desire. I am in love with you and you will please wed me.”

Accordingly Devadatta married Vidyutprabhā and lived there with her. In due course she conceived, and Devadatta met Jālapāda and told him about the whole affair, and the muni, to achieve his personal object asked Devadatta to cut open the abdomen of Vidyutprabhā and take to him the child found therein. Devadatta did not at all relish the idea, yet reluctant to disobey his preceptor he returned to his wife. She permitted him to carry out the directions of the muni, yet his mind did not approve of the action. Then Vidyutprabhā herself cut open her abdomen, took the child out of it and placing it before her husband told him thus:—

“He who eats the child will become a Vidyādharā. Take it. I was a Vidyādharī turned into a Yakṣī by a curse, and to cut open my abdomen and take out the child like this was the redemption promised me from the curse, and now I go to the Vidyādharā world; we shall meet there.” And she disappeared.

In great sorrow Devadatta brought the child to Jālapāda who, after sending him out on the pretext of his (Jālapāda’s) performing Bhaireṇapūjā, ate up the child. Devadatta returned and when he knew of the action of his preceptor he was overcome with rage. But the latter rose up to the skies assuming the form of a Vidyādharā. Devadatta made up his mind to anyhow take revenge upon Jālapāda, and he also went to Vidyādharaloka with the help of a Vetāla whom he befriended by offering human flesh. And, there he saw Jālapāda drunk with pride at his Vidyādharahood sitting on a throne of gems in a mansion. Meanwhile Vidyutprabhā who was now once more a Vidyādharī had turned down the advances made by the erstwhile Jālapāda for her love. But, at the sight of Devadatta her face flushed with love for him while, in fear, the sword fell down from the hands of Jālapāda who now fainted. Devadatta prevented the Vetāla from killing Jālapāda and he (Vetāla) at the instance of Devadatta took Jālapāda to the burning ghat and cremated him there.

Kātyāyanīdevi at this time appeared before Devadatta and pleaded with his courage appointed him as chief of the Vidyādharas. He wedded Vidyutprabhā and lived happily. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Caturdārikālaṁbankam, Tarāṅga 3).

DEVADATTĀ II. A king of ancient India, son of King Jayadatta. Jayadatta wanted to marry his son Devadatta to the daughter of a Vaiṣya in Pātaliputra. Though it was a far cry from Pātaliputra to Jayadatta’s court the Vaiśya married his daughter to the prince as he attached much importance to such an alliance with the King. From the dowry given by the Vaiśya to his daughter the resources of her father appeared to be very meagre to Devadatta. After some time Devadatta’s wife returned to her house with the permission of her husband. During her absence Jayadatta, expired, enemies attacked his kingdom and Devadatta with his mother ran away from his kingdom. Sometime after that he started for his wife’s house. But, feeling that it would not be proper for him to personally tell his father-in-law about what had happened to him he waited outside an inn near his wife’s house, and he had not waited there for long when he saw a woman descending by a cord from the other door of the house. He felt deeply mortified to detect that it was his wife who was thus descending. And, when she, not recognising Devadatta in his dirty clothes, asked who he was, he answered a ‘traveller’. Taking no notice of this ‘traveller’ she got into the inn, and Devadatta followed her. Inside the inn she was met by a man who beat her for being late to go to him; but, in spite of the beating she pleased him with coy words. Then and there Devadatta divorced her in his mind, but remained there observing their love-making. In the course of their love-play an ear-ring studded with costly gems rolled down the floor from her cars, but she did not notice it. She parted from her paramour before dawn. Devadatta went to Kānyakubja with the ear-ring, and there he pledged it for one lakh sovereigns with which money he collected an army and conquered back his lost kingdom. Then he redeemed the pledge and sent the ear-ring to his father-in-law. The whole incident became public. When she realised the fact that the stranger whom she had met at the inn was her own husband, Devadatta’s wife felt so deeply hurt and humiliated that her heart was broken and she died. (Kathāsāritaśāgar, Naravāhana-datta Janana, Tarāṅga 1).

DEVADATTA III. Father of the reputed muni Utatthya. (Sāyatapasa). (See Sāyatapasa.)

DEVADATTA (M). The divine conch of Arjuna. Maya got this conch from Varuṇa and he kept it in the sāhā of Vṛṣaparvan, which was in Bindusaras on Mount Maināka to the south of Mount Kailāsa. When Maya built the palace at Indraprastha for the Pāṇḍavas he went to Bindusaras and brought for Arjuna that conch called Devadattam, and a club for Bhīmasena. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3).

In the battle of Kurukṣetra Arjuna mounted a white horse and blew his conch Devadattam. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 14).

DEVĀDHIPA. A king who in his previous life was an asura. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 26).

DEVADUTA. A messenger of the Devas. When Dharmaputra refused to live in heaven without his brothers like Karna it was this Devadūta with whom Indra sent Dharmaputra to Karna and others. (M.B. Svarga-rohaṇa Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 14). This Devadūta is to be meditated upon at dawn and before sun-set everyday. (Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 14).

DEVADYUMNA. A king of the dynasty of Bharata. From Bharata, son of Rṣabha, was born Sumati, from Sumati Devajit and from him Devadyumna was born. Devadyumna was the grand-father of King Pratīpa and father of King Parameśthi. (Bhāgavata Pañcama Skandha).

DEVADYUTI. A Rṣi who dwelt in his āśrama on the banks of river Sarasvati. Owing to the blessing of Viṣṇu a son called Sumitra was born to him. As a result of his doing rigorous tapas for 1000 years he shone with a rare effulgence. Though Viṣṇu appeared to him one day in the month of Viśākha and asked him to choose any boon he wanted, he, who was so much detached in life prayed only for devotion to God. (Padma Purāṇa, Uțtra Khaṇḍa, Chapter 212).

DEVAGAN. See Manyantara.

DEVAGARĪ. A Rṣi. He too was present as one of the hotṛs (Priests) at the yajña conducted by Bhratā at the Puṣkara temple. (Padma Purāṇa, Śrṣṭi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 34).

DEVAGRAHA. An evil planet. Devagraha dārsana (seeing this planet) will lead to insanity. (Vana Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 47).

DEVAHĀVYA. A sage, a member of Indra’s assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7).

DEVĀHOTRA. A maharṣi, who was an honoured member at the yajña performed by Uparicarasva. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 336, Verse 9).

DEVĀHRADA. A tirtha centre on the heights of Mount Kālañjara. A dip in its holy waters will bring the same result as the dāna (gift) of a thousand cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 56).

DEVĀHUṬI. A daughter of Śvāyambhuva Manu, the son of Bharata. The Manu had two sons called Priyavrata and Uttānapāda and three daughters named Ākūti, Devahūti and Praśūti. Ākūti was married by Ruciprājāpati and Devahūti by Kardamaprajāpati and Praśūti to Daksipraja-pati. Kapila, the mighty exponent of the Sāskhya system of philosophy and great ascetic was the son born to Kardama by Devahūti. Kapila taught his mother the world famous Kapila Śāstra, (Devībhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha) and when the teaching was over he bade farewell to her and took to forest life. And, his mother performed a yajña on the lines advised by her son, on the banks of river Sarasvati. Because she took three baths daily her hairs became a mixture of black and blue in colour and she got emancipated due to fasting. She wore the bark of trees. Devahūti, who realised all the principles and the truth became blind to all external objects like gardens, maidens, mansions etc. Thus immersed in meditation she in course of time attained siddhi (realisation). The particular spot on the banks of Sarasvati where she attained Siddhi is called Siddhānapada.

DEVĀHVAYA. A king in ancient India. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 235).

DEVĀKĪ. A king in ancient India. Born in the Vayāti dynasty he shone like Indra (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67). He was the brother of Ugrasena, father of Kanisē, and the father of Devakī, the mother of Kṛṣṇa. (Sabhā Parva, Southern Text, Chapter 22).

DEVAKI. A king in ancient India. He fostered a girl born to a brahmin by a Śūdra woman. It was this girl whom Vidura married. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 12).

DEVAKI. A king, a contemporary of the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 17).

DEVAKI. Mother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus:—Bhratā
DEVAKŚATRA

A king of the Yayāti dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

DEVAKULĀYA. Grand-daughter of Marici mahārṣi, who lived in the Svāyambhuva Manvantara. As she washed in her previous life the holy feet of Mahāviṣṇu, in the next birth she was born as river Gangā. (Bhāgavata, Caturtha Skandha).

DEVAKUNDA. (DEVAHRAĐADAM). A sacred place. A dip in the sacred waters there is productive of results equal to that of an Āśvamedha yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 20).

DEVAKUNDAM II. A particular part of Krṣṇavēn river. It is known as Jātismarana hradam also. A bath in the holy waters here will evoke memories of previous life. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 37).

DEVAKŪṬA I. A mountain 18,000 miles in extent and 2000 miles in height. Devakūṭa is on the eastern side of Mahāmeru. There is another mountain called Jathara near this mountain. (Devī Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

1. Devaki Rohini caiva Vasudevastathā sutaḥ
   Krṣṇarūpāsayaṣyantāḥ śokāraν vi jhauḥ śmrī mūrlī Prāṇāṁśa vijahastātra bhagavadvirahāṭurāḥ.
of Punḍarika and Devānīka the son of Kṣemadhanvā. In the navama skanda of Bhāgavata it is said that Devānīka was the grandfather of Pāriyātra and father of Rksa.

DEVĀNTAKA. A Rākṣasa, the son of Rudraketu. When the people of the three worlds could no longer stand his depredational Gaṇapati incarnated in Kaśyapa’s house and killed Devāntaka. (Padma Purāṇa, Srṣi Khanda).

DEVĀPA. A king born in the Yāyāti dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Navana Skandha).

DEVAPATHA (M). A holy centre. To stay there bathing in the holy waters is as productive of results as conducting a Devasatra (Yajña). (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 45).

2) Devāpi resorted to the forest. Devāpi was the best loved by his father and was the apple of the eyes of his subjects. But he was suffering from skin disease. So, when Pratīpa wanted to crown him king the people objected. Their argument was that God would not be pleased if a man with skin disease became king. The king yielded to their wishes and crowned Santanu as his successor. The youngest brother Bālhika went and stayed in his mother’s house. Devāpi who was disappointed cd that he was denied the crown, left for the forest and spent the rest of his life in penance. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 149).

His end. Devāpi did tapas at the Prthūdaka tirtha in the interior of Kurukṣetra and ultimately attained salvation. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 37).

DEVĀPI II. A warrior who fought on the Pāṇḍava side in the great war. He hailed from Cedi. Karṇa killed him. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 48).

DEVAPRĀSTHAM. A city in the northern borders of ancient India. King Saṇābindu had his capital there. (Sahā Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 13)

DEVAPRĀTHA. A king of the Yāyāti dynasty, (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

DEVAPRATīṢṬHA. The sacred rite of installation of Devas (idols) in temples for which definite rules have been laid down by great ācāryas. According to the rules Vāsudebamūrti is to be installed in the centre of the paṇcāyatanas. (The Śrī kovil—the sanctum sanctorum and the four paths used for the procession of the deity, around it). The mūrtis Vāmana, Narasimha, Hayagrīva and Varāha are to be installed in the zones (corners) dominated by Agni, Nṛṣī, Vāyu and Isāna respectively. Nārāyaṇamūrti should be installed at the centre of the prāśāda. Ambikā should be installed in Agni’s corner, Aḍītya in Nṛṣī’s corner, Brahmā in Vāyu’s corner and Śivalinga in the Isāna corner. Liṅga in the form of Rudra should also be installed in the Isāna corner; or it may be installed in all the nine corners or zones. In that case Vāsudevamūrti should be installed at the centre. All the Devas bearing the name Rāma must be installed to the east of the Prāśāda. Lokapālakas like Indra should be installed at the eight places starting with the east. In Paṇcāyatana pratiṣṭhā Puruṣottama should be installed at the centre. Mahālakṣmi and Vaiṣṇavaṇa are to be installed to the east of the Prāśāda, and the Mātrs in the south. Subrahmanya, Gaṇapati, Isāna and the planets (grahaś) like Sun should be installed in the west. Daśāvātārāmūrtis (ten incarnations of Viṣṇu) should be installed in the North. Ādīkā should be installed in Agni’s zone, Sarasvatī in Vāyu’s zone, Ambikā in Nṛṣī’s zone and Śrī Bhagavati in Isāna zone. In temples with thirteen Aḷayas Viṣṇu should be installed at the centre. Mūrtis like Keśava should be installed in the centre.

Devapratīṣṭha (idols) are of seven varieties like those made of earth, of wood, of metals, of gems, of sandal wood, of stone and of flowers. Of the above, idols made of earth, sandalwood and of flowers are meant only for temporary use, but they also grant all the desires of the devotees.

Stone for idols should be got from mountains. Pāṇḍura (white), Aruṇa (red), Pīta (yellow) and Kṛṣṇa (black) rocks having any one of these four colours may be selected. If no such stone is available any other stone may be used, but by doing homa and reciting Nārasiṇha mantra the attributes of any of the specified vargas should be transferred to it. It is best to have white markings on the stone selected for the idol. There are the three genders, masculine, feminine and neuter with reference to stones. Stone which produces the sound of bell metal on being hit and gives out sparks of fire on being cut is of the masculine gender. Stone which possesses these attributes to a lesser degree is of the feminine gender. Stone with no shape is of neuter gender. Beside these three varieties there are the sagarbha (pregnant) stones also, viz. stones with round markings on them, and they should not be used for making idols. Once it is decided to make an idol, Vanayajña should be performed first. To worship the forest from which the stone for the idol was to be obtained is vanayajña. A specified place in the forest should be dug up, the pit treated with cow-dung and a small platform raised and Viṣṇu worshipped thercon. After sacrificial offerings etc. instruments for the construction of the idol like tāṅka (chisel) should be worshipped. To sprinkle on the stone śālītoya (water in which paddy grains are put) purified with the chanting of astramantra is the next step. After that bhūtabali (offerings to the spirits of the stone) should be performed upon which the bhūtas residing inside the stone will quit. Then the ācārya should go to sleep repeating the svapna mantra.1

1. Svapnaparāsya:
Oṁ namāḥ sākala-lokāya Viṣṇu prabhaviṣṇave
Viṣṇu vīṣvarūpāya svapnaḥdiṣṭa namāḥ //
Aṣṭāva devadēva prasāntiṃ tāvānīkam//
Svapna sarvāni kāryāni ṛ 리스트 tu yāni me//
Oṁ Oṁ hum phaṭ Viṣṇu svāhā.
If he dreams good dreams everything is quite right; if bad dreams are dreamt, the next morning narasiṃhahoma should be performed, the stone given offerings with chanting of astra mantra. The edge of the instruments used for sculpturing the idol should be firstly smeared with ghee, honey etc. The architect should be one who has gained mastery over the senses. He should first cut the stone into a square, and then it should be placed on a chariot, covered with cloth and taken to his house. Then after performing a pūjā the work on the idol should be started. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 43).

DEVAṆUSKARIṆI. A very ancient tirtha in Indi a a dip in which is as efficacious as performing an Aśvamedha yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 45).

DEVARĀJA I. A king in ancient India who spent his days in the assembly of Yama worshipping him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 26).

DEVARĀJA II. An immoral brahmin who had been a trader in Kirātana gara. Once he met a whore at the bathing pool and got so inextricably tied up with her that he killed his parents and wife for her sake. Then one day he had to go to Pratīṣṭhāna gara on business where he heard sacred stories being read. He had also a glimpse of the divine. A month after that he died. Though an evil fellow, because of his having worshipped Śiva for a month he had the good fortune to go to Mount Kailāsa after his death. (Śiva Purāṇa Māhātmyam).

DEVARAKIṢṬITĀ. Sister of Devaki, mother of Śrī Kaṭuṇa. (See Devaki).

DEVĀṆANYA (M). A holy centre. It was here where Ambā, daughter of the Kaṭuṇa king did tapas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 186, Verse 27).

DEVARĀTA I. A king who flourished in Dharma putra's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 26).

DEVARĀTA II. (Śunaśeṣapha). General. A king of Mithilā. The kings of Mithilā were commonly called Janaka. Devarāta was called Devarāta Janaka. (See Janaka).

2) Genealogy. From Viśṇu descended thus:—Brahmā,—Bhrigu,—Ciyavana—Urva—Ṛcika—Devarāta (Śunaśeṣapha). (For details see Śunaśeṣapha).

DEVARĀTA III. A house-holder whose daughter Kaṭalā was married by Soṇa. Kaṭalā was killed by Mārīca. Devarāta and Soṇa along with Viśvāmitra went to Śivaloka in search of Kaṭalā. As Kaṭalā had, at the time of her death, uttered the word 'Hara' (Śiva) she had gone to Mount Kailāsa and was spending her days in the service of Pārvatī who, after making Kaṭalā and Soṇa participate in Somavāra vrata sent them back to earth. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 112).

DEVĀṢAṆAM. A mountain. Here lived Agastya in his āśrama for some time. (M.B, Chapter 88, Verse 17).

DEVĀṢAṆĀMI. A very reputed muni. He had a wife called Ruci and a disciple called Vipula. (See Vipula III).

DEVĀṢAṆĀMI II. A brahmin, an erudite scholar in the Vedas. His story was once told to Pārvatī by Śiva as follows:—

Devaśaman, the very erudite brahmin scholar in the Vedas came to be much respected by the people of the four varpas (Castes) because of his constant and unfailing performance of the various religious duties and rites like the Agnīhotra etc. He had sons, relations and cows in abundance. But, he did not observe the Śukla-pancāmi in Proṣṭhapada (Bhādrapada) which is one of the dvādaśacāndra māsas (the 12 solar months). That day was his father's death anniversary (Sraddha day) for which he would invite Brahmins on the previous evening. And, in the morning he would get cooked rice by his wife in 18 different ways for the gratification of the departed soul. Then will he feed the Brahmins. On one such day he duly treated a Brāhmin versed in the Vedas. In the evening when he was washing his feet with water brought by his wife he heard the following conversation between a dog and an ox.

Dog:—Please attend to my words about what my daughter-in-law did. One day, as fate would have it, I went to my son's house, where a snake was drinking milk, and I drank the whole of the milk which was left over by it. My daughter-in-law saw me drinking it and I was absolutely crest-fallen. I don't feel any yearning even for food.

Ox:—Now dog, please attend to my sorrow and grief. Today my son feasted the Brahmins, but he did not even think of me. Nobody gave me even a blade of grass or a drop of water. I have not tasted anything today. Moreover I am a captive also. All this must be the result of some sin committed by me in my past life; no doubt about it.

The very learned and intelligent brahmin inferred from the above talk that the dog and ox were his mother and his father respectively. He thought to himself: they have been born as animals in my house. What remedy shall I find out therefor?

On account of such painful thoughts the brahmin could not sleep in the night. Early in the morning he went to sage Vasiṣṭha and unburdened his heart to him and requested him to find a solution to the low and mean birth which had become his parents' fate. After meditating for some time the great sage told the brahmin as follows:—

"Look here, the ox was, in its previous birth, a great brahmin in Kuḍinana gara. He did not observe the Śukla-pancāmi in the month of Proṣṭhapada, the day being the death anniversary of his father. His wife had menstruation on the same day, but she herself feasted the Brahmins. A woman is impure during the four days of menstruation. Because of having feasted the Brahmins on the first day of her monthly period the brahmin's wife was born as a dog. As for the husband, he was born an ox as he not only did not observe the Śukla-pancāmi day, but also shared the sin of his wife. Further questioned by the brahmin as to what he should do for the salvation of his parents, Vasiṣṭha advised him to observe the Śrī paṇcāmi in the month of Proṣṭhapada (Bhādrapada). He did so and his parents blessed him and attained salvation. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 78).

DEVĀṢAṆĀMI III. (See Mitrabhedha).

DEVĀṢAṆĀMI IV. The hero of a story told by Viṣṇu-śarman.

Viṣṇu-śarman, the intelligent preceptor, told five stories based on five tactics to educate the five dull sons of emperor Sudarśana. The fifth tactic is called asaṁprakṛtya. He told two important stories to illustrate the dangers, which would happen to those who act in haste and in anger, without patiently attempting to find out the truth. Devaśaman is the hero of one of the stories.

Story one. Once upon a time there lived in Gauḍa-ṛṣaba a brahmin called Devasārman with his wife Yajñasena. When his wife got pregnant Devasārman told her that a good and lucky son would be born to them to which she replied as follows:— "On no account build castles in the air and brood over things. I shall tell you a story about a danger which happened to one who built castles in the air. A brahmačāri was carrying home in a pot on his head some rice flour. On the way he thought thus: "I will purchase a she-goat with the money I get out of the sale of this rice powder, and it will deliver two kids every year. I will sell all the kids and with the sale proceeds purchase a cow and when it multiplies I will have the wherewithals for cultivation and then I will do cultivation in a good field and produce much paddy. And when I have thus money in hand I will renovate my house and marry. We will then have a good son whom I will name Somaśarman, and if my wife, without caring for the boy, goes to milk the cow I will go to the cow shed and give her a good beating. "When his imagination reached this point the pot on his head received, without his knowing, a blow with the stick in his hands and it fell down on the ground and was broken to pieces."

Five or six days after telling the above story to her husband Yajñasena gave birth to a child. One day she went to the river to take her bath leaving the child to the care of her husband. Soon after a messenger came from the palace to invite Devasārman for food, the day being Amāvasa when Brahmins were fed well and also given daksinā, (presents of money). He could not wait till his wife arrived; the child became a problem to him.

The brahmin had a beloved Mongoose. After entrusting the child to the care of it the brahmin went to the palace. Within a short time a serpent was seen crawling towards the child and the Mongoose attacked it and bit it into pieces. Naturally the Mongoose got itself smeared all over with the blood of the serpent, and the brahmin on returning home finding the Mongoose bathed in blood thought it might have eaten the child and in a rage he killed the poor Mongoose. But, when he entered the room and found pieces of the killed serpent strewn all over there truth and light dawned on him. Yajñasena, who had returned after bath by now also found fault with him. The second story. Once there was a brahmin in very indigent circumstances. He was an orphan from his very childhood. One day while he was asleep quite weary and tired as he had no food that day some one appeared and told him in a dream that three sannyāsins would come to his house that noon and that if beaten to death they would turn into three pot-fulls of treasure with which he could live comfortably well.

His dream came true, and he locked up the treasure in his room after sending away a barber who had witnessed the incident with a piece of gold. The barber returned home cherishing in his mind the false belief that sannyāsins beaten to death would turn into pot-fulls of treasure. And, one day some sannyāsins came to his house and he began beating them and they ran out crying aloud. Their cries attracted the attention of the servants of the King. The barber's limbs were cut off and he was killed on Śīla (a three-pronged weapon).

On every such occasion souls of the departed used to appear and bless him. Once Devasārman went to Piṭṭloka with his pitṛs, and he got restless and sorry to find other pitṛs living there in greater comfort than the pitṛs of his parents. When he was told that the better fate of the other pitṛs was due to their sons performing Śrāddha at Mahiśāgarasangama he returned to earth and with the help of other people did Śrāddha at the saṅgamaṇḍa thus raised the condition of his pitṛs. (Skandha Purāṇa. Skandhas 1, 2 and 3).

DEVAŚARMĀ VI. A brahmin who lived on the northern side of river Kāverī. The following story about him is told in chapters 2, 4 and 12 of the Skanda Purāṇa. One day in the month of Kārttika he asked his son to bathe. The son refused to obey his father, who got angry at the disobedience of the son and cursed him to be turned into a rat. But, when the son begged his pardon he said that the boy would resume his old form when he heard about the greatness of Kārttika.

While the brahmin, thus turned into a rat, was roaming about in the forest it saw Viśvāmitra mahārāja seated under a tree with his disciples. The mahārāja was telling the disciples about the greatness of Kārttika. The brahmin boy—turned cat—heard the story and reverted to its old form as the brahmin boy.

DEVAŚARMĀ VII. See Māyā Śīva.

DEVAŚATTRA (M). A yajña. (See Vana Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 68).

DEVAŚENA I. A very intelligent king who ruled his country with Śrāvasti as his capital. (See Ummādīṇī).

DEVAŚENA II. Husband of Kiritisinga. (See Kiritisinga).

DEVAŚENA. Dakṣa's daughter and wife of Subrahmanya and a woman of rare beauty and purity. Daityasena and Devasena, daughters of Dakṣa, used to enjoy themselves at Mānasara saras. One day Kesi, the asura saw them and craved for their love. Daityasena agreed to become his wife, but Devasena refused, and she prayed for the help of Indra, who happened to come there at the moment. Indra and Kesi fought with each other. Kesi used the club against Indra, who broke it into two with his vajrāyuddha. Then Kesi hurled a mountain at Indra, who cut it also. Frightened to death Kesi then ran away with Daityasena to safety, and Devasena expressed her desire to Indra to have one who could defeat the Devas, Danavas and Yakṣas as her husband. But, Indra could not find such a one in the whole universe. Indra told Brahma about it. The Devas put their heads together and brought forth Subrahmanya from Śiva to be her husband. In the war between the Devas and the asuras Devasena helped Subrahmanya, and the asuras were completely destroyed. (Vana Parva, Chapters 223, 224).

DEVAŚĪLĀ. See Gayātirītha.

DEVASMITĀ. A gem of a woman who was much devoted to her husband. The story of Devasmitā has been so often quoted in ancient Indian literature. She was the daughter of a Vaisya called Dharmagupta and was married to Guhasena, son of a Vaisya called Dhana-datta, who belonged to Tāmraliptinagara.

After the death of his father Guhasena decided to go to Kātāhavadvīpa for trade, and Devasmitā, a very suspicious wife, objected to it. When his other relations began pressing him to go to the dvipa for trade and his wife not to go, Guhasena could not take a decision on the matter. He began a penance so that God might take the decision in the matter. Devasmitā also followed him. Then God appeared to them in their dreams and gave each of them a red lotus flower saying, “both of you keep one flower each with you, and while both of you are away from each other if either of you go astray the lotus flower in the hands of the other person will fade.” And, on awaking both of them had a flower in their hands. Guhasena with his flower in his hands started for Katāhādvipa, and Devasmitā stayed at home with her eyes fixed on her lotus flower. Guhasena reached the dvīpa and traded in gems. Everybody was surprised to find in his hands a lotus flower which never faded. Four Vaiśya youngsters wanted to understand the secret of it and one day they invited Guhasena to their house and treated him to liquor very liberally. When he got absolutely drunk they questioned him about the secret of the lotus flower, and he, though in indistinct words, explained it to them. When the secret was thus out all the four youngsters decided to seduce his wife. They extricated from him the information that he was not returning in the near future, and they then came to Tāmrālīpti.

At that time there lived in Tāmrālīpti a bogus Sannyāsī (a female anchorite) called Yogakarandikā. The four youths from Katāhādvipa visited her, and she undertook to fulfil their desire. She asked them to halt at her house and then went to Devasmitā with some refreshments. Devasmitā’s bitch barked very violently at the bogus anchorite when she told her the former thus: “Child! don’t you see the bitch barking at my very sight. The bitch is crying thinking of her previous birth at my sight. Herself (the bitch) and I were, in our last birth, the wives of a Brahmin. Since our husband was a courtier at the palace often he was away from home and in his absence I used to satisfy the cravings of sex by associating freely with other males. I had even at that time realised the truth that there was no duty higher than satisfying the senses, and so I am now re-born with memories of the past life. As for this bitch in her past life as co-wife with me of the Brahmin, she sinned against her sense-organs by upholding, in ignorance, her chastity, as a punishment for which she was born as dog in this life. Yet, she remembers her past.

Though Devasmitā saw through the false and treacherous heart of the bogus anchorite, without expressing it she talked in all respect with her. Believing that she had succeeded in her mission she told Devasmitā about the four youths who had come from Katāhādvipa, and Devasmitā welcomed the idea very gladly. Devasmitā got some liquor and mixed poison in it. When it was night one of the Vaiśya youths came, and after rendering him unconscious by administering the poisoned liquor to him Devasmitā stripped him of all his clothes and ornaments, got him scratched on the brows by the bitch and threw him into a cow dung heap. Before it was dawn next day he returned to the anchorite’s house, took a bath and dressed himself up in decent clothings. His other three companions also visited Devasmitā one after the other in the next three days, and they too underwent the same experience as the first one. Lastly the bogus sannyāsini also was got down and Devasmitā cut her limbs and sent her away. And, after this Devasmitā put on the garb of a merchant and went to Katāhādvipa and identified her husband from among a thousand merchants. Guhasena too felt his own doubts about her identity. But, without revealing her identity she saw the king and told him that she had certain matters to submit before the praśāparisat (popular assembly). The King accordingly convened a session of the assembly and Devasmitā identified the four youths who had tried to seduce her and submitted all details regarding the episode. The King then gave her a lot of money, appointed the four youths as her servants and sent her back home with Guhasena. (Kathāsāritaśagara, Kathāmukhalambikā, Taranga 5).

DEVASRAVAS I A king of the Yayātī dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

DEVASRAVAS II A Rṣi born in Viśvāmitra’s family. He was a māṇtri of the Kuśika gotra (Sānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 5).

DEVASRUTA. A son of Šukamuni. Šuka, the son of Vyāsa married Pivāri, the beautiful daughter of the Pīṭh, and to them were born four sons, Kṛṣṇa, Gauraprabha, Bhūri and Devārsrūta, and one daughter, Kīrti. (Devībhāgavata, Prathama Skandhā).

DEVASTHĀNA.

General. A mahārṣi, who was a friend of the Pāṇḍavas. Other information. (1) After the great war was over this muni visited Dharmaputra and induced him to perform yajñas. (2) Along with some other muni he gave spiritual advice to Dharmaputra and comforted him. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 27).

(3) He was one of the munis, who visited Bhīṣma on his bed of arrows. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 5).

DEVāSURA YUDDHA (S) Wars between the gods and asuras. Altogether twelve wars were fought between the Devas and the asuras, viz. Narasiṁha, Vāmanā, Varāha, Amṛtamatnathana, Tarakāmaya, Aḍībaka, Traipura, Andhaka, Vadhā, Vṛtravadha, Dhvajapāta, Hālāhala and Kolāhala. Hiranyakṣīpa, the dāitya was killed by Narasiṁha. Vāmanā took Mahābālī captive after measuring the three worlds in one stride. Hiranyakṣīpa was killed in fighting in the sea by Varāha with its tusks. Indra defeated Prahlāda and in the Tārakāmaya war also killed his son Vīrocanā who had planned to kill him (Indra). As the Devas could not kill the dānavas of Tripura, Trilocana killed them. Vṛtra, who was aided by the dānavas was killed by Indra with the help of Viśū. Indra himself killed Vipraeitti and his followers who became invisible by māyā after the filling of the dhvajā (flag staff), and in the course of celebrating their victory the Devas defeated Saṃdāmarka at the yajñavabhrthā (Bathing at the close of the yajña). Thus were waged twelve wars between the Devas and the asuras. (Padma Purāṇa, Part 4, Chapter 13).

DEVASVĀM. A Brahmin. (See Vararuci).

DEVĀTTIHH. A king born in the Pūru dynasty. Akrodhā was his father and Kārmbhā, daughter of the king of Kālināga, his mother. (Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 22).

Devātithi had wedded Maryāḍa, daughter of the King of Vidyah. (Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 23).

DEVĀVĀHA. A king of the Yayātī dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

DEVAYANAM. A sacred place. The rivers Bāhudā and Nandā flow along this place. (Vana Parva, Chapter 87, Verse 29).

DEVAVARṆINĪ. Daughter of Bharadvāja māharṣi. Muni Viśravas married her and to them were born a son called Kubera. (See Kubera).

DEVAVATI I. Daughter of the Gandharva called Manimayā. Suceśa, the Rāksasa married Devavati, and three sons Mālayān, Sumāli and Māli were born to them who lived as dependants of Rāvāna. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

DEVAVATI II. Śītā, wife of Rāma was Devavati in her previous birth. (See Śītā for information for Devavati's death in fire and rebirth as Śītā).

DEVAVATI III. Daughter of the daitiya called Mandāramāli. (See Viśvakarman, Para 2).

DEVAVATI. Daughter-in-law of king Agnīdhra. Pūrvacitti, the apsara woman was the king's wife and they had nine sons called Nābhī, Kāmpuruṣa, Hāri, Īlaṅkṛta, Ramukā, Hiraṅjaya, Kuru, Bhadrāsva and Kētumāla, and these sons married the following daughters of Meru, viz. Merudevi, Prātrūpā, Ugradaṁśtri, Lata, Ramyā, Syāmā, Nāri, Bhadrā and Devavati. Thus Devavati became the wife of Kētumāla. (Brāhavaṇa, Pañcama Skandha).

DEVAVRATA I. Bāhīṣṭa (See Bhīṣma for details).

DEVAVRATA II. A brahmin who believed in yajñas. He once received without due regard and with indifference the tirtha water given to him by a devotee of Kṛṣṇa after worship of the Lord, as a result of which, in the next birth, he was born as a bamboo stem. And, as he did, consciously or otherwise some good deeds Śrī Kṛṣṇa made a flute out of that bamboo stem, and Devavrata thus attained redemption. (Padma Purāṇa, Pāṭala Khaṇḍa, Chapter 73).

DEVAVRDHA I. A warrior, who fought against the Pāṇḍavas in the Kurukṣetra war (Karṣa Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 3).

DEVAVRDHA II. A king who, along with his subjects attained heaven as he had made a gift of a golden umbrella. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 21).

DEVAYAJANAM. The place called Prayāga which is considered to be the yājñic centre of the Devas. Ambā, daughter of the King of Kāśi did rigorous tapas here. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 186, Verse 27).

DEVAYAJI. A warrior of Subrahmadevi. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 7).

DEVAYANI. Sukrācārya's daughter.

1) Birth. Śvāyambhuva manu, son of Brahmā had two sons: Priyavrata and Uttanapāda. Priyavrata wedded Surūpā and Barhiṣmati, two very beautiful daughters of Viśvakarmaprajapati, and he had by Surūpā ten sons called Agnīdha, Indrajivaha, Vajānabhusana, Mahāvira, Rukmaṇukri, Gṛhatpṛṣṭha, Savana, Medhātithi, Vīhitotra and Kavi as also a daughter called Urjasvati who was the youngest of the whole lot. Of the above ten sons Kavi, Savana and Mahāvira were spiritual giants and great sages. Uttama, Tāpasa and Raivata, the three sons of Priyavrata by his second wife Barhiṣmati turned out to be manvantarādhipatis. Urjasvati, the only daughter of Priyavrata was married to Sukrācārya, preceptor of the asuras. Devayānī was Sukrācārya's daughter by Urjasvati. (Devībhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

2) Curse by Kaca. Kaca, son of Brhaspati became Sukrācārya's disciple to learn Mṛtasunjivini viḍyā (the science to ward off death for ever). Devayānī fell madly in love with Kaca. But, after his studies under her father were over Kaca returned to devaloka without marrying Devayānī, who cursed that Kaca's learning should prove useless. And, Kaca cursed her in return that nobody from devaloka should marry her. (For details see Kaca).

3) Devayānī in a neglected well. Once Vṛṣaparvan was the king of the asuras, and Sukrācārya lived in his palace. Sarmisthā, the daughter of the king and Devayānī, the daughter of Sukrācārya became thick friends. While one day these two friends with their companions were engaged in water sports Indra came that way. Very much interested in seeing the deva damsels thus engaged in water sports Indra assumed the form of air and blew off the dresses of the damsels from the shore while they were playing in the river. The damsels hurriedly got out of water, ran after the fleeing garments and put on whatever came to their hands. In the confusion what Sarmisthā got and wore was Devayānī's clothes. Devayānī ran back again in her dress and caught hold of the clothes, but the latter did not yield them to her. Both of them indulged in verbal arguments against each other, Sarmisthā calling Sukrācārya a beggar living in her father's palace for his food. Not only that, she pushed Devayānī into a neglected well and went her way.

At that time prince Yayāti, son of Nahusa, was hunting in that forest. Feeling very thirsty he came to the well for a drink and therein saw Devayānī in tears. He brought her out from the well and leaving her there went on his way.

Sukrācārya and his wife actually got anxious and upset that their daughter had not returned even after the lapse of so much time and deputed their servant Gurnikā to seek for Devayānī. She found her out in the forest. But, Devayānī refused to return home as she did not want to continue as the daughter of one who lived on the charity of Sarmisthā and her father. Gurnikā carried back this news to Sukrācārya, who then went himself to the forest and met his daughter. He felt deeply wounded to hear of the insults heaped on his daughter by Sarmisthā, and sent word to Vṛṣaparvan that they were not returning to the palace. Vṛṣaparvan realised that if Sukrācārya quarrelling with him the whole asura world also would become divided. He, therefore, tried his best to pacify the aśārya and his daughter. At last Devayānī agreed to return to the palace in case Sarmisthā went to her with one thousand of her maids to serve as her (Devayānī's) maids. Vṛṣaparvan acted accordingly and Devayānī was satisfied and returned to the palace with her father. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 78 onwards).

4) Wedding of Devayānī. Some time afterwards when Devayānī was sporting in the forest with Sarmisthā and others, King Yayāti happened to pass that way. They recognised each other and Devayānī requested Yayāti to marry her as she had mentally chosen him as her husband on the very same day on which he had saved her from the well.

Yayāti realised only too well that it was really dangerous to marry the daughter of Sukrācārya in the forest secretly and he, therefore, rejected Devayānī's request. But, she got down her father there and with his permission Yayāti married her. He also got much wealth by way of dowry. Sarmisthā and her maids accompanied Devayānī but Sukrācārya warned Yayāti that on no account should he touch Sarmisthā.

With his wife and her attendants Yayāti returned to his palace; but he put Sarmisthā and her maids in a place newly built for the purpose. Devayānī delivered a child in due course and it was named Yayātī. Sarmiṣṭhā, one day met Yayātī in the forest and requested for a child by him. Though at first he was reluctant to oblige remembering only too well the injunction of Sūkrācārya, he at last succumbed to the eloquence of Sarmiṣṭhā. She got pregnant by him and the child she delivered was called Druhyu.

Devayānī was alarmed at the birth of a child to Sarmiṣṭhā, who was unmarried, and questioned her about it. Sarmiṣṭhā's answer that a brahmin stranger, who came that way was the father of her child satisfied Devayānī.

Ere long another son, Turvasu, was born to Devayānī, and Sarmiṣṭhā too delivered two children called Anudruhyu and Pūrū. Thus the mistress (Devayānī) had two sons and her servant, Sarmiṣṭhā three sons. While Yayātī and Devayānī were one day strolling in the garden the sons of Sarmiṣṭhā came there. She noticed the close resemblance of those boys to her husband (Yayātī) and it kindled her wrath. Though Yayātī did not, because of the presence of Devayānī, notice the children, when she asked them who their father was, they answered “Yayātī” whereupon in great rage she ran up to her father. Yayātī too followed her. Devayānī told her father about the infidelity of Yayātī and he (Sukrā) cursed that Yayātī be afflicted with old age. When Yayātī asked for redemption from the curse Sukrācārya told him that he could exchange his old age for the youth of somebody else.

Yayātī then called together all his five sons and asked them whether anyone of them was prepared to exchange his (son's) youth for his (Yayātī's) old age for one thousand years. The three elder sons refused to agree to the proposal, but the fourth son Pūrū gladly exchanged his youth with his father's old age. After spending his life in youthful enjoyment for one thousand years Yayātī returned his youth to Pūrū, and Pūrū assumed Kingship of the country. (Adi Parva, Chapters 81-83).

5) Synonyms for Devayānī. Ausañasi, Skārtanatayā and Bhārgavi.

DEVI. (Mahāmāyā). Though Devi is without a beginning it is told how she became first visible to living beings.

1) Beginning: While Mahāviṣṇu was resting on a lotus leaf in the assumed form of a child he began thinking as to who he was, who created him and how he should act. And then a celestial voice announced as follows:

Sarvāṁ chālvididēvaham
Nānyadasti sañātanaṁ.

(All that is, I am. There is nothing eternal but me.). This declaration astonished Viṣṇu, but he could not understand who made it. While he was meditating upon it, Devī appeared to him in the following manner.

Devī held in her four sacred hands weapons like the conch, the disc, the club and the lotus flower and was clad in divine clothes and wore divine ornaments and was attended upon by powers like Raṭi (the erotic), Būti (riches and prosperity), Buddhī (intelligence), Matī (intellect), Kiriṭ (reputation), Drāti (understanding capacity), Smṛti (ability to remember), Śraddhā (attention, concentration), Medhā (intellect), Svādhā, Svāhā, Kṣudhā (thirst), Nidrā (sleep), Dayā (compassion), Gati, (momentum), Tuṣṭi (pleasure, happiness) Puṣṭi (growth, progress), Kṣamā (patience, forborneance), Lajjā (sense of shame), Jīmbhā and Tandrā (laziness).

And, the Devī spoke to Mahāviṣṇu as follows:—After all, what is there to be wondered at. Whenever the world faced the phenomenon of Śrṣṭiḥśstituição (creation, existence and absorption into the primordial force) you too have come up due to the power of Mahāśakti. As for Parāśakti (the ultimate, universal force) it is above and beyond all attributes. We, all of us, possess attributes. From the nābhi (navel) of yourself in whom sattvaguna (gentle attributes) predominates will be born Brahmā in whom rajoguna (active attributes) will predominate, and from the centre of his brows will be born Rudra with tamoguna (black, destructive attributes). Brahmā, by the force of his tapas will earn powers of creation and will with his rajoguna create the world blood-red in colour, and you will be the sustainer and guardian of that world. The very same world will be annihilated by Rudra at the end of the Kalpa era. You please do know that I am the sāttvic force which depend on you for the purpose of creation. All creations of worlds have been made according to the suggestions of Devī.

2) Origin of Devī. Once King Janamejaya questioned Vyāsa about the birth of Devī to which he replied as follows:

Even Brahmāviṣṇumahēśvaras (Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva—the Hindu trinity) are not capable of thinking about the origin of Devī. Then, what about me? Yet let me make an attempt. All the forces—everything—which appear in various names and forms are in fact Devī herself, her different manifestations. Just as a master actor appears on the stage in different roles for the delusion of the audience the formless Devī, on behalf of the Devas, assumes many forms and imposes upon herself attributes though in fact she is without any attribute whatsoever. Thus, depending on her various forms, actions etc. she is addressed by different names. (Devi Bhāgavata, Pañcajana Skandha).

3) Five forms of Devī. When primordial nature (Mūlaprakṛti) incarnated or manifested in the form of Viṣṇu the desire for creation raised its head in him. And, at once the Devī—female—aspect in Viṣṇu manifested in five forms like Durgā, Lakṣmī, Sarasvatī, Śāvatī and Rādhā. These five forms are designated as the Pañcadevīs. Brief notes on the five Devīs are given below.

1) Durgādevī. Mother of Gaṇeśa bhagavān. (God with the elephant's head). She is the consort of Śiva. Nārāyāni, the Viṣṇumāyā, is none else than Durgā. She is also perfect Brahma, the one and the only one with no second to it. She is worshipped by Devīs like Brahmā and by sages and mahārṣīs. She is the basis, the root and root cause of everything. She is eternal, upholder of dharma, truth itself and the giver and promoter of happiness, reputation, welfare, salvation etc. as also of sorrow, grief, pain etc. She takes great pleasure in removing the worries and sorrows of devotees who seek refuge in her. She is all-power, achievements and assets personified. All imaginable permutations and combinations of every attribute comprise in her and she it is who activates the universal soul.

2) Lakṣmi. This Devi is the most sublime form of the universal soul, nay, the universal soul itself. She is all wealth and riches personified, and she is the very seat of beauty, compassion, welfare, peace, all goodness etc. Evil traits like anger, avarice, haughtiness etc. are miles away from her. She is all sympathy and kindness towards her devotees. In Vaikuntha, as Mahālakṣmi she is ever engaged in the service of her husband, Viṣṇu. In heaven she is the very glory of it. In houses she appears as the welfare and prosperity of the inmates. She is in fact beauty itself and is the essence of beauty everywhere. She is all-merciful, and worshipped by all.

3) Sarasvatī. She is very base and fountain head of and the presiding deity of the word, intellect, knowledge, the arts etc. She also is of the form of the universal soul and liberally grants intellect, poetical skill, reason and logic, understanding capacity etc. to her devotees. The finest music with all its beauties originates from her. Yes, she is the goddess of all learning, fine arts and every branch of knowledge. Like the ice piece, the jasmine flower etc. she is beautiful in her white cover. She recited the holy names of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. She is of the form of tapas and blesses those who perform it. In fact, she is who grants all gifts and powers of understanding. She is the goddess of language and learning (Vāṇīmatā) and without her human beings would lose their capacity to speak.

4) Śukrādevī. She is mother of the four vargas (castes, classes) Vedaṅgas, the tāntic science etc. She is of the form of Japa (chanting of holy names and mantras), tapas, the effulgence of Brahmaṇa, the very essence of truth and existence and supreme bliss. She is eternal and grants salvation. She forms the very basis and pith and core of the glowing presence of the universal soul. This world is pure, and has been purified by the touch of the sacred feet of this Devi.

5) Rādhādevī. Rādhikādevī, fifth of the pañcarākṣitas is the presiding deity over the five prānas and She is of the form of those prānas. She is exceptionally beautiful endowed with all fortunes and happiness, sublime and serious, and the consort of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and as eternal and equally endowed with divine attributes as the lord. She is formless also, above and beyond attributes, unattached and detached, and not visible even to the great Devas and munis by the naked eye. Her clothes even Agni would not burn. She was born, in Vārāha Kalpa as the daughter of Vṛṣabhaṅu, and because her sacred feet trod over this land, Bhārata (India) became holy. Once Brahma did tapas for 60,000 years to have a glimpse of the Devi’s lotus feet, but could not. People were able to see her only after she, in unbounded compassion for the world, incarnated herself in Vṛndāvana (See Prakṛti).

4) Anātārāma—partial manifestations of Devi. The above discussion was concerned with the five forms of the Devi in her full and complete forms. Now, there are six other Devis, who are partial manifestations or born from certain parts of the Devi.

(1) Gaṅgādevi. This Devi who flows in the form of water and washes off men’s sins takes her origin from the body of Mahāviṣṇu. (There is another story which traces Gaṅgā’s origin to the Aṇḍha (egg or seed) of Brahmaṇa. (See Gaṅgā).

(2) Tulasī. She is the lover and also the servant at the feet of Viṣṇu. She also washes off men’s sins and promotes their welfare. (See Tulasī).

(3) Manasādevī. Manasādevi, who was born as a daughter of Kaśyapa is another partial incarnation of Mahāmāyā. She is a great tapasvinī, a famous disciple of Śaṅkara, unique in learning and erudition, sister of Ananta (the king of Serpent), the presiding deity of Mantras, wife of Jārakāru muni and mother of Āśṭika muni. (See Manasādevi).

(4) Devaṇa. Since this Devi has been born out of a sixth part of Mahāmāyā she is called Śaṁthi-devi also. It is this Devi, who gives children to living beings and also protects them. For one year from the birth of a child this Devi should be worshipped. Those who cannot afford it should worship Devi on the 6th or 21st day after a child is born. (See Devaṇa).

(5) Manāgalananda. She is born from the face of Mālakṛṣṭi. Anybody who propitiates and pleases her will be the recipient of all good things like sons and grandsons, wealth, reputation, welfare etc. (See Manāgalananda).

(6) Bhūmidevi. She is the basis for all things, soil for the origin of the vegetable kingdom, the treasure house of all gems and the very incarnation of compassion and sympathy. (See Bhūmidevi).

(7) Anātārāma—partial manifestations of the Supreme Devi. They are born out of the parts of Mahādevi. The following are the Anātārāma-devis.

(1) Śvāhādevi. Consort of Agni Bhagavān (Fire God). Śvāhā is worshipped in all the worlds. If havis (oblation) is offered without repeating her name the Devas will not accept it.

(2) Daksinādevi. Wife of Yajñadeva, this Devi is worshipped by all. Without this Devi all Karmanas (actions) in the world will become futile.

(3) Dīkṣādevi. Wife of Yajñādeva, this Devi is worshipped by all.

Dīkṣādevi (chanting of words) Mahādevi.

The Devi grants pure knowledge.

(4) Svātidevi. Wife of the Pitr̥s, worshipped by maṇes and men. Offerings made to the Pitr̥s without honouring this Devi will prove to be futile.

(5) Svastidevi. Consort of the Vāyu. When offering Daksinā and making divya-dāna (divine gifts) if 'Svasti' (may good happen) is not uttered the gifts will be of no use.

(6) Purīdevi. Wife of Gaṇapatī. If this Devi ceased to exist men and women would become feeble, because she is the source of all strength.

(7) Tāṭidevi. Consort of Ananta worshipped by everybody. If the Devi ceased to exist there would be no happiness in the world.

(8) Sampatti devi. Wife of Isāna. Worshipped by Devas and men. If the Devi ceased to exist the whole world would become poor and indigent.

(9) Dīkṣā. Consort of Kapila. Everybody worships her all the time. If the Devī ceased to exist the whole world would become timid and cowardly.

(10) Satīdevī. Wife of Satya. Well-wisher of all, this Devī is worshipped by muktas. (people released from worldly attachments). If the Devī ceased to exist there would be no friendship and amity between people.

(11) Dāya-devī. Wife of Moha. If the Devī ceased to exist the world would become hellish and a fierce battle field.

(12) Pratīṣṭhā-devī. Wife of Pūrya. In the absence of this Devī, who grants good and happy results to people's actions the whole world would become as though it were dead.

(13) Siddhā-devī.

(14) Kṛśī-devī. Both the Devis, Siddhā and Kṛśī are wives of Sukarmā. If they ceased to exist the whole world would become bereft of reputation and become lifeless like a dead body.

(15) Kṛṣṇā-devī. Wife of Udyoga. If she ceased to exist the whole world would become inactive and cease to function.

(16) Mālī-pāyā-devī. Wife of Adharma. Wayward and characterless people worship this Devī. If the Devī ceased to exist the whole world would evoked by Brahmā would cease to exist. This Devī was not seen anywhere in the world during Kṛśīyuga. She began to appear in a subtle form here and there during Tretāyuga. In dvāparayuga she attained more growth and then her limbs and organs became doubly strong. In Kaliyuga she developed to her full stature and growth and goes about everywhere with her brother, Čhet (Kapaja).

(17) Śānti-devī. (see below).

(18) Lajjā-devī. Both the Devis, Śānti and Lajjā are good-natured wives. If they ceased to exist the world would become dull and sleepy.

(19-20-21) Buddhā-devī, Medhā-devī and Dhyātī-devī. These three Devis are wives of Jānā. If she ceased to exist the world would become steeped in ignorance and foolishness.

(22) Mārti. Wife of Dharma. She is very beautiful and effulgent. In her absence the universal soul would become devoid of vitality, helpless and meaningless.

(23) Śrī-devī. Wife of Māli. Her absence will make the world lifeless.

(24) Nīdārā-devī. Wife of Kālāgni. The Devī, a sage, who has attained realisation, affects everybody in the world during night and makes them lose consciousness and plunges them in sleep. In the absence of this Devī the world will become a lunatic asylum.

(25-26-27) Rātrī, Sandhyā and Divāsā. These three are the wives of Time (Kāla). In their absence nobody would have any sense of time and none would be able to calculate and fix time.

(28-29) Viśappu and Dāham. Viśappu = hunger. Dāham = thirst. These two Devis are the wives of greed (Lobha). They go about the world affecting people and thus making them worried and miserable.

(30-31) Prabhādevī and Dāhikā devī are the wives of Tejas (Vitality). Without them Īśvara will find it impossible to continue the function of creation.

(32-33) Mṛtyu and Jāra are the consorts of Prakṛṣṭajavana and daughters of Kāla. And, if they cease to exist, Brahmā's creation would also cease. (For Brahmā's creation individual souls with the will for action are necessary. He cannot create a soul of his own. So death is a pre-condition of creation, birth. If there is no death there is no birth also. There is a school of thought which maintains that if there is no death but only birth there will not be space on earth for the living, and therefore birth will stop if there is no death.).

(34-35) Tandā and Prīti are the daughters of Nīdārā and consorts of Sukha (pleasure, happiness). These Devis go around the world on the orders of Brahmā.

(36-37) Śraddhā and Bhakti are the consorts of Vairāgya (aversion to worldly comforts, renunciation) and they give salvation to the souls of the people in the world.

Aditi, mother of the Devas, Diti, mother of the Asuras, Surabhi, mother of cows, Kadrā, mother of serpents and Vīnatā, mother of Gāruḍas are also involved in the process of creation, and they are born out of parts of Devī.

6) Idol of Devī. There are special injunctions for making idols of the Devī for installation in temples. Cāḍjā-devi should have twenty hands. The hands on the right side should hold Śūla, sword, disc, cord, damaru, śakti etc. and the hands on the left side should hold nāgāpaśa, flag, club, mirror etc. (There are also idols with slight differences from the above).

Lakṣmīdevī would hold in her right hand the lotus flower and a Kāvala fruit in the left. Sarasvatidevi will have in her hands books, aksamālā and viṇā. Gaṅgādevī rides on a makaramatsya (fish) holding in her hands a pot and lotus flowers. Yamunādevī rides the turtle with a pot in hand and she is blue in colour.

Now, about the saptamātris. Tumburu, white in colour, and mounted on an ox rests on a śūla with viṇā in hand before the Mātris. Among the Mātris Brahmā has four faces, wears the aksamālā and holds the aksapātra etc. in her left hand. She is seated on a swan. Sāṅkārī (Māheśvari) is white in colour. She has in her right hand bow and arrows, and the disc and bow in her left hand. The ox is her vehicle. Kaumāri is seated on the peacock. She has two hands in one of which is held Śakti (Vel). Lakṣmī has in her right hand the conch and disc, and the club and the lotus flower in her left hand. Vārāhi rides the buffalo with staff, sword, club and conch in her hands. Indrāni is seated on the club, holding diamond in her hands. She has a thousand eyes. Cāmuṇḍī has three eyes and is without flesh in the body. Her hairs are raised above. She holds in her left hand elephant's skin and śūla in the right hand. At times she is seated on a corpse also.

Now, about the idols of the eight Aṅkūṣas. Rudra Carcikā holds a skull, Śūla and cord in her hands. She wears elephant's skin, her legs slightly held up. She becomes Rudracāmuṇḍa when she assumes eight hands, and holds the skull and the damaru. And in dancing pose she is called Naṭeśvari, and with four faces Mahālakṣmi. She is called Siddhacāmuṇḍa when she assumes the form with ten hands and three eyes, and when she eats men, horses and buffaloes. In this form she holds in her right hand the sword, damaru etc. and in her left hand the Trīśūla, bell etc. Since the Devī is sarva-siddhiratā (giver of all divine attainments or assets) she is Siddhīyogesvari also. There is also another Devī in this very form who holds the pāśa and Aṅkūṣa in her hand and who is slightly red in colour. She is called Bhairavi. When Bhairavi assumes the form with twelve hands she is called Rūpavidya. All the above eight Devis were born in burial grounds and are Raudramātis. They are known as the Aṣṭāmbās.

DEVIṬHĀ. The Śaivas venerate this book as one of the eighteen Purāṇas. But according to the Vaiśnavites, this is an authoritative book of a loftier level than the eighteen Purāṇas. (See under Purāṇa).

DEVIKA I. (VEDIKĀ). Daughter of Govāsa, the Saibya King. She was wedded by Yudhiṣṭhīrā in Śvayamvāra, and to them were born a son called Yaudheyā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 76).

DEVIKA II. A holy centre. A dip in the tīrtha there will give the same result as that of a yajā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 102).

DEVIṬHĀ. The dead body of Satīdevī crumbled into small pieces and fell in different places in Bhārata. Each place where a piece of the dead body fell, is known by the name Devīṭhā. There is a reason why the dead body crumbled into pieces:

Dakṣa performed a sacrifice to which Śiva was not invited and Satīdevī came to the sacrifice, and committed suicide by jumping into the fire. Śiva who became furious, killed Dakṣa and carrying the dead body of his wife on his shoulder, walked the length and breadth of Bhārata like a mad man. It seemed that he was not going to recover from this mania, and the devas (gods) were worried at this. To rescue Śiva from this mental disposition, Mahāviśnu, unseen by others, followed Śiva with a bow and arrow. Whenever it was convenient Mahāviśnu sent an arrow at the body of Satīdevī, on the shoulder of Śiva. By the hitting of the arrows the body was crumbled into pieces and fell here and there. Thus within a few days the body of Satīdevī came to an end and Śiva walked to Kailāsa. The pieces of the dead body fell in 108 places, and thus 108 Devīṭhās came into existence. The names of the places and the names by which the Devi is known in such places are given below.

The son then anxiously enquired what he should do to absolve his father of his sins and save him from hell. Vaśiśṭha then told him observe the vrata, Vaśiśṭha-pūrṇām. He did that and all the spirits went to heaven. (Chapter 94, Padma Purāṇa).

DHANAVARDHANA. A virtuous Vaśya who lived in the island of Puskara in the Kṛtayuga. Once Dhanavardhana after having performed Vaśiśṭva deva sat for his food. At that time he heard a cry from outside “Annām dehi (give me food)”. Dhanavardhana immediately came out to see who the visitor was but seeing none went in and started taking his food. Because he ate his food once left aside, his body was torn to hundreds pieces. (Bhaviṣya, Brahma Kāṇḍa).

DHANAVATI. Sec Śrāvaprabhā.

DHANANJAYA I. A famous serpent. This serpent was born to Kaśyapa-prajāpati of his wife Kadru. (Śloka 5, Chapter 35, Śādi Parva). This serpent served as a rope to bind the horses to the chariot of Śiva during the time of burning to death the Tripuras. (Śloka 29, Chapter 34, Karṇa Parva). This serpent sits in the court of Varuṇa and worships him. (Śloka 9, Chapter 9, Śabhā parva).

DHANANJAYA II. Another name for Arjuna. (See under Arjuna).

DHANANJAYA III. The army given to Subrahmaṇya by Śiva. (Śloka 17, Chapter 46, Śalīya Parva).

DHANANJAYA IV. A Sanskrit critic who lived during the period between 11th and 12th century A.D. He was a member of the court of King Muñja. His important work is ‘Daśārūpaka’. This work contains three hundred ślokas divided in four separate divisions. After the death of Muñja, Dhanika, brother of Dhananjaya, wrote a commentary on this work. The treatise is named ‘Daśārūpāvalokanā’. There are several quotations in this from the Sanskrit dramas ‘Venōṣamāha’ and ‘Rāmatvālī’. He has in this work discussed Drama and Poetry in giving prominence to the emotional side of it. The critical work, Daśārūpāvalokanā, contains quotations from a book ‘Kāvyānirṇaya’ by Dhanika himself. But the work ‘Kāvyānirṇaya’ has not yet been made available. Even in composing poetry Dhananjaya was well versed. He is the author of the well-known cīc Rāghavapāṇḍaviya’. It is known as ‘Dvīsandhāna Kāvyā’ also. This is based on the lives of Pāṇḍavas and Śrī Rāma. Dhananjaya bears the name of Śrutakīrti also. It is stated by scholars that Rāghavapāṇḍaviya was written during the period 1123 to 1140 A.D. (History of classical Sanskrit Literature).

DHANANJAYA V. There was once a brahmin ascetic called Dhananjaya in the gotra of Vaiśiṇḍha. This hermit had hundred wives and got hundred sons, one by each of his wives. The son born of his wife Śālibhāka (Sālīka) was named Karuṇa. The father divided his assets equally among his sons and yet they quarrelled with each other.

Once Karuṇamunī went to the shores of Bhava-nāšini along with a few other munis to worship Nārasiṃha. There a brahmin had brought a lovely lime as an offering to the deity. Karuṇa took the lime from him and smeared it. At this the brahmin got angry and cursed him. “Sinner, may you live as a fly for a hundred years. Then Mahāmā Dādhi will give you back your original form.” Karuṇa instantly became a fly and he pleaded to his wife thus “Beloved, I have become a fly. Please do protect me.” Karuna started flying hither and thither and his cruel brothers made the fly fall in oil and killed it. Sucismita, wife of Karuna, started weeping laying the dead fly in her lap. Arundhativedi passing that way saw her and consoled her thus: “Sucismita, stop lamenting. I shall bring it to life this instant by sacred ashes.” So saying the Devi took some ashes from the fire-pit and reciting the powerful Mṛtyunjaya mantra sprinkled it on the dead body of the fly. Sucismita fanned the fly. The potency of the ashes brought the fly back to life.

After a hundred years one of his relatives killed it again. Sucismita grief-stricken, took the dead fly to the Maharsi, Dadhica. The sage told her thus: “It was bhasma (sacred ashes) that gave life three times to Jamadagni, Kaśyapa, the devas and myself. I will, therefore, give life to thy husband by bhasma itself.” Dadhica took some ashes and meditating on Mahēśvara recited a mantra and sprinkled it on the dead fly and brought it back to life. By the touch of Dadhica, the fly, husband of Sucismita, became Karuna again and both of them went back to their hermitage. (Chapter 101, Padma Purāṇa).

DHANANJAYA VI. A Brahmin of Mahāviṣṇu who lived in the Tretā yuga. Once, in winter, when for want of proper clothing he could bear the biting cold no longer, he broke some twigs of the Aśvattha tree (poplar leafed fig tree) and made fire to warm him. When Dhananjaya broke the twigs it gave reflective pain on the body of Mahāviṣṇu. But Mahāviṣṇu who was aware of the unflinching devotion of Dhananjaya to himself was not displeased but appeared before Dhananjaya with wounds all over the body. The Brahmin enquired how Viṣṇu got the wounds and on knowing that it was the consequence of his breaking the twigs of Aśvattha Dhananjaya in utter grief started to cut his own head off. Greatly pleased Viṣṇu stopped him from his attempt and asked him to name a boon. Very modestly he replied that he would be satisfied if he was given the strength to continue as a devotee of Viṣṇu. (Padma Purāṇa, Kriyā Kāṇḍa).

DHAṆEŚVARA. A Brahmin born in the city of Avanti. Abandoning the duties enjoined by scriptures to a Brahmin he strayed away from the Brahmin fold doing all sorts of sins. He became a store-house of sins. He was engaged in commerce and once while travelling he reached the city of Māhiṃsāti. There he met many people from several adjoining villages who had come there to observe the Kārttika Vrata. Later Dhanēśvara was bitten by a cobra there and fell down fainting. Very soon he died. When he died the messengers of Yama came and took him bound to Kālapūri. There, Citaragupta read out to Yama all the sins Dhanēśvara had committed from boyhood till his death. Citaragupta added “Even from boyhood there is no record of any good deed done by him. On the other hand the sins he has committed could not be told in a year. He is an incarnation of evil. He must be roasted in hell till the end of the world.” On hearing this the body of Yama blazed like flame with anger and calling aside an attendant he ordered, “Hi, Pretapālaka, take this sinner away, beat him with spiked clubs and throw him into Kumbhipākā.” Pretapālaka instantly took him away and breaking his head with a thorn-spiked club threw him into a copper vessel containing burning oil. But to his great amazement the burning oil became cold as soon as the body of Dhanēśvara came into contact with it just as it happened once before in the case of Prahlāda. The perplexed attendant ran to Yama and told him of this strange incident. Yama was also surprised at this novelty in hell and called back Dhanēśvara and started enquiring about his life once again. Nārāya came there at that time. Both of them then talked about Dhanēśvara. Nārāya told Yama how the unanticipated thing so happened because Dhanēśvara on the eve of his death spent some time with people who were observing the Kārttika Vrata washing away thus all the sins accumulated so far in his life. Hearing that Yama took Dhanēśvara round hell and giving Dhanēśvara, the position of a Yaśa sent him to Kubera-pūrāṇa. (Chapter 115, Padma Purāṇa).

DHNANI. A messenger of the asuras called Kapas. The Kapas once sent Dhan to preach moral code among the Brahmans. (Chapter 157, Anuśasana Parva, M.B.)

DHANIKA. A Sanskrit poet. (See Dhananājaya IV).

DHANUGRAHAI. DHANUGRAHA, DHANURDHARA. One of the hundred sons of Dhiṭarāṣṭra. He was killed in the great battle by Bhirasena. (Sloka 62, Chapter 94, Karṇa Parva, M.B.)

DHANUVAKTRA. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Sloka 62, Chapter 45, Salya Parva, M.B.).

DHNURVEDA. General information. A scientific treatise on the art of warfare in ancient Bhārata. Because of the undue importance of the science the treatise is deemed and respected as a Veda. There have been innumerable books on the subject to teach Dhanurveda to the Kṣatriya youths. In the book Prasthānabhedā by Madhusūdana Sarasvati he states that Dhanurveda is a branch of Yajurveda. A Sanskrit book called Dhanurvedasarihātī is now available. Some scholars are of opinion that not much antiquity can be attributed to this work. Many books relating to Dhanurveda have been lost to us. What details are there in Agni Purāṇa are given below:

2) Divisions of Dhanurveda. This is known as Catuspāda (four-footed) also because of the fact that the four main constituents of an army are the chariots, elephants, horses and men. Dhanurveda has been divided into five parts (1) Yantramukta, (2) Pāṣijukta, (3) Muktasandhārīta, (4) Amukta and (5) Bāhuuddha. There is another division according to Astra and Sastra. There is yet another division of the science into two by some scholars from a different viewpoint calling them Māyā and Rjū.

Yantramukta (Yantra—machine). This means a warfare where machines are used. Kṣepa (sling) bow and arrow and other such machines are included in this.

Pāṣijukta. (Pāṣi—hand). This is where the hand is used mainly. Stone, mace etc. are used in this.

Muktasandhārīta. This includes the use of weapons like a spear.

Amukta. The use of a weapon like a sword which never leaves your hand.

Bāhuuddha. (Bāhu—head). The fight with only bare hands without the use of a weapon. One who wishes to fight should make ready his own weapons. He should be one who will never get tired even after exertion. A war with bows and arrows is considered the best and most manly, that with a spear ranks next, a fight with a sword is bad and a fight with hands, the most mean.

3) The Trainees. Only a brahim is entitled to be a preceptor in Dhanurveda. The Kṣatriya and Vaiśya should learn from him. The Śūdra can fight of his own in danger. He is not allowed to learn military science from a preceptor. Those mixed-born are to help the king during a war.

4) Various postures. There are nine different ways of standing when you give a fight, classified according to the different positions of one's foot, heel and knee.

Samāpāda. When you stand with your Aṅgūṣṭha, Nariyāṇि (Gulpha), Pāṇi and Pāda closely joined together, it is termed Samāpāda.

Vaiśākha. Keep your legs twenty-seven inches apart and without bending your knees stand erect throwing your weight on the fingers of the foot. This stand is called Vaiśākha.

Mandala. Keep your knees thirty-six inches apart and stand in the shape of a harisapāṇkṭi and this position is called Mandala.

Ālīḍha. Bend your right knee and thigh in the shape of a plough and without any movement to that posture draw your left leg forty-five inches apart. This stand is called Ālīḍha.

Pratyālīḍha. If you bend your left knee and thigh and stand like above it is called Pratyālīḍha.

Jāta. Place your right foot straight and place the left one perpendicular to the right one with the heels and the ankles of the feet five fingers apart. The whole length of the posture should not exceed twelve fingers. This stand is called Jāta.

Dandayāta. Keep the right knee bent and the left leg straight or vice versa. This posture is called Dandayāta.

Vikāṭa. If for the above posture the distance between the two legs is two palm-length it is Vikāṭa.

Saoṭḍaṇa. Keep the knees vigunās and the feet Uṭṭyānas for the posture of Svaṭḍaṇa.

Swastika. Keep your legs sixteen fingers apart and raise your feet a little keeping the level of both the feet equal. This is Swastika.

5) Use of arrows. Before a man is to make use of a bow and arrow he should first take the posture of Swastika and bow down. He should take the bow by the left hand, take the arrow by the right hand. He then should adopt a posture of either Vaiśākha or Jāta and taking the bow should sink into the earth one end of the bow and draw the bow-string up to the other end and see whether there is sufficient length for the string. He should take an arrow from his sheath and thrust the arrowhead into the ground near the bow. He should place his elbow on the top of the arrow with his forearm bent and fist clenched. If the clenched fist touches the top of the bow that bow and arrow is superior to any other. He should tie the bow-string in a way that the distance between the tied bow-string and the bow is twelve fingers. He should place the bow in front of his navel and the arrows in a quiver on his hip. Taking an arrow he should raise the bow and fix the arrow at a point on the bow-string between his eye and ear. He should take the arrow by his left fist and fix it so that the fist touches the left nipple. The bow should not change position horizontally, vertically, laterally, face downwards or upwards. Then taking an arrow from the sheath by the thumb and forefinger fix it on the bow-string and stretch it well before sending the shot. The clue to correct aim is this. Anything that one can sec with one's eyes but can be covered by his fist is within the arrow-shot. When one arrow is sent another should be taken immediately from the sheath and sent in quick succession. This is called Upaccheda.

6) Operations with a sword and a carma (shield). There are thirty-two different ways of putting into use a sword or a ‘carma’ (shield). Bhṛanta, Uddbhṛanta, Āviddha, Āpluta, Vīpluta, Sṛṇa, Sānūṭā, Śamudrīṁa, Śvetapāta, Ākula, Savyoddhūta, Savyavāḍhūta, Daksinoddhūta, Daksinavāḍhūta, Anālakṣaṇa, Vīśpoṣa, Karāla, Indramahāśaṇa, Vikarāla, Nipāta, Vibhiṣaṇa, Bhayānaka, Samagra-pāda, Arddhapāda, Trūtyāṅśapāda, Pāda, Ardhavārjita, Vārjita, Pratyālīḍha, Ālīḍha, Varāha and Lalita.

7) Operations with ropes. There are eleven different ways of using a rope in a war. Parāvṛṛta, Aparāvṛṛta, Gṛhitā, Laghuhṛgī, Uḍbhāṣaν, Adhakṣṇa, Sandhārīta, Svetapāta, Gajapāta and Grāhagṛthāya. Adepts in this art have stated that there are five acts in the rope-operation. They are: Ēj, Āyata, Vīṭṭa, Īṭyak and Bhāṁita.

8) Mode of using the weapons. (1) Deeds with a wheel are: Chedana, Bhedana, Pāṭana, Bṛhmaṇa, Sayana and Vikarana.

(2) Śīla (spear). Deeds with this are: Āshoṭa, Kṣo-lana, Bhedana, Trāsana, Andolana and Āgāṭa.

(3) Tomara (iron club). Deeds with this are: Drṣṭīghata, Pārśvāṅkṣa, Rjupakṣa and Īṣṭapāṛta.

(4) Gada (Mace). Deeds with this are: Gomūṭra, Āhata, Prabhūta, Kamalāśama, Tata, Uḍbhāṣaṇa, Vāmanita, Dakṣigamita, Āṛśta, Parāvṛṛta, Pāṭoddhūta, and Apavāluta Hāṁsamarda.

(5) Pāraśu (axe). Deeds with this are: Karāla, Avagha-āta, Daṁśa, Upāpluta, Kṣipṭahasta, Shīta and Śuṇya.

(6) Mudgara (hammer). Deeds with this are: Tāḍana, Chedana, Cūṛṇana, Plavana and Gḥāṭana.

(7) Bhīṣṭīḍaṇa. Deeds with this are: Saṁṛāṭa, Viśānta, Govisarga and Sudurdhara. Deeds with the Lagūḍa are the same as these.

(8) Vajra. Deeds with this are: Antya, Madhya, Pārāvṛṛt-a, and Nideśānta. The deeds with Paṭṭiśa are the same as there.

(9) Krpaṇa (Churika—small dagger). Deeds with these are: Harana, Chedana, Gḥātana, Bhedana, Mṛṇkaṣaṇa, Pāṭana and Śkoṭaṇa.

(10) Kṣepiṅg (Katiṅ—Slings). Deeds are Trāsana, Raṅkaṇa, Gḥātana, Baloddharaṇa and Āyata.

The feats of one who fights a bludgeon or cudgel are the following:

(Agni Purāṇa, Chapters 249–252)

9) Dhanurveda in Mahābhārata. Some references to Dhanurveda in Mahābhārata are given below:

(1) A sage named Saradvān was a noted preceptor in Dhanurveda. Krpaṇacārya learnt Dhanurveda from him and taught many others of his disciples. (Chapter 129, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(2) Droṇacārya learnt Dhanurveda from Paraśurāma. and imparted it to many other disciples of his including the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas. (Chapter 129, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(3) Āgniveṣa, a sage, learnt Dhanurveda from sage Agastya. (Sloka 9, Chapter 133, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

(4) Dhanurveda has got ten āṅgas and four carapas. (Chapters 6 and 41, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

(5) Four-footed Dhanurveda worshipped Subrahmanya. (Sloka 22, Chapter 44, Śalya Parva, M.B.).

DHAŅUṢA. An ancient sage. He was a priest in the yāga of Uparicarasavasu. (Sloka 7, Chapter 336, Śānti Parva).

DHAŅUṢĀKṢA. An ancient sage. He killed Medhāvi, son of the sage Bāładhi, accusing Medhāvi of having mocked other sages (Sloka 50, Chapter 135, Vana Parva, M.B.).

DHANVA. One of the Kings of Kāśi. Dhanvantari was born as his son. (For details see under Dhanvantari).

DHAṆVAṆṬARI I. A deva who was a preceptor in Ayurveda.

1) Origin. The devas and asuras together churned the milky ocean, Kṣirābdhi, to salvage Aṃṛta (Nectar) from it. After thousand years there arose from the ocean a deva with a Kamaṇḍalu (water-pot of ascetics) in one hand and a danda in the other. That deva was Dhanvantari, (Sloka 31, Sarga 45, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

The birth of Dhanvantari from the ocean of Milk is described in Chapter 29 of Harivāraṇa thus:

Prosperous-looking Dhanvantari rising above the water-level of Kṣirābdhi stood worshipping Mahāviṣṇu. Viṣṇu gave him the name of Abjā. Dhanvantari is thus known by the name of Abjā also. Dhanvantari bowing to Viṣṇu said “Prabho, I am your son. Allot to me yajñabhāga”.

Viṣṇu replied thus: “Portions of yajñā have already been allotted. Because you were born after the devas you cannot be considered as one among them. You will be born again in the world for a second time and then you will be a celebrity. In your second life even from while in the womb you will have knowledge of Anjimā and Gardimā. Therefore you will be born as a deva incarnation. You will write in eight divisions a book on Ayurveda; your second life will be in Dvāpara yuga.” After having said so much Viṣṇu disappeared.

2) Rebirth of Dhanvantari. Śuhotra, King of Kāśi, in the second Dvāpara yuga had two sons, Śala and Gṛṣma- mada. Śunaka was the son of Gṛṣma-mada. Śala got a son, Ārṣṭiṇa. Kāśa was born to Ārṣtiṇa. To Kāśa was born Dīrghatapas (Dhanvā). For a long time Dhanvā did not have any children and so he went and did penance to propitiate Abjadeva. Abjadeva (Dhanvantari) was pleased and was born as a son to Dhanvā. Dhanvā named the boy as Dhanvantari and the latter taught his disciple Ayurveda, by parts, eight in number. From Dhanvantari in order were born Ketumāṇ—Bhimaratha—Divodāsa. (Chapter 29, Harivāraṇa).

3) Dhanvantari and Pariṅkṣit. There is a story in the purāṇas that when Taksāka went and bit Pariṅkṣit to kill him, a Viṣahāri (one who cures those infected with snake venom) rushed to save the king but was bribed and sent back by Taksāka. There are indications in the Purāṇas to show that the Viṣahāri under reference was Dhanvantari though it is stated that Kaśyapa was the person involved. (See under Taksāka).

4) Dhanvantari and Manasādevī. In the Kṛṣṇājanama Khaṇḍa of Brahama-vaiyata Purāṇa there is a story connecting Dhanvantari with Manasādevī, a serpent-goddess.

Once Dhanvantari with his disciples was going to Kailāsa. On the way Taksāka made a venom-spitting hiss. At once one of the disciples of Dhanvantari boldly went and plucked the diamond on the head of Taksāka and threw it to the ground. Hearing this Vāsuki, King of serpents, sent to Dhanvantari thousands of serpents under the leadership of Droṇa, Pupārīka and Dhananāja. The poisonous breath of all these serpents joined together made the disciples of Dhanvantari swoon.

Immediately Dhanvantari by a medicine made from vanaspati made all his disciples recover and then sent all the serpents to a swoon. When Vāsuki heard this he sent the serpent-maid, Manasādevī, a disciple of Śiva, to face Dhanvantari. Manasādevī and Gaḍārūra were both disciples of Śiva. But Dhanvantari was a follower of Gaḍārūra. Manasādevī made all the disciples of Dhanvantari swoon but the latter because of his great proficiency is Viṣāvyādī soon brought back his disciples to normal. When Manasādevī found that it was impossible to defeat Dhanvantari or his disciples by using poison Manasādevī took the trīṣfāla given to her by Śiva and aimed it at Dhanvantari. Seeing this Śiva and Brahmā appeared before them and pacifying them sent them all their way.

DHAṆVANTARI II. (Aṃṭācārya). An eminent medical scientist born in the ambāṣṭha caste. There is no reference anywhere in the Purāṇas regarding any relationship between the two Dhanvantaris. There is the following story about Aṃṭācārya in Ambāṣṭhācāra-candrikā.

Once Gālava Mahārṣi went to the forest to collect darbha and firewood. He walked for long and felt thirsty and hungry. Then he saw a girl coming that way with water and Gālava quenched his thirst taking water from her. Pleased with her the Mahārṣi blessed her saying “May you get a good son.” The girl replied that she was still unmarried. Gālava then made a figure of a child and told her to get a child from that figure. She was a Vaiśya girl named Vīrabhadrā and she got a beautiful child of that darbha male. Because the boy was born to a Vaiśya of a brahmīn male he belonged to the Ambāṣṭha caste. The boy was named Aṃṭācārya.

DHANVAMĀLĀ. The foster-mother of Atikāya. (See Atikāya).

DHARA. Wife of a Vasu named Droṇa (see under Nandagopa).

DHARA I. He is the first Vasu born to Dharma of his wife Dhumrā. (Sloka 19, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva).

DHARA II. A king who was a friend of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sloka 39, Chapter 158, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

DHĀRA. A holy place. If one bathes in this holy place (Bath) his sorrows will be at an end. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 25).

DHĀRĀṆĀ. One of the eight means of Rājayoga (One of the ways of union with the suprême Spirit). Yama, Niyama, Āsana, Prāṇāyāma, Pratyaḥśāra, Dhananā, Dhyāna and Saṃmādhi are the eight means (See under Rājayoga).

DHĀRĀṆĀ I. A king born in the family of Candraputra. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 16).

DHĀRĀṆĀ II. A nāga (serpent) of the family of Kaśyapa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 16).

DHARAṆĀ (M). A measure. In ancient times a dharaṇā was made up of ten palas. (Manusmṛti).

DHARAṆĀ (MĀ). A king of ancient times. He ruled over a country named Vidiśā. There is a holy place where the rivers Vetaśi and Vetravatī meet. DharaṆā constructed a temple at the confluence. There is a story also for his doing so.

Once a Śiva-pārśaṇda brought to Śiva a woman at a time when Pārvatī was away from the place. Śiva and the woman were enjoying each other when Pārvatī came to the place. Getting angry she cursed the Pārśaṇda and made him into a fox. The fox came to the place where the rivers Vetaśi and Vetravatī meet and did penance there and attained Mokṣa. DharaṆā saw the divine plane coming down to take the Pārśaṇda away and he, therefore, constructed a temple at the place where the plane landed. He then arranged scholars well versed in Vedas and śāstras to read Padma Purāṇa there. He himself read Padma Purāṇa and attained mokṣa. (Chapter 29, Padma Purāṇa).

DHAREŚVĀŚI. A goddess living in the tirtha (holy bath) of Jambunāda. This goddess is another form of Pārvatī. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

DHARĪṆĪ. A daughter born to the Manes (Pīṭha) erected by Brahmadeva, by their wife Svadīśā. DhārīṆī had an elder sister named Menā. Both were expounders of the Vedas and of good qualities. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Antā 1, Chapter 10).

DHARMA. A deva who is the abode of all luxuries in life.

1) Birth. This deva broke the right nipple of Brahmadeva and came out in the form of a human being. Three sons were born to him: Śāma, Kāmā and Harṣa. Kāma married Raṭi, Śama, Prāpti and Harṣa, Nandā. ¹

2) Marriage and family life. The Bhāgavata states that Dharma married the thirteen daughters of Dakṣaprajāpāti named Śraddhā, Maitri, Dayā, Śánti, Puṣṭi, Tuṣṭi, Kriyā, Unnaṭi, Buddhī, Medhā, Titikṣa, Hṛi and Mūrty. Besides them he married ten other girls named Bhānu, Lambā, Kukubh, Jāmi, Viśvā, Śādyā, Marutvati, Vasu, Muhūrtā and Saikālpā and also a woman named Sunṭā. According to Mahābhārata Dharma married the following daughters of Daksā : Kirti, Laḵṣmi, Ḍhṛti, Medhā, Puṣṭi, Śraddhā, Kriyā, Buddhī and Lajjā. From each of his wives there originated a family. The son born to each is given below Śraddhā—Śubha; Maitri—Prasāda; Dayā—Abhaya; Śánti—Sukha; Tuṣṭi—Moda; Unnaṭi—Darpa; Buddhī—Artha; Medhā—Sukṛti; Titikṣa—Śama; Hṛi—Prā ṛa. Mūrty gave birth to the virtuous Naranārīyaṇas. Sunṭā became the mother of the devas, Satyavatā and Satyasena. Satyasena became famous by slaying many cruel and evil-natured Yaksas, demons and spirits. Lambā gave birth to Rṣabha and Vidyotana. Rṣabha got a son, Indrasena. Vidyotana became the father of stanayituna. Kukubh delivered Saṅkaṭa and Saṅkaṭa became the father of Kīkaṭa and Durgeṇa. Jāmi got a son Svargha and of him was born Nandī. Viśvā gave birth to Viśvadevas and Śādyā to Śādyyas. These Śādyyas are different from those born of Brahmadeva. Śādyyas became the father of Arthaśiddha. Marutvati gave birth to Marutvat and Jayanta. Vasu gave birth to eight sons and they were known as Aṣṭavasus. Droṇa, the first of the Aṣṭavasus, married Abhimati. Abhimati is known as Dharma also. It was Droṇa and Dharma who were born as Nandgopā and Yaśodā later. Prāṇa, second of the Aṣṭavasus, married Urjasvati, daughter of Priyavatā. (Narāṇa Skandha, Bhāgavata).

3) Prominent sons. Four sons of Dharma, Hari, Kṛṣṇa, Nara and Nārāyaṇa became prominent. Hari and Kṛṣṇa were great yogis while Nara and Nārāyaṇa were great ascetics. (See under Naranārīyaṇa).

4) The daughter named Dharmaṇātra. Dharmadeva got a daughter named Dharmaṇātra of his wife Dharmaṇātra. Dharmaṇātra was an ascetic and she was married to Marici, son of Brahmadeva. One day Marici came back from the forest after getting darbha and flowers extremely tired and so after food lay down to rest. His wife sitting by his side massaged his legs. The sage fell asleep. Then Brahmadeva came there and Dharmaṇātra attended on him and worshipped him. Marici, when he awoke, finding Dharmaṇātra attending on another man cursed her and made her into stone. Dharmaṇātra pleaded not guilty and standing inside a fire-pit did penance for ten thousand years. Brahmadeva and other devas appeared before her and consoled her by assuring that though she would be a stone deva would take their abode in it and that she would be worshipped by all. From that day onwards that stone was known as Devaśili and even now it is believed that Brahmadeva and other devas live therein. (Chapter 114, Agni Purāṇa).

5) Dharma was cursed and made Vidura by Arjumāṇḍavya. (See Aṇumāṇḍavya).

Other details. (1) A portion of Dharma took life as Yudhiṣṭhira in Kunti. (See Dharmaṇaputra).

(2) Dharma did penance in Dharmatirtha for a very long time. (Śloka 1, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

(3) The abode of Dharma was Dharmaṇātra. (Śloka 1, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

(4) Dharma did penance on the banks of the river Vaitāraṇa for a long time. (Śloka 4, Chapter 114, Vana Parva).

(5) While the Pāṇḍavas were in exile in the forest Dharma in the form of a deer came to the hut of a Brahmin and carried away by its horns the Arāṇī stick which the Brahmin owned for making fire by attrition. (Chapter 311, Vana Parva).

(6) Dharma appeared in the form of Yaṣṭika and made all the Pāṇḍavas swoon except Yudhiṣṭhira, on the shores of a pond in the forest and later got them back to normal. (See under Dharmaṇaputra).

(7) Dharmaṇātra went to Viśvāmitra in the guise of Vasīṭhā to test him. (See para 3 of Gālava).

(8) Following a directive from Brahmadeva, Dharmaṇātra once brought before Varuṇa all the dāitya-dānavas bound by ropes. (Chapter 128, Udyoga Parva).

(9) Mahāvaṇṇa was born as a son of Dharmaṇātra. (See under Naranārīyaṇa).

(10) Dharma worshipped a brahmin named Satya taking the form of a deer. (Sloka 17, Chapter 272, Śānti Parva).

(11) Dharma tested Sudārśana taking the form of a brahmin. (Sloka 79, Chapter 2, Anuśāsana Parva).

(12) Dharma saved a sage named Vatsanabhāsa from a great downpour taking the shape of a buffalo. (Chapter 12, Anuśāsana Parva).

(13) Dharma disguised as a brahmin, went and imparted advice to Janaka, father of Śitā. (Chapter 32, Ásvamedha Parva).

(14) To test Jamadagni, Dharma went to his áśrama taking the form of Anger. Jamadagni had just milked Kāmadhenu and kept the milk in a pot. Dharma as Anger crept into the milk. Jamadagni drank it and yet remained calm. Seeing this Dharma appeared before him in the form of a Brahma and blessed him assuring Jamadagni that in future he would be obedient to Dharma (Chapter 91, Áśvamedha Parva).

(15) When at the flag end of their life the Pándavas started on their Maháprasthāna, Dharma as a dog accompanied them up to the gates of heaven. (Sloka 22, Chapter 5, Svargaśāna Parva).

7) Dharma and Kāla. There is a misunderstanding found even in some Purāṇas that Kāla, the chief of Kālapuri, and Dharma are one and the same person. But if the stories around each are examined it is easy to deduce that they are two different devas. The father and mother of Dharma are Brahmā. The father of Kāla is Sūrya and mother Satī, daughter of Vīśvakarmā. This itself is a sufficient evidence to show that the two are different persons. Further, Kāla or Yama is the sixth descendant of Visńu.

But scholars are misled to think that the two are identical. There is a reason for it.

Dharamrajaḥ Pitṛpaṭiḥ
Samavartti Pāretarā /
Krānto Yamanābhūta
Śamano Yamarañ Yamañ //
Kālo Daṇḍadharaḥ Śrādha-Devo Vālaśvatontakah.

(Amarā).

The above are the synonyms of Kāla. Vyāsa has used synonyms for Dharma in the Mahābhārata the words Dharma in a, Vṛṣa and Yama. Now among the synonyms for the two there are two words in common—Dharmarāja and Yama. This has led to this misunderstanding. Because Kāla weighs the evil and good in man he got the name Dharmarāja. Dharma got that name because he is the incarnation of Dharma. The real name of Kāla is Yama. Dharma got the name Yama because he possesses 'Yama' (control of the self for moral conduct). Kāla has no sons; Vidura and Yudhishṭhira are the sons of Dharma.

DHARMABHRT. A mahārāja who was an inhabitant of Daṇḍakāranyā. This sage narrated to Śrī Rāma the story of the pond 'Pañcāpsara' and the gāndhārī that rises from it. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranya, Sarga 11).

DHARMABUDDHI. See under Mitraḥedha.

DHARMADA. A follower of Subhrahmanyā. (Sloka 72, Chapter 43, Sālya Parva).

DHARMADATTATA. I. A king of Kosala. He had a wife named Nāgaṭrī. By her chastity she became a celebrity and got the name of Arundhatī of the earth. They got a daughter named Tārādattā. Once when Dharmadatta and Nāgaṭrī were engaged in conversation both remembered their lives in their previous births. It was not allowed to speak about previous births in open and if anybody did so death was the penalty. But Nāgaṭrī could not control herself and prepared to accept the worst. Nāgaṭrī told her husband thus: 'I am just reminded of my life in my previous birth. I will tell you my story. I was the servant maid of a brahmin named Mādhava in this same place. I had a husband named Devadāsa then. My husband was the son of a merchant. We made a small house of our own and lived there peacefully. Each of us would bring food from where we worked and everyday we used to set apart a portion of what we got for guests and the pittas. We were satisfied with what was left after that. If we got more than one set of clothes we would give it to the poor. Then there came a famine in the country. Our earning also was reduced daily. We lived in hunger. One day a hungry and tired sannyāśi came to our place and we gave him the whole of our food. My husband died that day and I gave away my life jumping into the funeral pyre of my husband. Then I was born in the family of a King and became your wife.'

Dharmadatta also got back the memory of his previous birth. He said he was the Devadāsa of Nāgaṭrī's previous life.

The moment they finished talking about their previous births both fell down dead. Orphaned Tārādattā then lived under the care of her mother's younger sister. After some time a Mahārāja came to her house and his blessing Tārādattā got a husband named Kālingasena. Kālingasena was a brave and daring Prince. Very soon they got a daughter and she was named Kālingasena. (Kathāsārītāgara, Madanamāṇijāra laṁbaka, Tārāṅga 2).

DHARMADATTATA II. A brahmin who lived in the city of Karavīra. One day while Dharmadatta was going to the temple with material for pūja he came across a demoness named Kalahā on the way. The brahmin threw the pūja materials in his hand on to the face of the demoness. When a tulasī leaf touched the demoness she got back the memory of her previous birth.

Kalahā then abandoned her cruel nature and begged Dharmadatta to advise her as to how she should get a release from her demoniac life. Taking pity on her Dharmadatta gave her all the 'punya' he had obtained by observing Kārtikāvratā. (Chapters 105, 106, 107, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa and Chapters 2, 4, 24, 25 Skanda Purāṇa).

Dharmadatta and Kalahā were born as Daśarathe and Kaikēyī in their next births as a result of the accumulated Pūya obtained by observing Kārtikāvratā. (Śāra khaṇḍa, Ananda Rāmāyaṇa).

DHARMADHVAJA. See under Tulasī.

DHARMAGUPTA I. A prince who obtained blessings from Śiva by observing the Pradosavrata. (For detailed story see Aṅśumati).

DHARMAGUPTA II. A Nandārājakumāra belonging to the Lunar dynasty. Chapters 1, 2 and 13 of Skanda Purāṇa gives the following story about him.

Once Dharmagupta went to the forests, hunting. Deeply interested in the game he never knew when it became dusk. It was late to go back to the palace and so deciding to stay in the forest for the night he climbed upon a tree and made a seat there to rest. After some time a bear followed by a lion came running and took refuge on the top of the same tree. The lion stood growling below. Seeing a man on the same tree the bear said "Oh, Prince, we are both in the same sad plight now. Believe me as a friend. We can spend the night on this tree safe. Therefore, go to sleep until midnight and I will keep watch for you. After that I will go to sleep and you keep watch". Gladly accepting the proposal the prince went to sleep and the bear kept vigil. Then the lion suggested to the bear to push down the prince. The bear replied that he would never cheat a friend and that it was a great sin also to do so. After midnight the bear slept and the prince kept watchover. The lion then suggested to the prince to push down the bear. Thinking that he would be saved if the bear is given to the lion the unfaithful prince pushed the bear down. But the bear escaped by catching hold of the branches lower down. Embittered at this the bear cursed Dharmagupta and made him mad.

Then addressing Dharmagupta first and the lion next the bear said thus: "I am Dhyanakāṣṭha a sage of the Bhrigu family. I can take any form I like. I cursed you, Dharmagupta, because you cheated a friend. This lion is Bhadra, one of the ministers of Kubera. Once he entered into sexual act with a bear in front of the āśrama of Gautama at midday and the sage cursed him and made him into a lion. The sage as a relief from the curse had further decreed that he would get his original form when he entered into a conversation with me." When Dhyanakāṣṭha finished speaking the lion changed itself into the form of Bhadra.

Dharmagupta remained mad and his father, the King, approached Jaimini for help. The sage said that the prince would be cured of his madness if he bathed in the Puṣkarinī tirtha. The king did as was suggested and Dharmagupta was cured.

DHARMĀKARA. A righteous house-holder. Once a prince entrusted his beautiful wife with Dharmākara and went away. Though she lived with him for six months he did not have any kind of contact with her. The prince returned. Wicked people tried to arouse doubts about the chastity of his wife and the house-holder. But it was futile. Still fearing calumny Dharmākara entered fire. In that test by fire he came out victorious. Not only did his body remain unscorched, but also that the faces of the wicked people who blamed him were filled with leprosy and became ugly. (Padma Purāṇa, Srṣṭi khaṇḍa, Chapter 50).

DHARMAKETU. A king of Bhārgava gotra. He was the son of Sūketu and father of Sāyakeṭu. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

DHARMANANDANA. A king of the family of Bhārgava. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

DHARMĀNGADA. A Brahmin who became a deep meditator on Viṣṇu, because of his habits in his previous life. Dharmāṅgada was the son of Rukmāṇgada by his wife Śandhyāvalī. Rukmāṇgada was the son of Rādhaṇa who lived in the city of Vidiśa. He was a man of good personality, who lived with his father and being a generous man he did not hesitate to give his head to Mohni for the pleasure of his father. God Viṣṇu was pleased with him because of his love of his father and of his loyalty to Vaiṣṇavite deity and took him bodily to heaven (Vaiṣṇavīte). Dharmāṅgada lived there for many thousands of years enjoying heavenly pleasures. Then he went astray from divine life and had to take life again as Śūrūtā the son of a Brahmin named Somāśārmā.

The wise Śūrūtā discarded the passions of Kāma (desire), Krodha (anger) etc. and controlled his senses and engaged himself in penance in Vaiḍūryamahārājī. For hundreds of years he sat in meditation and Mahāviṣṇu was pleased with him and took him and his father to Vaikuṇṭha. At the instruction of Mahāviṣṇu, Śūrūtā took life again in the house of Kaśyapa. When he died he went to Vaikuṇṭha. In every successive birth he had the remembrance of his previous birth. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 21).

DHARMAPRATIṢHA. A sacred place. It is believed to be the abode of Dharmarājā. There is a general assumption that anybody who touches the water in a well there will be absolved of all sins. (Śloka 99, Chapter 94, Vana Parva).

DHARMAPUTRA. The eldest of the Pāṇḍavas, the others being Bhīma, Arjuna, Nakula and Sahadeva.
1) Genealogy. See under Arjuna.
2) Birth. Pāṇḍu, brother of Dhartrāṣṭra, had two wives, Kuntī and Mādrī. There was a curse for Pāṇḍu that he would die the moment he touched his wife. (See under Pāṇḍu). Kuntī, the first wife of Pāṇḍu, had obtained from Durvāsas five mantras. The mantras were very potent. If she called upon any god reciting the mantra that God would manifest himself to her and bless her with a son. When Kuntī found that Gāndhārī was pregnant and was about to deliver she became anxious and meditating on Dharmaevaca recited one of the mantras given by Durvāsas and got a child from him. The boy was born at midday on the eighth Jyeṣṭha day of the year on Paḍmāmi and at the auspicious hour, Abhijit. At the time of his birth there was a celestial voice which said "This boy will become a very righteous and bold king, best among the virtuous. He will be known as Yudhīśṭhīra". Obeying the dictate of the mysterious voice he was named Yudhīśṭhīra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 123).
3) Boyhood. When he had five sons Pāṇḍu went to the forest of Satśriṅga together with his family to spend the spring time there. The sages residing in that forest conducted the ehrishing ceremony of Dharmaputra. Kaśyapa, priest of Vāsudeva, performed the Upanayana ceremony (thread-wearing) of Dharmaputra (Chapter 123, Dākṣīṇāyapāṭha) Ādi Parva, M.B.). Rājaṛṣi Śuka imparted instructions to Dharmaputra on spear-warfare. Pāṇḍu died during their stay there. Mādrī abandoned her life by jumping into her husband’s funeral pyre. Before doing so she called Dharmaputra to her side and joining her hands together said "Son, you are now the father to your brothers." When Pāṇḍu and Mādrī were dead the sages of the forest took Kuntī and the children to Hastināpura and entrusted them to the care of Bhīma. detailing to him all that had happened in the forest. (Chapter 125, Adi Parva, M.B.).
4) Kaumāra(youth). Dharmaputra and his brothers spent their boyhood in Hastināpura along with Duryodhana and his brothers. Bhīmasena became a great foe of Duryodhana and his brothers and Duryodhana always nurtured a desire to kill Bhīmasena. Once Duryodhana invited Dharmaputra and his brothers to have aquatic games in the Gaṅgā. Accepting the invitation Dharmaputra participated in the games along with his brothers. One night Duryodhana caught hold of Bhīma alone and tied him with ropes and threw him into the river. When in the morning Dharmaputra found his brother missing he ran to his mother to inform her of the loss. Kuntī asked him to start a search and while he was on it Bhīmasena appeared before him and told him how he was thrown into the river by Duryodhana and how he went to Nāgaloka and was brought to earth with great acquisitions from there. Dharmaputra advised them not to make the incident public. They received training in warfare in Hastināpura under Dronacārya. Dharmaputra got great proficiency in chariot-fighting. As Gurudakṣiṇā (fee for the preceptor) Dharmaputra agreed to bring Drupada bound before the preceptor. But Arjuna stopped him and himself undertook the task (Chapters 127 to 136, Adi Parva, M.B.).
5) Becomes heir-apparent and goes to the forest. Dhrītarāṣṭra, crowned Dharmaputra as the heir-apparent when the latter had successfully completed his course of study in warfare. By his good conduct, righteousness and administrative efficiency Dharmaputra excelled his father and became very popular among his subjects. Jealous of this Duryodhana decided to destroy the Pāṇḍavas somehow. With the permission of his father, Duryodhana constructed a palace at Vārānāvata for the Pāṇḍavas to reside there. That palace was built of Lākṣa (See under Arakkillam). The entire population resented this act of Duryodhana and rebuked him. They tried to follow Dharmaputra to Vārānāvata and stay there. But by tactful words he made them abandon that idea. Still many brahmins followed Dharmaputra. After some days Duryodhana set fire to the palace. But the Pāṇḍavas escaped through a tunnel from the house which had been constructed without the knowledge of Duryodhana just at the time of construction of the building. Escaping from there the Pāṇḍavas reached the forests and travelling farther came to the shore of the Gaṅgā. (Slokas 136 to 148, Adi Parva, M.B.).
6) Story up to the life incognito.
(1) When the palace was burnt ashes it was presumed that they were dead and by the instructions of Dhrītarāṣṭra the funeral rites of the Pāṇḍavas were conducted at Hastināpura. But Vidura informed Bhīṣma that the Pāṇḍavas were alive. (Chapter 149, Dākṣiṇātapyāpātha, Adi Parva, M.B.).
(2) Dharmaputra gave permission to Bhīma to marry Hīḍumā while they were in the forest. (Chapter 154, Dākṣiṇātapyāpātha, Adi Parva).
(3) Dharmaputra counselled Arjuna to release Citaratha Yakṣa who was defeated by Arjuna in a battle. (Sloka 39, Chapter 169, Adi Parva).
(4) After the svayānvara of Pāṇcālī, Dharmaputra narrated to Drupada the story of their escape from the palace. (Chapter 194, Adi Parva).
(5) After svayānvara of Pāṇcālī the Pāṇḍavas returned to their country and Dharmaputra was crowned king of half of the country. He started his rule at Khaṇḍava-prastha, his capital. (Chapter 206, Adi Parva).
(6) Nārada went to Khaṇḍava-prastha and advised them, how to avoid unpleasantness accruing from their having one wife in common. His advice was that Pāṇcālī should spend one year with each of the five in turn. (Chapter 207, Adi Parva).
(7) When Abhimanyu was born to Arjuna, Dharmaputra gave ten thousand cows to brahmins as gifts. (Sloka 69, Chapter 22, Adi Parva).
(8) Yudhiṣṭhira got a son Pratīvindhyā of Pāṇcālī. (Sloka 79, Chapter 220, Adi Parva).
(9) Yudhiṣṭhira got a son Yauḍheya of Devikā, daughter of King Śibi (Sloka 76, Chapter 93, Adi Parva).
(10) When Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to Dwārakā from Indraprastha Dharmaputra drove the chariot in the place of Dāruka, charioteer of Kṛṣṇa. (Sloka 16, Chapter 2, Sabhā Parva).
(11) Mayāsura constructed a beautiful palace in Indraprastha and gave it to Dharmaputra. (Sloka 37, Chapter 3, Sabhā Parva).
(12) Yudhiṣṭhira decided to perform a Rajasūṣṭa at Indraprastha. Even before the Rajasūṣṭa Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna and Bhīmasena together killed Jarāsandha. After that Yudhiṣṭhira sent Arjuna to the northern side and the other brothers to the southern side for Dīvīyajaya (conquest of countries). When he established his autocracy he performed the Rajasūṣṭa. (Chapter 45, Sabhā Parva).
(13) Yudhiṣṭhira used to give free sumptuous food to thousands of brahmins in golden pots daily. (Chapter 49, Sabhā Parva).
(14) Envious Duryodhana sent Vidura to bring Dharmaputra to Hastināpura and defeated him foully in a game of dice. Though Dharmaputra lost everything Dhrītarāṣṭra gave him back everything. (Chapter 72, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).
(15) Before Dharmaputra went back to his place, with the permission of Dhrītarāṣṭra, Duryodhana called him back again for another game of dice. Despite protests from all sides Dharmaputra went again for a game of dice with Duryodhana and lost again all he possessed. Then he left the country with his brothers and wife to spend twelve years in exile in the forests and another year incognito. (Chapter 79, Sabhā Parva).
(16) Śūrya gave the Akṣaya-pātrā (a pot which is never emptied) to the Pāṇḍavas. (Sloka 72, Chapter 3, Vana Parva).
(17) At first the Pāṇḍavas stayed in Dwātavānanda and later on the advice of Vyāsa they went to Kāmyakavāna. (Sloka 41, Chapter 36, Vana Parva).
(18) He advised Bhīmasena to remain quiet for thirteen years. (Chapter 52, Vana Parva).
(19) Brhadaśva, the sage, narrated the story of Nala to Dharmaputra while they were in the forest. (Chapter 43, Vana Parva).
(20) The sage Lomaśa imparted instructions on philosophy to Dharmaputra while they were in the forest. (Chapter 94, Vana Parva).
(21) Yudhiṣṭhira met and conversed with Parāśurāma at the mountain Mahendra. (Chapter 117, Vana Parva).
(22) The Pāṇḍavas then travelled in north India. On their way to the mountain of Gandhamādana Pāṇcālī fainted and Yudhiṣṭhirā wept bitterly. (Chapter 145, Vana Parva).

(23) From Gandhamadana Dharmaputra with his wife and brothers reached Badarikāśrama and from there they returned to Dvaitavana.

(24) When they went to Kāmyaka vana Śrī Kṛṣṇa visited Dharmaputra there. (Chapter 153, Vana Parva).

(25) Durudhāna and his followers made a grand march to Kāmyaka vana to see the Pāṇḍavas in sad plight and there the Gandharva Citrasena bound them all by ropes. Arjuna on the orders of Dharmaputra got them all released. (Chapter 246, Vana Parva).

(26) While the Pāṇḍavas were in exile in the forest Duṣśāsana went and invited Yudhiṣṭhirā to attend a Vaisājya sacrifice conducted by Durudhāna. But Dharmaputra sent him away saying that it was not proper to come to the country before the expiry of the period of exile. (Chapter 256, Vana Parva).

(27) Yudhiṣṭhirā received the sage Durvāsas with respect and after offering homage sent him away contentedly. (Chapter 262, Vana Parva).

(28) Jyādṛatha kidnapped Pāṇcāli and in the battle that ensued Dharmaputra slew the King of Trigartta but left free Jyādṛatha. (Chapter 272, Vana Parva).

(29) At a time when Yuddhiṣṭhirā was plunged in sorrow the sage Mārkandeya narrated the story of Śrī Rāma to console him. (Chapters 273 to 291, Vana Parva).

7) How Dharmadeva tested Yudhiṣṭhirā. The Pāṇḍavas travelling through the forests reached Dvaitavana. A brahmin among their group was making fire by the araṇī sticks when a deer rushed at him and took the araṇī sticks away, carrying them on its horns. The Pāṇḍavas ran after the deer and they travelled far away from their place, still not getting scent of it. They were all tired and thirsty. Yudhiṣṭhirā directed Nakula to climb on the top of a tree and investigate whether there was any water anywhere nearby. Nakula did so and reported that he could see a pond not far from the place where they were sitting. Yudhiṣṭhirā asked Nakula to go and fetch water. Nakula did not return for a long time and Sahadeva was asked to go and enquire. Sahadeva also did not return and Arjuna was sent in search of them. When Arjuna did not return Bhimasena went to enquire. Bhimasena also did not return and finally Yudhiṣṭhirā himself set out in search of them. On reaching the pond Yudhiṣṭhirā was dumbfounded to see his brothers lying dead on the banks of the pond. Weeping bitterly Yudhiṣṭhirā entered the pond and to his surprise he heard a voice from the air addressed to him thus: “Ho, Yudhiṣṭhirā, I am a stork living on the small fishes of this pond. This pond is my hereditary property. It was I who killed your brothers. I will ask you certain questions. If you answer them correctly you can drink from this pond. If not, you will also die.”

Dharmaputra:—“I do not believe that you are simply a bird. My brothers are renowned for their valour and have defeated not only the devas, dānavas, gandharvas and rākṣasas but also the four huge mountains like Himālaya Pāryāṭa, Vindhya and Malayā. I am eager to know your true self who have slain such brave brothers of mine.”

Yakṣa:—“I am a Yakṣa and not merely a bird. I objected to your brothers’ taking water from the pond. But waving aside my objections they started taking water from the pond and then I slew them. Now, hear my questions: Who carries the Sun? Who are his followers? Who makes the sun set? On whom does the sun exist?”

Dharmaputra:—It is Brahman who carries the Sun. Devas are his followers. Dharmā makes him set. He exists on Satya.

Yakṣa:—How does Mahāsiddhi come to lie Śrūtis? (those who study the Vedas).

Yudhiṣṭhirā:—It happens by deep penance.

Yakṣa:—What is the reason for a brahmin getting divinity? What deed is equal to good conduct? What makes a brahmin mortal and what makes him evil?

Yudhiṣṭhirā:—The Brahmin gets divinity by meditation. Austerity is equal to good conduct. Death makes a brahmin mortal and abusive words make him evil.

Yakṣa:—What is the divinity of Kṣatriya? What is equal to good nature? What makes them mortal and what makes them evil?

Dharmaputra:—The divinity of a Kṣatriya is weapon. Sacrifice is equal to good conduct. Fear makes him mortal and non-sacrifice makes him evil.

Yakṣa:—What is the best thing for agriculture? What is the most important thing for agriculture? What are the installations of the atmosphere and child-birth?

Dharmaputra:—The best thing for agriculture is rain. The important thing for agriculture is seed. The installation of atmosphere is rays and that of child-birth is child.

Yakṣa:—Who is lifeless even though he breathes?

Dharmaputra:—He who never offers oblations to a deva, a guest or a servant is like the dead even though he breathes.

Yakṣa:—What is bigger than the earth? What is higher than the sky? What is swifter than the wind? What are greater in number than grass?

Dharmaputra:—Mother is bigger than the earth. Father is taller than the sky. Mind is swifter than the wind. Thoughts are greater in number than grass.

Yakṣa:—What is it that does not shut its eyes when asleep? What is it that does not grow after birth? What is heartless? What grows very quickly?

Dharmaputra:—A fish does not shut its eyes when asleep. An egg does not grow after its birth. A stone is heartless. A river grows very quickly.

Yakṣa:—Who is a friend to one who lives outside his country? Who is a friend to a householder, to a patient and to one dead?

Dharmaputra:—For one who leaves his country the friend he gets on his way is the best friend. To a householder his wife is his friend, to a patient his doctor and to one dead, charity.

Yakṣa:—Who is a guest of all? What is Nectar? What is spread throughout the world?

Dharmaputra:—Agni (fire) is the guest of all. Moon (Candra) is the nectar. Air is that which is spread throughout the world.

Yakṣa:—Who circles around solo? Who is born again? What is the remedy for cold? What gives the maximum yield?

Dharmaputra:—The Sun circles solo. Candra is born again. Fire is the remedy for cold. Earth gives the maximum yield.
Yakṣa:—What is the soul of Man? Who is the companion given by God? What is Upajīvana?
Dharmaputra:—The soul of Man is his son. The companion given by God is wife. Cloud is Upajīvana.
Yakṣa:—How do you become rich? How do you become happy?
Dharmaputra:—If you abandon lust you will be rich. If you abandon desire you will be happy.
Yakṣa:—By what is this world covered? By what does the world become clear? By what does one lose his friend? What is the obstacle for an entry into heaven?
Dharmaputra:—Dullness covers the world. World becomes clear by intelligence. A friend is lost by desire. Domestic ties stand in the way of getting into heaven.
Yakṣa:—Who are those equal to the dead? Which country is dead?
Dharmaputra:—A poor penniless man is equal to the dead. The country where there is mob-rule is dead.
Yakṣa:—Who is a pandit? Who is an atheist? Who is wicked? What are lust and jealousy?
Dharmaputra:—A righteous man is a pandit. An atheist is wicked. Lust is the cause of worldly life. Jealousy is the cause of worry.
Yakṣa:—Though charity, wealth and lust are incompatible with each other when do they unite together?
Dharmaputra:—When charity and wife compromise the above three blend together harmoniously.

The Yakṣa was highly pleased with the replies given by Dharmaputra. He then offered to revive one of his brothers and asked Dharmaputra to name whom he should do so. Then Yudhiṣṭhira named Nakula. Yakṣa then inquired why he had named Nakula leaving aside Arjuna and Bhīma. Dharmaputra replied that though Kuntī and Mādrī were two wives of Pāṇḍu they were both mothers to them and so he wanted to see one of the sons of Mādrī alive. He therefore pressed the name of Nakula again. The Yakṣa who was none other than Dharmadeva was immensely happy to hear that reply and gave life to all his brothers. He confessed to Yudhiṣṭhira that it was he who in the form of a deer came and ran away with the arāṇī sticks. He returned the arāṇī sticks also. Dharmadeva then advised them to go and spend their life incognito at the court of King Vīrāṇa blessing them with the assurance that they would never be found out during their life in disguise. Dharmadeva disappeared after this and the Pāṇḍavas returned to their āśrama. (Chapters 312 and 313 of Vana Parva, M.B.)

9) Dharmaputra and the great battle. Events relating to or involving Dharmaputra from the end of his life in disguise up to the end of the Mahābhārata battle are given below:

(1) Yudhiṣṭhira tried utmost to avoid war but when it was made clear that the Pāṇḍavas would not be given even an inch of land, he decided to fight. So Yudhiṣṭhira prepared for a war and camped on one side of the Kurukṣetra with his army. (Chapter 196, Udyyoga Parva)
(2) Dharmaputra gave instructions to Arjuna to keep his army in vṛttihas. (Śloka 6, Chapter 19, Bhīṣma Parva)
(3) Dharmaputra was sorry when he looked at the Kaurava army. (Śloka 3, Chapter 21, Bhīṣma Parva).
(4) Yudhiṣṭhira blew his conch Anantavijaya to announce the war. (Śloka 16, Chapter 25, Bhīṣma Parva)
(5) Yudhiṣṭhira sought permission from Bhīṣma to fight against the Kauravas. (Śloka 35, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva)
(6) Yudhiṣṭhira bowed before Droṇācārya and sought permission to conduct the war. (Śloka 69, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva)
(7) He sought permission from Kṛpācārya to fight the war. (Śloka 52, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva)
(8) Yudhiṣṭhira went to Sālya, and obtained his permission to conduct the war. (Śloka 78, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva)
(9) Yudhiṣṭhira appealed to the warriors on the Kurukṣetra side to join his army. Only Yuyutsu, responded to that beckoning and joined the Pāṇḍava’s side. (Śloka 94, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva)
(10) On the first day of the battle Dharmaputra fought a duel with Sālya. (Śloka 28, Chapter 45, Bhīṣma Parva)
(11) Yudhiṣṭhira constructed a Vajra Vyūha (an array in the shape of a diamond) with his army. (Śloka 22, Chapter 81, Bhīṣma Parva)
(12) Yudhiṣṭhira fought with fury and defeated Śrutāyus. (Śloka 8, Chapter 84, Bhīṣma Parva)
(13) Yudhiṣṭhira got defeated by Bhīṣma. (Śloka 2, Chapter 86, Bhīṣma Parva)
(14) Bhagadatta attacked Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 84, Chapter 96, Bhīṣma Parva)
(15) He fought against Śakuni. (Śloka 11, Chapter 103, Bhīṣma Parva)
(16) Yudhiṣṭhira sought permission from Śrī Kṛṣṇa to kill Bhīṣma and he went straight to Bhīṣma himself to ask him to be killed. Yudhiṣṭhira attacked Bhīṣma as per the latter’s instructions. (Chapter 107 to 115, Bhīṣma Parva)
(17) In the meantime Droṇācārya made a vow that he would capture Yudhiṣṭhira. So Yudhiṣṭhira thereafter, always kept Arjuna near at hand. (Śloka 3, Chapter 13, Droṇa Parva).
(18) Yudhiṣṭhira consolde his own army when Abhimanyu was slain. (Śloka 35, Chapter 49, Droṇa Parva)
(19) Yudhiṣṭhira attacked Sālya and Kṛttavām. (Chapters 95 and 97, Bhīṣma Parva)
(20) Yudhiṣṭhira was defeated in a fight with Droṇa. (Śloka 81, Chapter 106, Droṇa Parva)
(21) He fought against Duryodhana. (Śloka 15, Chapter 124, Droṇa Parva)
(22) He defeated Droṇācārya in another battle. (Śloka 27, Chapter 157, Droṇa Parva)
(23) He became moody when Ghaṭotkaca was killed. (Śloka 27, Chapter 183, Droṇa Parva)
(24) He made Karna swoon in a fight. (Śloka 21, Chapter 49, Karna Parva)
(25) He withdrew from the battlefield after having been defeated by Aśvatthāma. (Śloka 38, Chapter 35, Karna Parva)
(26) Karna wounded Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 33, Chapter 63, Karna Parva)
(27) Once Yudhiṣṭhira scolded Arjuna and the latter greatly offended started to go to the forests and then Yudhiṣṭhira himself appeased him. (Chapters 63, 70 and 71, Karna Parva)
(28) Yudhiṣṭhira slew Candrasena and Drumarśa who were the guardians of Sālya’s Cakravīrh. (Śloka 52, Chapter 12, Sālya Parva).
(29) He slew Śalya (Śloka 51, Chapter 17, Śalya Parva).

(30) He killed the younger brother of Śalya. (Śloka 64, Chapter 17, Śalya Parva).

(31) Durudhana at this time went to a lake in Dvārapāyana and lay there immersed under water. Yuddhiṣṭhira went there with an army and challenged him for a fight. (Śloka 18, Chapter 61, Śalya Parva).

(32) When Yuddhiṣṭhira won the war he sent Śri Kṛṣṇa to Hastināpura to console Gândhārī. (Śloka 40, Chapter 62, Śalya Parva).

10) Yuddhiṣṭhira is crowned King. When Yuddhiṣṭhira won the war he sent Nakula to bring Pāṇḍaḷī. He went round the Kuruṅgetra battle ground and saw his own kith and kin lying dead and the sight made him faint. After that he went to Dhrūtaṛṣṭra. Gândhārī cursed him for killing her sons. Gândhārī gave a piercing look at the nails on the foot of Dhrmaputra when he stood before Gândhārī bowing down. Instantly the nails turned black. Yuddhiṣṭhira gave Dhūtaṛṣṭra the names of all the prominent persons who were killed in the war. Dhrūtaṛṣṭra ordered Yuddhiṣṭhira to perform the obsequies of the dead. It was at this stage that Yuddhiṣṭhira came to know from Kunti that Karna was his brother. Yuddhiṣṭhira wept bitterly when he knew the secret from his mother and cursed womankind as a whole stating that woman would thereafter be incapable of keeping a secret to herself. The news of the death of Karna gave a sudden mental turn-back to Yuddhiṣṭhira and he decided to renounce all and go to the forest. He called aside his followers and announced his decision to them. At that time Vyāsa came there and preached to him about the perishable nature of life. Yuddhiṣṭhira then asked him what he should do for the atonement of the sins committed. Though he strongly desired to go to the forest Vyāsa and Śri Kṛṣṇa did not allow him to do so and sent them all to Hastināpura. When the Pāṇḍavas entered the city the people gave them a rousing reception and Yuddhiṣṭhira was crowned King. (Chapters 10 to 17 of Saṃśikha Parva, Chapters 27 to 29 Śtri Parva, Chapters 1 to 40 Śanti Parva).

11) Administration. When Yuddhiṣṭhira became King, with the permission of Dhrūtaṛṣṭra, he distributed the various administrative responsibilities among his brothers. He took for himself the task of taking care of their kith and kin and friends. He gave many gifts to the brahmans and other dependants. He once went to Śri Kṛṣṇa to express his gratitude for him. He visited Bhiṣma lying on his bed of arrows accompanied by Śri Kṛṣṇa and his brothers. Bhiṣma revealed to him the inner import of Rājadharm, Apadharm and Mokṣadharm. Receiving the blessings of Bhiṣma Yuddhiṣṭhira and his brothers returned to Hastināpura. Yuddhiṣṭhira went to the Himalayas to get riches from Marutta before performing an Aśvamedha Sacrifice. While on his way to the Himalayas he fasted for a night and worshipped Śiva. People like Vyāsa and Śri Kṛṣṇa partook in the sacrifice. After the sacrifice was over Dhrūtaṛṣṭra desired to go to forest and sought the approval of Yuddhiṣṭhira to do so. On hearing that Yuddhiṣṭhira wept. But on the advice of Vyāsa he gave his approval for Dhrūtaṛṣṭra to go to forest. Dhrūtaṛṣṭra appealed to him through Vidura for funds to perform the obsequies of the dead. Bhiṣma objected to this but Yuddhiṣṭhira reprimanded him and silenced him and gave Dhrūtaṛṣṭra enough funds for his purposes. Kunti and Gândhārī accompanied Dhrūtaṛṣṭra to the forest. Yuddhiṣṭhira accompanied by Pāṇḍaḷī and Sahadeva went and saw them in the forests after a few days. (Chapters 41 to 55, Śanti Parva, Chapters 92 from Aṣūsāna Parva and Aśvamedha Parva and Chapter 26 from Aṣṭamāvasīka Parva).

12) Vidura merges into Dhrmaputra. When Dhrūtaṛṣṭra, Gândhārī and Kunti went to forest Vidura also accepted sannyāsa and left for the forest. There sitting under a tree he started doing penance. After a few days Yuddhiṣṭhira came to the forest to see his mother and others. After spending some time with Dhrūtaṛṣṭra, Gândhārī and Kunti he went to the place where Vidura was doing penance. Vidura started running the moment he set eyes on Yuddhiṣṭhira and the latter ran after him. After some time Vidura turned back and stood staring at Yuddhiṣṭhira. At that time the soul of Vidura escaping from his body merged with that of Yuddhiṣṭhira. The body of Vidura stood stiff and leaned against a tree. Taking him to be dead Yuddhiṣṭhira started to do the funeral rites and then there resounded a voice from heaven saying that Vidura was not dead. The unknown voice was from Dharmadeva. When the voice subsided Vidura became his old self again. Yuddhiṣṭhira went back. (Chapter 26, Aṣṭamāvasīka Parva).

13) The end of Dharmaputra. Soon after his return from the forest Nārada came to Hastināpura and told him of the death of Dhrūtaṛṣṭra, Kunti and Gândhārī in a wild fire in the forest. Lamenting deeply Yuddhiṣṭhira performed the obsequies at Hastināpura. It was at this time that the Yādava dynasty perished and Dvārakā was sunk into the ocean. The Pāṇḍavas then crowned Parīkṣit as their successor and entrusted Yuyutsu with the administration of the State till Parīkṣit came of age. Vajra was appointed as chief of Indraprastha. The obsequies of Vāsudeva, Balarāma and Kṛṣṇa were performed at Hastināpura. Kṛpācārya was appointed as preceptor to Parīkṣit. After having made all such arrangements the Pāṇḍavas commenced their Mahāprāśāna. The five Pāṇḍavas and Pāṇḍaḷī started from Hastināpura. A dog also followed them. Yuddhiṣṭhira walked ahead. On the way, one by one, Pāṇḍaḷī Sahadeva, Nakula, Arjuna and Bhimasena fell dead. Alone with a dog to keep company, Yuddhiṣṭhira reached a plateau on the top of the Himālayas and there Indra was waiting for him with a chariot. But Yuddhiṣṭhira said that he would not come to heaven without his wife and brothers. He was then informed that they had already reached heaven. Yuddhiṣṭhira insisted that the dog also should be taken to heaven which Indra blankly refused. But Yuddhiṣṭhira refused to ascend the chariot without the dog which, he said, had given him company from the start to the finish. The dog then changed itself into Dharmadeva and he complimented him on his sense of justice. When Yuddhiṣṭhira entered heaven he saw Durudhana sitting in all luxury and glory. Yuddhiṣṭhira did not like it but Nārada pacified him. Yuddhiṣṭhira saw all his relatives sitting there. A devadāta took him round hell also. When he heard the pitiable groans from there Yuddhiṣṭhira thought his right place was with them. But Indra and Dharmadeva again consoléd him. He was given a bath in Ākāśaganga. He then lost his mortal form and his soul entered Dīvāloka.
Standing in the form of Dharmadeva he saw all his relatives including Kr̥ṣṇa. (Chapters 38 and 39, Aṣṭamatāvāsīka Parva, Chapter 1, Mausala Parva; Mahāprasthānīka Parva, Svāgārohaṇa Parva).

14) Synonyms of Yudhīṣṭhīra. Ājāṃśa, Ājāṭhastra, Bhārata, Bhārataśārdaṇā, Bhāratapravara, Bhāratagṛha, Bhārataṣattama, Bhāratāsinha, Bhāmantara, Dharmā, Dharmaja, Dharmājananada, Dharmprabhava Dharmaputra, Dharmarāj, Dharmārāj, Dharmasuta, Kaunteya, Kaurava, Kauravaśṛṣṭha, Kauravananda, Kauravya, Kauravanātha, Kuntinanda, Kuruśārdha, Kuruśrēṣṭha, Kurudvāha, Kurukulodvāha, Kurumukhya, Kuruṇandana, Kurupāṇḍavāgya, Kurupati, Kurupavira, Kurupuṣīgaya, Kururāja, Kurusattama, Kuruttamā, Kuruvardhana, Kuruvīra, Kuruvyṣṭha, Mudāṅgaketu, Pāṇḍava, Pāṇḍavāśṛṣṭha, Pāṇḍavananadanā, Pāṇḍavayā, Pāṇḍuputra, Pārītha and Yādavimātā. All these words have been used to identify Yudhīṣṭhīra in the Mahābhārata.

Dharmarāja. A king of Gaudadesa. He became King at a time when Jainism was getting more and more hold on the people and the Hindu Vedic rites were getting less and less popular among the people. The King thought it was his duty to revive the interest in the Vedic rites and so became a priest himself and did much propaganda on the superiority of the same, writing several books on the subject for the benefit of the people. (Bhavīṣyaprakāśa, Prātiṣārga Parva).

Dharmārāṇya. A Brahmin. He had many children. The major portion of his life was spent in hard work to support his large family. After that he went in search of means to attain heaven. In his quest, he happened to reach the realm of Nāgas (serpents). He entered the house of a Nāga named Padmanābha. When he reached the house Padmanābha had been away carrying the chariot of the Sun. Dharmārāṇya sat outside the house and spent a few days in vow and meditation. Then Padmanābha returned. The Brāhmaṇa asked Padmanābha about the ways of attaining heaven. The Nāga replied that there was none superior to the Sun. The Brahmin accepted penance and lived in the hermitage of Cyavana for a few days. (M.B. Śānti Parva, 4 Chapters from 361).

Dharmārāṇya (M). A forest which is a holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva Chapter 82 Stanza 46, that the moment one enters this forest one would become sinless. This place was once the capital of the King named Asūtārasaya. See under Kuśa 1).

Dharmaratha. A king of the family of Aśvinī. He was the great grandfather of Lomapāda and the son of Dravrātha. (Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa).

Dharmasakha. A king of the Kekaya line of Kings. He had a hundred wives but no children. At last, at an old age, he got a son of Sucandra, wife of his elder brother. But the hundred wives of Dharmasakha were pining for having a son and so the king consulted his ministers and on their advice conducted a Puţra-kāmesṭi yaṭha (a sacred sacrificial ceremony for obtaining children) at Hanumākūṭa near the southern sea-coast. As a result of that each of his hundred wives got a child. (Skanda Purāṇa, Chapter 13).

Dharmāśarma I. A Brahmin who was born a parrot named Kaṇṭha in his rebirth. Dharmāśarma was one of the three sons of an eminent Brahmin called Vidyādharā. His other two sons were Vasuśarma and Nāmaśarma. While both his brothers became great scholars Dharmāśarma never studied anything and became a muff. His father was greatly worried on account of this. Dharmāśarma never heeded the advice of his father and went about in bad company ruining himself. Years went by and Dharmāśarma became old.

One day Dharmāśarma was sitting repentant in a temple sadly pondering over his past when a siddha came to the temple. Watching him Dharmāśarma saw him go and sit in a lonely place for meditation with his eyes shut. Dharmāśarma went and stood near him very respectfully. When the Siddha opened his eyes after some time he saw Dharmāśarma standing before him and then the Siddha made enquiries about Dharmāśarma. The latter then requested the Siddha to give him instructions to acquire the supreme knowledge. The Siddha then gave him Jñānapadesa (advice on knowledge) and Dharmāśarma soon became a Siddha himself. He then started on a pilgrimage and on the way he got a parrot. He took care of the bird just like his son and loved it very affectionately. One day when Dharmāśarma was away from the place to collect fruits for his food a cat caught and ate the parrot. Greatly grief-stricken Dharmāśarma wept bitterly and ran about like a mad man. After some days he died and because at the time of death he was thinking about the parrot he was born a parrot in his next birth. The Jñānapadesa of the siddha was still lingering in him while he died and so even in his life as a parro the never lost the jñāna he had acquired in his previous life. (Chapter 122, Padma Purāṇa).

Dharmāśarmā II. See under Śivaśarmā.

Dharmāśāvarṇī. The eleventh Manu. (See under Manvantara).

Dharmāśva. A Brahmin. Once this Brahmin was coming home with water from the Ganges. On the way he saw Kāpakaḷa, the servant of merchant Ratnakara, being killed by an ox. Though Kāpakaḷa was a sinner, his end aroused pity in the heart of the Brahmin. So he sprinkled the Ganges-water on the body of Kāpakaḷa, who instantly regained life and energy. The Brahmin who saw the power of Ganges-water began to worship the Ganges from that day onwards. It is mentioned in Padma Purāṇa, Kriyā Khanda, Chapter 7, that finally the Brahmin got a boon from the Ganges that only uttering the name of the Ganges should he meet with death.

Dharmāttīrthī I. A holy place of ancient Bhārata. If a man batiches in a pond there, he would be absolved of all sins. (Sloks 1, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

Dharmāttīrthī II. Another holy place of ancient Bhārata. If a person batiches in a pond there he would get the benefit of performing a Vājapeya Sacrifice (Slk 162, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

Dharmāvarṇa. A Brahmin who lived in the country of Ananta at the end of Kālīyuga. Once when he went to the land of the dead, he saw his fathers hanging by the end of darbha. They requested Dharmāvarṇa to marry and obtain sons who would get them relief from their plight. Dharmāvarṇa married and as soon as he got a son he went to the forest of Gandhamādana to practise penance there. (Chapters 2, 17 and 22, Skanda Purāṇa).
DHARMAVATI. A wife of Dharmadeva. He got of Dharmavati a daughter Dharmavartā. Dharmavartā was married to Marici, son of Brahmadeva. (See under Gayātīrtha).

DHARMAVARTĀ. A daughter of Dharmadeva. (See under Gayātīrtha).

DHARMAVYADHA. Though he was born in the caste of foresters he became a saint by following the path of duty and righteousness. In his previous birth he was a Brahmin. He was a friend of a king who was an adept in archery. Once both went on hunting expedition to the forest. The Brahmin sent an arrow at a wild animal but the arrow went and struck a sage who was doing penance under a tree. When the sage was rolling on the arrow he said: “Oh, evil-natured Brahma, may you be born as a hunter selling flesh in your next life.” The Brahmin went and apologised to the sage and craved for pardon. Taking pity on him the sage consoled him by saying that though he would be born as such, he would be a great scholar and attain mokșa by doing his duty without even once wavering from it.

The Brahmin was born a hunter in the country of Mithilā. He took to looking after his parents as a vow and soon became a top-ranking righteous man. He did his duty to which he was born. He sold meat and earned a living. He never killed or butchered an animal. One day a Brahmin named Kauśika was doing penance sitting under a tree when a crane perched on the top of its branches defiled the Brahmin’s head with its droppings. The Brahmin in rage looked up and his powerful stare burnt the crane and it fell down dead. Leaving that place some time later he went to a house to beg. The house-wife informed him that he would be given alms only after attending to her husband. The Brahmin was not pleased with her reply. Seeing that she added “Please do not look at me like that. I am no crane. To me my husband is supreme.”

The Brahmin was taken aback when he heard the lady mention the incident of the crane. The lady explained to him that all her powers were due to her devotion to her husband and advised the Brahmin to go and meet Dharmavyādha of Mithilā to remove the egoism in him. Obeying her instructions Kauśika went and accepted Dharmavyādha as his guru. The learned hunter then spoke to Kauśika about Varṇadharmas, Śiṣṭācāras, hiṃṣa and ahiṃṣa, Māyāsīs relating to dharma and karma, the importance and glory of Brahmadeva, the significance of the control of the senses, Triguṇas, Prāṇavāyu, service to father and mother and many such other things. The egoism of Kauśika was removed and he returned home. Devoted to his parents he attained heaven. (Chapters 27 to 33, Vana Parva).

DHARMAYU. A king of the Pura family. His father was Raudrāva, the son of Pura and his mother was a celestial woman Mīgarakṣi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 11).

DHARŚTAVAMSĀ. A particular family of kings of the Ikṣvāku Dynasty. This family originated from Dhrṣṭa the brother of Ikṣvāku. So this family is called Dhārśtavamsā (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

DHĀTĀ. 1) General information. One of the twelve Ādityas. (See Dvādaśādityas and Āditya).

2) Other details: (1) At the burning of Kṛṣṇadāya forest among the gods who came against Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, there was Dātā also. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 266, Stanza 34).

(2) Dātā gave Subrahmanya five followers named Kūndā, Kusuma, Kūmuda, Dāṇībara and Ādāṇībara as gift. (M.B. Sāyi Parva, Chapter 45 Stanza 39).

DHĀTĀ H. It is seen in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anśa 1, Chapter 10, that two sons named Dātā and Vidhātā and a daughter Lakṣmī were born to Bhrigu, the son of Brahmadeva, by his wife Khyāti. Of them Dātā and Vidhātā married Ayati and Niyati, the daughters of Mecru. Lakṣmī became the wife of Mahāviśu.

DHĀTREYIKĀ. A maid of Pāncālī during the time of the forest life of the Pāndavas. It was this maid who informed the Pāndavas that Jayadratha had kidnapped Pāncālī. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 269, Stanza 16).

DHĀTU (S). (Minerals). To understand the Purānic stories regarding the origin of iron, copper, tin etc. see under Irump (iron).

DHAUMRA. An ancient hermit. He was one of the hermits who visited Bhīṣma in his bed of arrows. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 11).

DHAUMYA I. A hermit.

1) General information. This hermit was the younger brother of Devala, a hermit. The Pāndavas, who escaped from burning in the Lākṣa house, reached the banks of the Ganges when this hermit was performing penance in the holy tirtha of Utkocca. Arjuna defeated Cītaratha, a Gandharva. After that Cītaratha and Arjuna became friends. The gandharva advised him that a priest was unavoidable and that the Pāndavas should accept the hermit Dhaumya who was doing penance in the Utkocatirtha as their priest. Accordingly the Pāndavas accepted Dhaumya as their priest. From that day onwards in everything the Pāndavas did, Dhaumya was their priest. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 182).

2) Other details. (1) After the Svayārinvara of Pāncālī, Dhaumya performed the marriage ceremony for each of the Pāndavas from Dharmaputra to Sahadeva separately with Pāncālī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 197).

(2) When sons were born to the Pāndavas, Dhaumya performed the rites of investiture etc. with the Brahma string etc. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Stanza 87).

(3) Dhaumya was the chief priest who performed the rites of sacrifice at the Rājaśīya of Yudhiṣṭhira. He anointed Yudhiṣṭhira as King. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 10).

(4) When the Pāndavas started for forest life, Dhaumya walked in front of them with Kūsa grass in his hands, singing Yamasāma and Rudrasāma songs. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 80, Stanza 8).

(5) Once Dhaumya talked about the attributes of the Sun and advised Dharmaputra to worship the Sun. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 3).

(6) In the forest Dharmiya rendered powerless the illusive and magical arts of Kīrnīra, an asura (demon). (Mahābhārata, Vana parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 20).

(7) Dhaumya described to Dharmaputra the importance of several holy tirthas or Baths. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 87 to 90).

(8) On another occasion Dhaumya described to Dharmaputra the motions of the Sun and the Moon. and the positions of Viṣṇu and Brahmā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 163).
(9) When Jayadratha had stolen Pāṇcāli, Dhaumya blamed him and tried to recover Pāṇcāli. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 238, Stanza 26).
(10) Dhaumya advised the Pândavas how to preserve pseudonymity in the capital of Virāṭa. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 4).
(11) When the Pândavas started their life incognito Dhaumya performed the rite of Agniṣṭoma and uttered the Veda, mantras for their prosperity, recovery of kingdom and victory in the world etc. When they started Dhaumya took the fire with oblations and went to the country of Pāṇcāla. (M.B.Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 54).
(12) After the bhārata battle, Dhaumya performed the funeral ceremonies, offerings etc. of the relatives of the Pândavas. (M.B. Strī Parva, Chapter 24).
(13) After Dharmaputra was anointed King, Dhaumya disclosed to him the secrets of righteousness. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 15).
DHAUMYA II. In the Purāṇas we see another hermit with the name Dhaumya. In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 112, it is mentioned that this hermit was the brother and teacher of hermit Upamanyu. He had been keeping contact with Dyumatsena, the father of Satyavān. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 298, Stanza 19). Other names such as Ayodha Dhaumya, Ayodha Dhaumya, Apodhadhaumya, Apodhadhaumya etc. are used for this Dhaumya, (For details see under Ayodhadhaumya).
DHAUTAMŪLAKA. A king born of a dynasty of China. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 14).
DHAVALAGIRI. (SVETĀ PARVATA). A mountain. Arjuna once encamped in this mountain. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 29).
DHENU. See under Surabhī.
DHNUKA.
1) General information. A fierce Rākṣasa (giant) with the figure of a donkey. He lived in the forest of Kāli (Tāla). People did not dare to pass by that way fearing this giant. Hearing about him, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and his elder brother Balabhadra Rāma went to the forest. There were several palm trees in the forest, the fruits of which they shook with force. Hearing the noise Dhenuka ran to them. Balabhadra and Śrī Kṛṣṇa beat the giant to death.
2) Other details. (1) In Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, it is stated that Pralambaka, Cūṇā, Trāṇavarta, Mūṣika, Ariṣṭaka, Keśi, Dhenuka and others were the followers of Karīsa.
(2) In Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, there is another story that while Balabhadra Rāma, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the other cowherds were looking after the cows an asura entered into the midst of the flock, in the shape of a cow (Dhenu). Rāma and Kṛṣṇa saw him, struck him against a tree and killed him.
DHNUKAM. An ancient country in Bhārata. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Stanza 51).
DHNUKĀŚRAMA. A holy place. Once the god of Death Yama took the shape of a man and did penance in this place. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 54, Stanza 8).
DHENUTĪRTHA. A holy place. If gingelly (tila) is offered as gift in this holy place, one would get redemption from all sins. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 87).
DHIRADHĪ. A brahmin devotee of Śiva. He lived in Kāśī. Because he meditated on Śiva alone, Śiva was pleased with him and helped him in various ways.
The gaṇas of Śiva were amazed at Śiva’s partiality for Dhiradhi. Paramaśiva told them the story of the former birth of Dhiradhi. "This Brahmin was a swan in his former life. Once he was flying over a lake when he became tired and fell down. His colour became black. Then Kamalini, another swan who dwelt in the same lake told him to recite the tenth Chapter of Gītā, and to meditate on Śiva. Because the swan did that holy act, he was born a Brahmin in his next birth. Though he was a Brahmin in his previous birth, he kicked his teacher and for that fault he had to take birth as a swan. Later, because of the love of Śiva, Dhiradhi attained heaven. (Padma Purāṇa, Uṭtara Kaṇḍa, Chapter 184).
DHĪROSṆI. A god concerned with Śrāddha (offering to the manes). (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 32).
DHIṢANĀ. The wife of Havirdhana born in the dynasty of the emperor Pṛthu. Dhiṣanā was born from fire. (Six sons, Prācīnabharis, Sukra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vrajā and Ajina, were born to Havirdhana by his wife Dhiṣanā born of fire. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).
DHRṢṬA. A son of Vaivavata Manu. Iksāvāku, Nabhāga, Dhṛṣṭa, Sāryāti, Nariśyanta, Prāṁśu, Nga, Diṣṭa, Karīsa and Prṣadhra were the sons of Vaivavata Manu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).
DHRṢṬABUDDHI. A Vaśya who attained heaven by performing the fast of Vaśākha Vrata. He lived in the country of Bhadravata, on the bank of the River Sarasvati. The name of the king of the country was Dhrṛtimān. Dhanapāla, a Vaśya of that country had five sons: Sumana, Dyutimān, Medhāvī, Sukṛta and Dhrṛṣṭabuddhi. The last of them turned out to be a wicked man. Going after many women, keeping company with wicked people, gambling, wandering about in search of harlots, not venerating Gods, Manes or Brāhmanas, wasting the money of his father, eating untouchable food, drinking liquor and such other acts, he indulged in. Once he was seen walking in the street with his hand on the shoulder of a harlot. So his father turned him out of the house. He was discarded by his relatives too. He sold the ornaments he had on his body. When that was finished the harlots also evaded him. He became a destitute having no money or clothes. When he became tired with hunger and thirst he began stealing in that city. The King’s men caught him. They chained him and scourged him. Finally, he went to the forest and with a bow and arrows he lived by hunting.
Dhrṛṣṭabuddhi happened to reach the hermitage of Kaunḍinya. It was the month of Vaśākha. While Kaunḍinya was coming from the Ganges, having taken bath, a drop of water fell on Dhrṛṣṭabuddhi from the wet cloth of the hermit, and consequently his sins were washed off. He fell before the hermit and requested him to instruct him in the way of attaining heaven.
The hermit advised him to observe the fast of Vaśiṣṭha-śuklaikādaśī known as Mohini. Accordingly he observed the fast and became sinless. Invested with a divine form he entered the realm of Viṣṇu. (Padma Purāṇa, Utara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 51).

DHRŚṬADYUMNA. The son of King Drupada. He was brother of Pāṇcālī.

1) Birth. Drupada and Droṇa were fellow students. After finishing his education Drupada became King. When Droṇa came to his palace Drupada did not honour him. Droṇa got angry, went to Ḥastināpura and began to teach the Pāṇḍava and the Kaurava princes in archery and other weapons. When the weapon-training was over, Arjuna, at the instruction of Droṇa, defeated and captured Drupada. Droṇa seized half of his kingdom from him.

As Drupada was not powerful to wreak vengeance on Droṇa, he performed a sacrifice to obtain a son who could take revenge on Droṇa and regain his lost prestige. A son and a daughter were born from the sacrificial fire. The son was named Dhrṣṭadyumna.

The daughter grew up and became the famous Pāṇcālī. The Pāṇḍavas married her.

At the time of birth, Dhrṣṭadyumna had a crown on his head, and armour on his body, bow, arrows and sword in his hands. He ran out of the fire into a chariot and sat in it as if he were about to begin a travel of conquest. Seeing this the Pāṇcālīs were filled with joy. There was a celestial voice: “This boy will destroy the fear of the Pāṇcālīs. He is born to slay Droṇa.” At this time the queen approached the sacrificing priest with a request that the children born of the sacrificial fire should consider her as their mother. Accordingly the children accepted the wife of Drupada as their mother. Brāhmaṇa named the boy Dhrṣṭadyumna and the girl Kṛṣṇā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 166). (For more particulars see under ‘Pāṇcālī’ Para 2).

2) Till the battle of Bhārata. The history of Dhrṣṭadyumna till the battle between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas, is given below.

The news that Dhrṣṭadyumna was born to kill Droṇa spread everywhere. The Broad-minded Droṇa did not seem to mind this news. Droṇa took Dhrṣṭadyumna to his house, with the permission of Drupada and gave him training in the wielding of weapons. He believed that God’s will could not be thwarted. After he had learned archery Dhrṣṭadyumna returned to his kingdom. Next we see Dhrṣṭadyumna at the svayaṁvara (marriage) of Pāṇcālī. Several kings arrived from various countries on that occasion. When the auspicious moment came, Dhrṣṭadyumna brought Pāṇcālī to the nuptial dais. He proclaimed the rules and conditions that the competitors of Svayaṁvara had to observe. After that he conversed with each king who was present. In the Svayaṁvara Pāṇcālī accepted Arjuna. The Pāṇḍavas and Pāṇcālī were given the Kumbhakāra mandira (the Palace of Kumbhakāra) which stood in the city of Drupada, to stay for that night. Though the Pāṇḍavas were in the guise of Brāhmaṇas, Dhrṣṭadyumna had his own doubts about their identity.

So he hid himself somewhere in the Palace and kept an eye on them. This shows his peculiar trait of observation. After this he returned to his Palace and pacified his father who had been much worried about his daughter’s selection.

Next, we see Dhrṣṭadyumna, during the time of the forest life of the Pāṇḍavas. He consorted Pāṇcālī, who was miserable. After that he took the sons of Pāṇcālī, to his house. While the Pāṇḍavas were living in the forest ‘Kāmāyaka’, Dhrṣṭadyumna visited them. The forest life of the Pāṇḍavas came to an end. A battle between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas became inevitable. Then the Pāṇḍavas selected Dhrṣṭadyumna, as the commander-in-chief of their army. He ordered for a general parade of the army and gave them instructions. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 166 to 195; the whole of Sabhā Parva; Vana Parva, Chapters, 12, 22 and 51; Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72; Udyoga Parva, Chapters 50, 157, 163 and 164).

3) Dhrṣṭadyumna in the Bhārata-battle. The part played by Dhrṣṭadyumna in the battle is given below:

(1) In the first day’s battle Dhrṣṭadyumna confronted Droṇa. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 31).

(2) Fought with Bhiṣma. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 31).

(3) On the second day of the battle he formed the disposition of the army called the ‘Kraunčārupavyuha’ (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Stanza 42).

(4) A terrible fight ensued between Droṇa and Dhrṣṭadyumna (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 53).

(5) He fought with Āśvatthāmā (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 19).

(6) He killed Damana the son of Paurava. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 20).

(7) He killed the son of Sālya. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 29).

(8) He fought with Sālya and was wounded. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 62, Stanza 8).

(9) He formed the disposition called the ‘Makara Vyūha’. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 4).

(10) He shot the missile called Pramohana (the arrow of fainting) and the Kauravas swooned. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 77, Stanza 45).

(11) He was defeated by Droṇa (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 77, Stanza 69).

(12) He defeated Durudhana. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 53).

(13) He fought with Vinda and Aravinda. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 86, Stanza 61).

(14) He fought with Kṛtvāvarma. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 9).

(15) He again fought with Bhiṣma. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 114, Stanza 39).

(16) There was a combat with Droṇa again. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 48).

(17) He fought with Suśārmā. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 37).

(18) He fought with Durmukha. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 4).

(19) He killed Candrabhomā and Bṛhatkṣatra, King of Niṣadha. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 65).

---

1. The fast taken on the eleventh day of the bright lunar fortnight in the month of Vaśiṣṭha.
2. Because he was born with Dhrṣṭadyumna (boldness) amarātvatā (impatience) and dyumna (vigour) the son of Drupada was called Dhrṣṭadyumna. Draupadī was called Kṛṣṇa as she was of Kṛṣṇa varṇa (dark complexion). Thus Drupada got two children from ‘Makha’ (sacrifice).
(20) He made Droṇa swoon by shooting arrows at him and got into his chariot and sat there. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 56).
(21) In the fight which continued Droṇa defeated Dṛṣṭadyumna. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 71).
(22) In the fight with Aśvatthāmā, Dṛṣṭadyumna was defeated. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 160, Stanza 41).
(23) He killed Drumasena. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 170, Stanza 22).
(24) He was defeated by Karṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 173, Stanza 7).
(25) He vowed that he would kill Droṇa, (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 46).
(26) In the fight that followed he cut off the head of Droṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 192, Stanza 62).
(27) Following this, he annihilated the elephants of the Kauravas and made Kṛtavarmā swoon. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 22).
(28) He fought with Karṇa. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 59, Stanza 7).
(29) In the fight with Aśvatthāmā, the Kauravas caught Dṛṣṭadyumna alive. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 59, Stanza 39).
(30) He happened to enter the camp of Duṣśāsana but escaped. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 33).
(31) In the night, while Dṛṣṭadyumna was sleeping Aśvatthāmā killed him to death. (M.B. Saupūtika Parva, Stanza 26).
(32) The funeral of Dṛṣṭadyumna was conducted according to rites. (M.B. Śrī Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 34).
(33) The Pāṇḍavas conducted mourning and offering to the deified ancestors for Dṛṣṭadyumna. (M.B. Śrī Parva, Chapter 42, Stanza 4).
(34) After death the spirit of Dṛṣṭadyumna was absorbed in the Fire-God. (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 21).

Dṛṣṭakarmā. A king of the Yayāti family, (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

Dṛṣṭaketu I. A prince who was the son of Dṛṣṭadyumna and the grandson of King Drupada. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

Dṛṣṭaketu II. A king of the family of Yayāti. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

Dṛṣṭaketu III. The son of Śiṣupāla, the king of Cedi. The details obtained from Mahābhārata about this king are given below.

1) Dṛṣṭaketu was the rebirth of Anuhāda, the son of Hiranyakāśipu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 7).
2) Dṛṣṭaketu was anointed as King after the death of Śiṣupāla. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 36).
3) After the death of his father, Dṛṣṭaketu became a tributary King of the Pāṇḍavas (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 2).
4) Dṛṣṭaketu had a sister named Kareṇumati. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Stanza 40).
5) During the Bhārata-battle, Dṛṣṭaketu supplied the Pāṇḍavas with an army consisting of 21,870 elephants, 65,610 horses and 109,350 infantry. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 7).
6) Dṛṣṭaketu was appointed as one of the seven commanders-in-chief of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 157, Stanza 11).
7) On the first day of the battle of Bhārata, Dṛṣṭaketu, confronted Bālika. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45)
8) He fought with Bhūrīśravas. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 84).
9) Dṛṣṭaketu fought with Paurava. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 116, Stanza 13).
10) Dṛṣṭaketu fought with the teacher Kṛpa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 33).
11) He fought with Ambaṣṭha. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25).
12) He killed Viradhavā. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 107, Stanza 17).
13) He fought with the teacher Droṇa and was killed in the fight. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 125, Stanza 23).
14) Among the spirits of those relatives of the Kauravas, who died in the Bhārata-battle, which were evoked to the surface of the Ganges, by Vṛṣā, the spirit of Dṛṣṭaketu also appeared. (M.B. Āśrama-vasika Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 11).
15) After his death Dṛṣṭaketu became a Viśvadeva in heaven. (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 15).
16) Viśā has used the following names in his Bhārata for Dṛṣṭaketu: Caidya, Cediđa, Cedići, Cediću, Čeriću, Cederati, Šišupāli, Šišupālāroja.

Dṛṣṇi I. The second son of Vaivasvata Manu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 15).

Dṛṣṇi II. A Prajāpati who was the son of Kavi. He was learned in Vedas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 13).

Dṛṣṭi. One of the eight ministers of Daśaratha. Jayanta, Dṛṣṭi, Vījaya, Asiddhārtha, Arthasādhaka, Aftika, Mantrāpāla and Śumantra were the eight ministers of Daśaratha. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Sarga 7).

Dṛtaadevā. Daughter of King Devaka. Vasudeva married this princess. Viśrṣṭa was the son born to the couple. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

Dṛṣṭaketu. A king of the Bhṛgu family. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

Dṛṣṭarāṣṭra I. Father of the Kauravas.

1) Genealogy. (See the genealogy of Arjuna).
2) Birth. Sāntu, a king of the Lunar dynasty, had two wives Gaṅgā and Satyavatī. Gaṅgā gave birth to eight sons. But seven of them were thrown into the river Gaṅgā. Giving the birth to Sāntu Gaṅgā disappeared. Sāntu then married Satyavatī, a fisher-woman. Satyavatī gave birth to two sons, Citrāṅgada and Vicitrāvīrya. When Sāntu grew old, Citrāṅgada was anointed as King, as Bhīṣma had taken Brahmacūra (a vow of celibacy). Once when Citrāṅgada went to the forest for hunting, a Gandharva of the name Citrāṅgada killed him. So Vicitrāvīrya became the King of Hastināpura. Bhīṣma took the three daughters of the King of Kaši, Ambā, Ambikā and Ambālikā by force into his chariot and brought the last two, to Hastinapura to be given as wives to Vicitravirya. On the way he sent Ambā back. Vicitravirya married Ambikā and Ambalikā. But shortly after that he also died, before any children were born to him. Fearing that the Lunar dynasty would come to an end, Satyavati brought her son Vedavyāsa, who was born to her from hermit Parāśara, before her marriage, to Hastinapura. In the night Satyavati sent Ambikā adorned with ornaments and costly garments, to the bedroom of Vyāsa. But she could not bear to lie with Vyāsa who was clad in barks of the tree and wearing matted hair. Still thinking that it was not right on her part to stand against the wish of her mother, she approached Vyāsa and lay with him with closed eyes. Ambikā became pregnant. The child she gave birth to, was blind. That child was Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Next night Ambālīka approached Vyāsa. When she saw Vyāsa she turned pale at his uncouth figure and her face became bloodless. So the child born to her was pale and was called Pāṇḍu. Next night the maid of the queen approached Vyāsa with a joyful heart and so she got Vidura as son, who was extremely wise and intelligent. Thus Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu and Vidura became sons of the same father.¹ (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 63 and 105).

3) Up to marriage. After the birth of Dhṛtarāṣṭra Vyāsa returned to forest and since then Bhīṣma stood in place of father to the children. Bhīṣma performed ‘Upanayana’ (investiture with Brahma-string) and other rites of the children. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu and Vidura had their education in Hastinapura. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 108).

“Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu and the wise Vidura
The three were brought up as sons by Bhīṣma,
They became well educated, cultured and devotional, Respectful towards vows and fasts, and
Of good physique, earnest in work
And they became valiant youths.
Learned the Vedas and Veda of archery,
Clubbing, shield and swords play,
Elephant-keeping, laws of chastisement,
Veda śāstras, allied works and epics and the Purāṇas,
Pāṇḍu came out expert archer,
Dhṛtarāṣṭra the strongest of all.
None in the three worlds was equal to Vidura,
In wisdom and knowledge and righteousness.”

(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 109).

Because of his blindness Dhṛtarāṣṭra was not anointed as King. It is stated in M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 108 Stanza 25, that in the place of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu was anointed the King.

4) Marriage and birth of children. Dhṛtarāṣṭra came of marriageable age. Bhīṣma had heard about Gāndhārī, daughter of Subala, the King of Gāndhāra, as a beautiful damsel of good qualities. Moreover she had acquired a boon from Śiva that hundred sons would be born to her. Bhīṣma sent a messenger to Subala with a request to give Gāndhārī as wife to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Subala was not much pleased at the aspect of getting a blind man as son-in-law. Still he thought of the prestige his family would get by a marriage alliance with the kings of the Pūru Dynasty, and finally agreed. Gāndhārī submitted to the will of her father, and to live with a husband who was blind. She tied her eyes with a cloth. Śakuni the son of Subala brought Gāndhārī to Hastinapura, and gave her to Dhṛtarāṣṭra. With the sanction of Bhīṣma their marriage took place.

Once Gāndhārī feasted Vyāsa who came tired with hunger and thirst. The hermit was pleased with her and blessed her to have hundred sons. Gāndhārī became pregnant. But even after two years no delivery took place. She crushed her womb by force and a lump of flesh came out. At that time Vyāsa came there. He cut the lump into hundred pieces and kept them in ghee-pots. Gāndhārī had a desire to get a daughter also. Vyāsa who had known it had cut the lump in such a way that there was a small piece in excess. The pots broke by themselves in due course and hundred sons and a daughter were born. The daughter was named Duśalā. A son named Yuyutsu also was born to Dhṛtarāṣṭra of a Vaiṣya woman. Duryodhana was the eldest of the hundred sons. The children grew up. Duśalā was given in marriage to Jayadratha, the King of Sindhu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 109 to 116).

5) Till Dhārārāṣṭra-battle. At this juncture Pāṇḍu incurred a curse from a hermit that he would die if his wife touched him. With that Pāṇḍu retired to forest, with his wives. Dhṛtarāṣṭra was grieved at the separation of his brother. Pāṇḍu died in the forest and Māḍrī jumped into fire and died with her husband. Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked Vidura to perform their cremation rites. After that Yudhiṣṭhirā became King. The Pāṇḍavas became more and more prosperous. This made the heart of Dhṛtarāṣṭra cloudy. He gave sanction to Duryodhana to transfer the Pāṇḍavas to the lac house in Vīraṇāvata. The lac house caught fire and it was rumoured that the Pāṇḍavas died in the lac house fire, and Dhṛtarāṣṭra shed crocodile tears, and ordered for the mourning and oblation to be performed. After the marriage of Pāṇcālī, it came to be known that the Pāṇḍavas were alive and that they were living with Drupada. Dhṛtarāṣṭra recalled them and gave them half of the country. The Pāṇḍavas made Indraprastha their capital and began to rule the kingdom. Yudhiṣṭhirā performed the sacrifice of Rājasūya (royal consecration). Dhṛtarāṣṭra also took part in the sacrifice.

Duryodhana wanted to challenge Yudhiṣṭhirā to a game of dice. Dhṛtarāṣṭra agreed but advised Duryodhana not to live in enmity with the Pāṇḍavas. The game of dice was played, and Yudhiṣṭhirā lost everything the Pāṇḍavas had. Dhṛtarāṣṭra called Pāṇcālī and told her that she might ask any boon. She requested that her husband Dharmaṇaṇa put might: exempted from servitude and the Pāṇḍavas made free. Dhṛtarāṣṭra compelled her to ask for more boons. She replied that according to law Vaiśyas were eligible for one boon, Kṣatriya women two boons, Kings three boons and Brahmaṇas hundred boons, and since she had already taken two boons, she wanted no more. Dhṛtarāṣṭra who was pleased at this reply gave the Pāṇḍavas freedom and returned all their lost wealth.

Duryodhana wanted to challenge the Pāṇḍavas for a game of dice again. Dhṛtarāṣṭra agreed. This time also Yudhiṣṭhirā lost the game. The Pāṇḍavas who had lost everything, were ordered to go to forest for twelve years and to live incognito for one year. The Pāṇḍavas went to the forest with Pāncālī. Dhṛtarāṣṭra was grieved. After thirteen years the Pāṇḍavas returned. Duryodhana said that not an inch of land would be given to the Pāṇḍavas. Dhṛtarāṣṭra felt sorry at this. Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to talk about conciliation. Duryodhana wanted to take him a prisoner. But Dhṛtarāṣṭra opposed it. Śrī Kṛṣṇa showed Dhṛtarāṣṭra his Viśvāruṣa (cosmic form) to see which, Kṛṣṇa gave him sight for the time being for which Dhṛtarāṣṭra was very thankful. The Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas came to Kurukṣetra for Bhārata-battle. Dhṛtarāṣṭra called Sañjaya to him and asked him about the preparations the parties had made for war. Sañjaya gave a true description of the battle arrays of both parties. (M.B. Ādi Parva. Sabhā Parva, Vana Parva, and Udyoga Parva).

(6) Dhṛtarāṣṭra and the battle of Bhārata. The terrible battle began. The heart of Dhṛtarāṣṭra was grieved with sorrow. When Arjuna vowed that he would kill Jayadratha, Dhṛtarāṣṭra cried aloud. When he knew that Śāyaki had destroyed the army of the Kauravas he became dumb with grief. He praised Bhima’s valour and blamed his sons. When Sañjaya told him about the fall of Karuṇa, Dhṛtarāṣṭra fell down unconscious. He rose up again and attended to the noises from the battlefield. He fell down again when he knew that Salya and Duryodhana were killed. He rose again and cried for a long time. He gathered the women-folk, his people and went to the battlefield. He broke the metal statue of Bhima and embraced the Pāṇḍavas. He asked Yudhiṣṭhira to do the mourning and offerings for the dead. It was done accordingly. The Pāṇḍavas respected Dhṛtarāṣṭra. But Bhima scolded them. Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī were greatly depressed and asked Yudhiṣṭhira to permit them to live in forest. Yudhiṣṭhira tried to prevent it. He kissed on the head of Yudhiṣṭhira. Seeing that they did not eat food he asked them to eat. Yudhiṣṭhira saw that they would eat only if he permitted them to live in forest. At last Yudhiṣṭhira agreed. Dhṛtarāṣṭra accepted money from Dharmaputra and performed mourning and offerings for the dead on a large scale (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Karuṇa Parva, Śrī Parva, Śantu Parva and Āśramavāsika Parva).

7) Journey to forest and death. Afterwards Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī went to forest. Kunti followed them. All the subjects followed them a long way, crying. Dhṛtarāṣṭra sent them back and entrusted the teacher Kṛṣṇa and Yuyutsu with the Pāṇḍavas. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī and Kunti lived on the Ganges. From there they came to Kurukṣetra and lived in the hermitage of Satayūpa for a time. During that period Nārada visited them. The Pāṇḍavas and the subjects visited them again. Vyāsa also came there. He took Dhṛtarāṣṭra and the rest of them to the river Ganges and evoked the spirits of those who died in the battle. Vyāsa gave Dhṛtarāṣṭra divine eye to see the departed spirits. After this, at the request of Vyāsa they all returned. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī and Kunti went to Gangāvāra and performed severe penance and were burnt to death in a wild fire. The relatives put their remains in the Ganges. The spirits of the three—Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī and Kunti entered the realm of Kubera. (M.B. Āśramavāsika Parva, Svargārohaṇa Parva):

8) The names of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Ājamīḍha, Ambikāsuta, Āmbikeya, Bhārata, Bharaṭāśrūḍa, Bharaṭaśrēṣṭha, Bharaṭasabha, Bharaṭasattama, Kaurava, Kauravaśrūḍha, Kauravāraṇa, Kauravendra, Kauravya, Kuruśrūḍa, Kuruśrēṣṭha, Kuruḍvaha, Kuruṇandana, Kuruṇījā, Kuruvarṇāsvardhana, Kuruvaṛddha, Vaicitravīrya, Prajinācākṣus etc. have been used as synonyms of Dhṛtarāṣṭra.

DHRTARASTRA II. A serpent born to Kaśyapa Prajapati by his wife Kadrī. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 9, that this serpent sits in the Durbar of Varuṇa and worships him. During the time of emperor Pṛthu, devas (gods), asuras (demons) and Nāgas (serpents) milked the earth, and the person who milked for the Nāgas was the serpent Dhṛtarāṣṭra (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69). It is stated in Mahābhārata, Karuṇa Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 28, that once this Nāga was admitted into the chariot of Śiva. When Balabhadra Rāma, discarded his body and went to Pātāla (nether world, several serpents came to greet him. Dhṛtarāṣṭra was one of them. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 15).

DHRTARASTRA III: A deva gandharva, (Semi-god). Some information. (1) This deva gandharva was the son of the hermit Kaśyapa by his wife Muni. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 15).

(2) He took part in the birth-celebration of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 55).

(3) He went to the presence of King Marutta as a messenger of Indra. (M.B. Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 107, Stanza 2).

(4) It was this Gandharva who had taken birth as Dhṛtarāṣṭra, the father of Duryodhana. (M.B. Svargārohana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 15).

DHRTARASTRA IV. A king who was the son of Janamejaya and the grandson of Kuru, a king of the Lunar dynasty. He had eleven sons: Kuntīkā and others. (M.B. Chapter 94, Stanza 58).

DHRTARASTRA V. One of the famous sons of Vāsuki. There is a story about this nāga (serpent) in Jamini, Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 39.

After the Bhārata-battle, Yudhiṣṭhira performed horse-sacrifice. Arjuna led the sacrificial horse. He travelled far and wide and reached Manalū. At the instruction of Ulāpi, Babhruvāhana confronted his father. A terrible fight ensued and Babhruvāhana cut off the head of Arjuna. Cīrāṅgadā sent Babhruvāhana to the ‘Nāgaloka’ (the world of serpents) to bring the jewel ‘Mṛtasānjīvini’ to restore her husband to life. The keeper of this jewel, which was under the custody of serpent Seṣā was Dhṛtarāṣṭra, the son of Vāsuki.

Knowing that it was not easy to get the jewel, Babhruvāhana fought with Dhṛtarāṣṭra. After a terrible fight he got the jewel. But Dhṛtarāṣṭra, who did not want Arjuna to come to life again, stole the head of Arjuna, by the help of his sons and threw it into the hermitage of Dālāraṇya.

DHRTARASTRI. A daughter born from Tāmār the wife of Kaśyapa Prajapati. Tāmār had five daughters: Kraunici, Bhāṣī, Syenī, Dhṛtarāṣṭri and Sukī. Of these, from Kraunici, the owls, the Bhasas from Bhāṣī, the eagle and vulture from Syenī, the swans and the ruddy goose from Dhṛtarāṣṭri were born in the world. (This occurs in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kāṇḍa, Sarga 14).

DHRTASENA. A king who took the side of the Kauravas. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 3).

DHRṬAVARMA. The brother of Suvarṇa, the king of Trigarta, and Ketuvarṇa. Arjuna led the sacrificial horse of Asvamedha performed by Yudhiṣṭhira after the Bhārata war. Sūryavarṇa the king of Trigarta, confronted Arjuna and was defeated. Ketuvarṇa who came next was also killed. Dhrṭavarna came next. He showered arrows on Arjuna and inflicted wound on his hand, and the famous bow, Gāndiva fell from his hand. Arjuna grew angry and fought so fiercely that eighteen famous and mighty Trigarta warriors fell. At last Dhrṭavarna fell at the feet of Arjuna and begged for pardon and accepted the supremacy of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Asvamedha Parva, Chapter 74).

DHRṬAVRATA. A king of the family of Yayāti. (Bhāgavata, Skandaḥ 9).

DHRṬI I. A daughter of Prajāpati Dakṣa. She was one of the wives of Dharmadeva. Mādrī, the mother of Nakula and Sahadeva, was the rebirth of Dhṛti. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67). Dhṛti had given birth to Niyama when she was the wife of Dharmadeva, who had married Śraddhā, Lakṣmī, Dhṛti, Tuṣṭī, Medhā, Puṣṭī, Kṛiṇā, Buddhī, Lajjā, Vapus, Sāntī, Siddhī and Kirtī, thirteen of the daughters of Dakṣa. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 7).

DHRṬI II. A Viśvadeva ‘god”. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91).

DHRṬI III. The son of Vitahavya, the king of Videha. He was a contemporary of Vyāsa and Vicitrāvira the king of the Kurus. Bahulāśva was the son of this Dhṛti. (M.B. Ādi Parva).

DHRṬIMĀN I. A king of the family of Yayāti. (Bhāg-vata, Skandaḥ 9).

DHRṬIMĀN II. An ancient country in Kuśadvīpa (the island of Kuśa). (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 13).

DHRṬIMĀN III. See under Dhṛṣṭabhuddhi.

DHRUVA I.

1) Birth and childhood. Manu Svāyambhuva the son of Brahmā, had two sons named Priyavrata and Uttānapāda. They were mighty heroes and of righteous character. Uttānapāda had two wives, ‘Surucī and Sūṇī. Surucī gave birth to Utama and Sūṇī to Dhrūva. Uttānapāda showed more favour towards Utama and Surucī. But he looked upon Dhrūva and his mother with disfavour.

Once Utama sat on the lap of his father when the latter was sitting on the throne. Seeing this, Dhrūva wanted to sit along with his brother. But fearing the displeasure of Surucī, who was also there, the King did not take Dhrūva on to his lap. Seeing the endeavour of Dhrūva, Surucī said to him, “Child, if you wish to sit on the lap of your father, you ought to have been born in my womb. You cherish high ambition which you do not deserve.” These words of Surucī were not palatable to Dhrūva who ran to his mother and sat on her lap. When Sūṇī knew what had happened she shed tears. After a few moments Dhrūva stood up and made a vow. “I will get a position unattainable even for my father, by my own endeavour.” He then started for the forest. He attained self-renunciation even in childhood becoming a disciple of hermits and performing severe penance.

Dhrūva began penance in the forest of Madhuvana on the river Jamunā. Sūṇī came and tried to take him to the palace. But he did not return. He intensified his penace more and more. At last Mahāvīṣṇu appeared before him. Dhrūva requested for a lofty, and eternal place which would become a prop of the world. Accordingly, Viṣṇu pointed out to Dhrūva, a noble place, higher than the planets, stars Saptarṣis (Ursa Major) and the devas who travelled in aeroplanes. Mahāvīṣṇu said that Dhrūva would live in a lofty place as a star till the end of the Kalpa and his mother Sūṇī would also remain as a star near Siva as long as Dhrūva lived (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapters 11 and 12).

2) The previous birth of Dhrūva. Mahāvīṣṇu appeared before Dhrūva and revealed his previous birth. Dhrūva was a Brahmin in his previous birth. He used to meditate on Viṣṇu with concentration of mind. In course of time he befriended a prince who was a youth, of beautiful and bright complexión, enjoying all the pleasures of the world. Attracted by the position and status of the prince, the Brahmin wanted to become a prince. Mahāvīṣṇu granted his wish. Accordingly Dhrūva took his next birth as the son of Utānapāda. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 12).

3) The reign and end of Dhrūva. After receiving the boon from Mahāvīṣṇu, Dhrūva returned. All who were there embraced Dhrūva. Years passed by. Utānapāda left his kingdom to Dhrūva and became a forest householder. Dhrūva became King. The King Dhrūva married Brāhmi, the daughter of Śīṣumāra a Prajāpati. The queen gave birth to two sons Kalpa and Vatsara. Dhrūva married Illā the daughter of Vāyu (wind). She gave birth to a son named Utkala. Utama remained unmarried. While he was hunting in the forest a Yaḵa (a demi-god) killed him. Surucī was caught in wild fire and died. Hearing about the death of Utama, Dhrūva took his weapons and reached the realm of the Yaḵas. He stood at their gate and challenged them for battle. One lac and thirty thousand Yaḵa warriors fought with Dhrūva. Dhrūva destroyed the entire army. The Yaḵašas began illusive and magical arts. Dhrūva overcame that also. At last Kubera himself appeared before Dhrūva and blessed him. They got him into a plane and placed him in a place higher than all the planets. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Bhāgavata).

4) The descendants of Dhrūva. Two sons named Śiṣṭi and Bhavya were born to Dhrūva by his wife Śambhu. Succhāyā the wife of Śiṣṭi gave birth to five sinless sons named Rīpu, Ripuṇjaya, Viṣpa, Vṛkala and Vṛkatejas. Bṛhaṭi the wife of Rīpu gave birth to Cākṣuṣa of extreme bright complexión. Manu was born to Cākṣuṣa by his wife Puṣkaraṇi the daughter of Viranaprajāpati and included in the children of Varuṇa. Ten sons were born to the bright Manu by his wife Naḍvala, daughter of Prajāpati Vairāja. These ten bright sons were Kuru, Pūru, Satadyumna Tapasvi, Satyavān, Sucī, Agniṣṭomaṇī, Atrātra, Sudyumna, and Abhijnayu. Agneypī, the wife of Kuru gave birth to six children. They were Āṅga, Sumanas, Khyāti, Kṛatu, Aṅgiras and Śibi. A son named Vena was born to Āṅga.
by his wife Sunithā. Hermits churned the right hand of Vena to obtain children. As a result of churning Vaineyava was born from the right hand of Vena. That King is the famous Prthu. This Prthu milked the earth for the prosperity of his subjects. (Viṣṇु Purāṇa, Aḥśā 1, Chapter 13)

5) The place of Dhruva. The origin of the river Gaṅga was through the hole at the top of the shell of the mundane egg. It flowed down and fell on the highest part of heaven. That place is called Viṣṇupāda. Sitting in this Viṣṇupāda, Dhruva does penance to Viṣṇu. So this place got the name Dhruvamaṇḍala. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

DHARMAI. He was the son of Nahuṣa and the brother of Yayāti. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 30).

DHARMAI. A king. He sits in the council of Yama and serves him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 10).

DHARMAI. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed by Bhimasena (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 155, Stanza 27).

DHARMAI. A king who supported Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 39).

DHARMAI. A son born to Dharmadeva by his wife Dhūmrā. He was one of the aṣṭa Vasus (eight Vasus). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 19).

DHARMAI. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 73).

DHARMAI. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 4).

DHARMAIANDHI. A king of Kosala. During the reign of this King there was prosperity in Ayodhya and the people were virtuous. This King had two wives Manoramā and Līlāvatī. A son named Sudarśana was born to Manoramā. After a month the second wife also gave birth to a son named Śatrujit. The King was much pleased and both sons were brought up alike. As Śatrujit was cleverer than Sudarśana people loved Śatrujit more.

Once Dhruvasandhi went to the forest for hunting and was killed by a lion in the forest. According to the custom Sudarśana became King. Līlāvatī, the mother of Śatrujit was the daughter of the King of Ujjayini. Her desire was to make Śatrujit the King. Manoramā the mother of Sudarśana was the daughter of the King of Kaliṅga. Hearing about the death of Dhruvasandhi, the kings of Ujjayini and Kaliṅga arrived at Ayodhya. The King of Ujjayini got angry because Sudarśana was made king and began war. The King of Kaliṅga took the side of Sudarśana. A terrible battle was fought in Ayodhya as to who should be the heir to the throne. In the battle Yudhājīt, the King of Ujjayini, killed Virasena, the king of Kaliṅga. Sudarśana and his mother Manoramā were in a sorry plight. According to the advice of minister Vidulla, Manoramā and Sudarśana fled from the capital. Vidulla and the maid of Manoramā accompanied them. In two days they reached Gaṅgātā. They were caught by fishermen thieves and they lost everything they had. At last with the help of a boat they crossed the Ganges and reached Trikūṭa. They went to the hermitage of Bharadvāja who was doing penance there. He gave them protection.

After making Śatrujit King, Yudhājīt began to search for Manoramā and Sudarśana. He got news that they lived in Citrākūṭa. Yudhājīt went there with an army. But he could not get them out of the hermitage of Bharadvāja. Manoramā and Sudarśana lived safely in the hermitage.

Once Vidulla came to the hermitage of Bharadvāja to enquire about Manoramā. Seeing the old man the hermit boys called out ‘Kīla Kīla.’ Prince Sudarśana heard only ‘Kīl.’ The syllable ‘Kī’ is the spell called ‘Kāmarāja bijāmāntra.’ Without knowing its meaning Sudarśana called out ‘Kīl’ several times. With that the prince got a special power.

Six more years passed. The prince became eleven years old. By this time Bharadvāja had taught the prince Vedas, Śāstras, etc. The prince was a devotee of Devī. Devī appeared before him and gave him a bow and a quiver which would never become empty, and an impenetrable armour. Sudarśana married Śāśikālā the daughter of the King of Kāśī. Nīśāda, the King of Śrīgīverapura, was a friend of Dhruvasandhi. He gave Sudarśana a chariot which Sudarśana rode through the forest. With the help of the King of Kāśī and others Sudarśana recaptured Ayodhya. He made Vidulla his minister and ruled over the country for a long time. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 3).

DHUMAPĀ. A set of defied manes (Pitṛs) who form a gaṇa (Siva’s hosts of deities). This Gaṇa is seen to have attended the sacrifice of Dakṣa. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 284, Stanza 8).

DHUMAPĀḷ. A river. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 18).

DHUMĀVATĪ. A holy place. The wishes of those who take three days’ fast in this holy place are realised. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 22).

DHUMINĪ. The wife of King Ajāmiḍhā of Puru dynasty. By this wife, a son named Ṛkṣa was born to Ajāmiḍhā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 32).

DHUMORNĀ. I. The wife of King Yama (God of Death). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 117, Stanza 9).

DHUMORNĀ. II. The wife of hermit Mārkaṇḍeya. (M.B. Anusāsana Parva, Chapter 146, Stanza 4).

DHUMRAI. A hermit. This hermit was a luminary in the Durbar of Indra. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7).

DHUMRAI. II. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 64).

DHUMRĀ. A daughter of Pājugāti Dakṣa. She became the wife of Dharmadeva. Two sons, Dhruva and Dhara were born to the couple. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 19).

DHUMRAKEṢA I. A Pracetas (Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

DHUMRAKEṢA II. The third son of Prthu, the son of Vena. Five sons were born to Prthu by his wife Arcis. On the death of Prthu, his elder brother’s son Vījītāsya appointed Dhūmrakeṣa as the governor of southern countries. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

DHUMRAKEṬU. A son of Bharata. Five sons named Sumatī, Rāstrabhir, Sudarśana, Varāṇa and Dhūmrakeṭu were born to Bharata by his wife Pañcijāni. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

DHUMRĀKṢA I. A king of the Iksvāku dynasty.

DHUMRĀKṢA II. A minister of Rāvana.
Genealogy. Brahman created the Raksas (giant) Heti. The son Vidyutkesa was born to him of his wife Bhayi. Sukesa was born to Vidyutkesa by his wife Sarakathakani. Sukesa married Devavati. Three sons, Malavayan, Sumal and Mal were born to the couple. To Sumal, by his wife Ketumati, fourteen children were born: Prahasata, Akaapana, Viiga, Kalkamukha, Dhurmaksha, Danda, Suparavasi, Sainhrada, Prakvada, Bhaskara, Veka, Puropatka, Kaikasi, and Kumbhamasi; most of them were ministers of Ravana. (Uttara Ramayana).

2) Work and death. Dhurmara was one who worked in all the branches of administration of the state. In all the battles fought by the Raksasas Dhurmara was present. He was also called Dhurnalocana. He was killed in the battle of Rama and Ravana at the hands of Hanuman. (Valmiki Ramayana, Yuddha Kanda, Chapter 51).

DHUMRAVA. A king of the Ikshvaku dynasty. He was the son of Sucandra and the father of Saini. (Valmiki Ramayana, Bala Kanda, Sarga 47).

DHUNDHU I. A notorious Asura. He was the son of the Madhu Kaitabha. Brahman was born in the lotus from the navel of Visnu, who was lying in meditation on the surface of water. From the car-wax of Visnu two asuras—Madhu and Kaitabha sprang up. They terrified Brahman by shaking the stalk of the lotus. Brahman became terribly afraid of the asuras and ran about on the surface of water. Hearing the cry of Brahman Visnu awoke, but he could not defeat the asuras. Visnu decided to employ ‘Sama’ (conciliation) the first expedient. The arrogant demons ordered Visnu to ask of them any boon. Visnu replied. If it is so, you must be killed by me. They could not but give the boon. They agreed to the request of Visnu and said: But we must be killed in an atmosphere, which is not cloudy.” Visnu killed them when the atmosphere was clear.

A son named Dhundhu had been born to Madhu and Kaitabha. Because Visnu had killed his fathers Dhundhu decided to take revenge on Visnu and the Gods. With this idea in view Dhundhu began to do penance in the sandy desert of Ujjalaka in Marudhanava. Standing on one leg he did penance for thousands of years. Then Brahman appeared before him and gave the boon that he would not be killed by Devas, Dasaivas (asuras), Gandharvas (demi-gods), Raksasas (demons), Yaksas (paragods) and Uragas (serpents). Having got this boon, he lived under sand in the desert of Ujjalaka. His idea was to destroy the gods.

A hermit named Uttanika had erected his hermitage in another part of Marudhanava and began penance. By his penance he made Visnu appear before him and then made a request that Dhundhu’s activities be put a stop to. Visnu replied “Uttanika Dhundhu has become a curse to the three worlds. There is a king named Kuvalasya, born of the dynasty of Ikshvaku. He will kill Dhundhu.” Saying these words, Visnu disappeared.

Uttanika went to the palace of Kuvalasya and told him what Visnu had said. Kuvalasya and his sons went to the forest and killed Dhundhu in a fight. From that day Kuvalasya came to be known by the name Dhundhumara, which meant ‘the killer of Dhundhu.’ (M.B. Vana Parva, 4 Chapters from 201).

DHUNDHU II. An ancient King who lived on vegetable food only. (M.B. Anuvasa Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 66).

DHUNDUHARI. See under Gokarna.

DHUNDUHULI. See under Gokarna.

DHUNDUMARA. A king of the Ikshvaku dynasty. (See under Kuvalasya). He was also called Kuvalayasa.

DHUNDUMUKA. A wicked King. Visvala was his wife. Even at the marriage of his son this wicked King remained indifferent. He indulged in sexual activities with a Sudra woman. Not much later he killed her. As soon as her brother knew about this he ran to the palace and killed the King Dhundumaka along with his wife. Because he was killed by a Sudra, the family of the King faced destruction. His son was also wicked like his father. But on the advice of a sage he begged utter (the five-syllabled and six-syllabled mantras of Siva) in consequence of which, his parents were redeemed. (Linga Purana).

DHUNDHURA. An Asura. It is stated in Gaigesa Purana that this asura went to the house of Kaayapa in the shape of a parrot and tried to kill Gaigesa who had incarnated in the house of Kaayapa, but was killed by him.

DHURANDHARAM. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 18).

DHURTA. A King of ancient India. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 238).

DHURTAKA. A serpent born in the family of Kaurava. He fell in the sacrificial fire of King Janamejaya and was burnt to death. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 13).

DHVAJAYATI. The daughter of the hermit Harimedha, who lived in the sky, according to the order of the Sun. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 13).

DHVAJIN. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 83).

DHVANI. The son of Apa who is one of the eight Vasus. Apa had four sons called Vaetaqda, Srama, Santi and Dhvani. (Visnu Purana, Am'a 1, Chapter 15).

DHVANYA. A king. He was the son of Lakshmana. (See Rygveda Index).

DHVASANTI. A hermit of the period of the Rygveda. A'vindevas rescued the hermits Turviti, Dabhi, Dhvasanti and Purushanti from danger. Rygveda, Manqala 1, Anuvaka 16, Suka 112).

DHYANA. (Meditation). Even from ancient times the people of Bharata believed that heaven could be attained by meditation. There are scientific methods of meditating upon God. They are described below:

The root ‘dhyai, means ‘to think’. Dhyana (meditation) means thinking of God with concentration. God is invisible and figureless. We can meditate only upon some material that contains the attributes of God. So dhyana (meditation) is to fix the mind on the object of meditation, and to imagine that particular object in a particular place and to concentrate the mind upon it. One who casts off his body, while engag ed in meditation attains ‘Suyujya’ (oneness with God).
He who can meditate upon God, with concentration of mind even for a moment or two can attain heaven. The fruits he attains are far greater than the fruits attained by performing great sacrifices and offerings. For meditation, there are four factors: Dhyātā (the meditator), Dhyāna (the act of meditation) Dhyeya (the object meditated upon) and Dhyānaprayojana (the attainment by meditation). He who indulges in meditation is the meditator. The act done by him is meditation. That which is meditated upon is the object of meditation. What the meditator obtains as a result of his meditation is the attainment. A meditator should be wise and virtuous, should have attention and patience, devoted to Viṣṇu and always energetic.

We can meditate upon God, walking, standing, sleeping and awake. God should be consecrated in the centre of the lotus chair of the heart and be worshipped with devotional meditation. It is to give practice in fixing the mind firmly on a particular object, that the sages say that some visible material object should be given to meditate upon, in the early stage of meditation. When concentration of mind is obtained by meditating upon a visible object, it will be possible for us to meditate upon an object which is not amenable to our senses. When engaged in meditation we should be thinking “Aham Brahmanā jyotirītam vāṣudevo viṁukta Oṁ”. (I am Brahmā, the light, the Spirit, Vāṣudeva, and Viṁukta (having no connection with anything), OM). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 374).

DĪBHAKA. A prince who, puffed up by the power of boons and blessings from the gods, tried to harm Durvāsas. Balabhadrarāma killed him. The following account occurs in the Bhaviṣya Purāṇa.

Mitradasa, King of Sālva, had two wives. No children were born to them for several years. Mitradasa’s minister, Mitradasa, also had no children. Mitradasa was a brahmin and a scholar. On his advice, Mitradasa, with his wives, went to Kaśī and performed tapas to please Śiva to get children. As a result of ten years’ rigorous tapas Śiva was pleased and blessed him that two sons would be born to him. Later his wives gave birth to two sons. The son of the eldest queen was named Harīsa and that of the second queen was named Dībhaka. At this time a son was also born to Mitradasa, the minister by the blessing of Viṣṇu. That child was named Janārdana.

Harīsa and Dībhaka were spoiled, but Janārdana was a bhakta of Viṣṇu. Harīsa and Dībhaka performed tapas in their childhood to please Śiva and got invincible power and arrows. After that they became loka-kṣaṇṭakas (torturers) and went round the world. Once they went to Kaśyapa’s aśrama and destroyed the place of worship. After that they went to the aśrama of Durvāsas. There they tortured the sages and made the sages naked who were wearing only loin cloth. Then they returned.

Enraged by these, sage Durvāsas went to Dvārakā taking the destroyed loin-cloth and other articles. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and his courtiers stood up and saluted him when they saw Durvāsas coming like sahāharudra. On hearing the news, Śrī Kṛṣṇa assured him that he would kill Harīsa and Dībhaka and sent him back pacified. Harīsa and Dībhaka began a rājasūya. They sent Janārdana to Śrī Kṛṣṇa with the message that he should either fight with them or give them tribute (in the form of money). Janārdana went to Dvārakā, just as Akūra, a devotee of Viṣṇu, went to Ambāḍi with the message of Kaṇṣa. Immediately Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra with the chief Ministers like Sātyaki went to Sālva. In the war that followed Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Harīsa and Bala. Bhadrarāma killed Dībhaka. (M.B. Bhaviṣya Parva, Chapter 103-129).

DĪGVIJAYAPARVA. A sub-division of the Sahā Parva of Mahābhārata. It comprises Chapters 25 to 32 of Sahā Parva.

DĪKŚĀ. Dīkṣā is the vrata that expels sin and increases Jñāna (wisdom). Those who are to be blessed fall into three categories. The person who belongs to the first category is called Viṣṇu-kalā; the second is Pralaya-kalā; and the third is Sakala. Viṣṇu-kalā is free from sin alone. Pralaya-kalā is free from sins and Karmas. Sakala has everything from Kalā to the earth. The Dīkṣās to be practised by the three classes of persons are of different kinds. Dīkṣā is classified into two: “Niradhārā and Sādāhārā.

Niradhārā Dīkṣā is performed for the sake of Viṣṇu-kalā and Pralaya-kalā. Sādāhārā Dīkṣā is prescribed for the third class of people, the Sakais.

1) Genealogy. See Daśaratha’s Genealogy.
2) Reign and Birth of Son. Dilipa is counted as one of the noblest kings. His reign was extremely popular. But even after a long period of married life, he had no issue. His queen was Sudakṣiṇa, the princess of Maγa-dha. In order to get Vasiṣṭha’s advice, Dilipa and Sudakṣiṇa went to the sage’s aśrama. After hearing about their grievance, Vasiṣṭha meditated for a little while and described why the royal couple were not blessed with children:—“Long ago, Dilipa had paid a visit to Indra. While returning after the visit, he passed by Kāmadhenu who was lying under the shade of Kalpavṛkṣa. He paid no heed to her, as he did not see her. The divine cow (Kāmadhenu) took this as a personal slight to her and cursed the King that he would not have children until he served and propitiated her daughter, Nandini. Neither the King nor his charioteer was aware of the curse. Kāmadhenu has now gone to Pātāla (underworld) to attend a sacrifice of Varuṇa. Therefore Dilipa and his queen should attend on and propitiate her daughter, Nandini.”

From the next morning the King and queen began to offer their services to Nandini. The King followed her as her shadow. After twentyone days, one morning Nandini went to graze in a dense forest. As usual, the King also followed her. As they reached the middle of the woods, the King was enchanted for a moment by the charm of the Sylvan scenery. Just then, on turning round he saw a lion springing towards Nandini to prey upon her. Suddenly he took up his bow and aimed an arrow at the lion, but to his great amazement, his hands were paralysed. The lion spoke to him as follows:—“O King, you need not exert yourself in vain. I am the servant of Lord Śiva. This holy deodor tree which you see in front of us, was planted and tended by Pārvati. My task is to protect this tree. Pārvati and lord Śiva have authorized me to kill and eat the animals which come this way. Therefore this cow is my food.”

The king was in a fix. He begged the lion to spare Nandinī and to eat his (king’s) body instead. The lion agreed. The King put down his arms and stood bowing down in front of the lion. Hearing the words, “Beloved child, arise” he looked up, and the lion had vanished. Just then Nandinī told him that it was she herself who had done this to test him. The King and Nandinī then returned to the Āśrama. As a result of Nandinī’s blessing, the King’s wife bore a son who later became the celebrated emperor Rāghu. (Padma Purāṇa, Utara Khāṇḍa, Chapter 198).

3) Killing of the Asura, Vīrasena. Once a powerful Asura named Vīrasena attacked Vaiśravaṇa. When lord Śiva came to know of it he tried to defeat Vīrasena, but in vain. At Śiva’s request, Mahāviśu entered the scene. He was also unable to subdue the Asura. Viṣṇu advised Vaiśravaṇa to seek the help of Dilīpa. Dilīpa went to Alakāpurī and encountered Vīrasena. Under the shower of arrows from Dilīpa, blood began to flow from the body of Vīrasena. But each drop of his blood came to life as a new Vīrasena and all those Vīrasenas continued a ceaseless battle with Dilīpa. At last Dilīpa prayed to Raktēśvarī who suddenly appeared and drank all the blood. In this way the king managed to kill Vīrasena. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Khāṇḍa).

4) Dilīpa and the Holy Waters. Once king Dilīpa led a saintly life on the bank of Gāṅgā, the sacred place worshipped by Devas, Rṣis and Gandharvas. With religious practices and offering pūjā to Devas, Rṣis and Piṭṣ, he spent time in prayer and meditation. One day he happened to meet Vasiṣṭha, and paid homage to him. The sage Vasiṣṭha described to him all the places of sacred waters and explained the greatness of each. (See under Khaṭvāṅga). (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 10).

DILIPA II. A serpent born in Kaśyapa family. There is a reference to this serpent in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 15.

DILIPĀŚRAMA. A sacred place. It was at this place that Ambā, the daughter of the King of Kaśi performed austere tapas (Penance). (See under Ambā).

DĪMDĪKA. A rat who played a part in Bīḍalopākhyāna. The story runs as follows:

Once a cat performed tapas, holding his hands up, on the banks of the Ganges, when the found no way to get food. Seeing the devotion of that cat all living beings birds and animals began to worship him. Once the cat called all rats and told them: “One cannot do spiritual and physical deeds at the same time. So I will look after your spiritual affairs. You should attend to my physical needs. That is, bring me food, bathe me in the Ganges, all these are your duties.”

The rats agreed to do so. They took him to the Ganges, bathed him and gave him food. But, the cat, whenever he got a chance caught a rat and ate it up. The cat’s health improved day-by-day and the number of rat’s began to decrease. Among them, there was a clever rat named Dīmdīka. He called all the other rats and organized a secret conference. The subject of discussion was the cruel deeds done by the cat to the rats.

The next day Dīmdīka went secretly to examine the ways of living of the cat. The cat ate Dīmdīka. After 40 days the rats came to know that Dīmdīka was missing. They assembled secretly. They elected a rat named Kōkila as their leader. Under his leadership the rats declared independence and left the place. The cat also went his own way finding no means to get food. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 160).

DINNĀGA. A Sanskrit dramatist who lived between the second and fifth centuries A.D. “Dhiranāga” was his other name. The Sanskrit drama “KUNDAMALĀ” which is based on Utāra Rāmāyaṇa and has six acts, was composed by Dinnāga. Dinnāga, the Buddhist preacher and this Dinnāga are two different persons. Vāiśāyaṇa and Śiva are praised in the introductory stanzas of Kundamāla (A.B. Keith: Classical Sanskrit literature).

DINANĀTHA. A King who lived in Dvāpara Age. He was a mighty and famous Vaiśāvava. But his childless life distressed him very much. Once he consulted Gālava about his plight. Gālava assured him that if he performed a human sacrifice, a son would be born to him. A handsome, scholarly and highly-born man was to be sacrificed into the fire, a cripple, a dark-skinned man or a crude fellow was unsuitable for the purpose. The King’s servants scoured the villages and towns looking for such a perfect man, but in vain. At last they reached a country called Daśapura, inhabited by noble Brāhmaṇas. The women of that place were reputed for their charming eyes. No man could resist their fascination. In that lovely city there lived a Brāhmaṇa named Krṣṇadeva with his virtuous wife and three sons. The King’s servants requested Krṣṇadeva to give one of his sons to be sacrificed. They offered four lakhs of gold coins as price, The Brāhmaṇa and his wife cried bitterly and Krṣṇadeva offered himself instead of his sons. The royal servants seized one of his sons after throwing gold coins in the house and prepared to take him away. At this stage the second son of Krṣṇadeva came forward and volunteered himself. They agreed and he accompanied them to the palace. On their way they met the sage Viśvāmitra. He asked them to release the boy but they refused to set him free. The sage followed them to the palace and undertook to perform a sacrifice which would bless the King with progeny without a human sacrifice. The King accepted the offer and thus the boy was saved. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 12).

DIPAKARŅI. A character in Guṇāḍhya’s Brhathkāthā. Dipakarṇi was a King. He had a wife named Saktimati. One day while she was sleeping in the garden she was bitten by a snake and she died. Distressed by her departure, Dipakarṇi accepted Brahmacarya. He was deeply grieved because he had no son to succeed to his throne. One day Śiva appeared to him in a dream and told him thus:- “When you pass through the forest, you will come across a youth riding a lion. Take him to your palace; he will be your son.” Dipakarṇi woke up happily. He had faith in his dream. One day he went to a distant forest for hunting. There he saw a very handsome boy riding on a lion. He was reminded of his dream when the boy dismounted and the lion walked away slowly to a nearby stream to drink water. At once Dipakarṇi shot an arrow at the lion. Suddenly the lion gave up its animal shape and transformed itself into a man and spoke to the King as follows:—

I am a Yakṣa named Sāta and a friend of Vaiśravaṇa. Once when I went to bathe in the river Gaṅgā, I happened to see a Rṣī virgin and I fell in love with her. I married her according to the Gândhārva rules. The Rṣis who came to know of it turned us into a lion couple by their curse. When we fell at their feet and begged pardon, they gave her a blessing that a son would be born to her and that I would fall under your arrow. After that we were wandering about as a lion-couple and in due course she became pregnant. In the fullness of time she gave birth to this boy and then was liberated from the curse. I have been bringing him up by giving the milk of lionesses. Now, by being hit by your arrow, I am also released from the curse. From this time kindly receive this mighty youth as your own."

After saying this, the Yakṣa vanished. Dipakarṇi returned to the palace, taking the boy with him. Since he was carried by Sāta, the boy was named "Sātavāhana". When he grew up into a youth, Dipakarṇi handed over the rule of the kingdom to him and entered Vānaprastha. In course of time Sātavāhana became an emperor. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Kathāpiṇṭha lambaka, 6th Tārāṅga.).

Dīpta Son of Manu Uttama. Uttama was the third Manu. He had three sons—Aja, Parāśu and Dīpta. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa Part 3, Chapter 1).

Dīptaketu. A King of olden times. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, verse 237).

Dīptakṣa. A Kṣatriya tribe. Purūravas, the renowned King was born in this family. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74).

Dīptarama. A Viśvadeva. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 91, verse 31).

Dīrga. A king of Magadha. He was killed by Pāṇḍu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 112, Verse 27).

Dīrgabahu I. One of the hundred sons of Dṛtaraṣṭra. Bhīmasena killed him in Bhārata War. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, chapter 96, Verse 26).

Dīrgabahu II. A pious King. There are conflicting versions about him in the Purāṇas.

Dīrgahajamga. A Yakṣa who was the elder brother of the Yakṣa Puspadatta. (Kathāsaritarāṇī, Kathāpiṇṭha lambaka, 2nd Tārāṅga).

Dīrgahājīvah. A dānava (asura) born to Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 30).

Dīrgahakarna. A rabbit. A character in one of the stories of the Pañcatantra illustrating the dangers of trusting mean or wicked people. (See under Pañcatantra).

Dīrgahalocana. One of the hundred sons of Dṛtaraṣṭra.

Dīrgahaprajña. A Kṣatriya King. He traces his ancestry from a part of the Asura, Viṣṇa Parva. Mahābhārata (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 12) states that the Pañḍavas had sent an invitation to him at the time of the Kurukṣetra battle.

Dīrgharomā. (Dīrghalocana). One of the hundred sons of Dṛtaraṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīmasena in the Bhārata War. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 127).

Dīrghasattra. A holy place. He who visits this holy place will derive the blessings of having performed the Aśvamedha and Rājasuyā sacrifices. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82).

Dīrghasravas. A son of Dīrgahalocana. (Ṛgveda, Manuḍula 1, Anuvāka 112, Sūkta 117).

Dīrgahalocana. A great Muni.

1) Birth. Aṅgirās, the son of Brahmā, had two sons, Utathya and Bhṛṣpati. One day when Utathya was away from home, Bhṛṣpati approached his elder brother’s wife, Mamatā, who was pregnant at the time, and tried to have sexual union with her. But she tried to dissuade him and said—“The child in my womb, born from Utathya’s semen has already mastered Vedas and Vedāṅgas. Your semen is also equally powerful. How can my womb bear the combined force of the two semen? So please refrain from this attempt of yours.” But even after hearing these, words of his sister-in-law, Bhṛṣpati was not able to control his passions. At the time of the intercourse, when the semen of Bhṛṣpati entered the womb, the child within it cried out—“Father! this passion is improper. Two persons have no place here. So withdraw your semen.” Bhṛṣpati did not heed the request. The child in the womb repelled the semen that entered the womb with his foot and it dropped on the floor. Bhṛṣpati who became angry, cursed the child. As a result, the boy was born blind. He got the name “Dīrgahalocana” because he was born blind. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 104).

2) Family Life. In brilliance of parts, Dīrgahalocana equalled Bhṛṣpati. Dīrgahalocana, who was born blind, married Pradveṣi, a Brāhmaṇī. The couple had many children, chief of whom was Gautama. But after the birth of the children, Dīrgahalocana fell into evil ways and became an object of hatred and contempt. The inmates of āśras called him a sinner. His wife, was disgusted with him. One day, the enraged Dīrgahalocana, in his fury cursed women as a whole and Pradveṣi could not control her anger. She, with the help of Gautama and other sons made a raft and placing Dīrgahalocana on it, floated it down the river Gaṅgā. The King Bali happened to see the raft floating down the river. He sent men to bring the boat to the bank. The King recognized Dīrgahalocana and asked the Muni to begot brilliant and intelligent children by his queen. Dīrgahalocana agreed and the King sent the queen Sudesa to him. The Queen who did not find pleasure in the company of the blind and decrepit Muni sent a nurse to him. The nurse bore to him Kaśfīvān and ten other sons all of whom became great scholars. After some years the King came to know that the mother of those boys was the nurse. Then he sent Sudesa again to the Muni. Dīrgahalocana, after touching her body blessed her and five sons, Anīga, Bharadvaja. The Mahābhārata states that the child born to Mamatā was Dīrgahalocana.
Vṛṣaṅga, Kalinīga, Puṇḍra and Śuṅga were born to her. They founded five Kingdoms which were known by their names respectively. They are known by their modern names: Bhāṇgalpurāṇa, Bengāl, Andhra, Rāja-sāhi and Tāmārvīka.

3) Other details. (1) Dirghatamas had another wife named Uṣā. (Ṛgveda, 1st Manḍala, 16th Anuvāka, 112th Sūkta.)

(2) Dirghatamas continues to be in the assembly of Indra offering worship to him (Indra). (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 11).

DIRGHATAPAS I. Father of Dhanvantari. (See under Dhanvantari).

DIRGHATAPAS II. See under Puṇya.

DIRGHAYAJṆA. A King of Ayodhyā. Bhīmasena had once won him over to his side by persuasive speech. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 30, verse 2).

DIRGHAṆUS. Brother of Śrutāyus, the King of Kalinīga. Arjuna killed him in the war. (M.B. Droga Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 29).

DIRGHIKĀ A daughter of Viśvakarman. She was abnormally tall, and since there was the Sāstär injunction that he who married such women would die within six months none came forward to wed her. Dirghikā began a penance for a good husband. As it continued for years together symptoms of old age began to appear in her. At this juncture an old and ailing householder came there. On certain conditions he married Dirghikā. After sometime, in obedience to the husband’s wish Dirghikā set out on a tour carrying him on her shoulders. Though Māṇḍavaya cursed her husband on their way, due to the chastity of Dirghikā the curse proved to be ineffective. The similarity in the stories of Śādhiṇā and this Dirghikā leads us to think that they might have been one and the same person.

DĪŚĀCAKṢU. One of the prominent off-springs of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 10).

DIṬI.

1) General. A daughter of Daṅka Prajāpāti. She was married to Kaśyapa, grandson of Brahmā and son of Marici. She had many sisters, chief among whom were Aditi, Kaḷā, Danayūs, Danu, Śiṁhikā, Krodhā, Prthū, Viśvā, Vināṭ, Kapilā, Muni and Kāḍrū. Kaśyapa’s sons by Aditi became Devas (Adityas) and his sons by Diṭi became Asuras (Daityas). (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 65).

2) Indra cut Diṭi’s embryo to pieces. Devas and Asuras agreed to churn the ocean of milk as a joint endeavour. But when Amṛta rose up to the surface, they began to quarrel over it. In the battle between Devas and Asuras for the possession of Amṛta, Diṭi’s sons were killed.

In her inconsolable grief at the death of her sons, Diṭi prayed to her husband Kaśyapa that she should be blessed with a brave and heroic son who would be capable of killing Indra. The sage granted her the boon and told her that by worshipping the lord with a pure mind and body for a hundred years, she would bear a son who would be mighty enough to kill Indra. In due course Diṭi became pregnant and following her husband’s advice, she fervently worshipped the Lord and remained pure in mind and body. When Indra came to know that the child in Diṭi’s womb was to be his slayer, he approached her under the disguise of an attendant, offering to serve her. He waited for an opportunity to get access to her and before the expiry of a hundred years he got a chance. One day, Diṭi went to bed without washing her feet and fell asleep. Indra took his Vaiḍra and gaining access to her womb cut the embryo within it into seven pieces. The child in the womb began to cry loudly. Indra asked it “MĀ RUDĀ” (Do not cry). Then he proceeded to cut each of the seven pieces again into seven and finally there were forty-nine pieces in all. They subsequently became Devas known as “Maruts.” They got the name Maruts because Indra told them “MĀ RUDĀ.” All the forty-nine Maruts later on became the helpers of Indra. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 21).

3) Diṭi’s sons. Asuras were Diṭi’s sons. Chief among them were Hīraṇyakaśiṇu and Hīraṇyakṣaṇa. They had a sister named Śiṁhikā. Hīraṇyakaśiṇu had four sons—Anuḥḷāḍa, Ḥāḍa, Prahlāḍa and Saṁhitā who were famous for their glory and might. Śūrāpadma, Śiṁhavaktra, Tārākāṣṭha, Gomukha and Ajāmuṭka were also Diṭi’s sons. Of them, Śūrāpadma had four sons by his wife Mayasūta, who were Bhāṇukopa, Agnimukha, Vajrabhū and Hīraṇyaka. An asura named Mahāśūra was born to Śiṁhavaktra by his wife, Viṁbhūti. The Asuras, Śamarba, Śaḵti, Dvimūrdhā, Sāṅku, Āśva, were the sons of Hīraṇyakṣaṇa. Śiṁhikā married Viṣṇucitti; Rāhu and Ketu were born to them. Saṁhitā, the son of Hīraṇyakaśiṇu had three sons, Ayuṃś, Śiṁb and Bāṣkala. Viṁocana was the son of Prahlāḍa; Mahābali was the son of Viṁocana; Bāṇa was born to Mahābali and to Bāṇa were born four more sons of Nivāṭakavacas. All these were the prominent children of Diṭi. Besides them, Diṭi had crolcs of other Asuras born to her. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 3; Harivaṁśa, Chapter 3).

4) Birth of Hīraṇyakaśiṇu and Hīraṇyakṣaṇa. Hīraṇyakaśiṇu and Hīraṇyakṣaṇa were the rebirths of Jaya and Vījaya, the two gate-keepers of Mahāviṣṇu. (See under Jaya). There is a story as to how they were born as the sons of Diṭi.

Diṭi was one of the wives of Kaśyapa. She had no children while the other wives of Kaśyapa had children. Jealousy and grief rankled in her mind. One day she approached Kaśyapa and pressed him to beget a son for her. It was the time of dusk when Kaśyapa was deeply absorbed in his day’s devotional worship. She disturbed his “Dhyāna” (devotional concentration) by her importunity, but he was reluctant to yield to her wishes at such an inauspicious time. It is at dusk that Viṇa goes about with his attendant hordes of spirits, wearing the crown of his matted hair covered with the dust carried by the whirlwinds from cremation grounds and keeping his three eyes wide open. Kaśyapa asked Diṭi to wait for a few minutes, until that terrible time was over, but she did not heed his advice. In the fury of her passion she sprang towards him and stripped him of his clothes and in the end Kaśyapa yielded to her carnal desires. But after the act he in a repentant mood told her that she had defiled her mind by having sexual union in that unholy hour and by doing so she had sinned against the gods. As a result, twin sons will be born in her womb. They would persecute and torture the three worlds. Mahāviṣṇu would incarnate to destroy them. But since she also felt a little regret in her act, a grandson of her (Prahlāḍa) will become a devotee of Viṇu.
Twin sons, Hīrāpyakṣāpi and Hīrāyākṣa were born to Dīti. For the rest of the story, see under Hīrāpyakṣāpi and Hīrāyākṣa. (Bhāgavata, Prathama Skanda).

5) Dīti flourishes in the assembly of Brahmā. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, verse 39.)

DIVĀHPUTRA. One of the twelve sūryas who were born in the form of the Sun. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 42).

DIVĀKARA I. A synonym of Sūrya (Sun).

DIVĀKARA II. A son of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101).

DIVĀKARA III. See under Niśākara II.

DIVĀKARA IV. A king. During the reign of this king the Matsya Purāṇa was composed.

DIVIRATHA I. A King born in Bharata’s dynasty. He was the grandson of Bharata and the son of Bhumānya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 24).

DIVIRATHA II. A king. He was the son of Dadhivāhana. In the course of Parasurāma’s extermination of Kṣatriyas, the sage Gautama rescued a son of Diviratha and gave shelter to him. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 80).

DIVODĀSA. (ATITHIGVA). A king of Kāśī.

Divodāsa’s great grandfather’s father, Kāśa had many sons. They were called the Kāśas. It was from Kāśa’s reign that Vārāṇasi came to be called Kāśī. (Hari Vamsa, Chapter 29).

2) Divodāsa’s Reign. When Divodāsa began his rule in Vārāṇasi, there was a Rākṣasa named Kṣemaka. Divodāsa killed him and extended his kingdom. At that stage, Bhadrāśena, King of Heyas invaded Divodāsa. Divodāsa killed the hundred sons of Bhadrāśena. At that time the sage Kumbhaka (Nikumbhaka) came to Kāśī. His practice was to live for a thousand years at any place where he reached at the time of dusk. Since he had reached Vārāṇasi at dusk, he set up an āśrama and lived there for a thousand years. At that time there was a famine in Vārāṇasi. The whole land was in the grip of a severe drought. Kumbhaka’s āśrama and its surroundings alone remained green and cool. Herdsmen used to take cattle to graze in the neighbourhood of the āśrama. Once when they returned in the evening, they took with their cows, the sacrificial cow of Kumbhaka. It was dark and the sage searched for the cow everywhere but could not trace its whereabouts. At last he came to know by intuition that his cow was taken away by the herdsman. In his rage he cursed that Vārāṇasi should be ruined and left the place with his disciples. (See under Kumbhaka).

The story of the ruin of Vārāṇasi in Harivaṇa is different. It was the time when Śiva had married Pārvati, the daughter of Himavān. After marriage Śiva shifted his residence to his wife’s house. Śiva whose task was to look after the affairs of the world, was never available for the purpose at Kailāsa, his own seat. The gods were in a helpless condition. They approached Pārvati’s mother, Menā and requested her to persuade Śiva to return to his own place by any means. Menā called her daughter and ridiculed her husband as a vagabond who had no place to lay his head on. Pārvati could not bear this insult. Her mother’s stinging remarks go circulation in Devaloka. So she urged Śiva to settle down somewhere on earth with her. Śiva agreed and promised to take up residence at Kāśī.

The ruler of Kāśī in those days was Divodāsa. It was a prosperous period in the country. As a rule, man turns to God only when faced with misfortunes. So Śiva decided to bring about a famine among the people of the country by ruining it. For that he sent sage Kumbhaka to Vārāṇasi. Kumbhaka arrived in Kāśī and appeared to the barber Kaṇjak to whom he communicated Śiva’s intentions. The barber cheerfully fell in with the proposal and built a temple on the next day for the residence of Kumbhaka. Living in the temple, Kumbhaka began to participate in the spiritual matters of the people. His blessings were much sought after and people came to have deep faith in him.

Divodāsa had no children. He had made many pious offerings to gods and performed many holy rites for removing his wife’s sterility, but it was all in vain. At last, at the King’s suggestion, she began to offer pūja to Kumbhaka praying for issue. But even after a long period of devoted worship, she received no blessing or boon from the sage. Moved by the pathetic condition of his queen, Suyaśas, Divodāsa reproached Kumbhaka very severely. He reprimanded him for denying his blessings to the queen while he was showering them on all and sundry in the country. Provoked at the King’s rebuke, Kumbhaka pronounced a curse that the country should be ruined. As a result of it the country began to decline. (Harivaṇa, Chapter 29).

Śiva and Pārvati came and settled down in Vārāṇasi. After some years, Pārvati began to press her husband to leave the place and to go somewhere else. Śiva was not inclined to do so. He said the place was “Avimukta” and therefore insisted that he would not leave it. From that time the place came to be called “Avimukta.”

3) Other details.

1) Towards the end of his life Divodāsa became a Rājārṣi (Royal Saint). There are numerous references to this Rājārṣi in the Rgveda. Since Divodāsa was of a very hospitable nature he was known by another name, “Atithigva”. In Rgveda, 1st Manḍala, 16th Anuvāka, 127th Śūkta, we read that once he hid himself under water to escape from an Asura called Sārībara.

2) Divodāsa had a son named “Parucchēpa”, who was a Rṣi. Rgveda 1st Manḍala 19th Anuvāka, 127th Śūkta relates to Parucchēpa.

3) Bhīmaratha, the father of Divodāsa, had two other names, Bhāmasena, and Sudeva. Divodāsa purchased Mādhavī, the daughter of Yayātī after paying two hundred Śyāmakarṇāsvas (beautiful horses with dark-coloured ears) to Gālava, so that he might have children. After the birth of his children, he returned Mādhavī to her father. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117).

4) He sits in Yama’s assembly and offers Pūja to Yama. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 12).
(5) Divodāsa once plundered the accessories of his enemies. Agnihoatra vanished after it. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 21).

(6) It was at the behest of Indra that Divodāsa built the city of Vāraṇasi (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 16).

(7) Once Divodāsa fought with the King of Helaya for one thousand days. After having lost his army he went to the sage Bhăradvāja and performed Putrakāmeṣṭi sacrifice. As a result of it a son Pratardana was born to him. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30).

(8) Other names for Divodāsa used in the Mahābhārata are—Bhaimaseni, Kāśīva, Saudēva, Sudevatanaya etc.

DIVYĀDEVI. Daughter of Divodāsa, King of Plakṣadvīpa. There is a story about this princess in Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmikhaṇḍa, Chapters 85, 86.

Divodāsa decided to give his daughter Divyā in marriage to Citrasena, King of Rūpāsenā. But just before the day fixed for the marriage Citrasena died prematurely. So, as advised by the Brāhmana who had come there she was married to Rūpāsenā. He also died soon after. She was subsequently married to 21 persons in turn, and all of them died one by one.

Everyone took pity on her for her ill-fate. At last, at the suggestion of the ministers, preparations were made for her svayāhvāra. Here also ill-luck pursued her. All the princes who arrived to take part in the svayāhvāra killed each other in mutual fight. Depressed and embittered by all this, Divyā decided to renounce all worldly pleasures and proceeded to the forest.

Once Śūka, named Ujvala came to Plakṣadvīpa. Moved to pity at the grief-stricken Divyā he taught her “Aśūnyasaśāyaṇa” vrata. When she practised this vrata with devotion for about four years, Mahāvisṇu appeared before her and took her with him to Viśnu-loka.

DIVYĀKĀṬĀM. A city situated in Western India in ancient times. According to Mahābhārata this city was conquered by Nakula.—Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32.

DIYAKARMAKRT. A Viśvedeva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 33).

DIVYASĀNŪ. A Viśvedeva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 30).

DIVYĀVARSA(M). 365 days make one year for human beings. One year for human beings is one day for the gods. 365 such days of the gods make one year for the gods. This means that 365 years for human beings are equal to one year for the gods. The year for the gods is known as “Divyāvarṣa” or “Divyavatsara”.

Kṛtya-vāg is made up of 4,800 Divyavatsaras. Tretāyuga has 3,600 Divyavatsaras. 2,400 Divyavatsaras make up one Dvāparayuga. Kaliyuga has 1,200 Divyavatsaras. 12,000 Divyavārjas of this kind make up one “catur-yuga”. 71 Caturyugas are the period of one Manu.

After the end of the period of one Manu, the gods complete their term of existence. The total period of 14 Manus is called a Kalpa. At the end of every Kalpa there is a deluge. One Kalpa is one day time for Brahmā. After the deluge, until the time of one Kalpa, is Brahmā’s night. There is no universe at that time. At the end of that Kalpa, the next Kalpa begins and Brahmā starts his work of creation. In this way when 360 days and nights of Brahmā are completed, it is one Brahmā Varṣa. One Brahmā life-span is 120 such years. After that there is nothing for a Brahmā’s life-span. Then Brahmā is re-born and resumes creation. (Bhāgavata, Daśāma Skandha).

DRAUPADI. Pāṇcālī, the wife of the Pāṇḍavas. (See under Pāṇcālī).

DRAUPADĪHĀRANA PARVA. A sub section of Vana Parva in the Mahābhārata. This covers Chapters 262 to 271 of Vana Parva.

DRAUPADĪSATYĀBHĀMĀSAMVĀDA PARVA. A sub section of Vana Parva, in the Mahābhārata. This comprises Chapters 233 to 235 of Vana Parva.

DRAVIDAD. A King of the family of Priyavrata who was the son of Manu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

DRAVIDAD II. A gandharva who was the father of Karṣa. (See under Karṣa) Aniśumāti was the daughter of this gandharva. (See under Aniśumāti).

DRAVIDAD(M). (DRAVIDA). In ancient days the whole of South India was known by the name Tami-laka, as Tamil was the language used throughout South India. Strictly speaking, all the languages used in South India were given the name Tamil. The word ‘Tamil’ underwent changes in the language of North India and took the form ‘Drāvīda’. Etymologists are of opinion that the changes that took place in the word Tamil were as follows:- Tamil — Damil — Damīd — Drāmīd — Drāvīd. Reference to the Drāvīda country occurs in most of the Purāṇas. Mahābhārata states that Sahadeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas, sent a note for collecting taxes from the people of Drāvīda. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 71.

“There are other countries also in the southern Bhārata such as Drāvīda, Keral, Prācya, Muśika, Vanavāsika, Karnaṭaka, Muhīṣaka, Viśalka and Muśaka.” This statement (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9) throws light on the various countries which existed in South India at the time of Mahābhārata. In Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, it is mentioned that Karṣa, the uncle of Śri Kṛṣṇa, was the son of Drāmila, a gandharva. (See under Karṣa).

DRAVIDADAS. It is stated in Mahābhārata (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 22) that the drāvīdas were originally Kṣatriyas and that they became Śūdras by the curse of Brāhmaṇas.

DRAVIDA BHĀṢĀ. (Dravidian Language). Linguists have classified the languages of the world under certain groups. Important among them are the Indo-European group, the semitic group, the Hamitic group, the Ural Altaic group, the South East Asiatic group, the Dravidian group, Austro-Minor group, the Bantu group and the Chinese group.

Almost all the languages in South India belong to the Dravidian group. The languages of this group are Tamil, Telugu, Kannada, Malayalam, Tulu, Kuṭaku, Toto, Koṭa, Badaka, Kuruk and Brāhū. Of these Brāhū alone is used in the mountain regions of Bālu-cistan, Linguists like S. M. and others have stated that there is a close relation between the Dravidian and Dravidian languages. The Āryan language has influence on the Dravidian languages to a great extent. But Tamil has not been so much influenced as Telugu, Kannada and Malayalam. It is because Tamil had a great wealth of literature of its own from ancient times. The Dravidian group is again divided into four sections: Eastern, Western, Northern and Southern. Brāhū is the only language in the Northern section. Its Etymology, grammar etc. are like that of the Dravidian group. But it has been influenced to a large extent by the Iranian language. Still it keeps its Dravidian character.

Telugu, Gondi, Kuruk, Kolami, Malta etc. come under the Eastern group. Of these only Telugu has grown as a literary language. Telugu is in use from Madras to Mahendragiri. But it has various sub-divisions and local differences. The Telugu used in the Districts of Krsna and Godavari is considered to be the purest form. Golari, Savelari, Kamari, Vasaari, Dasaari etc. are its local sub-divisions. Over modern Telugu, Sanskrit has its full sway.

Kannada, Kutaku, Toja, Koja etc. come under the western group. Kannada is used in Mysore and the vicinity of the Districts of Coimbatore, Salem, Bellary, Anantapura etc. Baajaka used in the Nilgiris, Kurumpa, used in the vicinity of Nilgiris, Kutaku used in Coorg, are the sub-divisions of Kannada. In edicts from the 5th century Kannada could be seen in its ancient form. The modern Kannada has been used from 16th century onwards. Tulu is in use in places between the rivers Candragiri in the south of Southern Canara and Kalyapour. Only a few ancient songs could be included in Tulu manuscript. The Mayalam script is used to write Tulu. But now certain books in Tulu have been published using Kannada script.

Tamil and Malayalam are the languages of the Southern section. The oldest literature in the Dravidian group is in Tamil. The most ancient form of Tamil is seen in the edicts and stone tables of the 30th century B.C. The most important among them are the Sainga works. The grammatical work 'Tolkappiyam, is the literary grammar of Cemtami. Malayalam became an independent language only by the 8th century A.D. The close relation that exists between Tamil and Malayalam is not visible in any other language of the Dravidian group. By examining the inter-relations of the various languages in the Dravidian group, and noting how close or distant the relation is, we can ascertain which languages separated themselves first from the original Dravid language.

DRAVINASA. A Pracetas. (One of the ten sons of the Pracina Barhi). (Bhagavata, Skandha 4).

DRAVIRATHA. A King of the family of Aanga. He was the son of Dadhivahan and the father of Dharmaratha (Agni Purana, Chapter 277).

DRAVYASUDDHI. Purifying impure things. The mode of purification of impure things, in ancient India, was known as dravyasuddhi. The procedure of purification was as follows: If earthen-wares became impure by coming into contact with urine or excreta, they should be burnt in fire. Golden or copper vessels may be remoulded or filled with or dipped in tamarind water. Things made of iron or bronze may be washed in ash-water. Things made of glass or pearl need only be washed. Things born in water such as lotus etc. could be purified by dipping them in water. If cloth is made impure rub it with soil and dip it in water. If it is a large quantity of cloth, a mixture of soil and water may be sprinkled on it. Wooden things will become pure by planing. Cot, chair, fan, cart etc. need only be washed. Pots used for cooking meat may be touched with cow’s milk. Things made of ivory may be washed in mustard-water. Jaggery, salt etc. need only be dried. (Agni Purana, Chapter 156).

DRDHAYUDA I. (DRDHAYVARMA). One of the hundred sons of Dhrtarastra. Bhimasena killed him in the great war. (Droga Parva, Chapter 137).

DRDHAYUDA II. (DRDHAKSHA). One of the hundred sons of Dhrtarastra. Bhimasena killed him. (Droga Parva, Chapter 157).

DRDHADANAVA. A King of the Puru dynasty. He was present on the occasion of Paci’s svayamvara. (Adi Parva, Chapter 105, Verse 15).

DRDHAHASTA. One of the hundred sons of Dhrtarastra. (Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 102).

DRDHAKSHA. See Drdha II.

DRDHANEMI. A King of the Puru dynasty. He was the son of Satyahrdi and father of Supari. (Bhagavata, Daasama Skandha).

DRDHARATHA I. (DRDHARATHARAYA). One of the hundred sons of Dhrtarastra killed in the great war by Bhima. (Droga Parva, Chapter 157).

DRDHARATHA II. One of the kings, who should be remembered both at dawn and before sun-set. (Anu-fasan Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 52).

DRDHARATHASRAYA. See Drdharatha I.

DRDHASANDHA. (SAITRUNJAYA). One of the hundred sons of Dhrtarastra. He was killed in the great war by Bhima. (Droga Parva Chapter 137, Verse 20).

DRDHASENA. A King of the Yayati dynasty. He fought in the great war on the side of the Pndavas and was killed by Droga. (Droga Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 52).

DRDHASVA. A famous king of the Ikswaku dynasty. He was the son of Kuvalyasya who had 21,000 sons. All those sons but three were killed in the fight with an asura called Dhandhu. The three sons who survived the killing were Drdhasya, Kapilasya and Candrasya. (Vana Parva, Chapter 204).

DRDHASYU. A son born to Agastya maharsi by Lopamudra. He was born only after remaining in the mother’s womb for seven years. He was a very great scholar and tapasvi. He began studying the Vedas from the very time of his birth. He is called Idhamvaha also. (See Idhamvaha).

DRDHAVAARMA I. See Drdha I.

DRDHAVAARMA II. A King. Kadalicargh was the name of his wife. (See under Kadalicargh).

DRDHAVYA. A maharsi. He was one of the seven Rikvis of Dharamaraja. Unmucu, Pramucu, Atreyu, Drdhavya, Urdhavabahu, Trpasama and Anugras were the seven Rikvis. (Anu-fasan Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 34).

DRDHAVRATA. A braharsi who lived in South India. (Santi Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 28).

DRDHAYU I. Son born to King Puruvavas by Urvasi. (Adi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 25).

DRDHAYU II. A King who lived in North India during the time of the great war. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 23).

DRDHAYU III. A braharsi of South India. He is known as Drdhavya and Drdhavrata also (Anu-fasan Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 40).

DRDHAYUDHA. (GRHYUDHA). One of the hundred sons of Dhrtarastra killed in the great war. (Droga Parva, Chapter 136, Verse 20).
DRDHEYU. A maharṣi who lived in the western part of India. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 36).

DRDHEŚṬADHI. A King in ancient India. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 238).

DRONA I. The teacher in archery of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas.

1) Birth. Droṇa was the son of Bharadvāja who had his hermitage creeted on the bank of the Ganges. Once Bharadvāja went to bathe in the river. When he got into the river he saw the celestial maid Ghṛtācī. The celestial maid ran away as soon as she saw the hermit. But her cloth was caught in grass and slipped off her body. When the hermit saw the complete form of her body which was bright and beautiful, he had seminal discharge. The discharged semen was kept in a Droṇa (trough). A child was born from that and he was named Droṇa, who was brought up in the hermitage. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 13).

2) Education and Marriage. Droṇa learned the art of using weapons from his father and the hermit Agnivesā. Dṛupada the prince of Pāṇcāla was the fellow student of Droṇa. They became great friends. On completion of education Dṛupada returned to Pāṇcāla. Droṇa married Krīṣṇa the daughter of Śaradvān. A son was born to them. At his birth the child neighed like the horse Uccāśīṛṣavas; so his parents named him Aśvatthāmā. Hearing that Pārasurāma was giving Brāhmaṇas free gift of wealth and property, Droṇa reached there. Droṇa's desire was to get Dhanurveda (the art of archery). Droṇa with his disciples went to Mahendragiri and saw Pārasurāma, who was about to enter forest giving away everything he had. Pārasurāma said, "I have given away to the Brāhmaṇas free gold and everything I had. The land I had conquered is given to Kaśyapa. Now there remains only my body and some weapons. You can have one of them."

Droṇa preferred the weapons. Thus Droṇa got the entire armoury of Pārasurāma. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 13).

3) He became the teacher of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas. After receiving dhanurveda from Pārasurāma Droṇa went to Pāṇcāla, Dṛupada who had been a fellow student of Droṇa was the King of Uttarapāṇcāla. Then. Though Droṇa had become proficient in archery, he was very poor.

He had no money even to buy milk for his child. Once the playmates of Aśvatthāmā made him drink a mixture of water and flour saying that it was milk. So Droṇa approached Dṛupada for financial help. But Dṛupada shunned his fellow student, scolded him and sent him away without giving any help. Droṇa vowed that he would, somehow or other, take revenge upon Dṛupada and departed from Pāṇcāla.

The aim of Droṇa was to get some capable disciples. He reached Hastinapura and stayed in disguise with Gautama for a while. Once the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas who were boys were engaged in the game of Kāra (a kind of cricket play) outside the palace premises. The ball fell in a well by chance. The princess stood round the well and began to ponder how to get the 'ball' out of the well. They tried all means but in vain. At that time a Brāhmaṇa of dark complexion, short and aged, came by that way. It was Droṇa. The boys gathered round the old man. Droṇa threw his ring also into the well and said: "Your kingly qualities are very poor. Your education in using weapons is not complete. If you give me a meal I will get both the ring and the ball together" The boys agreed to the conditions. Droṇa took a grass and evoked arrow into it by mantra (spell) and shot it at the 'Kāra'. The next grass was shot at the first grass. It struck the first grass. Thus he shot grasses one after another till the grass reached the brink of the well and by pulling the grass he took the ball out. In the same way he took the ring also out of the well. When they got the 'Kāra' the boys stood round Droṇa and asked him what he would like as the reward for his deed. Droṇa said that they need only tell Bhīṣma how a short man of dark complexion took the ball out of the well. Accordingly the boys went to Bhīṣma and told him everything. Immediately Bhīṣma understood that it was Droṇa. Bhīṣma thought that Droṇa was the best person to teach the princes. So Droṇa was brought to the palace and was engaged as the teacher in archery.

(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 130 and 131).

4) Education in Archery of the Kauravas and reward. (a) First vow. Droṇa asked the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas to sit together and then told them, "There is one thing that you should do for me when your education is over". Hearing this they all kept silent. But Arjuna came forward and took the vow that he would achieve that task according to the wish of the teacher.

(b) The disciple who is second to none. The training in weapons commenced. Hearing of the fame of Droṇa, disciples came from places far and near. Arjuna was the first of all the students. Sending all the students to fetch water Droṇa taught his son Aśvatthāmā certain special lessons. Arjuna secretly knew this. So he brought water as quickly as possible before the others. As Droṇa loved his brilliant student Arjuna, he taught both his son and Arjuna alike the secrets. Seeing the brilliance of Arjuna Droṇa ordered the cook not to seat Arjuna in a dark place for meals. Yet it happened once that the light was extinguished by wind while the princes were having their meals. All sat still, without eating, while Arjuna alone ate his food. From this Arjuna discovered that without seeing the object one could hit the target by constant practice. Droṇa was greatly pleased at this and embracing him promised to try to make him such an expert that there would be none equal to him in archery.

(c) Ekalavya. Once Arjuna and the other disciples went to the forest for a hunt and there they met Ekalavya who was superior to Arjuna in archery. This Ekalavya had once approached Droṇa to learn archery from him. But it was against the rule for a Brahmin to teach a forester the art of fighting. So Ekalavya returned to the forest and making an earthen image of Droṇa worshipped ed it and began self-learning in archery. Now he had become superior to Arjuna in archery. The teacher had said that none would be equal to Arjuna in archery. Arjuna told Droṇa about Ekalavya. The teacher went to the forest and got the thumb of Ekalavya as the reward due to the teacher. Since then Ekalavya became a great archer though only of a lower level than Arjuna (See under Ekalavya).

(d) Expert disciple. The education in archery and the use of weapons was nearing completion. In archery Arjuna was second to none. Duryodhana and Bhīma uppermost in the mind of Droṇa.
became expert club-men. Asvathāmā was the first in the secrets of archery. Nakula and Sahadeva became expert swordsmen. Arjuna was expert in all branches of weapon-training. Bhīma had bodily strength and Arjuna had the strength of learning. Yudhīṣṭhīra was the foremost in chariot-fighting.
e) Artificial bird. Once Drōṇa placed an artificial bird on the branch of a tree without the knowledge of the princes, to test their practice in archery. Then he placed his disciples with their bows, around the tree, and told them to shoot the bird down at his command. Drōṇa first called Dharmaputra and told him to look at the bird. Then he asked him what he saw. Dharma putra said that he saw the bird, the tree, the teacher and the students. He tested one by one. All gave the same reply, that Dharmaputra gave. At last he asked Arjuna. Arjuna stood for a while, taking aim and said that he saw a bird only. The teacher commanded to shoot and Arjuna sent an arrow. At the first shot the bird fell headless. With this test Drōṇa understood that Arjuna could defeat Drupada and embraced his disciple.
f) Drōṇa caught by a crocodile. Once Drōṇa and his disciples went to bathe in the Gaṅga. While they were dipping and splashing in the water a crocodile caught Drōṇa by the leg. Drōṇa was unable to extricate himself from the grip of the crocodile. So he asked his disciples to shoot the crocodile and kill it. All stood agape. Arjuna at once took bow and arrows and sent five arrows one after another at the crocodile, which died instantly and came afloat. The teacher, who was much pleased, got out of the water and embraced Arjuna and taught him ‘Brahma Śirāstra’, a divine weapon. After imparting this knowledge Drōṇa told Arjuna not to operate this weapon on man. But if an enemy superior to man attacked him, then only he should send this missile at him to kill him.

Giving due respect to the advice of the teacher, Arjuna received the Brahmaśirāstra. (M.B. Ádi Parva, Chapter 133).
g) Demonstration by the pupils. When the training of the princes terminated, Dhṛtarāṣṭra accorded sanction to hold a demonstration of weapon-play, by the princes. An arena was got ready. Drōṇa entered the arena. As a preliminary rite Drōṇa worshipped the gods. Then he invited Brāhmaṇas to bless his pupils. After that the pupils gave the teacher, gold, precious stones, cloths, and other costly things. The princes paid homage to their teacher. The teacher gave his blessings to them. With this the demonstration commenced. Clubbing between Duryodhana and Bhīma was a terrible one. But the mock fighting changed to a serious fight. Drōṇa sent Asvathāmā who separated them. The audience applauded their performance. The performance of Arjuna was of the most superior type and the audience and the teacher were struck with wonder at his extraordinary capability. Karnā also showed his performance. (For details see under Arjuna, Para 1 and Karnā, Para 4). (M.B. Ádi Parva, Chapters 133 and 134).

5) Revenge upon Drupada. When demonstration came to an end it was the time for giving the teacher the gift due to him. The teacher had, at the beginning, told his pupils that on completion of the training they should give him a gift. Accordingly he demanded that Drupada, the King of Pāṇcāla, should be brought before him with his hands tied. As soon as Duryodhana and Karnā heard this they rapidly marched to Pāṇcāla and engaged Drupada in a fight but were defeated by Drupada. After that Arjuna entered the battle-field, defeated and tied Drupada and brought him before Drōṇa who was kind enough not to kill Drupada. The Kingdom of Pāṇcāla was divided into two. Drupada was given Uttara-Pāṇcāla and Drōṇa took Dakṣiṇa Pāṇcāla. Then Drupada was released. (M.B. Ádi Parva, Chapter 137).

6) Arjuna is accorded sanction to fight with his teacher. One year after the revenge on Drupada Yudhīṣṭhīra was anointed as heir-apparent, by Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Once, in the council of the king, Drōṇa called Arjuna to him and said: “Oh, Arjuna! You must take an oath to do a particular thing in the presence of your relatives. If it happens that I oppose you in battle you should fight against me without thinking that I am your teacher. This oath is your gift to your teacher.” Arjuna agreed and took the oath in the presence of the people. Because there was such an oath Arjuna’s conscience did not prick him when he had to fight against his teacher Drōṇa in the battle of Bhārata between the Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas. (M.B. Ádi Parva, Chapter 139).

7) Part played by Drōṇa up to the battle of Bhārata.

1) Duryodhana and his party came to know only at the time of the svayaṁvara (marriage) of Pāṇcāli that the Pāṇḍavas were not killed in the lac house burning. When Arjuna won the test and got Pāṇcāli, the Kauravas became furious and began to plot against the Pāṇḍavas. At that time Drōṇa came to the council-hall of the Kauravas and said that the Kauravas should go to Pāṇcāla and greet the Pāṇḍavas, bring them back and give them half of the kingdom. (M.B. Ádi Parva, Chapter 203).

2) Drōṇa was present at the sacrifice of Rājasūya (imperial consecration) performed by Yudhīṣṭhīra. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 8).

3) When the game of dice was going on between Sakuni and Yudhīṣṭhīra Drōṇa came with Dhṛtarāṣṭra to the place to witness the game. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 60, Stanza 2).

4) Drōṇa declared that the game of dice between Sakuni and Yudhīṣṭhīra was not fair. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 2).

5) Drōṇa was well-versed in archery. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 37, Stanza 4).

6) While the Pāṇḍavas were living in the country of Vīrāṭa, Arjuna in the guise of Bṛhannala, fought with the Kauravas. Drōṇa was the first to recognize Bṛhannala as Arjuna at the sound of his conch. (M.B. Vīrāṭa Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 24).

7) In that fight Drōṇa fought with Arjuna whose arrows wounded Drōṇa and he ran away from the battlefield. (M.B. Vīrāṭa Parva, Chapter 50).

8) When Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to the council-hall of the Kauravas to plead for a treaty on behalf of the Pāṇḍavas who had returned after forest life and pseudonymity, Drōṇa took the side of the Pāṇḍavas and argued with Duryodhana. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 126).

9) Drōṇa advised Dhṛtarāṣṭra to see that a battle between the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas was avoided. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, two Chapters from 138).

10) When it was almost decided that the battle was inevitable Drōṇa boasted to Duryodhana that he would annihilate the army of the Pāṇḍavas within a month. (M. B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 193, Stanza 18).

8) Why Drona, whose leaning was towards the Pāṇḍavas, took the side of the Kauravas in the battle of Bhārata. At heart Drona was on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. But he fought against them, taking the side of the Kauravas. Even at that time he ardently wished the Pāṇḍavas to win the battle. What is the reason for it? An answer to this question is found in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 43.

The battle was about to begin. Dharmaputra went to Drona and bowed before him and requested to bless him so that he might win the battle against the Kauravas. Drona said, "It is good on your part to have come and seen me before the battle is begun. If you had not seen me I would have cursed you to lose the battle. But today I am honoured since you have come. You fight the battle. Victory is yours. But I have to stand with the Kauravas, and there is a reason for it. Man is a slave of money and money is not the slave of Man. The Kauravas have tied me with money. Śrī Kṛṣṇa will be on the side of the righteous. Where Śrī Kṛṣṇa is, there will be victory. But so long as I fight it is difficult for you to win. So try to kill me at the beginning of the battle. You need not feel sorry for killing your teacher. Because when I shower arrows and fight vehemently I won't look to see which enemy has struck me down. Enemies could kill me only when I am lying on darbha grass leaving fighting in disappointment. I will put down my weapons in battle only when I hear words which I dislike to hear." After having revealed these secrets of his own he sent Yudhisṭhīra back. (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 43).

9) Drona in the battle of Bhārata. (1) On the first day of the battle Drona fought in a combat with Dhrṣṭadyumna, who was defeated. (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 77, Stanza 69).

(2) Drona killed Śaṅkha the son of King Virāṭa. (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 92, Stanza 23).

(3) Drona became unconscious by the clubbing of Bhīmasena. (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 19).

(4) Drona fought with Arjuna. (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 102, Stanza 6).

(6) There was a fight between Drona and Yudhiṣṭhīra (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 17).

(7) Drona combated with Dhrṣṭadyumna. (M. B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 116, Stanza 45).

(8) He became the commander-in-chief after the fall of Bhīṣma. (M. B. Drona Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 5).

(9) He gave Duryodhana a boon to catch Yudhiṣṭhīra alive. (M. B. Drona Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 20).

(10) He killed Yuγandhara. (M. B. Drona Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 31).

(11) Vṛṛghrādaṛṛa and Śiśihasena were killed by Drona. (M. B. Drona Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 37).

(12) In the fight which followed Arjuna and his army were driven back by Drona. (M. B. Drona Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 50).

1. "Man is slave to wealth, wealth is slave to none. This is true oh King. The Kauravas have bound me with wealth. I am telling you this without shame. You only require battle. I will fight for the Kauravas and wish for your victory,"

2) Education and kingship. Yajñasena went to the hermitage of Bhāradvāja for education. Droṇa, who became a great teacher in archery later, was also a student and disciple of Bhāradvāja at that time. Thus during the time of education both Drupada and Droṇa became fast friends. After receiving education Drupada returned to his country. At that time Pāṇčāla was ruled by Pṛṣata. When Yajñasena returned on completion of his education, Pṛṣata died and Yajñasena was anointed as King of Utāra-Pāṇčāla. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 129).

3) Yajñasena reproaches Droṇa. It has already been said that during the period of education Droṇa and Yajñasena were fast friends. Once Drupada said to Droṇa:—"My dear friend. My father has told me that I would be made the King of Utāra Pāṇčāla on completing my education. Thus if I become a King, the treasury of the King will be at your disposal." After the education both returned to their places. Not much later Droṇa got married. A son born to him was named Āṣvathāmā. Droṇa was so poor that he could not even buy milk for his child. Once the friends of Āṣvathāmā mixed flour in water and made him drink it saying that it was milk. Āṣvathāmā drank it without knowing that it was not milk. Thinking that he had become energetic by drinking milk he began to run with the other boys. At last they told him the truth and teased him.

With his wife and child Droṇa went to Drupada who did not care to recognize him as a friend. Droṇa tried to remind him of their former friendship. But Drupada shunned him and said, "If I had friendship with you, it was to achieve certain ends. There is no friendship between the rich and the poor, the learned and the illiterate, the brave and the coward. So if there was any friendship at all it was not real. You, who are slow of brain! Kings of high status cannot have friendship with such people especially the poor. A Brahmin learned in Vedas won't befriend a Brahmin who is not learned in Vedas, a man seated in a chariot cannot befriend a man who is not seated in a chariot and a King cannot befriend one who is not a King. So a friendship of bygone days is no friendship at all"!

Drupada's reproaches aroused a storm of anger in Droṇa. He vowed that he would avenge the insult. With his wife and child he got out of the palace. He wandered about in search of disciples who were capable of confronting with Drupada. At last he came to Hastinapura and became the teacher of the Pândavas and the Kauravas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 130).

1. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 68 states that the original name of Drupada was Yajñasena. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 129, Stanza 11, states that Drupada was the son of Pṛṣata. But according to other purāṇas Pṛṣata was the father of Drupada's great grandfather. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 131, Stanza 6, Drupada is addressed as 'Saumaki;' the son of Somaka.

4) The revenge of Drona. Drona told Bhīṣma about his dealings with Drupada. Bhīṣma consoled Droṇa. Before the commencement of the training in archery, Droṇa told his disciples: “When your training in archery is completed you will have to do a favour to your teacher”. All stood agape. But Arjuna came forward and said: “I will do”. Drona embraced Arjuna. The training commenced. The Andhakas, Vṛṣṇis and others joined his school of archery.

The training in archery came to an end. Droṇa called his disciples and told them that Drupada should be tied with a rope and placed before him. When they heard the words of the teacher, Durṣyodhana, Karna, Yuyutsu, Duṣṣāsana, Viśākha, Jārāsandha and Sudocana led the Kauravas to Pāñcāla. Arjuna knew that the Kauravas would not be able to defeat Drupada. He told the teacher that when the Kauravas returned without achieving the task, he himself would go and bring Drupada. After a terrible battle the Kauravas were defeated by the Pāñcālas. After that Arjuna confronted Drupada. Nakula and Sahadeva stood as guards of the wheels. Bhīmasena with his club stood in front of the army. Arjuna drove the chariot right in the midst of the Pāñcāla army. Bhīma took his club and a terrible battle ensued. Arjuna shattered the Pāñcāla army, bound Drupada and took him to Droṇa. The teacher looked at Drupada and reproached him with scornful word: “I have destroyed your country. Now you are at my mercy. Is not the former friendship a friendship?” Drupada requested that they should be friends in future. Accordingly Drupada was set free. The country of Pāñcāla was divided into two, and giving Utara Pāñcāla to Drupada, Droṇa took Daksīṇa Pāñcāla. Thus because of the revenge of Drona, Drupada lost half of his kingdom. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 137).

5) Birth of Children. Though Droṇa and Drupada were on friendly terms Drupada did not forget the defeat he had incurred at the hands of Droṇa. So, Drupada desired to have a son who would become powerful enough to take revenge on Droṇa. He began to think of ways and means. He consulted several learned Brahmins. At that time two hermit brothers yāja and Upayāja lived on the bank of the Ganges. The King approached them and requested their help to obtain a son, who would kill Droṇa, and promised to give them cows and other precious things in return. At first they refused to help him. The King served Upayāja for a year, and pleased him. He sent the King to the hermitage of Yāja. They accepted the request of the King. Both the hermits performed a sacrifice for Drupada. A boy and a girl arose from the sacrificial fire. The boy was named Dhrṣṭadyumna and the girl was named Kṛṣṇa (Pāñcālī). There was a celestial voice that the boy would kill Droṇa when he grew up. (M.B. Ādi parva, Chapter 167).

6) The marriage of Pāñcālī. Pāñcālī grew up. Drupada desired to give her in marriage to Arjuna. But at that time the lac-house caught fire and the Pāñcāvas disappeared. Drupada set certain tests in the Svayānivara of Pāñcālī with a view to ascertain if Arjuna was alive.

The Pāñcāvas came to the svayānvara and Drupada found out Arjuna. But Drupada did not like the idea of his daughter becoming the wife of more than one husband. Then Vyāsa appeared there and informed Drupada of the previous births of the Pāñcāvas and Pāñcālī. Drupada was much pleased and he gave the Pāñcāvas a good deal of wealth and sent Pāñcālī with them. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 196).

7) Other details (1) Drupada was present at the marriage of Abhimanyu, celebrated at the city of Upaplavya. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Stanza 17).

(2) Drupada gave the Pāñcāvas an akṣauhiṇī, (division 21870 elephants, 21870 chariots, 56560 horses, 109350 footmen) of army for the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 57).

(3) At the battle of Bhārata, Drupada was appointed as one of the seven commanders on the side of the Pāñcāvas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 157, Stanza 11).

(4) Drupada fought with Jayadratha on the first day of the battle of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 55).

(5) Drupada was defeated in a combat with Droṇa the teacher. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 48).

(6) Drupada combated with Asaṭvatthāmā. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 16).

(7) He fought with Bhagadatta. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 40).

(8) He fought with Bālhiṅka. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 18).

(9) He was defeated by Pṛṣata. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 138, Stanza 24).

(10) Droṇa the teacher killed Drupada. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 43).

(11) The Pāñcāvas gave offerings to the manes for Drupada. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 42, Stanza 5).

(12) Vyāsa evoked the spirits of the dead to the surface of the Ganges, after the Battle of Bhārata came to an end. Drupada also was there among the spirits which appeared on the Ganges. (M.B. Aśrāmavāsika Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 8).

(13) After death Drupada entered heaven and was absorbed in Viśvadevas. (M.B. Svargārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 15).

(14) It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 68, that Drupada was born from a portion of the Marudgaṇas.

DRUMA I. A King in ancient Bhārata. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 233.

DRUMA II. In Mahābhārata, Chapter 67, Stanza 8, King Druma, who was the rebirth of the asura Sibi, is mentioned.

DRUMA III. The leader of the Kinnaras (heavenly musicians). M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 29. He sits in the Durbar of Kubera (God of wealth) and sings. He was the teacher of Rukmin, the son of Bhīṣmaka and he gave a bow to his pupil Rukmin. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158.)

DRUMASENA I. A Kṣatriya King. He was born from a portion of an Asura called Garviṣṭha. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 55). He stood as guard of the wheel of Śalya and was killed by Yudhiṣṭhira in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B.Śalya Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 53.)

DRUMASENA II. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed by Dhṛṣṭadyumna the son of Drupada. (M.B. Drōṣa Parva, Chapter 170, Stanza 22)

DRUHYU I. A son of King Yayāti. Two sons, Yadu and Turvasu were born to Yayāti, the son of Nahuṣa, by his wife Devayāni and three sons Druhyu, Anadruhyu and Pāru by his wife Sarmaśṭhā. Druhyu was cursed by his father because he did not comply with the request of his father to exchange his old age with the youth of his son. The curse was that his desires would not be realized, that he would stay in places where he would not like to stay, that his kingdom would be lost and that he would be called Bhoja. (See under Yayāti)

DRUHYU II. A son of Matināra, a King of the Pāru dynasty. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 14).

DUHKHA (M). Agni Purāṇa tells the following about the origin of Duḥkha.

Hīṁsa (violence) is the wife of Adharma (unrighteousness). To the couple were born two daughters called Aṁśta (falsehood) and Nikṛta (fraud) and from them were born the daughters Bhāyā (fear) Naraka (hell) Māyā (illusion) and Vedanā (pain). Māyā brought forth Mrtyu (death), the annihilator of all living objects, and Vedanā, from Raurava (a particular hell) brought forth Duḥkha (sorrow, grief). From Mrtyu were born Jāti (caste), Jarā (wrinkles), Soka (sorrow), Tṛṣṇā (covetousness) and Krodha (anger). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19)

DULIDUHA. A King in ancient India. (Ādi Parva, Chapter I, Verse 233)

DUMBUBHA. A snake. Sage Sahasrapāda became the snake as a result of a curse. For details see under Sahasrapāda.

DUNDBHII I. A terrible asura, son of Maya and brother of Māyāvī.

1) Birth. Dānavas were the offsprings of Kaśyapa, grandson of Brahmā and son of Marici by his wife Danu, daughter of Dakṣaprājāpati. Maya, chief among the Dānavas earned great reputation as a unique architect. Once Maya attended a dance programme in devaloka where he fell in love with Hemā dancing with the deva-women. When the dance was over Maya told Hemā about his love for her. Hemā too had fallen in love with Maya. And they left the place in secret and reached the southern slope of the Himālayas where they built a beautiful city called Hemapura and they lived there. Ere long they had two sons, Dundubhi and Māyāvī, both of them equally distinguished in prowess. (Uttarārāmāyaṇa). 2) Dundubhi's relatī nshīp with Rāvaṇa. Maya did tapas for a daughter in the western plains of Mount Kaiśā. One of those days Pārvati went out of Kaiśā to feed brahmins in celebration of the birthday of Subrahmā. In the absence of Pārvati a deva woman called Madhurā who had observed the Somavāravatī came to Kaiśā to salute Mahādeva (Śiva) who enjoyed her for some time. On her return to Śiva Pārvati noticed ashes worn by him transferred to the breasts of Madhurā. Drawing the natural inference from this Pārvati got angry and cursed Madhurā to be transform-and came out of the cave and followed Sugrīva in a rage. From that day onwards Sugrīva lived at the Rṣya-mūka mountain where Bāli had no admission. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiśkindhā Kāṇḍa, Cantos 9, 11, 46).

5) Curse on Bāli due to the blood of Dundūbhi. During Bāli’s duel with Dundubhi blood from the body of the latter spurted out to the skies, and it also fell in the hermitage of Mataīga at Rṣya-mūka where the sage Mataīga was performing tapas. Angered at this the sage cursed him whoever he might be, who was responsible for blood falling in his āśrama, with death by his head getting broken if he mounted Rṣya-mūka. Sugrīva took shelter there because of this curse on Bāli. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiśkindhā Kāṇḍa, Canto 11)

DUNDUBHI II. See under Manthāra.

DUNDUBHINIHRĀDA. A powerful Rākṣasa, who was the son of Dīlī and the uncle of Prahlāda. When, in the fierce fight between the devas and the asuras the latter got absolutely defeated this Rākṣasa ascribed the reason for the failure to the brahmans and began killing them. He captured the Kāśī temple and many other temples like it. In the circumstances Śiva gave refuge to the brahmans of Kāśī, and the Rākṣasa was destroyed by Śiva-ākṣati. (Śivarudrasanāhitā, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Chapter 58).

DUNDUBHISVĀNA (M). A particular Place in Kuśa island. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 13).

DURĀDHĀ (DURĀDHĀRA, DURĀDHA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīma. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 135, Verse 36).

DURĀDHĀRA. See under Durādha.

DURĀSADA. A son of Bhāṣmasūra. He learned Pañcākśāri vidyā from Śiva and used to repeat it. Pleased at this Śiva gave him all the boons he wanted with the result that he lost his head and began troubling everybody. When thus unrest and injustices increased in the world Śūrimē, the son of Saktī killed him. (Gāṇeśa Purāṇa, Chapter 38, 42).

DURDAMA. Son of a Gandharva called Viśvāvasu. The following story about him is told in the Skanda Purāṇa, Chapters 1, 3 and 4).

While mahārīṣis like Vaśiṣṭha and Atri were once engaged in the worship of Lord Śiva at Mount Kailāśa, Durdama, with his thousands of wives came there. In the Hālāsayaṭthra near-by they got engaged in water sports with their bodies stark naked. On seeing their naked sports Vaśiṣṭha cursed Durdama to be turned into a Rākṣasa. When his wives begged of Vaśiṣṭha for redemption from the curse he told them that seventeen years thence Durdama would regain his old form. Durdama thus turned Rākṣasa tried once to devour sage Gālava when the Sūdrāsana Cakra of Viṣṇu killed him. He regained his old form and returned to Gandharvaloka.

DURDHAŠANĀ. (Durmada). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhīma. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 155, Verse 40).

DURGĀ I. The goddess of the universe, Durgā possesses different forms and aspects. Pārvatī, spouse of Śiva is a form of Durgā. According to the prayer of devotees this Devī assumes diverse forms. She is worshipped in 64 forms as Aryadurgā, Vedagarbhī, Ambikā, Bhadrakāli, Bhadrā, Kṣemākṣemakari, Naikabāhū, Devī etc. In South India she is worshipped more in her fierce and terrible forms. Devī in her gentle aspects and moods assumes the forms of Kanyakā, Kāmākṣi and Mūkāmbī. In Kerala the Devī is called Bhagavati also, in Andhra Jokulambikā and in Tamilnadu Kaṇḍaki. Worship of the Devī is supposed to be more than 4000 years old in India. In religious literature from Vedic times up to date Devī occupies an important place. In modern India Śrī Rāmakṛṣṇa Paramahāmsa, guru of Śvāmi Vivekānanda, was a great devotee of Durgā.

In the Mahābhārata there are various references to the Devī. When the Pāṇḍavas entered the capital of Viṣṇu for their life inognito they worshipped Durgā, who appeared to them and granted them certain boons. (Viṣṇu Parva, Chapter 6). At the commencement of the great war Arjuna, at the instance of Kṛṣṇa prayed to Durgā, who appeared in the sky and granted them boons, for victory in War. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 23). See Pañca Ādī (Parva, Chapter 23).

DURGĀ II. A river famous in ancient India. The Pāṇḍavas drank water from this river. (Bhīṣma Parva. Chapter 9, Verse 33).

DURGĀ (M). Fort. There are six kinds of forts, viz. Marudurgam, Jaladurgam, Pithīdurgam Vanadurgam, Parvatadurgam, and Manuṣy adurgam. Among the above six Manuṣy adurgam is the most important (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 56, 33).

DURGĀJAM. A city in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 52).

DURGAMA. An asura chief born in the dynasty of Hiranyakṣa and son of Taru, Durgama was an enemy of the Devas from his very birth. He argued to himself thus: “the very strength and power of the Devas depend on the Vedas; if there is no Veda there is no yajña, if there is no yajña the Devas do not get their share of the havis, if they do not get the havis they will lose all their strength and prowess, and, therefore, the best means to teach the Devas a lesson is to destroy the Vedas.” Durgama decided that the surest means to achieve that was to perform penance. Accordingly he went to the Himālayas and began doing penance abstaining from food and drink. After a thousand years Brahmana appeared to him and asked him what boon he wanted. Durgama said “I must get the Vedas; I should get all the mantras known to brahmans and Devas in the three worlds, and all the presiding deities of those mantras should come and stand before me and be subject to my control; I must also get the strength to defeat all the Devas.” Brahmana granted Durgama all the boons. And, thenceforth the brahmans could not recollect the Vedas or the mantras. No bathing, no homas, no daily rites, no rites for the dead, no yajñas, no japa (repeating divine names) and no tapas. Symptoms of old age caught the Devas in its grips. Durgama drove them out of Devaloka and they hid in mountain caves. Within a hundred years the world reached the rock bottom of destruction. Water disappeared from the world. Alarmed beyond measure at these developments the brahmans went to the Himālayas and prayed to Jagadambikā (mother of the universe). Ambikā appeared to them, and their lamentations brought tears to the eyes ofAmbikā, and thus water scarcity came to an end. Ambikā gave them Śāka (a vegetable) fruits and roots to eat. Because she protected her devotees by supplying Śāka to them she came to be known as Śākambhari, thenceforward. Also because she shed tears from her eyes, thenceforth she came to be addressed as Satīkṣi also. Being told about the above developments Durgama, with his army attacked Devī. The fight became fierce and furious. From Devī’s body emerged numerous Śaktis fully armed. Dhārīṇī, Bāḷā, Tripūrā, Bhairavī and Kālī with 10,000 hands were some of the prominent and powerful Śaktis which thus emerged. The army of Durgama was annihilated. Then the fight commenced directly between Devī and Durgama. Fifteen arrows of Devī hit the asura at the very same time and he was killed. (Devī Bhāgavata, Saptama Skanda).

Durgāpūjā. See under Navarātrī.

Durgāsāila. A mountain in Śāka island. (M.B. Bhīṣma-Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 23).

Duritakṣaya. A son of King Mahāvīrya. Duritakṣaya had three sons, Trāṭyāruni, Kavi and Puskarāruni. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, Verse 19 and 21).

Durbhajaya I. An absolutely cruel King. Owing to the number of adharmas (evil actions he had committed) Kāla ordained him to be born and reborn twenty times as various animals and as a Brahmārākṣasa he roamed about forests. One of those days he caught hold of a Śivayogi called Mahādeva whose body was smeared with Vibhūti (the sacred ash), but as soon as the Vibhūti from the body of the Śivayogi got smeared on his body also, Durjaya got back his former form and he was lifted up to Svarga. (Śīva Purāṇa, Bhasha Māhātmya).

Durbhajaya II. A dānava born to Kaśyapa prajāpati by Danu, his wife. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 23).

Durbhajaya III. (Dusparajaya). One of the hundred sons of Dṛḍharaśtra (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 116, Verse 9).

Durbhajaya IV. A King. Drupada advised the Pāṇḍavas to invite this King to the great war. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

Durbhajaya V. Son of King Suvira of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. (Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 11).

Durbhajaya VI. A synonym of Mahāvīṣṇu. (Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 144, Verse 86).

Durbhajaya VII. A powerful son of Supratika. While he was living as the lord over the country, having conquered the various kingdoms he was told that Gaurumukha Muni had in his possession the famous gem called Cintāmaṇi. He fought to gain that gem and died. The place where he met with death came to be known as Naimikāranya in after years. (Varāha Purāṇa, Chapter 17).

Durbhajaya. Short form of Durjaymanimatinagara referred to in laudatory terms in the Mahābhārata. Some scholars hold that Durjaya was the Ellora caves of modern India, seven miles off Daulatabad. (Vana Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 1).

Durmāda I. See Durdharṣaṇa.

Durmāda II. A son of Harisya, the Gandharva King. Himself and Unmāda, the apsarā woman impersonated themselves and cheated Purūrasavas and Urbhā (See Unmāda). Enraged at the deception Urbhā cursed that Durmāda be born as a Rākṣasa and Unmāda a princess. Also, Unmāda as princess would have to marry not the person she really loved but some one else. Both Durmāda and Unmāda then begged Urbhā for redemption from the curse and the latter said thus: “This Durmāda will be born as son of Unmāda, and on seeing her son and husband die, she will end her life by burning herself, and her soul will attain Svarga”.

As a result of the above curse Unmāda was born as the daughter of the King of Videha and Durmāda as the son of the Rākṣasa called Durghajajīhā. As Rākṣasa, Durmāda was called Piṅgālākṣa. The King of Videha named Unmāda as Harini. While Harini was once walking in the garden with her companions Piṅgālākṣa abducted her and flew off in the sky, and put her in a great forest. A prince called Vasumāna, who happened to come that way on his fast-riding horse Jīmūta heard the lamentations of Harini, and after killing Piṅgālākṣa he took her with him to her palace. The King of Videha and his subjects, who were in great anxiety and distress at the disappearance of Harini felt really happy to have her back. And, all of them opined that Harini should be married to Vasumāna. Accordingly the date for her Svayamvara was announced. But, on the day of the svayamvara Bhadrārṣena, King of Hēhaya who, along with other Kings was also present on the occasion, forcibly took Harini and rode off with her. According to the condition laid down by Urbhā for redemption from her curse Durmāda was born as son of Harini and he was named Durmāda. Bhadrārṣena, Harini and Durmāda lived very happily in the Hēhaya palace. When Durmāda came of age he married Gitraṅgī, his uncle’s daughter on the advice of sage Garga. Soon war broke out between Bhadrārṣena, and Divodāsa, King of Kāṣi in which Bhadrārṣena was killed. Harini courted death by fire, regained her former life and under the name Unmāda returned to the world of the Apsaras.

Durmāda III. Son of Asura Maya. Conceived and haunted over his strength Durmāda once challenged Bālī to fight, and defeated by Bālī he ran away from battlefield and hid in a cave. (Ānanda Rāmāyaṇa Sārakāṇḍa).

Durmārṣa. An apsara, he clashed with the Devas at the churning of the sea of milk. (Bhāgavata dasa-maṇḍaka).

Durmārṣaṇī I. One of the 100 sons of Dṛḍharaśtra. In the great war Arjuna destroyed his Gajasena and Sātyaki wounded him. Finally he was killed by Bhima. After the war was over Nakula occupied his palace. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 113, Droṇa Parva, 88, 89, 116 and 135).

Durmārṣaṇī II. A son born to Sṛṇāya by Rāṣṭrapāli. He was a relation of Vasudeva. (Bhāgavata navamaskanda).

Durmukha I. A minister of Mahiṣāsura. Once he was sent to Bhadrakāli with a message by his master. (Devī Bhāgavata, Paṇcama Skanda).

Durmukha II. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. The following information about him is gathered from the Mahābhārata.

(1) He was present at the Svayamvara of Draupadī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 1).

(2) During the procession to Dvaitavana, Gandharvas took him captive. (Vana Parva, Chapter 242, Verse 12).

(3) In the great war he fought with Sahadeva. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 25).
256

(4) He killed Arjuna's charioteer. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 12).
(5) He defeated Śrutakarman. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 35).
(6) He was defeated by Abhimanyu. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 42).
(7) A duel was fought between Durmukha and Ghaṭotkaca. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 13).
(8) A duel fought between Durmukha and Dhrṣṭadyumna: (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 26).
(9) He fought with Purujit. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 13).
(10) He was defeated in fight with Sahadeva. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 107, Verse 23).
(11) Bhīmasena killed him in war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 134, Verse 20).
(12) After the war his beautiful palace was occupied by Sahadeva. (Śaṁti Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 12).

DURMUKHA III. A King who flourished in the assembly of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śabha Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 21).

DURMUKHA IV. A Rākṣasa, who was a member in Rāvaṇa's assembly. (Śabha Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 13). According to the Uttararāmāyaṇa he was the son of a Rākṣasa called Mālāvān by his wife Sundarī, and he had Vajramuṣṭi, Virūpākṣa, Suptaghna, Yajñākoṣa, Matta and Unmatta as brothers and Nalā and Ketumati as sisters.

DURMUKHA V. A serpent. It was also present among the serpents, which had come to Prabhāsakṣetra to receive Balarāma who, after death, went to Paṭālaloka. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

DURMUKHA VI. An asura on the side of Mahiṣāsura. Tāmra, finance minister of Mahiṣāsura sent Durmukha with Bāṣkala to fight against Devi, who killed him. (Devībāgavata, Skandhas 5, 13). In his previous life he was one of the Paumalastyas. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 61).

DURMUKHĪ. A companion of the Rākṣasa woman called Ajamukhi. See Ajamukhi.

DURVĀRA. Son of King Suratha of Kujjandalanagara. When Suratha captured the yajñāśvā (sacificial horse) of Śrī Rāma Sātrughna clashed with him. Durvāra also was present on the occasion. (Padma Purāṇa, Paṭālaka ḍana, Chapter 49).

DURVĀRĀṆĀ I. An army chief-tain of the King of Kamboja. He was killed in the great war by Śaṭyaki. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 112, Verse 42).

DURVĀRĀṆĀ II. A messenger of the very powerful Jalandhara. When the Devas and the Asuras churned Kṣīrābdhi (ocean of milk), many excellent things emerged out of it. When those things were divided among them all, Devendra took possession of 14 gems in an unauthorised manner. When Jalandhara, through his messenger Durvārāna, demanded Devendra to return the gems, not only did he not return them but he also declared war against Jalandhara. When war broke out Jalandhara hesitated as to whether he should fight with Viṣṇu or with Śiva. Durvārāna advised him first to fight with Śiva. (Padma Purāṇa, Uṭṭararākhaṇḍa, Chapter 16).

DURVĀSAS
1) Genealogy. A sage, who used to lose his temper very easily. He is believed to have been born from an arṇā (part, aspect) of Śiva.

2) Birth. Three different stories are told in the Purāṇas relating to his birth.
(1) Once a quarrel, arose between Brahmā and Śiva which developed into fighting. At the sight of Śiva seething with rage the Devas ran off frightened, and Pārvatī also got frightened. She told him 'Durvāsagas bhavati me'. (It has become impossible for me to live happily with you). Realising that it was his momentary anger which made life miserable for Pārvatī Śiva decided to transfer that trait of his character to someone else.

The incident took place during the life period of Silavatī, who was very much reputed for her chastity. While Silavatī was carrying her husband Ugraṛavas (who though a leper yet desired to visit brothels) to the house of a prostitute the muni Anumāṇḍavya cursed Ugraṛavas to die before sunrise the next day with his head broken. (See under Anumāṇḍavya). Silavatī made the counter curse, let not the sun rise the next day, to the muni's curse. Accordingly the sun did not rise the next day, and confusion prevailed everywhere, whereupon the Trimūrti and the Devas, through Anasūyā, the wife of Atrimaharṣī, got the curse of Silavatī withdrawn. Pleased at this the Trimūrti asked Anasūyā to choose any boon she desired, and she prayed that Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Maheśvara take their partial incarnations through her. Accordingly Brahmā as Candra and Maheśvara as Dattātreya were born as sons of Anasūyā. And, Śiva deposited his anger, which had caused unhappiness to Pārvatī, in Anasūyā. The child born out of that aspect of Śiva to Anasūyā was Durvāsas. The name Durvāsas was very apt as the child was born out of the anger of Śiva which had made life miserable (durvāśa) for Pārvatī. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 44).
(2) Once defeated in his fight with Brahmā Śiva took refuge with the Nāranārāyaṇas who were doing penance in the plains of the Himalayas. Śiva told sage Nārāyaṇa everything about his plight and he asked the former to pierce his left hand with the Śūla. Śiva did so and three streams of blood flowed out of the wound made on the hand of the Rṣi, one stream towards the sphere of the stars, another into the skull in Śiva's hand and from the third stream Durvāsas was born. Brahmā, who witnessed this miracle withdrew from war and returned to his abode. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 2).
(3) In the fierce fight with the Tripurās Śiva, in great rage, ultimately shot an arrow against them, and that arrow, after killing the Tripurās, assumed the form of a child and returned to the lap of Śiva, and the child was named Durvāsas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 160, Verses 14, 15).
3) Kuntī granted boon. Once while Kuntī was living in the palace of Kuntibhoja Durvāsas came there, and pleased with Kuntī, he granted her five manstras. It was with the aid of those mantras that Kuntī became mother of Kaṁpha and others. (For details see under Kuntī Para 2).
4) Śrī Kṛṣṇa bathed in pāyasā (pudding). Once Durvāsas came to Dvārakā where Kṛṣṇa and Rukmīṇī looked after him to his heart's content. Though, at times he took only meagre food, at other times he destroyed everything he saw and created trouble. Kṛṣṇa and Rukmīṇī served him according to schedule. One day the sage asked Kṛṣṇa to cook some pudding and it was got ready. Then the sage asked Kṛṣṇa to smear his (Kṛṣṇa) body with pudding. Kṛṣṇa did so except on his feet. After that Durvāsas got down the chariot and making Kṛṣṇa and Rukmini serve as horses himself got into it and drove away in great speed into the forest. On the way he thrashed the 'horses' one after the other. Neither Kṛṣṇa nor Rukmini felt sorry about this action of the sage. On reaching the forest he halted the chariot and blessed Śrī Kṛṣṇa that arrows would not hit the parts of Kṛṣṇa's body which were smeared with the pudding. The spot at which the sage blessed Kṛṣṇa became famous as Varadānatrītha in after years. It may be noted that Kṛṣṇa died by an arrow hitting his foot which was not smeared with the pāyasa. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 160).

5) Conductor yajña for Śvetaki. There once was a King called Śvetaki equal to Indra. He conducted a yajña of a hundred years' duration. Innumerable brahmins were engaged in the successful conduct of the yajña. Some years after the yajña the brahmins went their own way leaving it unfinished as the clouds of fume all the twenty-four hours in the yajñaśāla irked and affected their eyes. When Śvetaki requested them to further cooperate to complete the yajña they insultingly asked him to invite Śīdras for it. Then the King went to the Himālayas and did tapas for Śiva, who at last deputed Durvāsas to complete the yajña, and under the maharṣi's aegis it was completed within twelve years. On account of the constant offerings of havis in Agni (fire) during the period Agni fell a prey to indigestion, which was cured only after it ate up the Khāṇḍava forest. (See Khāṇḍava Dahana). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 235).

6) Mudgala granted salvation. Once Durvāsas went to sage Mudgala who was doing tapas in Kurukṣetra taking food only rarely and demanded some food with the object of testing his dharmavrīṭi (righteousness). The sage gave Durvāsas all the food he had with him, himself starving, and Durvāsas left the āśrama after eating a part of the food and smearing his body with the rest of it. This process was repeated by Durvāsas for six days, but Mudgala never felt or showed any offence. Greatly pleased at the firm righteousness of the King, Durvāsas blessed him to bodily ascend to heaven. Immediately a vimāna (aeroplane) descended from Viṣṇuloka and carried Mudgala in it to heaven. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 260).

7) Other information. (1) Durvāsas ran away in fear of the Pāḍavas. (See under Duryodhana, Para 12.) (2) He suffered at the hands of Hamśa and Dībhaka. (See under Dībhaka). (3) He advised Saivapañcākṣara to the woman called Kalāvati. (See under Kalāvati). (4) Durvāsas and Kṣṛādhi-mathanaṃ. (See under Amṛtaṃ). (5) Durvāsas and Daksāyāja. (See under Daksā). (6) Terrified Durvāsas ran helter-skelter in the three worlds. (See under Arīmarśa, Para 3). (7) He was responsible for the death of Lakṣmana. (See Lakṣmana). (8) He cursed Śakuntalā. (See Śakuntalā). (9) He spent his time in Indra's assembly. (M.B. Śabha Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 23: For another story see under Piṭṛtīrtha).

DURVĪBHĀGA. A particular area in ancient India. The Kṣatriya kings of the area presented a lot of money and foodgrains to Yudhisthira at the Rājasilā yajña. (Śabha Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 11).

DURVĪGĀHA (DURVISAHA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was killed in the great war by Bhīmasena. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 20).

DURVIMOCANA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra killed by Bhīmasena. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 62).

DURVIROCANA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra killed by Bhīmasena (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 62).

DURVISAHA (DURVĪGĀHA). One of the 100 sons or Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He attended the svayāṇvara of Pāṇcāli. On the occasion of the procession of Duryodhana and others, Durvīsaha was put in prison. (Vana Parva, Chapter 242, Verse 12). He was killed by Bhīmasena in the great war. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 20).

DURYODHANA I. Villain in the Mahābhārata story; the eldest and greatest of the Kauravas.

(1) Genealogy. See under Kauravas.

(2) Birth. Dhṛtarāṣṭra born blind married Gāndhārī. Hungry and thirsty, Vṛṣṇi once came to Dhṛtarāṣṭra's palace where Gāndhārī treated him sumptuously, and he blessed her to have hundred sons by her husband. Ere long Gāndhārī conceived, but even after two years she did not deliver. Grief-stricken at this she got herself aborted in secret as the result of which she 'delivered' a mass of flesh, and hearing about it Vṛṣṇi visited her. As instructed by him hundred pots were filled with ghee, and the mass of flesh was sprayed with cold water as a result of which it got divided into hundred pieces, each the size of a thumb. Also a smaller piece of flesh remained. Those pieces of flesh were deposited in the pots filled with ghee and the pots kept in a secret place. Vṛṣṇi departed for the Himālayas for tapas.

In course of time the pots burst open one by one and from each pot emerged a boy. From the 101st pot a girl was born. Eldest among the boys was named Duryodhana, and the girl called Duskalā. (For other names see under Kauravas).

Duryodhana, at the time of his birth cried in the voice of an ass on hearing which the asses kept in their sheds also cried. Also, such evil omens as the jackal howling, birds like crows, vultures etc. crying and storms breaking out were witnessed on the occasion. Alarmed by such evil omens Dhrṭarāṣṭra sent for the brahmins and his other friends and well-wishers like Bhīṣma and Vidura and enquired of them whether, after the death of Dharmaputra, Duryodhana would be able to become King. As soon as Dhrṭarāṣṭra had asked the question, evil omens like the world becoming dim, jackals howling etc. were witnessed again. Scholars like Vidura did their best to divine what the future of Duryodhana would be, and after mature consideration Vidura and the brahmin pandits opined that because of Duryodhana's birth the country and people would be ruined, and they, therefore, advised that he should be cast away and forsaken. But, paternal affection did not permit Dhrṭarāṣṭra to accept the advice. During this period Gāndhārī was laid up for a few days with stomach trouble, and a vaisya woman was engaged to look after Dhrta, who begot of her a son called Yuyutsu. Thus with 100 sons and Duštalā for daughter Dhrta became rich in the matter of children (M. B. Adi Parva, Chapter 114).

(2) Duryodhana harms Bhimasena. Now, Pāṇḍu was dead and Mādri also died in the funeral pyre of her husband. Forlorn and helpless Kunti and her five sons came to Hastināpura, and Dhrta welcomed them to the palace. Thus arose the occasion for the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas to live together in the Hastināpura palace. And, naturally there used to be petty differences and quarrels between the Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas princes. Bhima being in every way a giant the Kauravas had often to suffer at his hands. To collect all the hundred Kaurava brothers together and throw them away in one lump to push them to the ground, to suffocate them by holding their heads under water etc—these were some of the childish pranks played by Bhima on the Kauravas. The constant repetition of such pranks and mischiefs on the part of Bhima rendered him an object of hatred for the Kauravas among whom the common conviction grew that it was essential to put an end to Bhima's life for their safety, nay even their very existence.

One day, the Kauravas, with the object of doing away with Bhima, escorted the Pāṇḍavas to Pramāṇakoṭi on the banks of the Gaṅgā for water sports. There all of them ate sumptuous meals and took various drinks. But, Duryodhana had secretly mixed Kālakūtas poison in the food of Bhima. After taking meals they began playing water-sports. After the sports were over they returned to their tents and slept. Owing to the effects of the poison and the overexertion during the day Bhima slept stone dead. While all were asleep during the night Duryodhana bound the hands and legs of Bhima with cords and threw him into the depths of the Gaṅgā. Bhima who was still unconscious sank down to the very bottom of the river where the denizens of nāgaloka saw him and the nāgas bit him in anger. The poison of the nāgas neutralised the effects of Kālakūta poison in Bhima, though their bite could not make even a scratch on his skin. Freed thus from the effects of poison Bhima shook himself up from sleep and drove off the nāgas. Alarmed at these developments the nāgas called Vāsuki up to the scene, and he, recognising Bhima held him in embrace and gave him much money and costly gems etc. Bhima refused the gifts, but asked Vāsuki for nāgaras, which would impart the strength of thousand nāgas to those who used it. Vāsuki gave Bhima eight potfuls of nāgaras, which the latter drank to the last dregs and thus gained immeasurable strength.

When next morning after the water-sports the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas awoke from sleep Bhima was found missing. Duryodhana said that Bhima had returned earlier to Hastināpura, but this did not satisfy the Pāṇḍavas. Kunti lamented over the absence of Bhima. Bhima, who drank the nāga rasa lay on the verandah of Vāsuki for eight days in the manner of one who had lost consciousness. By the time he woke up on the eighth day the body had almost fully assimilated the rasa. Vāsuki told Bhima that eight potfuls of nāgaras would impart the strength of 10,000 elephants. And then at the instance of Vāsuki Bhima took his bath in holy waters and wore new clothes and fragrant garland. He ate the pudding offered by Vāsuki, and taking leave of him and followed by nāgas he came up from the water to the bank of the Gaṅgā. Bhima gave a detailed description to his mother and brothers of all that had happened to him. Dharmaputra advised him to keep the secret. After the incident, once again was Kālakūta poison mixed in the food of Bhima. But, Yuyutsu born of the vaiśya woman to Dhrta gave the Pāṇḍavas confidential report about it. Because of the powerful effect of nāga rasa, the Kālakūta consumed by Bhima did no harm to him but it only got assimilated in his body. On another occasion Duryodhana killed the charioteer of Bhima. (Bhāsā Bhārata, Chapter 127 and 129).

3) Karna crowned king of Arga. The Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas learnt the use of weapons of war at the feet of Droṇācārya, and when the studies were over arrangements were made for a rehearsal, and at the rehearsal Bhima and Duryodhana were the first to clash with each other. When the encounter reached its climax both of them pointed the club at each other. But, Aśvatthāmā intervened and pacified them. Next Karna entered the stage for a trial of strength with Arjuna, and at once arose from the Pāṇḍava side questions about Karna's nobility and aristocracy of birth etc. Karna stood there stunned, not knowing what to say or how to repel the attack. Then it was Duryodhana who rose up to announce that he was, that very moment, crowning Karna King of Arga. This ended the scene. (Bhārata (Malayālam), Adi Parva, Chapters 134, 135 and 136).

4) Pāṇḍavas trapped in palace built of lac. The above incident confirmed and completed the cleavage of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas into two hostile camps. Meantime another event happened. Droṇācārya demanded of his pupils to bring before him King Drupada by way of gurudaksha (tuition fee), for the acārya had to wreak vengeance upon Drupada (See under Droṇa). Though Duryodhana tried his best he could not capture Drupada. Not only that, Drupada defeated him also in fight. At this juncture it was Arjuna who presented Drupada as captive to Droṇa by way of gurudakshā. The incident proved to be another provocation for Duryodhana to hate the Pāṇḍavas. Now, Duryodhana made up his mind to destroy the Pāṇḍavas somehow or other. With this end in view he went to his father, posing himself to be a great well-wisher of the Pāṇḍavas, and obtained his permission to transfer their (Pāṇḍavas') residence to another place. Accordingly Duryodhana deputed his minister Purocana to get built at Varaṇūvata a palace of lac. Vidura came to know of the intended mischief and gave advance notice of it to the Pāṇḍavas through a messenger Kanaka. The architect built the lac palace but built a tunnel also attached to it. A year after the Pāṇḍavas shifted the residence to the new palace Duryodhana set fire to it, and the Pāṇḍavas escaped unscathed through this tunnel. (Bhārata (Malayālam) Adi Parva, Chapters 141-151).

1. Vyāsa blessed Gāndhārī to have 100 sons. Then how was it that she got a daughter too? On being questioned thus by King Janamejaya Vaiśampīyana replied: "When Vyāsa was dividing the mass of flesh a desire to have a daughter entered the heart of Gāndhārī and divining that desire Vyāsa cut the flesh in such a manner as to have one more piece, viz. 101.
2. Duryodhana was born as a part of Kali. (M. B. Asrama- vāsika Parva, Chapter 1).
5) Duryodhana invited the Pāṇḍavas back to Hastināpura.

Duryodhana and his brothers were living very happily under the impression that the Pāṇḍavas had been burnt to ashes along with the ‘lax Palace’. Then it was that the Pāṇḍavas, disguised as brahmans and in the presence of all the Kings, won Pāñcālī, the daughter of King Drupada, in svayamvara, for their wife. After the marriage the Pāṇḍavas stayed in Drupada’s palace and the Kauravas returned to Hastināpura. Duryodhana and others felt all the more jealous at the Pāṇḍavas’ becoming more powerful as a result of their marriage. Again it was decided that the Pāṇḍavas should be destroyed anyhow and at any cost. But, how to effect the destruction? Duryodhana wanted to attract the Pāṇḍavas to destruction through women and to create differences and divisions among them. But, Kaṇḍa attacked the plan as impracticable, and instead he wanted to defeat Drupada and render the Pāṇḍavas impotent. At this stage Bhīma and Droṇa argued that it was most preferable to give half the Kingdom to the Pāṇḍavas and receive them with grace. Dhṛtarāṣṭra supported the proposal as a result of which the Kauravas went to Pāñcālā and escorted the Pāṇḍavas back to Hastināpura. Dhṛtarāṣṭra partitioned the country between the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas and the latter shifted their residence to their part of the country with Kuṇḍavaprastha (Indraprastha) as its capital. When the Pāṇḍavas went to Indraprastha Maya built for them an exceptionally beautiful palace where King Dharmaputra performed rājasūya. Duryodhana and others earnestly participated in it. After the rājasūya the Kauravas wanted to have a look at the palace and in the course of surveying it they placed themselves in ridiculous situations due to visual illusions. Taking the bright floors of glass for watery tanks they pulled up their clothings and measured with caution every foot of their. Then they mistook actual pools for floor and fell into them and got wet. At the consequent discomfiture of the Kauravas Bhīma slapped his hands and roared with laughter. Draupadi hid her face with hands and smiled. Altogether the Kauravas cut a very ridiculous figure, and they returned to Hastināpura. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapters 202, 35).

6) Dharmaputra’s first defeat in the game of dice.

The sight of the great wealth including costly stones and gems presented by various kings to Dharmaputra at the Rājasūya and the humiliation experienced while surveying the palace made Duryodhana all the more mad with anger and hatred towards the Pāṇḍavas. He now came to the decision either to defeat the Pāṇḍavas once for all or to commit suicide by taking poison. He held secret consultations on the topic with Śākuni whose efforts at first to pacify him (Duryodhana) failed. Ultimately Śākuni, an expert in the game of dice, advised Duryodhana to invite Dharmaputra to a game, assuring him that the rest he would take care of. Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Vidura advised Duryodhana against the move, but he did not yield. Finally Dhṛtarāṣṭra, saying to himself that nobody would change fate, agreed to Duryodhana’s proposal, and deputed Vidura to Dharmaputra to invite him for the game.

Dharmaputra, in fact, did not like the game, but he succumbed to the eloquence and persuasive powers of Śākuni and at last agreed to play. Kings lined up the royal hall to witness the game. First gems were stacked, and Duryodhana won the game. Then 1000 golden nīksa1 and treasuries were offered to the winner. Duryodhana won that game also. Next chariot with horses and next to that 1000 maid-servants were stacked and Duryodhana won those games too. 1000 horses, 1000 golden chariots with their horses, the horse decorated with gold presented by Citrāratha to Arjuna, 6000 soldiers with their arms and armaments—these formed the next successive bets, and each game Dharmaputra lost. The next bet was 400 copper vessels each filled with pure gold, and Duryodhana won that game also. And, now Vidura tried to dissuade Yudhishṭhira from playing the game; but neither he nor Duryodhana heeded the advice. And, Duryodhana by foul play snatched from Dharmaputra all his wealth, his kingdom and his brothers. Now, Pāñcālī alone remained, and Dharmaputra bet her too and played the last game and lost.

Duryodhana deputed his Sūta, Prātikām, to Indraprastha, to fetch Draupadi but she sent him back. Next Duśśāsana was deputed and he brought Pāñcālī to the sahā dragging her by the hair. She was proclaimed to be the maid-servant of the Kauravas. At last Dhṛtarāṣṭra intervened and sent back the Pāṇḍavas along with Draupadi to Indraprastha.

7) Second game and exile in the forest.

Duryodhana and others did not appreciate the intervention of their father. He again conspired with Śākuni and it was decided to challenge Dharmaputra to one more game. The conditions to be stipulated were that the vanquished in the game should stay in exile for twelve years in the forest and live incognito during the thirteenth year, and if found out and recognised during this period the whole process of exile and life incognito would have to be repeated. Duryodhana and Śākuni approached Dhṛtarāṣṭra and said to him thus: “Dear father, the desire for revenge at their defeat in the game of dice gnaws at the Pāṇḍavas’ heart like poison. Also, they will never forget our having dragged Draupadi by her hair. When a suitable occasion arises they will take revenge on the whole lot of us. Therefore, we want to challenge Dharmaputra to a final game of dice, the condition being that he who gets defeated should go in exile into the forest for twelve years and then to live incognito for one year. If we get defeated we will simply carry out the condition on our part.”

This request of Duryodhana appealed to his father, who invited Dharmaputra once again for a game of dice. Dharmaputra accepted the invitation, in fact, in spite of himself. This time too Duryodhana won the stake and the Pāṇḍavas set out to the forest. Even at the time of parting Duśśāsana insulted Bhīma who retorted thus: “You, mean fellows, you cheated my brother by foul play. If I fail to tear your heart open in fight and drink blood I do not want heaven. Moreover I will kill Duryodhana, and Arjuna will kill Kaṇṭa. Śākuni, the expert in foul play in dice will be killed by Sahadeva. We will meet in the 14th year from today at the battlefield. Adieu.”

Thus did the Pāṇḍavas depart for the forest. Kuntī being too old Vidura took her to his house, and he consoled her, lamenting over the separation from her children. (M.B. Saṁhā Parva).
8) Curse of Maitreya. The Pândavas entered the Kámyaka forest where they were welcomed by the sages. Among them Maitreya whom the misfortune of the Pândavas affected much started for Hastináppura for peace parleys. Vidura advised Dhrtarástra that Maitreya's proposals should be respected lest he should curse the King. Dhrtarástra and Duryodhana received the sage with respect. And, the sage asked them to recall the Pândavas from the forest and live on friendly terms with them. Duryodhana did not in any manner respond to the advice of the sage, but stood there absolutely mum tapping his thigh with his fingers and making drawings with the fingers of his feet on the ground. This the sage interpreted as an insult to him. He stood up ablaze with anger and cursed Duryodhana thus: "You will, sooner than later reap the consequences of your false pride; your cruelty will invite terrible war, and in the fight Bhima will rend asunder your thigh, which you struck with your fingers just now."

Greatly agitated over the curse Dhrtarástra prayed the sage for redemption and the sage said: "if only your son resorts to forebearance and peace the curse will not take effect, otherwise it will come true." And after making this announcement the sage returned to the forest. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 10).

9) The procession. While the Pândavas were staying in the Kámyaka forest Duryodhana and others went there on the pretext of looking after the cows. The Gandharvas took them captive; but the Pândavas intervened and set them free. Feeling humiliated at the mishap Duryodhana decided to end his life after crowning Dúsáśana as King. But Dúsáśana did not agree to the proposal. (For details see Ghoşayátra).

10) Duryodhana's attempt at death and his trip to Pátiála. Humiliated at the procession thus and turning down the advice of friends to return to the palace, Duryodhana spread grass on the ground and lay down there to die. As his death would spell disaster to the Dánavas they decided to send him back to his palace for which purpose they performed the Váitúna sacrifice in Pátiála. While offering milk in the sacrificial fire a Ráksasa woman, Krtyá, arose therefrom, and at the instance of the Dánavas she carried Duryodhana over to Pátiála. There they told him thus: "Oh Duryodhana, a part of your body has been earned by us from Síva by our penance. That part of your body above the waist is made of diamond. Therefore, arrows will not pierce your body. Grieve not. Bhágadatta and other heroes have been born to help you. Your great supporter Kárña is possessed of the soul of Narakásura." These words of the Dánavas instilled fresh hope in Duryodhana, and he was taken back to his Kingdom by Krtyá. This incident appeared as a dream to Duryodhana. Bucking up confidence and courage again he returned to Hastináppura and continued to rule. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 252).

11) Duryodhana's Viṣṇu yajña. At this juncture Duryodhana thought of performing a Rájasáya for which he invited brahmins to the palace. After bestowing much thought on the subject the brahmins pointed out that there was no sanction for Duryodhana to conduct a Rájasáya as his elders, Dhrtarástra and Dharmaputra were still alive. At the same time they pointed out that there was another Yajña called Viṣṇu yajña as efficacious as Rájasáya which Duryodhana was competent to perform. Accordingly Duryodhana performed the Viṣṇu yajña and earned reputation among evil monarchs. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 256, 257).

12) Boon from Duvásas. Once Duvásas accompanied by his disciples, came to Duryodhana's palace, and Duryodhana decided somehow or other to befriend and use the mahársi as a weapon against the Pândavas. He housed the mahársi and his disciples in the palace for a few days and pleased them by careful service at which the mahársi asked Duryodhana to request for any boon he desired. And, Duryodhana asked the mahársi to visit the Pândavas one day in the forest with his disciples when they had finished taking their meals. The mahársi agreed. And, this was the period of time when Páncháli had received the akṣayápatra from Súrya. Everyday the pátára would produce enough food for the Pándavas and the other people with them, but it would become empty for the day after Páncháli had eaten her food. This was the nature of the akṣayápatra.

Páncháli had finished her meals one day when Duvásas and his disciples came to the Pándavas. Not knowing that Páncháli had already finished her food Dharmaputra welcomed the mahársi and his disciples and requested them to take bath in the Gaṅgá and return for their meals. Páncháli was in a fix. The akṣayápatra would not produce any more food for the day, and if not duly fed the mahársi would get angry and curse them. In this painful dilemma she prayed to Śrí Kṛṣṇa for succour, and lo! he appeared and asked Páncháli for some food. She replied that the akṣayápatra was quite empty. But, Kṛṣṇa got from her the pátára and ate one particle of Kíra (a leafy vegetable) which had stuck on its side. That leafy substance fully satisfied his hunger and thirst whereupon the hunger and thirst of Duvásas and his disciples were also quenched. Then Kṛṣṇa asked Sahadeva to bring back the mahársi and his disciples from the bank of the Gaṅgá and accordingly he went there and invited them. Only a few minutes had passed since the mahársi and his disciples had felt the satisfaction of a sumptuous meal. They were also astonished to think how in such a short time food for so many people could be cooked by Páncháli. They felt rather anxious about the reaction which Dharmaputra would evince in case they returned to him to say that they required no food. Duvásas realised only too well that to quarrel with the Pándavas, who enjoyed the friendship and support of Kṛṣṇa was like playing with fire. Therefore, the mahársi with his disciples ran away from the place secretly. Pándavas waited long for the mahársi and his disciples to return fearing that the object of Duvásas might be to return at the untimely hour and curse them. But, Śrí Kṛṣṇa told them the details about the mahársi's departure and assured Dharmaputra that he and his disciples would not return. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 263).

13) War against Viśrúga. After twelve years' exile in the forest the Pándavas began their life incognito at Viśrúga nagara. Kíeka, brother-in-law of MÁtsya, the Viśrúga King, was killed secretly by Bhímasena, and news was spread that Kíeka was killed by a Gandharva.

None of the spies deputed by Duryodhana to spot out the Pándavas during their life incognito could gather any information about them. One of those days Susarman, King of Trigarta, told Duryodhana that the Virāta King had lost his power and spirits due to the death of Kīcaka and it was, therefore, the proper time to attack the Virāta country and subjugate it thoroughly. The idea appealed to Karṇa, who prompted Duryodhana to war against Virāta. The army was fully mobilised. As an excuse for the war, at the instance of Duryodhana, Susarman, King of Trigarta lifted innumerable cows of the Virāta King. This happened on the day on which the life incognito of the Pāṇḍavas was to have ended. And war started thus. The Virāta prince Uttara who spent his time in the zenana in the palace appeared in the field of war. Arjuna, under the assumed name of Bhānnala took up the charioteership of Uttara. But, at the sight of the vast Kaurava army Uttara fainted, and Arjuna hurriedly drove the chariot over to where his bow gāndiva was kept hidden, and with the bow in his hand Arjuna jumped into the thick of the fight. A fierce war ensued in which the Kaurava army was completely routed. The life incognito of the Pāṇḍavas was also over, and Duryodhana became naturally anxious about the future of things. (M.B. Virāta Parva, Chapter 69).

14) Preparations for war. Duryodhana refused to give the Pāṇḍavas, even after their return from twelve years’ exile in forest and one year’s life incognito, even as much land as would hold a pin’, and war became inevitable. The Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas fought the great war which lasted for eighteen days on the field of Kurukṣetra.

(1) Duryodhana went to invite Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Preparations for the war were gathering speed and momentum. Both the sides were on the look out for more friends and allies. Being told that Arjuna had gone to Dvārakā to seek Kṛṣṇa’s support Duryodhana rushed to the place. Seeing Duryodhana from a distance Kṛṣṇa lay on his bed in a false sleep, and Duryodhana took his seat on a stool at the head of the bed awaiting Kṛṣṇa to awake from sleep. Soon after, Arjuna came there and he stood at the feet of Kṛṣṇa with head bowed down. When Kṛṣṇa awoke from sleep it was Arjuna whom he saw first, and while exchanging greetings with Arjuna he was told that it was Duryodhana, who had come first. But when Duryodhana and Arjuna explained the object of their visit he told them thus:—

“No doubt it was Duryodhana who came first. But, it was Arjuna whom I met first. Since Duryodhana came first and I saw Arjuna first I shall help both of you in war. There is the adage that youngsters should be given priority of consideration. So, Arjuna may indicate his preference first. I shall give one of you an army of 10 lakhs of warriors as strong in body as myself, and I shall stand by the other without arms and without fighting. Arjuna may make his choice first. And, he chose Kṛṣṇa for his side in the war while Duryodhana was happy to get Kṛṣṇa’s mighty army. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 7).

(2) Duryodhana sought Balabhadrā’s help but Balabhadrā told him frankly that since he could not forsake Kṛṣṇa he would remain neutral in the war. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 25).

(3) Duryodhana got an aksauhini (a specific division of army) from Kṛṣṇa’s command. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 32).

(4) Śalya promised to capture the Kaurava army. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 18).

(5) Duryodhana could collect a total of eleven aksauhiniṣ. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 27).

(6) He assured Dīrtarāṣṭra that the Kaurava army would easily defeat the Pāṇḍava army. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 57).

(7) He declared that war was a yajña. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 58).

(8) At the instance of Dīrtarāṣṭra a rest house was built for Śrī Kṛṣṇa on his way to the Kauravas for compromise talks on behalf of the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 85).

(9) Duryodhana opined that Kṛṣṇa be taken captive when he came to plead for compromise and peace, but the others did not support him. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 13).

(10) Duryodhana worshipped Kṛṣṇa with rare and excellent things and invited him for meals, but Kṛṣṇa did not accept any. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 13).

(11) Duryodhana rejected the advice of sage Kaṇva to come to terms with the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapters 97-105).

(12) He emphatically announced in the Kaurava assembly that even as much land as may be required to hold a pin would not be given to the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 26).

(13) Kṛṣṇa’s pleadings in the Kaurava assembly for peace and amity on behalf of the Pāṇḍavas failed to have any effect. On the occasion Duryodhana, Śakuni, Karṇa and Duśāśana conspired to take Kṛṣṇa captive. Śāyaki informed Kṛṣṇa secretly about the conspiracy and Kṛṣṇa informed Dīrtarāṣṭra about it, and he warned the conspirators against their wicked plan. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 13, Verse 4).

(14) Duryodhana appointed Kṛpa, Droṇa, Śalya, Jayadratha, Hardika, Asvathāma, Karṇa, Śakuni, Bāhlika and Kāmboj as commanders of the army. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 155).

(15) Duryodhana appointed Bhīma as the Commander in-Chief of the army. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 156 verse 26).

(16) He appointed Ulûka as messenger and warned Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the Pāṇḍavas, Drupada, Virāta, Śikhaṇḍi, Dīrtarāṣṭra and others. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19).

(17) He ordered the army to the Kurukṣetra field. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 195).

(18) He appointed Duśāśana as Bhīma’s body-guard. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 15).

(19) On the flag staff of Duryodhana studded with gems his flag with the serpent’s emblem flew high in the air. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 25).

(20) He learnt from Droṇa the names of heroes on both sides before the fighting started. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 25).

(21) Duryodhana in battlefield. The following incidents relating to Duryodhana in actual war have been noted.

(1) In the first day’s fighting he fainted, hit by the arrows of Bhīma. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 17).

(2) He attacked Bhīma with the support of the elephant division (Gajasena) and the latter fainted. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 14).

(3) Bhīmasena again confronted him, and again he fell down fainted. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 80, Verse 4).
(4) Dhṛṣṭadyumna defeated him. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 53).
(5) Bhīma killed eight brothers of Duryodhana at one stretch, and Duryodhana cried before Bhīma. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 37).
(6) He fought against Ghatotkaca and killed four Rākṣasas attendants of the latter. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 20).
(7) He fell down at the blows delivered by Ghatotkaca. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 14).
(8) He thrashed Bhīma to unconsciousness. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 5).
(9) Overpowered by Ghatotkaca, he gave expression to his sorrows before Bhīṣma. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 8).
(10) He directed Śalya to fight against Yudhiṣṭhira. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 105, Verse 26).
(11) Grieved at the death of the warriors in his army he went to Bhīṣma in great anguish. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 16).
(12) Duryodhana and Sāt�aki fought against each other. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 111, Verse 14).
(13) He fought with Abhimanyu. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 116, Verse 1).
(14) He appointed Droṇa as chief of the army. (Bhīṣma Parva Chapter 6, Verse 2).
(15) He prayed for Droṇa's blessings to capture Yudhiṣṭhira alive. (Droṇa Parva Chapter 12, Verse 6).
(16) He embraced Droṇa at the sight of the latter disintegrating the fighting forces of the Pāṇḍavas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 7).
(17) He accorded sanction to his warriors to kill Abhimanyu. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 39 Verse 16).
(18) He prompted Karṇa to fight Abhimanyu. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 40, Verse 23).
(19) He ran off at the blows of Abhimanyu. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 30).
(20) He consolated Jayadratha who ran away in fear of Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva Chapter 74, Verse 14).
(21) When he admitted that he was not efficient to fight Arjuna. Droṇa tied a divine talisman on his body. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 73).
(22) Defeated by Arjuna he ran away with the talisman on him. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 32).
(23) Sāt�aki defeated Duryodhana. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 120 Verse 40).
(24) He got defeated by Yudhāmanyu and Uttamaujas. (Bhīṣma Parva Chapter 102 Verse 30).
(25) He incited Karṇa to kill Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 143, Verse 12).
(26) He lost his enthusiasm with the death of Jayadratha. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 150).
(27) He made allegations against Droṇa. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 152, Verse 2).
(28) He fought with Yudhiṣṭhira and got defeated. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 153, Verse 23).
(29) Aśvatthāma got ready to kill Karṇa, but Duryodhana pacified him. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 13).
(30) He fought with Bhīma and got defeated. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 30).
(31) He deputed Śakuni to kill the Pāṇḍavas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 170, Verse 60).
(32) He got defeated in fight with Sāt�aki. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 171, Verse 23).
(33) He prompted Alambusa, son of Jatāsura to fight with Ghaṭotkaca. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 174, Verse 9).
(34) He fought with Nakula and got defeated. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 187, Verse 50).
(35) On the death of Droṇa he ran away from the battlefield. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 193, Verse 17).
(36) After the death of Droṇa he appointed Karṇa chief of the army. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 43).
(37) He fought against Yudhiṣṭhira and got defeated (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 32).
(38) He requested Śalya to act as Karṇa's charioteer. The request so enraged Śalya that he rose from his seat at once. But, Duryodhana brought him round with praises. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 32).
(39) He created so much troubles and difficulties for Nakula and Sahadeva in fight with them. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56).
(40) In further fighting he got defeated by Bhīma. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 51).
(41) He killed the Kulinda prince. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 19).
(42) When Aśvatthāma put forward certain compromise proposals he rejected them. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 30).
(43) Karṇa was killed and Duryodhana was immersed in grief. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 15).
(44) He rejected peace proposals made by Kṛṣṇa, and reaffirmed the decision to fight. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 5).
(45) He appointed Śalya as chief of the army. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 6).
(46) He was again defeated by Bhīma. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 42).
(47) He was defeated by Bhṛṣṭadyumna. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 23).
(48) After the defeat he ran away from the battlefield, entered a pool rendering the water motionless by magical power and stayed under water. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 54).
(49) Kṛpa, Kṛṣṇa, Aśvatthāma and Kṛta varman went to his hiding place and tried to arouse him for war but he expressed disinclination for war. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 14).
(50) Yudhiṣṭhira visited Duryodhana in the latter's hiding place, but he answered Yudhiṣṭhira from under water. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 33).
(51) On the urging of Yudhiṣṭhira he came out of the pool. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 33).
(52) He got prepared for club fight with Bhīma. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 52).
(53) Ill omens like storms, dust fall, thunder and lightning, followed his preparations for fight with Bhīma. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 8).
(54) He fell down at the blows of Bhīma with his thigh broken. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 47).
(55) Śrī Kṛṣṇa spoke harsh words to him and he replied to them all. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 27).
(56) He shed tears before Śalya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 7).
(57) He appointed Aśvatthāma chief of the army. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 41).
(58) Congratulating Aśvatthāma he cast away his mortal coils. (Śauptika Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 56).
16) Other information.

(1) Duryodhana was one of the seven maharathas on the Kaurava side, others being Yuyutsu, Dussasana, Dussala, Durmeevana, Vikarna, Citrasena, Jaya, Kurumitra, Kanja and Satyavrata (all of them, sons of Dhrtarashtra). (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 18).

(2) With the help of Kanja he abducted the daughter of the King of Kashi. (Satyaki Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 13).

(3) After his death, his splendid palace was occupied by Bhima. (Satyaki Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 6).

(4) Vyasa brought by his esoteric powers to the surface of the Gangâ the souls of the heroes who were killed in the battle. Amongst them was the soul of Duryodhana also. (Ashramavasika Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 9).

(5) Yudhishthira saw Duryodhana, after his death, living in heaven, resplendent as Sûrya in the company of holy devatas. (Svarga-rohana Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 4).

DURYODHANA II. The Mahâbhârata refers to another Duryodhana, grandson of Suvira, and son of Duryajay. (Anuâsana Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 18). A daughter called Sudarshanâ was born to him by his wife Narmadâ. Duryodhana married Sudarshanâ to Agnideva.

DUSANA. A Râksasa, Dûsaana, who came along with Khara to fight, was killed by Sri Rama. (See Khara).

DUSKARNA. One of the hundred sons of Dhratarasra. He was defeated in fighting in the great war by Satânîka. (Drona Parva, Chapter 155).

DUSPAÑYA. Last son of a merchant in Pataliputra. Short-tempered and haughty, this Duspanya killed many children. The king outlawed him. He went into the forest where he drowned the child of maharsâ Ugrasravas. The maharsâ cursed him that he also should end his life by drowning and his soul roam about in unsupportable distress. The curse came true. After roaming about for many years he approached Agastya and prayed for redemption from the curse. The sage directed his disciple, Sutiksha to get holy water from Agni-nirtha in Mount Gandhamadana and sprinkle it on the sinful soul of Duspanya. Sutiksha did as he was asked by the guru, and the soul of Duspanya attained salvation. (Setumahâmyam).

DUSPARÂJAYA (DURJAYA). One of the hundred sons of Dhrtarashtra. On the occasion of Duryodhana’s journey to Dvaitavana, Dusparâjaya was taken captive by the Gandharvas. In the war with the Gandharvas he clashed with Nila. (Drona Parva, Chapter 23). He was killed by Bhima. (Salya Parva, Chapter 26).

DUSPRAHARASA (DUSPRAHARSA). One of the hundred sons of Dhrtarashtra, Bhima killed him in fighting. (Salya Parva, Chapter 26).

DUSSASA. A son of Dharatashtra. He was wounded by the arrows of Satyaki and killed by Bhima. (Drona Parva, Chapter 135).

DUSSALA. One of the hundred sons of Dharatashtra who was killed in war by Bhima. (Drona Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 39).

DUSSALÂ. The only daughter of Dhrtarashtra by Gandhâri. (1) She was married to Jayadratha the Raja of Sindhu. (2) Her birth. See under Kauravas.

(3) Yudhishthira did not permit Jayadratha to be killed when he abducted Pâncâli as he was the husband of Dusâlalâ. (Vana Parva, Chapter 271, Verse 43).

(4) When Arjuna reached Vimarsha attending the Ashvamedha yajña the archers obstructed his progress, and he killed them all. Suratha, son of Dusâlâ, was also among those killed, and she came to the battlefield with her infant child crying, whereupon Arjuna stopped the fighting and in remorse crowned the son of Suratha as the King of Sindhu. (Ashvamedha Parva, Chapters 78 and 89).

DUSSASANA I. A son of Dhrtarashtra.

1) His birth. See under Kauravas.

2) Other information. (1) He, along with his brothers, was present at the svayamvara of Pâncâli. (Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 1).

(3) He kept store and served food to the guests at the Rájasuya of Yudhishthira. (Sabha Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 5).

(3) He dragged Pâncâli and stripped her of her clothes in the assembly hall of the Kauravas. (For details see under Pâncâli).

(4) Gandharvas took him captive in Dvaitavana. (See under Kauravas).

(5) The Pândavas released the Kauravas from captivity, and Duryodhana laden with this humiliation did not desire to return to Hastinapura. He asked Dusâsana to assume kingship and rule the subjects well. Dusâsana rejected the offer and wept. This was a good trait in the vicious character of Dusâsana like lightning in the midst of dark and thick clouds. (Vana Parva, Chapter 249).

3) Dusâsana in the great war. (1) During the first day of the war he fought a duel with Nakula. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 22).

(2) He got defeated in the duel with Arjuna. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 23).

(3) He promised Duryodhana that he would kill Abhimanyu. Drona Parva, Chapter 89, Verse 24).

(4) Abhimanyu rendered him unconscious with his arrows. (Drona Parva, Chapter 40, Verse 13).

(5) He got defeated by Arjuna and ran away from the battlefield. (Drona Parva, Chapter 10).

(6) He fought with Sâtyaki. (Drona Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 14).

(7) He got defeated by Sâtyaki and ran off. (Drona Parva, Chapter 121, Verse 29).

(8) He defeated Pratibindhya. (Drona Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 43).

(9) Sahadeva defeated him in fighting. (Drona Parva, Chapter 188, Verse 5).

(10) He fought with Dhrstadyumna and got defeated. (Drona Parva, Chapter 189, Verse 5).

(11) On the death of Drona he ran away from the battle-field. (Drona Parva, Chapter 193, Verse 15).

(12) Sahadeva defeated him. (Karna Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 18).

(13) Dusâsana put Dhrstadyumna in prison. (Karna Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 33).

(14) He fought with Bhima. (Karna Parva, Chapter 82).
4) Death of Duśāsana. In the fierce fight between Bhima and Duśāsana at Kurukṣetra Bhima felled him with his club and sat on his chest asking him with which hand of his he pulled Draupadi by hair, raising his right hand Duśāsana cried out, "This is the hand you seek for". At this reply of his Bhima pulled out Duśāsana's right hand and thrashed him with it. He cut asunder Duśāsana's chest and drank the blood which gushed out of it (Karpa Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 8).

5) After his death. (1) After Duśāsana's death Arjuna occupied his palace. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 8).

(2) Vyāsa evoked the souls of the heroes who died in war and sprinkled Gaṅgās water on them. Duśāsana was one among those thus treated. (Āśramaśīkā Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 9).

(3) After death he attained heaven. (Svargaśāhoman Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 21)

6) Synonyms of Duśāsana. Bharata, Bhartaśreṣṭha, Bharatapāsada, Dhītarāṣṭraja, Kaurava, Kauravya, Kuruśārdula etc.

DUŚŚĀSANA II. Another Duśāsana, servant of the son of King Khaḍgabhāū of Saurāṣṭra is also mentioned in the Purāṇas.

Khaḍgabhāū had a famous elephant, which one night broke its chains and escaped, and all the mahouts could not catch it again. People in terror of the elephant ran helter-skelter. Now, a brahmin was going that way chanting verses of the 16th Chapter of the Gītā, and even though the mahouts warned him he did not change his path. Instead he saluted the elephant by touching its cheeks and proceeded on his way unhurt by the animal. The King felt great respect for the brahmin when he was told that he owed his miraculous powers to the 16th chapter of the Gītā, and he took the brahmin with him to his palace. The King gave him 100,000 golden coins and received from him the Gītā mantra. He began reciting daily certain verses in the 16th Chapter of the Bhagavadgītā.

Some time afterwards the King one day went to an open ground near his palace accompanied by soldiers and set the elephant free from its chain. Then, unheedling the entreaties of the frightened people he approached the elephant, saluted it by touching its cheeks and came away unhurt. He could act in this fashion because of his firm faith in the efficacy of the Bhagavadgītā. And afterwards he placed his son, on the throne and himself led a life of recluse repeating the Bhagavadgītā.

Some Purāṇas have another version of this episode. Duśāsana was a servant of Khaḍgabhāū's son and he attempted to catch the elephant but was killed by it. He attained salvation by hearing the 17th Chapter of the Bhagavadgītā.

Duśāsana, an idiot, betting a huge sum of money with the junior mahouts of the elephant and unheedling the warnings of several people once mounted the elephant. Children agitated the animal and Duśāsana fell down from its back. The angry animal stamped the fool to death, and its rage having not yet subsided it threw around his bones. Duśāsana, who ended his life thus was reborn as an elephant and was owned by King Jayadeva of Ceylon for a long time. A great friend of King Khaḍgabhāū, Jayadeva presented the elephant to him. At the sight of its brothers and other relations memory about its previous birth dawned on the elephant. And, it lived in great grief. After some days the King presented the animal to a poet pleased at his samasyāpūraṇa (filling the three lines of a stanza in tune with the fourth line given). The poet sold the elephant to the King of Mālava as it got ill with fever. In spite of the best treatment administered to it the elephant seemed to be nearing its end. Without either eating or drinking or sleeping the animal stood motionless shedding tears day and night. One day, the Mālava King visited the elephant when, to the surprise of all assembled there, the elephant spoke to the King thus: "Oh, King: if a brahmin recites the 17th Chapter of the Bhagavadgītā I will be completely cured of my illness."

Accordingly a brahmin was brought. As soon as he chanted the Gītā and sprinkled water on its head it got rid of its animalhood, ascended the divine aeroplane and shone forth like Indra. The Mālava King also began daily reciting the Bhagavadgītā and within a short time afterwards attained salvation. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 8).

DUŚŚILA. A harlot who lived in Prātiṣṭhāna. One Devadāsa was her husband. When Devadāsa had once gone to the palace on some business Duśśila hid her paramour, with the object of doing away with her husband, on top of the ceiling of her room. He killed Devadāsa while the latter was sleeping in the night. Next day when people gathered at her house she gave out the story that her husband was murdered by thieves. But the people got the true story about the death of Devadāsa from his four-year-old son and beat Duśśila to death. (Kathāsāraśāgara, Śāktiyasolaṁbaka, Taranīga 2).

DUṬṬABUDDHI. See Mitrabhedha.

DUŚYANTA I. A reputed King of the Lunar dynasty.

His reign. Within a short period of time Duśyanta became the emperor of India. (Adi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 3). His empire extended up to the sea, and he became an object of envy for other rulers. Under his rule the four castes flourished in affluence. None was threatened with illness or by thieves. The seasons marched in due order, the clouds raining at the proper time etc. "Like the ocean not getting agitated, and putting up with everything with unique patience like the earth, Duśyanta ruled the country" (Adi Parva, Chapter 68).

1. The genealogy given above has been taken jointly from Agnipurāṇa, Bhāgavata and Viśuṇpurāṇa. But the Mahābhārata (Adi Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 17) gives Illu as the name of Duśyanta's father and Rāhanī as that of his mother. It may be surmised that Santurodha and Illu were one and the same individual.
3) Marriage and birth of son. Once Duṣyanta set out to a forest to hunt. Seated in his chariot, which moved with the speed of Gauruṇa he came to a beautiful forest. Wearied with hunger and thirst the King, leaving the attendants behind walked into the hermitage of the sage Kaṇva, proceeding along the sand to the banks of Mālinī river and drinking with his eyes the beauties of the hermitage he reached Kaṇva’s āśrama. ‘Who is there in the āśrama?’ queried the King, whereupon Śakuntalā, the foster daughter of Kaṇva came out, and in the absence of her father welcomed the guest. Enchanted by the beauty of Śakuntalā, the King questioned her about her lignage and she told him the story about Viśvāmitra’s love for Menakī, and Kaṇva bringing up their daughter. Duṣyanta felt deep love for her, and in accordance with rules prescribed in Dharma śāstras married her in the Gandharva way. He also accepted her stipulation that the son born to her should become the next monarch. Śakuntalā got pregnant, and after promising that she would duly be conducted to the palace Duṣyanta returned. No sooner had Duṣyanta left the āśrama than Kaṇva, who had been out returned to the āśrama. With his divine eyes he understood what had happened in his absence. Kaṇva blessed Śakuntalā that she would have an excellent son, who would become an excellent ruler of the world surrounded by the sea. In due course of time Śakuntalā delivered a son. Kaṇva did the rites pertaining to the birth of the child, and named the child Sarvadamana. The child grew up to become six years old, and Kaṇva realising that the further stay of Śakuntalā and her son at the āśrama would stand in the way of the child’s welfare and progress sent the mother and the child to Hastināpura, the capital of Duṣyanta, attended by his disciples. When they reached Duṣyanta’s palace and sent word to him about their arrival he, pleading ignorance about his marriage with Śakuntalā, refused to receive her and the child. Duṣyanta and Śakuntalā hotly argued the question. At last, when Śakuntalā, with swelling emotions was about to leave the palace, a celestial voice announced that Duṣyanta had, in fact, married Śakuntalā, that Sarvadamana was his son and that he (Sarvadamana) would become a great ruler under the name Bharata. (Adi Parva, Chapters 69-74).

4) Other information. (1) Duṣyanta did not eat flesh. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 64).

(2) After his death Duṣyanta stayed in Yama’s assembly worshipping him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 15).

DUṢYANTA II. A son born to King Ajaimittha of the Puru dynasty by his wife called Nīlī. He had a brother called Parameṣhī (Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 33). Both the Kings, Duṣyanta and Parameṣhī are referred to as Pāṇcālas also. (Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 33).

DUTALAKŚANA (M). The word ‘dūta’ has a special meaning in Viṣṇuśāstra. If a man is bitten by a snake, the man who goes to the Viṣṇuśāstra to speak to him about it and bring him if necessary is called ‘dūta’. From the external signs and symbols of the dūta and from words spoken by him the Viṣṇuśāstra understands whether the person bitten by the snake would die or survive. These signs and words of the ‘dūta’ are called lakṣāna. The following are some of the important dūtalakṣāna.

1) The caste of the person bitten by the snake and the caste of the dūta.
2) The first word uttered by the dūta. If it is the name of the patient, it has a special significance.
3) If the dūta makes an incomplete sentence, it is a significant lakṣaṇa.
4) The things carried by the dūta such as stick, rope, knife.
5) The colour of the clothes worn by the dūta.
6) The tone in which the dūta speaks. These are the lakṣāna from which the doctor knows whether the patient can be cured. (Bhāṣyā of Vaiṣṇava, Brahma Parva, Chapter 35, Verses 19, 20).

DVĀDASĀBHUJA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 55).

DVĀDASĀDITYA (S). The twelve sons born to Kaśyapa by his wife Aditi are called Dvādasādītay (Twelve Adityas). The word Aditya means ‘born of Aditi’. As it occurs in Agni Purāṇa (Ch. 51) a table, showing the names of the twelve Adityas and the sign of the Zodiac over which each Aditya predominates and the colour of it, is given below.

Dvādasādītayas. Sign of the Zodiac. Colour
1 Varuṇa. Meṣa (Aries) Black.
2 Sūrya (Sun) Vṝṣa (Taurus) Blood-colour.
3 Sahasrāṇau Mithuna (Gemini) Slightly red-colour.
4 Dīhātī Karkaṭaka (Cancer) Yellow.
5 Tapaṇa. Siṃhā (Leo) White.
6 Savitī Kanyā (Virgo) Pure white.
7 Gabhastī Tulā (Libra) Tawny colour.
8 Ravi. Vṝcika (Scorpio) Yellow.
9 Parjanya. Dhanu (Sagittarius) Parrot-colour.
10 Tvāṣṭā Makara (Capricorn) Snow-white.
11 Mitra Kumbha (Aquarius) Smoky hue.
12 Viṣṇu² Mīna (Pisces) Blue.

DVĀDASĀKṢA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 88).

DVĀDASĪVRA. A fast ordained in accordance with the Hindu religion to make an end of the sorrow and misery in life. There is a history behind this fast or vow which is performed in the bright lunar fortnight in the month of Phāḷguna (Mina). It is given below.

Once King Mahābali, with a vast army of Asuras, went to the realm of the gods and drove them out of heaven. Aditi was much grieved at the misfortune that befell her sons. Kaśyapa her husband asked her the cause of her grief. She told him about the fall of gods, and asked him for a remedy. Kaśyapa told her to observe Dvādaśīvra. Aditi took Dvādaśīvra and Mahābali was pushed down to Pāṭāla by Mahāväṣṇu who incarnated as Vāmana. From that day onwards Dvādaśīvra is considered to be holy fast. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

DVĀDHIHĪVĀ. One of the six qualities, others being Sandhi, Viṣṇu, Yāna, Āśa, and Sandhi is to make peace with the enemy. Viṣṇu is war. The journey to battle is Yāna. Āśa is, not going for war. Dvādihihīvā is dividing his army into two, i.e. if the poet Kālidāsa has made variations, suitable to his work, the Abhijñā-Śākuntalā. Some deviations from the Mahābhārata story may be noticed in the works of some other poets also.

2. Different names of Adityas occur in different Purāṇas. The names given here are based on the Agni Purāṇa.
army rose against the King, he should bring one party on his side and make the two parties fight with each other. Sānīṣṭhāya is to yield to the powerful. (Manu-smṛti, Chapter 7, Stanza 160).

DVAIPĀYANA. A synonym of Vyāsa. He who is born in an island, i.e. Vyāsa. (See under Vyāsa).

DVAIPĀYANAM. A lake in Kurukṣetra. During the battle of Bhārata, Duryodhana ran away from the battlefield and hid himself in this lake. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 80, Stanza 47).

DVAITAVANA. A forest in which the Pāṇḍavas lived during their forest life. (M.B. Vana Parva).

DĀVĀRA. A friend of Kali, who went to the Sva-yāhīvara of Damayantī accompanied by Dāvāra. (See under Kali).

DĀVĀRA. The deity of Dāvāra Yuga (the age of Dāvāra). (See under Yuga).

DĀVĀRA YUGA. See under Yuga.

DĀVĀRA KĀ. The place where the capital of Śrī Kṛṣṇa stood.

1) General Information. The King Jarāsandha was the enemy of the Yādavas. To save themselves from the attack of Jarāsandha, the Yādavas united themselves under Śrī Kṛṣṇa, and built a strong city in the western islands. That beautiful city was called Dvārakā. Kṛṣṇa, shali, is another name of this city. The beautiful mountain Raivataka stood as a fortress round the city which was so strongly built that it was not possible even for the gods to enter it. Even women could fight sitting inside the forts. The fortress Raivataka was three yojanas long. In each yojana three divisions of the army were camped. In each yojana there were hundred doors, with a strong army to guard each of them. (M.B. Śabha Parva, Chapter 14).

2) Śrī Kṛṣṇa in Dvārakā. Dvārakā was the abode of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. It excelled even Amarāvatī in beauty. There was an efficient council of the leaders of the Yādavas. Dvārakā was the name of that council. Many Yādava leaders Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Balabhadra and other luminaries attended that council. The royal palace was as luminous as the Sun and the Moon. Dvārakā was built by Viśvakarmā. There were ditches on the four sides of Dvārakā. There were four beautiful parks called Nandana, Māraka Caitraratha and Vaiśāra. The mountain Raivata acted as the eastern rampart of the city. Three other mountains, Vepumanda on the North, Sukaksa on the west and Latāveṣṭa on the south acted as natural forts. On the east of the city there was a beautiful lake. The city had fifty main gates to which sharp machine rockets, big iron wheels etc. were fitted for protection. It had an area of 96 yojanas (leagues). (M.B. Šabha Parva, Chapter 38, Dākṣīṇātya pātha).

3) Other details. (1) Arjuna visited Dvārakā in the course of his pilgrimage. It was then and there that he married Subhadra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, 3 Chapters from 217).

(2) The King of Śalva attacked Dvārakā. The Yādavas drove him back. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 15).

(3) Dvārakā is a city, procuring beatitude. There is a bath known as Pāṇḍaraka which is pure and divine. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 65).

(4) It was at Pāṇḍaraka that Ṛṣya, a chameleon attained beatitude. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 7).

(5) It was here that the pestle of iron, which proved the cause of destruction of the Yādavas, came out of the stomach of Śamba. (M.B. Mauśala Parva, Chapter 1).

(6) After the death of Śrī Kṛṣṇa this city was swept over by the sea. (M.B. Mauśala Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 41).

4) Modern view. According to the modern researchers Dvārakā was situated in the sea to the west of Gujarāta. There is a small locality near the sea, still called Dvārakā, and the principal occupation of the people of this place still is cattle-rearing, and trading in milk. They claim to be the descendants of the family of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

DVARAPĀLAPURA. An ancient city of Bhārata. Nakula subjugated this city. (Mahābhārata, Śabha Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 11).

DVARĀVATI. See under Dvārākā.

DVAYĀKSHA. An ancient Kingdom in Bhārata. The King of this country brought gifts to the palace of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Mahābhārata, Śabha Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 17).

DVMĪDHA. A King of the Pūru dynasty. He was the brother of Ajāmīda and Puruṣīdha. (Āgni Purāṇa, Stanza 278).

DVMĪRUDHAN. A son of Hiranyakṣa. Śāmbara, Śākuni, Dvīmirudhā, Śākku and Ārya were the sons of Hiranyakṣa. (Āgni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

DVIITA. An ancient hermit. He was the son of Gaumātana. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 37, that by the curse of his brother he became a wolf and begot monkey, scorpion, etc.

DVIVIDA. A monkey. He was a warrior in the army of Śrī Rāma.

DYAU (DYU). One of the Aṣṭavasus (eight Vasus). (For particulars see under Aṣṭavasus).

DYU (DYAU). One of the Aṣṭa Vasus (eight Vasus). This Vasu has another name Āpa. (For details see under Aṣṭavasus).

DYUMĀN. A King of the dynasty of Bhārgava. (Bhāgar- vata, Skandha 9).

DYUMATSENA I. A King. He was the father of Satyavān. He ruled over the Śalva country. Śāibyā was his wife. By and by he lost his eye-sight. Then another King conquered his country. Dyumatseṇa who lost everything went to the forest with his wife Śāibyā and child, Satyavān. (For particulars of how Satyavān married Sāvitrī and how Dyumatseṇa regained his lost kingdom, see under Satyavān).

DYUMATSENA II. A King who fought with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Śabha Parva, Chapter 38). He used to attend the council of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Śabha Parva, Chapter 4).

DYUTAPARVA. A subsection of Śabha Parva, (Chapters 46 to 73), in the Mahābhārata.

DYUTI. A goddess who protected Arjuna. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 37, Stanza 38).

DYUTIMĀN I. A King of the Madra country. Vījaya the daughter of this King was the wife of Sahadeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 80).

DYUTIMĀN II. A King of the Śalva country. He gave his country to Ruci and attained heaven. (M.B, EKADĀŚAṬATIVA(S). Five Jñānendriyas, five Karṇendriyas and mind constitute the Ekadāśatattvas (eleven tattvas).

EKADĀŚASṬEJOGUNA(S). Sparśa, Sarīkhāya, Pariṇāma, Paṭhaktva, Sainyogya, Viśhāgā, Pariyatva, Aparatva, Vega, Rāpa and Dravatva. (Tarkadipikā) are the eleven tejogunas.

EKĀDĀŚI. The eleventh day after a new moon or full moon day. The vrata observed on this day is called the Ekādāśi vrata. King Amṛtiṣa observed very strictly and continuously the Ekādāśi Vrata to obtain the status of Indra. (See under Amṛtiṣa). (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata). This vrata would fetch food for the hungry and salvation for those who are in search of it. (Agni Purāṇa). The method of observing this vrata is detailed below:

Those who observe the Ekādāśi vrata should be on a regulated diet excluding meat and avoid sexual acts on the Daśamī day, the day preceding Ekādāśi. On both the Ekādāśi days in a month one should not take any food at all. The period which combines Ekādāśi with Dwādāśi (the twelfth day) is called Harivāsara because of the presence of Viṣṇu at that time. That is a good time for doing sacred yajñas. That day where there is only a small portion of Ekādāśi and the rest Dwādāśi is the best day for yajñas. Trayodaśi (the thirteenth day) is good for breaking the fast. The day which merges Dwādāśi into Trayodaśi is the best day for breaking the fast. Do not observe the Vrata on a day which combines Daśamī with Ekādāśi. Hell is the result if one does so.

Completely abstaining from food on the Ekādāśi day you should take food on the Dwādāśi day. As you take your food you should pray like this: "Bhūnkṣyecharṇī Puṇḍarīkākṣa saranaṁ me bhavācyuta". (Oh, Puṇḍarīkākṣa, I am going to break my fast. Oh, Bhagavan, let you be my heaven). If an Ekādāśi comes on a Puṇya—Puṣya—day in the bright half of the month that day should on any account be observed. That day would give the observer unlimited good result and that Ekādāśi is qualified as Pāpanāśini (destroyer of all evils). When Ekādāśi and Dwādāśi happen to combine on a Tiruṇaṇam (Śrāvāṇa) day the Ekādāśi is qualified as Viṣṇya. That day gives prosperity to devotees. It is also called Viṣṇya if an Ekādāśi comes in the month of Phalgun (March) on a Puṇya (Puṣya) day. The wise extol this day as one promising crores of good effects. On the Ekādāśi day you should do Viṣṇu Puja which is productive of universal happiness. He who does so will acquire children and wealth in this world and attain Viṣṇuloka on death. (Chapter 178, Agni Purāṇa)

EKĀDĀŚENENDRIYA(S). Śrota, Tvak, Cakṣus, Jihvā, Ghrāna, Vāk, Pāṇi, Pāda, Pāyu (anus) Upastha and mind are the eleven sense-organs.

EKĀHAMSATĪRTHA. An ancient holy place of north India. If a man bathes in a sacred pond he will get the benefit of giving away as charity a thousand cows.

(EKĀJĀṬA. A demoness of the castle of Rāvana. This demoness talked very enticingly to coax Sitā to surrender herself to Rāvana. (Sarga 23, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kānda).
EKAJATA. A warrior of Skandadeva. (Sloka 53, Chapter 45, Salya Parva).

EKAKSHA I. A demon born to Kasypaprajapati of his wife Danu. (Sloka 29, Chapter 65, Adi Parva, M.B.).

EKAKSHA II. A soldier of Skandadeva. (Sloka 58, Chapter 45, Salya Parva, M.B.).

EKAKSHARAKOSA. Each and every letter has got a separate meaning. The dictionary describing this meaning is known as Ekaksharikośa. (Chapter 348, Agni Purāṇa).

EKALAYA I. Son of Hiranyakashipu, a King of the foresters. He went to Droñacārya to learn archery. Droñacārya refused to accept him as a disciple because he was a Sudra. Undaunted he went to the forests, made a replica of the preceptor in clay and standing before it started practising archery. Soon he became a matchless archer.

Some time later the Pândavas went to the forests for hunting. One of the hunting dogs wandering saw Ekalavya and started barking. Ekalavya sent seven arrows to its mouth and kept it open. When the dog returned to Arjuna he was dumbfounded at the skill of the archer and when he came to know the archer was an unknown disciple of Droña his disappointment knew no bounds. Droña had once declared that Arjuna was the best and topmost of his disciples. Arjuna went and complained to Droñacārya. Droñacārya called Ekalavya to his side and asked him to give him as "Gurudakṣīṇa" (fee to the preceptor) his right-hand thumb. Without the least hesitation Ekalavya offered his thumb to the guru and from that day onwards his skill faded and he became inferior to Arjuna. (Chapter 132, Adi Parva). Ekalavya was killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Sloka 77, Chapter 48, Udyoga Parva, M.B.). A son of Ekalavya seized the sacrificial horse of Arjuna and was killed by Arjuna (Chapter 83, Aśvamedhika Parva, M.B.).

EKALAYA II. A king who was a rebirth of an asura, Krodhavaśa. He participated in the great war on the side of the Pândavas. (Chapter 4, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

EKANAŅGĀ. A daughter of Yaśodā and hence a sister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. It was because of her that Kṛṣṇa could slay Kaiśīra. (Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

EKAPADA. A country of ancient Bhārata. The King and the people of this country came to the Rājaśūya of Yudhiṣṭhīra but were prevented from entering inside because of the uncontrollable crowd inside. (Sloka 17, Chapter 51, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

EKAPARNA. Sister of Durgā. Ekaparna, Ekapātalā and Aparna were the three daughters of Himavān born of his wife Menā. Ekapārnā ate only one leaf and Ekapātalā ate a bunch of leaves. Aparna did not eat even a leaf. Ekapārnā was married to a sage called Devala and Ekapātalā to a sage called Jaigīśavaya. (Chapter 18, Hari Vaṁśa). (See under Himavān).

EKAPATALA. See under Ekaparna.

EKAPATI. I. See under Ekacakra.

EKAPATI II. A synonym of Bhagavān Viṣṇu. (Sloka 95, Chapter 149, Anuśasana Parva, M.B.).

EKAPINGA (EKAPINGALA). Another name of Vaiśravaṇa. Once Vaiśravaṇa looked jealously at Pārvati seated on the left side of Paramēśvara and instantly his one eye burst. When Pārvatī regained her peace of mind that one eye of Vaiśravaṇa was changed into pinigala colour. (See under Kubera).

EKRATATIRTHA. A sacred place. If one stays at this place righteously for one day one would attain Brahma-loka. (Sloka 182, Chapter 83, Vana Parva, M.B.).

EKRŚNGA. One of the Saptapitṛs. Vairāja, Aniṣṭvātta, Gārhapati, Somapāta, Ekaśṛṅga, Caturveda and Kāla are the seven pitṛs. All these seven stayed in Brahma-sabhā worshipping him. (Slokas 47 and 48, Chapter 11, Śabhā Parva).

EKŚRTA. See under Vararuci.

EKATA.

1) General information. An ancient sage. He was the son of the Maharsi Gautama. He had two brothers, Dvīta and Triṭa.

2) How Ekata became a wolf by a curse. There is a story of how Ekata and Dvīta duped Triṭa in the Mahābhārata. When Gautama died Triṭa became the chief of the three. Dvīta and Ekata did not like this. Once all the three were passing by a forest with a herd of cows for a yāga. Triṭa was walking ahead and the other two were following him with the cows. At a strategic point on the way the brothers carried away the cows by a separate route without the knowledge of Triṭa. When Triṭa came to know of the loss he was greatly distressed. On reaching the shores of the river Sarasvatī, he was frightened by a wolf and running to escape from the animal fell into a dilapidated well. He performed a yāga from where he lay. Assuming a creeper inside the well to be Somalatā, Triṭa recited the Rks and the devas responded to his prayer. Devas like Bhṛhaspati graciously appeared before him and asked him to demand a boon from them. Triṭa replied that his desire was to worship the gods standing on the waves of the river Sarasvatī. Accordingly the river was made to flow that way and standing on the waves Triṭa worshipped the gods. After that he went home and cursed his brothers and made Ekata and Dvīta into wolves.

3) Other details.

i) Ekata was a sage much banked on by the people of western Bhārata. (Sloka 31, Chapter 208, Śantī Parva).

ii) Ekata attended a yajña conducted by Uparicaravasu (Chapter 336, Śantī Parva).

iii) Ekata accompanied by Dvīta and Triṭa once went to Śvetadvīpa to visit Nārāyaṇa. (Sloka 12, Chapter 39, Śantī Parva).

iv) Ekata and his two brothers were among the sages who visited Bhiṣma while he was lying on his bed of arrows. (Sloka 7, Chapter 26, Anuśasana Parva, M.B.).

v) All these three sages lived on the west coast as Rīviks of Varuṇa. (Chapter 15, Anuśasana Parva, M.B.).

vi) Śukta 150 in Maṇḍalī I of Rgveda contains the eulogistic songs of Triṭa, one among the trio. (See under Triṭa).

EKAVACA. A follower of Skandadeva. (Sloka 24, Chapter 46, Salya Parva).

EKAVALI. Wife of Ekaśrīra, founder of the Hehaya dynasty. (For details see under Ekaśrīra).
EKAVIRA \(^1\) (HEHAYA). A founder of the Hehaya line of kings.

2) Birth of Ekavira. Once there was a King called Revanta who was an intimate friend of Indra. One day riding on Uccaiḥ-ravas, Indra's horse, he went to Vaikuṇṭha. Fascinated by the arresting beauty of Revanta, Mahālakṣmi sat gaping for a while and did not hear what Viśu talked to her. Viśu was offended and lost his temper. Lakṣmi was looking with interest alternatively at Revanta and the horse when Viśu cursed her to be born as a mare on earth. Horrified, shedding tears, Lakṣmi begged for relief. Viśu decreed that she would return to Vaikuṇṭha after giving birth to a son who would be equal in glory to Viśu himself. Mahālakṣmi came to Earth taking the shape of a mare and lived in a forest situated at a point where the rivers Kālindī and Tamasā meet and where once Sūryapati stayed and did penance. Meditating on Śiva she lived there for a thousand divine years and then one day Śiva and Pārvatī appeared before her and asked her what she wanted. She then said "Oh, Bhagavan, Mahā-visū pu[d] and me made me into a mare. He has decreed that I would go back after bringing forth a son as glorious as Viśu. From whom am I to bear a son like this?" Śiva promised to find a solution and going to Vaikuṇṭha sent Viśu to earth in the form of a horse. Viśu came to Lakṣmi and they lived together for some time and soon a son was born to Lakṣmi. Leaving the child in the forest both of them went back to Vaikuṇṭha. It is this child who later on became the famous King, Ekavira. It was because he was born of a horse that he got the names, Hehaya and Haihaya. (Skandha 6, Devi Bhāgavata).

3) How Ekavira came to the palace. It was at this time that Satājit, son of the grandson of Yayāti was doing penance to obtain a son. He was also doing penance in the forest situated at a point where the rivers Kālindī and Tamasā meet. One night a Vidyādhara named Campaka came with a Vidyādhāri named Madālasā and seeing the infant lying helpless in the forest took it to Devaloka. Indra recognised it as the child born to Viśu and Lakṣmi on earth while they were living as horse and mare and so the Vidyādhara put it back on earth in the same place as before. Immediately Lakṣmi-Nārāyaṇa appeared before Satājit doing penance there and asked him to take care of a child lying helpless in another side of the forest disappeared. Immensely pleased at this Satājit took the child to his palace and brought him forth as his own son giving the child the name Ekavira. When the boy became a prince, Satājit crowned Ekavira King and went to the forest with his queen and after doing penance there for sometime attained Viṣṇuloka. (Skandha 6, Devi Bhāgavata).

4) Ekavira marries Ekavati. Once Prince Ekavira accompanied by the son of the minister went for a pleasure trip to the banks of the river Gāngā. It was spring and the prince wandering about enjoying the sight of a flowery forest was soon arrested by the sight of a sweet smelling lotus with a hundred petals blooming in the river. By the side of the lotus was standing a beautiful damsel weeping. The prince went to her and asked her the reason for her weeping. After great persuasion she replied thus: "Oh, Prince, there is a country not far from yours which is now being ruled over by a very righteous King called Rāibhyā. His queen is called Rukmarchhā. They had no children for a very long time and so Rāibhyā conducted a Putrakāmesī yāga. When ghee was poured profusely into the sacrificial fire the flames rose up to great heights and from inside the flames came out a lovely maiden. The King named her Ekāvalī and bought her forth as his daughter. I am Yaśovati the daughter of the minister there. We were of the same age and so I was asked to live with her as her companion. She was very fond of lotuses and the King constructed big ponds with lotuses in them for her recreation. Yet she used to go to other ponds also in search of lotuses.

One day we came to this side of the river Gāngā to play. Then a demon of name Kālaketu came and kidnap[ped] her. I followed her. She never surrendered to the enticements and persuasions of Kālaketu. Her father wanted her to be married to Ekavira, King of Hehaya. Kālaketu sent her to prison. Without knowing what to do next I am standing here weeping. Hearing this Ekavira went to Pāṭala and defeating Kālaketu released Ekavali and brought both Ekavali and Yaśovati to the palace of Rāibhyā. Pleased at this Rāibhyā gave his daughter in marriage to Ekavira. Kārtaṇīrjuna was born in the family of Ekavira. (Skandha 6, Devi Bhāgavata).

ELĀPUTRA. A serpent born to Kaśyapa of his wife Kadru. This serpent was very intelligent. Once there arose a dispute between Vinatā and Kadru over the colour of the tail of the horse of Indra, Uccaiḥ-ravas. Kadru argued that there were black hairs in the tail while Vinatā held there were none. Really there were no black hairs and Kadru to win the argument wanted her sons to go and hang on the hairs to create a black colour. The serpents like Vāsuki and others refused to do so and Kadru then cursed them saying that they would all be burnt to death at the Sarpasatara of Janamejaya. To take measures to get free from this curse a meeting of the serpents under the leadership of Seṣa and Vāsuki was held and in that assembly Elāputra made a stirring speech. (Chapter 38, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ELI AND PŪCCA. (Eli=rat, Pūcca=Cat).

The story of the cat and the rat described by the poet Kuṭjñan Nāmbār is from Kathāsaritsāgara. The story in original is the following.

Once there lived on a big banyan tree near the city of Vīdīśa a mongoose, an owl, a cat and a rat. The mongoose and the rat lived in two separate hollows at the foot of the tree, the cat in a cavity in the centre of the tree and the owl on the branches at the top. Of these the rat could be eaten by all the other three and the cat could kill all the rest. The rat and the mongoose afraid of of the cat did stir out only during night time and the cat moved about day and night afraid of none wishing to catch hold of the rat and eat it. Their common place of activity was a rice-field nearby.

Once a forester laid a net to catch the cat and the cat fell into the trap and lay there hanging inside the net. The rat coming that way saw the plight of the cat and jumped with joy. But soon the owl and the mongoose came to the spot and seeing their enemy, the cat, imprisoned rushed to catch hold of the rat. The rat then did a very clever thing. It went and tore open the net imprisoning the cat and when the cat jumped out of the net the owl and the mongoose ran away and disappeared. The rat went to its hole. This is a story to demonstrate the fact that with a change in the situation an enemy may turn out to be a friend. (Tarañga 7, Madanamañçukālaññāka, Kathāsāritaññāga).

ELLU. An oil seed. (Sesamum). Ellu originated from the body of Kaśyapa. Because Ellu is born of the body of Kaśyapa, King of Rsis, it is considered as divine to offer Ellu to anybody. (Śloka 10, Chapter 66, Anuśā- sana Parva).

ELLU. This word in Malayālam means ‘Seven’. (1) The seven qualities which would enhance prosperity are the following: Dhairyā (courage), Śama (forbearance), Dama (control of the senses), Sucita (cleanliness), Dayā (compassion), Mṛudvāk (geniality of speech) and Ahiṁsā (not giving injury to your friends).

(2) The seven divisions of Kerala are Venuṭ, Pūlnāṭ, Karkanāṭ, Gitaññāṭ, Kuṭanāṭ and Mahāmaṇāṭ.

(3) The seven Gitaññālysas are Daylight Candras, Woman past the prime of life, a pond without lotuses, a lovely person without learning, a lord greedy of wealth, a virtuous but poor man and a cruel royal attendant.

(23) Seven notes: Sādja, Rṣabhha, Gāndhāra, Madhyama, Pańcama, Dhaivata and Nīśāda.

ERAKA. A serpent born in the family of the Kauravas. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 16, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

ETAṢA. A sage who is greatly extolled in the Rgveda. The son of King Svaṣa fought with this sage and it was Indra who saved Etaṣa then. (Sūkta 62, Anuśāsana 1, Mañḍala 1, Rgveda).

ETAṢA. One of the horses of the Sun. (Sūkta 122, Anuśāsana 18, Mañḍala 1, Rgveda).

There are no words beginning with F. The letter corresponding to Y in Indian languages is Ph (ph). So all words beginning with this sound come under the letter P.

G

(4) The letter G means both Gandharva and Vinayaka (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

GABHAŚTIMĀN. An island. Once the valiant Sahasra- bāhu conquered and subjugated it. (M. B. Sahā Parva, Chapter 38).

GADĀ. A weapon. An asura called Gada was born to Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Diti. Viṣṇu killed Gada, and Viśvakarman made a weapon with his bone. Since the weapon was made from Gada’s bone it came to be known as Gāḍā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 114).

GADĀ I. A brother (Yādava) of Balabhadrārāma. 1) General. Vasudeva had, besides Devakī, seven wives called Rohiṇī, Bhadrā, Mālīni, Madārā, Illā, Rocanā and Pauravī, and out of the seven Rohiṇī had six sons called Balabhadrārāma, Gada, Sārāṇa, Durdāna, Vikala and Kṛta. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

2) Other details.

(1) Gada was present at the svayamvara of Draupadī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 32).

(2) On the marriage of Arjuna with Subhadrā, it was Gada who brought the dowry of Subhadrā from Dwārakā to Indraprastha. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 32).

(3) When Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to Dwārakā Gada received him with embraces. (M. B. Sahā Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 35).

(4) Gada also was present on the occasion when the Pāṇḍavas first stepped into the beautiful palace built for them by Maya at Indraprastha. (M. B. Sahā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 39).

(5) Along with the other Yādavas Gada too was present at the rājasūya yajña of Yudhīṣṭhīra. (M. B. Sahā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 16).
GADA II

(6) Gada held a prominent position among the Yādavas deputed to guard Dwārakā against the onslaught of King Śālva. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 9).

(7) Gada also accompanied Śrī Kṛṣṇa to the Aśva- medha yājña performed by Yudhiṣṭhīra. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 9).

(8) Śrī Kṛṣṇa felt uncontrollably angry when Gada was attacked during the mutual fighting with iron rods by the Yādavas which climaxed in their total annihilation. (Mausula Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 45).

GADA II. See Gada.

GADĀDHARA. A synonym of Mahāvīśu. There is a place called Gāyā to the north of Mount Kālaṇḍī, to the south of Himālayas, to the east of Kuśasthali and to the west of Vasupura. Once a king called Gāya conducted at Gāyā an Aśvamedha, a Nara- medha (yajña at which man is offered as sacrifice) and a Mahāmedha and Mahāvīṣṇu acted as gate-keeper of Gāya. As Vīṣṇu stood guard there holding the gadā (club) in his hands he came to be known as Gadādhara also thenceforth. (Vāmanā Purāṇa, Chapter 76).

GADĀPARVA. A sub-parva of Śalya Parva in Mahābhārata. (See Mahābhārata).

GADĀVASĀNA. A particular centre in Madhurāpuri. The name owes its origin to the following reason. When Kṛṣṇa killed Kaṁsa, his father-in-law Jarāsandha got so angry that he hurled his gadā (club) ninety-nine times at Madhurāpuri from his capital, Gīrīvraja. The spot where the gadā finally fell came to be called Gadāvasāna in course of time. (M. B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 18, Verses 22-25).

GĀDHĪ I. Father of Viśvāmitra.

2) Birth. Kuṣa had by his wife Vaidarbhi four sons called Kuśāmba, Kuśānābha, Asūtararajas and Vasu. Of the four sons Kuśāmba built a city called Kuśāmbi, Kuśanābha built the city of Mahodayapura, Asūtararajas the city of Dharmāraṇya and Vasu the city of Gīrīvraja, and they administered their respective cities. Kuśānābha had hundreds daughters by his wife Gṛḥtācī, an Apsarā woman. He felt very sad that he had no sons. At last he performed the Putrakāmeṣṭi yajña, and Gādhī was born to him.

3) Gādhī's children. A son named Viśvāmitra and a daughter called Satyavatī were born to Gādhī. Satyavatī married to sage Ṛṣi Ka. After the wedding of his daughter Gādhī crowned Viśvāmitra as the king and left for the forest for tapas. During his stay in the forest Gādhī was put up in the aśrama of Ṛṣi Ka for a long time and he also went on many pilgrimages. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 49). (See also Satyavatī and Viśvāmitra).

4) Death. Gādhī entered mahāsāmādhi and went to heaven. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 16).

GĀDHĪ II. A brahmin who showed Viṣṇu's power of māyā. (See under Māyā).

GAGANAMŪRDHĀ. A reputed asura, son of Kaśyapa-test Vīśvāmitra came to him disguised as Vasishtha. Vīśvāmitra came out with rice to receive the guest but by that time the guest had disappeared. But Vīśvāmitra remained there with the rice for hundred years till Dharmadeva returned. All these years Gālava looked after Vīśvāmitra’s comforts. Vīśvāmitra was immensely pleased with Gālava and allowed him to go away free without any guruḍakṣiṇā when his education was over. Gālava wanted to give some dakṣiṇā but Vīśvāmitra refused to accept it. Gālava insisted on giving and then Vīśvāmitra asked him to give whatever he liked but Gālava wanted the Dakṣiṇā to be named. Disguised with this stubbornness Vīśvāmitra said “Go and get the eight hundred horses each with one of its ears black.” Gālava was shocked to hear the demand and greatly worried roamed about in search of horses of the type specified. Garuda taking pity on his sad plight took him to the palace of Yayāti. Hearing the story of Gālava Yayāti sent his daughter Mādhavi with Gālava saying that if she was given in marriage to any king he would give him the eight hundred horses of the type he required.

Gālava took Mādhavi to Haryāśva, a King of the Ikṣvāku line of Kings. Haryāśva was doing penance at that time to obtain a child. Gālava said that Haryāśva would get a son of Mādhavi and he should, therefore, accept Mādhavi and give him in return eight hundred horses each with one ear black. Haryāśva was amenable to the terms but the only difficulty was that he had only two hundred horses of the type specified. Finding this difficulty Mādhavi said “Oh, Gālava please do not worry on that account. I have a boon from a brahmāvādi sage that I would remain a maiden even after delivery. So give me in marriage to this King and get two hundred horses. After giving birth to a son to this King take me to another King and get two hundred horses from him and then to another and thus by giving me to four Kings you can get the eight hundred horses you require.”

Gālava liked this plan and so when Mādhavi gave birth to a son he took her to Divodāsa, Rājā of Kāśi. When a son was born to him Gālava took her to Uṣīnara, King of Bāhja. Gālava thus got six hundred horses but there was nobody else to give him the remaining two hundred. When Gālava was contemplating as to what he should do next Garuḍa came to his rescue. He advised Gālava to give six hundred horses and Mādhavi in lieu of the remaining two hundred horses to Vīśvāmitra. Gālava gave Vīśvāmitra the horses and Mādhavi and pleased with the guruḍakṣiṇā Vīśvāmitra blessed Gālava. Vīśvāmitra got a son named Āṣṭaka of Madhavi. (See under Āṣṭaka).

4) Gālava and Citrasena. Gālava was once having his evening prayers in the river when the spittings from the mouth of Citrasena who was travelling by air above fell on the pūṣa materials of Gālava. Gālava went and complained to Śrī Kṛṣṇa of this and Kṛṣṇa in haste promised to bring before Gālava the head of Citrasena before the sun set. Nārada who heard this went and informed Citrasena of Kṛṣṇa’s vow. Citrasena was frightened to death. But Nārada asked him not to lose hope and advised Śāndhyā and Vāli, wives of Citrasena, to approach Subhadrā, sister of Kṛṣṇa, for protection. Both of them went to Subhadrā and made a grand fire-pit in front of her palace. Citrasena decided to end his life by jumping into the fire and as he was circling the pit his wives wept loudly. Since her husband Arjuna was away from the palace Subhadrā herself ran to the place from where she heard the cries. When they saw Subhadrā they begged for ‘Mangalya-bliṅka’ (a boon to live with one’s husband). Subhadrā agreed to give them that. Then she heard their story in full and only then did she realise that she had undertaken to do the impossible. Yet, to help Subhadrā, Arjuna agreed to protect Citrasena. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa attacked Citrasena Arjuna defended. The fight then ensued between Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa. Both had very powerful and divine weapons and the world stood on the verge of a collapse by their fight. Then Subhadrā did a brave thing. She stood between the two and requested for a cease-fire. Then Śrī Kṛṣṇa asked Citrasena to bow down and touch the feet of Gālava. Gālava pardoned him. (Padma Purāṇa).

5) Tapodāna. Gālava once gave Yayāti one eighth portion of the goodness accrued to him by his long penance. (See Yayāti for details).

6) Gālava gets a horse. Pāṭalaketu, a demon, used to give trouble to Gālava daily while he used to do penance. Once this demon sent a deep hot breath to the sky and then a horse fell from the sky. Soon an unknown voice from air said, “This is a very strong horse and it would travel many a yojana in an hour.” Gālava took that horse and gave it to Rādhavaja. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 59).

7) Other details regarding Gālava. (i) He was an intimate friend of King Pratipā. (Sloka 13, Chapter 20, Harivānśa).

(ii) He was a shining member of the court of Yudhishṭhira. (Sloka 15, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).

(iii) He shone in the court of Indra. (Sloka 10, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva).

(iv) He conducted a discussion with Nārada on the true nature of real prosperity. (Sloka 5, Chapter 287, Śrī Parva).

(v) On another occasion he spoke to Dharmaputra on the glory of the universe. (Sloka 52, Chapter 18, Anuśāsana Parva).

(vi) He swore before God to prove his innocence in the lotus-theft involving Agasya. (Sloka 37, Chapter 94, Anuśāsana Parva).

(vii) Śrīgāva who married Vyṛdhakanyā was a son of Gālava. (Śloka 14, Chapter 52, Śalya Parva). For details see under Viśvakarmā.

GAM. Music. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

GAṆĀ. A female attendant of Skanda. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 3).

GAṈAM. An army division. Three Gulmas form one Gañam. (See Akṣauhiṇī).

GAṈAPATI.

1) Genealogy. A son of Śiva with face like that of an elephant. As Śiva has appointed this son as chief of the gaṇas (attendants) he is called Gañapatī.

2) His birth. While Śiva and Pārvatī assumed the form of monkeys and enjoyed themselves in the forest Pārvatī got pregnant, and Śiva took the semen from the womb and gave it to Vāyu (wind God.) Vāyu deposited it in the womb of Anjana, who delivered a son named Hamiman. Śiva assumed the form of an elephant (tusker) and Pārvatī that of a she-elephant. Pārvatī delivered a son in the form of an elephant. That son was named Gaṇapati. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

3) His tusk broken. Once Parāśurāma arrived at Kailāsa to meet Śiva. At that time Śiva was asleep. So Gaṇapati did not allow him to get in. A duel broke out between them. In that duel one of Gaṇapati’s tusks was broken. (Padma Pūrṇaṇa).

4) Gaṇapati turned into crow. An exceptionally hot summer set in once in South India. The whole land became parched. So Agastya went to Śiva and requested for some holy water, and the Lord put Kāverī who was worshipping him just then, in the Kāṃḍalū (something like a teapot which sannyāsins carry with them) of Agastya and sent him back. Indra, who did not relish this action of Śiva, asked Gaṇapati to somehow or other upset Agastya’s Kāṃḍalū of holy water, and Gaṇapati, in the guise of a crow went and sat on the brink of the Kāṃḍalū and thus upset it. Agastya and the crow quarrelled with each other. Then did the crow assume its original form as Gaṇapati and blessed Agastya. Moreover, Gaṇapati filled Agastya’s Kāṃḍalū with holy water, which the latter distributed among devotees in South India, and that is the present Kāverī river.

5) Other stories about Gaṇapati’s head. The Pūrṇaṇas contain two different stories as to how Gaṇapati happened to have the elephant’s head. Once Pārvatī pointed out to Gaṇapati the planet Saturn, and his head got burnt down due to the ocular power of Saturn, and according to one story Gaṇapati’s head thus lost was replaced with that of an elephant. The other story is more interesting. When once Śiva tried to enter the room where Pārvatī had gone to take her bath clad in a single clothing Gaṇapati prevented Śiva from doing so. Śiva, enraged at the obstruction made by Gaṇapati, cut off his head, and when his anger was cooled down he replaced Gaṇapati’s lost head with that of an elephant. (Padma Pūrṇaṇa).

6) Wedding of Gaṇapati. Gaṇapati has two wives called Siddhi and Buddhi.

When Gaṇapati and Subrahmaṇya attained the age of marriage they were in a hurry to get married. Śiva conducted a test. Śiva and Pārvatī told them that he who returned first after going round the world would be married first. Accordingly Subrahmaṇya mounted his vehicle (peacock) and set out for a tour round the world. Gaṇapati did nothing of the sort. But after a little time he went round his parents, viz., Śiva and Pārvatī. Asked for an explanation about his action Gaṇapati replied that since the whole universe existed in Śiva and Pārvatī, going around them tantamounted to touring round the world. Please at this reply his parents got Gaṇapati married first.

7) Vighnānusāraṇum. (Power to remove all obstacles). Gaṇapati is called Vighnānusāraṇum because he is the god who removes all obstacles from the paths of men or creates them. Gaṇapati has the power to get anything done without any obstructions as also the power to put obstacles in the path of anything being got done. Therefore, the custom came into vogue of worshipping Gaṇapati at the very commencement of any action for its completion without any hitch or hindrance. Actions begun with such worship would be duly completed, Indians believe. In support of that belief the following story from the 6th tarāṅga of Lāvāṇakaśālaṇbhamakam, Kathāsārītāgama may be quoted.

The Devas decided to appoint Subrahmaṇya as chief of the army to kill Tārakāsura. When Indra took up the pot of water purified by mantras to anoint Subrahmaṇya’s head with it, his hands became numbed, and he stood aghast. Then Śiva said that any action begun without Gaṇapati’s puja would meet with such obstacles. At once Indra worshipped Gaṇapati and his hands recovered from the paralysed condition. And, Subrahmaṇya was duly anointed with the holy water.

8) Gaṇapati wrote the Mahābhārata. After the death of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas sage Vyāsa entered again into meditation. But, the whole story of the Bhārata reflected in the mirror of his mind. He wanted to translate the story into a great poem and requested Brahmā to suggest a suitable person to write the story on his dictation, and Brahmā suggested Gaṇapati’s name. Then Vyāsa thought about Gaṇapati and he appeared before the sage. But, Gaṇapati did not appreciate the idea of serving as Vyāsa’s scribe. So he stipulated a condition that he would write down the poem provided Vyāsa dictated it in such a manner that he had not to lay down his pen even once before the epic was completed. To this Vyāsa stipulated the counter condition that when he dictated without the least interruption or pause Gaṇapati should not write down the matter without understanding the meaning of it. And, under such conditions the composition of the Mahābhārata was completed within three years. (Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Verses 74-80).

9) Gaṇapati pūja. Gaṇapati occupies the most prominent place among the Devas connected with Śiva. In South India, Gaṇapati pūja came into vogue in the 6th century A.D. and idols of Gaṇapati now extant might have been made at that period. In South India, temples dedicated to Gaṇapati are in no way less in number than those to Subrahmaṇya. The idol of Gaṇapati is installed at the gateways of villages and forts, under the fig tree, at the entrance of temples and at the southwestern corner of Śiva temples. Two types of idols are important: the Itaripīrī (the proboscis turned to the left side) and the Valariṇī (the proboscis turned to the right side). It is stated that the enormously big belly of Gaṇapati contains in it the whole universe.

10) Synonyms of Gaṇapati.

Viṃśayako vighnārājī dvaīmatāra-gaṇādhāpiṇī ayepkakakanto heramba laṃbodara-gajānanaḥ. (Amarakāṇa).
(Viṃśayaka, Vighnārājī, Dvāimātāra, Gaṇādhīpaṇī, Ekaantā, Heramba, Lambodara, Gajānana).

GANĀDĀ. A dāsī who served the saptarṣis. (Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 93).

GANĀDAMI. A particular locality on the banks of river Gaṇḍaki. Bhimasena once conquered this place. (Sabbhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 15).

GANĀDAKANDU. A Yākṣa of the assembly of Kubera. (ML, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10).

GANĀDAMI (GANĀDAK). A river in southern India which falls into the Gaṅgā.

2) Origin. There arose an argument between the Devas and the asuras about the Amṛtam (nectar) got from the churning of Kṣīrābddhi (the milk ocean) and Mahāviṣṇu appeared in the form of Mohini and enticed the asuras away from the subject and gave the nectar to the Devas. Attracted by the great beauty of Mohini, Śiva made love to her, and the sweet produced at the time of their embrace flowed as river Gandakī through the earth. (Skandha Purāṇa, Āsura Khaṇḍa).

3) It became a holy river. While the worms on the banks of Gandakī were once collecting soil they fell into the river, and all at once they attained salvation, the reason being that the water in the river had been formed by the sweet of Viṣṇu and Śiva. And, from that day onwards people began worshipping Gandakī as a holy river. (Skandha Purāṇa, Āsura Khaṇḍa).

4) Other information.

(i) He who drinks the water of the river is freed from sins. (Ādi Purāṇa, Chapter 169, Verse 20).

(ii) The river is also known as Nārāyaṇa, Śaśagrām, Hiraṇyavatī and Hiraṇyavatī. (Bhīṣma Purāṇa, Chapter 9, Verse 25).

(iii) Śrī Kṛṣṇa Arjuna and Bhimasena once on their way from Indraprastha to Girivṛaja crossed this river. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 27).

(iv) The water in Gandakī is a mixture of the waters of all holy rivers. Therefore, a bath in Gandakī is of equal value as an Aśvamedha yajña and he who bathes in it will attain Sūryaloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 113).

(v) Gandakī is one of the rivers which were responsible for the origin of Agni (fire). (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 113).

GANDHAKĀLĪ. Another name of Satyavatī. (Ādi Purāṇa, Chapter 95, Verse 48).

GANDHAMĀDANA I. A monkey, who had been helpful to Śrī Rāma, was the son of Kubera. (Vālmikī Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Khaṇḍa, Canto 17, Verse 11). This monkey usually stayed on Mount Gandhamādana. During the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war he led a contingent of monkeys. (Vana Parva, Chapter 283, Verse 5).

GANDHAMĀDANA II. A Rākṣasa King, who stays in Kubera's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10).

GANDHAMĀDANA(M). A mountain famed in the Purāṇas and lying to the east of the Himalayas. (Bhāgavata, Pañcama Skandha). The purānic importance of the mountain may be summarised as follows:

1) Kaśyapaprajāpati did tapas at this mountain. (Ādi Purāṇa, Chapter 30, Verse 10).
2) Ananta (Ādiśeṣa) had once done tapas here. (Ādi Purāṇa, Chapter 36, Verse 3).
3) Once Pāṇḍu went to the Śataśīrga mountain along with his wives Kunṭi and Mādri for doing tapas, and on that occasion they visited Gandhamādana also. (Ādi Purāṇa, Chapter 118, Verse 48).
4) This mountain assumes the form of a divine person. attends Kubera's assembly and worships him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 3).
5) Śrī Kṛṣṇa in the company of Nārāyaṇaṛṣi spent 10,000 years on this mountain as an anchorite. (Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 11).
6) Arjuna on his way to Mount Kailāsa to do tapas crossed the Gandhamādana mountain. (Vana Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 41).
7) Only those who possess power got by tapas will be able to climb this mountain. (Vana Parva, Chapter 140, Verse 22).
8) There is the Badari tree and under it there is an āśrama of Naraṇārayana on the heights of this mountain, and Yakṣas stay there always. (Vana Parva, Chapter 141, Verse 22).
9) Once the Pāṇḍavas, with the aid of Gḥaṭotkaceta mounted this mountain. (Vana Parva, Chapter 145).
10) It was here, at this mountain that Bhima killed Maṇimāṇa, a friend of Kubera. (Vana Purva, Chapter 160, Verse 76).
11) Kubera, who was driven out of Laṅkā stayed at this mountain during the initial periods. (Vana Parva, Chapter 275, Verse 33).

GANDHĀRA. A stretch of land of ancient Bārāṭa. It is believed that this land stretched from the shores of river Sindhu to Kābūl. Subala was a mighty ruler of this country. His daughter Gandhari was the wife of Dhrtaṛṣṭra. (Sloka 11, Chapter 111, Ādi Purāṇa). Agni Purāṇa points out a relationship between the Gandhāras and the Drāviḍas. Descending in order from Viṣṇu were Candra—Budha—Purūravas—Āyus—Nahuṣa—Yaḍyā—Turvasu. In order from Turvasu were Varga—Gobhānu—Traiśāṇi—Karundhama—Marutta—Duṣyaṇa—Varūtha—Gandhāra—Gandhāra. From Gandhāra arose the five different provincialists: Gandhāras, Keralas, Colas, Pāṇḍyas and Kolas. (Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa).

GANDHĀRI. Wife of Dhrtaṛṣṭra.

1) Birth. There was a King called Subala in the family of Turvasu, brother of Yadu. (For genealogy see under Subala). Subala became the King of the land of Gandhāra. This land extended from the river Sindhu to Kābūl. Gandhari was the daughter of Subala. (Chapter 111, Ādi Purāṇa).

2) Marriage. Gandhāri became a devotee of Śiva even from her childhood. Śiva became pleased with her and blessed her saying that she would bear a hundred sons. Bhīma came to know of this and he planned to get her married to Dhrtaṛṣṭra. One day he sent a messenger to Subala making a proposal. Subala knew that Dhrtaṛṣṭra was born blind but considering his lineage and the powerful alliance it would make, consented to the proposal of Bhīma. Sakuni, brother of Gandhāri, then by the order of his father took Gandhāri to Hastināpura and Dhrtaṛṣṭra accepted her as his wife. Gandhāri obeying her father's instructions without a demur accepted her blind husband with such devotion that she made herself blind by tightly covering her eyes with a silk shawl. (Chapter 110, Ādi Purāṇa).

3) Birth of Sons. Once Vīśa came to her exhausted with hunger and thirst. Gandhāri appeased his hunger and thirst with tasty things to eat and drink. Vīśa was immensely pleased and he also blessed her and said she would get a hundred sons. Very soon she became pregnant. But even after two years she did not deliver, while Kunṭi, wife of Pāṇḍu, gave birth to a son. Grief-stricken, she hit hard on her womb secretly and then a great mass of flesh came out. Then Vīśa appeared before her and advised her to cut the lump of flesh into a hundred pieces and deposit one each in a jar of ghee. Vīśa himself cut it into pieces. Gandhāri expressed a desire to have a girl also. Vīśa cut it into hundred and one pieces and put them in hundred and one jars of ghee. In due time the jars broke and a hundred sons and a daughter came out of the jars. The daughter was named Duśālā. For their name see ‘Kauravas’. Duḥtaraśtra got another son named Yuyutṣu. (Chapters 115 and 116, Ādi Parva).

4) Gāndhārī faints. When Sañjaya reported about the death of Karna at the battle both Duḥtaraśtra and Gāndhārī fainted. (Sloka 55, Chapter 96, Karna Parva).

5) Gāndhārī starts to curse the Pāṇḍavas. When the battle was over the sons of Gāndhārī and their followers were killed. Duḥtaraśtra suggested that the Pāṇḍavas should visit Gāndhārī and pay homage to her. The Pāṇḍavas, therefore, went and stood before Gāndhārī very respectfully. Vengeance boiled in her heart and her body shivered. Gāndhārī was about to curse the Pāṇḍavas when Vyāsa, intervened saying “Gāndhārī! Don’t you remember you said that victory would lie on the side of the righteous in this war? Your words are not wasted. The Pāṇḍavas won the battle because right was on their side. So why should you get agitated?” Gāndhārī became calm on hearing these words and she admitted that the end of the Kuru dynasty came because of the mistakes of Duryodhana, Śakuni, Karna and Duśālā. She, thereafter, treated the Pāṇḍavas as her own sons. (Chapter 14, Śrī Parva, M.B.).

6) Dharmaputra’s foot-nails become blue. Following the instructions of Duḥtaraśtra, the Pāṇḍavas, approached and bowed before Gāndhārī. She covered her face with a cloth and wept, tears rolling down her cheeks. When Dharmaputra bent to touch her feet the latter saw through the veil on her face the foot-nails of Dharmaputra. A few drops of the laehrimal water fell on the foot-nails of Dharmaputra making them turn blue instantly. (Chapter 15, Śrī Parva).

7) Gāndhārī curses Kṛṣṇa. At the end of the battle the aggrieved Gāndhārī went to Kurukṣetra together with Kṛṣṇa and other relatives. Seeing mighty Kings on the Kurava side lying dead like huge trees lying truncated Gāndhārī burst into tears. She knew that Śri Kṛṣṇa was at the root of all this. Embittered she looked at Kṛṣṇa and cursed him. “Ho, Kṛṣṇa, thirty-six years from this day you will lose your sons, ministers, friends and relatives. You will become a lone walker in the forests and be killed by trickery.”

It was because of this curse that the Yādava tribe perished and Kṛṣṇa was struck by the arrow of a hunter which made him end his life on earth.

8) The end of Gāndhārī. After the great Kurukṣetra battle heart-broken Duḥtaraśtra and Gāndhārī accompanied by Kunti, Vidura and Sañjaya went to the forests to spend the rest of their life there. Many people and the Pāṇḍavas accompanied them up to the river Gaṅgā and there near the āśrama of Satatūrya Duḥtaraśtra made a hut and lived with Gāndhārī and Kunti. The Pāṇḍavas felt the separation of their relatives unbearable and lived in grief. After six years one day Dharmaputra saw his mother, Kunti, in a dream. He told his brothers about this and they all felt a desire to go to the forest and see their mother. The next day they reached the shores of Gaṅgā. Vyāsa also joined them. Gāndhārī and Kunti expressed a desire to Vyāsa that they would like to see the dead sons and relatives once again. Vyāsa then asked them to go and take a dip in the river. When they rose up after a dip they saw standing on the shores of the river the great warriors Karna and Duryodhana and others. By the yogic power of Vyāsa even the blind Duḥtaraśtra could get the vision. Very soon the vision faded and the Pāṇḍavas returned to Hastināpura.

Two days after, fire broke out in the forest where Duḥtaraśtra was staying. Duḥtaraśtra, Kunti and Gāndhārī were burnt to death in that fire. (Chapter 32, Āśrama Parva).

9) After the death. Dharmaputra performed the obsequies of those who died in the wild fire (Āśrama Parva, Chapter 30). Leaving the mortal bodies the souls of Duḥtaraśtra and Gāndhārī entered Kuberaloka. (Sloka 14, Chapter 5, Svargārohaṇa Parva).

10) Synonyms of Gāndhārī. The following words have been used in the Mahābhārata to denote Gāndhārī: Gāndhārarājajadulītī, Saubaleyy, Subalā, Subalāputrī and Subalāmājā.

GĀNDHĀRĪ II. Another Gāndhārī, wife of Ajamidhā, one of the great Kings of the Puru dynasty. (Sloka 37, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva).

GANDHARVA I. Gandharvas are sons born to the famous Kaśyapaprajāpati of his wife, Ariṣṭā (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19). Both belonged to the race of the Devas.

GANDHARVA II. A King born in the dynasty of Janamejaya. (Bhāgavata, Navama Śaṅkha). GANDHARVASENA. A marriage settled by the boy and the girl of their own accord. A love marriage. There are six different kinds of marriage: Gandharva, Arṣa, Prājapatya, Rākṣasa, Asura and Paśuça. (See under Vivāha).

GANDHARVANAGARA. Vyāsa has compared munis disappearing from sight to the fading out of Gandharvanagara.

“After having thus spoken to the Kuru, and while they were looking on, the band of sages disappeared in a trice like the fading out of Gandharvanagara.” (Ādi Parva, Chapter 126, Verses 35 and 36).

What is this Gandharvanagara? The following description occurs in Hindi Śabdāsāgara. “Owing to different optical illusions (sight) of man, villages and cities may appear to exist in the sky and also on seas, rivers, etc. When during summer the air on the upper strata of deserts, seas etc., gets heated, and rises up, the light passing through it becomes multi-coloured and gives reflections in the sky in the form of village parts or cities. Also can be seen therein reflections of trees, boats etc. One such reflection may be cast on earth also. This is a mere optical illusion. This reflection immediately fades out also. This unreal city which is an optical illusion is Gandharvanagara.

GANDHARVASENA. Daughter of Dhanavāhana (a gandharva) who lived in Svaśaṃprabhānagara on Mount Kailāsa. She was cured of leprosy by observing somavārvrata. (Skandha Purāṇa).

GANDHARVATĪRTHA. An ancient place of pilgrimage on the banks of Sarasvati in North India. The gandharva called Vibhāvasu usually dances at this place with his companions. Balabhadrā Rāma once visited this holy place. (Śañya Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 9).

GANDHARVI. The first mother of horses. Kaśyapaprajāpati had by his wife Krodhavāsa ten daughters: Mrgi, Mrgamandā, Hari, Bhadramatā, Mātaṅgi, Sārduli, GANDHAVATI I. The name Satyavati (Kāli) was assumed when sage Parāśara had swept away her matsyagandha (fish smell). She got also another name Yojanagandhā. (Adi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 80).

GANDHAVATI II. The city of Vāyu (the wind God). There are said to be nine cities on top of Mount Mahāmeru: (1) Manovatī of Brahmā at the centre, (2) Just on the eastern side of it Amaravatī of Indra, (3) Agni’s Tejovatī in the south-eastern corner, (4) Maya’s Samiyamani in the south, (5) Nirṛti’s Kṛṣṇaṇjanā in the south-western corner, (6) Śraddhāvatī of Varuṇa on the west, (7) Gandhavatī of Vāyu in the north-western corner, (8) Mahodayā of Kubera on the north, and (9) Yasovatī of Iśāna in the north-eastern corner. (Devi-bhāgavata, Aśṭama Skandha).

GANDINI. A very beautiful princess of Kāśi. Śvapahlaka married Gandini. (Daśama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

GANDIVA. The famous bow of Arjuna.

1) Make. It was Brahmā who made the bow. This terrible bow which can punish the unjust and the wicked has been made by Brahmā. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 38, Verse 21).

2) Specialities of Gandiva. This bow is enough to fight one lakh of people at one and the same time. Both Devas and men could be defeated with it. Chiseled very smooth and shining with many colours it was a very long bow. It was worshipped by Devas, Dānavas and Gandharvas. (Vīra Parva, Chapter 43). It gained and also decreased in power as the situation called for. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 98, Verse 20).

3) History of Gandiva. Brahmā, who made this bow, kept it with him during the first 1000 years. For the next 1000 years Prajāpati kept it with him. Next, Indra got it from Prajāpati and he used it for 3385 years. After that Candra kept it for 500 years with him, and then Varuṇa came in possession of it. After using it for 100 years Varuṇa gave it to Arjuna, who used it for 65 years.

4) Gandiva and Arjuna. Arjuna agreed to protect the Kāṇḍava forest from rain, if Indra sent rain when Agni began eating the forest. But, realising that Arjuna possessed no weapons to effectively oppose Indra, Agni requested Varuṇa to give the following to Arjuna, viz., the Gandiva bow and a quiver wherein the arrows will never be exhausted, and the chariot marked with the symbol of monkey and drawn by four white horses—all kept by Candra. Varuṇa at once made a present of the above to Arjuna. And, it was with the aid of this Gandiva, that Arjuna defeated Indra at the time of Kāṇḍavadāhā. (See Kāṇḍavadāhā). Arjuna had taken a secret vow to cut off the head of anyone who asked him to give the bow to some one else. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 69).

In after years Arjuna won many wars with the help of this bow. (See Arjuna).

5) Arjuna gives up Gandiva. The great Kurukṣetra war, which shook Bhārata, to its very foundation came to an end. Dharmaputra was crowned a King. It was at this juncture that the Yādava dynasty got itself annihilated and Śrī Kṛṣṇa entered mahāsamādhi. Now the Pāṇḍavas lost all interest in mundane life, and they set out for the forest on their great journey after crowning Parikṣit, the grandson of Arjuna as King. Their great travel took them to the shores of the Red Sea. The Gandiva was still in Arjuna’s hands. On the shores of the Red Sea Agni Deva appeared before the Pāṇḍavas and spoke to them “Well, Pāṇḍavas, I am Agni Deva. Arjuna requires the Gandiva no more. I got it from Varuṇa for Arjuna, Return it, therefore, to Varuṇa.”

No sooner did he hear Agni Deva speak thus than did Arjuna throw it into the depths of the sea and also the quiver which never got exhausted of arrows with it. Agni Deva disappeared, and the Pāṇḍavas continued their journey. (Mahāprāshānīka Parva, Chapter 1).

GAŃGA. The famous and holy river of India.

1) Origin and general information. Gaṅga had its origin during the incarnation of Viṣṇu as Vāmana. When Vāmana measured the three worlds in three steps the nails on his left feet were raised high. They caused a pore on the upper side of the universe. Gaṅga, starting from the finger of Viṣṇu’s feet fell in heaven (Bhāgavata).

The famous Viṣṇupadi, the flowing water (tirtha) of which washes away the sins of the people in the universe is the very same Gaṅga under discussion. For many yugas (eras) this river confined itself to the heights of the sky, otherwise called Viṣṇupada. This particular spot is known as Dhruvamanḍala as it is here that Dhruva, son of King Uttānapāda, does, his penance. The seven sages who constantly go round and round the Dhruvamanḍala take their bath in this holy river. The course of the river is thus: starting from Viṣṇupada it falls on devayāna glittering with crores of vimānas and therefrom it descends on Candramanḍala which it submerges. It follows its course again from there dividing itself into four tributaries called Sītā, Caksuś, Alakanandā and Bhadrā and then falls in Brahmaloka wherefrom it flows in all directions. Of the four tributaries Sītā falls on the head of Mount Meru, flows down to Gandhamādana, then circling through Bhadrāśva varṣa falls into the eastern sea. Caksuś falls on the peaks of mount Mālayāvan, flows through Ketumāla and falls into the western sea. Alakanandā falls on mount Hemakūṭa, flows through Bhārata Varṣa and falls into the southern sea. And Bhadrā falls on the head of mount Śrīgāvan, flows through Uttarākuru and falls into the northern sea. Alakanandā flows through Bhārata Varṣa and is regarded as the most sacred of the four tributaries.

Gaṅga which flowed through heaven fell on the earth after thousands of years of its origin. (Bhāgavata, Pañcama, Skandha, Chapter 17).

2) Why Gaṅga became Śiva’s consort. Mahāviṣṇu was once engaged at Vaikunṭha in a pleasant talk with his wives, Lakṣmī, Sarasvatī and Gaṅga when Gaṅga cast lustful eyes on Viṣṇu, who, behind the backs of the other two wives returned the lustful glances. Sarasvatī could not put up with that situation for a long time. Therefore, she got up from her seat and beat Gaṅga. Lakṣmī tried to restrain Sarasvatī lest the quarrel should become fiercer. Angered at this intervention Sarasvatī cursed that Lakṣmī be born on earth. Gaṅga got angry that innocent Lakṣmī was thus cursed, and she in her... turn cursed that Sarasvati be born as a river on earth. Sarasvati did not take the curse lying down, but cursed that Gaṅgā also be born as a river on earth and take upon herself the sins of the whole world. When all the three wives of Viśṇu got themselves thus into trouble he told them as follows: "Everything has happened as it should have happened. Lākṣmi may go to the earth and be born in the home of Dharmaṇdava and grow up as his daughter, but not from the womb of his women. There you will purify the three worlds after which you will be born as the plant called tulasī, and be married by an asura called Saṅkhaśūda, who will be born as a part of me. And, after that you will be turned into a sacred river called Padmāvatī, and leaving the river on earth your divine form will return to Vaikuṇṭha." And, to Gaṅgā Viśṇu said as follows: "You will go to earth as a holy river to wash off the sins of people there. A king called Bhagiratha will be leading you to earth, and you will, therefore, be known as Bhagirathī also. And, you remain there on earth as the wife of the ocean of King Santanu. Your divine form will return to mount Kailāsa as the consort of Śiva." As for Sarasvati, Viśṇu asked her to be born as a river on earth, her divine form ultimately returning to Satyaloka and then becoming the consort of Bhrahmā.

And, thus it was that Lākṣmi became the consort of Mahāviśṇu, Gaṅgā of Śiva, and Sarasvati of Brahmā. (Devi Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

3) Gaṅgā born on earth due to the curse of Brahmā. Mahābhishak, an emperor of the Ikṣvāku dynasty, went to Satyaloka after he had attained heaven, to worship Brahmā. Gaṅgā too happened to be there. In the devotional atmosphere of Satyaloka a casual breeze removed Gaṅgā's clothes from her, and Mahābhishak then cast a lustful glance at her which she also returned. Brahmā, who was observing this exchange of love got angry and cursed that Mahābhishak be born as a King on earth and Gaṅgā as his wife. Gaṅgā prayed for redemption from the curse, and Brahmā told her that she would regain her old status after she had delivered the Aṣṭavasūs. As the consequence of Brahmā's curse Mahābhishak was born as King Santanu in the solar dynasty on earth and he married Gaṅgā. (Ādi Parva, Chapters 96 and 97).

4) Bhagiratha brought down Gaṅgā on earth. King Sagara of the solar dynasty had two wives called Sumati (Vaidarbhi) and Keśinī (Saibhā). A son called Asamānjasā was born to Keśinī, and 60,000 princes were born to Sumati. Sagara drove out of the country Asamānjasā, who turned out to be an enemy of the people. The 60,000 sons of Sagara also proved to be a menace to the world, and the Devas approached Brahmā for protection from the menace. He assured the Devas that a sage called Kapila will destroy the 60,000 evil fellows.

During the above period of time Sagara performed an Āśvamedha Yajña, and his sons went round the earth with the sacrificial horse. But, when they reached the sea-shore the horse disappeared. When the sons Complainted about it to their father, Sagara, he asked them to look out for the horse in every part of the earth and bring it back. Not finding it anywhere on earth they dug a hole and entered Pātāla, where they saw Sage Kapila absorbed in meditation and the missing horse tied to a pole near the sage. (It was Indra who had carried away the horse and tied it there). The sons of Sagara, believing that it was Kapila who had stolen the horse were about to attack the sage when he opened his eyes, and they were reduced to ashes in the fire of Kapila's eyes.

His sons having not returned even after a long time Sagara asked his grandson Aṁśumāna to seek them out, and after an extensive search he saw Kapila at Pātāla. Aṁśumāna pleased Kapila with laudatory phrases and the latter returned to him the sacrificial horse. Kapila also pronounced the blessing that the grandson of Aṁśumāna would perform the purificatory rites of Sagara's sons by bringing down Gaṅgā to earth from heaven. Aṁśumāna returned to the palace with the horse and the Āśvamedha was duly concluded.

From Aṁśumāna was born Dīlīpa and from him Bhagiratha. On becoming King, Bhagiratha handed over the reins of government to his ministers and began efforts to bring down Gaṅgā to earth. He did tapas for thousand years on the slopes of the Himalayas when Gaṅgā asked him to please Śiva first as he alone could face her (Gaṅgā) fall on the earth. Accordingly he pleased Śiva by his penance and Śiva agreed to receive Gaṅgā on his head. With a terrific noise Gaṅgā came down on Śiva's head. The haughty Gaṅgā wanted to carry down Śiva also to Pātāla. Realising this ambition of her Śiva blocked her passage with the result that she wandered about in Śiva's matted hair for many years without finding an outlet. Bhagiratha again did tapas and pleased Śiva who shook his matted head and made fell some water therefrom on earth. The water fell into Bindusaras, and flowed in seven tributaries, the first three, Hādīna, Pāvani and Nālinī towards the east, the next three, Sucakṣus, Śītā and Sindhu towards the west and the seventh tributary followed Bhagiratha. In this manner they progressed a great distance till they reached the āśrama of the sage Jahnu, and the haughty Gaṅgā flooded the āśrama. The sage got enraged at this and drank up Gaṅgā. But Bhagiratha pleased the sage who then let out Gaṅgā through his ears. Thenceforth Gaṅgā could be called Jāhanvi also. Gaṅgā again followed Bhagiratha to Pātāla and made the sons of Sagara attain salvation by purifying them with her waters. (Viṃkli Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kānda, Cantos 43 and 44; Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 97; Devī Purāṇa, Divīya Skandha; Drona Purva, Chapter 60; Anuśūśana Purva, Chapter 4 and Vana Purva, Chapter 109).

5) Gaṅgā flowed into the sea. After the purificatory rites of the sons of Sagara were over, Bhagiratha conducted Gaṅgā to the sea and with its waters the sea became full. (Vana Purva, Chapter 109, Verses 18-21).

6) Gaṅgā set on the thīks of Pratīpa. Gaṅgā once fell in love with Pratīpa, father of Santanu, and set on his right thigh when he (Pratīpa) was doing penance on the banks of the Gaṅgā for a son. Pratīpa did not agree to Gaṅgā's proposal that he should marry her and told her thus: "the right thigh is for the children and daughters-in-law to sit on and the left thigh for the wife; therefore, you be my son's wife." Then Pratīpa called his son Santanu and told him: "Sometime back a divine woman came to me and I promised to wed her to you. Therefore, if any divine woman approaches you for a son you must accept her, and whatever she may do you must not object to that...". Not long after this Pratīpa crowned Santanu
GAṆGĀ

7) Aṣṭavasus and Gaṅgā. While the wife of Dyau, one of the Aṣṭavasus (Vasus) was roaming about in the forest, she saw Nandinī (the divine cow) grazing with her calf near the āṣrama of Vasiṣṭha, and she desired to have the cow to be presented to her intimate friend Jītāvartī, the daughter of King Uṣīnara. She informed her husband, Dyau about this desire of hers, and Dyau told his relations about it. Next day the Aṣṭavasus, in the absence of Vasiṣṭha at the āṣrama, stole off Nandinī and her calf. When Vasiṣṭha returned to the āṣrama the cow and calf were missing, and he divined the reason for it with his divine eyes. He cursed that the Aṣṭavasus be born as men on earth, and when they prayed for redemption from the curse Vasiṣṭha told them that they would be born as men within one year from that day, die at once and return to heaven. At the same time the sage said that Dyau alone, who took the leading part in stealing the cow, would live on earth for a longer period before he returned to heaven. (The reputed Bhīṣma was this Dyau). The Aṣṭavasus set out for the earth to be born as men and on their way they met Gaṅgā and told her about their curse etc. Gaṅgā also told them about her curse, and permitted them to be born in her womb. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 99).

8) Gaṅgā became the wife of Santanu and the Aṣṭavasus were born. Once while hunting on the banks of the Gaṅgā Santanu saw a beautiful maiden and they fell in love with each other. She agreed to become his wife on the condition that he would not oppose whatever she said. Santanu agreed to it and married her. Soon after a child was born to them and in the very presence of Santanu, she threw the child into the Gaṅgā. As per previous condition Santanu kept mum at this. She threw into the river the seven Aṣṭavasus, who were born to her in succession. When she was about to throw the last eighth of the Aṣṭavasus (Dyau) into the river Santanu prevented her. She got angry at this and disappeared with the child. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 99).

9) Santanu got back the son. Thirtytwo years after, Santanu went hunting again on the banks of the Gaṅgā where he saw the river obstructed in its course with arrows by a handsome boy. Santanu did not recognise that the boy was his son, who had been named Devavrata by Gaṅgā. Devavrata disappeared after throwing Santanu into an illusion by his magic power. All of a sudden a doubt dawned in his mind whether the boy was his own son, and he called out to Gaṅgā to show him the boy. Gaṅgā appeared with her son with beautiful ornaments on him and spoke to Santanu thus: “This is Devavrata, the eighth son whom you entrusted to me. He has mastered everything in archery from Vasiṣṭha, and he is Dyau (the vasu) son of Aṅgiras reborn. You may please take charge of him.” After saying this she returned to heaven. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 100).

10) Gaṅgā and Subrahmanya. (See under Subrahmanya).

11) Gaṅgā and Bhīṣma. (See under Bhīṣma).

12) Greatness (divine nature) of Gaṅgā. Mahābhārata has (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26), the following on the greatness of Gaṅgā. —

If, after death, the bones of the dead are deposited in Gaṅgā the departed will attain heaven. Even if one had sinned throughout his life he would attain Viṣṇuvīra (heaven) if he worshipped Gaṅgā. Bathing in the Gaṅgā is as beneficial as performing hundred yajñās. As long as the bones of one remain in the waters of the Gaṅgā so long will he occupy an honourable seat in heaven. He who has come in contact with its water will shine forth as the sun devoid of all darkness. Places which are not favoured by its waters will become barren like night without the moon and trees without flowers. Gaṅgā water is more than enough to satisfy living things in all the three worlds. He who does penance standing on one leg for thousand years, and who gives up his body in the waters of the Gaṅgā are on a par with each other. God attaches more importance to him who has fallen into the Gaṅgā than to him, who has performed tapas hanging by his head for a thousand years. He who smears the sand on the banks of the Gaṅgā on his body will get the lustre and glow of the devas, and he, who smears the sand on his head will shine forth like the Sun. All the sins of those on whom has blown the air which had come in contact with Gaṅgā water will be swept away. It should be known that Gaṅgā water can wash off all sins and purify mortals. The Agni Purāṇa (Chapter 110) has the following on this subject.

Through whatever places the Gaṅgā flows those places become sublime and sacred. Gaṅgā is the refuge of all created beings who aspire for the final good. If Gaṅgā is worshipped daily it will save families both on the mother’s and the father’s side from evil fate. To drink Gaṅgā water is better than the observance of a thousand lunar months. If one worship Gaṅgā for a month one will derive all the benefits of having performed all the yajñas. Even the blind (the ignorant) who worship Gaṅgā, will attain equal status with the devas. The sight of Gaṅgā, contact with its waters and drinking Gaṅgā water will purify people in thousands and lakhs.

13) Gaṅgā and Rādhā. Gaṅgā is Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa liquidified into water. Once in goloka Rādhādevi attempted to drink Gaṅgā dry, who, terror-striken, hid herself at the feet of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, and the whole world experienced difficulties due to non-availability of water. Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to know of the situation and made Gaṅgā appear again on earth. (Deviḥāgavatā, Navama Skandha).

14) Symbols and vehicle of Gaṅgā. Gaṅgā, white in colour rests on makaramatsya (a variety of fish) holding in her hands a pot and lotus flowers. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 50).

GAṆGĀDVĀRA (M). The place or locality in the Indo-Gangetic plane where the river Ganges falls from the Himalayas. This place is known as Haridvāra also. arHidvāra has an epic importance.
(1) It was here that King Pratāpa did tapas. (Adi Parva, Chapter 97, Verse 1).
(2) Sage Bharadvāja had stayed on the banks of the Gaṅgā, at Haridvāra. (Adi Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 33).
(3) Arjuna visited Haridvāra during his tour or Pilgrimage. (Adi Parva, Chapter 213).
(4) This is the entrance to heaven. A bath here in the Kōṭitīrtha is as beneficial as the Puṇḍarika Yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 27).
(5) Sage Agastya and his wife Lomapādā once did tapas here. (Vana Parva, Chapter 97, Verse 11).
(6) It was here that Śiva appeared to Jayadratha, who did tapas. (Vana Parva 72, Verse 24).
(7) Daksaprajāpati had once performed tapas at Kanakha in Haridvāra. (Sālya Parva, Chapter 38, Verse 27).
(8) Those who bathe at Kuśāvarta, Vilvaka, Nila-parvata and Kanakha in Haridvāra will attain heaven. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 13).
(9) Bhīṣma did the funeral rites of his father at the mouth of the Gaṅgā. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 11).
(10) Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī, Kunfī and others died in wild fire in the forest at Gaṅgādvāra, and Yuddhiṣṭhira conducted their funeral rites there itself. (Ātramāvasīka Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 14).

GAṅGĀHRADA (M). A sacred place on the limits of Kurukṣetra. There is a terribly deep whirlpool of the river Ganges here and that depth of the river is considered to be equivalent to three crores of sacred places. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, and Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25).

GAṅGĀMAHAVĀRA (M). The particular spot on the Himālayan peak wherefrom Gaṅgā starts. Those who go there die in ice-falls. Only Nara and Nārāyaṇa have crossed this place. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 111, Verse 16).

GAṅGĀSĀGARASĀMGAMAM. A sacred tīrtha, a bath in which is as beneficial as the performing of ten Āṣva-medha yajñas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 4).

GAṅGĀSĀRASĀVSATISĀMGAMAM (M). A sacred tīrtha at Prayāga. Those who bathe in this tīrtha will attain heaven. (Vana Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 38).

GAṅGĀYAMUNĀSĀMGAMAM (M). A sacred tīrtha in Prayāga. Bathing in the tīrtha is as beneficial as performing ten Āṣva-medha yajñas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 4).

GAṅGEYA I. See under Bhīṣma.

GAṅGEYA II. Subrahmaṇya (See under Subrahmaṇya).

GAṅGOḌBHEDA (M). A sacred place where fasting for three nights will give the results of a Vājapeya yajña, and he who fasts here will become one with the universal soul. (Vana Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 5).

GAṆṬA A. Viśvadeva, who used to calculate the course of time and ages. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 36).

GARBHA. A son of Bharata, the son of Duṣyantra. Suhotra, Suhotā, Gaya, Garbhā and Suketu were the five sons of Bharata. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

GARBHA (M). The Purāṇas have described the views of sages about the origin of ātman in woman’s womb. Astimahāṁnunī stated the following about the birth of a child to King Janaka. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 48). Of the seven elements in the human body, viz., Rasa, Rakta (blood), Māṁsa (flesh), Medas (fost), Asthi (bone), Majjā (marrow) and Sukla- (semen fluid) the last one, Sukla, is the most valuable. Brahmbija (the seed for production) is contained in Sukla. From the food we consume, blood and the seminal fluid take their nutrition. The Sukla emitted during coitus enters the womb of the woman propelled as it were by Kroṣṭavāyu. It takes only one night for the Sukla to get inextricably mixed with blood in the womb. In that mixing if the proportion of blood is higher, the child born will be girl, and if the proportion of Sukla is higher, the offspring will be boy. If blood and Sukla are mixed exactly in equal proportions the child will be ‘neutral’, neither girl nor boy. During the first month of pregnancy the child will be in liquid form. In the second, it solidifies due to the mixing and interplay of heat, cold, air, etc. During the third, holes for eye, ear, etc. become ready and the vein system is formed. In the fourth, head, hands and legs of the child are formed, and it is during this period that the prospective mother develops certain desires. If those desires are not satisfied the child may be born with physical deformities. During the fifth month the hips and bones develop. The various organs get firmer and stronger gradually and fingers appear during the sixth month. It is during the sixth month that hairs on the head and body appear and feelings and emotions originate in the mind. During the seventh month the ten vāyus (winds) on the basis of the nervous system are released, and the child experiences glimpses of its previous existence, and ability to feel pain also is there. During the ninth month due to the force of the wind which effects actual delivery the child gets head down in the womb, and during the tenth month it emerges out of the womb. The child loses its memory about the past because of its contact with the female organ and external wind.

According to the Agni Purāṇa the process is a little different:

When Jīva (the soul) has entered the womb for rebirth it remains in fluid form during the first month. During the second month it solidifies; in the third month the organs begin to develop, in the fourth month skin, flesh and bones appear, in the fifth month hairs appear, in the sixth month mind is produced, in the seventh month the child will begin to feel pain. The body is covered by a skin (Garbhacarṇa) and both hands are held above the head in saluting position. If the child is a female it lies in the left side of the mother’s womb, if a male on the right and if ‘neutral’ in the middle of it. From the seventh month the child begins to experience the taste of foods consumed by the mother. During the eighth and ninth month there would be great emotional excitement and upsurgences. If the mother suffered from chronic diseases the child also would inherit it. When pregnancy is matured thus, certain winds lead the child down the womb and it gets out through the female organ.

The child inherits its skin, flesh and heart from the mother. The sex organ, marrow, excretion, sweet and belly are inherited from the father. Head, the nervous system and śukla are the contributions of the ātman.
(Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 369).

GARDABHI. A son of Viśvāmitra who was a brahmavādī. (Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

GARGA.
1) Genealogy. Descended from Viśu thus:—Brahmā-Atri-Candra-Budha-Purūravas-Ayus-Nahuṣa-Puru-Janamejaya-Pracīṇvān-Pravīra-Namasyu-Vitabhaya-Śrṇu-

Santuropadā-Dusyanta-Bharata-Suhotra-Suhotā-Gala-Gardā-Suketu-Bhratksatra-Garga.
2) Birth. Bṛhaspati once approached, on the crest of a wave of lust, Mamati, his brother’s wife who was pregnant then. The child from the mother’s womb said ‘no’ to the move. But, Bṛhaspati cursed the child and had his own way with Mamati. Thus two children developed in her womb. Just after delivering the child the mother went away leaving the child by Bṛhaspati behind. The Devas took charge of the forsaken child and named him Bharadvāja. Ultimately they handed over the child (Bharadvāja) to king Bharata, the famous son of Dusyanta. Children had already been born to Bharata by his three wives, but as all of them were found to be immoral the mothers themselves killed them. It was at such a juncture that Bharata got Bharadvāja as adopted son. (Bharadvāja is known by another name also, Vitatha). From Vitatha was born Manyu, from Manyu Bṛhatksatra from Bṛhatksatra Jaya and from Jaya Garga. The famous Rantideva was the grandson of Nara, (the brother of Garga) and son of Saṁkrti. A son called Śani was born to Garga after which he took Sannyāsa. (Bḥāgavata, Daśama Skandha, Chapters 20 and 21).
3) Yādavaguru. In course of time Garga became prece-dator of the Yādavas. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadrārāma who had returned to Mathurā from Ambādi were sent to sage Sandīpani in obedience to the advice of Garga.
(Bḥāgavata, Navama Skandha).
4) Garga and Mucukunda. Garga once visited Mucukunda, son of Māndhātā at his palace, and very much pleased with the devoted reception accorded to him blessed Mucukunda that one day he would see Śrī Kṛṣṇa in person. It was according to this blessing that Mucu-kunda, while asleep once in a cave had a sight of Kṛṣṇa.
(See under Mucukunda).
5) Importance of Garga. A number of reputed sage visited Śrī Rāma on his return to Ayodhya from the forest. Amongst them were present Kauśiśka, Yavakrīta, Raibhya, Kanva and Garga with their numerous disci-plers. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).
6) Garga, a scholar in astronomy. There is a place called Gargasrota on the banks of river Sarasvati. Garga did tapas here and discovered some principles of astronomy such as the path of planets, stars etc. He was also the chief astronomer in the assembly of emperor Pṛthu.
(Sānti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 111).
7) Other information. (1) While the great war was raging Garga visited Kurukṣetra and advised Droṇa to end the war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 19).
(2) He advised King Viśvāvasu about eternity. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 318, Verse 49).
(3) He spoke about the greatness of the world (Viśvamahimā) to Yudhiṣṭhira. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 18).

GARGASROTA. See under Garga, Para 6.
GARGAYANI. See under Guruparaniparā.
GARGI. A celebrated brahma-vādini born in the family of Garga.

GARGYA I. (TRIJAṬA) GARGA. A famous sage.
1) Birth. He was one of the sons of Viśvāmitra. (Śloka 55, Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva). (For genealogy see under Viśvāmitra). He became gradually the priest of Gudavas. He has written a famous book called Garga-smṛti. Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa mentions that Gargya is known as Trijaṭa also.
2) How he became prosperous. Sage Gargya had many children. It was while he was staying in the forest with his wife and children that Śrī Rāma came to that forest for Vanavāsa. The news of the exile of Śrī Rāma spread like wild-fire and many brahmins flocked to the place and Śrī Rāma gave them immense riches. Wife of Garg-YA heard the news only late and as soon as she heard the same she called her husband from the fields where he was working and taking away from him the implements sent him post-haste to the place of Śrī Rāma.
Trijaṭa as soon as he came to the presence of Rāma told him the purpose of his visit. Huge herds of cows were then grazing on the banks of the Yamunā river. Śrī Rāma told Gargya to take a stump and throw it with all his strength. He did so and Śrī Rāma gave him all the cows grazing up to the place where the stump fell.
It was a big lot and Gargya became prosperous from that day onwards. (Sarga 32, Ayodhyā Kaṅḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).
3) Gargya’s precepts on Dharma. The following are the precepts laid down by Gargya on Dharma. (1) Be interested always on entertaining your guests, (2) Do not eat meat, (3) Do not give injury to cows and brahmins,
(4) Perform yajña with a pure mind and pure body.
(M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 127).
4) Gargya’s place in the line of preceptors. Vyāsā expounded the Vedas to Vedamitra, Saubhari and Śākalya.
Śākalya taught what he learnt to Vātśāyaṇa, Maud-galya, Śāli, Ādiśīra, Gokhali and Yātukarpa. Yātu-karpa taught Nirukta to Bāskala, Krauṇaka, Vaitāla, and Viraṇa. Bāskala combined all the other branches together and made ‘Bālakhilyasākha’ and taught it to Bālāyini, Gargya and Sāraṇā. The Vyāsādāryas are those from Vāyṣa to Sāraṇā. (Bḥāgavata, Daśama Skandha).
5) Indrasabhir and Gargyā. Gargya was a shining mem-er of the Indrasabhā. (Śloka 18, Chapter 7, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

GARGYA II. See under Bālāki.

GARGYA(M). A place of habitation of ancient Bhārāta. This place was captured by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 11, Droṇa Parva).

GĀRHAPATI I. An agni (fire). (Śloka 6, Chapter 74, Ādi Parva).

GĀRHAPATI II. One of the seven fathers. The seven fathers are: Vairājas, Agniśvātta, Gārhapatis, Som-pas, Ekaṅrigas, Caturvedas and Kalas. (Chapter 11, Sabha Parva, M.B.).

GĀRHASTYA. The Gṛhaśṭhāra stage in life when you live with your family as a house-holder. The true dharma of a householder is to live with what he gets by doing the duty allotted to him. He should feed pilgrims and should not appropriate to himself what belongs to others unless and until it is given to him. (Śloka 3, Chapter 31, Ādi Parva.)

GARIŚṬHA. A sage worshipping Indra in his assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 13.)

GARUḌA. King of birds.

1) Genealogy: Descended from Viśṇu thus:—Brahmā—Marici—Kaśyapa—Garuḍa.

2) Birth. Kaśyapa, grandson of Brahmā and son of Marici married the eight daughters of Dakṣa called Adiiti, Ditī, Danu, Kālikā, Tāmra, Krodhavā, Manu and Anāla. And to Tāmra five daughters were born, viz. Krauṇchi, Bhāṣa, Śyenī, Dhtarāṣṭri and Śuki. Out of five of the women Krauṇchi became mother of the owls, Bhāṣa delivered the bhāsas (types of birds) and from Śyenī were born vultures and kites, Hamśa, Kalahanśa, Koka etc. are children of Dhtarāṣṭri. From Śuki was born Nalā and from Nalā, Viṇatā; Aruṇa and Garuḍa were the two sons born to Viṇatā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyaka-pāṇi, Canto 15.)

There is a story in the Mahābhārata about the birth of Aruṇa and Garuḍa. Kaśyapa who was much pleased with the service of Viṇatā and Kādrā asked them to select any boon they desired. Kādrā chose to have a thousand nāgas as her children while Viṇatā chose to have two sons more powerful and heroic than the thousand sons of Kādrā. After granting them the boon Kaśyapa retreated into the forest.

After some time Kādrā laid thousand eggs and Viṇatā two eggs. Both of them kept their eggs in hot pots. In the 500th year the eggs of Kādrā hatched and thousand serpents of various kinds emerged out of them. But Viṇatā’s eggs did not hatch yet, and the sight of Kādrā playing with her children pained Viṇatā much. She, therefore, broke open one of her eggs in secret, and a half-grown child stepped out of it. That child was Aruṇa. Aruṇa got angry that Viṇatā forced open the egg prematurely. He told her that as punishment thereof she would become a slave of Kādrā. But, Aruṇa granted her redemption from the curse thus: After another 500 years the remaining egg of yours will hatch and a son endowed with exceptional power and prowess will be born to you. He will liberate you from slavery.3 After telling his mother so much Aruṇa rose to the sky where he became the charioteer of the Sun. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 16. See also Para 6 infra.)

After 500 years the egg broke itself open and out came Garuḍa with blazing effulgence, and he rose up in the sky. His body glowed like the sun. The Devas who got themselves dimmed by his effulgence asked Agnideva the reason therefor. Agnideva told them about the birth of Garuḍa and also that he was equally effulgent as himself (Agnideva). Then all of them went to Garuḍa and lavished on his head all possible blessings, and Garuḍa, as requested by them, controlled his effulgence and returned to his mother. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 23.)

3) Slavery of Viṇatā: The churning of the Milk-ocean was done before Garuḍa was born. Indra got a horse named Uccālīravas from the Ocean of Milk. Between Kādrā and Viṇatā a dispute arose as regards the colour of the horse’s tail. Kādrā saying that it was black while Viṇatā asserted that it was white. They further agreed to test the colour the next day, betting that she who was proved to be wrong would become the slave of the victor. As the nāga sons of Kādrā hung on to the tail of the horse the tail appeared to be black and Viṇatā lost the bet and became Kādrā’s slave.

It was at this juncture that Garuḍa was born, and he felt highly mortified to find his mother working as a slave of Kādrā.

Kādrā and her nāgas sons once ordered Viṇatā to carry them to the nāga residence in the middle of the ocean, called Rāmāyaṇa (Ramaṇam). Accordingly Viṇatā carrying Kādrā on her shoulders and Garuḍa carrying Kādrā’s sons on his shoulders rose up in the sky. But, Garuḍa did not relish the slavish work, and he, carrying with him the nāgas, flew up to the sun’s orbit. The nāga children fainted due to the excessive heat. But, on the request of Kādrā Indra sent heavy rain and the nāgas regained consciousness. By then they had reached Rāmāyaṇa island.

4) Attempt at freeing Viṇatā from thraldom. Garuḍa, extremely pained at the pitiable plight of his mother, one day asked Kādrā what price she and her children demanded for freeing Viṇatā from slavery, and Kādrā demanded Amṛta from Devaloka as the price. Garuḍa decided to get it and informed his mother about his decision to fly to Devaloka. But, what about food till he reached Devaloka? Viṇatā solved the problem by advising Garuḍa to eat the niṣādas he will meet on his way to Devaloka at the island called Nīṣādālaya, at the same time specially forbidding him from eating on any account, brahmans who might be there, at Nīṣādālaya. How to distinguish brahmans from others, queried Garuḍa, and his mother replied by pointing out that the brahman will burn the throat of him who tries to eat him, like fire. Then Viṇatā blessed her son that his wings would be protected by Vāyu, the lower half of his body by sun and moon, the rest of the body by the Vasus and the head by Agni. She also promised to wait there till her son returned.

5) Garuḍa to Devaloka. After saluting his mother Garuḍa set out on his quest for Amṛta. All the fourteen worlds shook at the lashing of his wings. He reached Nīṣādālaya, where while consuming whole lots of Niṣādas a brahman and his wife also happened to get into his throat. Garuḍa felt their presence immediately in his throat and requested them to get out of his mouth. Accordingly they got out and also blessed Garuḍa, who continued on his journey.

Next Garuḍa reached the forest where his father Kaśyapa was engaged in tapas. He told him about his mission and requested him for something to eat. Kaśyapa replied thus:— “You see a pool wherein an elephant and a tortoise are living for long as enemies. Long ago two brothers Vibhiḥsvāsa and Supratikā quarrelled over their paternal wealth and at the height of it Vibhiḥsvāsa cursed Supratikā to become an elephant when Supratikā pronounced the counter curse that Vibhiḥsvāsa should turn out to be a tortoise. You, my son Garuḍa may eat that elephant and tortoise. May your journey for Amṛta be crowned with success.

Now, Garuḍa after saluting his father, flew up in the sky carrying in his beak the elephant and the tortoise from the pool. As trees were falling uprooted due to the terrific vibrations caused by the lashing of his wings Garuḍa did not find a convenient place to sit down to eat his food. While continuing the journey Garuḍa saw a big tree, its branches spread out in a circumference of a hundred yojanas. But, as soon as Garuda set foot on a branch of the tree it (branch) crumbled down. On that broken branch were the sages called Bālākhilīyas doing tapas hanging their heads down. Fearing that the sages might fall down Garuda continued his flight holding in his beak the torn branch of the tree. But he could not find a safe place to deposit the branch with the sages. So he came again to Mount Gandhamādana and saw Kaśyapa, who apologised to the Bālākhilīyas on behalf of his son and also explained to them about his mission. The Bālākhilīyas were pleased and they left the place for the Himālayas. As advised by Kaśyapa Garuda deposited the branch of the tree on an uninhabited mountain peak. Garuda ate the elephant and the tortoise there, and therefrom flew to Devaloka (Adi Parva, Chapter 29, 30).

6) Bālākhilīyas cursed Indra. Even before the arrival of Garuda ill omens began appearing in Devaloka. Indra asked Brhaspati for explanation about the ill omens. Brhaspati with his divine eyes saw Garuda approaching Devaloka for Amṛta, and he told Indra about Garuda born out of the powers of the tapas of Kaśyapa and the Bālākhilīyas. He also told that such a fate as the present one befall Indra due to a curse of the Bālākhilīyas. Indra and the other Devas stood guard over the pot of Amṛta ready to repel all possible attacks.

There was a reason for Garuda’s birth from the powers of the tapas of the Bālākhilīyas, and also for Indra to be put into the present predicament due to the curse of the Bālākhilīyas. Kaśyapaprajapati, a long time ago, began a terrific yajña for a son, and Indra and the Bālākhilīyas who numbered more than 60,000 were deputed by Kaśyapa to collect firewood for the yajña. The Bālākhilīyas were only of the size of a thumb, and Indra who very easily collected all the firewood needed for the yajña laughed at the tiny Bālākhilīyas who were carrying small twigs etc. for firewood. Angered at the insult the Bālākhilīyas removed themselves to another place nearby and began a yajña directed against Indra who alarmed at it sought the help of Kaśyapa who then held peace talks with the Bālākhilīyas. They transferred their yāgaśakti (yājñic powers) also to Kaśyapa and agreed to be satisfied with the condition that as the result of Kaśyapa’s yajña a son should be born to him, who (the son) would defeat Indra. Thus, for the time being Indra escaped from the wrath of the Bālākhilīyas. After the yajña was over Vinātā came to Kaśyapa and he blessed her with a son wishing that he should become exceptionally strong and powerful; and that was Garuda. (Adi Parva, Chapter 30).

7) Amṛṭakalasāpaharanam. (The pot of nectar carried away). Garuda approached the pot of nectar, and Viśvakarmā who attacked him first was felled to the ground. The dust storm raised by the waving of Garuda’s wings blinded everybody. The Devas and Indra, nay, even the sun and the Moon lined up against Garuda, but he defeated them all, and entered the particular place where the pot of nectar was kept. Two terrific wheels were rotating round the pot and they would cut into mince-meat anybody who tried to lay hands on the pot and a machine circled the wheels. Below the wheels were two monstrous serpents with glowing eyes and protruding tongues like flashes of fire, and the serpents never closed their eyes. The very look with those eyes was enough to poison anyone to death. Garuda blinded those eyes by raising a torrent of dust, pierced them in the middle with his beak and and through the hole, his body reduced to such a tiny shape, went nearer to the pot. He destroyed the wheels and the machine, and carrying the pot of nectar in his beaks rose to the sky shielding the light of the sun by his outspread wings. Mahāviṣṇu, who became so much pleased with the tremendous achievements of Garuda asked him to choose any boon. Garuda requested Viṣṇu that he should be made his (Viṣṇu’s) vehicle and rendered immortal without his tasting amṛta. Both the boons were granted.

8) Garuda and Indra became friends. Indra hit with the Vajra (his special weapon) the wings of Garuda who was returning from Viṣṇu. It did not wound his body, but a feather of his fell in the atmosphere. Everybody who saw the feather acclaimed Garuda as Suparṇa (he with the good wings). Indra was wonder-struck, and he approached Garuda and requested that they should be friends in future and the pot of nectar be returned. Garuda replied that the nectar would be returned if he was granted the power to make nāgas his food, and Indra blessed him that he would live by consuming nāgas. And then Garuda told Indra thus: “I took this pot of amṛta not for my own use. The nāgas cheated my mother and made her a slave, and she will be freed if only this pot of nectar is given to them (nāgas). You may snatch off the pot from the nāgas; I shall not object to it.”

Indra and Garuda thus became friends and the former followed Garuda on his way back home.

9) Garuda handed over the pot of amṛta to the nāgas and Indra cheated them of it. Garuda handed over the pot of nectar to the nāgas, who on the suggestion of the former placed the pot on darbha grass spread on the ground. Also, in accordance with Garuda’s advice that they should take a purificatory bath before tasting the amṛta the nāgas went out to have the bath, and in their absence Indra carried off the pot of nectar back to Devaloka. Failing to find the pot of nectar on their return from bath the aggrieved nāgas licked the darbha on which the pot was placed with the result that their tongues were cloven into two. It was from that day onwards that the nāgas became double-tongued (dvijihvas). And, thus Garuda redeemed his mother from slavery. (Adi Parva, Chapter 34).

10) The fig tree which Garuda broke with his beaks and Lanka. It has been noted above that Garuda on his way to Devaloka rested on a fig tree. That fig is called Subhadra in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa. Rāvaṇa saw the fig tree around which sages were sitting and which bore marks made by Garuda sitting thereon. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakāṇḍa, Canto 35, Verse 26).

There is some connection between this tree and Lanka. Garuda had, as directed by Kaśyapa, deposited in the sea the branch of the tree on which the Bālākhilīyas hung in tapas and with which Garuda flew hither and thither fearing about the safety of the Bālākhilīyas. At the spot in the sea where the branch was deposited sprang up an island like a peak of a mountain. It was this island which in after years became reputed as Lanka. (Kathāsaritsaṅgara, Kathāmukhalaṁbaka, Tatāṅga 4).
11) Garuḍa, Saubhari and Kālīya. Garuḍa had always entertained great hatred against the nāgas, and now Indra’s permission having been obtained by him to eat the nāgas for food, Garuḍa decided to launch a regular nāga-hunting expedition. He began eating the nāgas one by one. Alarmed at this the nāgas planned for their security in a conclave, and approached Garuḍa with the proposal that one nāga would go to him daily to serve as his food instead of his indiscriminate killing of them. Garuḍa accepted their proposal. After some time the nāgas proposed to Garuḍa that they would conduct a sarpa-bali (sacrifice of serpents) and submit the food got out of the bali to him so that his nāga-hunting might be stopped for ever. Garuḍa agreed to this also. According to the new agreement daily one nāga began going to Garuḍa with the food got out of the bali.

But Kālīya alone did not agree to the programme as he did not recognise Garuḍa to be superior to him in power. And, Garuḍa, who wanted to teach the haughty Kālīya a lesson challenged him to fight, and the fight took place in river Kālindi, Kālīya’s abode. During the fight the lashing of Garuḍa’s wings raised the water in Kālindi up in the sky and it drenched the sage Saubhari all over, who was performing tapas on the banks of Kālindi. Saubhari cursed that the body of Garuḍa be shattered into a thousand pieces if ever he entered that area in future, and thenceforth the place became a prohibited area for Garuḍa. During after years Kālīya was put up at this place.

A kadamba tree alone outlived the effect of the poison of Kālīya. The tree could outlive the deadly poison because Garuḍa had rested on it on his way back from Devaloka with amṛta. (Bhāgavata daśama Šāndha).

12) Relationship of Garuḍa with the kings of the solar dynasty. King Sagara of the solar dynasty was married to Sumati, the elder sister of Garuḍa, and there is a story behind the marriage.

There was once a king called Subāhu in the solar dynasty. He married one Yādavī, but for many years they had no issues. Yādavī had become old by the time she conceived a child as the result of many yajñas etc. But, Subāhu’s other wives, viz. co-wives of Yādavī, did not like the prospects of Yādavī becoming a mother. They administered poison to her with the result that Yādavī did not deliver in time, but continued as a pregnant woman for seven years. The sad couple, for their mental relief went into the forest and lived as disciples of a sage called Auruva. But Subāhu died rather soon and Yādavī prepared herself to follow him in the funeral pyre. But, the sage Auruva prevented her from self-immolation speaking to her thus: “You shall not act rashly. The child in your womb will become a famous emperor and rule over the whole world.”

Yādavī yielded to the sage’s advice and did not court death, and soon afterwards she delivered a son, and he was named Sagara, which meant “he who was affected by poison even while he was in the mother’s womb. It was this child who, in later years, became reputed as emperor Sagara.

Sagara married the elder sister of Garuḍa when he was living as a boy in Auruva’s aśrama, and there is a story behind the marriage, a story which related to the time when Garuḍa was not born.

Vināṭa, mother of Garuḍa, while she was working as the slave of Kadrū, one day went into the woods to collect firewood for her mistress. In the terrible rain and storm that ensued, Vināṭa lost her track and wandered in the forest for many days before she could take shelter in the aśrama of a Sannyāsin. The pious man felt sorry for poor Vināṭa and blessed her that a son, who would be able to win freedom for her would be born to her. Garuḍa was the son thus born to her.

Before the birth of Garuḍa when Kaśyapa and Vināṭa were living together with their daughter Sumati the boy sage Upamanyu, son of Sūtapas, went to them and told Kaśyapa thus: “While touring round the earth I worshipped the pitṛs at Gaṇḍa and I have been told that they (Pitṛs) would get redemption only in case I married and became a father. I, therefore, request you to please give your daughter Sumati to me as wife. Vināṭa did not relish this proposal. Upamanyu got angry at the rejection of his offer and cursed Vināṭa saying that if Sumati was given in marriage to any other brahmin boy she (Vināṭa) would die with her head broken into pieces.

It was during this period when Vināṭa was in a fix about the marriage of Sumati that Garuḍa was born to her. He also thought over the problem and argued like this: the curse is only against a brahmin boy marrying my sister Sumati; why not Sumati be given in marriage to a Kṣatriya; but where to find an eligible Kṣatriya boy? At this stage Vināṭa asked him to go and meet the Sannyāsin, who had promised her an illustrious son, in the forest and this Sannyāsin directed Garuḍa to Auruva, for advice and guidance. When Garuḍa met Auruva and sought his advice about the marriage of his sister, the sage thought that the context offered a very good bride to Sagara. And, according to Auruva’s advice Sumati was married to Sagara, and thus Garuḍa became related to the Kings of the Solar dynasty. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 16, 17 and 18). The Sixty thousand sons born to Sagara by Sumati were reduced to ashes in the fire which emanated from the eyes of Kapila. (See Kapila). When Arisumān, the grandson of Sagara was going around the world to find out these 60,000 sons he met Garuḍa on the way, and it was he who advised that the waters of Gaṅgā should be brought down on earth so that the dead sons of Sagara might get spiritual redemption. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Chapter 41).

13) Garuḍa’s conceit laid low. A very beautiful daughter, Guṇakeśī, was born to Mātali, the charioteer of Indra. In the course of his search for a suitable husband for Guṇakeśī he came to Pāṭalaloka in the company of Nārada, and there Mātali selected a noble nāga called Sumukha as his prospective son-in-law. But a month before Garuḍa had eaten Sumukha’s father Cikara, and he had also given notice to Sumukha that within a month’s time he too would be eaten.

Nārada and Mātali met Sumukha at the abode of his grandfather Aryaka, who was very glad to marry his grandson to Mātali’s daughter. But, the threat of Garuḍa that he would eat Sumukha before the month was over stared them all cruelly in their face. So, they appealed to Indra for a solution to the problem, in the presence of Mahāviśnu. Indra gave an extension of life to Sumukha and he wedded Guṇakeśī. The marriage enraged Garuḍa so much that he went to Indra’s assembly and insulted both Indra and Viṣṇu at which Viṣṇu extended his right hand to Garuḍa asking him whether he could hold the hand. And, when Garuḍa placed Viṣṇu's hand on his head he felt as if the whole weight of the three worlds was put on the head. Garuḍa admitted his defeat. Mahāviṣṇu therefore laid low the conceit of Garuḍa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 105).

14) Garuḍa helped Gālava. Gālava was a disciple of Viśvāmitra. Once Dharmadeva, to test Viśvāmitra, went to his āśrama disguised as Vaśiṅga and asked for food. As there was no ready-made food at the āśrama, Viśvāmitra naturally took some time to cook new food, and he went with it, steaming hot, in a plate to the guest. Saying that he would return within minutes and receive the food, the guest (Dharmadeva) left the place, and Viśvāmitra stood there with the plate in hand awaiting the return of the guest. He had to remain standing thus for one hundred years, and during this whole period it was Gālava who stood there looking after his guru. When hundred years were completed Dharmadeva returned to Viśvāmitra and accepted his hospitality, and then only could the latter take some rest.

Viśvāmitra blessed Gālava, and now it was time for him to leave the āśrama. Though Viśvāmitra told that no gurudakṣiṇā (tuition fee) was required Gālava persisted in asking him what fee or present he wanted. Viśvāmitra lost his temper and told Gālava that if he was so very particular about gurudakṣiṇā, eight hundred horses all having the colour of moon, and one ear black in colour might be given as dakṣiṇā. Gālava stood there aghast at the above pronouncement of his preceptor, when Garuḍa happened to go over there and hear from Gālava about his sad plight. Money was required to purchase horses, but Gālava was penniless. At any rate Garuḍa with Gālava on his back flew eastwards and reached Rṣabhaparvata and they rested on a peak of it. There the Brahṇa woman, Śāndili was engaged in tapsa and she served them with food. After food Garuḍa spoke disparagingly about Śāndili. Garuḍa and Gālava slept that night on the floor, but when they woke up in the morning lo! Garuḍa was completely shed of his feathers. Garuḍa stood before Śāndili, his head bent in anguish. Śāndili blessed Garuḍa, who then got back his old feathers.

Continuing their journey Garuḍa and Gālava reached the palace of the very rich King, Yaśā. Garuḍa introduced Gālava to Yaśā, who found it difficult to get 800 horses for Gālava. But, Yaśā gave his daughter Mādhavi to Gālava saying that he might give her to any King and get money enough to purchase 800 horses. After thus showing the means to get money to Gālava, Garuḍa returned home.

Gālava gave Mādhavi first to King Haryāśva of Ayodhya, then to King Divodāsa of Kaśī and next to King Uṣīnara of Bhoja and got from them two hundred horses each, and he submitted the horses and also Mādhavi in lieu of the balance of two hundred horses to Viśvāmitra as dākṣiṇā. A son called Āśaka was born to Viśvāmitra by Mādhavi, who had been granted a boon that she would not lose her youth and beauty even though she lived with any number of people. (Udyoga Parva Chapter 108).

15) Fight between Garuḍa and Airāvata. Śrī Kṛṣṇa once went to Devaloka and plucked the Pārijāta flower from the garden Nandana, and this led to a fight between Indra and Kṛṣṇa in which Garuḍa also joined. Garuḍa directed his main attention on Airāvata which, at his blows, fainted and fell down. (Harivānasa, Chapter 73).

16) Defeated by Viṣṇu. To churn the Milk-Ocean the Devas and Asuras decided to use Mount Mandara as the shaft and Viṣṇu as the rope to rotate the shaft. The attempts of the Devas, the Asuras and the Bhūtāgānas of Śiva failed to uproot and bring with them the mountain, when Garuḍa, at the instance of Viṣṇu brought the mountain as easily as a kite carries a frog. Again, when others failed to bring Viṣṇu from naga-loka Garuḍa went and asked the nāga chief to follow him to the ocean of Milk. Viṣṇu replied that if his presence was so indispensable he must be carried over there. Then Garuḍa caught the middle part of Viṣṇu in his beak and rose in the air. But, even though Garuḍa rose beyond the horizon, when he looked down half of Viṣṇu still remained on the ground. Garuḍa then tried to fold Viṣṇu into two and carry it, but, again to no purpose. Disappointed and humiliated Garuḍa returned without Viṣṇu. Afterwards Viṣṇu was brought to the ocean of Milk by Śiva's hand stretched down into Pātāla. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

17) Bhima went in search of the Saugandhika flower on account of Garuḍa. While, in the course of their exile in the forest, the Pāṇḍavas were put up at the āśrama of maharṣi Arśiṭeṇa, Garuḍa picked up from the depths of the sea one day a nāga called Rddhimān, and due to the vibration caused by the lashing of Garuḍa's wings Kalhāra flowers from the garden of Kubera were flown to the feet of Pāṇḍali. She wore the fragrant flowers in her hair saying that if she were to have good flowers, wind had to bring them. Since there was a mild and veiled insinuation in that statement that Bhima was inferior to the wind the former did not appreciate that comment by Pāṇḍali. And so he rushed to Mount Gandhamādana to collect Kalhāra flowers. (Vana Parva, Chapter 106).

18) Garuḍa saved Uparicaravasu. Once a controversy started between the Devas and the brahmins, the former advocating the use of goat's flesh in performing yajñas while the brahmins contended that grains were sufficient for the purpose. Uparicaravasu, who arbitrated in the debate spoke in favour of the Devas, which the brahmins did not like, and they cursed Vasu to fall from the sky into the pits of the earth. This curse was countered by the Devas blessing him that as long as Uparicaravasu remained on earth he would not feel hungry and that he would regain his old form due to the blessings of Mahāviṣṇu. Vasu prayed to Viṣṇu, who sent Garuḍa to the former, and Garuḍa carried Vasu to the sky on his wings. Thus Vasu became again Uparicaravasu. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 338).

19) Other information about Garuḍa. (1) A dānava once stole away the crown of Śrī Kṛṣṇa who was on a visit to Mount Gomanta. Garuḍa retrieved it from the dānava and returned it to Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgavata, Daśaṁa Skandha).

(2) The monkeys who searched for Śītā visited the house of Garuḍa also. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā Kāṇḍa, Canto 40, Verse 39).
(3) Garuḍa had married the four daughters of Dakṣa-prajāpāti. (Bhāgavata, 6th Skandha).
(4) He had a son named Kapota. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101).
(5) During the Rāma-Rāvaṇa war Lakṣmaṇa, Sugriva and all the monkeys swooned by the nagāstra of Indrajit. Śrī Rāma then thought of Garuḍa, who at once came down on earth and bit away the nagapāśa. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa Yuddhakāṇḍa).
(6) Garuḍa was present at the birth-day celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 50).
(7) At the birth of Subrahmaṇya Garuḍa submitted his own son, Mayūra, as a present. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 21).
20) Synonyms for Garuḍa.
21) Names used in the Mahābhārata to represent Garuḍa. Arunāṇuṭa, Bhujagārī, Garuṭmān, Kāṣyapcy, Khagaṛā, Pakṣirāja, Patagāṭa, Patageśvara, Supaṇa, Tārksya, Vainateya, Vinaṭānandavardhana, Vinaṭāsūṇa, Vinaṭāsuta, Vinaṭātmajā. (For story regarding how Garuḍa stopped eating nāgas see under Jīmuṭavāhana).

GARUḌAPURĀṆA. One of the eighteen Mahāpurāṇas. This is believed to be a narration to Garuḍa by Mahāviśnu. There are eight thousand ślokas in it. There is an opinion that only the Tārksyaakalpa is of Viṣṇu. The theme of the Purāṇa is the birth of Garuḍa from Brahmanḍa. If this Purāṇa is given as a gift it should be given along with the image of a swan in gold. (Chapter 272, Agni Purāṇa).

GARUḌAVYŪHA. A system of arranging soldiers on the battlefield in the shape of Garuḍa.

GATĪTĀLĪ. A warrior of Skandadeva. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 67).

GĀṬRA. A maharṣi, the son of Vasiṣṭha, who had by Īṛjā seven Rṣis called Rajas, Gātra, Īrdhvaḥa, Savana, Alaghū, Sukra and Sutapas. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

GAURA (M). A mountain in the Kuṣa island. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 4).

GAURAMUKHA. A son of sage Śāmika. It was Śāmika’s son Śṛṅgi, who cursed Parikṣit to death by snake-bite. (See Parikṣit). Śṛṅgi cursed that Parikṣit, who had thrown a dead snake on the neck of his father while in meditation, would be bitten to death by snake within seven days. Śṛṅgi sent word about the curse through his disciple Gauramukha to Parikṣit. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 42, Verses 14-22).

GAURAPRAḤA. Son born to Śuka (Vyāsa’s son) by his wife Pivātī. Śuka had four sons called Ṛṣṇa, Gauraprabha, Bhūri and Devaśruta and a daughter Kirtī. (Devībhāgavata, Prathama Skandha).

GAURAPROṢṬHA. A royal sage who worships Yama at his sabhā (assembly). (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 21).

GAURASĪRAS. A sage of ancient days, who worshipped Indra in his assembly. (Sabhā Parva; Chapter 7, Verse 11).

GAURAVĀḤANA. A King, who was present at the rājaśāya sacrifice of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 12).

GAUPI I. See Pārvatī.

GAUPI II. A female attendant (Devī) of Pārvatī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 48).

GAUPI III. Wife of Varuṇa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 9).

GAUPI IV. An Indian river. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 25).

GAURĪŚA. A royal sage and a member of Yama’s assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 18).

GAURĪŚIKHARA (M). A sacred place on the Himālayas. A bath in Śhānakūṇḍa here brings the same benefits as are derived from the performance of Vājapeya and Aśvamedha sacrifices. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 151).

GAUTAMA I

1) General Information. The Purāṇas record about a sage called Gautama though nothing is known about his genealogy. Yet the genealogy of his wife Ahalyā is available. See under ‘Ahalyā’.

2) Sons of Gautama. The eldest son of Gautama was Satānanda. (Śloka 2, Sarga, 51, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa). Gautama had two sons. Śardavān and Cirakārī. Śardavān was born with arrows in his hand. (Śloka 2, Chapter 130, Ādi Parva). Cirakārī used to ponder over everything before he acted and so all his actions were delayed. He got his name Cirakārī. (Chapter 266, Sabhā Parva). Śardavān was known as Gautama also. That was why Krpa and Krpī, children of Śardavān were known as Gautama and Gautami. (Śloka 2, Chapter 129, Ādi Parva). Besides these, Gautama had a daughter of unknown name. There is a reference to this girl in Śloka 11 of Chapter 56 of Aśvamedha Parva. It is reported that this daughter wept when Utaṅga a disciple of Gautama came to the āśrama with a huge load of firewood on his head. In Chapter 4, of Vāmana Purāṇa there is a reference to a few other daughters of Gautama, namely, Jayā, Jayantī and Aparājī.

3) An attempt to kill Ahalyā. Once when Gautama was away from the āśrama Indra came there as a guest. Considering it as her duty to treat a guest of her husband properly during his absence. Ahalyā received him well and gave him fruit to ease his tiredness. Indra went back. Gautama on knowing this on his return suspected the chastity of his wife and calling his son Cirakārī to his side asked him to cut off her head. After giving the order Gautama went to the forests.

Cirakārī had a peculiar nature. He will ponder over things deeply before taking any action. He knew he must obey the orders of his father but killing one’s own mother was a greater sin than disobeying a father. Weighing the merits and demerits of the act Cirakārī sat thinking without doing anything.

Gautama when he reached the forest thought again about Ahalyā and her crime. After all what has she done? A guest came to the āśrama and as duty-bound she welcomed him. It was indeed a great sin to have killed her by her own son. Immersed in thoughts of this kind, sad and repentant, Gautama returned to the āśrama to find Cirakārī sitting silently deeply engrossed in thoughts. On seeing his father Cirakārī was perplexed and he explained to his father about the good Gautama was pleased at this and he blessed him with long life.

4) How the disciple Utāṅga was tested. Utāṅga was the best of the disciples of Gautama. So even when all the other disciples were sent away Gautama asked Utāṅga to continue as a disciple which Utāṅga did most willingly. The disciple became old with grey hair. Then taking pity on him Gautama received gurudakṣaṇā from Utāṅga and sent him away with blessings. (For details see under ‘Utanā’).

5) Curse of Ahalyā. Indra became a lover of Ahalyā and slept with her. Gautama coming to know of that cursed both Indra and Ahalyā. (For details see under ‘Ahalyā’).

6) Other details regarding Gautama.

(i) Kālmāṣpāda, King of Ayodhya, lived for twelve years as a demon following a curse of Vasīṭha. At last he took refuge in Gautama and following his advice went to Gokarṇa and doing penance there to propitiate Śiva attained moksha. (Śivāṭīrī Māleineya).

(ii) It was sage Nodhas, alias Gautama, who composed Śūkta 58, Maṇḍala one of Rgveda.

(iii) Lākṣmāṇa, brother of Śrī Rāma, constructed a palace called Vaijayanta near the āśrama of Gautama. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

(iv) Gautama is one of the seven sages (saptarṣis (Śloka 50, Chapter 133, Anuśāsana Parva).

(v) Gautama sat in the court of Brahmā and worshipped Brahmā. (M.B. Sābhā Parva).

(vi) Gautama once blessed Dyumatsena, father of Satyavān, and said that he would regain his eyesight. (Śloka 1. Chapter 298, Vana Parva).

(vii) When the war between the Pāṇḍavas and Kaṇravas broke out Gautama went to the Kurukṣetra battlefield and advised Drona to stop the battle. (Śloka 36, Chapter 190, Drona Parva).

(viii) Gautama was also one of the many sages who visited Bhīṣma while he was lying on his bed of arrows.

(ix) Once Gautama built a hermitage on the top of the mountain Pāriyātra and did penance there for sixty thousand years. Kāla, the God of time, then appeared before him and Gautama received him well and sent him away. (Śloka 10, Chapter 47, Sānti Parva).

x) Once Gautama turned the moustache of Indra green by a curse for showing disrespect to him. (Śloka 23, Chapter 352, Sānti Parva).

(xi) When Gautama was born, there was such brilliance that the surrounding darkness was removed and so the boy was named Gautama (Gau = light rays, Tamās = darkness) to mean the remover of darkness. (Śloka 94, Chapter 93, Anuśāsana Parva).

(xii) Once Gautama instructed the King Vṛṣādarbi on the evil of accepting rewards for good deeds. (Śloka 42, Chapter 93, Anuśāsana Parva).

(xiii) Gautama was also one of the rṣis who swore that they were not involved in the theft of the lotuses of the sage Agastya. (Śloka 19, Chapter 94, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

Gautama II. A brahmin who was a member of the court of Yudhīṣṭhira. He was a member of Indraśābhā also. This Gautama while he was living in Giriṛvraja had sexual relations with a Śūdra woman from the country of Uṣīnara and a son was born to them named Kaksivān. (Ślokas 17, 18 and 3 of Chapters 4, 7 and 21 respectively of Sābhā Parva, M.B.).

Gautama III. An ascetic of great erudition. He had three sons named Ekata, Dvīta and Trita. (See under ‘Ekata’). (Śloka 79, Chapter 36, Sālyā Parva).

Gautama IV. Another ascetic of great virtue. Once when this Gautama was going through the forest he saw an elephant baby lying weared. He took it to his āśrama and brought it up. When it became a full grown elephant Indra disguised as the emperor Dhṛtarāṣṭra came to take it away secretly. Gautama found it out and then he was offered thousand cows and much wealth in lieu of the elephant. But Gautama refused to part with the elephant. Pleased with his extreme affection for his dependant, Indra took both Gautama and the elephant to heaven. (Chapter 102, Anuśāsana Parva).

Gautama V. An ungrateful brahmin. He was born in Madhyadeśa. He left his parents and after travelling in many lands he came to a country of foresters. The foresters received him with respect and he lived in a hut of the foresters and married a lady from among them.

Gautama abandoned his brahminhood and accepted the duties of foresters. He was living like this when another brahmin boy came to that village. He searched in vain for a brahmin house to stay for the night and then knowing that a man born a brahmin but made a forester by his duties was living there he went to his house. Gautama also came there carrying the animals and birds he had hunted down that day. His body was bathed in blood. The brahmin guest felt compassion for Gautama and advised him to leave his trade and go to his house in his country.

In the morning the brahmin guest went away without taking any food. The advice of his guest kept him thinking. He decided to abandon his life as a hunter and so leaving everything behind he went to the sea-shore. He met some merchants on the way and while they were travelling together a wild elephant attacked them. Many were killed and Gautama escaping ran swiftly and came to the base of a big banyan tree. He was tired and slept there for a while.

A big vulture named Nāḍijārgha lived on the top of that banyan tree. He used to go out to worship Brahmā at dusk and when he returned to his abode that day he saw a man lying weared down below. Gautama attempted to catch the vulture and eat it but the vulture playing a benign host placed before Gautama food for him and made enquires about him and asked him the purpose of his travels. Gautama told him that he was very poor and that he wanted to acquire some wealth somehow.

Nāḍijārgha then said that he would get for him enough wealth from the demon-King Virūpākṣa who was an intimate friend of his. Gautama was pleased. The vulture fanned him and sent him to sleep. Next morning Nāḍijārgha sent Gautama to Virūpākṣa and the demon gave Gautama as much gold as he could carry on his shoulders.

Gautama took the gold as a head load and came back to the base of the banyan tree. Nāḍijārgha came to him and they talked to each other for some time. Gautama who had become a gluttonous flesh-eater looked with greed at the fat body of the vulture and in an instant killed it and packed the flesh along with the load of gold and went his way.
Virūpākṣa did not see Nādiṣṭhānagha for two days and he was worried. He, therefore, sent his son to the banyan tree to look for Nādiṣṭhānagha. When he reached the base of the tree he found to his grief only the bones and feathers of his father’s friend. He knew what had happened and he immediately followed the ungrateful brahmin and capturing him brought him to his father bound hand and foot. Virūpākṣa without any mercy cut him into pieces and threw them for the crows to eat. But even the crows would not eat the flesh of such an ungrateful man.
Virūpākṣa burnt the remains of Nādiṣṭhānagha in a funeral pyre. Devas assembled in the skies to watch the funeral. Then Surabhī sprinkled milk on the funeral pyre and brought back Nādiṣṭhānagha to life. The reborn vulture felt sorry for Gautama and requested Surabhī to restore to life the wretched Gautama also. Gautama also was brought back to life and he embraced Nādiṣṭhānagha. Gautama then went away with his load of gold.
Gautama returned to Sabarālaya and there married a Śūdra lady and begot evil sons. The devas were offended at this and cursing him condemned him to hell. (Chapters 168 to 173, Śāntī Parva).
Gautama I. Another name of Krṣṇa, wife of Droṇa. (See under Krṣṇa).
Gautama II. The woman called Jāṭilā belonging to the family of Gautama is known as Gautamī also. (See under Jāṭilā).
Gautamī III. A brāhmaṇī whose son succumbed to snake-bite. (See Arjuna).
Gautamī IV. A river referred to in verse 71, Chapter 165 of Anuśāsana Parva.
Gāvakṣa I. A monkey king. A terrified warrior, he helped Śrī Raṁa with 60,000 monkeys. (Vana Parva, Chapter 283, Verse 4).
Gāvakṣa II. Younger brother of Śakuni, the son of Subala. In the great war he broke into the military set up of the Pāṇḍavas. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 90). He was killed by Irāvān, son of Arjuna. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 90).
Gavalgana. Father of Saṅjaya of Mahābhārata fame. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 97).
Gavaya. A very powerful monkey King. As captain of a regiment he fought on the side of Śrī Raṁa in the Raṁa-Raṇaṇa war. (Vana Parva, Chapter 203, Verse 5).
Gavayana. (Gavamayanam). A Rajā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 107).
Gavijāta. (Śrṅgi). The son of a sage named Nāgabhuṣāna, Gavijāta cu. sed that King Parikṣit should die of snake-bite. The curse was made under the following circumstances.
King Parikṣit went hunting one day in the forest and he who chased a deer in hot haste for some distance felt naturally very weak and tired, and requested a sage he saw there in the forest for some water. Immersed in meditation the sage did not hear the King, and mistaking him to be a haughty fellow, the King, with his stick, lifted a dead snake and placed it round the neck of the sage. Yet he did not stir. The King returned to his palace.
Gavijāta, son of the sage and a devotee of Devī heard of the insult heaped on his father’s head while he was merry-making in the forest with his companions. The companions derided him by saying that though his father was Nāgabhūṣāna (having snakes as ornament) the nāga was lceless. Enraged at this and not waiting to study details about the incident he pronounced the following curse. “Whoever might be the person who threw a dead snake about my father’s neck, he will be bitten to death by Taṣṣaka within seven days from today.” Only after the curse was pronounced did he understand that it was King Parikṣit who had become the object of the curse. And, he despatched his disciple immediately to Parikṣit to inform him about the curse. The King’s reaction was, “when the time for death comes let me die.” (Devi Bhāgavata, Dvītiya Skandha).
Gavistha. A famous asura. It was he who descended on earth as king Drumascena. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67).
Gaya. A particular locality in North India (Nepal). Here there is Gaya mountain and a holy centre also. There is legend to the effect that Buddha did tapas here, People of this locality gave many presents to Yuddhiṣthira. (Śāntī Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 16).
Gaya I. See Gāyatīrtha.
1) General. A King of ancient India Gaya was a Rājārṣi and son of Amūrtarayas. The Rājārṣi had conducted many yajñas. A very well-known yajña of his is described in verse 18, Chapter 75 of Vana Parva.
2) Particular Information. (1) Gaya was a member in Yamarāja’s assembly. (Śāntī Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 18).
(2) He had earned reputation and wealth by visiting the sacred temples in India. (Vana Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 18).
(3) The Rājārṣi had come in his vimāna (aeroplane) to witness the fighting between Arjuna and Krpācārya in the war, which broke out as a result of the Kauravas lifting the crows of the Vīrāṭa King. (Vīrāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 9).
(4) Śrī Krṣṇa met Gaya on his (Krṣṇa’s) way to Hastināpura from Dvārakā. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 27).
(5) Once King Mānḍhātā subdued Gaya. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 62, Verse 10).
(6) Sarasvatī devī once attended a yajña conducted by Gaya, assuming for herself the name Viśālī.
(7) He once gifted away land to Brahmins. (Śāntī Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 25).
(8) Gaya did not eat flesh. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 59).
Gaya II. A king born to Āyu, the son of King Pururavas by his (Āyu’s) wife Svarbhānu (Svarbha- navī). This Gaya was the brother of Nāhuṣa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 25).
Gaya III. An asura. (See Gāyatīrtha).
Gaya IV. A king born in the dynasty of the famous emperor Prthu. Prthu had two sons called Antardhāna and Vādi. A son called Havirdhāna was born to Antar-dhāna by Śikhandī; he (Havirdhāna) married Dhīsāṇa born in the family of Agni and they had six sons called Prācinabarhiṣ, Śukra, Gaya, Krṣṇa, Vraja and Ajīna. (Harivanaṭha, Chapter 2, Verse 31).
Gaya V. A King, a descendant of Dhriva. (Āgni Purāṇa, Chapter 16).
GAYAKA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Sloka 67, Chapter 83, Salya Parva).

GAYAPARVATAM. A sacred mountain. Yamaraṇa honored it on a particular occasion. Brahmāsuras encircled by the Devas is on this mountain. To perform the Śrīḍha rites of the dead at Brahmāsuras is considered to be excellent. (See Gayāṭīrtha).

GAYAŚĪRAS. A peak of Gayā Mountain; it is also known as Gayāśīṛṣa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 87).

GAYAŚĪRṢA. See Gayāśīras.

GAYĀṬĪRTHA. The following story is told in the Agni Purāṇa about the origin of this very reputed sacred place at Gayā.

An asura called Gayā was once performing tapas here. As the intensity of his tapas went on increasing, the Devas got nervous and they approached Viṣṇu with the request that he should save them from Gayāsura. Viṣṇu agreed to oblige them. Meantime the intensity of Gayā's tapas increased daily. Ultimately Viṣṇu appeared to Gayā and as requested by him granted him the boon to the effect that he would become more holy and sanctified than all the tirthas in the world.

Brahmā and other Devas became afraid of Gayā's power and prowess and they complained about him to Viṣṇu, who advised Brahmā to request Gayā for his body in order to perform a yajña. Brahmā did so and Gayā lay down on earth so that the Yajñā might be performed on his body. Brahmā began the yajña on his head, and made an offering when the body of Gayā was not stationary or quiet. When told about this fact Viṣṇu called up Dharmadeva (See Marci, Para 3) and told him thus: "You please hold devaśīlā (a divine stone) on the body of Gayā, and let all the Devas sit upon it, and I shall be seated on the stone along with the Devas, holding the gada (club) in my hands."

Dharmadeva did as he was bidden by Viṣṇu. The body of Gayā stopped shaking as soon as Viṣṇu sat upon the stone, and Brahmā made the full offerings. Thenceforth the place became a holy tirtha under the name Gayā.

After the yajña was over Brahmā gave the Gayā temple 20,000 yards (5 Krosā) in extent with 55 villages attached to it as dakṣinā (fee) to the masters of the ceremony. Brahmā presented the villages to them after creating therein hills purely of gold, rivers flowing with milk and honey, houses built of Gold and silver etc. But the brahmins who got these gifts stayed on there, their avarice only on the increase perhaps. Angry at this Brahmā cursed the people of Gayā, and according to it the brahmins became illiterate and evil-minded; rivers flowed with water instead of milk and honey. The brahmins lamenting over their evil fate submitted their grievances before Brahmā, who consol¬ed them thus: Well, brahmins of Gayā, as long as there exist the sun and the moon you will continue to be dependent upon the Gayā tirtha for your sustenance. Whoever comes to Gayā and gives offerings to you and performs the due rites for the souls of the departed, the souls of hundred generations of his ancestors will be transferred from hell to heaven where they will attain final beatitude."

Thus did Gayāṭīrtha become famous. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 144).

GAYĀṬīRI. One of the seven horses of Śūrya. The other horses are Brhati, Uṣṇik, Jagati, Trīṣūbh, Anuṣṭubh, and Paṅkti. (Chapter 8, Aṃśam 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

GAYATRĪ II.

1) General information. A glorious Vedic mantra. This mantra has twentyfour letters. There are nineteen categories of movable and immovable things in this world and to this if the five elements are added the number twentyfour is obtained. That is why the Gayatī has got twentyfour letters. (Chapter 4, Bhoṣma Parva). At the time of 'Trīpura dahana Śiva hung this Gayatī mantra as a string on the top of his chariot (Chapter 34, Karṇa Parva).

2) The glory of Gayatī. If one recites Gayatī once one will be freed from all sins done at that time; if one recites it ten times all the sins done on one day will be washed away. Thus, if one recites it a hundred times the sins of one month; thousand times, the sins of a year; one lakh times, the sins of his life time; ten lakh times, the sins of his previous birth; hundred lakh times, the sins of all his births, will be washed away. If a man recites it ten crore times he becomes a realised soul and attains mokṣa. (Navama Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

3) How to recite Gayatī. It should be recited sitting still with your head slightly drawn downwards with your right palm open upwards, with the fingers raised and bent to give the shape of the hood of a snake. Starting from the centre of the ring-finger and counting down and going up through the centre of the small finger and touching the top lines on the ring, middle and forefingers, count down to the base of the forefinger, you get number ten. This is how the number of recitations is counted. This method is called the Kāramādā (hand rosary) method. This is not the only method that could be used. You can use a rosary made of lotus seeds or glass beads. If you are using lotus seeds you should select white seeds for the rosary. (Navama Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

GAYATRĪSTHĀNA. A sacred place of northern Bha¬rata. If one spends one night here one will get the ben¬fit of giving away as gifts a thousand cows. (Sloka 28, Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

GERU. A mineral obtained from mountains. (Sloka 95, Chapter 158, Vana Parva).

GH (❣). This letter has two meanings: (1) Bell (2) a blow or assault; striking or killing. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

GHANAPĀTHA. A particular system of Vedic studies. There are four such systems. The system of separating each word from conjunctions and combinations and combining with the word just before and after it is called Jātāpāṭha. Jātāpāṭha means joined or combined Pāṭha. Ghanapāṭha is there to avoid errors in Jātāpāṭha. Ghanapāṭha consists of padapāṭha and Kramapāṭha.

In Padapāṭha the split words are once more combined and Prātiṣākhya lays down the rules to combine words. It is because of this scientific system of reciting that the Rigveda remains to this day pure in text without different readings.

GHANṬA. I. A brahmin born in Vasiṣṭha's family. He spent hundred years worshipping Śiva. Once Ghanṭa asked sage Devala to give his daughter in marriage to him. But Ghanṭa's ugliness stood in the way. So he abducted the daughter of the sage and married her. Enraged at this Devala cursed and turned him into an owl. He was also given redemption from the curse that he would regain his form the day he helped Indra-dyumna. (Skanda Purāṇa).

GAṬA II. See under Gaṭākārṇa.

GAṬĀKĀRṇA I.

1) General. Gaṇḍha and Karṇa were two Rākṣas brothers who attained salvation by worshipping Viṣṇu. (Bhāgavata, daśama Skandha). But the elder brother, Gaṇḍha alone is sometimes called by the name Gaṇḍhakārṇa in the Purāṇas.

2) Birth. There is a reference in Dārukavadha (killing of Dārukaśura) about the birth of Gaṇḍhakārṇa. Dāruka, after having secured a boon from Brahmā, used to harass the world too much and when his deprecation became unbearable Śiva created Bhadrakāli from his third eye and she killed the asura. Mandodari wife of Dāruka and daughter of Maya was sunk in grief at the death of her husband. She began to do tapas. Śiva appeared and gave her a few drops of sweat from his body saying that the person on whom she sprinkled the sweat drops would suffer from small-pox and that such patients would worship her (Mandodari) and supply her necessary food. From that day onwards Mandodari became the presiding deity over small-pox. On her way back to the earth with the sweat-drops Mandodari met Bhadrakāli at whom she threw the sweatdrops to take revenge for her husband’s death. Immediately Bhadrakāli fell down with an attack of small-pox. Hearing about the misfortune Śiva created a terrible Rākṣasa called Gaṇḍhakārṇa. According to Śiva’s directions Gaṇḍhakārṇa licked off the small-pox from Bhadrakāli’s body. But, when he tried to lick it off from her face she prevented him saying that she and Gaṇḍhakārṇa were sister and brother and that it was improper for the brother to lick the face of the sister. And, even to this day the small-pox on Bhadrakāli’s face remains as an ornament to her.

3) The name Gaṇḍhakārṇa. This Rākṣasa, at first, was an enemy of Viṣṇu, and did not tolerate even the mention of Viṣṇu’s name. Therefore, he went about always wearing a bell so that the tinkling of it warded off the name of Viṣṇu from entering his ears. Because he wore a gaṇḍha (bell) in his Karṇas (ears) he came to be known as Gaṇḍhakārṇa. (M.B. Bhaviṣya Parva, Chapter 80).

4) Turned out to be a devoted of Viṣṇu. Gaṇḍhakārṇa became a servant of Kubera. Once he did tapas for salvation. Śiva appeared and asked him to do tapas to please Viṣṇu as Viṣṇu was greater than himself (Śiva). From that day onwards he removed the bells from his ears and became a devotee of Viṣṇu. (Bhaviṣya Parva, Chapter 80).

5) Attained salvation. Handing over charge of government to Sātyaki Śrī Krṣṇa once went to Kailāsa mounted on Garuḍa to see Śiva. On his way he dismounted at the Badaryārama, and while sitting deep in meditation there he heard the thundering voice of Pāścas (souls of dead people roaming about without attaining salvation). He also heard the barking of dogs, and thus he understood that Pāścas were hunting animals. The hunters came to Krṣṇa’s presence. They were led by Gaṇḍhakārṇa who was reciting the name of Viṣṇu. Śrī Krṣṇa felt pity for him. Gaṇḍhakārṇa told Krṣṇa that his aim and ambition were to see Viṣṇu and that Śiva had blessed that he would realise his ambition at Badaryārama. Pleased at this, Śrī Krṣṇa revealed his Viṣṇavāpa (representing in his person the whole universe), and at once Gaṇḍhakārṇa brought half of the corpse of a brahmin and submitted it as a present before the Lord. He explained to Krṣṇa that according to the custom of the Rākṣasas that was the best present which could be made. Without accepting the present Krṣṇa patted Gaṇḍhakārṇa on his back with the result that he cast off his body and rose up to Vaikuṇṭha. (Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Chapters 80-82 and also Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha).

6) Gaṇḍhakārṇa Pratīṣṭhā. (Installation of his idol in temples). Though Gaṇḍhakārṇa was a Rākṣasa, as he attained Vaikuṇṭha due to the blessings of God Almighty his idol is still installed in temples and worshipped. The installation ceremony is described in Chapter 59 of the Agni Purāṇa thus: “Gaṇḍhakārṇa should have 18 hands. He cures diseases born as a result of sins. He holds in his right hand Vajra, sword, Cakra, arrow etc. And in his left hand broom, sword, cord bell, pickaxe etc. He also holds the trīśula (trident). Gaṇḍhakārṇa who turned out to be a Deva is believed to cure small-pox.

GAṬĀKĀRṇA II. One of the four attendants presented by Brahmā to Subrahmaṇya. Nandisena, Lohitākṣa, Gaṇḍhakārṇa and Kumudamāli are the four attendants. (Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verses 23-24).

GAṬTODARĀ. An asura, who was a member of Varuṇa’s assembly. (Sāhī Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 134).

GAHRAMA. A King of the Aīga royal dynasty.

GAṬA. An urban area in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 63).

GAṬA. A notorious thief. He had a friend called Karpara. They were jointly known as Gaṇḍhakarparas. Once both the friends went to commit theft. Leaving Gaṭa at the door-steps Karpara entered the chamber of the princess when, after enjoying sexual pleasures with him gave him some money asking him to repeat such visits in future. Karpara told Gaṭa all that had happened and handed over to him the money which the princess had given him. Karpara went again to the princess. But owing to the weariness caused by the night’s enjoyment both the princess and he slept till late in the morning. Meantime the palace guards found out the secret and took the lovers into custody. Karpara was sentenced to death and led out to be hanged. Gaṭa was present on the spot and Karpara asked him secretly to save the princess. Accordingly Gaṭa, without anybody knowing about it, took the princess over to his house.

The King ordered enquiries about the absence of the princess. Under the natural presumption that some relation or other of Karpara alone might have carried away his daughter the King ordered the guards of Karpara’s corpse to arrest anybody who approached the corpse and expressed grief. Gaṭa came to know of this secret order of the King. Next day evening Gaṭa posing himself as a drunkard and with a servant disguised as a woman walking in front and with another servant carrying rice mixed with dhatūrā (a poisonous fruit) following him came to the guards keeping watch over Karpata's body. Ghaṭa gave the poisoned rice to the guards who after eating it swooned under the effect. Ghaṭa used the opportunity to burn the corpse of Karpata there itself. After that Ghaṭa disappeared.

The King then deputed new guards to watch over the funeral pyre of Karpata as he anticipated some one to come to pick his charred bones from the pyre. But, Ghaṭa put the guards into a swoon by a mantra he had learned from a sannyāsin and went away with the bones of his friend.

Realising now that further stay there was not safe Ghaṭa left the place with the princess and the sannyāsin. But, the princess, who had already fallen in love with the sannyāsin poisoned Ghaṭa to death.

GHAṬAJĀNUKA. A sage who was a prominent member in Yudhishṭhira's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4). Once, Śrī Kṛṣṇa, on his way to Hastinapura met this sage. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 38).

GHAṬAKARPĀRA. One of the nine great poets in Sanskrit reputed as the nine gems in Vikramādiya's court.

"Dhanvantari—Kṣapaṇak Āmarasinhā—Śaṅku—Vetālabhāṭṭa—Ghaṭakarpāra—Kālīdāsā". A poem of twenty-two verses in Sanskrit called Ghaṭakarpāra kāvyā is attributed to him. The theme of the poem is a message despatched by the hero to his wife who has only recently been married. All the stanzas are in yamaka (repeating a word or set of words to convey different meanings at the end of each line). By composing a poem called 'Nala dyāya', Kālīdāsā answered the challenge posed by Ghaṭakarpāra in the use of Yamaka. Ghaṭakarpāra answered Kālīdāsā in the following stanza.

Eko hi doṣo guṇasannipāte nīmaiditindoriti yo babhāse / īnaṁ na drṣṭaṁ kavināpi tena dāridryadoso guparāśināśi. //

(Kālīdāsā, in verse 3, Canto 1 of Kumāranāthava had written 'Eko hi doṣo guṇasannipāte nīmaiditindoritā kiranvāśivānhā'). In the above verse by Ghaṭakarpāra the usage 'Kavināpi tena' may be interpreted in two ways, viz. Kavinā+api+tena and Kavi+nāpītena. By the second combination Ghaṭakarpāra converted Kālīdāsā into a barber (nāpita).

GHAṬIKĀ. A measure of time equal to 24 minutes. Sixty viṇāḍikās make one Ghaṭikā. (See Kālamāña).

GHAṬOTKACA

1) General. Ghaṭotkaca, son of Bhīmasena played a very important part in the story of Mahābhārata. He was, from his very birth, a staunch friend and ally of the Pāṇḍavas. He courted a hero's death in the great war.

2) Birth. On the burning of the 'lax Palace' the Pāṇḍavas escaped through a tunnel and reached a forest. While they were sleeping on the ground, Hidimba the Rākṣasa chief in the forest saw the Pāṇḍavas from the top of a tree, and he deputed his sister Hidimbi to bring over the Pāṇḍavas to him for food.

Hidimbi approached the Pāṇḍavas in the guise of a beautiful woman. She was attracted towards Bhīma and she prayed for the return of his love, which Bhīma refused. Impatient at the delay Hidimbi rushed towards the Pāṇḍavas, and in the duel that ensued between him and Bhīma, he was killed by Bhīma.

Then Hidimbi approached Kuntī and requested her to ask Bhīma to marry her. The Pāṇḍavas agreed to the proposal on condition that Bhīma and Hidimbi should enjoy their honeymoon in the forest and on mountains, but Bhīma should return to them at dusk everyday. Ghaṭotkaca was the son born to Bhīma and Hidimbi, (Ādi Parva, Chapter 155).

Indra bestowed on Ghaṭotkaca prowess enough to be a suitable opponent to Karṇa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 155, Verse 47).

Ghaṭotkaca grew up to become a good friend of the Pāṇḍavas. When Hidimbi and Ghaṭotkaca took leave of them Kuntī said to Ghaṭotkaca : “You are the eldest son to the Pāṇḍavas. You should be ever a support to them.” To this Ghaṭotkaca answered that he would return to them whenever any need arose for it.

3) Carried the Pāṇḍavas on shoulders. During their exile in the forest the Pāṇḍavas became too tired to walk any further when Bhīma remembered Ghaṭotkaca, who promptly appeared before the Pāṇḍavas, and at the instance of Bhīma got down a number of Rākṣasas also. Ghaṭotkaca carrying Pāṇḍavas on his shoulders, and the Rākṣasas carrying the Pāṇḍava brothers on their shoulders went by air to Badarikāśrama where Naraṇārayanas were doing tapas, landed there there, and then they (Ghaṭotkaca and his companions) took leave of the Pāṇḍavas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 145).

4) Ghaṭotkaca in the great war. (1) In the first day’s fighting he fought against Alambuṣa, Duryodhana and Bhagadatta. Frightened at the terrible course of the fight the Kauravas purposely postponed that day’s fighting. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapters, 45, 57, 58).

(2) He defeated the King of Vaśiga and killed his elephant. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 36).

(3) Defeated Vikarṇa. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 36).

(4) On receiving blows from the great Kaurava heroes, Ghaṭotkaca rose up to the sky. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 93, Verse 6).

(5) Ghaṭotkaca made the Kaurava army take to their heels by the exercise of his magic powers. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 41-47).

(6) Fought a duel with Durmukha. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 13).

(7) Dhṛtarāṣṭra praised the prowess of Ghaṭotkaca. (Drona Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 62).

(8) He fought with Alāyudha. (Drona Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 27).

(9) Killed Alāmūṣa. (Drona Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 28).

(10) Aśvatthāmā, son of Drona killed Aṇjana Parvā, son of Ghaṭotkaca, (Drona Parva, Chapter 156, Verse 56).

(11) Ghaṭotkaca fought with Karṇa. (Drona Parva, Chapter 175).

(12) He fought with Jaṭāsura. (Drona Parva, Chapter 174).

(13) He killed Alāyudha. (Drona Parva, Chapter 178, Verse 31).

(14) Karṇa clashed with Ghaṭotkaca and failing to kill him by any means he (Karṇa) used Vaijayantī Sakti as the last resort. This Sakti had been given to him by Indra in exchange for his head-gear and ear-rings, and Karṇa had been keeping the Sakti in reserve to kill Arjuna. At any rate Karṇa used it against Ghatotkaca and he was killed. After killing Ghatotkaca the Sakti entered the sphere of the stars. (Drona Parva, Chapter 180).

5) Other information. (1) Ghatotkaca hated the brahmmins and their yajñas. (Drona Parva, Chapter 181, Verse 27).

(2) When the souls of the heroes killed in the great war were called upon the banks of Ganga by Vyasa, Ghatotkaca’s soul too had appeared. (Aśramavāsika Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 8).

(3) After death he lived with Yaksadevas. (Svāgaro- haṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 37).

GHATOTKACAVADHAPARVA. A sub Parva of Drona Parva, (Drona Parva, Chapters 153-156).

GHIRA. A son of sage Angiras. (Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 131).

GHORAKA (M). Name of an urban region in the south-west of ancient India. The people of this region supplied money to Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 14).

GHOSĀ. A tapasvīni famed in Rgveda. She was the grand-daughter of Drigata maharṣi and daughter of sage Kakṣīvan. As she contracted leprosy in her very childhood nobody came forward to marry her. Ultimately she composed a mantra in praise of Āsvinidevas. They cured Ghosā of leprosy and she got married. (Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 17, Sūkta 117).

GHOṆAVATI. The famous Vīṇā of emperor Udayana. (Kāthāsarasītāgara).

GHOŚAYĀTTRAPARVA. A sub-Parva, Chapters 236-251 of the Vana Parva. The procession made by Durvodyaṇa and others to the Pāṇḍavas who lived in the forest forms the theme of this sub-Parva.

GHRANASRAVAS. An attendant of Skanda. Always immersed in yoga he worked for the welfare of brahmmins. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 57).

GHIRTA. A King of the Āṅga dynasty. He was the son of Gharman and father of Vidūṣa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

GHRṬACI. 1) General. She was an exceptionally beautiful apsara woman, and she revelled in disturbing the peace of the sages and becoming mother of children by them. Ghrṭaci, who succeeded in breaking the penance of the sages like Kuśanābha, Vyāsa and Bharadvāja occupied a very prominent position among apsara women.

2) Śuka, the son of Vyāsa. Vyāsa longed very much to have a son. Ultimately, after receiving instruction and advice from Nārada, he reached the peaks of Mahāmeru and worshipped Mahādeva and Mahādevi for one year with the one-syllabled mantra OM which is the very seed of word. By now the great tejas (effulgence) of Vyāsa lighted up the whole world, and Indra got furious and upset. The great Lord Śiva appeared on the scene and blessed Vyāsa that he will have a son who would become a very wise man, very much interested in helping others, and very famous also. Vyāsa returned gratified to his āśrama. One day, while in the process of preparing the sticks for producing fire, thoughts about a son passed through his mind. Fire is produced by the rubbing of two sticks. But, he thought, how could he who had no wife, become the father of a son? While immersed in such thoughts he saw Ghrṭaci standing near him, herself having come along the sky. Vyāsa did not like the presence of Ghrṭaci. Fearing the curse of Vyāsa she assumed the form of a parrot and flew away.

The beauty of Ghrṭaci as also the flight of the parrot kindled erotic feelings in Vyāsa and seminal emission occurred. The semen fell on the stick used for producing fire, and without knowing the fact he went on using the sticks for producing fire. And, then did appear from it a son of divine lustre. That son became reputed in later years as sage Śuka. (Devi Bhāgavata, Prathama Skandha).

3) Two children by Bharadvāja. Once sage Bharadvāja was taking his bath in the Ganga, Ghrṭaci also came to bathe. On the banks of the river her clothes caught something and were removed from their position. The sight of it caused seminal emission to the Sage. The semen thus emitted was kept in a Drona, (bamboo cup) and when it was due the Drona broke and out of it came a child. It was this child which, in later years, became so very famous as the great Dronācārya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 149). On another occasion also, the sight of Ghrṭaci caused emission in Bharadvāja, and Śrūtavatī or Śrūvavatī was the noble daughter born out of it. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 63).

Hundred daughters of Kuśanābha. Kuśanābha, son of Kuṣa was a saintly king. Once Kuśanābha fell in love with Ghrṭaci and a hundred daughters were born to him of her. Once Wind-God felt enamoured of the hundred girls, but they refused to satisfy his desire. So he cursed them to become crooked or bent down in body. Later on, Brahmadatta, son of the sage Cūli, straightened their bodies and married them. (Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Canto 32).

5) Birth of Ruru. On another occasion Ghrṭaci attracted and subjugated a King called Pramati. Ruru was the son born to Pramati by Ghrṭaci.

6) Other information. (1) Once Ghrṭaci pleased Sage Aśṭāvakra, who introduced her into Kubera’s assembly. (Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 44).

(2) Ghrṭaci danced at the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 65).

(3) A daughter called Cītrāṅgadā was born to Viśvakarman by Ghrṭaci. (See under Viśvakarmā).

(4) A daughter called Devavatī was born to Ghrṭaci. (See under Devavatī).

GHRṬAPAS A great sage who lived on ghee. A disciple of Brahmā he was an instructor of Sanātana Dharma. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 24).

GHRṬAPRṢṬHA. A son of Priyavrata, brother of Utānāpāda. Śvāyambhumavanu had two famous sons called Priyavrata and Utānāpāda. Priyavrata, the elder son, married two daughters of Viśvakarmaprajāpati called Surūpā and Barhismati, and of Surūpā were born ten sons called Agnīdhra, Idmājivha, Yajītabha, Mahāvīra, Rukmaṇuktra, Ghrṭapṛṣṭha, Savana, Medhabīthi and Viśhotra, and also one daughter called Urjasvati. (Devi Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

GHRṬAVATI. An important river in India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 23).
GHRTYEYU. A King born in the Aṅga dynasty. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

GHURNIKA. Foster mother of Devayāni, daughter of Śukrācārya. (Adī Parva, Chapter 78, Verse 25).

GILGAMİŞ. It is the most ancient book of the Babylonians. It is as old as Ṛgveda. Another book so old as these is the “Book of the Dead” of the Egyptians. (See under Jalapralaya).

GIRIGAHVARA. A place of habitation on the north-eastern side of Bhārata. (Śloka 42, Chapter 9, Bhīśma Parva).

GIRIKĀ. Wife of Upariearavasu. This gem of a lady was the daughter of the river Śuktimati. There is a story behind her marrying Uparicara. Śuktimati was a river flowing through the capital city of Kolāhala driven by amorous desires subdued Śuktimati. The next morning on finding no river in its place the people were surprised. The news reached the ears of the King. He became furious and rushing to the mountain gave it a hard kick. It created a hole in the mountain and the river flowed through it. But by that time Kolāhala had got a son and a daughter of Śuktimati. Greatly pleased at the King for setting her free from Kolāhala, Śuktimati gave her children to the King. The King brought up the son and made him the chief of his army. The girl was brought up and named Girikā and when she was of marriagable age the King married her. When once Girikā was having her monthly period the King was forced to go to the forests for hunting. While in the forests he saw the animals having sexual acts and as he thought of Girikā at home he had emission. He never wanted to waste the seminal fluid. He wrapped it in a leaf and sent it to his wife through a kite. Another kite thinking it to be something to eat attacked the packet and it fell into a river down below. A fish swallowed it and later when a fisherman caught it and opened its belly a boy and a girl came out of it. The girl was Satyavati mother of Vyāsa. (10th Skandha, Devi Bhāgavata).

GIRINĀTHADIKSİTA. See under Guṇanidhi, Giriprastra. A mountain of the country of Nisadhā. Indra once hid himself on this mountain. (Śloka 13, Chapter 315, Vana Parva).

GIRIVRAJA. A city which has gained great importance in all the Purāṇas of India.

1) Origin. There was once a King named Kuśa in the Pūru dynasty. (For genealogy see under ‘Gādhi’). This Kuśa begot of his wife, Vaidarbhī, four sons named Kuśāmha, Kuśānābha, Āśūtaranasa and Vasu. Each of them built a city of his own and started his rule there. Girivraja is the magnificent city built by Vasu. (Sarga 32, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

2) Jarāsandha’s rule. Vasu had a son named Bhradhratha and Jarāsandha was the son of Bhradhratha. During the rule of Jarāsandha Girivraja became glorious like Nandanodyāna. This city lying in the midst of five mountains was the seat of prosperity then. (Chapter 21, Sabhā Parva). Jarāsandha kept many mighty kings of his time, as prisoners in this city. Unable to control his wrath against Kṛṣṇa once he hurled his mace a hundred times and threw it from Girivraja to Mathurā. Śri Kṛṣṇa, Bhīmasena and Arjuna entered Girivraja in disguise and engaging Jarāsandha in a duel killed him and crowned his son as King. (Chapter 24, Sabhā Parva). Once King Duṇḍumāra abandoning the gifts offered by the devas came and slept in Girivraja. (Śloka 39, Chapter 6, Anuśasana Parva).

GIRITĀ. See under Bhagavad Gītā.

GITAPRIYĀ. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 7, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

GITAVIYĀDHARA. A great musician among the sanadhvaras. When he found that sage Pulastya had no liking for music he teased the sage by making the sounds of a boar. The enraged sage cursed him and turned him into a boar. He got relief from the curse when Ikvyāku killed him and Gitaviyādhara became his old self again. (Chapter 46, Śrīti Kāṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

GĪTHĀ. A King of the Bharata dynasty. (5th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

GOR. (GAU). A wife of sage Pulastya. Vaishravaṇa was born of her. The son left his father and went to Brahmā. (Śloka 12, Chapter 274, Vana Parva).

GOBHĪŅU. A King who was the grandson of Turvasu of the Pūru dynasty and son of King Varga, Gobhīnu had a son named Traśāṇi. (Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa).

GODĀ. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 28, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

GODĀṆA. In ancient India it was believed to be a great god of moral merit to give cows as gifts. If one buys cows with the hereditary wealth and give them as gifts one would reach an ever prosperous world and even one who buys cows with the money received by gambling and gives them as gifts would live for several years enjoying prosperity. (Chapter 73, Anuśasana Parva).

GODĀVARI. A river of South India. This river has been glorified much in the Purāṇas.

1) Godāvari is a member of the court of Varuṇa. (Śloka 20, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

2) This river originates from Brahmagiri, situated near Tryambakajyotirlinga of Nasik district in South India. The river is very deep and is a giver of prosperity to those who worship her. Many sages worshipped this river. (Śloka 2, Chapter 88, Vana Parva).

3) If one bathes in this river one will get the benefit of conducting a Gomedha yajña. Not only that, after his death he will go to the land of Vāsuki. (Śloka 33, Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

4) The origin of Agni is from Godāvari. (Śloka 24, Chapter 222, Vana Parva).

5) Śrī Rāma, Lākṣmaṇa and Sītā stayed for a long time during their exile in Paścavaṭī on the shores of this river Godāvari. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranya Kāṇḍa, Saras 16).

6) Godāvari is one of the most important rivers of India. (Śloka 14, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

7) He who bathes in Godāvari will be prosperous. (Śloka 29, Chapter 25, Anuśasana Parva).

GODHA. A village in the north-east part of ancient India. (Śloka 42, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

GODILA I. A Śāmadevamūrti. By his curse Utathya became a dunece and later became famous as Satyapatas. (For details see under Satyapatas).

GODILA II. A servant of Vaishravana. Once when Godila was travelling by air he saw Padmāvati, wife of Ugrasena, King of Vidarbha, bathing in a pond along with her companions. The very sight of the enchanting Padmāvatī roused carnal passions in him and the Yakṣa took the form of Ugrasena and started singing from the top of a hillock nearby. Padmāvatī went to him because she mistook him for her husband. Embracing her passionately the Yakṣa outraged her modesty. Subtle differences in the act created doubts in Padmāvatī and, on being questioned, the Yakṣa told the truth and left the place. (Chapter 49, Padma Purāṇa).

GOHARANAPARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of Mahābhārata. See under ‘Mahābhārata’.

GOHATYĀ. In ancient India killing of cows was considered to be a great sin. It is interesting to note the punishment prescribed for this crime in the Agni Purāṇa. For one month he should drink barley water only. He should live in a cow-shed wearing the hide of the cow he has killed. He can have some suppers and that too without salt. He must bathe for two months in cow's urine. During day time he should follow the cows looking after their comfort. He should drink the menstrual discharge with his face lifted upwards. Fasting, he should give away as charity ten cows and a bull. If not, he should give as charity all his wealth to god-fearing brahmins. If a man only stops the cow for others to kill he should bear a fourth of the punishment; if he stops and ties it for killing he should bear half of the punishment and if he stops it, ties it and gives the weapon for killing he should bear three-fourths of the punishment. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 159).

GOKHALI. One of the disciples in the tradition of Vyāsa. He was the direct disciple of Sākalya. Sākalya divided the branch of Veda he received into six and gave one to each of the following six disciples: Vālgāyana, Maudgalya, Śāli, Ādīśiṣṭa, Gokhali, and Yātuṅkara. (Skandha 12, Bhāgavata).

GOKARṆA I. See under Gokarna.

GOKARṆA II. An incarnation of Śiva. In the seventh Varāhakalpa Śiva was born as Gokarṇa and he then got four sons named, Kaśyapa, Uṣanas, Cyavana and Bhṛgaspati. (Sarvatṛkaṇḍa, Śiva Purāṇa).

GOKARṆA. In the great battle Karna sent a serpent-missile against Arjuna. The serpent named Aśvasena was the power behind the missile and Gokarṇa was the mother of that serpent. (Sloka 42, Chapter 90, Karna Parva).

GOKARṆA. A sacred place of Purānic importance situated on the extreme north of Kerala.

(1) Origin. There was once on the banks of the river, Tungabhadra, a village made sacred and prosperous by the brahmins who lived there. In that village lived a noble brahmin named Ātmadeva. His wife was a quarrelsome woman named Dhumadhuli. Even after many years of married life they got no children and Ātmadeva, greatly grief-stricken, left his home and went to the forests. He was sitting on the shore of a lake after quenching his thirst from it when a Sannyāsin came that way. Ātmadeva told him about his domestic life and pleaded that he should suggest a way to get a son for him. The sannyāsin sat in meditation for some time and contemplated on the horoscope of Ātmadeva and regretfully informed him that according to his horoscope he was to have no children for seven successive births. He, therefore, advised Ātmadeva to abandon all his worldly pleasures and accept sannyāsa for the rest of his life. But Ātmadeva was not to be discourage by this prophecy and he urged the sannyāsin to help him somehow to get a child. The sannyāsin then gave him a fruit and asked him to give it to his wife and ask her to observe a life of fasting for a period of one year.

Greatly pleased with this boon Ātmadeva returned to his house and told his wife all that had happened and gave her the fruit. She liked to eat the fruit but a year's fasting seemed troublesome to her. She was thinking of how to get over this difficulty when her younger sister came to her and suggested a plan. She said “Sister, I am pregnant. I shall give you the child I deliver. You can declare it as your child and make your husband believe so. You can announce in public that you have eaten the fruit and have consequently become pregnant. We can, to test its merit, give the fruit to a cow.” Dhumadhuli liked the plan very much and so did everything like that.

The news that Dhumadhuli was pregnant spread in the city. Very soon her sister gave birth to a child and that child was proclaimed as the child of Dhumadhuli. On the pretext that Dhumadhuli was short of breast-milk her sister started doing the breast-feeding. The child was named Dhumadhukari.

After three months the cow that ate the fruit delivered a child. The ear of the child was like that of a cow and so he was called Gokarṇa. Dhumadhukari and Gokarṇa grew together. Dhumadhukari became a very evil-natured boy while Gokarṇa grew into a scholarly one. Dhumadhukari who was the very seat of everything bad made the life of their parents wretched and the disappointed Ātmadeva renounced all and went to the forests and did penance and attained mokṣa. Unable to bear the torture by her son, Dhumadhuli committed suicide by jumping into a well. Gokarṇa started on a pilgrimage.

Dhumadhukari lived in his own house surrounded by prostitutes. Thieving was his only means of livelihood. Knowing this the servants of the king started to capture Dhumadhukari and the prostitutes who lived with him, for their safety, bound Dhumadhukari with ropes and put him into fire and killed him. The soul of Dhumadhukari became a great phantom. Hearing the news of the death of his brother, Gokarṇa returned home. He conducted a śrāddha at Gaya to give peace to the soul of his departed brother. But the phantom of Dhumadhukari, was not pacified. This phantom troubled him always. Gokarṇa was not afraid of it and asked him what he wanted and the phantom pleaded that in some way Gokarṇa should get him absolved of all his sins. Gokarṇa then consulted Pandits to know what method should be adopted to save a soul which could not be saved even by a Gaya-Śrāddha. The Pandits advised him to do penance to propitiate the Sun. The Sun who appeared before Gokarṇa as a result of his penance declared that if he did read the entire Bhāgavata in seven days Dhumadhukari would get mokṣa. So Gokarṇa performed a Saptāha and among those who assembled to hear it was the phantom of Dhumadhukari also. The phantom finding no place to sit crept into a seven-layered bamboo and sat there listening to Gokarṇa. When the first day was over the first layer broke and it went on like that every day and on the seventh day the seventh layer broke and when Gokarna finished the twelfth Skandha the phantom rose from the bamboo to heaven. When it was going to heaven it looked at Gokarna and told him that his moksa was due to the result of his hearing the saptaha reading. When Gokarna asked him why none of the others who heard it said he it was because none had heard it with such rapt attention as he had done.

Gokarna then conducted another reading of Saptaha and the people present heard the same with rapt attention. When the reading was over, a chariot of Viṣṇu from Vaikuṇṭha descended and carried away all those who heard the reading. The place where Gokarna sat and read the Saptaha became known later as the famous Gokarna. (Chapters 1 to 3, Bhāgavata Māhātmya).

2) Mitrashā and Gokarna. A King of Ayodhyā named Mitrashā who became famous by the name of Kalmāśapāda, became a demon by a curse of Vasiṣṭha. He attained mokṣa by living and worshipping God in the temple at Gokarna. (See under Śīvarātrī for details).

3) Gokarna and the origin of Kerala. Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa gives a story associating Gokarna with the origin of Kerala.

By the request of Bhagiratha the river Gaṅgā fell on earth and flowing as different brooks emptied its waters in the ocean. The level of the water in the ocean went up and the temple of Gokarna and the land of Kerala were submerged in waters. The sages who were in the temple somehow escaped and took refuge on the mountain Sahya. Paṇātṣurāma was doing penance there then and the sages went to him and told him of their plight. Paṇātṣurāma went and stood in Gokarna and threw an axe to the south. All the land from Gokarna up to the place where the axe fell rose up from the ocean to form a piece of land which was named Kerala. (Chapter 97 of Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

4) Other Purāṇic details regarding Gokarna. (i) Bhagiratha did penance to bring Gaṅgādevī to Earth at Gokarna. (Sarga 12, Chapter 42, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

(ii) The serpent named Śeṣa spent much time living here. (Chapter 36, Sloka 3, Ādi Parva).

(iii) Arjuna visited Gokarna while he was on his pilgrimage. (Sloka 34, Chapter 26, Ādi Parva).

(iv) Gokarna was one of the abodes of Śiva. Brahmā, Mahārṣis, Bhūtas and Yākas used to stay at Gokarna to worship Śiva. (Sloka 24, Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

(v) The holy place of Gokarna is renowned in all the three worlds (Sloka 15, Chapter 88, Vana Parva).

(vi) Gokarna is a tapovan also. (Sloka 51, Chapter 6, Bhīṣma Parva).

(vii) Śri Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna and Pradyumna together killed Nikūñja, who had kidnapped Bhānumati, at Gokarna. (Chapter 90, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

GOKARNI. A follower of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 90; Sloka 42).

GOLAKI. The mother of an Asura named Madhupa. This woman was born from the face of Brahmā in Kṛta-yuga. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

GOLOKA. A divine world. Mostly cows live in this world which is above all the other worlds. Surabhi, daughter of Dakṣa, acquired great powers by doing rigorous penance in this world. Pandits say that Goloka is the upper lip, Brahmāloka, the lower lip of Mahāviṣṇu. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 347, Sloka 52).

GOMANTA I. A famous mountain near Dvārakā. This mountain is known as Goma and Raivatakā also. Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to see Gomanta and on the way met Parasurāma. (Skandha 10, Bhāgavata). Parasurāma and Śrī Kṛṣṇa went together and saw this beautiful mountain. Vyāsa has devoted Chapter 40 of Viṣṇu Parva entirely for the description of this mountain of Gomanta. Once Balabhadra saw Gomanta but left him off.

GOMANTA II. A place of habitation lying to the north-east of ancient India. (Sloka 43, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

GOMANTA III. A mountain of the island of Kuśa. (Sloka 8, Chapter 12, Bhīṣma Parva).

GOMATI. (KAUSIKI). A celebrated river of Purānic fame. This is worshipped as a goddess.

1) The curse. Kariṇa Rāmāyaṇa states that this river was Kauśikī, sister of Viśvāmitra. She became a river by a curse.

Kauśikī was married to a sage called Śrīka. Once Šrīka went to devaloka to see Brahmā. Kauśikī unable to bear the separation followed her husband by her power of chastity. On the way Šrīka saw her and cursed her and made her into a river. From that day onwards she started running as a river named Kauśikī. See under Kauśikī. (Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

2) Other details from the Purāṇas regarding Gomati.

i) Śrī Rāma conducted the Aṣvamedha yāga at Naimiśāranya on the banks of this river. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

ii) The sins of those who drink the water of this river are washed away. (Sloka 20, Chapter 169, Ādi Parva).

iii) The devī of Gomati river lives in the court of Varuṇa worshipping him. (Sloka 23, Chapter 9, Sabhā Parva).

iv) Dharmaputra came to this river during his pilgrimage. (Sloka 2, Chapter 95, Vana Parva).

v) Gomati is the wife of Agnideva called Viśvabhūk. (Sloka 19, Chapter 219, Vana Parva).

vi) This is one of the most important rivers of Bhārata-varṣa. (Sloka 18, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

vii) The land of Divodāsa, King of Ayodhyā, extended from the shores of Gaṅgā to the base of Gomati. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

GOMATIMANTRA. A mantra for obtaining blessings from cows. If one recites this mantra standing in the midst of cows one would get many children and great wealth and if it is recited by a woman she would get the affection and love of her husband. (Sloka 42, Chapter 81, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

GOMEDAKA. See under Navaratna.

GO MUKHA I. A notorious King. He was born of the family of Krodhavāśa. (Sloka 63, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).

GOMUKHA II. An asura who was a follower of an asura called Śurapadma. (Asura Kāṇḍa, Skanda Purāṇa).

GOMUKHA III. Son of Mātali, charioter of Indra. (Sloka 8, Chapter 100, Udyoga Parva).

GONANDA. A soldier of Skandadeva. Sloka 65, Chapter 43, Śalya Parva).
GOPĀLAKA. A son born to Candra mahāsena of his wife Aṅgāravati. Besides Gopālaka he had another son named Pālaka. (Kathāsīrāṣṭṭā, Kathāmukha-lāmbaka, Taranāgī 3).

GOPĀL. I. A nymph. Once when Arjuna went to deva-loka this celestial maiden gave a performance in dancing in his honour. (Chapter 43, Vana Parva).

GOPĀLII. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 4, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

GOPARĀŚṬRA. A place of habitation in the north-east part of ancient India. (Śloka 44, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

GOPATI I. A demon. He was a co-worker of another demon named Kālaketu. Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Gopati on the banks of the river Irāvatī on the mountain Mahendra. (Chapter 38, Śabhā Parva).

GOPATI II. A deva gandharva. He was born to Kaśyapa of his wife Muni. (Śloka 42, Chapter 65, Vana Parva). This gandharva participated in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Śloka 55, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

GOPATI III. A son of the celebrated emperor, Śibi. When Parashurāma killed and made extinct all Kṣatriya kings it was a herd of cows that brought up this child. (Śloka 78, Chapter 49, Śanti Parva).

GOPATIV. A synonym of Śiva used in Śloka 151, Chapter 17 of Anuśāsana Parva.

GOPATI V. A synonym of Viṣṇu used in Śloka 66, Chapter 149, of Anuśāsana Parva.

GOPĀYANA. The army of Gopas. (Śloka 13, Chapter 71, Bhīṣma Parva).

GOPIKKURU. See under Urddhvapundra.

GOPTARE. A place on the northern bank of the river, Sarayu. Śrī Rāma with his two armies and vehicles ascended to heaven from this place. (Śloka 10, Chapter 83 Mahābhārata).

GORATHA. The palace of Magadha. This palace was situated on a mountain near Girivraja. (Śloka 30, Chapter 20, Śabhā Parva).

GOSAVA. A mahāyajña. (Śloka 17, Chapter 30, Vana Parva).

GOŚRNGA. An important mountain of South India. Sahadeva captured this mountain. (Śloka 5, Chapter 31, Śabhā Parva).

GOSTANI. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 3, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

GOTAMA. A sage named Gotama, son of Rahu-gaṇa, is found everywhere in Rgyeda. The seventy-fourth sūkta in the thirteenth anuvāka of the first maṇḍala of Rgyeda is composed by this sage. There are many other sūkta also in his name. This sage is not the Gautama, husband of Ahalyā, who made Sūkta 58, Anuvaka 11, Maṇḍala 1 of Rgyeda. Once this Gotama tired of thirst asked the Maruts for some water. The Maruts took a huge well to his side and poured water into a big pot. (Sūktas 86, 87, Anuvāka 14, Maṇḍala 1, Rgyeda). It was Avinidevas who took the well to Gotama. (Sūktas 116, Anuvaka 17, Maṇḍala 1, Rgyeda).

GOTIRTHA. A holy place. The Pāṇḍavas visited this place during their pilgrimage. (Śloka 3, Chapter 95, Vana Parva).

GOTRA. A son of Vasiṣṭha. Vasiṣṭha had of his wife Uṛjā seven sons named Ṛajas, Gotra, Urddhvabāhu, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas and Śukra. These holy men were saptarṣis in the third Manvantara. (Chapter 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

GOVARDHANA. A mountain of Ambāḍī (Gokula). This is believed to be a form of Kṛṣṇa. This is called Girirāja also. The residents of Ambāḍī from time immemorial used to worship Indra for getting rains. But after the advent of Kṛṣṇa there came a change in that belief. Kṛṣṇa told them that rains depended on Govardhana and it was enough if they worshipped that mountain and so the residents of Ambāḍī started worshiping the mountain. Indra got enraged at this and sent heavy rains to Ambāḍī intending to submerge it in water. But Śrī Kṛṣṇa lifted the mountain over Ambāḍī like an umbrella and saved the city from the wrath of Indra. See under Kṛṣṇa for more details. (Daśasana Skandha, Bhāgavata).

GOVĀSANA. A King of the country called Śivi. The daughter of this King, Devikā, married Yudhiṣṭhira in a swayamvara. Once Govāsana met in a duel the son of Abhibhū, King of Kāśī. (Śloka 38, Chapter 95, Droṇa Parva).

GOVĀSANA (M). A country of ancient India. The people of this place presented Yudhiṣṭhira with much wealth. (Śloka 5, Chapter 51, Śabhā Parva).

GOVIKARTA. The man who puts nosebands on bullocks. (Śloka 9, Chapter 2, Virāṭa Parva).

GOVINDA. A synonym of Śrī Kṛṣṇa (Mahāviṣṇu). He got this name because he saved the people and cows of Ambāḍī by lifting the Govardhana mountain and using it as an umbrella. (Dākinīsāyita pāth Chapter 38, Śabhā Parva).

GOVINDADATTA. A Brahmin of great fame who resided in Bahuṣuvarṇa, a city on the banks of the river Gaṅga. His wife was a very pious woman. They had five children. Once when both the parents were away from the house a sage called Vaiśvānara came there but the children did not receive him and treated him properly. Knowing this Govindadatta abandoned all his children. (Kathāsīrāṣṭṭā, Kathāpīṭha-lāmbaka).

GOVINDAGIRI. A mountain of Krauṇḍacāda. (Śloka 19, Chapter 12, Bhīṣma Parva).

GOVINDASARMA. A Brahmin who lived in olden times in the city of Kāśī. (See under Śihhadhvaja).

GOVITATA. A peculiar kind of horse sacrifice. Sage Kaṇva once made his grandson, Bharata, conduct a sacrifice of this kind. (Śloka 130, Chapter 74, Ādi Parva).

GOVRAJA. A soldier of Skandadeva. (Śloka 66, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

GRAHAS (PLANETS). Indians from very ancient days have maintained certain definite ideas and inferences about the planets. Though those ideas differ somewhat from the results of modern researches, the influence of the ancient ideas is discernible in all the Purāṇic texts in India. The main ideas are summarised below.

Sūrya (Sun), Candra (Moon), Śukra (Venus), Budha (Mercury), Kuja (Mars), Brhaspati (Jupiter), Śani (Saturn), Rāhu and Ketu are the navagrahas (nine planets).

Sūrya - Śaṅcanda maṇḍala-sa
Budha-śaṅcanda maṇḍala
Śukra-śaṅcanda maṇḍala
Rāhu-śaṅcanda maṇḍala
Besides the above nine planets, Indian astronomers take into account a starry sphere in the sky called Saptarśis and the star called Dhrūva.

1) Sūrya. The sun gives light to all the other planets. It has an area of 50 crore yojanas and its distance from the earth is 22 crore yojanas. Sūrya exists within the universe, and is called also Mārtaṇḍa as it originated from dead (mṛta) egg (aṇḍa). Sūrya divides the sky, heaven, hell, the earth, cast, west, north, south etc. from one another. According to the course of Sūrya three periods of time or ‘seasons’ like uttaraśāyaṇa, dakṣiṇāyana and viṣuṣvat are caused. Five months from May is the uttaraśāyaṇa period, five months from November the dakṣiṇāyana period, and the months of April and October are the Viṣuṣvats. Since during the uttaraśāyaṇa the sun rises up comparatively slowly (mandagati) during this period the day is longer than night. As in dakṣiṇāyana the course of the sun is quicker in pace (Sighragati) night is longer than day, and during viṣuṣvat, (samagati) day and night are of equal duration.

The other planets have three positions called Jāradgava, Airāvata and Vaśīvaṇāra, the first being the central position, the second the northern position and the third the southern position. Nine stars, Aśvinī, Bhaṇarī, Kṛttikā, Rohiṇī, Mrgaśīras, Ādrā, Puravasā and Puṣya occupy the Airāvata vīthī (northern position or segment). Another nine stars, Maghā, Pūrva Phālgunī, Uttara Phālgunī, Ḥasta, Cīrā, Śvātī, Viṣākha, Anurādhā and Jyeṣṭhā occupy the central position, and the last nine stars, Mūla, Purvāśādha, Uttarāśādha, Śrāvāṇa, Śrāvaṇī, Śaṭabhisāk, Pūrvaprōṣṭhapada, Uttaraprōṣṭhapada and Revati occupy the southern position.

To the east, south, west and north of Mount Mahāmeru exist Devadhānikā (Indrapurī) Sāmyanāmi (Yamapurī) Nīmlocani (Varuṇapurī) and Vibhāvari (Kuberapurī) respectively. When Sūrya appears in Devadhānikā it will be dawn, when he has travelled to Sāmyanāmi it will be noon, when he is in Nīmlocani it will be sunset and when he is in Vibhāvari it will be midnight. This is how Sūrya circles the Mahāmeru. Within 15 nāḍikās (6 hours) the sun travels 2½ crores plus 2½ lakhs of yojanas. Sūrya’s chariot has one wheel and twelve spokes. The wheel represents a year and the twelve spokes stand for the twelve months of the year. The chariot has also three nābhis representing the three cāturṁāsas, and six bands representing the six seasons. The height of the chariot is 36 lakhs yojanas and it has a width of 8 yojanas inside. Aruṇadeva is the charioteer, and the seven chariots are the horses. The seven chariots are, Gāyatṛī, Bhṛti, Uṣṇik, Jagati, Trīṣṭubh, Anuṣṭubh and Paṅkti.

Night is called Uṣā and day Vyuṣṭi and the time in between is Sandhyā. When Sandhyā begins the terrible Rākṣasas called Māndehas attempt to consume Sūrya. They have been granted the boon that everyday they will be dying though they may not be losing their bodies. So, everyday there rages a fierce fight between them and Sūrya. When the fight is on, noble brahmans throw up water sanctified by Gāyatṛī mantra with ‘Om’. The water turns into Vajēṣyudha and burns the Rākṣasas to ashes. The first offering in Agnihotra is made with the recitation of the mantra beginning ‘Sūryo Jyoti’ because of which the sun is able to shine with thousands of rays with the result that the Rākṣasas are burned to death. The Bālakhyās who number more than 60,000 form Sūrya’s body-guard. (See under Sūrya for Purāṇic stories about him).

2) Candra. (The Moon). Candra exists at one lakh yojanas away from Sūrya, and it revolves round the earth. A candra month of twentyseven days is divided into twelve rāsīs (houses) viz. Śīthā (Leo), Kanya (Virgo) Tulā (Libra) Vṛṣīkha (Scorpio) Dhanu (Sagittarius) Makara (Capricorn) Kuṁbha (Aquarius) Mina (Pisces) Mesā (Aries) Vṛṣabha (Taurus) Mithuna (Gemini) and Karkaṭa (Cancer). Every month Candra stays in each of the above houses only for 2½ days.

The full moon makes Piṭṛ happy, divides the month into two halves, Kṛṣṇa Pakṣa (the dark fortnight) and Sukla Pakṣa (the bright fortnight) and functions as the very life of all living beings. The twentyseven stars from Aśvīni to Revati are the wives of Candra. There is another view that Candra has twentyeight wives including another star called Abhijit. Candra has another name, Sarvamaya. Candra with his pleasing rays, as sweet as Amṛta (Nectar) bestows happiness on devas, Piṭṛ and all other living beings. So he is called Sarvamaya.

Candra’s chariot has three wheels. Ten beautiful horses white as Jasmine flowers draw the chariot. These horses also like those of Sūrya live for a Kalpa era. Because the Devas drink its digits Candra wanes into one digit (Kalā). Then Sūrya makes him wax again with one single ray of his called Śuṣumnā. When only two Kalās of his remian Candra enters the orbit of Sūrya and stays there in the ray called ‘amā’, and that day, therefore is called amāvāsyā. And on that day Candra enters waters for the first time, and after that dwells in trees, creepers etc. While Candra is thus in trees etc. those who cut them will be committing the sin of brahmahatya, (slaughter of a brahmin). When only a little of the 15th kalā remains on new moon day hordes of Piṭṛs gather round the enfeebled Candra to drink him, and they drink the amṛta kalā, one of the two kalās still remaining with him. Thus the three classes of Piṭṛs, Barhiṣadas, Saṃyas and Aṅgīṛvattas get absolutely satisfied for one month. Thus Candra nurtures Devas in the Sukla Pakṣa and piṭṛs in Kṛṣṇa Pakṣa, and grows trees, creepers etc. with life-giving water. (For details see under Candra).

3) Śukra (Venus). Śukra is an auspicious Deva very much interested in doing good to the world and making people happy. His course is also, like that of Sūrya, of three types, intense (quick), slow and of equal pace. Two-and-a-half yojanas above Sūrya, Śukra follows a course alternating in front of and behind Sūrya. Śukra never goes very far away from Sūrya, and he possesses a big chariot drawn by horses from earth. (For details see under Śukra).

4) Budha (Mercury). Though inherently auspicious Budha, in contact with inauspicious planets takes their character and becomes weak. Budha also has the three paces, quick, slow and medium. Budha moves close to Śūrya and if he moves from Śūrya storms, failure of rain etc. will be the result. He is considered to be the son of Candra. His chariot is made of wind and fire, golden in colour and is drawn by eight horses having the speed of the wind. (See under Budha for more details).
5) Kuja (Mars). Kuja is two lakhs of yojanas above Budha, and remains in every rāśi (house) more or less for 45 days. When the position is affected it causes inauspicious experiences to living beings. The chariot of Kuja is made of gold, glittering and of huge size. Eight horses born from Agni draw the chariot.

6) Bṛhaspati (Jupiter). Jupiter travels 2 lakhs of yojanas away from Kuja’s sphere. Though it is an auspicious planet its reverse course is productive of evil results. Jupiter travels for twelve months in every rāśi (house). His golden chariot is drawn by eight white horses. (See Bṛhaspati).

7) Sani (Saturn). Sani is 2 lakhs of yojanas away from Jupiter’s sphere, and it stays in every house for twenty months. As it moves only slowly it is called Sanaicēra also. Sani is considered to be the son of Śūrya. It is an inauspicious planet. His chariot is drawn by multi-coloured horses born in the sky.

8) Rāhu. His ash-coloured chariot is drawn by eight horses as dark as beetles. Once the horses are harnessed to the chariot it will always be running. On full moon days Rāhu starts from Śūrya and reaches Candra and returns to Śūrya on new moon days. It is an inauspicious planet. (For details see under Rāhu).

9) Ketu. His chariot is drawn by eight horses, which have the speed of wind. It is also an inauspicious planet.

10) Saptarṣī. Thirteen crores of yojanas away from the zone of Sani exists the Saptarṣī zone. Seven maharṣis are incessantly on the move in that sphere, wishing all that is well for the whole world. (See Saptarṣī).

11) Dhruva. Thirteen crores of yojanas away from the saptarṣīmaṇḍala there is a place called Viṣṇupada. Dhruva, son of Uttānāpāda lives there in the company of Indra, Agni, Kaśyapa, Dharma and others. The Dhruvamaṇḍala remains there stationary like the supporting pillar of all the planets ever on the move. (See Dhruva; Devibhāgavata 8th Skandha; Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part II).

Astrologers aver that living beings pass through the periods and positions of the following planets, viz. Ketu, Sukra (Venus) Ādiyā (Sun), Candra (Moon), Kuja (Mars), Rāhu, Bṛhaspati (Jupiter), Sani (Saturn) and Budha (Mercury). The following table shows how people born under different stars pass through the different daśas. The order of succession of the daśas and the period of each daśa can also be seen from this table.

1. To find out your daśa at the time of birth, please see the above table. Any one born under any of the stars is considered born in the daśa shown in the right hand side against that star ; e.g. People born under (Aśvayuk) Aśvini, Maṅgaśira and Mūla are born into the Ketu daśa. So with the other stars also as shown in the above table. To calculate how long the daśa into which a particular person is born will last requires some astrological skill; also the exact time of birth should be known. A star remains dominant for about 24 hours. If a man is born under a daśa when half this period of the dominancy is over, then that man will get only half the period of the corresponding daśa. The portion of the daśa that the man will get is proportionate to the period of dominancy of the star. For example, a man is born under the star Aśvini (Aśvayuk) when the star is in the last quarter of the Ketu daśa. The total period of this daśa is 7 years. But the man will get only the last quarter of it, namely about 2 years. After that he will pass on to the next daśa—Suṣkras-dasa.
Piṅgalā attacks the child, when it is four months old. Excessive coldness of body, bad odour and emaciation of body are the main signs of the attack. Piṅgalā's attack often proves fatal.

During the fifth month the planet Lalanā attacks the child. Weakness, blood coming out of the mouth, and excretion yellow in colour are the main symptoms of the attack. Bali with fish etc. on the southern side of the house is the treatment for it.

Pākhajā attacks the child during the sixth month. Various kinds of awkward movements, crying in awkward and peculiar voice are the main symptoms of the attack. Offerings of liquor, fish, flesh, rice, flowers etc. will cure the illness.

During the seventh month Nirāhārā attacks the child. Bad odour, tooth-ache etc. are the main symptoms. Bali with fish, flesh etc. is the cure.

Yamunā attacks the child during the eighth month. Skin eruptions etc. are the chief symptoms. No special treatment is required for this.

During the ninth month Kumbhakarṇī attacks the child. Fever, vomiting and abnormal crying form the chief symptoms. Bali with flesh and liquor is the cure for it.

Tāpāśi attacks the child during the tenth month. Refusing to eat food and rolling of the eye-balls form the main symptoms. Bali on level ground with flesh etc. is the remedy for it.

During the eleventh month Rākṣaṇi attacks the child. No treatment is called for.

Caṇcalā attacks the child during the twelfth month. Breathing problems, palpitation etc. are the main symptoms. Bali during the first half of the day with Kalmāśa etc. is the remedy.

During the second year of its life the child is attacked by Rodāni. Shivering of the body, crying and emission of blood and urine form the main symptoms. In such cases bali should be offered with pudding of molasses and gingelly seeds made into small balls. Also an idol should be made of gingelly seeds and it should be bathed in gingelly water. The child should further be exposed to the fumes got by burning the leaves of five trees.

Caṭukā (a female planet) attacks the child during the fourth year. Fever, swellings, and weakness of limbs are the main symptoms. Bai with fish, flesh, gingelly seeds and also fuming form the treatment.

Paṅcāḷā attacks the child when it is five years old. Fever, weakness of limbs are the symptoms. Bali with flesh, rice etc. and fuming with the excretion of sheep form the treatment. Bathing in water boiled with leaves of jackfruit tree, peepal tree etc. is also good.

Dhāvānī attacks the child when it is six years old. Thinning of face, tastelessness of mouth and weakness of limbs are the main symptoms in such cases. Bali for seven days with the above-mentioned things and bathing in kanjunyā (Bhrigārāja creeper) water are the treatment.

Yavanā attacks the child in the seventh year. Speechlessness, vomiting, laughing and crying for no apparent reason form the symptoms. Bali with liquor, flesh, pudding etc. and fuming and bathing form the treatment.

Jātavedā attacks the child in the eighth year. The child refuses food and cries. Bali with cooked gingelly, gingely bread and curds, and bathing and fumigating form the treatment.

Kālā (Kālī): attacks the child during the ninth year. Feelings of fear, roaring etc. are the symptoms. Bali with gingely rice, gingely bread, gingely powder, Kalmāsa and pudding form the treatment.

Kalāhāri attacks the child during the tenth year. Fever, burning sensation and emaciation are the symptoms. Bali for five days with bread called Paulik and rice mixed with ghee, exposure to fumes of margosa leaf and smearing the body with a paste of Kottam form the treatment.

Devabhūti attacks the child when it is eleven years old. Then he will utter harsh and cruel words. Bali and smearing as above form the treatment.

Valīka attacks the child in the 12th year. Frequent hiccoughs is the symptom. Treatment is the same as above.

Vāyaśi attacks the child when it is 13 years old. All the limbs except the face get emaciated. Treatment is as follows: bali with red rice, red sandal-wood and red flowers; bath in water boiled with the leaves of five trees; and exposure to the fumes of margosa and mustard.

Yakṣiṇī attacks the child when it is fourteen years old. Awkward physical expressions, stomach-ache, fever and thirst are the symptoms. Bali with flesh, rice etc. and bathing etc. as above form the treatment.

Munīkī attacks the child when it is fifteen years old. Various kinds of pains, bleeding etc. are the symptoms. The mother of the child is to be treated for this.

Vānāri attacks the child during the 16th year. Falling down, continuous sleep and fever form the symptoms. Bali during three nights with pudding etc. and bathing and fumigating as above form the treatment.

Gandhavaṇī attacks the child during the seventeenth year. Agitation of limbs and crying are the symptoms. Bali with Kalmāsa etc. and bathing and fumigating as above form the treatment.

The following mantra should be repeated in all balis and gifts.

Ornāmaḥ sarvamātrbhuo bālapāḍāsanvyogan bhujāṁ bhujāṁ cuṭa cuṭa Śphotaśa Śphotayā Śphura Śphura grhāṇā grhāṇā ākaṭṭaṁ ākaṭṭaṁ kaṭṭaṁ kaṭṭaṁ evam siddhārūpa jñāpayati hara hara nirdoṣe kuru kuru bālikāṁ bālaṁ striyaṁ puruṣaṁ sarvagrahāpāmu-pakramāt-cāmunte namo devaṁ hrūṁ hrūṁ hrīṁ apasaraṇaṁ āstāgaṁ hram tadyathā gacchantu grhyatāṁ anyatra paṁthānam rudro jñāpayati. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 299).

GRĀMĀDEVĀTĀ. India is predominantly a rural country with a number of villages, and the rural folk depend mainly upon agriculture for living. Agricultural land, rain and epidemics which affect them as well as their cattle—these are the main concern of the villagers. Indians, from very ancient days, used to believe that each of the above has its own presiding devatās. Such devatās are the grāmādevatās.

Devi is the chief grāmādevatā of South India. Devi is called Durgā and Kālī also. But, Devi is worshipped in sixty-four different forms or aspects. The gentle Devi, viz, in her gentle aspect or attitude has three forms, Kānya, Kāmākṣi, and Mūkāṃbikā. In Kerala Devi is called Bhagavati also. Vālyṅgāṅghī Bhagavati of Calicut is Lākṣmīdevī. Kāli temples in Kārṇāṭaka are called ‘Koṭṭāpuraṁ Lākṣmī Kṣetras’. There are such temples in Andhra also. Most of them are Jokulāmbikā temples. In Tamil Nadu there are grāmādevatās called Mārīyamma, Kālīyamma, and Draupadiyamma. Not the Draupadi mentioned in the Mahābhārata; but the Kānṣaṇī of Cilappattikārā is the Devi worshipped in Tamil Nadu.

There are two kinds of Devis called Saptanātrī and Saptakanyās. Saptanātraḥḥ have puruṣas (husbands) and saptakanyās have seven brothers for help and support. Devī pūja is very much prevalent in South India. The custom is supposed to be as old as 5000 B.C. Idols of Devi have been unearthed from Mohanjo-daro and Harappa. Even the Buddhists worship the Devis called Yakṣi and Hārīti. When in after years Hinduism was revitalised these grāmādevatās got promoted as the great Devatās of the epics and the Purāṇas. The Rāmāyaṇa mentions the incident of the Devī called Lāṅkālakkṣī driving away Hanūman. There are famous Kāli temples in Ujjayini and Calcutta. It is believed that in the temple at Gādambarām also Kālī occupied a prominent place. But, according to legends, Śiva defeated Kālī in a dance competition and ousted her to her present temple at the outskirts of the city. Cāmunḍi is worshipped as the ancestral guardian deity in Mysore. The Kāṃkāṣi temple of Kāfī, Mānākṣi temple of Madura and Mūkāṃbikā temple of North Kārṇāṭaka may be cited as examples for the worship of the gentle form of Devī. Alarmel Mānkkattāyār temple at Tiruccānūr is a very important Devī temple. The ‘Aditi’ in the Vedas and Koṭṭravai of Tamil Saṅgha texts point to the very long past of the Devī in India. Kālimāsa and Kālamēgha (a Tamil poet of the fifteenth century) have worshipped Kālī. Śrī Rāмаkṣa Paramahānsa and the great modern Tamil poet Bhārati were devotees of Kālī.

There are also grāmādevatās worshipped like the grāmādevatās. Munīsāwa and Karuppan are two prominent grāmādevatās. In certain villages Bhairava, Vira, Irula, Kāṭṭeri and Nōzhī are worshipped as grāmādevatās. In South Kārṇāṭaka a set of Devas called bhūtās are worshipped. Panthāmudā being one of them, Sāṭaṭ or Ayyappa is another grāmādeva. Sāṭaṭ is most popular in Kēraḷa and in Tamil Nādu. Buddha also is called Sāṭaṭ. In certain places idols of Sāṭaṭ with two wives, called Pūrpā and Pūṣkalā are also found. Sabarmalā Sāṭaṭ is yoganmūrti (in yogic pose).

In most of the grāmādeva temples idols of the Devas are not found. A piṭha (stool-like seat) is supposed as the seat of the Deva and it represents the Deva also. But, in some temples weapons like the sword, the club etc. are found. Offerings to the deity in grāmākṣetras and annual festivals are common in such temples. (Nām vaṇamagum daivanagal-Tamil).

GRĀMAṆI. A bhūtanga (set of attendants) of Śiva. Sins of those who worship this gana will be removed. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 25).

GRĀMAṆIYA. One born in the family of the Kṣatriya, who is the governor of village. Nakula defeated the grāmaṇīyas during the conquest of lands in connection with the aśvamedha of Dharma puratā. (Sabha Parva; Chapter 32, Verse 9).

GRANTHIKA. Name assumed by Nakula during his life incognito at the Virāṭa palace. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 4).
GRDHRAKUTA. A mountain of northern India. The Lasūsara gave protection to Bhrpradāthra at this mountain. (Śloka 82, Chapter 49, Sānti Parvā).

GRDDHRAPATRA. A soldier of Skandadeva, (Śloka 74, Chapter 45, Śalya Parvā).

GRDDHRAVĀTA. A mount of the Himālayas. This mount is the abode of Mahādeva. Those brahmmins who visit this place would get moksha and those of other castes would be absolved of all sins. (Śloka 91, Chapter 84, Vana Parvā).

GRDDHIRIKĀ. A bird. Kaśyapa begot of his wife Tāmā, the six birds namely Kāki, Syen, Bhāsī, Grdhrikā, Suci and Grivā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

GREEK LITERATURE. Greek is one of the most important Indo-European languages. As an independent branch of the original Indo-European language Greek established itself by about 2000 B.C. Even during its earliest period Greek had four local dialects as a result of the arrival of the Greek-speaking people at different periods of time. Iol, Ionic-Attic, Arcado-Cyprian and western Greek are the four dialects. Iol was prevalent in the Lesbos region, and this is the dialect mainly used in the poetry of Homer. The Ionic and Attic dialects were prevalent in Ionia and Attica respectively. After Homer, the major portion of Greek literature was written in this dialect. The Arcado-Cyprian dialect was used in Arcadio and Cyprus. The fourth dialect was also called Doric.

Naval tradition, commerce and political power contributed to the growth and development of Greek language and literature. In each dialect, even from the very beginning, literary efforts were made. Each of the four spoken languages very soon developed into a written language. But, in the very initial periods each of the spoken dialects continued its existence in the form of ballads and songs transferred from one man to another. It was Homer who gave those popular ballads an epic form and status and sowed the seeds of the great literature of Greece.

The golden period of Greek literature was when the city of Athens enjoyed supreme political power. Literature during the period set the model for future generations. It was during this period that Greek achieved the best in different literary forms like tragedy, comedy, lyric, elegy, history, philosophy, oratory etc. Pindar, Aeschylus, Herodotus, Sophocles-Euripides, Aristophanes, Thucydides, Plato and Demosthenes—these are distinguished names who were responsible for the great development of the literary forms referred to above.

Greek literature passed the Alexandrian, Roman and Byzantine periods before it arrived at the modern period. It was Solomos and Valoritus and others who gave impetus and inspiration to modern Greek literature.

GRHADEVI. Another name of the demoness Jarā. (See under Jarā).

GRHAPATI. A sage. There is a story in Śiva Purāṇa about this sage. Viśvānara father of Grhapati was living with his wife Sucismati in a hermitage on the banks of the river Narmadā. They had no children and Sucismati, was grieved much on this account. She requested her husband to find out ways and means to get a child. Viśvānara, went to Kāśi and did penance to propitiate Viśveśvara and the God appeared before him and blessed him and said: “You will soon get a son”. Very soon the wife of Viśvānara delivered a child and the son was named Grhapati. When the child was nine years old Nārada came there once and warned them against fire. Viśvānara immediately went and did penance to propitiate Śiva and obtained from him for his son the qualities of fire also so that fire would be unable to act on him. It was on account of this that Grhapati when he installed an idol of Śiva at Kāśi gave it the name of Agnīvara.

GRHASTHA. In ancient India the life of a male person was divided into four stages, namely, Brahmacarya Grahastha, Vānaprastha and Sannyāsa. He who is in the second stage of life is called a Grahastha.

When a person marries, he becomes a Grahastha. The bride should have certain qualities to be an ideal wife. The girl should be only a third of the age of the male. She should not have hair either too much or too little. She should not be black or of a pīngala hue. She should not have any of her organs extra at the time of birth. The following types of girls are to be avoided for marriage.

1. Girls bred up by low-caste people
2. Girls with hair over the body
3. Not born of a good family
4. Sick ones
5. Ill-natured
6. Girls who use abusive language
7. With hereditary diseases
8. With a smartha (hair on the face)
9. Girls with masculine features
10. With the sound of males
11. Lean ones
12. With the voice of a crow
13. Thick eyelashes
14. Round eyes.

Again avoid girls having hair on their legs, raised heels and those with small depressions on their cheeks when they laugh. Girls whose bodies are bright, with white nails, red eyes and fat hands and legs are not good for marriage. Girls too tall or too short, with eyelashes touching each other, with broad and raised teeth are to be avoided. A true Grahastha is one who marries a girl who is separated from him by five generations on the maternal side and seven generations on the paternal side.

A true Grahastha should daily worship devas, cows, brahmmins, scholars, old men and preceptors. He should worship sandhya (dawn and dusk) daily and also fire. He should wear on his body leaves of Viṣṇukranti, Karuka (couch grass), Tulasi (holy basil plant). He should appear neat and smart wearing good dress, with white flowers on his well combed head. He should never steal, speak unpleasant words to anybody nor speak an untruth even if it be pleasant. He should not openly speak about the sins of others. He should not covet another man's wife. He should not travel in a damaged vehicle nor should he sit under the shade of a tree on the banks of a river. A Grahastha should not mingle with such persons as (1) men hated by the people (2) outcasts from society (3) insane men (4) those having a great number of enemies (5) those who torment others (6) prostitutes (7) husbands of prostitutes (8) those who use abusive language (9) those who tell lies (10) spendthrifts (11) scandalmongers and (12) rogues. Never travel alone. He should not bathe against the flow in a river. Never enter a house on fire nor climb to the extreme top of trees. He should not grind his teeth, squeeze out his nose, yawn without covering the mouth. breathe or spit, with the face covered, laugh noisily, breathe out with a sound, bite the teeth, pinch grasses or write or draw on the ground (Arha 3; Visn Purana).

GRIVA. A daughter in bird form born to Kaśyapaprajapatī by his wife Tāmra. Grīva had the following sister, Kāki, Śyenī, Bhāsi, Grddhrkī and Śuci, all birds. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 1).

GRTSAMADA I. A celebrated sage. He was the son of a sage called Vitahiya. Grtsamada was equal to Bhṛhatpati and a great friend of Indra. Once this sage lectured to Yudhishṭhira on the glory of Śiva. Many have mistaken Grtsamada for Indra. Once the auras bound him by ropes mistaking him for Indra. He had a son named Kucetā. (For more details see under Varisṭhā) (Chapters 18 and 30, Anuśasana Parva).

GRTSAMADA II. A King of the Bhārgava dynasty. He was the son of King Suhotra. Grtsamada had two brothers, Kaśya and Kuśa, and a son, Sunaka. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

GRTSAMADA III. The son born to Indra of Mukundā. There is the following story about him in Gaṇeśa Purāṇa.

Once when Rukmāṅgada was out from the palace, Indra, in the guise of Rukmāṅgada, went to Mukundā, wife of Rukmāṅgada, and slept with her who was at that time sexually hungry. She delivered a child in due course. This boy was Grtsamada. He grew into a great scholar. Nobody was able to defeat him in any verbal duel. Once Grtsamada went to the palace of the king of Magadha to attend a Śrāddha (an offering to the manes) along with Vaśiṣṭha and others. Atri Mahārṣi who was present there then spoke slightly of Grtsamada’s parentage and Grtsamada coming home questioned his mother. The mother then told him what had happened and Grtsamada getting angry at the immoral act committed by his mother cursed her and said “May you be a Kaṇṭha tree”. Mukundā also did not leave her son free. She cursed him thus “You will have a demon as your son.” But Grtsamada went and did penance to propitiate Gaṇapati and got Brāhmaṇa.

GRTSAPATI. He was the son of Kapila, a King of the Pūrū dynasty. He had a brother called Kauṭika. Grtsapati had sons in all the four castes, namely, Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya, Vaśiṣṭha and Śūdra. (Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa).

GUḌĀKEŚA. Another name of Arjuna. He got the name because he conquered sleep. (Śloka 8, Chapter 138, Ādi Parva).

GUḌHASENA. A King of the country of Puśkarāvati. GUHA. King of the country of Nisādas alias Śrīgīverapura, on the banks of the river Gaṅga. Śrī Rāma when he went on exile to the forests went to the residence of Guha accompanied by Lakṣmaṇa and Sītā. Guha, a devotee of Rāma, received them with respect offering them many kinds of fruits and roots to eat. But Śrī Rāma said that it was not proper to accept fruits and roots and so he drank only pure water from him. But Guha was asked to feed his horse. At night when Lakṣmaṇa stood watch over Rāma and Sītā, Guha volunteered to stand guard but Lakṣmaṇa refused to accept the offer. So Guha kept company with Lakṣmaṇa and both of them spent the night talking to each other. In the morning as per Rāma’s request Guha brought a canoe and Guha himself took Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa and Sītā to the other side of the river. (Sarga 50, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Adbhūta Kāṇḍa).

Guha is seen next when Bharata comes to the forest in search of Rāma. When Bharata returned from Keśava he went in search of Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa and came to Guha in Śrīgīverapura. Guha then gave Bharata all available information regarding Śrī Rāma. Guha then sent the Dāśa army along with Bharata. (Sarga 84, Adbhūta Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

Guha, chief of Śrīgīverapura, spent the night with Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa under an Oka tree. (Chapter 6, Agni Purāṇa).

GUHA (8). A tribe of people of ancient India. Ādhrsas, Pulindas, Cucukas, Guhas, Śabaras and Bhdras are some of the tribes of the south. (Śloka 42, Chapter 207, Śānti Parva).

GUHASENA. See under Devasmītā.

GUHYAKA. A Yaksha. (A division of Yakṣas who were prominent members of the court of Kubera). They were present at the marriage of Draupadi. (Śloka 7, Chapter 186, Ādi Parva).

Other details.
(i) The palace of Kubera in the sky is borne by Guhyakas. (Śloka 3, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).
(ii) Bhīmasena slew many Guhyakas on the mountain of Gandhamadana. (Śloka 55, Chapter 11, Śālya Parva).
(iii) Some of the soldiers who died in the Mahābhārata battle went to the world of the Guhyakas. (Śloka 23, Chapter 4, Svargarōhāṇa Parva).

GULIKA. A hunter who was given mokṣa by the sage Utaṅga. This hunter once made an attempt to steal the gold plates on the roof of the Viṣṇu temple at the palace of Sauvīra. Utaṅga was present at the temple then and, GuliKA tried to kill the sage. The sage cursed him and killed him. Taking pity on him later Utaṅga sprinkled some water from the river Gaṅga, on him and the hunter attained Vaikūṭha. (Nărādya Purāṇa).

GUṆA. See under Pattu (Ten).

GUṆĀDHYA. He is the author of the celebrated Brhat-kathā which is a precious mine of Sanskrit Literature. Guṇādhya had written this in satāric (paśācika) language difficult for ordinary people to read or understand. This was translated into Sanskrit by the poet Kuśmendra in a book called Brhatkathāmaṇi. This was the first translation and it was in an abridged form. Somadeva made a more elaborate translation and it is this translation that is now known as the Kathāsaritsāgara.

Guṇādhya is believed to be an incarnation of the Śiva-pārṣada, Mātyāvan. There is a story behind Mātyāvan being cursed and made to be born as man by Pārvati. Once Pārvatī worried Śiva to tell her a story original and interesting and not heard of by anybody before. Placing Nandikesa at the door and instructing him not to allow anybody inside Śiva started narrating the story of the Vidyādharas to Pārvatī. At that time Puṣpadanta, chief of the genie-guards of Śiva who was at liberty to go to the presence of Śiva at any time, came there and heedless of the protests of Nandikesa entered the room. There he found Śiva telling a story to Pārvatī and she was hearing the same with rapt attention. The story was so interesting that Puṣpadanta also heard it standing concealed in a place in the room. After having heard the whole story Puṣpadanta went back unnoticed.
and told the story to his wife, Jayā. Jayā on another occasion told the story to Pārvatī and the latter was taken aback and she went to Śiva and complained: "Your Lordship told me that the story was unique, not heard of before by anybody. But even Jayā knows it." And she wept with disappointment. Then Śiva stood in meditation for some time, and knew how Puspadanta had entered the room unnoticed and how he had told the story he had heard to Jayā. Śiva explained this to Pārvatī and she immediately, sent word for Puspadanta who came trembling and confessed everything. Pārvatī then cursed Puspadanta and also Mālyāvān who came to speak on behalf of Puspadanta and made them men. They begged for relief from the curse and then she said, "Long ago Vaśrāvana cursed a Yakṣa named Supratīka and converted him into a devil named Kānabhūti. This devil is now living in the deep forests on the Vindhya mountains. When you talk with him you will become your old selves again. Puspadanta should first tell the story he has heard from Śiva to Kānabhūti and then he will be relieved from the curse. Kānabhūti will then tell Mālyāvān many stories. Then Kānabhūti will get release from the curse. Mālyāvān should make public all the stories he had heard from Kānabhūti and then he will also get release from the curse." Accordingly Puspadanta was born as Vararuci in the city of Kaustubhi and Mālyāvān as Gunadhya in the city of Supratiṣṭhita. (For details see under Vararuci). The story of how Supratīka became Kānabhūti is this: The Yakṣa, Supratīka, got friendly with a demon named Śūlaśiras and they moved about freely as chums. Vaśrāvana did not like this and he cursed Supratīka and converted him into a satan. At once, Dīrghajāgha, elder brother of Supratīka, came and begged for relief. Vaśrāvana then said: "Puspadanta will be born on the earth by a curse as man and he will one day come and tell Supratīka many great stories. After hearing them he should narrate them to Mālyāvān who will then be born on the earth as man. Supratīka will then get release from the curse and become his old self again". Supratīka was born in the forests of Vindhya as Kānabhūti.

This is the story of the birth of Gunadhya. There is a city called Supratiṣṭhita in the country of Pratiṣṭhāna and there lived a brahmin named Somaśarma. He had two sons, Vyasa and Gułmaka and a daughter named Śrutārtha. Before long the parents died and Śrutārtha grew up under the protection of her brothers. Kirtisena, brother of Vyasa, married her by gāndharva rites and Gunadhya was the child born to them.

Even while he was a boy he went to the south for his education and there from a brahmin he studied all arts and sciences. When he completed his studies he started on a tour and at that time became the minister of a king called Sātavāhana. He married from there. One day his (Sātavāhana’s) wife rebuked the king when the latter made some linguistic errors and Sātavāhana became dejected and moody from that day onwards. Then there came to the court of the King a brahmin named Śravavarman who promised to make the King proficient in languages within six months. But Gunadhya said that it was not possible to do so within six months. They made a bet. Gunadhya swore that if Śravavarman would teach the King the Sabdāsāstra (science of language-sounds) within six months he (Gunadhya) would abandon his knowledge of Sanskrit, Prakrit and local language. On the other hand if Śravavarman failed to accomplish the feat the latter should wear on his head for twelve years the chappals of Gunadhya. Śravavarman agreed and went to do penance to please Subrahmanya. Subrahmanya granted him a boon by the power of which Śravavarman made Sātavāhana a scholar in Sanskrit. Defeated, Gunadhya abandoned his knowledge of all languages and bidding adieu to the King by gestures left for the Vindhyan forests.

When Gunadhya went to the forests Kānabhūti, King of the Satans was not in his place. He heard the satans speaking in their peculiar language and intelligently that he was he picked up the language. and when Kānabhūti came he spoke to him in his own language. Kānabhūti told in the satanic language the great stories of seven Vidyādharas. Gunadhya took seven years to write the storic in the satanic language and compile them into seven lakhs of granthis to form a Mahākāvya. There were no writing materials available for him and Gunadhya wrote them all on leaves using blood and twigs. When he started reading his book all the devas assembled in the sky to hear it. On hearing it Kānabhūti got release from the curse. It is this book containing seven lakhs of granthis that is called the Brhatkathā.

Gunadhya then thought of how to keep alive such an interesting and gigantic book and then two of his companions Guṇadeva and Nandideva suggested to him to dedicate the book to the King, Sātavāhana. Gunadhya agreed to that and the two disciples took the book to the King. The King read the whole story. But did not like it. It was very elaborate. The language was satanic. It was written with blood. The King looked at the book with contempt.

When the disciples found that the King was not in favour of the work, they took it back to Gunadhya. Gunadhya felt a great dejection. He went to a hillock nearby with his disciples and made a big fire-pit. He set aside the story of the Vidyādharas named Naravāhana-datta composed of a lakh of granthis for the use of his disciples and then started putting into the fire-pit the rest, reading aloud each leaf before he put it into the fire. The sad disciples watched it weeping. Even the wild animals of the forest flocked to the place and stood there listening to Gunadhya. At that time Sātavāhana became a sick man. The physicians of the palace said that the illness was caused by the dry flesh he was taking. The cook was called in and he accused the hunters who supplied them with flesh daily. The hunters were questioned and they informed the King that only such flesh was available since all the beasts and birds were standing without food listening to a man who was reading something from a leaf and then burning it in a fire-pit before him, Sātavāhana immediately went to the place guided by the hunters. There to his astonishment he found Gunadhya sitting before a fire-pit surrounded by weeping beasts and birds and throwing leaves of his book one by one into the fire after reading each before it was put into the fire. Sātavāhana ran to him and prostrated before him. Gunadhya then told Sātavāhana his story in satanic language beginning from the curse on Puspadanta down to his destroying his own work in the fire.
His disciples translated his talk to the King. The King was awe-stricken and he asked for the granthas. But by that time he had already burnt six lakhs of granthas containing six stories. He gave to the King the remaining one lakh of granthas. After that, bidding farewell to the King, Guṇādhya jumped into the fire and abandoned his life on earth and went to the presence of Śiva.

King Sātvāhāna accompanied by the disciples of Guṇādhya came to his palace carrying the ‘Bṛhatakā’ containing the story of Narāvahanadatta. He gave presents to Guṇadeva and Nandideva who explained to him the book in Sanskrit. King Sātvāhāna added a preface to the book to explain to the public how the book came to be written in satanic language. The book very soon got world fame. (Pīṭhānulainībaka Kathāsarit sāgara).

GUṆAKEŚĪ. Daughter of Mātali, charioteer of Indra. She was more beautiful and well-behaved than many other girls. Mātali went about in search of a suitable husband for her in all the three worlds. At last he met Nārada going to the presence of Kubera. He told Nārada about this and Nārada took Mātali to Pāṭālaloka to search for a suitable bridegroom. Then they found out a serpent boy named Sumukha (good looking) worthy of his name who was the grandson of Aryanā and son of Cikura born of the family of Airśvata. But Sumukha was in danger at that time. Garūda had taken a vow that he would eat Sumukha the next month. Aryanā told Nārada about this. Nārada took Sumukha to the court of Indra. Mahāviṣṇu was also present there. When Nārada told the story there Indra blessed Sumukha and granted him long life. This made Garūda angry and he went to the court of Indra and rebuked Indra. Mahāviṣṇu who was present there then did not like this act of Garūda and he called the latter to the side and asked him whether he could bear the weight of one of his arms. With arrogance Garūda said ‘yes’ and Viṣṇu then placed one of his arms on the shoulder of Garūda. But Garūda found the weight unbearable and begged pardon of Viṣṇu, bereft of all his arrogance. The marriage of Sumukha with Guṇakeśī was then conducted. (Chapters 97 to 105. Udyoga Parva.)

GUṆAMUKHYĀ. A celestial maiden who took part in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. She gave a dance there then. (Sloka 61, Chapter 122, Adī Parva).

GUṆANIDHĪ. A Purāṇic character who lived a sinful life and yet attained Svarā. In the country of Kosala there was once a noble brahmin named Giriṇātha who was rich, erudite and well-versed in the Vedas. Considering his greatness people called him Giriṇāṭhadvikṣāta. Guṇanidhi was his son.

When Guṇanidhi grew up he started his education under a preceptor called Sudhiṣṇa. Sudhiṣṇa had a wife named Mūktāvāli. After some time Guṇanidhi started having clandestine relations with Mūktāvāli. This developed so much that Guṇanidhi gave poison to his guru and killed him. His parents came to know of this and they came and reproached him. Evil-natured Guṇanidhi thought that the presence of his parents would be an annoyance to him in future. So Guṇanidhi and Mūktāvāli planned together to kill his parents and one day they poisoned them.

After some time Guṇanidhi and his wife lost all they had and gradually Guṇanidhi turned himself into a thief and drunkard. Nobody in the village liked the couple and all the villagers combined together and sent the couple away from the place. Guṇanidhi and Mūktāvāli went to the forests and there they started a life of looting the travellers. After some years of a sinful life Guṇanidhi one day died lying beneath a Rudrākṣa tree. Servants of both Yama and Śiva came to claim the soul of Guṇanidhi. The servants of Yama said that the right place of Guṇanidhi the sinner, was in hell but the servants of Śiva said that even if he was a great sinner his place was in heaven because he died lying beneath a Rudrākṣa tree. In the end the Śivādūtāsawon and took Guṇanidhi to heaven.

This story was once told by Śiva himself to demonstrate the glory of Rudrākṣa. (Skandha 11, Devī Bhāgavata)

GUṆAṢĀRMAN. A character of the Purāṇas well versed in all arts and sciences. He was the son of the brahmin Adityaṣārman of Ujjayini. The birth of Guṇaṣārman bears a story. Once Adityaṣārman went to the forests and by his spiritual powers made Sulocanā, a celestial nymph, to merge with him. A son was born to them and he was named Guṇaṣārman. Adityaṣārman became a deva. Even from boyhood he became very erudite. Once Indra came to see Adityaṣārman. Adityaṣārman who was in deep thoughts did not see Indra and so did not rise up when Indra came. Indra felt insulted and cursed him to be born again on Earth. Adityaṣārman prostrated before Indra and asked for pardon. Indra then said that it would be enough if his son was born on Earth in his stead. So Guṇaṣārman was born on Earth to bear the curse of his father.

At that time Ujjayini was being ruled over by a King called Mahāsena. He had a very beautiful wife named Airśvati. Guṇaṣārman became gradually an intimate friend of the King. Knowing that Guṇaṣārman was well versed in all arts the King and Queen asked him to give them a performance in dancing. The dance was so excellent that the King engaged Guṇaṣārman to teach dancing to Airśvati.

Once a royal attendant tried to give poisoned food to the King and Guṇaṣārman finding it out saved the King. From that day onwards the King loved him more. When once Mahāsena was imprisoned by his enemies Guṇaṣārman by his magic powers released him. In return for this help the King gave Guṇaṣārman a thousand villages.

Then to the misfortune of all Airśvati fell in love with Guṇaṣārman. Guṇaṣārman bluntly refused her love. Embittered at this Airśvati started talking ill of Guṇaṣārman and the King at last sent Guṇaṣārman out from the palace. The servants of the King tried to capture him and put him into prison but Guṇaṣārman escaped from the royal servants by his magic powers.

He then went and stayed in the house of a brahmin named Agnidanā and married his daughter, Sundari. Then on the advice of the brahmin Guṇaṣārman did penance to propitiate Subrahmāṇya and got many more powers from him. Guṇaṣārman equipped with these additional powers conquered Mahāsena and his country and became King there. He then sent Mahāsena and his wife Airśvati, out from the country. (Śūrya-prabhālaṁbaka, Tārāṅga 6, Kathāsārītsāgara).
GUṆAVARĀ. A heroine, devoted to her husband, in the ancient literature of India. There is a story in Kathāsārītāgāra describing the depth of her devotion to her husband.

GUṆAVARĀ was the queen of Virabhujā, King of the country of Vardhamāṇa. He had besides GUṆAVARĀ ninety-nine other wives. But none had any children. So, the King asked the chief physician of the state to suggest a way to remedy this. The physician asked for a white and horned goat to be brought and he then made with its flesh a preparation. Then sprinkling over it a special medicinal dust, he gave it to the wives to eat. But GUṆAVARĀ who never left her husband for a moment came late to take the preparation and by the time she came the others had already consumed the whole lot. Then by an order of the King the horns of the goat were made into a similar preparation and GUṆAVARĀ took it with the dust sprinkled over it. All the wives got a child each. GUṆAVARĀ’s son was named Śrīgabhujā.

All the other wives of Virabhujā became jealous of GUṆAVARĀ. They told the King that GUṆAVARĀ was in love with a servant of the palace. The King did not believe it. But he thought he would test her. The King called the servant in question and accusing him of having committed the murder of a brahmin sent him away from the state on a pilgrimage. Sorrow-stricken the servant set out for the pilgrimage. The King then approached GUṆAVARĀ and said that a sannyāsin had declared that he, the King, would lose his crown if one of his wives was not put in a cell underground. GUṆAVARĀ who adored her husband readily agreed to live underground.

The other wives were satisfied and yet they wanted to send away her son, Śrīgabhujā also from the palace. One day when all the children were playing in the court-yard a stork came and sat perched on the top of the palace. The princes attempted to catch hold of it. A sannyāsin who came there then informed the children that the stork was none other than Agniśikha, a demon, who had come there to capture and take away the children. All the children then tried to drop it down by arrows. But none succeeded. Then Śrīgabhujā took a golden arrow from the palace and sent it against the bird. The arrow struck the demon but the bird flew away carrying the golden arrow.

The other princes found it as an opportunity to rebuke Śrīgabhujā and they, led by Nirvāsabhujā, reproached him for losing the golden arrow. Unable to bear their insult Śrīgabhujā went after the stork following the path of the blood drops which fell on the ground from the wound. At last he reached Dhūmapura, the land of Agniśikha. There he fell in love with Rūpāśikā, the daughter of Agniśikha. They were soon married and yet Agniśikha gave Śrīgabhujā great trouble. At last Śrīgabhujā and Rūpāśikā took the golden arrow and eloped from the place one night and reached the city of Vardhamāṇa, Agniśikha followed them but the magic powers of Rūpāśikā made him turn back. When King Virabhujā saw his son Śrīgabhujā he was extremely happy. The King then released GUṆAVARĀ from the dungeon and praised her for her devotion to her husband. He loved her more and treated her with greater affection than before. At that time the servant who had been sent away also returned. (Taraṅga 5, Ratnaprabhālaṁbaka, Kathāsārītāgāra).

GUṆĀVARĀ. A celestial lady. This lady was present at the birthday celebration of Arjuna and gave there then a performance in dancing. (Sloka 61, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

GUṆAVARMAN. Ādiyasa, King of Ujjayini, had a wife named Tejasvati. GUṆAVARMAN was the father of Tejasvati. (Taraṅga 4, Lāvāpakalamābaka, Kathāsārītāgāra).

GUṆĀVATĪ I. Mother of Mandodāri (See under Mandodāri).

GUṆĀVATĪ II. Daughter born to Sunābha, younger brother of Vajranābha. She had an elder sister named Candramati. Prabhāvatī, daughter of Vajranābha, was married to Pradyumna, son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. One day when Prabhāvatī and Pradyumna were engaged in amorous conversation GUṆĀVATĪ and Candramati came to them and they expressed a desire to get husbands for themselves from among the Yādavas. Prabhāvatī advised Candramati to marry Gada, brother of Kṛṣṇa and GUṆAVATĪ to marry Śāńbha, son of Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 94, Harivānśa).

GUṆĀVATĪ. A river. Once Paraʿurāma slew some Kṣatriyas on the northern banks of this river. (Sloka 8, Chapter 70, Drṇa Parva).

GUPTA. A caste appellation. In ancient India appellations to the names were put to distinguish one caste from another. So ‘Sarma’ was added to the brahmin name, ‘Varmā’ to a Kṣatriya name ‘Gupta’ to a Vaisyā name and ‘Dāsa’ to a Śūdra name. Such appellations were considered to be a mark of nobility in those days. (Chapter 153, Agni Purāṇa).

GUPTAKA. A prince of the country of Sauvārya. He was a friend of the famous Jayadratha. In the great battle he was killed by Arjuna. (Śloka 27, Chapter 271, Vana Parva).

GURṆIKĀ. A companion of Devayānī. (Chapter 78, Ādi Parva).

GURU. The following five persons are to be considered as gurus: Father, mother, Preceptor, Agni (Fire) and Atman (soul), (Śloka 27, Chapter 214, Vana Parva).

GURUDĀRA. A son of Garuḍa. (Śloka 13, Chapter 101, Udyoga Parva).

GURUPARAMPĀRA. The origin of the Vedas and the lineage of Gurus is given below:

1) Origin of the Vedas. At the time of creation the Veda was born from the face of God. It contained a lakh of granthas with four pādas like Ṛk. From the Veda were born the ten yajñas. The Veda was originally one. It was Vyāsa who divided it into four divisions resulting in the four Vedas.

Vyāsa divided the Vedas thus: When Brahmadeva commanded Vyāsa to divide the Vedas into divisions he first selected four disciples who could see the end of the Vedas. He accepted Paila to study Ṛgveda, Vaśaśa-pāyana to study Yajurveda, Jaimini to study Sāmaveda and Sumantu to study Atharvaveda. Besides these he selected the highly intelligent Rmahārṣaṇa alias Sūta to study the Itīhāsas and Purāṇas.

At first, the Veda was one. Vyāsa divided it into four. He based the division on the cāturhotra, performance of The Sun then remaining in the shape of the horse (Vājī) itself imparted to him instructions on a new set of Yajus called Ayātayāma which were not known to anybody else, even to Vāiṣampāyana. Those who studied it were called Vājis. There are fifteen branches of the Vājis, Kāṇu being one of them. All were put into operation by Yājñavalkya.

6) The Sanāyāsin of Sāmaveda. Vedavāyāsa taught Sāmaveda to Jaimini. Jaimini had a son, Sumantu, and he in turn had a son named Sūtva. Sūtva and Sūtva were very intelligent and they studied one branch each of the Vedas. Sūtva had a son, Sukarṇa, and he divided Sāmavedasaṁhitā into a thousand branches. Sukarṇa had two disciples: Hiranyanābha and Paus-piṇī, and both of them studied all the thousand divisions of the Sāmaveda. The five hundred disciples of Hiranyanābha who came from the north and studied Sāmaveda were called Udiṣya Sāmargas (those come from the north). Another five hundred came from the east and studied Sāmavedasaṁhitā from Hiranyanābha and they were called Prācya sāmargas. (Hiranyanābha is known as Kauśalya also.) Paus-piṇī had four disciples: Lōgākṣi, Kauṭhumī, Kakṣīvān and Lāṅgali. These four and their disciples split their sanāhitās and increased them. Kṛṣṇa, one of the disciples of Hiranyanābha, taught his disciples twenty-four sanāhitās. They also split them into many more and made the Sāmaveda bigger.

7) The saints of Atharvaveda. Vāyāsa taught Atharvaveda to Sumantu, Sage Sumantu taught it to his disciple Kabandha first. Kabandha split it into two and gave one each to his disciples: Devādāsa and Pathyā. Deva had four disciples: Medhā Brahmacali, Sāntakāyani and Pippalāda. Pathya had three: Jābali, Kumuda and Saunaka. All these made sanāhitās. Saunaka split his sanāhitā into two and taught one to Badru and another to Saindhava. Muṇjikṣa learnt it from Saindhava. He split it into two first and then again into three. The five sanāhitās of Muṇjikṣa namely, Nakṣatralaka, Veda-kalpa, Saṁhitākalpa, Āgirasa kalpa and Sāntikalpa are the most important divisions of the Atharvaveda. The Nakṣatra kalpa contains methods of worshipping Nakṣatras; the Veda kalpa contains the rites of the Ṛtvik Brahmā and the Saṁhitākalpa contains the science of the care of horses and elephants.

8) Purāṇas. Vāyāsa compiled a Purāṇa sanāhitā using speeches, appendices, poems and Kalpanirnaya and taught it to Romahārṣaṇa alias Sūta. Sūta had six disciples named Sumati, Agnivarcas, Mitṛayūs, Sāṁsāpitāna, Akrṭavṝga, and Sāvarṇī. Akrṭavṝga, Sāvarṇī and Sāṁsāpaya born of Kaśyapagota have themselves made Purāṇasaṁhitās. There is another sanāhitā composed by Romahāraṇa based on the sanāhitās made by the above three. Viṣṇu Purāṇa is based on the latter four sanāhitās. There are fourteen Purāṇas, namely, Agneya, Brāhma, Brahmā, Brahmacalpa, Bhāgavata, Bhāvisya, Garuḍa, Kārma, Līṅga, Mārkandeyya, Mātśya, Nārādyya, Padma, Śiva, Skanda, Vāmana, Vārāha and Viṣṇu. There are eighteen sub Purāṇas also. In all these are described the creation, the deluge, the dynasties of the devas, history of kingly dynasties, changes of generations etc. (Aṁśa 3, Viṣṇu Purāṇa; 12th Skanda, Bhāgavata).
H (x). This letter has two meanings: (1) Understanding (2) Rudra. (Agni Purâna, Chapter 348).

HĀHĀ. A Gandharva, the son of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Pradā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 59). Other Information. (1) Hāhā was present at the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 59).
(2) He lives in Kubera's assembly. (Sahā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 25).
(3) Hāhā welcomed Arjuna in the Devaloka when once he visited the place. (Vana Parva, 'Chapter 43. Verse 14).

HAIHAYA. A King, the son of Vatsa, born in the dynasty of Śāyati. He was the founder of the Haihaya dynasty. He became a brahmin by choosing Sage Bhīrugu as his Preceptor. He was also known as Viṭāhavya. (Anuśaṇa Parva, Chapter 30, Verses 54-57).

HAIMAVATA. A region north of the Himalayas made famous in the Purāṇas. Sukabrahmarṣi on his way from Mahāmeru to Mithilāpūrī crossed this region. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 325, Verse 14).

HAIMAVATī I. A synonym of river Śatadru. (See under Śatadru).

HAIMAVATī II. A wife of Viśvāmitra. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 13).

HAIMAVATī III. A wife of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. When Kṛṣṇa was cremated Haimavati also ended her life in the funeral pyre. (Māusala Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 73).

HAIRANYAVATī. A river which flowed along Hiraṇmayā, a Purāṇic region. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 5).

HALADHARA. A synonym of Balarāma. (See under Balabhadrāramā).

HĀLAHALA(S). A sect of asuras, who were the first creation of the Trimūrtis, when they also possessed the power of creation. The Hālahalas, who became very powerful within a short period of time earned from Brahmā all the boons they wanted, and they then conquered the three worlds. At last they barricaded Kailāsa and Vaikuṇṭha also, and Harīharas (Viśṇu and Śiva) defeated them after a fierce fight lasting for a thousand years. The Harīharas returned to their abodes and spoke about their achievements. Their wives laughed at the bravado of their husbands. At this Mahāviṣṇu got angry with Lakṣmī and Śiva with Pārvatī, and in protest the Devis left their husbands. From that day onwards Viṣṇu and Śiva began losing their power. Brahmā, who divined the reason for the growing weakness of Viṣṇu and Śiva persuaded Lakṣmī and Pārvatī to return to their husbands so that they might regain their former power. Yet, Brahmā told them that in future he alone would handle the work of creation. Thus was Viṣṇu and Śiva divested of their right to creation. (Devi Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

HALĀYUDHA. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 10th century A.D. A mahākaviya called Kavirahasya is his most important work. The hero in the great poem is Kṛṣṇa III. A King of the Kaṭṭakūrī dynasty, and poet Halāyudha was a courtier of his.

HALIKA. A prominent nāga born in the Kaśyapa dynasty. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 15).

HALIMĀ. One of the Saptamātris (seven mothers). (Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 10).

HALIMAKA. A nāga born in the family of Vāsuki. He was burnt to death in the serpent yajña of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 5).

HAMSĀ I. An incarnation of Mahā Viṣṇu in Kṛtayuga. He instructed great sages like Sanaka on yoga in the presence of Śrīmān. He is also called yajñā. (Bhāgavata 11th Skanda). Harīsa, who was a prajāpati as well advised the Śādhyadevas about the means to attain salvation and the advice is known as Harīsa Gaṇita. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 288).

HAMSĀ II. A son born to Kaśyapa of his wife, Aṣṭi. He was a Gandharva and it is believed that Dītarāṣṭra was an aṁśāvatāra of this Gandharva. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 6, See also under Aṁśāvatāra).

HAMSĀ III.

1) General. A minister of Jarāṣandha. Harīsa and Īśābhaka were the sons of Brahmādatta, the chief of Śālva, and they were adepts in archery. Paraśurāma was their preceptor. (Harīvanśa 3, 103). The Mahābhārata calls Harīsa's brother Dībhaka.

2) Education. Vicakra and Janārdana were intimate friends of Harīsa from their very infancy, of whom Janārdana was the son of Mitrasaha, a friend of Brahmādatta. Harīsa, Dībhaka and Janārdana had their education together and their marriages also were conducted at the same time. At some time Śiva presented them many weapons like Rudrāstra, Maheśvarāstra and Brahmaśirāstra, and also two attendants for self-protection. (Harīvanśa 3, 105).

3) Curse of Durvāsas. Swollen-headed and haughty on account of Śiva's boon, Harīsa and Īśābhaka turned out to be a nightmare to the world, and they once tried to give trouble to Durvāsas, who cursed them to be killed by Mahāviṣṇu. Sometimes later the sage himself informed Śrī Kṛṣṇa about this curse of his.

4) Death. The Harīsa brothers began an aṁvāmedha (Horse Sacrifice) and deputed Janārdana to collect the tax thereof. Śrī Kṛṣṇa alone refused to pay the tax with the result that Hamsa clashed with Kṛṣṇa who killed Dībhaka and kicked Harīsa down to Pātāla. He died there, in Pātāla of snake-bite. (Harīvanśa 3, 128).

5) Grief of Jarāṣandha. Harīsa's death caused much grief to Jarāṣandha, and for many years after it, he shed tears over the death of his friend. Even at the time when Bhīmascena, during his triumphal tour of the east, attacked Jarāṣandha he remembered the dead Harīsa and Dībhaka. (Sahā Parva, 13, 37).

HAMSĀ (M). Swan. For story about the origin of haṁsa on earth see under Śṛṣṭi; Para 12.

HAMSACUṬA. A Yaka, who worships Kubera in his assembly. (Sahā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 17).

HAMSADHVĀJA. A King of Campaṇāgarā, who was a great devotee of Viśṇu. During his reign monogamy prevailed in the country. He took the yājñī horse of Yudhishthira captive, and in the fight to release the horse Arjuna killed Sudhanvā and Suratha, sons of Haināsdhavāja. Grieved and enraged at their death Haināsdhavāja took the field against Arjuna, and Śrī Kṛṣṇa finding that Arjuna’s life was in danger pacified them both. Also Kṛṣṇa requested Haināsdhavāja to be a supporter of Arjuna in future. Haināsdhavāja had five sons called Suratha, Sudhanvā, Sudarśa, Subala and Sama. (Jaimini, Āvamedha Parva, 17, 21).

HAMSĀJA. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. (Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 68).

HAMSĀKĀYA. A Kṣatriya by caste, Haiṁsākāya was present at the rājaśīya of Yudhishthira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 14).

HAMSĀKŪTA (M). A mountain lying between Hastināpura and the Saṭasāgara mountain. On his way to Saṭasāgara Pāṇḍu crossed Haiṁsākūta. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 50). Śrī Kṛṣṇa once tore off a peak of the mountain and established it in Dvārakā. (Bhārata, Southern text, Chapter 38).

HAMSĀPĀTHA (M). A region famous in the Purāṇas. The armies from this place fought in the great war. They fought taking their position at the grivāstha (neck position) of the Garuḍa vyuha (A particular array of soldiers) set up by Droṇa. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 7).

HAMSĀPRĀPATANA TĪRTHA. A sacred place at Prayāga on the banks of the Gaṅgā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 87).

HAMSĀVAKTRA. A warrior who fought on the side of Subrahmanyā and defeated the Asuraś. (Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 75).

HAMSĪ. A daughter of Bhagiratha whom sage Kautsa married. (Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 26).

HAMSĪKĀ. A daughter of Surabhi. This cow is said to be supporting the southern region. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 102, Verse 7).

HANŪMĀN. A monkey born of the elements and aspects of Devas. In the epics of no other country could be found a character that belongs to the animal kingdom who is as powerful, crude and philosophic as Hanūmān.

1) Birth. Many and different are the stories about the birth of Hanūmān told in Purāṇic literature, and they are briefly noted below.

(1) The semen discharged by Śiva, whose erotic feelings were excited by the sight of Viṣṇu disguised as Mohini was received by the Saptarṣis and deposited in the womb of Anjana, and Hanūmān was born out of it. (Śiva Purāṇa, Śatarudrasmāhitā).

(2) Daśaratha divided among his wives the divine pāyasa (pudding) got from the putrakāmeṣṭi yajña which was performed so that he might be blessed with children. Somehow or other a kite snatched some pudding and flew off with it. On its way the pudding fell down from the beaks of the kite on the fingers of Anjana doing tapas in the forest. She ate that pudding and Hanūmān was born as the son of Anjana due to the extraordinary powers of the pudding. (Ānanda Rāmāyaṇa).

(3) Śiva, once in his fierce and effulgent form (aspect) entered Kesarī, the husband of Anjana and had coitus with her. After that Vāyu (Wind-god) also had coitus with her. Thus as a result of the sexual act by both the Devas Anjana got pregnant. Later, Anjana was about to throw into the valley of the mountain her new-born child as it was an ugly one when Vāyu (Wind god) intervened and saved the child. Hanūmān was the child thus born of Śiva and Vāyu. (Bhaviṣya Purāṇa, Prāṇīsarga Parva).

(4) Hanūmān’s actual father was Śiva. Gaṇapati was born to Śiva and Pārvatī as they played in the forest disguised as elephants. After that Śiva and Pārvatī played about in the forest disguised as monkeys as a result of which Pārvatī got pregnant. Since Pārvatī did not like the idea of being the mother of a monkey, Śiva, by his yogic power entrusted the child, (in embryo) that was in the womb of Pārvatī to Vāyu (Wind god), who carried it with him hither and thither till it became mature, when it was deposited in Anjana, the monkey woman. The monkey called Kesarī was her husband. Thus Hanūmān was born as the son of Anjana.

Anjana also has a story of her own. Once upon a time she was the maid-servant called Puṇiṣkāthala of Bṛhaspati. One day she went out to gather flowers when the love-making of other young women attracted her so much that, without gathering flowers, and her erotic sentiments being aroused much, she returned home and covered Bṛhaspati with kisses. Bṛhaspati got really angry with the misbehaviour of his maid-servant and cursed her into a female monkey. She was told that, after she had lived for sometime with a monkey-husband she would get a child from the vitality of Śiva, after which she would return to him as maid-servant as of old. And, accordingly, Puṇiṣkāthala became a female monkey under the name Anjana and lived at Anjana forest with a handsome monkey called Kesarī as her husband.

It was while Anjana was doing tapas so that she might become pregnant by Śiva that Śiva and Pārvatī played in that forest disguised as monkeys, and Pārvatī conceived and the child ultimately came out as the son of Anjana.

Even while Anjana was pregnant the child in her womb had much to suffer at the hands of Bāli. Hearing from Nārada that Śiva’s son had been born in Anjana’s womb Bāli feared that the actual birth of such a son would jeopardise his lordship over the monkeys. To ward off the threatened contingency, Bāli, as advised by Nārada, let in the five metals (gold, copper, iron, tin and zine) in watery form into the stomach of Anjana. (This is a means of causing abortion). But, the attempt misfired. Instead of the five metals killing the child in Anjana’s womb, they became ear-ornaments for it, and Hanūmān was thus born with ornaments in his ears. (Kāṇḍa Rāmāyaṇa Pūrvakāṇḍa).

2) Naming and boons. As soon as Hanūmān was born Anjana was released from the curse, and she wanted to return to heaven. The monkey child asked its mother what its future would be and how it was to earn its living. She assured him that he would never be destroyed and that fruits as ripe as the rising sun (she pointed the sun out to him) would form his food. And, Anjana returned to heaven.
Thinking that the glowing and glittering Sun was food for him to be eaten, the monkey child made just one jump at it (Sun) and quite neared it. But seeing Rahu, bigger than the Sun he jumped at it. Then it was that it saw Airāvata and it tried to eat it. And, seeing this attempt of the monkey-child, Indra used his vajrāyuḍha (Thunderbolt) against it. The weapon hit its chin and wounded it, and in precarious condition it fell down on earth. Vāyu (Wind god) who saw his child falling down wounded carried it off to Pātāla.

When Vāyu (air) quitted the earth everything thereon came to a dead-stop. Living things were on the verge of death due to suffocation. And, then Brahmā and others went to Pātāla, comforted Vāyu and congratulated the monkey child. On the basis of Indra’s vajra having made a scar on its hanu (jaw-bone or chin) the monkey child was named Hanūmān by the Devas, who, one by one blessed him as follows:—

Brahmādeva; May you live long, so long as Brahmā exists.
Mahāviṣṇu: May you live all your life as the greatest devotee of God.
Indra: No weapon of any kind will wound or hit your body.
Agni: Fire will never affect you.
Kāla: May not death ever court you.
All the Devas: None will ever equal you in strength and speed. Brahmā blessed Hanūmān again giving him more physical power than Garuḍa and Vāyu blessed him to have more speed than himself. (air). (Vālmikī Rāma你会, Bālakānta, Canto 15; Uttaṇarāma你会; Kambārāma你会, Pūrvakaṇḍa; Adbhutarāma你会).

3) Education. Being born of Śiva and on account of the Śivaśakti in him, Hanūmān reached boyhood immediately. To learn the four Vedas and the six śāstras he chose Śūrya mentally as his preceptor, and approached him with the request to be taught the Vedas etc. Śūrya agreed to have Hanūmān as his disciple subject to the condition that the latter would not be permitted to sit with the Bālakhyās in his (Śūrya’s) chariot and study. Hanūmān agreed to the condition to learn from Śūrya walking in front of him. With book opened in his hand and concentrating all his attention on the face of Śūrya Hanūmān traversed the sky and within a short period of sixty hours he mastered all the Vedas and the śāstras thoroughly well. Though Śūrya said that he would consider the great interest Hanūmān took in his studies as daksinā (tuition fee) Hanūmān wanted Śūrya to accept something more by way of daksinā, and Śūrya said as follows:— "If you are very particular about offering me something more as daksinā I shall tell you. My son Sugrīva is living on earth with Bāli and he is not as strong and powerful as Bāli. You be of help to Sugrīva as his minister and constant companion.”

Happy at Śūrya’s words Hanūmān returned to the forest and lived as Sugrīva’s minister for the rest of his life.

4) Śrī Rāma’s servant. From the day he met Śrī Rāma after the abduction of Sītā by Rāvaṇa till Rāma’s death his story is inextricably connected with that of Rāma. (See under Rāma).

5) His music. Once in a musical competition Hanūmān defeated Nārada. (Adbhutarāma你会; also see Para 8 under Nārada).

6) Śivalīśa at Rāmēśvaram. There is a story in the Yuddhiḥkāṇḍa of Rāmāyaṇa connecting Hanūmān with the Śivalīśa installed in the temple at Rāmēśvaram. (See under Rāmēśvaram).

7) Lost his divine power. Once due to a curse of sage Trnabindu Hanūmān lost his great strength and vitality. But, he would regain the lost power when one reminded him of it. During the search for Sītā Hanūmān felt it difficult to jump across the southern sea to Lāṅkā due to the above curse. But, when Jāmbavān described to him about his noble origin and powers Hanūmān regained his lost power and vitality, and successfully jumped across the sea to Lāṅkā. (See Trnabindu II, Para 2).

8) A fort made of tail. He made a fort of his tail and saved Rāma and Laksmaṇa within it. (See Pātāla-HANYAMĀNA. A famous place in south India mentioned in the Purāṇas. (Bhūṣṇa Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 69).

HARA I. A famous Dānava, born to Kaśyapa of his wife Danā. He was reborn as King Sulāha. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 23).

HARA II. One of the eleven Rudras. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 19).

HARA III. A synonym of Śiva. śthīra's Rājasūya with presents. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 54).

HARAKALPA. One of the sons born to Vipracitī by Sīhī. Parāśurāma killed him. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 63, 19).

HĀRAKEYŪRAKA. See under Lavaṇa. II

HĀRAVĀ. An asura born from the tear drops of Brahmadeva. He was burnt to death in the flames emerging from Sivālīṅgā. (Skanda Purāṇa, 5, 2, 48).

HĀRDĪKA I. A Kṣatriya King born from an aśīa of the asura called Aśvapati. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 15).

HĀRDĪKA II. Kṛtavarman. He was called Hardika because he was the son of Hṛdika of the Yadu dynasty. (See under Kṛtavarman).

HARI I. A synonym of Viṣṇu. (See under Viṣṇu).

HARI II. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 61).

HARI III. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas and was killed by Karna.

HARI IV. An asura, the son of Tārakākṣa, who got from Brahmadeva a boon from Ṣrīsāṁjīvani. (a medicine to revive dead people). (Karna Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 27).

HARI V. Son of King Akaśīpāna. Though he was as powerful and proficient in archery as Mahāvīṣṇu, and equal in prowess to Indra in war he got into the hands of his enemies and was killed. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 27).

HARI VI. A particular sect of the attendants of Rāvaṇa. They attacked the army of monkeys. (Vana Parva, Chapter 283).

HARI VII. A very powerful bird born in Garuda's dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 13).

HARI VIII. A particular species of horses. They possess long hairs on the neck and are golden in colour. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 13).

HARI IX. A daughter born to Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Krodhavaśa. Lions and monkeys originated from this Hari. (Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakāṇḍa, Canto 14).

HARI XI. A sect of Devas. During the Tāmasamana-vantara there were four such sects, viz. Hariś, Satyas, Supāras and Sudhī. (See Manvantara).

HARĪBĀHīRU. A great sage, who was a member of Yudhiṣṭhīra's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

HARĪBHADRĀ. Daughter of Kaśyapa by Krodhā. She was given in marriage to sage Pulaha and from them were born the monkeys, Kinnaras, Kīṇipuruṣas etc. (Brahmadeva Purāṇa).

HARĪDĀSA. A monkey King, son of Pulaha by Śvetā. (Brahmadeva Purāṇa).

HARĪDHĀMA. A great sage who was reborn in his next birth as Raigāvēṇī, a gopi in Gokula (Cowherds' colony) as he had chanted the Kṛṣṇa mantra of twenty letters during his life as sage. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 72).

HARIJA? A. One of the Rākṣasa women who kept guard over Śītā in the Aśoka grove. (Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Khaṇḍa, 23, 5).

HARIMEDHĀS. A saintly King of ancient days. He once conducted a yajña and a daughter called Dhva-javatī was born to him. She lived in the western regions (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 13).

HARĪMĪTRA. A brahmin, who had his āśrama on the banks of the Yamunā. Owing to his association with Harīmitra a sinner called Vikuṇḍala took his bath in the sacred waters of the Kālindī during two Māgha months. The first bath released him from all his sins and the second bath made him eligible to go to heaven. Thus Harīmitra was responsible for the attainment of heaven by the sinner Vikuṇḍala. (Padma Purāṇa, Ādi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 31).

HARĪNA. A nāga which belonged to the Airāvata family. It was burnt to death at the Sarpaśatra of Jana-mejava. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 11).

HARĪNĀŚVA. A King in ancient India. He once got from King Raghu a sword with divine powers which he presented to King Sunaka. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 166).

HARĪNI. A daughter of Hīranyakāśīpū, also called Rohiṇī. She was married to Viśvapatī, an Asura. Vana Parva, 211, 18).

HARĪPINDĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 24).

HARĪŚCANDRA I. A King of the solar dynasty very much reputed for his unique truthfulness and integrity. He was the son of the famous Trīśāṅku,

1) Genealogy. See under Trīśāṅku.

2) A brief life-sketch. To keep his plighted word and for the sake of truth he gifted away the whole of his kingdom to Viśvāmitra. When that was not sufficient he cleared his debts to Viśvāmitra with the money he got by selling his wife, Candramati, his son, Lohitāśva and finally himself. And, he earned his livelihood with the wages he got for cremating corpses, himself doing duties as guard at a burning ghat and as the slave to a Cāṇḍāla. Ultimately the Trimūrti (Brahmadeva, Viṣṇu and Śiva) appeared and heaped on him all the boons he desired and rewarded him with high honours. (See for details para 4 under Viśvāmitra).

HARĪŚCANDRA II. An emperor of ancient times, to whom Brahmadeva gave as a gift a palace which automatically produced everything desired by its owner. He was lord over the seven islands. About his former birth and the plenitude of his riches the Padma Purāṇa (Uttara khaṇḍa, Chapter 32) has the following story to say:- Hariścandra himself was surprised that he became so very rich in the matter of children and of wealth. Wondering what actions of his entitled him to so much wealth and to his position which was equal to Indra's the emperor went to Sumera by vimāna where he questioned Sanatkumāra, a brahminal sage seated in meditation on a golden stone as to who he was in his past life and to which actions of his past life he owed all the present wealth and prosperity. The great sage replied as follows:-

"In the past birth you were a truthful and pure-hearted vaiśya; you gave up your own profession and so you were ousted from home by your own people. At that time a famine and other scarcity conditions occurred there. One day you got into a pond along with your wife, collected lotus flowers from it and went to Kāśi to sell the flowers. But, no one purchased the flowers. At last, Candramati, daughter of Indradyumna purchased the flowers for a yajña she was performing. When you saw Visńu walked along with Alāyabha-gavān (Sun-God) and worshipped with flowers, feelings of devotion swept your mind and you too worshipped the idols with lotus flowers. You enjoy today the fruits of that action in the past life.
(It is not quite definite whether Hariścandra I and II are one and the same person).

HARIŚCANDRA III. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 9th century A. D. The mahākāvya called “Dharma-sārnābhyudaya” is his main work. This mahākāvya comprises of 21 cantos. He has composed another work called “Jivandharacampu”.

HARITA I. A King who was the grandson of Hariscandra and son of Rohita. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

HARITA II. A King, who was the son of Vapuśmān and grandson of Svāyambhuvamanu. He was King of Haritavāraṇa in the island of Sāmalī. (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa 50, 28; Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 2, 3).

HARITA III. A son born to Yadu of the nāga woman called Dhāmavārṇā. He founded an independent kingdom in the Nāga island and became a prominent leader of the Madgura tribe. (Hari Vaniṣa, 2, 38; 29, 34).

HARIṬA I. A great sage who visited Bhīṣma in his bed of arrows (Saraśayā). (Santi Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 7). Once he attended Yudhiṣṭhira’s assembly and spoke on eternal truths conducive to mental peace.
That talk of his became famous as Hāritagītā. (Santi Parva, Chapter 278).

HARĪTĀ II. An author on Smṛtis (codes of conduct).
He has written two texts on the subject called Laghu-hārītikā smṛti and Vṛddhahārītamsmṛti.

HARITĀLA (M) A mineral (yellow orpiment) got from mountains, which is red like the clouds at dusk.
(Vana Parva, Chapter 158, 94).

HARITĀSAVA.
1) General. A King born in the solar dynasty. In the art of music he defeated Nārada and shamed Sarasavatī (Goddess of language), pleased Brahmā and by the melody of his music sent Visńu to sleep. The mounting achievements of the King in the art of music evoked jealousy in Śiva’s lord, the lord of music. When Saṅkaramūrti in a competitive spirit played the rāga Saṁkarābharaṇa (a particular tune) Haritāsaṇa pointed out that Saṁtarasa (the calmness and poise) which was suited to that rāga had given place to raudra rasa which was a serious mistake. Enraged at this Śiva opened his eye of fire at the King who, retorted boldly thus, ‘even if the eye of fire was opened a mistake was a mistake’. This stand of the King pleased Śiva so much that he bestowed on the King boons and good wishes as presents for his (king’s) victory over all.
2) Killed Andhaka. Andhakāśura conquered Svaroja and took Indra prisoner during the period when Hari-tāsa was King. The combined efforts of Bhṛṣpati a representate of the Devas visited Haritāşa at Ayodhya and sought his help to kill Andha-aka and accordingly the King set out for war against the demon. Agastya told the King in secret that Andhaka treasured an image of Śiva and Pārvatī in his stomach, and after removing, with his arrows the idol from his stomach, Haritāşa killed him and restored the Deva-loka to Indra. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

HARIVAMŚA (M). An appendix to the Mahābhārata in 10,000 verses. The main object of it is to sing the praises of Mahāśiva. It contains three parts called respectively Harivamśa Parva, Visńu Parva, and Bhaviṣya Parva. Creation of the world, kings of the solar dynasty and of the lunar dynasty, Yadu dynasty and the birth of Śrī Kṛṣṇa form the theme of Harivamśa Parva.
Visńu Parva deals mainly with the pranks and games of Śrī Kṛṣṇa in his childhood. Though there occur certain hints about the future at the beginning of the Bhāvīṣya Parva, the creation of the world, the incarnation of Visńu as Vāmana (Dwarf) and as Narasīnha (half man and half lion), Śiva and Visńu constitute its main theme.
The following verses prove that the Harivamśa also was composed by Vyasā.

Harivamśastataḥ parva-purāṇaṁ kihisasaińhitam /
Vṛṣṇiparvaśi śośaryā
Vṛṣṇiñcaśavadastathā //
Bhāvīṣyaṁ parvacāpyuktam
Khiśeyavādbhutaṁ mahat /
Etat parvaśatam pūrṇaṁ
Vyāsenoktaṁ mahātmāna //
(Adi Parva, Chapter 2, Verses 83-84).

HARIVARŞA (M) The northern part of Mount Hemaparva, Arjuna, during his triumphal tour of the northern regions conquered this region and took away a lot of costly gems. (Bhārata, southern text, sabhā Parva, Chapter 28).

HAVYAGHNA. A Rākṣasa about whom the following story is told in the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa.

Havyaghnā was born from the smoke which rose from the fire of a yajñā which sage Bharadvāja along with his wife Paśṭhānasī conducted on the banks of river Gautami, and he began eating the havis. Questioned about it by Bharadvāja Havyachgna answered as follows:—“I am an unfortunate fellow called Kṛṣṇa cursed by Brahmā. If you would kindly sprinkle on me the Gaṅgā water, Suvarṇa, ghre and soma I will be redeemed from the curse.

Bharadvāja complied with the request of Havyaghna and he got redemption from the curse.

HAYAGRĪVA I. An Asura, the son of Kaśyapaprajāpāti by his wife Danu. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakandā, Canto 14).

As a child the Asura began tapas on the banks of river Sarasvati, and after a thousand years Devi appeared and asked him to choose any boon he wanted, and he wanted to become invincible by Devas and Asuras, and also deathless. When Devi told him that such a boon was out of question, he wanted the boon that he (Hayagrīva) should not be killed by anyone but by a Hayagrīva (one with the horse’s neck). Devī granted him the boon.

Hayagrīva, who became haughty and overconfident on receiving such a boon, went about the three worlds troubling good people, and at last he clashed with the Devas. As he could be killed only by one with the head of a horse the combined attack of Mahāviṣṇu and the Devas did not succeed in defeating him and Mahāviṣṇu decided to rest for some time to recoup himself from weariness. During his rest his head was hit by the end of his own bow and the head was severed from the trunk. Mahāviṣṇu replaced the head thus lost with that of a horse and killed Hayagrīva in fight. (For details see Cītal).

HAYAGRĪVA II. An asura who guarded the kingdom of Narakāṣura. He was killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa, (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 130 Verse 50).

HAYAGRĪVA II. A King born in the Videha dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 15).

HAYAGRĪVA IV. A saintly king. Though he defeated his enemies, yet, as he had no backing and support, he was finally killed. The story of Hayagrīva was told by Vyāsa to teach Dharmaputra the lesson that even the greatest of heroes requires the support of others. Though killed, Hayagrīva secured a place in heaven. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 24, Verse 23).

HAYAGRĪVA V. An incarnation of Viṣṇu.

1) In Vedic literature —In Vedic literature incarnation as Hayagrīva is attributed not to Viṣṇu, but to Yajñā. But the Taittirīya Āranyaka depicts yajñā as a proto-form of Viṣṇu. The inference that may be drawn from the above is that the root of the Hayagrīva story detailed in Vedic and Purānic literature is one and the same.

About the Hayagrīva incarnation the Pañcaviṃśatikā contains the following story.

Agni, Indra, Viṣṇu and Yajñā (Viṣṇu) once began a yajñā on the understanding that the havirbhāga obtained from it should be divided among all the Devas. But, in violation of the agreement, yajña left the place carrying away the whole Yajñabhāga with him, and he drove back the Devas who followed him with the help of the bow presented to him by Devi. Finally the Devas got the string of the bow bitten off by termites and the bow which got straightened up cut off yajña’s head. Yajña then apologized for his offence and then the devas got the Aśvinidevas to fix the head of a horse to the trunk of Yajña. (Paścaminābhināmaṇa 7, 5, 6; Taṭṭiriya āranyaka 5, 1; Taṭṭiriya Sambhita, 4-9.1).

2) In Purānic literature. The above story is told in Skanda Purāṇa with slight modifications as follows:— Once Brahmā and other Devatās conducted a test as to which one amongst them was the greatest, and when it became evident that Mahāviṣṇu was, in every respect, superior to all the others Brahmā cursed that Viṣṇu should lose his head. Viṣṇu, who got thus bereft of his head attended a yajña conducted by the Devas with the head of a horse attached to his trunk. After the yajña he was driven back to Sārvaparāṇa and the blessings of Śiva got back to him and his former head instead of that of the horse.

HAYAJṆĀNA. The science of controlling horses. (Vana Parva, Chapter 77, 17).

HAYAŚIRĀŚ. Hayagriva. (See Hayagriva V).

HEMAMUKTĀ (M). II. A mountain on the banks of the river Nandā, known also as Rśabhakūṭa. Oneh Yudhishṭhira went to this mountain and enjoyed the many beautiful scenes there. (See Rśabhā II).

HEMAMĀLĪ I. He used to supply flowers to Vaiśravaṇa. He had a beautiful wife called Viśālaṅkā. Once when he returned with flowers from Mānasarasas he felt an uncustomed love and spent time at home in love pranks with his wife. Kubera went to the temple for worshipping Śiva at noon and though he waited there till dusk for Hemamāli to bring the flowers the latter did not come. Kubera got angry and sent for Hemamāli and he came trembling with fear. Kubera’s curse turned him into a leper afflicted with eighteen varieties of leprosy, and separated from wife he fell from Alakāpurī. At last he came to Hemādri where he met sage Mārkandeya. Hemamāli told him all about his misfortune and the sage advised him to observe Aśīḍhamrāgpākādaśa. Hemamāli did so and got cured of the fell disease and returned to Devaloka. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttarakhanda, Chapter 54).

(13) Bhagiratha performed tapas on the Himalayas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 108, Verse 3).
(14) The kingdom of Subāhu, King of Kalinda was on the plains of the Himalayas. The Pāṇḍavas stopped there for a night and left for the Himalayas the next day. (Vana Parva, Chapter 140, Verse 24).
(15) The Pāṇḍavas, on the seventeenth day of their life in exile in the forest came to the top of the Himalayas, and visited the āśrama of Vṛṣṇaparvan there. (Vana Parva, Chapter 18).
(16) It was while Bhimasena was hunting in the Himalayas and appreciating the beauties there that a python caught him by the leg. (Vana Parva, Chapter 178).
(17) Sage Mārkandeya once saw in the stomach of child Kṛṣṇa mountains like the Himalayas, Hemakūṭa etc. (Vana Parva, Chapter 188, Verse 112).
(18) Much anterior to sage Mārkandeya an owl called Prāvārakarṇa had lived on the Himalayas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 199, Verse 4).
(19) Karṇa conquered all the kingdoms on the Himalayas and collected taxes from them all. (Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Verse 4).
(20) On the northern heights of the Himalayas live Śiva and Pārvatī for ever. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 5).
(21) Himāvān is one of the six rain-producing mountains stretching from the cast to the west. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 3).
(22) Arjuna during his tour of Kailāśa in dream with Śri Kṛṣṇa saw all the peaks of Himāvān. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 80, Verse 23).
(23) When Śiva burnt to ashes the Tripuras, Himāvān and Vindhya served as the axles of Śiva’s chariot. (Karna Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 22).
(24) The River Gaṅgā deposited Śiva’s semen on a high peak of Himāvān and Subrahmāṇya was born from it. (Karna Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 9).
(25) Himāvān, the Devātā of the mountain, also was present at the installation of Subrahmāṇya as chief of the army. (Sālīya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 14).
(26) Himāvān presented to Subrahmāṇya two attendants called Suvarcās and Atīvarcās. (Sālīya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 46).
(27) Śri Kṛṣṇa once performed tapas on Himāvān, and as a result of it was born his son Pradysunna from Rukmiṇī. (Saupāṭika Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 30).
(28) Himāvān presented inexhaustible wealth to emperors Pṛthu. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 113).
(29) The peaks of Himāvān have an area of 100 yojanas; Brahmā once conducted a yajñā there. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 32).
(30) Dakṣaprajāpati once conducted a yajñā at the place called Gaṅgādvāra on the slopes of Himāvān. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 284, Verse 3).
(31) In Chapter 327 of the Śānti Parva the following statement occurs about Himāvān. According to the advice of King Janaka Śūka brahmaṇga mounted the Himalayas. Siddha-cīrāṇa lived on the mountain. Celestial women walked all over the place. The mountain always reverberated with the noise of different varieties of living beings. The noise produced by Kinnaras, peacocks and many other birds could always be heard there. Himāvān was the permanent abode of Garuḍa. The Aṣṭādpālakas also lived there.
(32) When Śūka moved up to the world above it appeared as though the Himāvān was being cut open. He saw two divine peaks of mountains on the two sides of the path; one of them was the peak of Mahāmeru and the other that of Himāvān. Both the peaks gave way to Śūka. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 333).
(33) Śiva desired to secure Umā, the daughter of Himāvān as his wife. Meantime sage Bhrigu demanded that Umā be wedded to him. When Himāvān told the sage that it had already been decided to give Umā in marriage to Śiva, the Sage cursed that there would not be, in future, gems in the Himāvān. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 62).
(34) Viṣṇu and Śiva once fought with each other on the Himāvān, and then it seemed as though the mountain was being clef into pieces. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 122).
(35) Nārada had his āśrama there, on the Himāvān. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 346, Verse 3).
(36) Śri Kṛṣṇa once visited the āśrama of Upamanyu on the Himāvān. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 43).
(37) King Marutta performed a yajñā on the Himalayas and brahmāns went away leaving a lot of wealth there. (Āśvamedhīka Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 20).
(38) Saṅjaya left for the Himalayas after Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhāra were burnt to death in a wild fire. (Āśramaśīka Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 33).
(39) During their mahāprāsthaṇā (great journey) the Pāṇḍavas travelled by the Himalayas and Dharmaputra ascended to heaven from the top of the Himalayan peak. (Mahāprāsthaṇika Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 1).

HIMGULA. A mineral (vermilion) obtained from mountainous regions. It has the colour (red) of the sky at sunset. (Vana Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 94).

HIPPOCRITUS. A Greek scientist and thinker. Father of the Allopathic system of medicine. He has written a book on medicine consisting of nearly seventy parts. His theory is that the ‘heart’ is the centre of origin of life and the heat of the body is the manifestation of life. Out of the five elements of the Indian system of medicine he accepts four, viz. Pṛthvī (earth), Āp (Water), Agni (fire) and Vāyu (air). Till the 10th century A.D. his theories were very popular.

HIRANYAMAYA (M). A particular region in Jambū island, to the south of Nila mountain and to the north of mount Nisadha. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

HIRANYA. (Hiranyakaśipu, Hiranyakaśa)
1) General. Owing to a curse Jaya and Vijaya who were gate-keepers at Vaikuṇṭha were born as two asuras, Hiranyakaśa (elder brother) and Hiranyakashipu (younger brother). These brothers are known also as the Hiranyakas. (See Jayavijaya)
2) Birth. Three sons called Hiranyakas, Hiranyakashipu and Vajrāṅīga and a daughter, Sīṁhikā were born to Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Diti. To Hiranyakashipu were born four sons called Anuśūla, Hādīa Prahlāda and Samihāla. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 15). There is yet another story relating to the birth of these asuras. Though the other wives of Kaśyapa became mothers Diti alone was not blessed with a child for a long time. One day at dusk while Kaśyapa was immersecd in meditation Diti rushed into his room and began lamenting and complaining about having not yet been made a mother, and urgently asked Kaśyapa to make her one. But, Kaśyapa pointed out that it was not the proper time for such things. It was dusk when Śiva with his attendants would be out sight-seeing covered with ashes from burning ghats spread all around by storms. So Kaśyapa wanted to wait for some time more. But, she was not in a mood to pay heed to his advice and Kaśyapa had to yield to her proposal. After obliging her, once again he took his bath and began meditation. Diti became pregnant. She also got alarmed about the indiscretion committed at dusk time that day and, Kaśyapa told her: “Your mind became impure, you did not obey me, you insulted the Devas also. There are two kids of a very low type in your womb. They will oppress the three worlds and kill innocent people. Mahāvisṣu will never tolerate such things. He will incarnate himself to kill them. But since you feel penitent now, a grand-son of yours will become liked by all good people, and he will be a great devotee of Mahāvisṣu. (This was Prahlāda).
At any rate, one hundred years after her getting pregnant Diti delivered twin sons. The first born was named Hiranyakas and the next one Hiranyakashipu. (According to certain Purāṇas Hiranyakashipu was the first born).
3) Hiranyakas. The boys grew up to become a growing menace to the whole world. Hiranyakas toured all the three worlds with a club. He besieged svarga. Devas ran away in fear. Hiranyakas, shaking his club, jumped from the sky into the sea and engaged himself in the sport of thrashing the waves with his club. Years passed by like this, and at last he went to Vibhāvari, the capital of Varuṇa and challenged him to fight. Varuṇa came out of the palace, admitted his incapacity to fight Hiranyakas, and suggested to him to challenge Mahāvisṣu. Accordingly he set out in search of Mahāvisṣu. It was during this period of time that the earth got engulfed in water. Śvāyambhuvamanu requested his father, Brahmā to raise up the earth from water. But, nowhere could be seen the earth, everywhere it was only a vast expanse of water. Brahmā then meditated upon Mahāvisṣu, who came out through Brahmā’s nose in the form of a tiny boar. It grew up into a very big boar within no time, and jumped from the sky into the ocean, and within a few minutes it picked up from under the ocean the earth on its tusks and appeared on the surface of the water. Hiranyakas understood that the boar, which without the least fear picked up the earth from Pāṭala was none other than Mahāvisṣu and he challenged Viṣṇu to fight. After replacing the earth in its old position Viṣṇu fought with Hiranyakas and killed him.
4) Hiranyakashipu. With the killing of his brother, Hiranyakashipu’s hatred and enmity towards Viṣṇu increased very much. He, by doing tapas for very long years, secured boons from Brahmā and conquered the three worlds and ruled them as Triloka Cakravarti (Emperor of the three worlds). He prohibited throughout the empire not only the chanting of Viṣṇu’s name, but even thinking about him (Viṣṇu) by his subjects. “Hiranyāya namāḥ” (salutations to Hiranyā) replaced the old custom of chanting ‘Nāriyānāya namāḥ’ (salutations to Nāriyā). Meanwhile, a son called Prahlāda, a great devotee of Mahāvisṣu was born to Hiranyakashipu. (For the story of Hiranyakashipu’s death see Prahlāda). (Kamba Rāmāyana, Yuddha Kāñṭa; Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmikhaṇḍa, Chapter 20).
5) Story about the name Hiranyakashipu. Sage Kaśyapa once conducted an Aśvamedha yajña. A golden seat was put up there for the great sages who came to participate in the yajña. Diti was pregnant during the time of the yajña, and while it was duly progressing she one day came and sat on the above-mentioned golden seat, and very shortly she delivered a child. As the child was delivered on the golden seat the child came to be called Hiranyakashipu. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 8, 5, 7-12; Śaiva Purāṇa, 67, 69).

HIRANYA

A nāga born in Vāsuki’s dynasty. He was burnt to death at the sarpa satra of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 6).

HIRANYABINDU. A sacred place near the Himālayas. During his pilgrimage Arjuna visited this place also. A bath in this tirtha will wash off one’s sins. Hiranyakshinda is situated on the top of Mount Kālaṇījara.

HIRANYADHANUS. A King of forest tribes. Ekalavya, the great master of archery was Hiranyakadhanus’s son (See Ekalavya).

HIRANYAGARBHA. A synonym of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Śaṁti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 96).

HIRANYAHASTA. A son born to princess Vadhramati thanks to the blessing of the Aśvinīdevas. She was married by a eunuch. Sorrow-stricken at such a marriage the princess requested the Aśvinīdevas for children and they gave her a son, (Rgveda, Maṇḍala I, Anuvāka 17, Sākta 116) who was called Hiranyakahasta. He became a sage and married the beautiful daughter of King Madrāśa. (Śaṁti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 35).

HIRANYAKASIPIU. (See Hiranya).
HIRANYAKASIPIU II. A dānava. He once shook Mount Meru and Śiva granted him welfare and prosperity. (Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 73).

HIRANYAKSHA I. A brother of Hiranyakasipu. (See Hiranyā).
HIRANYAKSHA II. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra, who was a Brahmāvādin. (Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 57).

HIRANYANĀBHA I. A King born in the solar dynasty. He was the son of Viddṛti and the father of Puṣya. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

HIRANYANĀBHA II. A son of Śrījaya. A child named Suvarṇaṣṭhitī was born to Śrījaya, but it died before long, and then it was Nārada who brought it. back to life again. After its rebirth the child came to be called Hiranyanābha also. Hiranyanābha lived for 1000 years. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 149).

HIRANYAPURAM. A city of the Dāityas. The Dāitya woman, Pulomā got the city for her children by tapas. Puloma is called Kālakā also. (Certain Purāṇas aver that Kālakā was the sister of Pulomā). The children of Pulomā are known as Kālakeyas for whose safety and security she did tapas for 1000 years. And, when Brahmā asked her to choose any boon she desired, Pulomā said as follows: “There should arise no reason or cause for my sons to feel sorrow in their life; Devas, snakes or Rākṣasas should not kill them and they must have a beautiful city to live in. Brahmā granted her all the boons. Hiranyapuram was built by Brahmā for the Kālakeyas to live in. It was full of gems and it could easily travel in the sky.

When life became impossible for the Devas due to the depredations of the Kālakeyas, Indra brought Arjuna to Devaloka. As the Kālakeyas were granted the boon that they would not be killed by the Devas, Arjuna’s help had thus to be sought by Indra. Arjuna killed the Kālakeyas and destroyed Hiranyapuram. (Vāna Parva, Chapter 173). On one occasion Nārada gave a correct description of Hiranyapuram to Mātali, the charioteer of Indra. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 100).

HIRANYARETAS. One of the sons of Priyavrata, Hiranyaretas was king of the Kuśa island and had seven sons called Vasu, Vasudāna, Drāḍharuci, Nābhigupta, Satyavrata, Vivikta and Vāmadeva. (Bhāgavata 5th Skandha).

HIRANYAROMAN. A king of Vidarbha who exercised suzerainty over the southern regions. He was also known as Bhīṣmaka. (See Bhīṣmaka).

HIRANYASARAS. An ancient tirtha of the western regions. Candra washed off his sins by bathing here. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 57).

HIRANYAŚRNGAM. An extensive mountain to the north of Mount Mainākā, which is to the north of Mount Kañkāśa. This mountain is said to be a mine of gems. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 10; Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 42).

HIRANYASTUPA. A great tirtha, the son of Aṅgiras. (Ṛgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 7, Sūkta 31).

HIRANYAVARMAN. A king of Daśārha, His daughter was married by Siṃhaśānti. (See Ānihā).

HITOPADEŚA. A book written in Sanskrit on the basis of the Šaṅcatantra. It is a collection of forty-three stories, and twenty-five of the stories are found in the Pañcatantra. There is also not much difference in the stories, about the origin of the two books. The author of Hitopadeśa is considered to be one Nārāyana Paṇḍita, a dependant of King Dvālalcandra. Of the manuscripts available of the book, the oldest one is dated 1373 A.D. It has been surmised that the book was written somewhere between the 10th and 12th centuries A.D.

There are four parts to the book called Mitralābha (gaining friends), Suhrddheda (creating dissensions between friends) Vigrāha (separation) and Sandhi (union).

Hlādīnī. A tributary of the Gaṅga. Gaṅga brought down by Bhagiratha to the earth first fell on Śiva's head and thence on Bindusaras, and therefrom flowed in seven tributaries. Three tributaries, Hāḍāni, Pāvāni and Analīni flowed eastwards, Sucakṣus, Śitā and Śindhu westwards, and the seventh tributary followed Bhagiratha. The mortal remains of the sons of Sāgara were flooded with its waters, and their souls attained heaven.

HOMA. A king belonging to the dynasty of Bharata. He was the son of Kṛṣṇadra and father of Sutapas. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

HOMADHENU. The cow, which offers milk needed for yajña.

HOMAKUṆḌA(M). The pit for making offerings during yajñas. Rules about making the pit are described in chapter 24 of the Agni Purāṇa as follows:—

First, demarcate a piece of ground one yard square with thread and dig it one yard deep. After leaving two angulas (inches) space on all the four sides of the pit make three divisions in it. The three divisions should be 12” × 8” and 4” deep; the inner division 12” deep, the middle one 8” and the one outside of it 4” deep. All the three divisions should be four feet in width. The above three divisions are called Satvamekhala, Rajomekhalā and Tānasamekhalā, and this is the pit, viz. Homakunḍa. On the western side of it a yoni (receptacle) 10 × 15 angulas should be made. Its depth should gradually decrease in the descending order 6, 4, 2 angulas. In shape the yoni will be of the shape of the peepal leaf. (Yoni is that of Śakti; the Kundā is her stomach. The conception about Śakti is that of a woman lying on her back, head towards the east.) The priest performs the rites, himself seated to the west of the yoni and his head turned to the east.

HOTRAVĀHANA. A saintly king, who was the grandson of Anībā. (See under Anībā).

Hrāda I. Also called Hlāda, a son of Hiranyakasipū. (See under Anuḥlāda).

Hrāda II. A nāga. Hrāda was also present in the company of nāgas, which carried the soul of Balabhadramā to Pātāla. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

HRADODARA. A Rākṣasa, who was killed by Subrahmanya in the war between the Devas and the Asuras. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, 75).

HRDĪKA. A Yādava. He was the father of Kṛtavarmān. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 105).

HRDYA. A great tage. He lives in the assembly of Indra. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, 13).

Hṛi.

1) Birth. One of the 16 daughters born to Śvayambhuva- manu by his wife called Śatarūpā. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

2) Other information. (1) Hṛidevi worships Brahmā in his assembly. (2) When Arjuna started for Indraloka Draupadī meditated upon Hṛi so that no dangers might overtake him. (Vana Parva, Chapters 37, 38). (3) Hṛi too was present at the installation ceremony of Subrahmanya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, 13).

HRĪMĀN. A Sanātanaśivavadeva, (eternal Deva of the universe). (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, 31).

HRĪNĪSEVA. A saintly king born in the Asura dynasty. He was one of the ancient kings whom fate had made to relinquish their kingdoms. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 227, 31).
HÜHU. A Gandharva, son of Kaśyapaprajāpati by Pradhā.
(1) He was present at the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 59).
(2) Hūhlī was among the Gandharvas who welcomed
Arjuna in Devaloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 14).
(3) Hūhlī lives in Indrasabhā.
(4) Once he was turned into an alligator on account of the curse of Devala. (See under Indradyumna).
HÜNA. A tribe. There are a number of references in the Purāṇas to the Hūṇa, who were created from the froth in the mouth of Nandini, the cow which was in Vasisṭha’s aśrama. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 174, Verse 18).
Nakula conquered the Hūṇas in the western regions.
(Sabha Parva, Chapter 32). The Hūṇa kings took part in the Rājasūya of Yudhishṭhira and made costly presents. (Sabha Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 24).
HUNDÁ. An asura, the son of Vipracitti. (He abducted Asokasundari, sister of Subrahmāṇya. (Padma Purāṇa).
(See under Asokasundari.)
HUNDA (M). An urban region in ancient India. The people of this area were known as Hūndas. In the great war they fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. They took their positions in the Kramārūṇa yuṣ्मa formed by Nakula and Sahadeva. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 51).
HUTA (M). One of the five great yājñas. (See Prabhatam).
HUTAHĀVYAVĀHA. One of the two sons of Dhara, the Vasu, the other son being Dravīḍa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 21).
I. (a). This letter means Kāmādeva. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 349).
I. (b). This letter means ‘Raṭi’ and Lakṣmī. Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).
IDĀ I. Daughter of Vāyu (wind-god). Idā had a son Utkala by Dhrūva.
IDĀ II. Daughter of Manu. In Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, we find the following reference to this Idā:—
Once Manu came to know that Devas and Asuras had performed an Agnyādhaṇa (consecration of the fire).
To ascertain whether it was deposited at the proper time, Manu sent Idā to them. Idā found that both parties had followed the wrong method, She said to Manu:—“Your yājña (Agniydhaṇa) should not be as ineffecual as that of the Devas and Asuras. Therefore I myself shall deposit the Trividhāgni (the three Agnis which are to be set in the proper place) at the proper place.” Manu agreed and began his yāga. As a result of it the Devas attained plenty and prosperity.
Once when Idā was in the presence of Manu, the Devas invited her openly and the Asuras invited her covetously. Since Idā accepted the invitation of the Devas, all creatures abandoned the Asuras and joined the party of Devas. (Taittirīya Samhitā).
IDHMĀJHVA. Śvīyambhuva Manu had two famous sons—Priyavrata and Uttānapāda. Of them, Priyavrata married Surūpī and Barhishmati, the two daughters of Viśvakarmā Prajāpati. Idhmajhiva was born to him by his first wife. Idhmajhiva had nine brothers Viṣ, Agnīdha, Yaññābāhu, Mahāvīra, Rukmaśukra,
Gṛṛtapṛṣṭha, Savana, Medhātithi, Vīhitotra and Kavi.
Urjavasati was their youngest sister. (Maḥā Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).
IDHMĀVĀHA. Son of Agastyā and his wife Lopāmudrā.
The actual name of Idhmāvāha was Tridasyu. There is a story in the Mahābhārata about the birth of this boy.
When Lopāmudrā was pregnant, Agastyā asked her:— “1000 sons of average ability; or 100 sons, each of them having the worth of 10 sons; or 10 sons, each having the worth of 100 sons; or a single son having the nobility and greatness of more than a thousand sons; which would you prefer?” Lopāmudrā chose a single son with the greatness of a thousand sons. Tridasyu or Idhmāvāha was the son born according to her wish. The child was in the womb for seven years before he was born. He began to recite Vedas even from the moment of his birth. As the boy grew up, he used to bring small pieces of firewoods and twigs to feed the fire for his father’s homa. That was why he got the name Idhmāvāha.
(One who brings the necessary things for homa).
(Idhmā =fuel; vāha = one who carries).
IKŚŪLA. An important river. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva,
Chapter 9, Verse 17).
IKŚŪMATI. A river. It flows near Kurukṣetra. The nāgas, Takṣaka and Aśvasena lived in this river. (M.B.
Ādi Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 138).
Kuśadhvaja, brother of the King of Mithilā used to live in the Ikṣūmati river valley. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Dāla Kānda, 7th Sarga, Verse 2).
There is a reference to this river in Kathāsaritsāgara, Madanamānicukālāhaka, 2nd tāranga also.
IKŚVĀKU. A son of Vaivasvata Manu.
1) Genealogy. From Viṣṇu were descended in the following order—Brahmā—Marici—Kaśyapa—Vivasvān—Vaivasvata Manu—Ikṣvāku.
Śraddhā, Vaivasvata Manu’s wife bore him ten sons—
Iksvāku, Nṛga, Śaryāti, Dīṣṭa, Dhṛṣṭa, Karuṇa,
Narisyanta, Nābhāga, Prṣadhira and Kavi. Vaivasvata Manu had six more sons by another wife, Chāyā. They were Manu, Yama, Yami, Aśvinīkumāra, Revanta, Sudāyunā. The Iksvāku family takes its source from Iksvāku. The Kings of the solar dynasty were all born in the Iksvāku family. This dynasty is named “Solar Dynasty” because Iksvāku was born to Vivasvān (Sun) the son of Kaśyapa. In Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha we see that Iksvāku was born from Manu’s spittle. The descendants of Iksvāku up to Śrī Rāmā’s sons Lava and Kuśa are given below:—
Iksvāku had three sons—Daṇḍa, Viśukṣi, and Nimi.
From Viṣukṣi was born Śaṭāda; from Śaṭāda, Purāṇa-java; from Purāṇa, Jaya; from Jaya, Kukutṣa; from Kukutṣa, Anenas; from Anenas, Prthūlaśva; from Prthūlaśva, Prasena; and Prasena, Yuvanāśva; and from Yuvanāśva was born Māndhātā. Ambariṣa, Mucukunda and Purukutsa were the sons of Māndhātā.
Besides them he had fifty daughters also. The sage Saubhāri married them. The family-tree continues again from Purukutsa, one of the sons of Māndhātā.
From Purukutsa, Trasadasya was born; from Trasada-sya, Anaranya; from Anaranya, Arasya; from Arasya, Vasumana; from Vasumana, Sutana; from Sutana, Traiṛyāruṇa; from Traiṛyāruṇa, Satyavrata or

1. Mahābhārata Aśvamedha Parva (Chapter 4) says that Mahābhālu was the son of Vaivasvata Manu, Prasandhi was the son of Mahābhālu, Kuṭapa was the son of Prasandhi and Ikṣvāku was the son of Kuṭapa.
ILÀ I. Daughter of Vaivasvata Manu.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in this order:—
Brahmā—Marici—Kaśyapa—Vaivasvata Manu—Ilā.
Vaivasvata Manu was the son of Kaśyapa by his wife Aditi, and Ilā the daughter of Vaivasvata Manu by his wife, Śraddhā. Iṣvāku, the ancestral father of the solar dynasty of Kings was brother of Ilā.

2) Vaivasvata Manu and Śraddhā had, for a long time no children. Manu got performed once by Agastya a yajña to propitiate the Mitrāvarūṇas so that a son might be born to him (Manu). Soon a daughter was born to him and she was called Ilā. Then Manu asked Vasiṣṭha why a daughter was born to him instead of a son for whom the yajña was performed by Agastya. At once, Vasiṣṭha by his will-power turned the girl Ilā into a boy, and the boy was named Sudūyūna. (Bhāgavata).

3) Sudūyūna again turned into woman. Once Śuniaka and some other sages went to the great forest Kumāra Vana near Kailāsa to salute Śrī Paramesvara ignorant of the fact that just then Parvatī and Parameśvara were enjoying themselves. The sudden appearance of Śuniaka and others was not relished by the divine couple, who were then naked. They therefore, pronounced the curse that anybody who entered the forest in future would be turned into a woman. (Bhāgavata).

Sudūyūna, now a young man, went for hunting one day. Sudūyūna who was ignorant of this curse entered this forest with his friends while hunting. At once all of them were transformed into women. Grief-stricken, they stayed in the forest for some days, and then started for the palace. Sudūyūna bearing the name Ilā walked at the head of the party as a beautiful woman. On the way Buddha met Ilā, they fell in love with each other and got married. A son, Purūravas was born to Buddha by Ilā. (Bhāgavata).

4) Transformation again; Ilā expressed to Vasiṣṭha, her grief at having been turned into a woman, the sage requested Śrī Paramesvara to restore her to her former form as a man. Śiva said that Ilā would be a man and a woman every alternate month, throughout life. During the month when she was a man she would engage himself in matters of Government, and the next month, when a woman, she would stay in the inner apartments in the palace. Brahmapāda Purāṇa, Chapter 32 says that Ikṣvāku, brother of Purūravas ruled the state till the latter became a major. As soon as Purūravas attained majority Sudūyūna handed over to him the reins of Government and retired to the forest for tapas, and during this period he was taught the Nāvākṣara mantra by sage Nārada. Sudūyūna adored Devī with this Māntra. She appeared to him and blessed him with the state of salvation. (Bhāgavata).

Purūravas married Urvāśī, and ruled the country. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha; Devī Bhāgavata, First Skandha; M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75 and Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 26).

ILÀ II. A river. At the birth of Subrahmanya this river paid homage to him with fruits and roots. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 24). Dharmapatra along with the brahmins bathed in this river. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 156, Verse 8).

ILĀSPADA. An ancient holy bathing ghat. A dip in the holy waters wards off ill-fate and confers the benefits of the Vaiśeṣika yajña. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verses 77, 78).

ILĀVARTA (ILĀVRTA). A King in the line of Priyavrata, son of Śvayambhuva Manu. (See Genealogy).

ILĀVRTA (ILĀVRTTA). A locality. (See Bhūgūṇita).

ILĀVRTA VARŚA. That part of the country in the centre of Jambūdīvpa. (M.B. Sahā Parva, Chapter 28).

ILAVU. See Vāyu, Para 6.

ILILĪLA. The wife of Viśravas and mother of Kubera. Viśravas was born as the son of Pulastya, one of the Prapūrvarṣa Mānini. Viśravas had two wives, Kaikasi and Ililīla, alias Devavaruni and Viśravāṇa (Kubera) was born of Ililīla. Hence Kubera is called Aśīvibhūṣaṇa; To Viśravas was born by Kaikasi, Rāvana, Viśravāṇa, Kumbhakarna and Śurpaṇakha.

ILILA. A King of Pūruvāna; father of King Duṣyanta. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 71). Rathantarī was Ilīla's wife. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 74). Some Purāṇas call Ilīla by the name Ilīla and Rathantarī as Rathantarī also.

Matināra, the most righteous of Kings had four sons endowed with great prowess named Taṁsu, Mahān, Atri and Druhuy. Taṁsu was responsible for the growth of the Pūru dynasty. He conquered the whole of earth and won fame. Ilīla was Taṁsu's son. He also conquered the whole world, and he had five sons. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 14-18).

ILINA. Son of king Taṁsū of the Pūru dynasty. His wife was Rathantarī. Ilīla had five sons by her. They were: Duṣyanta, Śūra, Bhīma, Pravasu and Vasu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 16-18. See also under the word Ilīla).

1. There are certain variations in the genealogy according to some Purāṇas. The genealogy given above is based on Bhāgavata and Agni Purāṇa.
ILLAKA. A person who led a very ideal family life. Son of a Vaśya in the city of Mathurā, Illaka had a very beautiful wife. Illaka had one day to go to another place and his wife wanted to accompany him. But, Illaka did not allow that and went alone. Then she waited at the gates looking towards the husband moving fast away. And, when he completely disappeared from sight she, who could not bear the separation, fell down on the spot and expired. Illaka heard about the death and without delay, he hurried back home. He placed the dead body of his wife on his lap and wept. Weeping thus he also expired. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Lāvānaka-lāmbaka, Tārānaga 1).

ILVALA. An Asura, who lived in the Maqimati city. Ilvala and his brother Vātāpi ate up a number of brahmins and Agastya cursed them to death. (See Agastya).

INDIA. ‘South Sarakhi’, a newspaper published from the United Arab Republic with the assistance of the Indian Embassy gives the following account of how the land originally known as ‘Bhārata’ came to be called India. The name ‘Indra’ was given to ‘Bhārata’ by the Arabs. Even from very early times, Arabs used to give the name ‘Hind’ to their girls. In ancient Arabic love poems, this name could be seen very frequently. There were commercial and cultural contacts between Bhārata and Arab lands, from very old times. The words ‘Kharaṣ Pāl’ (spices) ‘Pulfil’ (Pepper) etc. may be seen in Arabic poems of the pre-Islamic period. These contacts became more intimate in later years and the Arabs began to take very great interest in the products and the people of this country. They began to call ‘Bhārata’ by the pet name ‘Hind’ which they used for their little children. They began to use the term ‘Al Hind’ when referring to Bhārata in their poems, records and trade agreements. In course of time this was shortened to ‘Hind’ and finally became ‘INDIA’.

INDIVĀRAKŚA. A Gandharva. He was the son of Nalanābha, the chief of the Vidyādhars. There is a story about this Gandharva in Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Chapter 60 :-

Indivārāka went to the sage Brahmatīra to learn Ayurveda. For some unknown reason, the sage did not teach him. Indivāra served to learn by overhearing what the guru taught the other pupils from a hiding place. In six months’ time he learnt Ayurveda. Overjoyed at the thought that he was able to acquire as much learning in this science as the other pupils, within such a short time, and oblivious of his surroundings, he laughed loudly. The guru who understood the secret, uttered a curse that he would become a Rākṣasa within seven days. The repentant Indivārāka begged for his pardon. Then the sage told him that he would be restored to his own form and give up the Rākṣasa shape when he was shot with arrows by his own children. Once when he approached his daughter Maṇorāma to devour her, his son-in-law, Svarocis who had learnt the science of archery from that girl, defeated him. In this way, Indivārāka got his own former form. After that he taught Svarocis, the sciences of archery which he had learnt from his own daughter and also from Brahmatīra.

INDIVĀRASENA. Son of Parītyāgaseṇa a King who ruled the city of Īravatī. Parītyāgaseṇa had two queens—Adhikāsānāgāmā and Kāvyālāṅkārā. As they had no children, the distressed King with his queens worshipped the goddess Durgā. Durgā gave the King two fruits. She blessed that the queens would bear children when they ate the fruits. Adhikāsānāgāmā ate both the fruits without showing them to the other wife. Two sons were born to her. Indivārāsena was the elder son. (Kathāsaritśāgara, Ratnaprabha lāmbaka, 8th Tārānaga).

INDRA.

2) Birth. Kāśyapa was born to Marici, the eldest of the spiritual sons of Brahma. Indra was the son of Kāśyapa and Aditi, the eldest daughter of Dakṣa. The twelve sons who were born to Kāśyapa and Aditi are called Adityas. The twelve Adityas arc—Dhātā, Aramā, Mitra, Rudra, Varuṇa, Sūrya, Bha, Vivasvān, Pāt, Savitṛ, Tvaṣṭṛ, and Viśu. In addition to them, Aditi had twentyone sons more. Indra is the eldest of the 33 sons. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verses 9-15).

Indra became the ruler of the Devas. Airāvata is Indra’s elephant, Uccāśāravas, his horse, and Vajra his weapon. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51, M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 10).

3) Indra and Garuḍa. Kāśyapa had two sons, Garuḍa and Aruṇa by Vināṭa and a large number of Nāgas by his other wife, Kadrā. Kadrā and her children kept Vināṭa and her son Garuḍa as their servants. Kadrā agreed to set them free if they brought Amṛta from Devaloka.

Once Kadrā and her children asked Garuḍa to carry them to the beautiful Nāgīlaya in the middle of the ocean. Garuḍa carried them on his shoulders and flew very high near the sky. The excessive heat of the sun made the Nāga unconscious. Kadrā, in her distress, prayed to Indra. Indra showered rain and cooled the atmosphere. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 25, Verses 7-17). They reached the lovely island in the middle of the ocean.

Garuḍa decided to earn his freedom by bringing Amṛta from Devaloka. With determination, he flew up into heaven and secured Amṛta. The enraged Indra attacked him with his weapon, Vajra. But Garuḍa spread his feathers in such a way that he was not wounded. Indra was struck with wonder, and pleased with the beautiful feathers (Parṇa) of Garuḍa, named him ‘Suparna’. At last Indra was pleased and allowed Garuḍa to take Amṛta with him. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 32, Verses 16-25).

4) How Indra came to have 1000 eyes. (See Tilottama, 2nd Para).

5) Indra and Arjuna. (1) Kunṭi, Pāṇḍu’s wife had received five mantras from Durvāsas for begetting sons. One of those Mantras was chanted meditating on the sun even before she was married and Karna was born. After marriage she used three more of the Mantras and three sons were born to her from Yamā, Vāyu and Indra respectively. The fifth Mantra was presented to Mādri the other wife of Pāṇḍu. Thus Arjuna was the son of Kunṭi by Indra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 123).

(2) There is a story of a rivalry between Indra and Arjuna in the Mahābhārata. (See under ‘Khāṇḍa-vadāḥ’).
(3) During their life in the forest, once Arjuna started to Kailāsa to worship Śiva. On the way Indra appeared before him and showered his blessings on him. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 41, Verses 15, 16).
(4) During his life in the forest, Indra presented to Arjuna who visited him in Indra's residence, a Gandharva named Citrasena as his companion. Citrasena taught him music, dance, etc. (M.B. Aranya Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 9).
(5) At the palace of Indra, as secretly instructed by Indra, Urvāśī approached Arjuna with advances of love. Arjuna who refused to yield to her temptations was turned into a eunuch by her curse. But Indra lifted the curse by saying that this curse would be an advantage to him during the incognito life of the Pándavas. It was Citrasena who was used as a tool by Indra to test Arjuna's self control. (M.B. Aranya Parva, Chapters 44, 45).
(6) In order to ensure Arjuna's victory in battle, Indra, disguised as a Brahmin, obtained by begging Karna's ear-rings. (M.B. Aranya Parva, Chapter 310).
6) Indra and Vṛtrāsura. A famous exploit of Indra was the killing of Vṛtrāsura. Under the leadership of Vṛtrāsura, the Kālakeyas and many other Rākṣasas besieged the Devas. The battle raged furiously. Indra fell down unconscious owing to the shower of arrows from Vṛtra. At once Vasiṣṭha with his divine power restored Indra to consciousness. Finding it impossible to kill Vṛtra, the nonplussed Devas under the leadership of Indra approached Mahāviṣṇu. Viṣṇu told them that Vṛtra could be killed only with the bone of the sage Dādhiśc. So all of them approached Dādhiśc. Realising the situation, Dādhiśc let Indra have his bone for the purpose. Indra made his weapon Vajra with that bone and receiving a fatal stroke from it, Vṛtra fell down dead. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 101, Verses 14, 15; Śānti Parva, Chapter 281, Verses 13-21).
By killing Vṛtra Indra incurred the sin of Brahmahatyā. To expiate for that sin the Devas and Rāis took Indra to Sarayu river and performed his holy bath there. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, 24th Sarga).
(For further details about Vṛtrāsura see under Vṛtrāsura).
7) Indra and Cyavana. Indra did not allow the Āśvinidevas to drink soma juice. The sad Āśvinidevas left Indraloka and while passing through a forest, they met Sukanyā, wife of the sage Cyavana. She was extremely beautiful. The Āśvinidevas advised her to become their wife instead of being the wife of the blind Cyavana. But Sukanyā rejected their advice. Pleased by her conjugal fidelity, they restored Cyavana's eyesight and made him a youth with beautiful eyes. In his gratitude, Cyavana promised to get permission for them to drink soma juice. He performed a yāga. Indra, Āśvinidevas and other gods attended it. Indra insisted that the Āśvinīs should not be allowed to drink soma juice. Cyavana disputed with him and in the dispute Indra was defeated. From that time the Āśvinīs were allowed soma drinking. See also 'Cyavana'. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 124, Verse 14; Anuśasan Parva, Chapter 156, Verses 16-31).
8) Indra and Tvaṣṭṛ. Indra's brother Tvaṣṭṛ did not like some of Indra's activities. With the object of rebuking Indra, Tvaṣṭṛ begot a son named Viśvarūpa, Viśvarūpa had three faces and so he was also called Triśiras. With one face he used to recite Vedas, with the second he drank alcohol and he used the third face for observing the world. He performed a rigorous tapas. Indra who was alarmed at it, sent goddesses to allure him, but in vain. At last Indra himself went to the forest riding on his elephant Airāvata and killed Tvaṣṭṛ with his Vajrayudha. In his violent fury he had the three heads of Triśiras cut by a carpenter. From that day, it was ordained that the head of the cow sacrificed at yāgas should be given to a carpenter. Tvaṣṭṛ who was enraged by Indra's killing of his son Triśiras, begot another son Vṛtrāsura. (Devī Bhāgavata, 6th Skandha).
9) Indra and Nahuṣa. See the word Agastya.
10) Indra and Bali. When Indra defeated and drove away the Asuras, Mahābali, the Asura emperor assumed the form of an ass and hid himself in an empty house. Brahmā informed Indra of this. Indra found him out there, but set him free without killing at the behest of Brahmā. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 223).
11) Indra and Yayāti. Yayāti was the son of Nahuṣa. In his old age, he handed over the kingly duties to his younger son Pūru and went to the forest for performing penance. After performing penance, he reached Indraloka in the end. Indra did not like Yayāti's boast that there was none who had greater power of tapas than himself. Indra pushed him down to the world. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 88).
12) Indra and Saradā. Saradā was born as the son of Sage Gautama. Saradā started a penance for acquiring divine arrows. Devendra who was alarmed, sent the Apsārā woman Jānapati to obstruct his tapas. Deeply affected by her irresistible charm and fascinated by her temptations, he had an involuntary emission of semen, which fell on the Sarastamba and split itself into two parts. Two children a boy and a girl, were born from it. The King's servants brought them to Hastināpura. The boy was named Krṣa and the girl was named Krṣī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 130).
13) Indra and King Kuru. The King named Kuru was once ploughing the field at the place known as Kurukṣetra. (This was long before Kurukṣetra became famous as the battlefield of Bhārata Yuddha). Indra who happened to come that way at the time, seeing the King tilling the land, asked him why he was doing so. The King replied that he was performing a yāga to enable the men who fell dead there, to attain Heaven. Indra returned to Heaven, smiling. Other devas came to know of this from Indra. They said that if all men came to Devaloka, the share of yajña which was to be received by the gods, would be diminished and so they advised Indra to go and give some boon to King Kuru. Indra returned to earth and gave his blessing to Kuru as follows:

The following classes of people will attain heaven if they die there (at Kurukṣetra).
(1) Those who die of starvation.
(2) Those who die fighting heroically.
(3) Those who were men in their previous life, but who have been born as animals.

From that time Kurukṣetra became an important place. (M.B. Śālya Parva, Chapter 53).
14) Indra and Takṣaka. Indra's friend, a Nāga named Takṣaka lived in Khāṇḍava forest. When Agni burned Khāṇḍava forest, Indra caused the rain to fall in order to save Takṣaka, Śec under 'Khāṇḍavadāha'. (M.B. Aranya Parva, Chapter 235).

For the story of how Indra saved Takṣaka from the Sarpasatra see under 'Āstīka'.

15) Indra and Khāṇḍavadāha. At the time of Khāṇḍavadāha, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna fought against Devendra.

16) Indra Sabhā. Maya undertook to build a sabhā (assembly hall) for the Pāṇḍavas at Indraprastha. When it was being discussed, the sage Nārada described to them Indra's sabhā as given below:—

Indra has a Sabhā which dazzles with divine effulgence. It is 150 yojanas in length and 100 yojanas in breadth. It has a height of five yojanas. Beautiful storeyed buildings and divine trees add to the grandeur of the sabhā. Indra is scatted within the holy light in it. Śacidevi takes her seat near him. Indra is very handsome. He wears a crown, he is dressed in spotlessly pure clothes, and wears a garland round his neck. Maruśu, Śiśuṇa, Indra, and a host of others stand around attending on him. They are all bright with the halo of fire. Parāśara, Parvata, Śāvarni, Gāla, Saṅkha, Liṅkita, Gaurūṣiras, Durvāsa, Akrodhana, Śyenā, Dīrghatamas, Pavitraśāla, Bhālu, Yājñavalkya, Uddālaka, Śvetaketu, Pāṇḍya and other famous sages are members of Indra's assembly. In this way, Indra's Sabhā is the most magnificent. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7).

17) Indra and Kāmadhenu. Once Indra saw Surabhi, the Kāmadhenu, crying in the Indraloka. He asked her why she was crying. Surabhi answered: "My Lord, the cattle, who are my children, are groaning in the world under the yoke of the farmer. I was overwhelmed with grief at the sight of their sufferings!" Indra's heart melted due to Kāmadhenu's tears. He caused very heavy showers in the world when ploughing the fields became impossible. In this way as a result of Surabhi's tears Indra caused heavy rainfall which gave rest to the cattle in the world. (M.B. Aranya Parva, Chapter 9).

18) Indra and Nala. Nala proceeded to Vidarbha to attend Damayanti's Śvayamvara. On the way, the four gods, Indra, Agni, Varuṇa and Yama met him. (For further details see the word 'Nala'). Nala married Damayanti with the blessings of these gods. When the devas returned, they met Kali and Dwāpara to whom they described Nala's marriage. Kali and Dwāpara who wished to marry Damayanti, naturally felt disappointed and angry. Kali was about to pronounce a curse on Nala. But on the advice of Devendra he did not do so. Still he decided to gain secret entrance into Nala's body and to bring about the loss of his Kingdom. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 58).

19) Indra and Māndhātā. A King named Yuvanāśva was born in the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He earned great reputation by performing many Śvamedha yāgas. But he was very much distressed because he had no children. So he entrusted his kingly duties to his ministers and proceeded to the forest. One day during his wandering he arrived at the āśrama of the sage Bhṛgu. He was tired and thirsty. Bhṛgu had filled a pot with water by reciting a mantra and placing it on a low stool, he had gone to sleep. Not knowing that it was a pot of water intended to cause pregnancy, and in his intense thirst, Yuvanāśva drank water from it. He became pregnant and in due course Yuvanāśva brought forth a son. Indra, accompanied by other gods came to see the child. When the Devas asked how the child was going to drink milk, Indra put his index finger into the child's mouth and the child began to suck it. Indra said 'The child will drink me'. The Sanskrit words 'Māṁ dhātā' mean "one who drinks me". Thus the child was named "Māndhātā" by Indra and the other gods. (M.B. Aranya Parva Chapter 126).

20) Indra and Śibi. Once Indra and Agni tested the strength of Emperor Śibi's 'dharma'. Indra took the form of an eagle and Agni that of a dove. The dove flew down into the lap of Śibi. The eagle pursued it. The dove entreated Śibi to save it from the eagle. Śibi promised to do so. The eagle argued that the dove was its prey and should be returned to it. But Śibi offered to give the eagle his own flesh, equal in weight to that of the dove. Accordingly, the dove was placed in one pan, but even when all the flesh from his body was cut and placed in the other pan, it did not weigh equal to the dove. At this stage, Indra and Agni appeared to Śibi in their own forms and blessed him to be more happy and prosperous than before. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 131).

21) Indra and Yavakrīṭa. Long ago there was a sage named Yavakrīṭa. He started a tapas with the ambition of acquiring all knowledge by himself, without the help of a Guru. Indra was alarmed at the sternness and rigour of the tapas. He induced Yavakrīṭa to stop tapas, but it was in vain. At last Indra disguised himself as an old Brahmin and went to the bank of the Ganges where Yavakrīṭa was performing tapas. He began to build a dam across the river with sand. Seeing this Yavakrīṭa ridiculed him. The old Brahmin retorted that Yavakrīṭa's tapas was also equally ridiculous. But Yavakrīṭa was not shaken even by his taunt. He resumed his tapas with renewed strength. At last finding no other alternative, Indra appeared to Yavakrīṭa and granted his wish. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 135).

22) Loss of Indra's umbrella. Once Narakāśu was sent to heaven, fought with the gods and robbed Indra of his umbrella and the earrings of Aditi. Indra's mother, Grief-stricken Indra complained to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Accompanied by Satyabhmā and riding on the back of Gruḍa, Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to the city of Prājyotisa, the residence of Narakāśu and razed it to the ground. He recovered the umbrella and ear-rings and returned to heaven with Satyabhmā. Indra and Aditi were overjoyed on getting back the lost articles. On their return journey, Śrī Kṛṣṇa at the request of Satyabhmā cut for her a twig of the Pārijāta tree. This made Indra angry and he fought against Śrī Kṛṣṇa. After defeating Indra and other gods, Śrī Kṛṣṇa accompanied by Satyabhmā returned to DvāraKā with the Pārijāta. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skanda).

23) Indra and Narakāśu. The Asura called Narakāśu once performed a very severe penance on the Gandhamadāna mountain with the object of usurping Indra's place. Indra was alarmed and rushed to Mahāviṣṇu for help. Viṣṇu went to Gandhamadāna mountain and killed Narakāśu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 142).

24) Indra and the savage Baka. After the war between Devas and Asuras, Indra, in a peaceful state of mind, was going around the world, riding on his elephant, Airāvata. When he reached an āśrama on the eastern coast of the sea, he met the great sage Baka. A conversation about the happiness of longevity took place between Indra and sage Baka who was hundred thousand years old. After that Indra returned to Devaloka. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 193).

25) Indra and Keśī. Long ago a terrible war took place between Devas and Asuras. At that time an Asura called Keśī attempted to abduct Devasena, daughter of a Prajāpāti. Hearing her shrieks, Indra rushed to the spot. In the clash between Keśī and Indra, Keśī’s club was broken into two with Indra’s weapon Vajra. Suddenly Keśī mounted a mountain and threw it at Indra. Indra broke that mountain also into two. One part of it fell on Keśī himself, who fled frightened. After that, Indra asked Devasena how she happened to fall in Keśī’s hands. Devasena answered thus:— “I am the daughter of Prajāpāti. My name is Devasena. Keśī had abducted my elder sister, Dāityasena. My sister and I used to come to take our bath in this Mānasī lake. Keśī had expressed his wish to abduct both of us. My father has given me his blessing that a person who is worshipped by gods and asuras will become my husband. Having heard these facts, Indra held consultations with Brahmā and arranged the marriage between Subrahmanya and Devasena. See also the word “Subrahmanya”. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 223).

26) Indra and Āgīras. After killing Vṛtrāsura, Indra hid himself in a lotus flower in the Mānasī lake, to expiate for the sin of Brahmahatāya (killing a Brahmin). It was at that time that Nahuṣa became Indra. After Nahuṣa had been forced to go back to the earth as a serpent by the curse of Agastya, the Devas brought back Indra. At that time, Āgīras praised Indra with mantras from Atharvaveda. From that day Āgīras got the name of ‘Atharvāṇīgīras’. Indra was pleased and blessed Āgīras that his name would become famous throughout the world. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 18).

27) Indra and the Bow called Vijaya. Karna had a bow called Vijaya. It was made by Viśvakarmā according to Indra’s liking. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 31 Verse 42).

28) Indra and the Tripūras. The Tripūras performed penance and received boon from Brahmā. After that they clashed with Indra. Indra was not able to kill them. The vanquished Indra had the Tripūras killed by Śiva. See the word “Tripūra”. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 33).

29) Indra and Śūrya (the sun-god). When Karna and Arjuna came into conflict at the Bṛhatā battle, a controversy raged in heaven between Indra and Śūrya. Indra argued that Arjuna would win, while Śūrya asserted that Karna would gain victory. The Devas joined the side of Arjuna and Asuras joined Karna’s side. In the end, Arjuna came out victorious and thus Śūrya was defeated by Indra. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 37).

30) Indra and Namuci. The Rākṣasa Namuci once evaded capture by Indra by remaining hidden in the rays of the Sun. Indra went to him and pretending friendship, promised not to kill him either with wet thing or dry things or at night or in day time. Trusting his words, Namuci came out. Then Indra cut off Namuci’s head with the froth scraped from the waves of the sea at the time of dusk. The head pursued him shouting, “You murderer of a friend, by breaking your promise!” Indra sought refuge under Brahmā. Brahmā advised him to bathe in Ṣoṇapūrya tīrtha to expiate for the sin. Accordingly Indra bathed in the river Sarasvatī and washed off his sin.

River Sarasvatī. There is a story about how Sarasvatī river became Ṣoṇapūrya tīrtha. There were frequent quarrels between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra. Once Viśvāmitra got angry when he came to know that Vasiṣṭha was performing a penance on the banks of the river Sarasvatī. He summoned Sarasvatī and ordered her to produce Vasiṣṭha before him immediately. Sarasvatī was in a dilemma. If she brought Vasiṣṭha to Viśvāmitra, Vasiṣṭha would curse her; if on the other hand, she did not bring him Viśvāmitra would curse her. At last she decided to produce Vasiṣṭha before Viśvāmitra. By eroding the earth on her bank little by little near the place where Vasiṣṭha was performing his penance, Sarasvatī managed to bring him down into her own current. Then she carried him floating down to the place where Viśvāmitra was waiting. When Vasiṣṭha reached his presence, Viśvāmitra was pleased. But without allowing Viśvāmitra to capture Vasiṣṭha she took him away in her current, eastwards. Enraged at this, Viśvāmitra pronounced a curse that blood should flow through the river Sarasvatī. Thus the water in the river became blood-red. The great sages who came there afterwards sympathised with Sarasvatī in her ill-luck and as a result of their prayers Śiva made her Śoṇapūryatīrtha.

It was in this river that Indra took his bath and washed off his sin. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 43).

31) Indra and Śrutāvati. Bharadvāja’s daughter Śrutāvati (Śruvāvati) performed a very severe penance to get Indra as her husband. To test her character, Indra assumed the shape of Vasiṣṭha and went to Śrutāvati. She received the guest with due reverence. Pleased with her treatment, the guest handed her five raw fruits and asked her to cook them for him. Śrutāvati gladly undertook that service. She proceeded to cook the fruits but even after burning all the fuel she had, the fruits were not properly cooked. So she began to use her limbs one by one as fuel and burned them up. Indra was deeply impressed by her self-sacrifice and appearing to her in his own form married Śrutāvati, (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 48).

32) Indra became Satakratu. Indra performed one hundred sacrifices at the place called Indratīrtha. Thus he became Satakratu. It was there that he gave much wealth to Bhṛṣpati. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 49 Verse 2).

33) Indra became a bird. Once Indra took the form of a bird and went to the forest and preached moral and spiritual duties to the sages who had gathered there. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 11).

34) Indra and Dantideva. Once Dantideva received a boon from Indra that he should have plenty of food and enough travellers to eat it. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 29, Verses 120, 121).

35) Indra and Bhṛṣpati. Once Bhṛṣpati told Indra that everything in the world could be achieved with soothing speech. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 2).

Bhṛṣpati’s wife Tārā once fell in love with Candra (the Moon god). She deserted Bhṛṣpati and went to live in Candra’s residence. Bhṛṣpati complained about it to Indra. Indra promised to bring her back and to restore her to Brhaspati by whatever means possible. Accordingly he sent a messenger to Candra. Compromise talks with Candra ended in failure. So preparations were started for a dreadful war between Indra and Candra. Sucra, the preceptor of Asuras also joined the side of Indra. Brahmā who came to know of all this, came riding on his swan and reconciled Indra and Candra. As directed by Brahmā, Candra agreed to restore Tārā to her lawful husband, Brhaspati, (Devi Bhāgavata, First Skandha).

36) Indra and Prahlāda. The great King Prahlāda once conquered Heaven. Indra, who lost his kingdom and glory, accepted Brhaspati's advice and went to meet Śukrācārya. Sukra told Indra that Prahlāda was the noblest person and that he had earned that nobility by his good qualities. Indra decided to acquire those good qualities from Prahlāda.

Indra disguised himself as a Brahmin boy and approached Prahlāda with a request for moral and spiritual advice. Prahlāda accepted him as his pupil and gave him moral and spiritual advice. Pleased with the pupil's devotion, Prahlāda agreed to give him whatever boon he wanted. The pupil said that he wanted only the good qualities of the Guru. Prahlāda agreed to it. Then a shadow-like figure appeared to emerge from Prahlāda's body. Prahlāda, who was puzzled asked the figure:—"Who are you?" "The figure answered:—"I am your virtuous character. Now I am leaving you and entering this boy's body." Saying thus it left Prahlāda's body and entered Indra's body. Following it, all the good qualities of Prahlāda, like charity, truth, glory etc. entered Indra's body one after another. It was only in the end that Prahlāda came to know that the cunning pupil was Indra. Thus from that day, Prahlāda began to decline in his good qualities and Indra began to prosper. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 124).

37) Indra and Gautama. There is a story in the Mahābhārata, of how Indra restored life to a dead Brahmin. Gautama was a Brahmin who had left his own home and settled down to live in the village of Dasyus (an aboriginal tribe). He married from a low caste and followed the customs of Dasyus. At that time another Brahmin happened to come there. He ridiculed Gautama who had lost his caste. Next morning Gautama left his residence and went to another place. Tired after his long journey, he fell asleep under a banyan tree. A King of birds named Nādijāṅgha lived on that tree. Nādijāṅgha who was the son of Kaśyapa, became very friendly with Gautama. He brought fish from the river Gaṅgā to feed Gautama and fanned him with his wings. Gautama told the bird that he was a poor Brahmin and that he was anxious to get some wealth. There was a wealthy Rākṣasa King named Virūpākṣa in that country, who was a close friend of Nādijāṅgha. Nādijāṅgha sent Gautama to Virūpākṣa with a request to give Gautama some wealth. Virūpākṣa gave plenty of gold to Gautama. He returned to the foot of the banyan tree carrying the gold on his head. Gautama who was quite tired after his long walk, was hospitably received by Nādijāṅgha. That kingly bird lay asleep close by Gautama. An evil desire to eat the flesh of Nādijāṅgha dawned upon the mind of Gautama. He killed that King of birds in his sleep. Virūpākṣa who came to know of this, killed Gautama and gave his flesh as food for Dasyus. Virūpākṣa, with tears in his eyes, made a funeral pyre and cremated Nādijāṅgha's body. At that time, as directed by Brahmā, Surabhi caused milk to flow from heaven and revived Nādijāṅgha. Virūpākṣa told the whole story to Indra who came there at that time. Indra said that Nādijāṅgha died as the result of Brahmā's curse. He had offended Brahmā on a former occasion by refusing to attend Brahmā's assembly, although he was invited. Nādijāṅgha who was restored to life, was noble enough to request Indra to bring back Gautama also to life. Accordingly Indra revived Gautama. Nādijāṅgha returned the gold to Gautama and sent him away with his good wishes. Indra returned to heaven. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 173).

38) Indra and Ahalyā. Indra, once fell in love with Ahalyā, the wife of Gautama. Sage Gautama who came to know of it, cursed Indra. For further details, see under Ahalyā.

39) Indra turned into a Fox. Once a haughty Vaiśya knocked down a young sage named Kaśyapa, with his chariot. The disgraced sage decided to commit suicide. Knowing this Indra went to the sage in the form of a fox and spoke to him, dwelling upon the evil aspects of suicide. At last the young sage gave up the idea of committing suicide and returned to his hermitage. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 150).

40) Indra and Subrahmanya. Long ago the Asuras led by Tārakāśura, persecuted the gods in many ways. Tārakāśura had received a boon from Brahmā that only the son born to Śiva could slay him. So, to distract Paramēśvara from his penance, in order to make it possible for him to beget a son, Indra sent Kāmadeva (god of love) to him. But Kāmadeva was burnt up in the fire from the third eye of Śiva. After that Pārvati won Śiva as her husband as a result of her austere penance. She prayed to Śiva that Kāmadeva should be brought back to life and that a son should be born to her. Śiva replied to her:—"Kāma was born from Brahmā's mind. As soon as he was born, he asked Brahmā "Kāṁ Darpam?" which means—whom shall I tempt and conquer?" So Brahmā called him "Kandarpa". Brahmā had advised him even at that time that he should never tempt men. Disregarding that advice he came to attack me and I burned him up. Now it is not possible for him to be born in a physical form. I shall beget you a son with my spiritual power. I do not need the urge of Kāmadeva for this, as in the case of ordinary mortals".

As they were discussing this problem, Indra and Brahmā arrived there. At their request Śiva agreed to beget a son by Pārvati. Since it is not desirable that all living beings should perish, Śiva allowed Kāmadeva to be born in the minds of all creatures. Brahmā and Indra returned quite happy. One day, Śiva and Pārvati began their amorous dalliance. They did not stop it even after a hundred years. The whole world began to shake to its very foundations. Fearing that the world might perish, the devas, as ordered by Brahmā prayed to Agni, to interrupt the amorous play of Śiva and Pārvati. Agni, who understood that it was not possible to achieve their object, fled and concealed himself under water. The Devas went out in search of Agni. By that time, the creatures in the water who could not bear the heat of Agni, told them the secret. Then Agni deprived them of the power of speech by a curse. After that he went and hid himself on the Mandara mountain. Elephants and parrots disclosed the secrets of Agni, who was hiding within the hollow of the trunk of a tree. Agni deprived them of their tongues by a curse. At last the gods discovered Agni. They sent him at once to Śiva to stop him in his amorous dalliance. Agni succeeded in his mission by his intense heat. Śiva transferred his semen to Agni who became pregnant. Being unable to bear its weight Agni deposited it in the river Ganges, who at the behest of Śiva himself, left it in the woods on the Mahāmeru mountain. Śiva’s attendant bītās (spirits) offered Pūjā to it there. After a thousand years a boy with six faces (Subrahmaṇya) was born out of it. He was suckled by the Kṛttikās employed for that purpose by Pārvatī and the boy grew up with astonishing rapidity within a few days. Having been suckled by the Kṛttikās, the boy got the name “Kārttikeya”.

In those days, Devendra who was defeated by Tārakāṣura, decided to give up war and was living in Mahāmeru. The Devas and the sages used to go to Subrahmaṇya for protection. When Devendra knew it, he became angry and went to war with Subrahmaṇya. Subrahmaṇya was wounded on the face with Indra’s weapon. From the wound two sons named Śākha and Viśākha were born to Subrahmaṇya. With their help Subrahmaṇya encountered Indra again. At this stage Śiva appeared there and informed Indra that Subrahmaṇya had been born with a mission to kill Tārakāṣura and to restore Indra’s kingdom to him. It was then that Indra recognized Subrahmaṇya. He begged pardon of Subrahmaṇya and expressed his desire to install him as his military commander. When he tried to perform the ceremony of installation by sprinkling the holy water on Subrahmaṇya’s head, the water refused to come out of the pot. Śiva told Indra that it was because he had tried to perform the installation before propitiating Gaṇapati. Indra then offered worship to Vighnēśvara (Gaṇapati) and the ceremony went off without any hitch. Subrahmaṇya who thus became Indra’s commander, killed Tārakāṣura shortly afterwards. (Kathāśāsītisagara, Lāvānakalāmbaka, 6th Tārāṅga).

41) Indra and Mahābali. The vanquished Mahābali who had left his home and country was in gloom and despair when once Indra paid him a visit. At that time Mahālaśaṇi emerged from Mahābali’s body and entered Indra’s body. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 224).

42) Indra and Godāna (gift of cow). Once Indra asked Brahmā about the efficacy of godāna or giving a cow as gift. Brahmā told him that there is a world free from the infirmities of old age and diseases and it is called “Goloka”. He added that those who perform Godāna would get a place in Goloka.

43) Indra and a bird. A hunter in Kāśi one day went to shoot birds with poisoned arrows. One of his arrows hit a big tree accidentally and the powerful poison dried up the whole tree. In the hollow of the trunk of that tree there lived a bird with mystic powers. It did not like to leave that tree which had been its refuge ever since its birth. One day Devendra, in the guise of a Brahmā came to the bird, who recognized him by its mystic power. In the conversation between them Devendra advised the bird to leave the tree and find some other suitable place for its residence. The bird did not accept his advice. Indra was pleased at the bird’s loyalty and gratitude towards that tree which had been its shelter all along. So he took the bird along with him to Devaloka. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 5).

44) How Indra turned Bhaṅgāśva into a woman. There was a King named Bhaṅgāśva. Once he performed a sacrifice called “Indradiṣṭa” which was believed to have the power of blessing him with children. Indra being not invited was displeased with him and was waiting for an opportunity to wreak vengeance on him. One hundred sons were born to Bhaṅgāśva. Once he went to the forest after entrusting the affairs of the kingdom to his sons. Indra cunningly misguided him and made him lose his way in the forest. Wandering alone with his horse in the forest, he reached the bank of a river. Weary and thirsty, he stepped down into the river. To his amazement, he was instantly transformed into a woman! The bewildered “woman” somehow reached Bhaṅgāśva’s palace. All the members of his family were deeply grieved over his change of sex. To avoid embarrassment to himself and others, Bhaṅgāśva returned as a woman to the forest and there lived as the wife of a sage and became the mother of a hundred sons. After some years “she” went back to the palace with the sons and leaving them there returned again to the forest.

Indra went to the palace at this time and made the two sets of hundred sons quarrel with one another until all of them perished in fighting. Hearing about this the mother who was in the forest, wept bitterly. Indra visited her (Bhaṅgāśva) there and she told him the whole story of her misfortunes and begged his pardon for performing Indradiṣṭa sacrifice without inviting Indra. Pleased with her repentance Indra promised to resuscitate one set of her hundred sons. She wanted all the hundred sons who were born when she was a woman, to be restored to life. Indra was ready to restore her manhood too, but she preferred to continue as a woman. Indra restored to life all the 200 sons of Bhaṅgāśva and leaving Bhaṅgāśva as a woman, returned to Devaloka. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 12).

45) Indra and Mātaṅga. A story is found in the Mahā-Bhārata under the title of “Indra-Mātaṅga-Saṁvāda” which illustrates that a Kṣatriya, Vaiśya or Śūdra can never become a Brāhmaṇa by any means. It was told by Bṛihṣṭa to Arjuna as follows:—

“Long ago a Brāhmaṇa’s wife gave birth to a boy. The boy was given the name Mātaṅga. His father sent him in a chariot drawn by a donkey, in connection with a yāga which he wanted to perform. Mātaṅga whipped the donkey mercilessly. Seeing this, the donkey’s mother said to Mātaṅga—”You are not a Brāhmaṇa. Brāhmaṇas cannot be so cruel. You are a Çaṇḍāla (a man of the lowest caste) born to your mother by a barber.”

Mātaṅga sadly returned to his father and after telling him what he had heard from the mother-donkey set out to perform an austere penance with the object of becoming a Brāhmaṇa. Devendra appeared to him and asked him what he wanted. Mātaṅga asked for a boon whereby he could become a Brāhmaṇa; Indra vanished after saying that it was impossible. After that Mataṅga performed penance for hundred years, standing on one foot. Indra appeared again and repeated that it was impossible for Mataṅga to become a Brāhmaṇa. Then Mataṅga continued his penance for a thousand years, standing on his toe. Indra appeared again and transformed Mataṅga into a Deva named “Chandodeva”. Indra told him that though he could become a Deva, he could never achieve Brāhmaṇhood. In his extreme grief Mataṅga renounced his life and entered Heaven. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapters 27, 28 and 29).

46) Indra and Saṅībara. There is a story in the Mahā Bhārata in which an Asura named Saṅībara explained the greatness of Brāhmaṇhood to Indra. Once Indra approached the Asura, Saṅībara and asked him what was the source of his glory and prosperity. Saṅībara replied that it was all due to his whole-hearted worship of Brāhmaṇas. From that time Indra began to offer worship to Brāhmaṇas and thus he won the place of Indra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 36).

47) Indra loved Ruci. There is a story in the Mahābhārata of how a sage named Vipula who was born in the family of Bhrigu once saved Ruci, his Guru's wife from Indra. Long ago, a great sage named Devāśarmā lived in a forest. His wife Ruci being enchantingly beautiful, many suitors were attracted to her. Chief among them was Indra. Devāśarmā was aware of this. Once he had to leave his āśrama in connection with a yāga. So he ordered his disciple Vipula to guard his wife Ruci during his absence. He had given a hint to Vipula that Indra who was an expert in disguises, might appear in the āśrama in any form. Vipula, by means of his mystic power entered into his guru's wife and guarded her.

After some time, Indra reached the āśrama in the guise of a handsome youth. He disclosed his real identity to Ruci and told her that he had come there to spend a night with her. Ruci fell in love with him. But since she was under the mystic control of Vipula, Indra was unable to fulfill his desire. At last Vipula sent him away in disgrace. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, 44).

48) Indra's theft of Lotus. Indra once stole Agastya's lotuses. (See under Agastya).

49) Indra's theft of an Elephant. Indra once stole an elephant belonging to the great sage Gautama. The sage complained to Dhrtaśrā, who advised him to offer prayers to Indra. Accordingly Gautama pleased Indra by his prayers. Indra appeared and after returning the elephant took both the elephant and Gautama along with him to Devaloka. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 192).

50) Indra and Marutta. Long ago there was a famous king named Marutta. Indra was closely associated with him in many of his activities. (For more details see Marutta).

51) Indra and Dharmaputra. Another anecdote about Indra which deals with the last part of Dharmaputra's life is given in the Mahābhārata.

The Pāṇḍavas, towards the end of their lives entered the forest and were travelling to the north. Dharmaputra who was walking in front, was followed by a dog. On the way the four brothers and Pāṇčālī fell down dead. Dharmaputra continued his journey accompanied by the dog without turning back or looking behind. At the end of the journey, Indra was waiting for him with his chariot. He told Dharmaputra that his brothers and wife had already taken their places in Heaven and that he should leave behind the dog and get into the chariot to go to Devaloka. Dharmaputra pleaded that it was not right for him to enter Devaloka after deserting the dog which had followed him so far. Even though Indra pressed him very much to enter the chariot without the dog, Dharmaputra did not yield. At last the dog assumed the form of Yama who appeared and explained to them that he had taken the form of a dog and followed his son Dharmaputra to test his noble nature. They were all happy and all the three of them proceeded in the chariot to Devaloka. (M. B. Mahāprasthānīka Parva, Chapter 3).

52) Indra and Bāli. In Uttara Rāmāyaṇa there is a story as given below, about the birth of Bāli, a son of Indra:—

Aruṇa, the charioteer of Sūrya (the sun-god) went one night to Indraloka to see the goddesses dancing. Men were not allowed to enter the dancing hall. So, Aruṇa managed to enter the hall by disguising himself as a beautiful lady. The moment Indra saw her he fell in love with her. The name she assumed at that time was Aruṇī. Indra secretly took her outside and they had a sexual union. Bāli was the son born from their union.

53) Indra's theft of a Horse. A King named Sagara once performed a sacrifice. Devendra stole the sacrificial horse. Sagara sent all his 60,000 sons in search of the horse. They dug up the earth and went to the Nether worlds where they saw the horse tied in front of the sage Kapila. The enraged sons of Sagara tried to capture and bind the sage. But Kapila reduced all the 60,000 princes to ashes by his curse. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākāṇḍa, Chapter 39).

54) Indra cut an embryo to pieces. Diti and Aditi were the daughters of Dakṣa. Kaśyapa married them. Indra was born as the son of Aditi. At this birth of a son to Aditi, Diti became jealous of her sister. One day she told her husband Kaśyapa that she too wanted to have a virtuous, heroic and brave son who would be equal to Indra in every respect. Kaśyapa promised to grant her wish.

In due course, Diti became pregnant. Now it was Aditi's turn to become jealous of Diti. She could not bear the thought of Diti having a son equal to her own son Indra, in glory and splendour. So she called Indra and secretly instructed him to destroy Diti's child in the womb, by whatever means.

In obedience to his mother, Indra approached Diti pretending friendship and spent a lot of time in her company. He soon won her confidence and love by his affectionate attentions. On one occasion, when she was in sound sleep, Indra, by his mystic power, entered into Diti's womb with his weapon Vajra and cut the child in the womb into seven pieces. The child began to cry loudly, but Indra said “Māra ṅa” which means “do not cry” and cut each of the pieces again into seven parts. Thus the embryo (child) was finally cut into forty-nine pieces, which later became the forty-nine “Māra ṅa” or “Maruta”. When she woke up, Diti realized Indra's treachery and in her fury she cursed Indra and Aditi. She cursed that Indra would lose his kingdom of Devaloka and that Aditi would be imprisoned and his sons would be killed. As a result of this curse Devendra lost his kingdom on one occasion. Aditi, in her next birth, was born as Devaki, wife of Vasudeva and was imprisoned by Kaīsa who killed her children. (Devi Bhāgavata, Fourth Skandha).

55) Indra and Anbāraīa.

(1) King Anbāraīa had a minister named Sudeva. Sudeva fell fighting in the battle-field. After some years, Anbāraīa also died. When Anbāraīa arrived in Heaven, he was surprised to find that Sudeva had already secured a place there long ago. Anbāraīa had performed many more acts of holiness than Sudeva. Yet Sudeva attained Heaven earlier than Anbāraīa. Anbāraīa asked Indra why it was so. Indra answered that just as Anbāraīa had performed many sacrifices, Sudeva had performed many war-sacrifices. He added that war-sacrifices were as efficacious for attaining Heaven as other kinds of sacrifices (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 98).

(2) Anbāraīa, King of Ayodhya was performing a sacrifice. At that time, Indra had stolen the sacrificial animal. To continue the sacrifice without interruption, the King decided to substitute Śūnaśēpha, the son of Rākta, for the cow. But Śūnaśēpha prayed to Indra who came and rescued him from the jaws of death. (This story is given in other Purāṇas with slight variations. Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bīla Kāndā, 61st Sarga).

56) Indra and Trīsāṅku.

There is a story that Indra once pushed down from Heaven Trīsāṅku a King of the Śūrya varṇa (Solar dynasty). See under TRĪSĀṅKU.

57) Indra and Viṣvāmīra.

Once Viṣvāmīra observed a vow of silence for a period of one thousand years. At the end of that period, when he was about to take his food, Indra appeared in the form of a Brahmin and asked for that food. Viṣvāmīra gave that food to the Brahmin and resumed his austere penance. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāndā, 65th Sarga).

58) Indra, Śrī Rāma and Sarabhānga.

(1) At the time when Śrī Rāma and Lākṣaṇa were leading their life in the forest, one day Indra paid a visit to the Āśrama of the sage Sarabhānga. Devendra wished to take the sage with him to Devaloka. As they were talking, they saw Śrī Rāma coming to the Āśrama. Indra advised Sarabhānga to speak to Śrī Rāma and left the place. As suggested by Indra, the sage had a conversation with Śrī Rāma. After it Sarabhānga offered his body to the fire and went to Devaloka. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kāndā, 5th Sarga).

(2) When the battle between Śrī Rāma and Rāvaṇa was in progress, Indra presented to Śrī Rāma, an excellent chariot along with the horses. The chariot and horses were handed over to Śrī Rāma on the battlefield by Rāma’s charioteer, Śrī Rāma fought against Rāvaṇa from that chariot and slew him. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāndā, Sarga 103).

(3) After the war with Rāvaṇa, Indra appeared before Śrī Rāma and asked him what boon he wanted. Śrī Rāma replied that all those monkeys who died in the war should come back to life and the forests in which they lived should abound in fruits and flowers in all the seasons of the year. Indra restored all those monkeys to life and made all the forests in which they lived, green and rich with luxuriant vegetation. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāndā, Sarga 129).

59) Indra gives his sword for safe-custody.

During their life in the forest Śrī Rāma and Lākṣaṇa, accompanied by Śitā entered Daṇḍakārya. Śrī Rāma’s chief object in going there was to give protection to the sages and their hermitages in the forest. But seeing that he had made the killing of Rākṣasas his main purpose, Śitā told him that this change in the objective would spoil other important matters. To illustrate this she told him the following story:

'\ny once upon a time, a great sage was observing holy rites with great austerity. Indra was alarmed at it. He went to the sage’s hermitage in the form of a warrior armed with a sword. Indra handed over his sword to the sage for safe custody. The sage accepted it and from that time all his attention was concentrated on the sword. All his time was spent in guarding the sword and he began to neglect his devotional duties as a sage. As a result of it his mystic power declined and ultimately he fell into Hell. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kāndā, 9th Sarga).

60) Indra and Kabandha.

See under Kabandha.

61) The Post or Office of Indra.

Indra was appointed as King of Devas on Meghavīn mountain. In the 42nd Sarga of Kiśkindhā kāndā of Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa we find that Sugrīva had ordered the monkeys to search for Śitā on that mountain also.

62) Indra and Maya.

Maya, the carpenter of the Asuras, performed penance to Brahmā and acquired complete mastery in the science of carpentry and architecture. After that he constructed a forest mansion of golden colour and took up his residence in it. Once Maya set his eyes on a goddess named Hemā. When Indra knew this he became angry and killed Maya with his weapon—Vajra. From that time Hemā got Maya’s golden mansion. This was told by Hemā’s maid, Svayamprabhā to Hanūmān. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiśkindhā Kāndā, 51st Sarga).

63) Indra cut off the wings of Mountains.

In Kṛtayuga all the Mountains in the world had wings. They used to fly about here and there like Garuḍa with the speed of wind. The sages and the Devas feared that they might fall on their heads. The Devas held a conference and elected Indra to find a remedy for this. Indra cut off the wings of the mountains with his Vajra. The Maināka mountain was a friend of wind. When Indra was about to cut off the wings of that mountain, Wind suddenly removed it and deposited it in the ocean. It is out of his gratitude for this that the Maināka mountain rose up from the ocean and provided a resting place for Hanūmān, the son of Wind god, when he jumped to Lāṅkā. This story was told by Maināka mountain to Hanūmān. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāndā, 1st Sarga).

64) Indra cut off his preceptor’s head.

Once Devendra accepted a sage named Viśvarūpa as his preceptor for a sacrifice. Viśvarūpa’s mother was a Dānava partisan. So this priest, as directed by his mother, performed the sacrifice with the prayer—“May the gods and the Asuras prosper.” As a result of the prayer, both the gods who performed the sacrifice and the Asuras who did not perform it, prospered. At this Devendra became furious and he cut off the head of the Guru. (Devi Bhāgavata, 3rd Skandha).

65) Indra and Mahīśāsura.

See under Mahīśāsura.

66) Indra became a bull.

Long ago there was a King called Kakutstha in the Ikṣvāku dynasty. When he was ruling over the kingdom of Ayodhya, a war broke out between Devas and Asuras. In that war, the Devas were not able to defeat the Asuras. Indra in distress approached Viṣṇu for refuge. Viṣṇu advised him to seek the help of Kakutsta, King of Ayodhya. So Indra with the other gods went to Ayodhya. When Kakutsta heard about their appeal for help, he gladly offered his help but only on condition that Indra became his vehicle. Seeing no other way, Indra assumed the form of a bull and Kakutsta, riding on the back of the bull fought against the Asuras and defeated them. It is from that day that the King came to be called “Kakutsta”, “Indra-vāhana” and “Puraṇājaya”. (His original name is unknown). “Kaku” means the “hump of a bull”. Because he was seated on the “Kakut” he got the name “Kakutsta”. Because he made Indra “vāhana” (vehicle) he got the name of “Indravāhana”. As he defeated the Asuras and conquered their city (pura) he was called “Puraṇājaya”. Kakutsta was the son of Śaśāda and the father of Puṣṭhu. Śrī Rāma is called “Kākutsta” because he was born in the family of Kakutsta. (Devi Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

67) Indra’s Task. Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha says that Indra is one of the “Aṣṭadikpālakas (the eight protectors of the quarters) and the name of his city is “Amarāvati”. There are fourteen Manvantaras during the life of the present Brahmā (See under Manvantara). This means that fourteen Manus will be born and will die one after another during this period. Each Manvantara will have its own Indra and the Devas. The first Manus was Śvāyambluva. After him five more Manus, Śvarocisā, Uttama, Tāmasa, Raivata and Gākṣuṣa, have passed away. The present Manus is Vaivasvata the son of Śūrya. The current Vaivasvata Manvantara is the seventh. At the end of seven more Manvantaras, the present Brahmā will perish and a new Brahmā will be born. For the names of the Indras of different Manvantaras, see under Manvantara. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 2, Chapter 1).

69) Indra became a Calf. (See under Prṣu).

70) The name Purandara. Sardar K. M. Panikkar in his preface to Rgveda Saṁhitā says that Indra got the name Purandara because he destroyed the cities (Puras) of the Dasyus. But in Chapter 71, of Vāmana Purāṇa, we are told that he got this name because he killed “Pura”, the son of Mahābali.

71) Indra in the land of Kōṇīkaṇa. Once an Asura named Śurāpadma obtained from Brahmā, a boon to enable him to conquer the whole world. He persecuted the inhabitants of all the three worlds. He sent his followers to bring Indrāṇi (Indra’s wife) to him as a captive. Indra, who came to know of this, secretly went away with Indrāṇi to the Kōṇīkaṇa land and lived in a temple there. After some days, entrusting Indrāṇi to the protection of Sāstā, he went to Kaḷāśā. Just at this time, Śurāpadma’s sister Ajāmukhi came there and tempted Indrāṇi. Sāstā cut off the hands of Ajāmukhi and took Indrāṇi to Kailāṣa. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).

72) Indra and Mukekunda. Mukekunda, a King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty, once went to Devaloka at the invitation of Indra. In the war between the Devas and Asuras, Mukekunda helped Indra and the Asuras were defeated. Indra was pleased and asked Mukekunda what boon he wanted. Mukekunda asked for a boon which would give him long and sound sleep. Indra granted it and in addition declared that anyone who disturbed Mukekunda’s sleep would be reduced to ashes. After that Mukekunda went to sleep in a cave in the middle of a dense forest. A King of the tribe Yavana performed penance to Brahmā and obtained his boon which would enable him to defeat the Yādavas (Śrī Kṛṣṇa’s clan) and he began to fight with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Because of Brahmā’s boon, Śrī Kṛṣṇa was not able to kill him. He drove Yavana into the cave in which Mukekunda was sleeping. Mukekunda suddenly woke up from his sleep and looked at him with great anger. Yavana was at once reduced to ashes. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

73) Indra’s favourite Drink. The juice of the Soma Plant is the favourite drink of Indra. (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 1st Anuvāka, 1st Sūktaka).

74) Indra became a Goat. Sage Āṅgiras began worshipping the Devas, hoping to have a son who will be equal in glory to Indra. Indra who did not like another person to be his equal, took birth himself as the son of Āṅgiras. Savya is the name of that son. Once Savya assumed the form of a goat and ate up the soma plant of a sage called Medhātithi. The sage then called him Meṣa (goat). Indra is still known by the name, Meṣa. (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 1st Anuvāka, 51st Sūktaka).

75) Indra turns woman. Once Indra took birth as the daughter of a king named Viṣṇāṇaśva and assumed the name Menā. (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 1st Anuvāka, 52nd Sūktaka).

76) Indra and Rīṣivā. Once Indra helped a King named Rīṣivā to defeat the Asuras, Karatūja, Parṇaya and Varuṇgreda. (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 1st Anuvāka, 53rd Sūktaka).

77) Indra and Śūrya. A King named Śvaśva offered prayers to Śūrya to bless him with children. Śūrya himself took birth as his son. Once a great sage called Etaśa got involved in a fight with this son (Śūrya). When the sage was about to collapse, Indra came to his rescue. (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 11th Anuvāka, 62nd Sūktaka).

78) Indra and Sāramā. Once an asura called Pani stole some cows and hid them in some unknown place. Indra asked Sāramā, the bitch of the Devas to find out and inform him where the cows were kept concealed. Sāramā replied that she was prepared to do so, if Indra would give milk to her child and look after it in her absence. Indra undertook that task and the bitch went out and found out the place where the cows were hidden and reported it to Indra, (Ṛgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 11th Anuvāka, 62nd Sūktaka).

79) Indra and Dādhiča. Dādhiča (Dādhiči) was the son of Atri. He used to scare away the Asuras by his horrible look. Once when he had gone to Heaven, the earth became infested with Asuras. Indra set out to fight them. He tried to find out whether Dadhica had left behind anything to be used as a weapon. “Dadhica had with him a horse-head”, he was told. Indra went in search of it and at last found it in a lake at a place called Sarayna. It is with its bone that he killed the Asuras. (Rgveda, 1st Mandala, 13th Anuváka, 84th Súkta).

80) Indra and Dadhyá. Indra taught Madhuvidyá (The science of intoxicating drinks) to Dadhyá. He was warned by Indra that if he communicated that lore to anyone else, his head would be cut off. Once the Aśviníüs wanted to learn it. Since Indra had denied Soriän drinking to Aśviníüs, they were not on good terms with Indra. So they approached Dadhyá to acquire that knowledge. But he refused to teach them due to his fear that Indra would cut off his head. So the Aśviníüs cut off Dadhyá’s head and fixed a horse's head in its place. With that horse-head Dadhyá taught the Aśviníüs Madhu Vidyá. After they had learnt the knowledge, they replaced his own head after removing the horse-head. (Rgveda, 1st Mandala, 17th Anuváka, 116th Súkta).

81) It is said that once, in a light mood, Indra made a mare give birth to a cow. (Rgveda, 1st Mandala, 18th Anuváka, 121st Súkta).

82) Indra and Satániká. Satániká was a King of the Lunar dynasty who ruled over the city of Kausâmbi. Indra who was highly impressed by his heroic exploits once invited him to Devaloka to suppress the Asuras. In the war with Asuras, Satániká was killed. After that Satániká’s son, Sahasrániká went to Devaloka and killed the Asuras. Indra who was pleased declared that Sahasrániká would marry the beautiful Mrgávatí and they were married. See under Mrgávatí. (Kathásaritáságara, Kathámukha larnbaka, 1st Taránga).

83) Indra and Vásavadattá. Vásavadattá who was the wife of Udayana was born in the world by Indra’s blessing. See under “Vásavadattá”. (Kathásaritáságara, Kathámukha larnbaka, 1st Taránga).

84) Indra and Meghanáda. Rávana conquered the world with the help of Brahmá’s blessing. In his pride he came into conflict with Indra. After a fierce battle, Rávana’s son, Meghanáda defeated Indra. He took Indra to Lánká as a prisoner. Rávana chained Indra’s hands and feet and tied him to his flagstaff. The Devas in distress approached Brahmá for help. Brahmá went to Lánká and secured the release of Indra. After giving the title of Indrajit to Meghanáda, Brahmá returned to Brahmáloka.

Sometime before this Devendra had committed adultery with Ahályá, Sage Gautama’s wife. At that time Gautama had uttered a curse on him that he would have to spend a year in prison, chained by an enemy. His life in Rávana’s prison in Lánká was in fulfilment of that curse. (Uttara Rámaýána).

85) Indra and Hanúmán. Hanúmán, the son of Váyu (wind) sprung up into the sky as soon as he was born, seeing the brilliant rising sun, and mistaking it to be some delicious food. He saw Ráhu who was standing near the sun and made a leap towards him. When he came near, he saw Airávata, Indra’s elephant, standing in Devaloka. At once he turned towards that elephant to swallow him. Seeing the struggle between Hanúmán and Airávata Indra used his weapon Vajrá which cut the monkey’s “hanu” (jaw bone) and he fell down dead on the earth. Váyu, in deep sorrow, took the dead body of his son and went to Pátála. When Váyu (wind) left the world, the creatures of the world underwent great suffering. Then the Devas led by Brahmá went to Pátála, consoled Váyu and revived Hanúmán. Since his “Hanu” was cut with Vajra, the monkey was named “Hanúmán” by Indra. Besides, Indra gave him a blessing that Hanúmán would die only when he wished. (Uttara Rámaýána, Válmikí Rámaýána; Kiskindhá Kánta; 66th Sarga).

86) Indra and Góvardhana. For the story of how the people of Gókula (Cowherds’ colony) stopped the worship of Indra, how Indra caused a heavy shower of rain, and how Śrí Krsña used the Góvardhana mountain as an umbrella, see under “Krsña”.

87) Indra becomes victim of old age. Once the sage Durvásas went to Devaloka. The goddesses gave him a grand reception at which Menaká presented him with a garland made of fragrant flowers. The sage gave it to Devendra. Indra placed it on Airávata’s tusk. The fragrance of the garland attracted a large number of bees to it. They swarmed round the head of the elephant and annoyed it. Airávata picked up the garland and trampled it under his foot, pulled it to pieces and threw it away. Durvásas took this as an insult to himself and pronounced a curse that all the gods would be subjected to wrinkles and grey hair of old age.

Indra and the other gods fell victims to old age. Indra requested Durvásas to release him from his curse. The sage relented and told him that if the Devas drank Amrta obtained by churning the ocean of milk they would recover their youth. Accordingly, the ocean of milk was churned by the joint effort of the Devas and Asuras and in the end the Devas snatched it away. When the Devas drank Amrta, the symptoms of old age disappeared and they recovered their youth. (Uttara Rámaýána).

88) Indra and Dándakáranya. “Dánda the son of Ikshvákú, a King of the Solar dynasty, ruled over the territory between the Vindhya and the Himalayas. Once when he was out hunting in the neighbourhood of the mountains, he saw a charming woman. She was “Ará”, the daughter of the sage Sukrá. The King was fascinated by her beauty and fell desperately in love with her at the very first sight. He seized her by force and committed rape on her. When Sukrá knew about this, he was furious and uttered a curse that Indra should shower a rain of fire on Dánda’s kingdom. Thus the whole country of Dánda was destroyed by Indra’s rain of fire. In course of time that region was turned into a dense forest and came to be called “Dándakáranya”. (Uttara Rámaýána).

89) Other names of Indra. Indra; Marutván, Maha-ván, Bijaújas, Pákaśasana, Vrdhárasas, Sunásíra, Purúhúta, Purandara, Jisnú, Lékársásába, Śakra, Śatamanyu, Divaspati, Sutrámán, Gotrabhit, Vají, Váśava, Vrtráha, Vṛṣá, Vástospáti, Surapáti Valáráti, Śacispáti, Janmabhédivin, Hariláya, Svárát, Namucisúdana, Śaímkrandana, Duścyavana, Turását Megháváhana, Akhañdála, Sahasráśa, Rbhuskás.

90) Indra’s Divinity. In the earliest stage of Hinduism, Indra had occupied one of the most eminent places among the gods. Maháviśnu had only the place of younger brother of Indra at that time. In Amara Kósá we find “Upeñdra Indräravarjá” as the synonym of
In the Rgveda, Indra has a more important place. Although Rudra is a divinity or deity and although there are references to Kapardin, there is not even a single stuti (praise) about Śiva in the Rgveda. It does not recognize Devi and idol worship. In the Purānic age, Indra was transformed into a lascivious “Deva Prabhu” (Lord among the gods).

Indra was the main actor in the Rgveda. He is the hero who drove the Dasyus, the allies of the Aryas. His weapon is Vajra, thunderbolt which was made by Tvastar. Vāyu (wind) is his charioteer. He is constantly traveling about in the sky driving his golden chariot. Indra likes drinking soma juice more than the other gods. Indra is even referred to as “Somapati”. He is also sometimes described as the twin brother of Agni. Sages have sung unendingly about the exploits of Indra. Hiranyakṣu, a sage, has composed a work entitled “Indraśuti” which celebrates many of the heroic deeds of Indra. Indra was Vajraśaṇi who had slain the Asuras like Ahi, Tuṣpa, Śaṅkara, Vala, Vṛtra and others. There are also several stories in the Vedas about the birth of this hero. At the time of Indra’s birth, somehow, his mother felt that he was incapable of being killed. So she decided to abandon him. Fearing trouble for herself, she asked the child to leave her and go to some other place. Indra refused to do so and followed her to the house of Tvastar. There he drank the juice of the soma plant and gained strength to kill his enemies. But unaware of this, his mother, tried to keep him concealed. Indra, however, came out of the place in his dazzling attire and encountered the enemies. Vṛtra who met Indra got ready for a fight. In the fight Vyaṁśa struck down Indra. The devas fled in fear. Indra who was left alone called upon Viṣṇu and sought his aid.

Although Indra needed help in his fight with Vṛtra, he was the chief supporter to the Aryas in their fight against the Dasyus. It was Indra’s Vajra which broke up the fortresses of many Dasyu kings. That was why he got the name “Purandara”. Once Indra dried up the whole river to enable his army to cross it for the sake of Sudā. When Sūravas became helpless, Indra destroyed twenty kings and 60999 soldiers with his chariot wheel. Thus we see Indra in the Rgveda as the destroyer of the Dasyus and the protector of the Aryas.

Indraṇi, Śaci and Pulomajā are the names of Indra’s wife. Indra’s son, Jayanta is also known by the name of Pākaśāsani. Indra’s city is Amarāvatī; his chariot “Vimāna”, his charioteer Mātali, and his garden Nandanavana. “Vajayantai” is the name of his mansion. Indra’s weapon has several other names, such as, Hrādini, Kuliṣa, Bhūdura, Pavi, Satakoṭi, Svaru, Samba, Dambholi, Aćani etc. Indra’s assembly is called “Sudharmā”. Indra’s bow is the rainbow, his sword is Parasjaya and his residence is Heaven. The trees in Heaven are, Mandara, Pārijāta, Śaṅkara, Kalpvrikṣa and Haricandana. The festival celebrated in honour of Indra is called “Śakradhvajottabhāna” or “Indrotsava”.

Indra is the God of Rain and Thunder. He controls the weather and brings rain which is essential for the growth of crops. He also has the power to destroy enemies and bring prosperity and abundance.

Indra is one of the most important deities in Hinduism and is considered the god of thunder, lightning, and rain. He is also known as the god of wisdom and knowledge.

Indra was born as Gāḍhi. He was the second son of the sage Kabandha.

Indra was also the god of war and was associated with the leader of the gods, Agni. He was also the god of thunder and lightning.

Indra is often depicted as a handsome and powerful deity, often carrying a thunderbolt in his hand.

Indra is depicted as a fierce and powerful deity, often carrying a thunderbolt in his hand.
the crocodile leave the former free. Their tug of war continued for 1000 years when Mahāviṣṇu appeared on the scene, killed the crocodile and saved the elephant. At once the elephant was re-transformed into Indradyumna and he attained Vaikunṭha (the abode of Viṣṇu). (Bhāgavata, 8th Skanda).

A Malayalam verse summarises the above story as follows:—Impelled by Agastya’s curse the elephant went to the lake at Mount Trikūṭa, and suffered for 1000 years as the crocodile which caught hold of its hind leg did not loosen its grip. Then appeared on the scene the killer of Murāśura (Lord Viṣṇu) on his vehicle, Garuḍa, killed the crocodile with his discus and granted salvation to the elephant.

3) Indradyumna’s fall from heaven when the merits of his good deeds were exhausted. The merits or the result of his good and noble deeds having been exhausted, Indradyumna, the saintly king once descended from heaven to earth, and the sad King approached sage Māraṇḍeeya. But, the sage did not recognize him. The King and the sage went to Prāvīrakarna, an owl living on the top of the Himālayas. It also did not recognise the King. Then they went to Nādijarjigha, a stork very much older than the owl and living in the lake known as Indradyumna. Nādijarjigha also could not recognise the King. In another part of the lake was living a tortoise called Akūpāra, who was older than Nādijarjigha. At last the King, the sage, Prāvīrakarna and Nādijarjigha approached Akūpāra. At his very sight Akūpāra recognized the King. Akūpāra told sage Māraṇḍeeya that Indradyumna was a very famous King and quite liberal and munificent in distributing gifts, and that the lake Indradyumna was formed by the passage of the cows gifted by the King. Having heard these details regarding the King the sage sent him back to heaven. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 199).

INDRACYUMNA II. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 32 refers to a certain King Indradyumna, a contemporary of Śrī Kṛṣṇa; Kṛṣṇa killed him.

INDRACYUMNA III. A sage Indradyumna is mentioned in the list of Saints who paid their homage to Dharmaputra during his forest life. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 22).

INDRACYUMNA IV. Name of King Janaka’s father.

INDRACYUMNA V. A king of the Iksvāku dynasty. (See Para 2, under Viṣvakarman).

INDRACYUMNA VI. A king who lived in the Kṛta yuga, and a devotee of Viṣṇu. He visited the Jagannātha temple in Odṛa Deśa once to worship Lord Jagannātha. The Lord was then hidden in the sand. When the King, disappointed at this was about to return, determined to fast unto death at Mount Nila when a celestial voice cried, “Thou shalt see Him.” Afterwards the King performed a horse sacrifice and built a magnificent Viṣṇu temple. Narasimhamurti brought by Nārada was installed in the temple. During sleep the King had a darśana (sight) of Lord Jagannātha. Also an astral voice directed him to cut down the fragrant tree on the seashore and make idols with it. Accordingly the king got idols of Viṣṇu, Balarāma, Sudarśana and Subhadra made and installed them in the temple. (Skanda Purāṇa).

INDRACYUMNA (M). A lake. A stork called Nādijarjigha and the Ādikūrma called Akūpara lived in this lake. It came into existence when the cows given in gift by King Indradyumna passed along that way. (M.B. Aranya Parva, Chapter 198). The pool lay near Mount Gandhamadana, and the Pāṇḍavas once visited it. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 18).

INDRAJIT. Rāvana’s son, Meghanāda.

To Pulastya, one of the Prajāpatis was born by Mālinī, Viśravas. Viśravas had two wives, Devavarmi, also called Ilibilā and Kaikāṣt. Viśravas or Kubera was his son by Ilibilā and Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarna, Vibhiṣaṇa and Śūrpanākha (daughter) being the offsprings of Kaikāṣt. Rāvaṇa married Mandodari and three sons, Meghanāda, Atikāya and Aṅkumāra were born to them. Meghanāda came to be known as Indrajit also, because he had defeated Indra once.

2) Son of Śiva. Though it was Mandodari, Rāvaṇa’s wife, who gave birth to Meghanāda (Indrajit) the Uttarārāmāyaṇa refers to him as the son of Śiva in a story as follows:

Once, after religious fasting and other rites on a Monday (to propitiate the Sun-God) Madhurā, an Apsārā woman, adorned with all kinds of ornaments went to Mount Kailāśa to offer salutations to Lord Śiva. Pārvatī, Śiva’s consort was not present then, and Madhurā used the opportunity to please the Lord, and she got pregnant by him. All on a sudden Pārvatī appeared on the scene, and knowing what had happened in her absence she cursed Madhurā to fall into an abandoned well as a frog. Madhurā prayed for redemption from the curse, and Śiva pitying her sad plight blessed her that after 12 years she would get herself transformed into a fair damsel and become the daughter of Maya and would, then, be married by a great King. According to Pārvatī’s curse Madhurā fell into a well in the forest as a frog. Mayaśu was performing penance near the well to get a daughter. On the expiry of 12 years after Madhurā fell into the well as a frog, Mayaśu looked into it and beheld a beautiful girl. He took her to his palace named her Mandodari and brought her up as his own daughter. Rāvaṇa married her. It was at this stage that Śiva’s vital fluid which had, twelve years before, entered her womb made its appearance in the form of a son. Rāvaṇa named him Meghanāda. Being Śiva’s son he grew up with great prowess. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

3) Meghanāda’s yajñas. When once Rāvaṇa was away from Lāṅkā on a conquest of the world, Meghanāda went to Nikumbhāl, the central place for conducting yajñas, and performed seven yajñas with sage Śukra as the chief priest. By the time all the seven yajñas, viz. Agniṣṭoma, Avāmedha, Bahusvāna, Vaisvāna, Maheśvara, Rājaśya and Gosava were over, Rāvaṇa returned to Lāṅkā and sage Śukra gave him details about the yajñas conducted by his son Meghanāda. Rāvaṇa did not like the Vaisvāna yāga performed by his son, and Śukra, who got angry at this cursed, Rāvaṇa that he would meet with his death at the hands of Viṣṇu. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

By performing a Śiva yāga, Meghanāda got the blessings of Śiva, who taught him (Meghanāda) the great art of Sanāthi, which helped one to move amongst others invisible to them.
4) The name, Indrajit. Once Rāvana encircled Indraloka with a big army, and Indra, very much alarmed, ran up to Viṣṇu for protection. Viṣṇu told Indra that it was not yet time for Rāvana’s death and when it was time Viṣṇu himself would slay him. Disappointed at this Indra returned, and a fierce war ensued between him and Rāvana. Indra fought with Rāvana, and Jayanta, his son fought with Meghanāda. When fighting reached its climax Meghanāda resorted to the art of Samādhi bought by Śiva, and became invisible to others. Then he showered his arrows. Jayanta fainted on the battlefield. Pulomā, father of Indrāṇi, carried away Jayanta without others knowing and concealed him in the ocean. Everyone thought that Jayanta was dead. Burning with grief and revenge Indra confronted Rāvana again. Rāvana fell down at the blow with Indra’s vajra (thunderbolt). Then once more making himself invisible to others, Meghanāda jumped into Indra’s chariot and bound him prisoner. By that time Rāvana got up on his feet, and he and Meghanāda carried away Indra to Lākṣā and chained him to the foot of the flagstaff.

The Devas, grief-stricken at this sad fate of Indra went to Brahmā and submitted their grievance. Brahmā reached Lākṣā, and named Meghanāda Indrajit. (He who gained victory over Indra). Indrajit prayed to Brahmā for the boon, which would, ward off death for ever. When Brahmā told him that the boon of eternal deathlessness was out of the question he sought the following boon: that when he had performed a sacrifice, out of the sacrificial fire should emerge a chariot and necessary horses and that he should not be killed by any one while fighting from that chariot, and that he did not mind being killed by enemies if he got away without completing the yajña. Brahmā granted the boon. And, as directed by Brahmā Rāvana released Indra from imprisonment after one year. (Uttarā Ramāyaṇa).

5) Indrajit and Hanumān. A clash occurred between Indrajit and Hanumān, who landed in Lākṣā in search of Śītā, and the former got Hanumān bound by Brahmāstra. (Vālmiki Ramāyaṇa).

6) Death of Indrajit. At the height of the fierce war between Rāma and Rāvana, Indrajit and Lakṣmaṇa clashed with each other. Finding victory impossible Indrajit created a fake Śītā and killed her. Thinking that Śītā was dead, grief-stricken Hanumān, Lakṣmaṇa and the regiment of monkeys withdrew from the fight. Informed of Śītā’s death Rāma fainted.

Indrajit began the yajña for victory over Rāma at the place called Nikumbhāla. Vibhīṣaṇa told Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa about the warning of Brahmā that Indrajit would be killed if the yajña was obstructed. Happy at the information Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa immediately went to Nikumbhāla to fight with Indrajit who was engaged in performing the yajña, and without completing the yajña he came out and began fighting, and Lakṣmaṇa killed him. (Vālmiki Ramāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Chapters 82-91).

INDRAKĪLĀ. A mountain in front of the Himālaya and Gandhamādana mountains. The presiding deity of this mountain is a devotee of Kubera. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 37).

INDRALOKĀBHIGAMANA PARVA. A sub Parva in Mahābhārata.

INDRAMĀRGĀ. An ancient sacred place (bathing ghat) Those who take a dip in the holy waters there will attain heaven. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 9).

INDRĀṇī. Wife of Indra (Śacī).

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Viṣṇu—Brahmā—Kāśyapa—Pulomā—Śacī (Indrāṇi). Pulomā was an asura born to Kāśyapa by his wife Danu. Indra married Śacī, the daughter of Pulomā, and hence Śacī is called Indrāṇi also. She is called Paulomī also as she was the daughter of Pulomā.

2) Indrāṇi and Śūrapadma. An Asura called Śūrapadma once coveted Indrāṇi. He deputed his men to fetch Śacī somehow or other to him. Hearing about this, Indra, keeping Indrāṇi with him, went to and stayed in the Chāyā temple in Konkāpanēsa, and afterwards Indra went to Mount Kailāsa after asking Śāstā to guard Indrāṇi. During Indra’s absence Ajāmukhi, sister of Śūrapadma met Indrāṇi and induced her to become Śūrapadma’s wife. Indrāṇi refused. Ultimately Indra returned and took Indrāṇi back to Devaloka.

3) Indrāṇi and Nābūṣa. See under Agastya.

4) Indrāṇi and Pāñcālī. Mahābhārata says that Pāñcālī was a partial incarnation of Indrāṇi. (See under Pāñcālī).

A part of Śacī was born in the family of Drupada as Draupadi, viz. Pāñcālī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67).

(1) Indrāṇi once went to the assembly of Brahmā and worshipped him. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 42).

(2) When once Satyabhāmā came to Devaloka with Śri Kṛṣṇa, Indrāṇi conducted her to Aditi, mother of the Devas. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 36).

(3) Śacī also was present at the birth of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 13).

(4) Indrāṇi and Arjuna. (See under Arjuna).

INDRAPARVATA. A mountain in Videha. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 15).

INDRAPRAMATI. A disciple of Paila. He belonged to the line of Vyāsa’s disciples. For other details see under Vyāsa.

INDRAPRASṬHA. Capital city of the Pândavas. It is the same as Delhi, the capital of modern India.

1) Construction. As ordained by Dṛḍharaśtra, Dharma-putra, claimant to half of the kingdom, went to the forest Khandavaprastha with his brothers. Śri Kṛṣṇa stood by them; great sages like Vyāsa helped them. There, in the forest, they built a city called Indraprastha as beautiful as Indraloka. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 211).

2) Reconstruction. Once Agni burned down the Khandava forest. (See under Khandavadhāra). Arjuna saved Maya and five others from the fire. Maya asked Arjuna what he should do in return for saving his life. Arjuna replied that it was not proper to expect any reward for saving one’s life and that, if Maya was very keen about doing something in return, it might be done for Kṛṣṇa. Then Kṛṣṇa asked Maya to build for the Pândavas a palace, the most beautiful one in the world at Indraprastha. And, accordingly, after getting the Brahmans duly feasted, Maya marked the ground ten thousand Kiṣkuśa in extent. Then Maya went to the mountain Maināka to the west of Mount Kailāsa, where in the pool called Bīndu he had stored a large quantity of gold and gems. Maya brought those materials as also a conch called Devadatta from there and built the most beautiful palace in the world at Indraprastha. Within the palace were made many a beautiful pool and various patterns with galleries etc. in glass. It was built so beautifully and in such a manner as to create, at the very sight, the illusion that there was water where there was really no water and vice versa. It took fourteen months to complete the construction of that most beautiful model of architecture. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapters 1-3).

3) Vajra, son of Aniruddha of the Yādava dynasty was made master of Indraprastha after the time of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 11).

Indrapūjā. This pūjā (Indra-worship) is also called Indrotsava. It was during the reign of Vasu, a king of the lunar dynasty that Indrotsava began being celebrated in an organised manner. Pleased at the long penance of Vasu, Indra appeared to him and presented a Veṇūḍaṇḍa. Vasu planted the daṇḍa on earth and conducted Indrapūjā. Thenceforward raising the Veṇūḍaṇḍa became the first item in celebrating Indrotsava. The staff is decorated with flowers, sandal, garlands etc. To the top of the staff is attached the form of a ḍaṇḍa and offerings are given to it. The reason for this is the fact that it was in the form of a ḍaṇḍa that Indra appeared to Vasu. Pleased by the Indrapūjā of Vasu, Indra announced as follows:—If men, and especially kings worship me in the manner done by Vasu, prosperity and welfare will accrue to them and to their kingdoms. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63).

Indrāsenā I. A son of King Nala. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 60, Verse 23). Nala had also a daughter called Indrāsenā.

Indrāsenā II. Son of King Parikṣit. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 55).

Indrāsenā III. Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 33. Verse 30 refers to one Indrāsenā, charioteer of the Pāṇḍavas. He accompanied the Pāṇḍavas in their forest life. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter I, Verse 11). When the Pāṇḍavas arrived at Mount Gandhamadāna they left Indrāsenā with Subāhu, the Pulinda King. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 140, Verse 27). After some time the Pāṇḍavas sent him to Dvārakā. (M.B. Viṣṭā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 58). Indrāsenā was present at the wedding of Abhimanyu which was celebrated in the city of Upāplavya. (M.B. Viṣṭā Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 23).

Indrāsenā IV. A King who fought on the side of the Kauravas. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 156, Verse 122).

Indrāsenā I. Name of Pāncālī in her former birth. (See under Pāncālī).

Indrāsenā II. Daughter of King Nala.

Indrāsenā III. Nālāyani, a princess of Aṅga. She was married by the sage Rāyaśriṇga. (See under Rāyaśriṇga). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 11). Indrāsenā served her husband for 100 years. (M.B. Viṣṭā Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 11).

Indrātāpa. An Asura, who was a devotee of Varuṇa. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 15).

Indrātīrtha. A sacred place on the banks of the river Sarasvatī. It was here that Indra performed 100 yajñas. (M.B. Sałya Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 49).

Indrātoyā. A river near Mount Gandhamadāna. Bathing in the river and staying there for three nights is tantamount to performing the horse sacrifice. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 11).

Indrāvāhana. King Kukutstha of the Ikṣvāku dynasty made Indra his vehicle in the form of an ox and fought the Asuras thus. Hence the name Indrāvāhana. (See under Kukutstha).

Indrāvarma. A King of Mālava, he fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas, and got killed by an elephant called Aśvatthāmā. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 190, Verse 15).

Indrota (Indroda). A sage, son of Śuka, the great sage, and also called Śaunaka. Janamejaya, son of King Parikṣit once killed a brahmin, and at once Brahmahatyā (sin of having killed a brahmin) seized the King. The King lost all mental peace at this and sought the advice of many sages for redemption from the sin, and Indrota (Śaunaka) advised him to go on a pilgrimage and perform righteous duties (dharma). The King acted accordingly and got rid of the sin of killing the brahmin. This story occurs under the title Indrota-parikṣītyām in Sānti Parva in three chapters. (Chapters 150-152).

Indrotsava. See under Indrapūjā.

Induprabhā. See under Malayaprabhā.

Indumati I. Daughter of Candraśena, King of Śrīhala and his queen, Guṇavatī. (See under Candraśena).

Indumati II. Mother of Nahuṣa. (See under Nahuṣa).

Indumati III. Wife of Raṅgu. Ira I. One of the wives of Kaśyapa. Aditi, Diti, Danu, Āriṣṭā, Surasā, Khaśā, Surabhi, Vinatā, Tāmā, Kroḍhavās, Ira, Kadrū and Muni were the wives of Kaśyapa. Grass on earth originated from Ira. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

Ira II. There was a devī called Ira among the attendants of Kubera. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 11).

Irā. A river. Sage Markandeya is reported to have once seen this river in the stomach of child Kṛṣṇa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 186, Verse 104. Also see under Markandeya).

Iraṇā. A son born to Arjuna of the serpent damsel (Nāgakanyā) named Ulūpi. (For genealogy see under Arjuna).

1) Birth. According to the practice laid down Pāncālī used to live with each husband for one year by turn. When she was living with one husband the other four husbands had no admission there. When once Arjuna wanted his arms to redeem the cows of a brahmin stolen by thieves he entered the apartment of Dharma-putra where the arms had been kept and took them. For thus having entered, against rules, the apartment then kept by Dharmaputra and Pāncālī, Arjuna had to go on a pilgrimage for one year. Numerous brahmans accompanied Arjuna and while spending the night on the banks of the Gaṅga, Arjuna entered its waters for bathing. There he saw the Nāga damsel, Ulūpī. They fell in love with each other and got married. And, a son named Irāvān was born to them. Ulūpī granted Arjuna the boon that all water-animals would obey him and that in water he would be invincible. Leaving Ulūpī and Irāvān behind, Arjuna continued his stay in the forest.

2) Further Information. (1) In the great war Irāvān fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. During the first day’s fighting Irāvān and Śrutayu fought a duel. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verses 69-71).

(2) Irāvān defeated Vinda and Anuvinda in fight. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 83, Verses 18-22).

(3) Irāvān killed five brothers of Śakuni. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90, Verses 27-46).

(4) Irāvān fought against Alambuṣa and was killed by the latter. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90, Verses 56-76).

IRĀVATĪ I. Grand daughter of Kaśyapa. Ten daughters were born to Kaśyapa by his wife Krodhavāsī, viz. Mrghī, Mrgamandā, Hari, Bhadramatā, Mātaingī, Śārdūlī, Śvetā, Surabhī and Kadrī and Irāvati was Kadrī’s daughter. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kāṇḍa).

IRĀVATĪ II. A sacred river. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 146, Verse 18).

IRĪKA. A locality. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 52).

IRI. There are hundred Kings in the palace of Yama worshipping him, and they are, called the Īris. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 23).

IRIMPÚ. A Malayalam word meaning ‘iron’. The metal iron originated in the following way. The Devas sought Brahmā’s protection against the onslaughts of Tārakāsura, who had obtained a boon to the effect that he could be killed only by a son born to Śiva. And, implored by Brahmā and others Śiva entered into the sex act with Pārvatī. The impact shook the universe. Agni separated them from the process and the semen of Śiva dropped in Agni. Agni deposited it in the Gaṅgā. The Gaṅgā could not bear it and it coursed through her (Gaṅgā’s) arteries and out of it was born Subrahmanya. Also from the particles of the semen gold and silver were produced. From the intensity of the heat were produced iron and copper, See under Subrahmanya. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Canto 37).

ĪSA. A Viśvadeva. (Universal deva). (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 31).

ĪSĀNA (ĪSĪVA). Īsāna, with matted hair rides on the ox. See under Īsā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

ĪSĀNADHYUŚITA TĪRTHA. An ancient tīrtha. Tasting the water of this tīrtha will give all the benefits of the horse sacrifice. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verses 8, 9).

ĪṢṬARAŚMI. A King mentioned in the Rgveda. He performed many yajñas. (Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 13, Śūkta 123).

ĪṢṬAŚVA. A King mentioned in the Rgveda. He performed many yajñas. (Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 19, Śūkta 124).

ĪṢUṆĀDA. An Asura born to Kaśyapa and his wife, Danu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 25). This Īṣuṇāda was born in his next life as the very heroic and powerful King Nagnajit. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verses 20, 21).

ĪṢVARA. Once Devī told Himavān who, according to the Hindu religion, God is, and how creation takes place from Īṣvara (God). The famous discussion about Godhood, called Devīgītā is quoted hereunder.

1) Ahamēvāśa pūrvaṁ tu
nāṇyaṁ kincid nāgādhipa
Tadātmāryapī caśaṁvatī Parabrahmaṁkānaṁakam.

Before the creation of the universe commenced, I alone was; there was nothing else. Then I was called Para-brahman, Čīsvarūpi, Saiṁvīśvarūpi and Aṁrūpi.

(2) Apratarkaryamanirdeṣyamanapānamānamayam
Tasya kācita svataḥ śiddha śaktirnāyeti viśrutā

(That form is beyond discussion (Apratarkya); beyond description (Anirdeṣya); incapable of being compared (Anapāma); beyond birth, death youth, old age etc. (Anāmaya). In this form of mine resides māyāsakti.

3) Na satī śa nāsatī sanobhayātmā virodhataḥ Etadvilakṣanā kācidvastubhūtastā sarvadā

(That māyāsakti cannot be said to be existing or not existing. Thus it is neither existing nor not existing. The statement existing and not existing is subject to the error, paradox. That great force exists always in me with the pair of aspects.

4) Pāvakasyogateveya-muṣṭāṁśortvā didhitih
Candraṣya candrikeveyaṁ
Mameyaiṁ sahajā dhruvā

(Fire does not exist without heat, nor Sun without light nor Moon without its rays. Just like this, that māyāsakti is coeval with me. It is permanent.

5) Tasyāṁ karmāṇi jīvāṁ
Jivāḥ Kālāśeśa saṁcare
Abhedna viṁśīṁ suyūḥ
Suṣuptau vyavahārat

(Just as all actions, feelings and, even the sense of time remain latent in deep sleep, even so all the actions and emotions of all living beings lie absorbed in Māyā).

6) Svāsakāṭeśa ca samāyogādahāṁ bijāṁmatau gataḥ Śvādhiśārvaṇaḥtattayadośatvāṁ ca samāgatam

(I am myself the source of this Māyā; but it has a strange power called āvarana which hides my real nature).

7) Caitanyaśya samāyogā nimittatvaṁ ca kathyaṁ
Prapañcapariṇāmappacca
Samavāyitvamucyate

(Being joined to Caitanya (Brahman) Māyā becomes the material as well as the immediate cause of the universe (Prapañca).

8) Kecīttam tāpa ityāhustamaṁ keciyādāṁ pare
Jāänāṁ māyāṁ pradhānāṁ ca
Prakṛtiṁ śaktimapayājam

(This maya is referred to differently by different people as tapas, tamas, jada, jhana, maya, pradhana, prakri and ajah.

9) Vimarsha iti tarh prahu or Saivastavasvadadah/ avidyamihare prahurvedatvartarhactikah/
(Experts in Saiva philosophical thought refer to this maya as vimarsha and Vedic seers call it avidya).

10) Evam nanavidhini syuh tasmai nigamadiso/ tasyah jadatvarah drsyatvah (jaanaanafsattato sa/ (Thus Vedas refer to maya by various names. Because of visibility maya is called jada, and because it is destructive of true knowledge it is called asat).

11) Caitanyasya na dshyatvar dshyate jaadameva tat/ svaparaksanah ca caitanyah na parena prakah itam (Caitanya (Effulgence) is not visible. What is seen is jada (material expression). Caitanya is self-illuminating; it is not illuminated by something else).

12) Anavasthadoasatavanna svenapi prakah tam/ Karmakartyvedvah sayat-tasmaddadpavat svayam/
Prakahsamamaneysah
(If caitanya is not self-illuminating then it is subject to the drawbacks of Anavasthadoa (Absence of finiteness).
If Caitanya does not possess the quality of light and illumination there should necessarily be something else, which illuminates it, and there should again be something to illuminate that which illuminates Caitanya. And, it continues ad infinitum. This state of no conclusion is called anavastha doha. Also one thing cannot be, at the same time, the subject (actor) and the object of action, and that invites the drawback of paradox. Therefore, O King of mountains! understand that Caitanya is self-illuminating and it illuminates other things by its own illumination. And this, therefore, proves that my Caitanya is eternal).

13) Jagratajvasamushtyadau dshyasya vyabhicaraatah/ samvido vyabhicaraaca narahubhutost karhicit/
(All visible things go on changing in the three states of waking, dream and deep sleep. But, like visible things Caitanya is not subject to change, and does not experience the three states).

14) Yadi tasayapanubhava-starhyayar yena saakshnah/ anubhutaah sa eva stitah samvidvapuh purah
(If it is argued that it (Caitanya) experiences the three states then there must be something else as ‘witness’ for the experience. But, since it is established as self-illuminating there cannot be something else as ‘witness’).

15) Ata eva ca nityatvaah proktah sacchastrakovidaah/ anandarupatah casyah parapremaspadatvatah/
(Because of the above reasons experts in the science of philosophy hold that this Caitanya is eternal, and that, since it is the basis of bhakti which assumes the form of absolute love, it is anandarupa).

16) Maa na bhuvah hi bhuyaamitii premamani sthitah/ sarvasyanyaasya mithyayava- dasaatautavah spuutaah mama
(No living souls think ‘I am not’. Every body cherishes always his self-importance, the ‘I’. It is present there in every living soul in the form of love. This fact itself proves that I am different from all material objects).

17) Apaichhinnatapyeva/ mata eva matah mama /
tacca jhnaah namadharhoh
(dharmatva jabatmanah/)
(That I am indivisible is quite definite. Knowledge is not an attribute of the soul (atman) but is the very form of the soul itself. If knowledge were only an attribute of the soul (to soul) should have been material (jada) and it is quite a certitude that the soul is not material, because knowledge is the very nature of the soul).

18) Jhnaahsyah jahasatvah na dshah na ca saabhvah/ Ciddharmatvah tatha nasti
Girasiddhi nahi bhidyate
(The soul is pure knowledge without any touch of the jada. It is also pure existence. It is one and indivisible).

19) Tasmadatma jhnaarahupah sukharupas sarvadah/ satyah punyopayasangrha ca
svayamzaridwam
(The atman (soul) is therefore jhnaarahup (of the nature of pure knowledge), Sukharupa (of the nature of pure joy) and satyarahup (of the nature of absolute truth). It is unattached to anything and free from duality).

20) Sau punah kamaakarmadhyutatvah sviayamayayah/ paurvah bhuvarh samsthitarah (kalakarnahvapatuh)/

21) Avivekacca tattvasya sannaksanam prajayate/ abuddhipuruval sargosaah kathitaste nagadhapa/

22) Etadhi yanmaya proktoh manah rupamalauckikam/ avayaktan tadavayaktan mayaabalamtipa/

23) Procyate sarvasastraah sarakaranaakaram/ tantvamadidhuhupah ca saccidamandavigraha/

24) Sarvakarmaghanibhutaah micchijhjananakriyam/ hriinitkaramantravacayah taddadi tattvah taducyate/

(Imelled by the Vasanah of previous actions the Mayasakki proceeds to create the world, beginning with the 24 tattvas. My form which is immaterial and unmanifested is praised by all sstras to be the cause of all causes and the basis of all tattvas. It is also the basis of all knowledge, action and volition and realizable only through the hriinkara mantra).
Virāṭdeha (Cosmic body) is the sum total of these individual material bodies. The inner conscience and bodily organs like car etc. originate from the gentle and pure aspects of the five elements.

(35) Jñānendriyāṇāṁ rājendra! pratyekarāṁ mīlitaiṣṭu talāḥ / antākkanarāmekeṣu śyād vṛttibhedācaturvirdham //

(36) Yadd hūt saṁkalpa-piṭkāpaṇyaṁ tadādha-vanammana ityabhiḥkhyam / śyād buddhisāṃjñānāya ca yādā pravetti / suṣiṃcitāṁ saṁ-sayah-नहरुपām //

(37) Anusandhānārūpaṁ ta-iccintāna ca parākṣitam / ahaṁ kṛtyātmavṛttyā tu tadahānākārataṁ gatam

(Antākṣaraṇa, due to differences in state assumes four forms. When once conception and doubt arise in a subject, then it is called mind. When there is no doubt, but there is assuredness it is called understanding (buddhi). The function of examining a subject again and over again belongs to citta. To think of ‘I’ is egoism or ahaṁkāra).

(38) Teṣāṁ rajorajāirjātinī / Kramāt karmendriyāṇi ca / pratyekarāṁ mīlitaiṣṭu / prāṇo bhavati paścadhā //

(39) Hṛdi prāṇo gudeśpāno / nābhīsthatu samānākā / kaṇṭhadeśyudānassayād- / vyāṇāḥ sarvaśīrṣaḥ //

(From the coarse (rājas) aspect of the five sense organs originate the five organs of action like word, foot, hand, excretory and the genital organ, and also the five prāṇas (breaths) called prāṇa, apāna, samāna, udāna and vaṭā. Prāṇa is located in the heart, apāna in the anus, samāna in the nābhi (navel) udāna in the throat and vaṭā all over the body).

(40) Jñānendriyāṇāṁ paścaiva / paścakarmendriyāṇi ca / prāṇāṁ prāṇāṁ caiva / dhīya ca sahitam mānaḥ //

(41) Ėtāt sukṣmaśārīrāṁ svāṁ / mama liṅgaṁ yaḍucayate / Tatra yaḥ prakṛtyā prakṛttā / sa rājan dvividhā śrūṣṭa //

(Organs of knowledge, of actions, and prāṇas, 5, and buddhi 1, mind 1, the body is composed of these 17 factors). This forms the Sukṣmaśārīra whose prakṛti is two-fold (as mentioned below).

(42) Satvāṁkātha tu maṁ yād- / adevyā guṇamārśita / svāṁraṁ yā tu samākṣeta / sā maṁtyi nigadyate //

One is pure maṁ and the other is adevyā possessing properties.

(43) Tasyāṁ yat pratibimbāntasyād- / bimbabhiḥtasya ceṣṭuḥ / sa śvarāḥ samākhyayāḥ / svāṁraṁjñānavān paraḥ //

(44) Sarvajñāṁ sarvakartā ca / sarvāntukrahakahāra / adevyāṁ tu yat kīrnit / pratibimbaṁ nagādhipa // (Brahmacaitanya reflected in this mayā is Isvara (God). That Isvara is the same as the atman (soul), brahman absolute, creator of everything, omniscient, and the cause of all blessings. The soul reflects to a small extent in avidyā also.)

(45) Tadeva jivasaṁjñānan syāt sarvadūlakārayaṁ punaḥ / dvayorapīha saṁpraktaṁ dehatrayamavidyaṁ //

(This jiva is the receptacle of all sorrows. Due to avidyā and avidyā both get three kinds of bodies).

(46) Dehatrayābhimāṇācā- pyabūṁmātramayatun punaḥ / prājñāstu kāraṇātmā syāt sūksmadehi tu taitasaḥ //

(47) Sthuladehi tu viśvākyaya- strividhaḥ parikāritaḥ / evamāpi sampoḥko jivasūkṣmaśvairātipaḍaiḥ //

(48) Prathamo vyāśṭirūpaṁ / samaṣṭyātma parāḥ smṛtaḥ / sa hi sarveṣvāsāṁ sāksat jīvānugraḥakāmyaṁ //

(49) Karoti vividhāṁ viśvāṁ nāṁbhoṉārayaṁ punaḥ / macchaktiprērito niyāya / mayi rājan prakalpitaiḥ. //

He who is attached and is proud about the material body is called Viśva; he who attaches importance to the subtle body is called Tajjasa, and he who is aware of the causal body is called Prājñā. The jiva is Vyāstivārya (has individuality) but Isvara is Samaṣṭyātma (embraces all the jivas). Isvara works compelled by my power.

JYAM. Iyām in Malayalam means the metal lead. A metal formed out of the dirt in river Gaṅgā. (See Irimpu).

J. (a). This letter means jaya (victory). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

JĀBĀLA. The mother of the hermit Satyakāma. (For details see under Satyakāma).

JĀBĀLI I. A famous hermit. In Mahābhārata, Anu-śasana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 55, it is stated that Jābāli was one of the sons of Viśvāmitra. They were exponents of the Vedas. Though he was the son of Viśvāmitra his life was mostly connected with Viśiṣṭa. The Purāṇas do not make it clear how this son of Viśvāmitra happened to fall into the circle of Viśiṣṭa who was a foe of Viśvāmitra. He was one of the seven spiritual advisers of King Daśaratha. It is mentioned in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākānd, Sarga 48 that eight hermits such as Suyajña, Vāmadeva, Jābāli, Kaśyapa Viṣṇu and others lived in Ayodhyā in the palace of the King Daśaratha.

When Bharata went to the forest, to bring Śrī Rāma back to Ayodhyā, Jābāli also followed him. Jābāli argued with Śrī Rāma, using several arguments, to make him return to Ayodhyā. These arguments made Śrī Rāma angry. But he was pacified by the consoling words of Viṣṇu (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa). Jābāli comes in the line of disciples of Vyāsa. Vyāsa divided the Veda and taught Sumantu Atharvaveda. The hermit Sumantu first taught Atharvaveda to his disciple Kabandha who divided it into two parts and taught two disciples Devadarśa, and Pathyā. The disciples of Devadarśa were Maṇḍā, Brahmabali, Saut-kāyana and Pippalāda. Pathyā had three disciples. They were Jābāli, Kumuda and Šaunaka. Of these Jābāli was a famous expounder of Atharvaveda. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Arṣa 3).

JĀBĀLI II. Son of Rādhvaja, a hermit. (See under Viśvākarmā, Parā 2).

JĀBĀLI III. A hermit. The descendants of this hermit also are known by this name. Jābāli who performed penance on the mountain of Mandara had several disciples.

While Jābāli was going along the forest he saw a young man of handsome appearance engaged in penance on the shore of a lake. Jābāli wanted to know about him and his penance. But as the young man was in deep meditation Jābāli had to wait there for several years. At last the young man awoke from his meditation and told Jābāli the secrets of devotional meditation and contemplation of Kṛṣṇa. The remaining life of Jābāli was spent in the worship of Kṛṣṇa, in consequence of which in the next birth he was reborn as a cowherdess, named Citragandha in the house of the cowherd Pra-çaṇḍa. (Padma Purāṇa, Pāṭalā Khanaḍa, Chapters 30, 72 and 109).

JĀBĀLI IV. A hermit. The intensive penance of this hermit compelled Indra to depute the celestial maid Rambahā to hinder it. Jābāli became a prey to the entice-ment of this heavenly beauty and a daughter was born to them. This damsel was carried away by the King Citragandha. The hermit Jābāli cursed Citragandha to become a leper. (Skanda Purāṇa, Chapters 3, 143, and 144).

JĀDA. An immoral brahmin. Jaḍa, who set out to do commercial business once was killed by thieves. As a result of sins committed in previous births he was turned into a Piśāca. After his death his son, who led quite a mortal life went to Kāśī (Banares) to perform his father's obsequies, and at the particular spot where his father was living as Piśāca the son recited Chapter 3 of the Gitā, on hearing which Jaḍa got released from his state as Piśāca. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttrakāndha and Mār-kaṇḍa Purāṇa).

JAGANNĀTHA PANDITA. A very powerful and ruthless literary critic in Sanskrit. He lived between 1590 and 1665. He is also known as Pāṇḍitarāja (King of scholars). His most important and well-known work is Rasagāgādhara. To this day it remains as an invaluable treasure in rhetoric. (Alankāra Śāstra). His poetic theory is "Rāmaṇīyāṇtha-pratipādakaśa Śabdaśā Kāvyam". (Words which convey beautiful meanings constitute poetry). He vehemently opposed the dhvanī vāda (suggestive words and phrases conveying more meanings produce more rasa than they literally and apparently appear to carry). Citramānsahā-Khaṇḍa is another work of the Pāṇḍitarāja. In this work another rhetorician named Appayadikṣa is strongly criticised. The allegoric poem, "Bhāminīvyā- sam", is supposed to have been written by this great rhetorician based on the untimely death of his wife, Bhāminī. He has also written five other works, the five Laharīs [Gāṇgālaharī etc].

JAGATI. One of the seven horses which draw the chariot of Sūrya. Gāyatī, Pṛṣṭhī, Uṣṇik, Jagati, Trṣṭubh, Anuṣṭubh and Paśkī are the seven horses. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part II, Chapter 8).
JAGRAT. According to the vision of Rsis or sages, every living being has four states. They are Jāgrat (waking state), Svapna (dream), Susupti (profound sleep) and Turiya (the fourth state of the soul, i.e. oneness with Brahman in different degrees). The hermits and sages have said about the four states of soul as given below:—

1) Jāgrat. In this state the individual soul is awake. The five organs of senses, the five organs of activity and the four inner organs of the living being will be active, when the soul is awake. In this state he enjoys the outer world through the five senses. That is, he sees with the eyes, hears with the ears, tastes with the tongue, smells with the nose and feels with the skin. Every man thinks that his understanding through the senses is real. It is the individual soul which is responsible for this understanding. But it is difficult to say whether these perceptions through the senses are real or unreal. A hermit says as follows:—“An individual soul travels from Jāgrat to Svapna and from Svapna to Jāgrat as a fish which goes from one shore to the other without touching anything. For an individual soul the state of Jāgrat is only one of the four states. So we cannot give the verdict that the state of Jāgrat alone is real and all the rest are unreal.” The individual soul which is in the state of Jāgrat enjoys the outer world and so it is ‘bahiḥ-prajñā’ (external—knowing). In this state the individual soul enjoys the external world with the seven organs and the nineteen faces. The seven organs are, the two eyes, head, soul, body, urinal bladder and the legs. The nineteen faces are the five senses, the five organs of activity, the five life-breaths and the four inner organs of mind, intellect, egoism and will. The individual soul in the state of Jāgrat enjoys the external world with these organs and faces. The soul in this state is called ‘Vaisvānara’. This state is experienced by all the human beings of the world and so it is called Vaisvānaras1 (Brhadāranyaka, Māṇḍūkyopanisad).

2) Svapna (dream). The second state of the individual soul, is svapna (dream). He who indulges in dream, forgets everything he had experienced in the state of Jāgrat and creating new worlds he enjoys them. While the five organs of senses and the five organs of activity of the dreamer take rest, the four inner organs of citta (will) Ahaṅkāra (egoism) Buddhī (reason) and manas (Mind) will be working. See what the author of Upaniṣad says. “The dreamer separates his self from the wide universe and creates his own radiance by his own radiance. The light of the self is the light for the dreamer. That man creates a chariot or an assemblage of chariots or roads where there is no chariot or an assemblage of chariots or a road; joy, delight or extreme delight where there is no joy or delight or extreme delight; ponds, wells and rivers where there are no ponds, wells and rivers. A dreamer is a Lord; the state of the dream is the state of activity.” Another hermit says as follows about the state of dream:—“The dreaming individual soul which sees again things which were seen here and there, hears again things which were heard here and there, enjoys again things which were enjoyed in places far and near, is really enjoying greatness. He sees things seen and not seen, heard and not heard enjoyed and not enjoyed. The dreamer, like a King who travels with his train throughout his country, as he pleases, plays by getting in and out of his own body, and enjoys lofty experiences, and so he is happier than he who eats alone and enjoys his food. The individual soul in its state of dream is called the Taijas (the radiant) because he illuminates himself by his own radiance. In this state the individual soul does not touch anything and so it is sinless.2

3) Susupti. The third state of the individual soul is susupti (profound sleep). The soul alone is active in this state. In susupti the individual soul desires for nothing and does not indulge in dream. In this state the individual soul does not think that the soul and the body are two. So it is unitary. The sleeper is called ‘Prājña’ also. The individual soul which is in the state of sleep, completely severs its connection with the organs of senses, the organs of action, mind, the Prāṇamayakāśa (the chest of the life-breaths), the manomaya ko’a (the cask of mind) and Viśnunāraya Kośa, the chest of knowledge and understanding. The mind, the sense organs, Sūkṣmaśārira (the subtle body) and the actions are the items which could abandon the connection with jīvātmā (individual soul). In sleep the jīvātmā separating all its connections, for the time being, with these items absorbs itself in the Brahman. See what the author of the Upaniṣad says about the state of Susupti (Sleep).3 As an eagle folds its wings and falls down weary and tired, after flying round in the air for a long time, the individual soul, avoiding all desires and having no dreams, takes rest. The soul sleeps in the nādi, with seventy two thousand branches called ‘hita’, like a child or a King or Brahman. During sleep the mind, senses etc. are not destroyed. They only keep away. They reappear when the man wakes up from sleep.4

4) Turiya. In the state of Turiya the Jīvātmā alone is active. The individual souls which abide in creatures are another aspect of Brahman. Everything said about Brahman can be said about the Jīvātmā in the state of profound sleep. But the bliss that we enjoy in sleep is not Remembered in the state of activity. The same bliss that we enjoy in profound sleep could be enjoyed in the state of samādhi (contemplation) of yoga or union with the universal soul. When it came to be known that this supernal bliss could be enjoyed even after one had awakened from contemplation, a fourth state of the jīvātmā (individual soul) was recognized. But in the Brhadāraṇyaka only three states of the jīvātmā are mentioned.

Immersion of the individual soul by the yogin in the universal soul Brahman in the state of jāgrat or activity is called Turīya. The individual soul which is in the state of Turīya, is described as follows in the Chāndogyopanīsād.

"The jīvātmā which is in the state of Turīya is not conscious internally. He whose inner consciousness is active is Taijasa. He is not bahīḥprajña (conscious of the outer world). Bahīḥprajña is Vaiśvānara. He is not a combination of Taijasa and Turīya. He is not compact with consciousness as a conscious man not a conscious man; nor is he an unconscious man. He, who could be explained only by negations, cannot be seen. He is unmanifestable, indiscernible, unthinkable, indescribable and without any characteristic mark. Only by unswerving faith he could be known. It creates the universes and at the same time negates it. It is the supreme reality, the one without a second (dvaita). This is the state of Turīya."

Vaiśvānara is called the soul with annamayakośa (the material body), Taijasa, the soul with Prāṇamayakośa (the sheath of the life breaths), Prājña, the soul with Vijnānamayakośa (the sheath of understanding) and Turīya, the soul with ānandamayakośa (the chest of bliss).

JĀGUḌA. A country in ancient India. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 25, it is mentioned that the King of this country took part in the Rājaśūya (royal consecration) performed by Yudhishthira.

JĀHNAVĪ. The river Gaṅgā. (See under Jahnu.)

Jahnu had three wives, Dhūmīṇī, Nīlī and Keśīṇī. Rūṣa was born from Dhūmīṇī, Dusyanta and Parameṣṭhi from Nīlī and Jahnu from Keśīṇī. The descendants of Jahnu are called the Kuśikas. Jahnu handed over his kingdom to his son Balākāśva and went to perform penance. Kuśīka was the son of Balākāśva. 2) Drank up the river Gaṅgā. The river Gaṅgā, which flowed through the earth in accordance with the request of Bhagiratha, submerged the hermitage of Jahnu. Jahnu became angry at this haughtiness of Gaṅgā and drank up the river, but at the entreaty of Bhagiratha pushed Gaṅgādevi out through his ear. (See under Gaṅgā). From that day onwards Gaṅgā got the name Jāhnavī.

JĀHUṢA. A King of the period of Rgveda. It is stated in Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāka 17, Sūkta 116, that when this King was surrounded by enemies once, the Aśvinidevas got him into their chariot and through easily passable ways took him to the top of a mountain.

JAIGĪṢAVYA. A hermit who attained salvation by the strength of his penance. It is stated in Harivarṣa Chapter 18, that three daughters, Aparāṇī, Ekaparṇī and Ekapāṭāḷā were born to Himālāya by Meṇā and the hermit Devala married Ekaparṇī and the hermit Jaigīṣavya married Ekapāṭāḷā. In Mahābhārata, Śanti Parva, Chapter 229, mention is made that this hermit gave much advice to the hermit Devala, son of Asita, about the need for equanimity. On another occasion this hermit talked to Yuddhiṣṭhira about the glory of Śiva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 37).

There is a story about how this hermit Jaigīṣavya attained the world of Brahma. Once he reached the hermitage of Devala, who showed the necessary hospitalities. After a few days this hermit disappeared. After that he used to be seen only at the time of meals. Once Devala took his waterpot and went by air to the sea, to fetch water. When he reached the sea he saw Jaigīṣavya bathing there. Devala had gone when Jaigīṣavya was in the hermitage. How did he reach the sea before Devala? Devala filled the pot and returned thoughtful. When he reached the hermitage Jaigīṣavya was there. After this Devala travelled through the world of the inspired sages. Wherever he went, he saw Jaigīṣavya. He asked the inspired sages how it was possible. They praised the attainments, Jaigīṣavya had obtained, by his 'tapas' (penance). Finally in the sight of everybody, Jaigīṣavya flew to the world of Brahma. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 50).

It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 24, that this hermit Jaigīṣavya sits in the palace of Brahma and carries on meditation and contemplation on Brahma.

JAIMINI I.

1) General Information. A hermit of the highest degree of learning. In the "History of Classical Sanskrit Literature" it is mentioned that Sumantu, Jaimini, Paila, Vaiśampāyana and Śuka were the five important disciples of Vyāsa. Of these Śuka was the son of Vyāsa. In Devī Bhāgavata, it is mentioned that Vyāsa had other disciples also in his hermitage, such as Asita, Devala and others. The five disciples mentioned first gave publication to the work of Vyāsa called 'Jaya', which was the original of the Mahābhārata. Vaiśampāyana and Jaimini made some additions to the work 'Jaya'. In Sanskrit there is another book called Jaimini Bhārata, which contains only Aśvamcdha Parva. (See under Gūrūpārama). 2) Other details. (1) It is mentioned in Brahmanda Purāṇa, Chapter 1 that Brahmanda Purāṇa is the story told by Jaimini to Hīranyanābha, at Naimiṣāranya. (2) Jaimini was present at the sarpastra (sacrifice to kill serpents) of Janamejaya. (M.B. Adī Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 6). (3) Jaimini had been a member of the council of...
Yudhīṣṭhīra. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 11).
4 This hermit visited Bhīṣma in his bed of arrows during the Bhārata Battle. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 7).

JAIMINI II. The priest of Subāhū the King of the Cholas (Colas). In accordance with the advice of this priest the King performed many good deeds and consequently attained heaven. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 94).

JĀITRA. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sāliya Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 14, that he was killed by Bhīmasena in the battle of Bhārata.

JĀITRAM I. The chariot of King Hariścandra. It was by driving in this chariot that the King carried out the conquest of countries. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 12).

JĀITRAM II. The conch of Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 61).

JĀJALI. A hermit who reared birds on his head by the power of penance. This hermit who had practised continence from his childhood lived in a forest. Jājali never thought rain, heat of the sun, snow and such other natural things as unbearable. Once this hermit stood like a pillar in the forest, immersed in meditation. Two birds built their nests in his matted hair. Non-violence being his policy, he did not move. The birds came to their nests every evening and stayed for the night. After a few days they laid eggs in the nests. Still the hermit did not move. The eggs were hatched. The hermit understood that also. Still, he did not move. The young ones got wings. They grew up and began to go out with the parent birds. They went out in the morning and returned in the evening. The hermit stood like a pillar. One morning they went out and did not return in the evening. The hermit stood there for six days waiting for the return of the birds. On the sixth day evening they returned. Next time the hermit waited for a month for the return of the birds. They did not return. So he started from there and went to the sea and dipped in the water and said, "there is no man more virtuous than I either in water or on land" with haughtiness. But the water demons said in an ethereal voice that Tulādhāra, the merchant of Kāśi was more virtuous than he.

Hearing this Jājali went to Kāśi and saw Tulādhāra. Tulādhāra greeted him gladly and they talked for a long time. Jājali understood that Tulādhāra was far more virtuous than he. So he sought advice from Tulādhāra and thus Jājali obtained heaven. (M.B. Śānti Parva, 3 Chapters from 261).

JALA. A deity of water. In Mahābhārata, Śabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 20 it is mentioned that this deva was a luminary in the durbar of Brahmā.

JALĀ. A tributary of river Jamanū. The King Uśīnara performed a yāga (sacrifice) on the bank of this river and attained a position higher than Indra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 13, Stanza 21).

JALADA. A mountain in Śāka island. The famous country known as Kumudottaravarṣa is near this mountain. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 25).

JALADHĀRA. A mountain in Śākadvipa (The island of Śāka). (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 16).

JALADHI. The crocodile which is the conveyance of Varuṇa. It is mentioned in Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 9, about conveyances of Gods as follows:—
"The conveyance of Indra is the white elephant, which came into being from the palm of Danu, and is of extraordinary strength and valour. The black buffalo called Paunḍraka, which was born from the thigh of Rudra, and is as quick as the mind and very fierce, is the conveyance of Yama (the god of death). The conveyance of Varuṇa is the black crocodile called Jaladhi', born from the ear-wax of Rudra, and having divine power of movement. The conveyance of Vaśravaṇa (the god of wealth) is a ferocious man with eyes like two cart-wheels and body as big as a mountain, who was born from the leg of Ambikā. The eleven Rudras have speedy horses, terrible serpents and white oxen of high speed. Candra has a chariot as his vehicle yoked with five hundred swans. The vehicles of the Adityas are chariots yoked with horses and camels. The conveyances of the Vasus are elephants, men for Yaksas, serpents for Kinnaras, and horses for the Asviniedas. The Maruts of fearful appearance have deers as conveyance. The Vidyādhāras have parrots for conveyances. An asura called Andhaka has a chariot with thousand posts as his vehicle. Prahlāda had, as conveyance a divine chariot of gold and silver yoked with eight white horses and elephant for Virocana, horse for Kujarābhī, divine chariot yoked with yellow horses, for Śaṅkukarṇa, elephant for Hayagriva, chariot for Maya, Great serpent for Dundubhi, Aeroplane for Saṅbarāha and lion for Ayaśīṭāku.

JALANDHAMA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 57).

JALANDHARA. A mighty and valiant Asura. Khadga ramā was his charioteer and Vṛndā was his wife. Jalandhara was the grandson of the sea of Milk. Once he met with the headless Rāhu, who said to Jalandhara, the whole story beginning from the churning of the sea of Milk. Jalandhara, became furious at the gods who had churned his grandfather. So he collected a big army of asuras and went to war with the devas. Though a large number of Asuras were killed in the battle, Indra and Viṣṇu were defeated and Viṣṇu was taken captive and hidden under the sea. Finally Paramaśiva went to fight with the Asura. In the fight Jalandhara was killed and Viṣṇu was rescued. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapters 3 to 5). For further details see under Māyaśiva.

JĀLAPĀDA. See under Devadatta I.

JALAPRADĀNIKA PARVA A sub section of Strī Parva, of the Mahābhārata. This sub section comprises of Chapters 1 to 15 of Strī Parva.

JALAPRALAYA. In all the Asiatic Purāṇas, reference to an ancient great flood, with slight changes occurs. According to Hindu Purāṇas this great flood took place before Mahāviṣṇu took the incarnation of Matsya. In the Holy Bible which is the scripture of the Christians, the story of the great flood is allied to the story of the Noah. (See under Avatāra). This story occurs in the Babylonian literature also. The book 'Gilgamiš' which is as old as the Ṛgveda, is considered to be the oldest in the world. The theme of the Gilgamiš is the travel of a man named Gilgamesh. This story is written in twelve clay-tablets. After 1850, the scientists of England who carried on an archaeological research, found in the library of Ancient Nineveh, the most famous in the ancient world, these twelve tablets along with twenty-thousand other tablets, all of which were in good condition. This library was built by the King Assurbanipal in 7th century B.C., on a very high place on the bank of the river Tigris, in the ancient Nineveh. All these clay tablets have been removed to the British Museum. It took several decades to decipher them. When these clay tablets were discovered there was not a single man who could read and understand them, in the world. In spite of hard work, several years passed by without getting even a single tablet deciphered. They were written in ‘Akkadean’, which was the language of the court of Assurbanipal and the national and the international language of the time. Another copy of this great work was discovered on the bank of the Euphrates, where the capital of the famous King Hammurabi of Ancient Babylon stood. Later discoveries disclosed that this great work Gilgamesh was part and parcel of the famous ancient civilization of the Oriental countries. The Hitites and the Egyptians tried to translate this book Gilgamesh into their own languages. In the tablets with letters in the form of arrow heads, found on the bank of the Nile, the portions which were difficult for them to translate, are given red marks.

It was from a small piece of broken clay tablet that clues to the origin of this famous work were obtained. The world is indebted to the Sumerians, who had their capital in the place where the city Ur stands, for the original work of Gilgamesh.

Mention is made about a great flood in Gilgamesh, as follows: Gilgamesh set out on an adventurous journey to see his ancestor Utupipish to learn from him the means of obtaining eternal life. The gods had told this man about the secret of eternal life. At last Gilgamesh reached an island and found out his ancestor and asked him about the secrets of eternal life. Utupipish said that he had lived in ‘Shoorappak’ and that he had been an ardent devotee of ‘Iya’ God. When the gods decided to destroy mankind by a great flood the God Iya called his devotee Utupipish and said to him ‘You, man of shoorappak, the son of Urvatini: Demolish your house and build a ship. Leave off your wealth and search for your life. Cast away your property and save your life. Bring the seeds of every living thing into the ship. The ship you build should be according to measurements.’

The rest of the story is like the story of the ‘Ark of Noah’. The scientists are of opinion that in pre-historic times the three continents of Asia, Europe and Africa were one continent and that by earthquake or some other reason the south part of Europe had sunk down and water flowed in and thus the Mediterranean sea came into existence. At a time when the far off regions of the earth were unknown, the people who escaped the flood imagined that the entire world had been submerged by the flood. It could be imagined that this story of the great flood passed on to posterity verbally and after so many generations it appeared in different regions in different languages in different forms.1

1 In writing about Jalapralaya, I have dealt with Gilgamesh a little elaborately. Details on Gilgamesh were obtained from the English translation of a famous German work by Venar Keller. This book had not been received when I wrote about the work ‘Gilgamesh’. So these details are included under this word ‘Jalapralaya’.

JALASANDHI I. One of the hundred sons of Dwarta-rashtra. Bhismena killed him. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 33).

JALASANDHI II: A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pāṇḍavas. He was present at the svayamvara of Pāncali. (marriage of Pāncali). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 52, that he was killed by Śāyaki in the battle of Bhurata.

JALELĀ. An attendant of Subrahmanyā. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 16).

JAL̄ESVARĪ. An attendant of Subrahmanyā. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 16).

JALEYU. A son born to Raudrāyes the son of Pūru, by a celestial woman named Mśrakeś. Mention is made about Jaleyu in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 10.

JAM. It means gītām (music). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

JAMADAGNI. A hermit of majestic power. He was the father of Parāśurāma.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Vişnu in the following order are: Brahmā—Bhrigu—Cāyavana—Aurva—Rcika—Jamadagni.

2) Birth. There is an interesting story about the birth of Jamadagni. Gādhi was the son of king Kuśālana. A daughter named Satyavatī was born to Gādhi. The hermit Rcika giving a dowry of one thousand horses, each with one black ear, married Satyavatī. Once Satyavatī told her husband that herself and her mother wanted to get a child each. After the sacrifice of obligations to Agni (fire), Rcika took two parts filled with boiled rice and gave them to Satyavatī, with mantras (spells). The radiance of Brahmā was invoked into one pot and the radiance of Kṣatra was invoked into the other. The hermit had asked Satyavatī to eat the rice into which the radiance of Brahmā had been invoked and to give the other pot to her mother. But the daughter and mother changed the pots secretly and Satyavatī ate the rice in the pot into which Kṣatra radiance was invoked and gave the pot of rice filled with Brahmā-radiance to her mother. Both the women conceived. As the child grew in the womb the radiance of Brahmā shone on the face of the mother and Kṣatra lustre was seen on the face of Satyavatī. Rcika asked Satyavatī for the reason. She admitted the secret interchange of the pot.

Satyavatī and her mother both delivered at the same time. Satyavatī got the son Jamadagni, who was the embodiment of Kṣatra tejas and the child with Brahmā tejas born to the mother was Viśvāmitra. Therefore, in some Purāṇas Viśvāmitra is described as the uncle of Jamadagni whereas in some others they are said to be brothers. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 57).

3) A house-holder. When Jamadagni grew up he made a tour and visited the holy places one by one and reached the palace of King Prasenajit of the family of Iksvākū. He saw Renukā the beautiful daughter of King Prasenajit and fell in love with her. He requested Prasenajit for the hand of Renukā. The King, without raising any objection gave his daughter Renukā in marriage to Jamadagni. The couple came to the bank. of the river Narmadā and erecting a hermitage began ‘tapas’ (penance). Four sons, Rūmāṇyān, Suhoṭra, Vasu and Viśāvārasu were born to Jamadagni by Reṣukā. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 58).

4) The birth of Parāṣūra ṇa. Because of the wickedness of the Kṣatriya Kings, the goddess Earth became miserable. She made a representation to Brahmā who took her to the sea of Milk and told Mahāviṣṇu everything. Mahāviṣṇu promised to take an incarnation as the son of Jamadagni and destroy all the wicked Kings. Accordingly Reṣukā gave birth to Parāṣūra ṇa, who was an incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 59).
